Ukrainian socialist parties were the first party organizations to establish extensive contacts with similar parties or movements in other countries. Thus in 1919–20 the Ukrainian Party of Socialist Revolutionaries and the Ukrainian Social Democratic Workers' party (USDRP), and in the interwar years the USDRP alone, belonged to the *Socialist International. Since 1950 the unified Ukrainian Socialist party has been a member of the Socialist Union of Central-Eastern Europe. Ukrainian Communist parties – the CP(Б)У and the Communist Party of Western Ukraine – joined the *Communist International in 1919 but remained members only during the 1920s. The *Ukrainian Communist party and the Borotbists were not admitted to the International. The CPU was not a member of the Information Bureau of Communist and Workers' Parties (1947–56), nor did it take part in a series of consultative conferences of communist and workers' parties convened by Moscow in the 1960s–1970s. In relations with communist parties outside the USSR the CPSU represents all the Soviet republican party organizations.

Ukrainian non-political organizations also established ties with non-governmental organizations in their fields. As early as 1920 the *National Council of Ukrainian Women joined the International Council of Women (a federation of national women's organizations founded in 1888), and in 1925 took part in its Washington congress. As a representative of a stateless nation, it was expelled from the federation in 1928. The *Union of Ukrainian Women in Lviv was admitted in 1923 to the International Alliance of Women (a federation of women's organizations founded in 1904 to fight for women's suffrage) and participated in its congresses. In the interwar years Ukrainian women formed a section of the Women's International League for Peace and Freedom. After the Second World War the International Alliance of Women did not renew the membership of associations whose national constituency lay within the Soviet bloc, but it gave associate status to the *World Federation of Ukrainian Women's Organizations. In 1950 the federation became a member of the World Movement of Mothers. (See also *Women's movement.)

Ukrainian students took an active part in international life through the *Central Union of Ukrainian Students (TseSUS), which in 1922 became a special member of the International Confederation of Students and was also a member of the International Students' League and the International Students' Aid. Before and after the Second World War, TseSUS participated in a series of international students' congresses and exhibitions. The students of Soviet Ukraine have no national organization other than the Communist Youth League of Ukraine, which does not participate in any NGO. Only the Student Council of the USSR belongs to the pro-Communist International Union of Students.

Before the Revolution and during Ukraine's independence Ukrainian trade union organizations did not belong to any international unions. At first the trade unions of the Ukrainian SSR were members of the Red International of Trade Unions (Profintern). After 1945 only the All-Union Central Trade Union, not the republican unions of Ukraine, has been a member of the pro-Communist World Federation of Trade Unions. In 1949 the Confederation of Free Ukrainian Trade Organizations was founded in Paris. Its membership included the *Union of Ukrainian Workers of France and the Union of Ukrainian Workers of Belgium, and the confederation itself was a member of the International Federation of Christian Trade Unions (est 1920). On the confederation's initiative in 1951, the International Federation of Christian Workers in Exile was founded in Paris. In the 1950s it represented the emigrant trade unions of 12 national groups from Central and Eastern Europe.

Ukrainian co-operative organizations became active in international organizations rather early. The Kharkiv co-operative leader, M. Ballin, was one of the founders of the International Co-operative Alliance (est 1895 in London). A number of Ukrainian co-operative activists took part in its congresses, and some (S. Borodaievsky and B. Martos) were members of the International Institute for Co-operative Studies. The Narodna Torhovia co-operative union, the Provincial Audit Union (later the Audit Union of Ukrainian Co-operatives), and in 1917–20 the Dniprosiuz co-operative association were full members of the alliance. Since 1921 the national co-operative associations of the Ukrainian SSR have been represented by the all-Union Tsentrosiuz in Moscow.

Ukrainian Catholic associations belonged to a number of international organizations, usually as full members. Soon after its creation the Obnova Society of Ukrainian Catholic Students joined the Pax Romana International Movement of Catholic Students and the association of Slavic Catholic organizations Slavia Catholica. After the war Obnova was the chief founder of the Alliance of Exiled Catholic Student Organizations of Central and Eastern Europe, while the Ukrainian Catholic Academic Alliance Obnova was a founding member of the Pax Romana International Catholic Movement for Intellectual and Cultural Affairs. The *Ukrainian Christian Movement participates in international congresses and is a member of the International Council of Catholic Men (Unum Omnes). No Ukrainian religious organization or church, whether Catholic, Orthodox, or Protestant, is a member of the World Council of Churches. Only the Russian Orthodox church and the All-Union Soviet of Christians and Baptists, which claim to represent the faithful in Ukraine, are members of the union. The metropolitan of Kiev, Filaret Denysenko, is an active representative of the Russian Orthodox church on the international scene. The Ukrainian Exarchate of the Russian Orthodox church in Kiev has a department of external relations.

In the cultural field the *Ukrainian Academic Committee (est 1924 in Prague) co-operated with international learned societies such as the International Committee on Intellectual Co-operation of the League of Nations in Geneva and the Institute of Intellectual Co-operation in Paris. After the Second World War, Ukrainian and other émigré scholars founded the *International Free Academy of Arts and Sciences in Paris. Ukrainian Soviet scholars are represented in international associations devoted to particular disciplines not by their own republican committees but by all-Union committees. The only exception to this rule is the International Association for the Study and Dissemination of Slav Cultures, founded by UNESCO in 1976, where Ukrainian Slavists are represented by a committee of the AN URSR. In 1968 efforts were made in Prešov, Czechoslovakia, to form an association of teachers of Ukrainian similar to the International Association of Teachers of Russian Language and Literature, but the project was opposed by Soviet officials.

In the late 1920s and at the beginning of the 1930s, Ukrainian Soviet writers belonged to international proletarian literary unions, and in 1930 the Second Congress of Proletarian Writers was held in Kharkiv. Apart from this, Ukrainian cultural life in the USSR has been completely isolated, especially since 1945, from international organizations. In 1954 the Soviet government introduced a policy of so-called cultural exchange. Many USSR organizations are members of international bodies, but Ukrainian republican organizations and institutions are not permitted to hold separate memberships or to participate directly in the work of such bodies. Furthermore, Ukrainian scholars or cultural workers are rarely appointed to the Soviet delegations. Ukraine does not have a separate membership even in pro-Communist international organizations such as the International Association of Democratic Lawyers, the Women's International Democratic Federation, or the International Organization of Journalists. Since the late 1950s some Ukrainian émigré writers have been active in the international PEN club.

In the interwar period Ukrainian journalists belonged to foreign press associations in west-European capitals – eg, the Union of Foreign Journalists in Berlin, which was headed by Z. Kuzelia. In 1945 Ukrainian journalists in West Germany played an instrumental role in setting up the Union of the Free Press, which published the monthly Freie Pressekorrespondenz. Members of the Association of Ukrainian Journalists in Germany and of the Society of Ukrainian Journalists and Writers in Great Britain helped found the International Federation of Free Journalists in 1948. Since 1957 the Association of the Ukrainian Catholic Press has been a full member of the International Catholic Union of the Press, whose board of directors included V. Yaniv.

Soviet Ukrainian youth and sport organizations are not members of international organizations. Although in 1945 a separate delegation represented the Ukrainian SSR at the First Congress of the World Federation of Democratic Youth in London, later only the Committee of Youth Organizations of the USSR became a member of the federation. A similar republican committee for Ukraine, founded in 1956, does not engage in any international activity and does not belong to any international organization. The Ukrainian SSR is not a member of the Olympic Committee, although Ukrainian sportsmen participate in the *Olympic Games. Before the Second World War the *Plast Ukrainian Youth Association was the only Western Ukrainian or émigré youth organization to take part in international activity. Because the Boy Scouts International Bureau did not recognize scouting organizations of stateless nations, Plast could participate in jamborees and international conferences only as part of some other national scouting association. In the 1950s Ukrainians participated, either individually or as members of the national organizations of their adopted countries, in some conferences of the World Assembly of Youth. As for charitable associations, the *Ukrainian Red Cross (est 1918) worked through its liaison officer in Geneva with the International Red Cross, but after 1920 failed to win full membership because it represented a stateless nation. The *United Ukrainian American Relief Committee (est 1944), with headquarters in Philadelphia and a European office in Munich, and the *Central Ukrainian Relief Bureau in England worked closely with international organizations such as the *United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration (1946), the *International Refugee Organization (1947–52), the Provisional Intergovernmental Committee for the Movement of Migrants from Europe (est 1951), and the UN High Commissioner for Refugees (from 1952). After the Second World War Ukrainian emigration agencies belonged to various international refugee organizations such as the Zentralverband der ausländischen Flüchtlinge in der Bundesrepublik Deutschland, which had about 20 member-associations representing various national groups, including the *Central Representation of the Ukrainian Emigration in Germany.

Ukrainian émigrés take part in the work of non-governmental organizations to inform the non-Ukrainian public about the Ukrainian cause (see *Press and information bureaus abroad) and to win recognition for Ukraine as an important factor in world politics.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Ukrains'ka RSR na mizhnarodnii areni* (Kiev 1963, 1966, 1977, 1981, 1984)
 Batiuk, V. Ukraina v Mizhnarodnii Orhanizatsii Pratsi (Kiev 1968)
 Sawczuk, K. The Ukraine in the United Nations Organization: A Study in Soviet Foreign Policy, 1944–1950 (New York-London 1975)
Ukrains'ka RSR u mizhnarodnykh orhanizatsiakh. Dovidnyk (Kiev 1984)

V. Markus

International Refugee Organization (IRO). A temporary agency of the United Nations (UN) that assisted refugees and *displaced persons in Europe and Asia after the Second World War. The organization, which was headquartered in Geneva, was formally established in December 1946 by a resolution of the UN General Assembly. Eventually, 18 countries ratified the IRO's constitution and joined the organization; these countries also provided its operating funds. The USSR and its satellites refused to join, however, because the organization mostly cared for refugees from Eastern Europe who found themselves in the British, American, and French zones of occupation and who, for political reasons, refused to return to their country of origin (see *Repatriation). The total number of people under the protection of the IRO was around 1,600,000, including some 200,000 Ukrainians. The IRO began operation in July 1947 when it took over administration of the *displaced persons camps, where most refugees lived, from the *United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration. In addition to administering camps, the IRO aided in the voluntary repatriation of refugees (although very few people were repatriated after 1946) and helped the remainder to settle permanently in European or other countries; it also succeeded the Intergovernmental Committee on Refugees as the international body with legal responsibility for refugees. Many countries (Australia, Canada, the United States, and South American countries) accepted IRO-sponsored immigrants under special legislation. In total, some 1,000,000 people were resettled overseas, among them about 114,000 Ukrainians. When the IRO ended its activity in Europe in 1952, about 100,000 refugees remained in camps in West Germany and Austria. These countries, with the help of international organizations, assumed responsibility for the material well-being of the displaced persons and gave them the status of refugees. International legal responsibility for the refugees fell to the UN High Commission for Refugees in Geneva, the successor of the IRO. During its existence a small number of Ukrainians were employed at the middle and lower levels of the IRO administration in Germany and Austria.

V. Markus

Internationalism. An ideological and sociopolitical movement predicated on the ideal of co-operation between free and equal societies. According to this ideal, international co-operation and solidarity is more important than national interest. The modern form of internationalism arose from the liberal and democratic ideals of the French Revolution. With the birth of socialism, internationalism was given a theoretical basis by such thinkers as K. Marx, F. Engels, P. Proudhon, K. Kautsky, and R. Luxembourg, and an organizational form by various international socialist groups (see *Socialist International) towards the end of the 19th century.

In Ukraine, internationalism first developed after the French Revolution in Ukrainian masonic circles (see *Freemasonry) and in the thinking of the *Decembrists. Ukrainian Slavophilism, particularly that of the *Cyril and Methodius Brotherhood, emphasized the co-operation, equality, and brotherhood of nations, primarily among the Slavs. The first theoretical expression of internationalism in Ukrainian appeared in the works of M. *Drahomanov: Vol'nyi soiuz / Vil'na spilka (A Voluntary Union, 1884), 'Shevchenko, ukrainofily i sotsializm' (Shevchenko, the Ukrainophiles, and Socialism, 1879), and Istoricheskaiia Pol'sha i velikorusskaiia demokratiia (Historical Poland and Great Russian Democracy, 1881–2). He tied his conception of internationalism to 'Europeanism' and federalism. The precondition for international co-operation was, for Drahomanov, recognition of the principle that 'every nation is to be its own master.'

Internationalism was prominent in the political thinking and literature of the Ukrainian left towards the end of the 19th century and beginning of the 20th, and included I. Franko, M. Pavlyk, and S. Podolynsky among its advocates. The Ukrainian socialist parties (the Ukrainian Social Democratic Workers' party, Ukrainian Party of Socialist Revolutionaries, and Ukrainian Radical party) saw it as one of the main components of Ukrainian politics. A wing of the Ukrainian Party of Socialist Revolutionaries adopted the name Internationalists in 1918–19. Ukrainian liberal parties such as the Ukrainian National Democratic Party, the Ukrainian Party of Socialists-Federalists, and the Ukrainian National Democratic Alliance also developed conceptions of liberal internationalism.

Internationalism also played an important part in the development of the communist movement and, in particular, came to be the focus of debate between Russian and Ukrainian communists. The *Borotbists and the Ukrainian Communist party adopted the principles of internationalism in their struggles against Russian centralism, Russian domination of the USSR, and state chauvinism. Russian Bolsheviks, in contrast, considered Ukrainian national communism an obstruction to internationalism. This same problem arose in the crisis of the Western Ukrainian Communist party in 1926–30 and prompted the intervention of the Communist International. Ukrainian communists of the above-mentioned movements adhered to the classic Marxist interpretation of internationalism, ie, the equality and solidarity of proletarian movements. It was enshrined in the first constitution of the Ukrainian SSR as a clause concerning the world federation of Soviet republics, of which the Ukrainian SSR was to be a member.

The concept of internationalism changed under Stalin. Its traditional meaning was replaced by Russian national egoism and chauvinism, a trend that persists to the present day. Domestically, internationalism in the USSR is identified with the promotion of positive attitudes towards Russian language, culture, and political centralization. Externally, it signified uncritical support for Soviet foreign policy. Ukrainian writers such as Ivan Dziuba (in his work Internationalism or Russification? [1965]) have criticized this distortion. (See also *Marxism.)

B. Krawchenko

Internationalists. The name of a leftist group formed in early 1918 within the Ukrainian Party of Socialist Revolutionaries. During the Fourth Party Congress in May 1918, the Internationalists constituted a majority in the Central Committee. They conducted propaganda through their underground organ Borot'ba (hence the subsequent name of the party, *Borotbists) and worked towards the revolutionary overthrow of the *Hetman government.

Internationals. See Communist International and Socialist International.

Internment camps. Civilian internment camps were established in Canada during the First World War. Ukrainians formed the largest contingent of the nearly 6,000 interned as Austro-Hungarian nationals because they were considered to be potentially disloyal. Camps were established in Spirit Lake (Quebec), Petawawa and Kapuskasing (Ontario), Brandon (Manitoba), Banff and Jasper (Alberta), and Vernon (British Columbia). The Ukrainian internees were employed in building roads, erecting and repairing buildings, and cleaning and draining land.

In Poland, soldiers of the Army of the UNR were first interned in Łańcut, in late 1919 following the collapse of the Ukrainian front, although some military units were organized from the internees and returned to central Ukraine to continue fighting the Red Army. After the final defeat of the UNR armies in November 1920, approx 20,000 men crossed into Polish territory, where they were interned in several camps. The larger camps included those in Łańcut, Aleksandrów Kujawski, and *Kalisz. Smaller camps were located at *Tuchola, Wadowice, and Piotrków. In mid-1921, those interned at Łańcut were transferred to Strzałkowo, and in late 1921, those at Aleksandrów were transferred to Szczepiórno. The latter camp, as well as the neighboring one in Kalisz, remained open until August 1924.

Conditions in the internment camps in Poland were hard, but cultural and educational life in the camps was quite developed. Technical courses were provided for the illiterate; various schools were formed and a people's university was established at Łańcut; choirs, theater groups, and other art and performance groups were active, as were religious organizations; and various publications were issued.

The administration of the camps was in Ukrainian hands. Officials of the Government-in-exile of the UNR conducted officer training and instruction in military theory, and several veterans' organizations were founded.

The internment camps in Kalisz and Szczepiórno were second to *Warsaw as the largest centers of Ukrainian cultural life in Poland. The number of soldiers in these internment camps declined progressively. Many left for Czechoslovakia to study, and others went to France to work. After the closure of the camps, the veterans were given the status of political émigrés in Poland.

Following the end of hostilities, most remaining units of the *Ukrainian Galician Army (UHA) made their way to Czechoslovakia, where they were interned. Sections of the *Mountain and *Sambir brigades and the Krukenychi Group were separated from the main forces of the UHA in May 1919 and forced to retreat into Transcarpathia, where they were disarmed and transferred to the camp at Deutsch-Gabel. The Czechoslovak authorities were sympathetic to the UHA soldiers and officers as long as the border disputes with Poland remained unresolved and they believed that the UHA could be used against the Poles. They issued full army rations and pay comparable to that of the Czechoslovak army, and granted all internees freedom of movement. Passes to Prague could be obtained on producing Ukrainian Army identification. Gen A. *Krav's group was interned at *Liberec on 10 September 1920, after it had left the Dniester front and crossed Transcarpathia with 300 officers and 500 men. They were joined by another 130 officers and men who arrived from the Italian POW camp at Monte Cassino. In April 1921 the 4,000 internees from Liberec and Deutsch-Gabel were transferred to *Josefov. The camp there remained operative until 1926.

The number of soldiers in internment camps began to decrease in 1921, when the government formed workers' brigades (70 such brigades were formed in various towns throughout Czechoslovakia in 1921). Some returned to Galicia after 1923 when it was ceded to Poland by international agreement. Most officers traveled to study in *Prague, *Poděbrady (at the Ukrainian Husbandry Academy), Brno, and Příbram. After the closure of the Josefov camp, veterans were granted political immigrant status and some took Czechoslovak citizenship. Various military training programs, technical courses, literacy programs, general higher education courses, as well as general social and cultural activity such as choirs, libraries, publishing concerns, and theater groups, all formed part of the life in the internment camps.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Narizhnyi, S. Ukrains'ka emigratsiia (Prague 1942)
 Motyl, A.J. The Turn to the Right: The Ideological Origins and Development of Ukrainian Nationalism 1919-1929 (Boulder, Colo 1980)
 Melnycky, P. 'The Internment of Ukrainians in Canada,' in Loyalties in Conflict: Ukrainians in Canada during the Great War, eds F. Swyrypa and J.H. Thompson (Edmonton 1983)
 Y. Boshyk, L. Shankovsky

Interparty Council (Mizhpartiina rada). A political body founded in 1919 in Lviv after the *Ukrainian-Polish War. It co-ordinated the legal struggle of the Ukrainian Labor (formerly National Democratic), Ukrainian Radical, Ukrainian Social Democratic, and Christian Social parties against the Polish occupation of Galicia. The council's chairmen were V. Bachynsky and, later, A. Kurovets. It had close ties with Ye. Petrushevych's Government-in-exile of the Western Ukrainian National Republic and funded the clandestine Ukrainian Military Organization. In January 1922 the Social Democratic party adopted a pro-Soviet platform. In March 1923 the Allied Conference of Ambassadors recognized Poland's annexation of Galicia and the Government-in-exile was dissolved. Consequently, in May 1923 the Radical party left the council, a schism developed in the Labor party, and the council fell apart.

Intourist. All-Union company established in 1929 to handle foreign tourism in the USSR. It arranges tours for foreign visitors to the USSR and for Soviet citizens traveling abroad. It operates hotels, motels, camping grounds, and tours in the USSR. Its headquarters are in Moscow, and it has branches in 28 countries, including Ukraine. According to Western intelligence sources, Intourist is under the control of the Second Chief Directorate of the *KGB.

Investment. Narrowly defined as the addition to an economy's stock of physical capital – factories, equipment, transport, housing, and so on – necessary for an economy to produce more goods and services for a growing population. Economic analysts also use a broader definition that includes accumulation of inventories. The level of investment in an economy is generally determined by the level of its savings. With respect to a region within a national economy, the levels of investment and savings may differ, since savings generated in one region may be invested in another region.

Investment, particularly in *industry, was intensified greatly in Russian-ruled Ukraine during the second half of the 19th century, primarily as a result of (1) the construction of railroads linking Ukraine's regions with each other and its entire economy with the rest of the Russian Empire and, through the ports on the Black and Azov seas, with other countries; (2) the expansion of heavy industry, primarily in the Donbas and the Kryvyi Rih Iron-ore Basin; and (3) the spread of food-processing industries throughout Ukraine. The investment that took place there was typical of a developing economy – elements of a free market and significant government involvement in economic activity. The bulk of private investment in industry was made by Belgian, French, and British capitalists (see *Capitalism). Besides investing in enterprises owned by the royal family, the tsarist government invested in such large-scale projects as the construction of a railway network and the development of a military-industrial complex, using excessive taxation and loans from the public, including foreigners, as its source of funds.

Under Soviet rule the nature of investment changed. In Ukraine, as in the rest of the USSR, private investment in most production activities was outlawed. Thus, in the early 1980s private investment represented less than 3 percent of total investment in the Ukrainian economy, and it was limited to co-operative apartments in the cities and small houses in the countryside. In contrast to market economies, Soviet planned investment determines centrally the level of savings, often by restricting personal consumption.

Government investment in all sectors of Soviet Ukraine's economy, such as collective agriculture, is regulated by ministries and state planning committees in Kiev and Moscow. Investment appropriations are included in annual and five-year economic plans on the basis of submitted proposals. A proposal for an investment project may be initiated by an enterprise, an intermediate administrative organ, or a ministry. In all cases, a thorough justification is required, and the necessary condition is the existence of an excessive demand for a specific good or service. The decision-making process in investment is a complex one. All proposals, along with technological and economic documentation, are examined at several administrative levels – supposedly to filter out the most valuable proposals and to reduce the number of those for further consideration. Final decisions are made by the party authorities in Moscow. Upon final approval, funds are appropriated to the project and a contractor is assigned. Budget constraints do not play an important role in determining the annual ceiling on total investment in the USSR, but rather the capacity of the construction industry and the availability of new machines and equipment.

Using the state budget and decentralized sources, investment is distributed among the sectors of the Soviet economy and individual regions, including the union republics. As a result, regional investment may be greater or less than its savings. Examples of the former include Soviet Asiatic regions, which have enjoyed an excess of investment over savings during the postwar period. Ukraine, in contrast, has experienced a loss of a part of its savings to other parts of the USSR. Table 2 shows investment in Ukraine in the Soviet period, including its percentage of total Soviet investment. Tables 1 and 3 give the breakdown of total investment by sector of the economy and of industrial investment by product group. In the 1920–85 period, Ukraine received 15.4 percent of all Soviet investment, while accounting for slightly less

TABLE 2
Investment in Ukraine's economy, 1918–85

Period	Billion rubles	% of USSR investment
1918–40	10.0	16.2
1951–55	17.1	16.5
1956–60	32.6	16.9
1961–65	47.3	16.9
1966–70	66.5	16.7
1971–75	89.5	15.9
1976–80	105.7	14.7
1981–85	117.0	13.9
Total	498.1	15.4

TABLE 3
Industrial investment by product group in Ukraine's economy (%)

Product group	1966–70	1971–5	1979
Electric power	9.3	9.0	7.7
Coal	16.2	14.0	14.4
Crude oil and gas	7.4	7.0	8.7
Ferrous metals	18.1	15.0	16.6
Chemicals and petrochemicals	9.4	10.0	9.2
Machines and metalworking	16.7	22.0	14.7
Wood and paper	1.3	2.0	1.2
Building materials	4.7	4.0	1.9
Textiles and apparel	3.5	4.0	1.9
Food	9.3	8.0	7.1

than one-fifth of the USSR population. Although these are average estimates, there is a distinct tendency for the investment percentages to decline over time, except for the reconstruction periods between 1918 and 1928 and between 1946 and 1950, when Ukraine's share in total Soviet investment approached its population share. Because of declining birth rates in Ukraine, the proportion of its population in the USSR has also declined, although at a slower pace than investment. Thus, in 1959 per capita investment in Ukraine amounted to 84 percent of per capita investment in the USSR, and by 1985 it dropped to only 77 percent.

The slowdown of per capita investment in Ukraine especially affects the consumer. Because such industries in Ukraine as machine building, mining, and ferrous metallurgy are of prime importance to the Soviet interests, they are more protected against lowering investment than the consumer-goods sector, which must absorb the burden. Municipal services, water supply, sewage,

TABLE 1
Investment by sector in Ukraine's economy (%)

Sector	1918–40	1956–60	1961–5	1966–70	1971–5	1976–80	1981–5
Industry	38.1	38.7	38.8	37.7	37.1	38.1	38.8
Agriculture	9.3	15.6	16.6	17.8	20.9	21.2	19.7
Construction	0.9	2.5	2.2	2.6	2.8	2.8	2.5
Transportation and communications	16.2	8.3	11.5	10.6	11.0	11.0	10.8
Residential construction	19.0	22.2	16.9	15.3	14.0	13.4	14.5
Trade services	16.5	12.7	14.0	16.0	14.2	13.5	13.7

and road infrastructure have the lowest investment priority. Local party and administrative authorities are even required to assist in these areas with their own investment sources, such as the profits from lotteries, free services of military personnel, and free weekend labor by citizens. Medical facilities and public-transportation and communications systems also do not receive enough investment. Although housing and day-care facilities seem to be accorded higher priorities because they are considered important for keeping workers on the job, they are also subject to shortages, which cannot be eased without accelerated investment.

Two examples illustrate the relative situation in Ukraine and the RSFSR. In the years 1981–4 annual per capita investment in residential construction in Ukraine was 65 rubles. In the RSFSR it was 96 rubles, ie, almost one and one half times greater. In the same period annual per capita investment in the trade and service sectors was 62 and 106 rubles, respectively, or 70 percent larger. Moreover, the official Soviet information used in these examples does not take into account investment in housing and in services by collective farms in the RSFSR, thus underestimating the latter's total investment for those purposes.

Although investment in heavy industry has been given a high priority in Ukraine, its efficiency has not satisfied the authorities for many reasons, one being that there has existed a discrepancy between annual investment and the amount of new capital stock put into operation. Since investment is free of charge, there exists pressure on the part of plant managers to initiate new investment projects. But because of the limited capacity of the Soviet construction industry, at a large number of construction sites the average duration of individual projects has been 10–12 years – double the normative term approved by the authorities. To accelerate the completion of investment projects, the decision was made to reduce their number drastically in the 1986–90 Five-Year Plan and even to abandon certain construction projects started previously.

Two other developments aimed at increasing the efficiency of investment are related to the composition of new capital stock and the distribution of investment funds among different types of projects. Production capital stock consists of structures and machines. To increase the working capacity of new plants, attempts were made in the last two decades to make the capital less structure-intensive and more machine-intensive. Thus, in the years 1970–85 the proportion of investment allotted to equipment in Ukraine was raised from 29 to 39 percent, and it has been decided to continue this policy in the 1986–90 plan. Another development involves the shift in investment priorities from new construction to the renovation and modernization of existing plants. In the years 1979–84 the proportion of investment in renovating and modernizing Ukrainian industry rose from 35 to 41 percent, but it is still viewed as insufficient. According to the planning authorities, relative to investment in new construction, investment in renovation pays off three times faster, requires a 27 percent shorter project duration, and has an output-to-capital ratio 1.5 times higher. The 1986–90 Five-Year Plan has called for directing half of industrial investment into renovation. Rapid innovation and the introduction of advanced machines are considered the key to raising the efficiency of industrial investment.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Emel'ianov, A., et al. Promyshlennost' v usloviakh razvitoogo sotsializma (na primere Ukrainskoi SSR) (Kiev 1981)
 Gillula, J. 'The Growth and Structure of Fixed Capital,' in I.S. Koropec'kyj and G. Schroeder (eds), Economics of Soviet Regions (New York 1981)
 Kushnirsky, F. Soviet Economic Planning, 1965–1980 (Boulder, Colo 1982)

F. Kushnirsky

Ioan II, ?–1089. Metropolitan of Kiev from 1077 to 1089. A Greek by birth, he was famous for his erudition and administrative ability. He wrote a letter to Pope Clement III (first published in 1854), responding to the pope's attempt to establish contact with the Eastern hierarchs, and a collection of canonical instructions (first published in 1815).

Ioan IV, ?–1166. Metropolitan of Kiev from 1164 to 1166. A Greek by birth, he was sent to Kiev by the Patriarch of Constantinople against the wishes of Prince Rostyslav Mstyslavych, who wanted a metropolitan of Ukrainian origin.

Iorga, Nicolai, b 17 June 1871 in Botoşani, Moldavia, d 28 November 1940, near Sinaia, Rumania. Historian and premier of Rumania in 1931–2. Iorga was a member of the Rumanian parliament for many years. In his historical works he denied that Ukrainians were indigenous to Bukovyna and Bessarabia, considering them Ukrainianized Rumanians or migrants from Galicia. He tentatively examined Rumanian-Ukrainian relations, promoted assimilation, and advanced the claims of Rumania to Transnistria.

Iracema (also Iraputan). A town in the municipality of Itaiópolis, Santa Catarina state, in southern Brazil. The location of one of the oldest Ukrainian settlements in Brazil, it was settled ca 1895–6 by approx 200 Ukrainian families. A Basilian monastery was established there, as well as an active parish embracing 12 other church communities. Altogether, there are about 6,000 Ukrainians in the area, most of them farmers.

Iranian peoples. The east Aryan group of peoples of the Indo-European family that today inhabit Iran, Soviet Central Asia and Transcaucasia, Afghanistan, and parts of Pakistan, Turkey, and Iraq. In ancient times they also inhabited southeastern Europe. During the 1st millennium BC and AD Ukraine was inhabited consecutively by the Iranian-speaking *Cimmerians, *Scythians, *Sarmatians, *Alans, and Irano-Turkic *Khazars. These peoples interacted with the indigenous proto-Slavs and influenced their cultural development.

Iranianisms. The earliest Iranianisms are words borrowed from the languages of such northern Iranian nomadic tribes as the Scythians, Sarmatians, and Alans, which from the 6th century BC came into contact with Slavs in southern Ukraine and later with early Ukrainian tribes. Iranianisms are common in east-Slavic languages. Ukrainian examples include topir (axe), sobaka (dog), xom'jak (hamster), morda (snout), raj (paradise), vyrij (warm region), Xors; names of rivers, eg, Don, Dnipro, Dniester, Kuban; and names of tribes, eg, xorvaty (Croatsians), jasy (Ossetes), and kasohy (Circassians). After the 12th century many middle and modern Persian Iranianisms entered Ukrainian as Turkisms – primarily terms for apparel, orcharding, and commerce, such as bazar (bazaar) and majdan (square) – and into Transcarpathian dialects as *Hungarian loan words – vašar (market), orsak (state). Many etymologists recognize Iranian influences in several religious or mythological expressions in Ukrainian, such as Boh (God), dyv (wonder), and svjatyj (holy); however, these are not to be considered direct borrowings from Iranian languages.

Irchan, Myroslav [Iřčan] (pen name of Andrii Babiuk), b 14 July 1897 in Piadyky, Kolomyia county, Galicia, d 1937? Writer. From 1923 to 1929 he lived in Winnipeg, where he edited pro-Communist periodicals of the Ukrainian Labour-Farmer Temple Association – Robitnytsia and Svit molodi – and founded the writers' group Zaokeanskyi Hart, which was affiliated with the Kharkiv-based proletarian writers' organization *Hart. From 1929 he lived in Kharkiv, where he headed the organization of Western Ukrainian Communist émigré writers *Zakhidna Ukraina and edited its monthly journal until its demise in 1933. Irchan was arrested during the Yezhov terror and disappeared. He was posthumously rehabilitated. He is the author of about two dozen collections of prose, dealing mainly with the Ukrainian-Polish War and the tribulations of Ukrainian peasant life in Galicia and the New World. Irchan also wrote 11 plays (7 of them in Winnipeg) on similar themes, which were quite popular in their day among Ukrainian Canadians. They include Buntar (The Rebel, 1922), Rodyna shchitkariv (The Family of Brush Makers, 1923), Dvanadsiat' (The Twelve, 1923), Pidzemna Halychyna (Underground Galicia, 1926), Radii (Radium, 1928), and Pliatsdarm (The Battle Zone, 1933). He is also the author of two volumes of memoirs about the Ukrainian-Polish War, Trahediia Pershoho Travnia (The Tragedy of the First of May, 1923) and V bur'ianakh (In the Weeds, 1925).

Irchan has been the subject of a substantial body of Soviet Ukrainian literary scholarship, including monographs by L. Novychenko (1958), V. Vlasenko and P. Kravchuk (1960), and L. Melnychuk-Luchko (1963), and a bibliography by V. Mashotas (1961). A two-volume selection of his works was published in Kiev in 1958.

I. Koshelivets, R. Senkus

Irkutsk. City (1982 pop 575,000) and oblast capital in Siberia, situated at the confluence of the Irkut and Angara rivers. A Russian fort was built there in 1661. A town was founded in 1686; it became an eparchial see in 1727, a gubernia capital in 1764, and the residence of the governor-general of Siberia in 1803 and of eastern Siberia in 1822. Under the tsars it was a place of political exile. The Ukrainians I. *Kulchytsky (1727–31) and I. *Nerunovych (1732–47) were bishops there; they were renowned for their missionary and educational activity among the Buriats and other Siberian peoples. In 1728 Kulchytsky reorganized the local school. Among its teachers were the exiled professors of the Kievan Mohyla Academy, Archimandrite P. Malynovsky and I. Maksymovych. Many Ukrainian settlers in *Siberia and the *Far East passed through Irkutsk, and a Ukrainian vertep has been preserved there. Today Irkutsk is an important industrial, scientific, and cultural center, port, and railway junction. According to the 1979 census, 90,800

Ukrainians lived in Irkutsk oblast; 42,600 stated Ukrainian was their mother tongue.

Irlivsky, Ivan [Irljavs'kyj] (pen name of I. Roshko), b 1919 in Irlia, Ung county, Transcarpathia, d 21 February 1942 in Kiev. Poet of the nationalist school. While living in Prague, he contributed to nationalist periodicals. His poetry collections are Holos Sribnoi Zemli (The Voice of the Silver Land, 1939), Moia vesna (My Spring, 1940), Veresen' (September, 1941), and Brosti (Buds, 1942). In 1941 he joined the *OUN expeditionary groups and went to Kiev, where he became the secretary of a writers' union headed by O. Teliha. He was executed by the Gestapo together with Teliha and other writers who refused to collaborate with the German occupational regime.

IRO. See International Refugee Organization.

Iron Age. A cultural-technological era in the development of humankind following the *Bronze Age in the 1st millennium BC that was characterized by the diffusion of iron and steel implements and weapons. In western and central Europe it consisted of the *Hallstatt (800–500 BC) and La Tène (500–1 BC) phases. This periodization is applicable only in Western Ukraine, which was penetrated by the *Thracian Hallstatt and Celtic La Tène cultures. The Iron Age in the rest of Ukraine is divided into three periods: the *Cimmerian or Pre-Scythian (8th and 7th centuries BC), the *Scythian (7th to 3rd centuries BC), and the Sarmatian (3rd century BC to 4th century AD).

The oldest extant evidence of iron use in Ukraine dates from the late 2nd millennium BC. It was, however, only in the 8th and 7th centuries BC that iron metallurgy was developed and basic tools and weapons began to be made of iron and steel in Ukraine. Stone implements were displaced; bronze implements, however, continued to be widely used well into the Cimmerian and Scythian periods. The unrivaled predominance of iron implements and weapons and the flourishing of iron metallurgy in Ukraine began only toward the end of the Iron Age.

The use of iron tools stimulated the development of agriculture, crafts, trade, and human progress as a whole. In the early Iron Age the population of the Eurasian steppe turned to what was, for that time, a more productive form of animal husbandry: nomadism. It was then that the migration of peoples, and hence frequent armed conflicts, occurred. On Ukraine's territory great tribal alliances coalesced, the earliest state formations emerged, and proto-urban fortified settlements and true ancient cities appeared. In the 7th century BC the Greeks began the colonization of the northern Black Sea littoral and the establishment of city-states there (see *Ancient states on the northern Black Sea coast). At the beginning of the Iron Age the territory and population of Ukraine entered the historical arena. In this epoch the population of Ukraine established economic and cultural contacts with the civilizations of the ancient world and was described by Assyrian, Greek, and Roman writers.

In the 8th and 7th centuries BC Ukraine's steppe was inhabited by seminomadic Cimmerian tribes, which archaeologists identify with the *Timber-Grave culture. In the Cimmerian phase the forest-steppe between the Dnieper and Dniester rivers was occupied by the seden-

IRON AGE

- A. Kushtanovytsia culture
- B. Kizyl-Koba culture
- C. Yukhnove culture
- D. Zarubyntsi culture

- E. Mylohrad-Pidhirtsi culture
- F. Cherniakhiv culture
- G. Direction of a culture's expansion

tary agricultural tribes of the *Chornyi Lis culture, descendants of the Bronze Age *Bilohrudivka culture. Many scholars consider the Chornyi Lis and Bilohrudivka tribes to be the indigenous proto-East Slavic population of Ukraine. Contemporaries of the Cimmerians in Galicia and Volhynia were the tribes of the *Lusatian culture; believed to have been the ancestors of the Western Slavs, they came from the territory of Poland during the late Bronze Age. From the 11th to the 6th centuries BC the upper Buh Basin was populated by the tribes of the *Vysovske culture - descendants of both the Lusatian and Chornyi Lis tribes - while western Podilia, Bukovyna, and Transcarpathia were influenced by tribes of the Thracian Hallstatt culture created by the *Getae and Dacians.

In the 7th century BC the Scythians penetrated into Ukraine's territory, drove out the Cimmerians, and established a large empire. It has been posited that the agricultural tribes of the Right-Bank forest-steppe called 'Scythian plowmen' by Herodotus were in fact descendants of the proto-Slavic Chornyi Lis culture that adopted the culture of the dominant 'Royal Scythians.' The forest zone bordering on Scythia was inhabited by ancient Baltic tribes of the *Mylohrad-Pidhirtsi culture in the upper Dnieper Basin and the *Yukhnove culture in the middle Desna Basin. The Crimean mountains were the home of the Kizyl-Koba culture of the *Taurians. In Transcarpathia, descendants of the Thracian Hallstatt culture constituted the *Kushtanovytsia culture in the 6th to 3rd centuries BC. In the course of the 2nd and 1st centuries BC the indigenous Thracian and proto-Slavic population of Transcarpathia, western Podilia, Bukovyna, Galicia, and Volhynia intermingled with the Celtic tribes of the La Tène culture that spread there from central Europe.

In the 3rd and 2nd centuries BC the Sarmatians displaced the Scythians from most of the Ukrainian steppe, and the Scythians remaining in the lower Dnieper Basin and the Crimean steppe founded so-called Little Scythia with its capital at *Neapolis near present-day Symferopil. In the 1st century BC the Getae expanded into the lower Dnieper and the Dniester basins. During the next three centuries they and the Dacians created the *Lypytisia culture in the upper Dniester Basin. In the forest-steppe between the Dniester and Dnieper rivers the *Zarubyntsi culture, considered by most scholars to have been proto-Slavic, flourished from the 3rd century BC through the 1st century AD until it was destroyed by the Sarmatians' expansion into the middle Dnieper Basin. Its remnants, pushed into the upper Dnieper Basin, together with Baltic tribes created the Kievan culture of the 2nd to 4th centuries AD. In the forest-steppe and steppe zones between the Dniester and Donets rivers in the 2nd to 5th centuries AD, the multiethnic (Sarmatian, Scythian, Thracian, and proto-Slavic) *Cherniakhiv culture emerged under the strong influence of the neighboring Roman provinces of the Danube Basin. At that time Subcarpathia was dominated by the Carpathian Burial-Mound culture of the Thracian Carpi. In the 3rd and 4th centuries AD the ancestors of the Western Slavs and Germanic Vandals – the tribes of the *Przeworsk culture – and Germanic *Goths and Gepidae penetrated from the Baltic region and the Vistula Basin into the Cherniakhiv and Carpathian Burial-Mound cultural zones. The Goths moved on into the northern Black Sea littoral, where in the late 4th century AD they, the Sarmatians, the tribes of the Cherniakhiv culture, and the remaining Hellenic city-states were conquered by the invading Turkic *Huns. The ensuing decline and desertion of the core territory of Ukraine in the late 4th and 5th centuries AD ended the Iron Age there.

Scythian iron weapons found in 6th-to-4th-century BC burial sites in the middle Dnieper region; drawing according to Ya. Pasternak, 1961

(above) Scythian iron tools; drawing according to B. Shramko, 1970
(left) Sarmatian iron weapons and bridle piece; drawing according to M. Viazmitina, 1971

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Liapushkin, I. Dneprovskoe lesostepnoe levoberezh'e v epokhu zheleza, vol 104 of Materialy i issledovaniia po arkhologii sssr (Moscow-Leningrad 1961)
- Pasternak, Ia. Arkheolohiia Ukraïny (Toronto 1961)
- Terenozhkin, A. Predskifskii period na dneprovskom Pravoberezh'e (Kiev 1961)
- Sulimirski, T. Prehistoric Russia (London 1970)
- Arkheolohiia Ukraïns'koï RSR*, vols 2–3 (Kiev 1971, 1975)
V. Mezentsev

Iron Division. See Third Iron Rifle Division of the Army of the UNR.

Iron industry. A branch of mining involving the extraction of *iron ore and its processing for use in the steel and other branches of the *metallurgical industry. Iron smelting existed in Ukraine as far back as the 5th century BC. Although quite widespread in Kievan Rus', its output was not sufficient to satisfy domestic demand. During the 15th century, iron production was revived. Iron ore found in shallow mines or at the bottom of bogs and lakes was brought to the surface using crude water-pumping systems and windlasses, and was smelted in primitive furnaces fanned by bellows. Production was concentrated in the well-forested (and therefore fuel-rich) Polisia, Volhynia, and, to a lesser extent, Galicia, Bukovyna, and Transcarpathia. The ores were generally low grade; therefore higher-grade ores and ready-made iron products were imported, primarily from the alpine regions of Europe, Hungary, and (later) Muscovy.

A short-lived growth in Ukraine's iron industry occurred after the introduction of the blast furnace in the Kiev region, Volhynia, and Polisia in the 18th century. Its subsequent decline in these regions was caused by the depletion of accessible mines, the destruction of the forests, the shortage of cheap labor after the emancipation of the peasant, and competition from the iron industry of the Urals. The number of productive iron mines fell from 500 in the late 18th century to 61 in 1853.

Small, medium-grade iron-ore deposits in the Donbas were first mined in the late 18th century. Abundant local coal resources facilitated the growth of the Donbas metallurgical industry. Output remained relatively small,

Ukraine's iron industry, 1880-1984

Year	Output of iron ore (in million t)	% of Ukraine's output in total: the Russian Empire* to 1913, USSR after
1880	0.07	7.1
1890	0.38	19.8
1900	3.44	56.5
1910	4.26	73.5
1913	6.87	74.7
1920	4.7	77.0
1932	8.4	69.8
1940	20.2	67.6
1950	21.0	53.0
1960	59.1	55.8
1970	111.2	56.9
1984	122.8	49.7

*Russian Empire using present boundaries of USSR.

however, accounting in 1880 for 7 percent of the Russian Empire's total. A radical change in Ukraine's iron industry occurred with the development of the *Kryvyi Rih Iron-ore Basin (Kryvbas) in the early 1880s and the construction of the First Catherinian Railroad linking it and the *Dnieper Industrial Region with the Donbas and its high-grade coal in the 1880s. The proximity of the Dnieper's water route and the Black Sea ports was conducive to the export of ores, and foreign (mostly French) investment brought about the introduction of modern technology in iron mining. As a result, Ukraine became the leading producer of iron ore in the empire (see the accompanying table), outstripping the Urals by 1897. The Kryvbas accounted for about 95 percent of Ukraine's output. In 1913 Ukraine produced 6 percent of Europe's and 3.5 percent of the world's iron ore and was the world's fourth-largest producer, preceded only by the United States, France, and Germany. The iron industry employed about 25,000 workers and exported about one-fifth of its output, mostly to Germany and Poland.

Ukraine's iron industry declined drastically during the First World War and collapsed completely during the years 1919-21. By the late 1920s, however, it had regained its prewar level (see the table), and it grew rapidly during the interwar years. By 1940, output was almost triple that of 1913, although its share of the USSR total had declined slightly because of the construction of the Ural-Kuznetsk Basin Industrial Complex. The Kryvyi Rih Basin remained Ukraine's most important producer of iron ore; production there was concentrated in eight large mines.

Devastated during the Second World War, Ukraine's iron industry was rebuilt and regained its prewar level of production by 1950. The Kryvbas continues to account for about 90 percent of Ukraine's iron-ore production. The second most important (but much smaller) producer is the *Kerch Iron-ore Basin. To prepare low-grade ores for industrial use, enriching plants have been constructed. The first was that of the *Komysh-Buryny Iron-ore Complex near Kerch, which began production in 1936. After the war the *Southern (1955), *New Kryvyi Rih (1959), Central (1961), *Northern (1963), and Inhulets (1965) mineral-enrichment complexes began operating in or near Kryvyi Rih. Iron ore has also been extracted since the war from the *Kremenchuk and Bilozerka iron-ore regions and processed by the *Zaporizhia Iron-ore Complex since 1969 and the Dnieper Mineral Enrichment Complex in Komsomolske since 1970.

Ukraine's iron industry has continued to grow during the postwar period. Output increased almost sixfold between 1950 and 1984 (see table), but its share of total Soviet output fell significantly.

Ukraine's iron ore (about 30 percent of total Soviet reserves) is an important commodity in Soviet foreign trade. In 1970 it accounted for 98.1 percent of total Soviet iron-ore exports, most of which were sent to the European Comecon countries for use in the development of their metallurgical industries. Ukraine's iron-ore thus plays an important role in the integration of the economies of the Comecon countries with the economy of the USSR. At present, Ukraine is the world's leading producer of iron ore, followed by other parts of the USSR, China, Brazil, and Australia.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Zheleznorudnaia promyshlennost' Ukrainskoi SSR: Tekhniko-ekonomicheskii obzor (Kiev 1964)

Orlovs'kyi, B. Zalizerudna promyslovist' Ukrainy v dorevoliutsiinyi period: Istoryko-ekonomichnyi narys (Kiev 1974)

Syrevaiia baza chernoi metallurgii Ukrainskoi SSR (Kiev 1974)

I.S. Koropec'kyj, V. Kubijovyč, S. Protsiuk

Iron ores. A natural mineral formation containing iron compounds from which iron is industrially extracted. Iron ores vary in their mineral composition, iron content, amount of useful and harmful impurities, and industrial properties. Their main types are classified according to their dominant mineral compound and geological formation. The ores found in Ukraine are hematite ( $Fe_2O_3$ ), magnetite ( $Fe_3O_4$ ), siderite ( $FeCO_3$ ), brown and bog iron ores containing hydrous ferric oxides ( $Fe_2O_3 \cdot nH_2O$ ), and ferruginous quartzites. For industrial purposes a distinction is made between poor and rich ores, the latter containing more than 46 percent iron. When high-grade ores are inaccessible or exhausted, it becomes necessary to separate and discard unusable materials from low-grade ores. The processes of upgrading are termed beneficiation and are accomplished by leaching and drying, flotation, agglomeration, or magnetic separation. Harmful impurities, such as sulfur, phosphorus, and arsenic, may degrade the quality of an ore, necessitating the addition of different ores in order to prepare it for industrial use. The mixture of manganese, chromium, nickel, titanium, vanadium, and cobalt is usually beneficial.

Ukraine's total reserves of proved economically mineable iron ore were officially estimated at 18.8 billion t (in 1968), constituting 32 percent of total Soviet reserves (21 percent of high-grade reserves), and an additional 7.2 billion t whose exploitation has yet to be assessed. There are 79 iron-ore deposits in Ukraine. The four main ones are the *Kryvyi Rih (Dnipropetrovske oblast) and *Kerch (Crimea) iron-ore basins and the *Kremenchuk (Poltava oblast) and Bilozerka (Zaporizhia oblast) iron-ore regions. (See also *Iron industry.)

B. Somchynsky

Irpın [Irpin']. III-11. City (1970 pop 25,300) under the jurisdiction of Kiev oblast, situated on the Irpin River 27 km from Kiev. It was founded in 1902 as a railway junction. Today it is a popular health-resort town. In February 1918, when the Central Rada returned to Kiev, Irpin was the site of several battles between the Sich Riflemen and Bolshevik forces, and in late 1918, of clashes between the UNR Black Sea Battalion and Hetman government units. Today its main industries are building-materials manufacturing and machine building: it has one of the largest brick-and-tile plants in Ukraine, a wall-materials and industrial-plastics complex, and a plant that produces machines for the local peat industry. Furniture and leather goods are also manufactured there.

Irpin Drainage and Irrigation System. A drainage and irrigation system constructed in 1947–53 (and improved in 1974) on the floodlands of the Irpin River and its tributaries. The system consists of two reservoirs (with a total capacity of 17,500,000 cu m), a 128-km canal with 9 locks regulating one of the branches of the Irpin, a 612-km drainage network with 810 regulatory locks, and 16 pumping stations. The whole system encompasses about 8,000 ha, of which 7,400 ha are under cultivation.

Irpin River [Irpın']. A right-bank tributary of the Dnieper River, 162 km in length and draining a basin of 3,340 sq km. The Irpin's marshes protected Kiev from the west, and hence had a strategic importance. The Treaty of Andrusovo (1667) and the Eternal Peace of 1686 designated the Irpin as the border between the Russian and Polish states. Retreating from Kiev in early February 1919, the UNR Army came to a halt at the Irpin. There in the summer of 1919 the Rava-Ruske (6th) Brigade of the Ukrainian Galician Army crushed the last Bolshevik resistance outside Kiev and captured 2,000 prisoners as well as rich spoils. In 1947–53 the *Irpin Drainage and Irrigation System was built in the river's floodplains.

Irrigation. The artificial application of water to land, primarily for agricultural purposes, using surface water from streams, rivers, and storage lakes, or subsurface water from aquifers. Water is transported by canals and pipelines using gravity flow supplemented by pumping and then distributed through smaller ditches or pipelines to farms, where it is applied by means of flood or furrow systems. Sprinklers have been increasingly used, because they decrease the loss of water through evaporation.

Before 1917 only 17,400 ha of land were irrigated in Ukraine, mostly in southern Ukraine. By 1940, 89,700 ha were irrigated, primarily by small local streams, rivers, ponds, lakes, and artesian wells. In the 1950s the construction of large irrigation systems using the waters of reservoirs created by the *Dnieper Cascade of Hydroelectric Stations was begun. The most important were the *Inhulets, *Krasnoznamianka, and Kamiani Pod irrigations systems. Smaller ones were created in the Crimea (the *Salhyr Irrigation System) and near the Dniester Estuary. By 1968, 53 systems irrigated 747,900 ha of Ukraine's arable land in Crimea, Kherson, Dnipropetrovske, Donetsk, Mykolaiv, Odessa, Zaporizhia, Voroshylovhrad, Kiev, Kharkiv, and Kirovohrad oblasts.

In 1966 a large-scale program of irrigating Ukraine's southern oblasts, where the land was most fertile but

1. Rivers
2. Irrigation canals
3. Underground irrigation canal

4. Reservoirs
5. Irrigated lands

precipitation scarce, was begun. Since that time the amount of land irrigated has grown by approximately 120,000 ha per year. It totaled 2,384,000 ha in 1984. Since irrigation has become a major factor in increasing grain yield, the irrigation of 8–9 million ha in Ukraine has been projected. In the late 1960s, 41 percent of Ukraine's irrigated land was devoted to fodder crops and only 22.5 percent to grain crops. Since then most of newly irrigated land has been used for grain cultivation. Between 6 and 7 percent of Ukraine's arable land is now under irrigation.

A whole series of new systems has contributed to the increase in irrigated land. The most important is in the *North Crimean Canal, which extends 400 km from the *Kakhivka Reservoir to Kerch and irrigated 228,000 ha (in 1980) of steppe land in Kherson and northern Crimea oblasts. Others include the *Kakhivka, *Dnieper-Donbas Canal, *Chaplynka, Northern Rohachyk, Lower Dniester, Bortnyky, and Frunze irrigation systems.

Since 1965 irrigation has been the most important water consumer in Ukraine. It was estimated to consume 10.4 cu km per yr (42.8 percent) of the water from the Dnieper River in 1980. Since Ukraine has the greatest per capita water deficit in the USSR, the conflicting demands of municipal, industrial, and agricultural users have become an acute problem. Irrigation is both affected by and results in water *pollution. Crops may be damaged by salt concentrations from industrial pollution or continual irrigation, which raises the groundwater level and results in soil salinization. The Zaporizhia Iron-ore Complex has poisoned the irrigation systems of the Rohachyk and Vasylivska rivers. In other cases, irrigation systems have been polluted by fertilizers, fine soil particles, and decaying organic matter.

Water shortage has also increased as a result of the use of poor technical equipment in irrigation. The use of ditches instead of sprinklers results in evaporation losses, while use of unlined beds leads to excessive drainage losses. The increasing use of cement beds, closed pipelines, and sprinklers should promote water conservation in the future.

Ukraine has become the object of a major water-diversion scheme that would involve the transfer of 16–23 cu km per yr of water northward from the Danube to irrigate 2.6–4.6 million ha in the Dnieper Basin. The first step through Sasyk Lake was completed in 1983, but because of uncoordinated planning and insufficient research the irrigation of the Budzhak steppe resulted in soil salinization, making the area infertile. The continuing controversy over large-scale diversion schemes has put the completion of this project in doubt.

B. Somchynsky

Irshava [Iršava]. v-4. Town smt (1978 pop 6,300) on the Irshava River at the foot of the Volcanic Ukrainian Carpathians and a raion center in Transcarpathia oblast. It was first mentioned in 1341. It has an abrasives plant, an industrial-machine-repair plant, several food-processing plants, a cotton-textiles mills, and a furniture factory. Lignite coal, limestone, and marble are mined in its vicinity.

Isaievych, Yaroslav [Isajevyč, Jaroslav], b 7 March 1936 in Verba, Dubno county, Volhynia. Historian. In 1959 he was appointed research associate of the Institute of Social Sciences of the Academy of Sciences in Lviv. He is the author of numerous works on the cultural and economic history of Galicia up to the 18th century (particularly the history of towns and of printing). His major works are Bratstva ta ikh rol' v rozvytku ukrains'koï kul'tury XVI–XVIII st. (Brotherhoods and Their Role in the Development of Ukrainian Culture in the 16th–18th Century, 1966), Dzherela z istorii ukrains'koï kul'tury doby feodalizmu XVI–XVIII st. (Sources on the History of Ukrainian Culture in the Feudal Period of the 16th–18th Century, 1972), Istoriia knigopechatanii na Ukraine i ego rol' v mezhslovianskikh kul'turnykh sviaziakh (XVI–pervaia polovina XVII st.) (The History of Book Printing in Ukraine and Its Role in Inter-Slavic Cultural Relations [16th–First Half of the 17th Century], 1977), Prichynki pervopechatnika (Contributions of the First Printer, 1981), and biographies of Yu. *Drohobych (1972) and I. *Fedorovych (1975).

Petro Isaiv

Isaiv, Petro [Isajiv], b 26 June 1905 in Lisky, Kolomyia county, Galicia, d 23 February 1973 in Philadelphia. Historian, pedagogue, and journalist. A graduate of Lviv University (MA 1931) and the Ukrainian Free University (PH D 1947), he taught secondary school in Lviv and edited the journals Molode zhyttia (1927–9) and Dzvony (1931–9). During the war he headed the educational department of the Ukrainian Central Committee and edited Ukrains'ka shkola (1942–3). In 1944 he immigrated to Germany and in 1949 to the United States. Isaiv served as head of the executive of the *Obnova academic society, edited the weekly Shliakh (1949–63), and was active in Ukrainian education. On the strength of his scholarly contributions he was elected full member of the Schevchenko Scientific Society (1952) and professor of the Ukrainian Catholic University (1965). His publications include numerous articles, particularly on Ukrainian church history, entries in Entsyklopediia ukraïnoznavstva, and the monograph Prychyny upadku ukrains'koï derzhavy v kniazhi i kozats'ki chasy (The Causes of the Fall of the Ukrainian State in Princely and Cossack Times, 1975).

Isajiw, Wsevolod [Isajiv, Vsevolod], b 6 November 1933 in Lviv, Galicia. Sociologist. Educated at La Salle College and the Catholic University of America (PH D 1967), he has taught at St John's University, the University of Windsor, and, since 1970, the University of Toronto. He has written Causation and Functionalism in Sociology (1968) and various articles, and has edited a number of books, including Ukrainians in American and Canadian Society (1976) and Identities: The Impact of Eth- nicity on Canadian Society (1977). He was president of the Canadian Ethnic Studies Association (1973–7).

Ishchak, Andrii [Iščak, Andrij], b 23 September 1887 in Mykolaiv, Zhydachiv county, Galicia, d 26 June 1941 in Lviv. Ukrainian Catholic priest, educator, and theologian; full member of the Shevchenko Scientific Society (1935). During the First World War he served as an army chaplain. In 1918 he became prefect of the Greek Catholic Seminary, and then taught canon law and Eastern dogmatics at the Greek Catholic Theological Academy (1928–39). He published a number of historical and theological studies such as 'Uniini i avtokefal'ni zmahannia na ukrains'kykh zemliakh vid Danyla do Izydora' (Uniate and Autocephalous Strife in Ukrainian Lands from Danylo to Isidore, Bohosloviia [1923, 1924, 1927]), 'De Zacharia Kopystenskyj eiusque Palinodia' (Bohosloviia [1930–1]), and 'Dohmatyka nez'iedynenoho Skhodu' (Dogmatics of the Non-united East, Pratsi Hreko-Katolyts'koi bohoslovs'koi akademii [1936]). He was shot by Soviet airmen at the outbreak of the German-Soviet War.

Ishchenko, Ivan [Iščenko], b 17 July 1891 in Pustovarivka, Skvyra county, Kiev gubernia, d 21 November 1975 in Kiev. Surgeon; from 1945 corresponding member of the AN URSR. A graduate of Kiev University (1917), he was the chief surgeon of the Kiev Military Hospital (1944–54) and a department head at the Kiev Medical Institute. His publications deal with problems of clinical and experimental surgery, particularly with abdominal surgery, shock, and organ transplantation.

Ishchenko, Oleksii [Iščenko, Oleksij], ?–1811. Kiev silversmith of the late 18th and early 19th centuries. A master craftsman with his own shop, he did his most important work for the Kievan Cave and St Michael's Golden-Domed monasteries. His works, signed with the initials 'AI,' include the silver Royal Gates of the Church of the Elevation of the Cross (1784), two icon vestments (1784), a copper book for a gospel with 11 enamel medallions (1785), a copper altarpiece for St Michael's Golden-Domed Monastery, a silver vestment for an icon of St Barbara (1790), and a silver plate (1791). He also gilded a dome of the Dormition Cathedral of the Kievan Cave Monastery (1780). Many other works by Ishchenko have not been preserved.

Ishchuk, Arsen [Iščuk], b 22 June 1908 in Horodok, Berdychiv county, Kiev gubernia, d 21 December 1982 in Kiev. Literature scholar and prosaist. From 1937 he taught at Kiev University and served there as a dean and prorector. He wrote monographs on Lesia Ukrainka (1950), P. Tychyna (1954), and V. Myntko (1957), the collections Statti proadians'ku literaturu (Articles about Soviet Literature, 1958) and Na shliakhu postupu (On the Road of Progress, 1968), and the novel-chronicle Verbivchany (The Villagers of Verbivka, 3 vols, 1961–75).

Ishlinsky, Aleksandr [Išlinskij], b 6 August 1913 in Moscow. Specialist in mechanics; full member of the AN URSR since 1948 and of the Academy of Sciences of USSR since 1960. From 1948 to 1955 he served as director of the Institute of Mathematics of AN URSR and professor at Kiev University. He has also taught at Moscow University and served as director of its Institute of Mechanics. In 1964 he became director of the Institute for Problems of Mechanics of the AN URSR. His contributions to mechanics include a theoretical basis for a space gyroscope.

Metropolitan Isidore

Isidore, b ca 1380–90, d 27 April 1463 in Rome. Metropolitan of Kiev. A Greek by birth, in 1436 he was consecrated metropolitan of Rus' by the Patriarch of Constantinople, Joseph II. He favored a church union with Rome and in 1439, at the Council of Ferrara-Florence, he signed the union of the Greek and Latin rite churches (see *Florence, Church Union of). In 1440, as legate of Pope Eugenius IV, he traveled throughout Ukraine proclaiming the union. In 1441 he went to Moscow, the seat of the Kievan metropolitanate. There, however, his proclamation of the union was opposed by the prince and the hierarchy. He was briefly imprisoned but escaped and fled to Ukraine, where, having lost most of his support, he remained for only a short time before returning to Rome. In Rome he was appointed a cardinal and became known as Cardinalis Rutheni. He abandoned the title of metropolitan of Rus' in ca 1445–8, but he continued his efforts on behalf of the Ukrainian church, making several trips to Constantinople and even to Rus'. He died in Rome and was buried in the Vatican Basilica. His sermons were published by the Pontifical Institute of Oriental Studies in Rome in 1971.

Iskra, Ivan, b ? d 26 July 1708 in Borshchahivka (now in Vinnytsia oblast). Colonel of Poltava regiment from 1696 to 1703; the grandson of Ya. Ostrianyn. Iskra took part in the Russian campaign of 1696 against the Turkish fortresses on the lower Dnieper River, as acting hetman of the Cossack regiments. In 1700 he led a large Cossack force against the Swedes in Livonia during the Northern War. He opposed Hetman I. *Mazepa's separatist plans, and in 1703 Mazepa deposed him. In August 1707 Iskra and the general judge V. *Kochubei denounced Mazepa to Tsar Peter I. Trusting Mazepa and finding no evidence to prove their accusations, Peter had Iskra and Kochubei arrested, returned to Ukraine, and beheaded. They are buried at the Kievan Cave Monastery.

Iskrytsky [Iskryc'kyj]. Name of a noble family in the Chernihiv region. Mykhailo, a Kievan noble of the mid-17th century, married Eva Morzhkovska, the sister of Hetman P. Teteria. His son, Vasyl (d 1696, buried in Lviv), was a Notable Companion of the Zaporizhian Host (1659). Vasyl's daughter, Uliana (Olena, d 29 October 1742), married Hetman D. Apostol. Several other Iskrutskys were famous civic leaders in the Chernihiv region in the 18th to 20th centuries, including Hryhorii, who was marshal of the nobility in Novhorod-Siverskyi vicegerency (1788–93), and Petro, who served as general flag-bearer under Hetman K. Rozumovsky (1760–2).

Iskusstvo v Iuzhnoi Rossii (Art in Southern Russia). Monthly devoted to pictorial art and architecture that was published in Kiev in 1913–14 as the continuation of Iskusstvo i pechatnoe delo (1909–10) and Iskusstvo; Zhivopis'; Grafika; Khudozhestvennaia pechat' (1911–12). It published articles on the history of world art and particularly on the history of Ukrainian art, the traditions of Ukrainian folk art, and the contemporary artistic schools in Ukraine. Among its contributors were N. Ge, F. Ernst, P. Martynovych, O. Novytsky, M. Petrov, K. Shyrotsky, and M. Vrubel.

Islam-Girei III (Islām Girāy), 1604–June 1654. Khan of the Crimean Tatars in 1644–54 and an untrustworthy ally of Hetman B. *Khmelnitsky in the *Cossack-Polish War of 1648–57. While in Ukraine, his forces pillaged towns and villages, and carried off the inhabitants as slaves. Islam-Girei III deserted Khmelnytsky thrice – at the battles of *Zboriv (1649) and *Berestechko (1651) and the siege of *Zhvanets (1653) – each time entering into a separate peace agreement with the Polish king Jan II Casimir Vasa. He played both sides in the conflict to his own advantage. Consequently, Khmelnytsky turned to Muscovy for aid and signed the Treaty of *Pereiaslav with the tsar in 1654. According to a Ukrainian legend, a Ukrainian woman slave avenged the destruction wrought in her country by the Tatars by poisoning Islam-Girei.

Ispravnik. Name of an official on the county level in the Russian Empire. Ispravniki were introduced by Catherine II in 1775. At first they were county heads elected from among the local nobility. From 1862 they were appointed by the gubernia governor and their functions were expanded to include supervision of the county police and prisons and membership in various county committees and commissions. In 1874 they became members of the county bureaus for peasant affairs. They were responsible directly to the governor, and their police authority in the county, except in those towns that had their own police force, was practically unrestricted. (See also *Police.)

Israel. Jewish state established on the territories of British-controlled Palestine on 14 May 1948. In 1986, the population of Israel (not including territories occupied in 1967) was 4,381,000, of which 83 percent were Jews and 17 percent non-Jews. Of the latter, 77 percent were Moslems, 13.5 percent Christians, and approx 9 percent Druze. Approximately 1.2 million Arabs live in territories occupied by Israel since 1967. The official capital of Israel is Jerusalem.

Historical ties between Palestine and Ukraine were based on religious motives. The Holy Land drew pilgrims from Ukraine as far back as the 11th century (see also *Jerusalem). Hetman I. Mazepa contributed generously to monasteries and churches in the Holy Land. During the Second World War, some Ukrainians who were in the Polish army stayed on what is now Israeli territory. Today, in the city of Nazareth there is an outpost (stanytsia) of the Ukrainian Catholic church.

Jews from Ukraine played an important part in both the world Zionist movement and in the creation of the Israeli state. The leader of the Hibbat Zion, L. Pinsker, who called for the creation of a Jewish state, was born in Tomashiv, in the Kholm region, and was educated in Odessa. Also of Ukrainian origin are the greatest theoretician of Socialist Zionism, B. Borochoy; the founder and theoretician of anti-Socialist Zionism, V. *Zhabotinsky; the founder of modern Hebraic literature and the greatest Jewish poet, Hayyim Nahman Bialik; the second president of Israel, I. Ben-Zvi; former prime minister G. Meir; former acting prime minister and minister of foreign affairs M. Sharett; the founder of Israeli industry A. Shenkar; and others in all branches of political, social, economic, and cultural life.

Jews emigrated from Ukraine to Palestine in larger numbers at the beginning of the Zionist movement, in the late 19th century. In 1971 a relatively large exodus of Jews from Ukraine (as well as from other parts of the USSR) to Israel began. Close to 100,000 Jews emigrated from Ukraine but less than half of these settled in Israel, most making their way to the United States and Canada. The accompanying table gives figures for the number of Jews who emigrated from Ukraine by city (from which over 1000 emigrated).

City of origin of Jewish emigrants from Ukraine

City	Number of Jewish emigrants (1968–81)	Number immigrating to Israel	% of total emigrants
Kiev	23,666	4,734	20
Kharkiv	3,969	577	14.5
Odessa	24,794	4,249	17.1
Lviv	8,237	3,480	42.3
Chernivtsi	17,868	16,361	91.6
Mukachiv	1,085	1,024	94.4

The percentage of Jews who, having emigrated from Ukraine, went to Israel is larger for those cities in which the Jews were not so Russified and denationalized. Many Ukrainians of mixed marriages and parentage also emigrated.

Today in Israel, the newly arrived emigrants from Ukraine constitute a significant percentage of engineers, doctors, and industrial workers. There are a few kibbutzim with a majority of Jews from Ukraine. Some immigrants are members of the Association for Jewish-Ukrainian Contacts, which publishes the journal Diia-lohy. The greatest concentrations of Jews from Ukraine are in the Tel Aviv area, Beer-Sheva, Jerusalem, and Haifa.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Gitelman, Z. Becoming Israelis: Political Resocialization of Soviet and American Immigrants (New York 1982)
Šnaton Statisti Leisrael (Jerusalem 1984)
Facts about Israel (Jerusalem 1985)

I. Kleiner, V. Markus

Istanbul. The largest city (1984 pop 2,854,000) in Turkey. Its old city (Stamboul) stands on a triangular peninsula between Europe and Asia washed by 'the three seas': the Bosphorus, the Golden Horn, and the Sea of Marmara. The Golden Horn inlet separates the original old city from the 'newer' (10th century on) city of Beyoglu (formerly Galatia-Pera) to the north. The Bosphorus separates European Istanbul from its Asian districts of Üsküdar (formerly Scutari and Chrysopolis) and Kadiköy (Chalcedon). Istanbul is a renowned port and political and cultural center. It was the capital of the Byzantine and Ottoman empires and, until 1923, of the Turkish Republic. It has many Byzantine and Turkish architectural monuments (churches, mosques, and palaces), learned societies, research institutes, museums, libraries, and newspapers; a university (est 1453), technical university, and academy of fine arts; other post-secondary schools; and a palace of culture.

The site of the ancient Greek colony of *Byzantium was founded on the Bosphorus ca 660 BC and came under Persian, Athenian, Spartan, Macedonian, and Roman rule. In 324 AD, after defeating his rival Licinius, Emperor Constantine the Great made Byzantium his capital. Renamed Constantinople, it became one of the world's most powerful, beautiful, and wealthy cities. In 381, the city became the seat of a patriarch who was second only to the bishop of Rome. Because of its central role in the *Byzantine Empire, its geopolitical location, and its wealth, Constantinople became an object of conquest by the Persians and Avars (626), the Arabs (674–8, 717–18), the Bulgars (813, 913), the Pechenegs (1090–1), and Kievan Rus'.

Varangian-Rus' forces first besieged Constantinople in 860; the sieges of the Kievan princes Oleh I (907), Ihor Olhovych (944), and Volodymyr Yaroslavych (1043) followed. But there were also amicable relations between Constantinople and Kiev. In 957, for example, Emperor Constantine Porphyrogenitus welcomed the visit of Princess Olha with much pomp and circumstance. In the 11th and 12th centuries, banished Rus' princes sought refuge there; in 1129 five Polatsk princes banished by Grand Prince Mstyslav I Volodymyrovych settled there with their families. Rus' warriors served in Constantinople; in the 11th century, there was a retinue of them at the emperor's court. Rus' merchants received special privileges in Constantinople, as laid down in the treaties of 911, 944, and 971; they were allowed to live in a separate quarter near St Mamant's Monastery. From that time on merchants from Constantinople also traded in Ukraine.

Constantinople – called Tsargrad or Tsarhorod ('The Emperor's City') by the Slavs – played an important role in the Christianization of Ukraine in 988 and the subsequent history of the Ukrainian *church. From 1037 to 1686, Kiev metropolity was under the canonical jurisdiction of the Patriarch of Constantinople, who appointed its metropolitans. Patriarchs who had a particularly important influence on church affairs in Ukraine were Jeremiah II (1589–95), who granted the right of stauropegion to the Lviv, Kiev, and Lutske brotherhoods; Parthenius, who ratified Metropolitan P. Mohyla's Orthodox Confession of the Faith (1643); Dionysius IV, who placed Kiev metropolity under the jurisdiction of the Patriarch of Moscow (1686); and Gregory VII, who confirmed the autocephaly of the Orthodox church in Poland (1924). Many Ukrainian pilgrims on their way to the Holy Land passed through Constantinople, which was considered a holy city; some of them, such as Hegumen Danylo of Chernihiv (ca 1113), the Nizhen monk I. Vyshensky (1708), the Chyhyryn monk Serapion (1749), and V. Hryhorovych-Barsky (1723), left accounts of their stay there.

Together with Christianity, *Byzantine art and law were brought to Ukraine from Constantinople. The *architecture of Kiev under Volodymyr the Great and Yaroslav the Wise used Constantinople as the model. Churches (especially the *St Sophia Cathedral), palaces, and the *Golden Gate were built and embellished by Byzantine craftsmen and painters. The most famous Rus' icon, the Vyshhorod Theotokos, was painted by artists from Constantinople.

Constantinople was sacked by the Crusaders in 1204, and the ensuing dismemberment of the Byzantine Empire, Latin rule (1204–61), Turkish expansion, and foreign occupations and sieges led to the city's political and economic decline. Finally, in 1453 the Ottoman sultan Mehmed II seized Constantinople and massacred its population. The city was then repopulated and rebuilt. From 1457, as Istanbul, it was the capital of the Ottoman Empire and enjoyed centuries of peace and prosperity.

Under the Ottomans, decisions made in Istanbul influenced the fate of much of southeastern Europe, including most of Ukraine (see *Turkey). During the numerous raids of Turkey's vassals, the Crimean Tatars, into Ukraine, thousands of Ukrainians were captured and shipped to the slave market in Istanbul; among them was Roksoliana, who ca 1520 became the wife of Sultan Süleyman I. The Cossacks combated the Turks and Tatars; their leader Prince D. Vyshnevetsky was captured and executed in Istanbul in 1563. Under and after Hetman P. Sahaidachny the Cossacks were strong and daring enough to sail across the Black Sea and pillage the environs of Istanbul in 1615, 1620, and thrice in 1624, releasing Cossacks and other Christians from Turkish captivity. During the Polish-Ottoman Battle of Cecora, the future hetman B. Khmelnytsky was captured and held prisoner in Istanbul (1620–2). At the start of the Cossack-Polish War (1648), Khmelnytsky's emissary, Col P. Dzhahalii, concluded an alliance at the Porte. Hetman P. Doroshenko had residents at the Porte from 1666. In 1672, Yu. Khmelnytsky was captured by the Tatars and taken to Istanbul; he lived there as the archimandrite of a Greek monastery for six years before becoming the hetman of Right-Bank Ukraine.

During the First World War, the *Union for the Liberation of Ukraine had its representatives, headed by M. Melenevsky, in Istanbul. After the 1918 Peace Treaty of Brest Litovsk, envoys of the Ukrainian Hetman government (M. Sukovkin in 1918) and the UNR Directory (O. Lototsky in 1919–20 and J. Tokarzewski-Karaszewicz in 1920–1) resided in Istanbul. In 1919–21 the Ukrainian artist O. Hryshchenko also lived there. After the armistice of 11 November 1918, 300 Ukrainians in the Austrian army who had surrendered on the Western front were brought to Istanbul and allowed to return home through the intervention of the Ukrainian envoy. In 1921–35, a representative of the UNR Government-in-exile, V. Mursky, resided in Istanbul. After the Second World War, until the late 1940s, there was a small but active Ukrainian community in Istanbul, headed by M. Zabala.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Barsov, T. Konstantinopol'skii patriarkh i ego vlast' nad russkoiu tserkoviiu (St Petersburg 1878; repr, The Hague 1968)
 Kondakov, N. Vizantiiskie tserkvi i pamiatniki Konstantinopolia (Odessa 1887)
 Lotots'kyi, O. Storinky mynuloho, 4: V Tsarhorodi (Warsaw 1939)
 Levchenko, M. Ocherki po istorii russko-vizantiiskikh otnoshenii (Moscow 1956)
 Hornykevych, T. Viden', Tsarhorod, Ateny: Podorozhni zapysky (Munich 1964)

A. Zhukovskiy

Istoriia narodnoho gospodarstva ta ekonomichnoi dumky Ukraïns'koï RSR (History of the National Economy and Economic Thought in the Ukrainian SSR). A scholarly series published since 1965 by the AN URSR Institute of Economics in Kiev. Since its establishment the editor has been T. Derev'iankin. It contains articles on the latest research in Ukrainian economic history and history of economic thought. Twenty issues have been published (to 1986), but the number of copies printed is gradually decreasing: from 1,000 in 1974 to 890 in 1984.

Istoriia Rusov (History of the Rus' People). An important document of Ukrainian political thought from the end of the 18th or beginning of the 19th century, of unknown authorship. It vividly depicts the development of Ukraine, its people, and statehood from the remote past to 1769, focusing mostly on the periods of the *Cossacks, B. *Khmelnysky, and the *Hetman state. The historical outlook embodied in the work is that of traditional Cossack historiography. The underlying principle of Istoriia Rusov is that each nation has a natural, moral, and historical right to an independent political development; its main theme is the struggle of the Ukrainian nation against foreign (Russian or Polish) domination. The author made ample use of contemporary historical sources and supplemented them with various legends, personal recollections, and 18th-century archival materials. It was not the writer's intention, however, to present an objective history of Ukraine; rather, he presented history as he believed it should have been. According to E. *Borschak, Istoriia Rusov is a historical legend, a political exposition in a historical form. It is written in the Russian literary language of the time with a large admixture of Ukrainian words. Because of censorship, the author often concealed his true thoughts or attributed them to historical personalities by quoting fictitious speeches or correspondence.

The authorship of the book has not been determined. Archbishop H. Konysky was first thought to be the author, but this hypothesis was later rejected. Many historians, including V. Ikonnikov, O. Lazarevsky, M. Vasylenko, and D. Doroshenko, claimed that the author was Hryhorii *Poletyka. Others, among them V. Horlenko, A. Yershov, and E. Borschak, held that it was Poletyka's son, Vasyl. M. Hrushevsky suggested that the work was coauthored by father and son. Several specialists – M. Slabchenko, P. Klepatsky, A. Yakovliv, and M. Vozniak – proposed that the author was O. *Bezborodko. Other names have been suggested, including N. *Repnin (by M. Drahomanov), V. *Lukashevych (by M. Petrovsky), and O. *Lobsevych. Some scholars claim the work was written in the 1760s–1770s (Lazarevsky, Doroshenko, Slabchenko, Vozniak); others give the 1790s as the date (Yakovliv, B. Krupnytsky); still others suggest it was written as late as 1815–25 (Horlenko, Yershov, Borschak). The book probably originated in the Novhorod-Siverskyi region, was copied several times, and edited again sometime between 1815 and 1822. The author, or authors, of Istoriia Rusov belonged to the *Novhorod-Siverskyi patriotic circle and were connected with Prince O. Bezborodko by official, personal, and ideological-political interests.

Istoriia Rusov was first mentioned in 1825. For a long time the work circulated in manuscript. It was extremely popular and had a strong influence on the development of Ukrainian historiography in the 19th century. The historical-literary works of M. Markevych, Ye. Hrebinka, I. Sreznevsky, N. Gogol, A. Metlynsky, M. Kostomarov, P. Kulish, and, above all, T. Shevchenko were based on Istoriia Rusov.

The work was published first by O. *Bodiansky in Chteniia v Imperatorskom obshchestve istorii i drevnostei Rossiiskikh (1846) and in a separate edition. A Ukrainian translation by V. Davydenko, edited and introduced by O. *Ohloblyn, was published in 1956 in New York.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Doroshenko, D. Istoriia Rusov iak pam'iatka ukrains'koï politychnoi dumky druhoi polovyny 18 v.,' Khliborobs'ka Ukraïna, vol 3 (1921)
 Iakovliv, A. 'Do pytannia pro avtora Istorii Rusio,' ZNTSh 154 (1937)
 Vozniak, M. Psevdokony'skyi i Psevdopoletyka ('Istoriia Rusov' u literaturi i nauksi) (Lviv-Kiev 1939)
 Borschak, E. La légende historique de l'Ukraine. Istoriia Rusov (Paris 1949)
 Ohloblyn, O. 'Where Was Istoriia Rusov Written?' AUA 3 (1953)
 Yakovliv, A. Istoriia Rusov and Its Author, AUA 3 (1953)
 Shevel'ov, Iu. Istoriia Rusov ochyma movoznavtsia, in Zbirnyk na poshanu prof. d-ra O. Ohloblyna (New York 1977)
 O. Ohloblyn

Italy. A country (1985 pop 52,079,000) in southern Europe occupying the Apennine Peninsula and the islands of Sicily and Sardinia. It has an area of 301,277 sq km. Individual Italian states freed themselves from foreign rule beginning in the early Middle Ages, but Italy did not become a united kingdom until the mid-19th century. Since 1871 Rome has been its capital. A Fascist dictatorship between 1922 and 1945, Italy became a republic in 1946.

In the 12th and 13th centuries AD, Italian merchants appeared in Kiev, and from the 12th to the 15th century, Venice, Genoa, and Pisa had commercial relations with the lands of the Crimea and southern Ukraine. Genoa and Venice established trading colonies on the northern Pontic and Azov coasts and in the Crimea – Kaffa (Teodosiia), which even had its own bishopric, Soldaia (*Sudak), Cembalo (Balaklava), Tana (Oziv), Bosporo (Kerch), Moncastro (Bilhorod-Dnistrovskiy), Matrega (Tmutorokan), Copa, Mapa, and Bata. From there, Italian corporations and individual merchants engaged in transit trade with the lands of Ukraine, Muscovy, Poland, Caucasia, Persia, India, and China. To obtain and maintain these colonies on the Black and Azov seas, Genoa and Venice waged war with each other and with the Crimean Tatars. The strongest center was Genoese-controlled Kaffa; before it was razed by the Turks in 1475, a thriving international market in slaves taken during Tatar raids into Ukraine and Caucasia operated there.

Relations between Italy and Rus' date from the 10th century onward, when various popes sent legations to the princes of Kiev and Galicia-Volhynia to negotiate a religious union or (later) an anti-Mongol coalition or both (see, eg, *Danylo Romanovych and Church Union of *Florence and Rome).

International trade routes between Europe and the Orient passed through Ukraine. In the 15th century, Italian merchants and artisans began settling in Lviv and other Western Ukrainian towns under Polish rule. There they specialized in trade and banking, opened schools of commerce, and introduced the ideas of *humanism and the *Renaissance. Italian craftsmen, architects, and painters built and embellished churches and palaces; eg, the Dormition Church (by Pietro Italus from Lugano and Paolo Romanus), the Kornia Building (by P. di Barbone and P. Dominici), the Golden Rose Synagogue (by the Italian known as P. Shchaslyvy), and the *Black Building (by the Italian known as P. Krasovsky) in Lviv. In Transcarpathia, as well, Italian influence is apparent in the architecture and frescoes of the rotunda in the village of Horiany, one of the many villages owned, together with Uzhhorod, between 1322 and 1691 by the Italian Drughet family, which founded Uzhhorod College. During the Renaissance individual Ukrainians studied in Italy and brought Italian ideas, literature, and culture back with them to Ukraine. One of them, Yu. *Drohobych, became a professor and rector at Bologna University.

Italian-Ukrainian political relations did not exist in Ukraine under Polish rule until the Cossack period. In 1646 the Venetian emissary G.A. Vimina Bellanese visited Hetman B. Khmelnytsky in Chyhyryn to try to persuade him to join a military coalition against Turkey. Vimina published an account of the Cossack-Polish War in Venice in 1671.

There was significant Italian influence on Ukrainian literature, painting, architecture, and music in the baroque, rococo, and classicist periods. Such architects as S. Bracci, B. *Rastrelli, A. Rinaldi, and G. *Quarenghi built palaces and churches in Kiev, Baturyn, Kozelets, and elsewhere in central Ukraine. At the same time Ukrainian artists and composers studied in Italy; eg, A. Losenko, I. Martos, O. Biliavsky, V. Bereza, D. Bortniansky, and M. Berezovsky. Many other Ukrainians visited Italy in the 17th and 18th centuries; some left accounts of their travels; eg, H. Skybysky, Hieromonach T. Kaplonsky, V. Hryhorovych-Barsky, and T. Prokopovych, who studied in Rome (1699–1701). Apparently, H. Skovoroda also visited Italy.

Around the time of the Church Union of *Berestia (1596), close ties existed between the Ukrainian church and the Vatican, and religious representatives were exchanged. Soon after, a permanent presence of Ukrainian and Belorussian Uniate clergy was established at the Vatican in Rome, and it has lasted to this day.

In the 1820s and 1830s the Italian duke Charles of Bourbon-Parma resided in Vienna; there he became acquainted with the Ukrainian Greek Catholic priests at St Barbara's Church and became such an enthusiast of the Eastern rite that he built a Greek Catholic church at his home in Lucca. Three Transcarpathian priests – the writers M. Luchkai and later the brothers A. and O. Labants – stayed as guests there several years. In the 1840s and 1850s Rev V. *Terletsy tried to influence the Vatican's policies concerning Poland and Ukraine. Throughout the 19th century, Ukrainians from Galicia and Bukovyna in the Austrian imperial army were posted on the territory of northern Italy and took part in battles against the Italians. Their experiences are portrayed in the Romantic works of A. Mohylnytsky, M. Ustyianovych, and particularly Yu. Fedkovych. In the second half of the 19th century, such Ukrainian writers and poets as P. Kulish, Marko Vovchok, Lesia Ukrainka, B. Hrinchenko, and M. Kotsiubynsky visited Italy; their sojourns there are reflected in their works. Ukrainian painters of the 19th century also studied in or visited Italy; eg, N. Ge, I. Repin, P. Boryspolets (d 1880 in Rome), R. Hadziewicz, K. Ustyianovych, A. Mokrytsky, V. Orlovsky, I. Shapovalenko, S. Vasylykivsky, and O. Murashko.

In 1873, the Florentine journal Rivista Europea printed M. Drahomanov's article on Ukrainian literature and the cultural movement under Russia and Austria; this was the first detailed information in Italian about the Ukrainian national movement. In 1908–9, M. Hrushevsky published a series of interesting accounts of his trip to Italy in Literaturno-naukovyj vistykyk. Around the turn of the century the poet P. Karmansky studied in Rome; there are many Italian themes in his works, and he translated contemporary Italian poets. Other Ukrainian writers – I. Franko, V. Shchurat, M. Vorony, V. Samiilenko, P. Hrabovsky – also translated Italian literature. Franko wrote a study of Dante (republished in Kiev in 1965).

The influence of Italian theater and opera in Ukraine has been discernible since the late 18th century. In the early 19th century, the magnate Y. Illinsky produced an Italian opera at his estate in Romaniv, Volhynia, using singers brought from St Petersburg. In 1811, an Italian comic opera was produced in Odessa. Italian opera troupes performed in Kiev in 1847 and 1863–5 and in Poltava and Odessa in the 1850s. Several Ukrainians studied singing in Italy. The tenor M. *Ivanov sang in the world premiere of G. Rossini's Stabat Mater (1842).

During the First World War, Ukrainians in the Austro-Hungarian army fought on the Italian front. Many of them died at the Battle of the Piave. Thousands (60,000 according to some estimates) were held in prisoner-of-war camps on the island of Asinara and near Cassino and Arquata. The Italian member of parliament E. In-sabato tried to have them sent to Ukraine to fight the Bolsheviks. His efforts failed because of French opposition, and they were freed only in 1921 and returned to Poland. In 1919–20, diplomatic missions of the UNR (headed by D. Antonovych and V. Mazurenko) and the Western Ukrainian National Republic (headed by O. Kolesa and V. Bandrivsky) were sent to Italy; Italy did not recognize the Ukrainian state, however, and they acted only in an unofficial capacity. A military delegation headed by O. Sevriuk and his deputy I. Kossak intervened in Italy on behalf of the prisoners of war. The UNR mission published the weekly La Voce dell'Ucraina (edited by M. Yermiiv).

In the interwar years, several Ukrainian political and cultural figures lived in Rome: Ye. Onatsky, M. Yermiiv, J. Tokarzewski-Karaszewicz, Ye. Konovalts, M. Lypovetska, and the painters I. Kurakh, S. Mako, R. Lisovsky, and H. Mazepa. In 1938 an exhibit of 374 works by 41 artists took place there. Several dozen gymnasium and theology students studied at the Salesian center in Turin, and Basilian monks from Galicia began living at the *Grottaferrata Monastery near Rome. Contacts with the Fascist authorities were maintained mainly by the OUN, which held its second great congress in Italy in 1939. This did not deter the Mussolini government, however, from supporting Hungary's claim to Carpatho-Ukraine in 1938-9.

During the Second World War, an Italian expeditionary corps commanded by Gen G. Messe fought on the Eastern front in Ukraine. In May and June 1944, the Polish Expeditionary Corps under Gen W. Anders fought in the Allied campaign against the Germans between Naples and Rome. It became famous for its capture of the stronghold on Monte Cassino. Several dozen of the 2,000 Ukrainians in the corps are buried in the military cemetery at the foot of the mountain.

At the war's end in 1945, some 15,000 Ukrainians found themselves in Italy. Most were soldiers in the *Division Galizien who had surrendered to the British and were interned in prisoner-of-war camps near Bellaria and then near Rimini. A small number consisted of refugees in displaced persons camps near Naples (Caserta, Capua, and elsewhere); later, Ukrainian refugees from Yugoslavia stayed for a short time in a camp near Trieste. The prisoners and refugees were helped partially by the Ukrainian Relief Committee in Rome, founded on the initiative of Bishop I. *Buchko. In 1947, the prisoners of war were transported as contract laborers to Great Britain, whence many of them, like most refugees, emigrated to the New World.

Since the late 1940s only a small community of Ukrainian Catholic clergy, students, and a few individuals has existed in and near Rome, where *St Josaphat's Ukrainian Pontifical Seminary (est 1954), the Ukrainian Minor Pontifical Seminary (est 1954), and the *Ukrainian Catholic University (est 1963) are located. Since the war Rome has been the main center of the *Basilian monastic order and the Ukrainian Catholic church in general. In Castel Gandolfo, outside Rome, a Studite monastery was founded in 1965 by Cardinal Y. Slipy. The villa of St Andrew, bought in 1929 by Metropolitan A. Sheptytsky, has been a rest home for seminarians. Elsewhere in Italy, Rev I. Khomenko lived and worked on the translation of the Bible on the Isle of Capri.

To familiarize Italians with Ukraine, an Italian-Ukrainian Friendship Society was founded in 1952 by V. Fedoronchuk; its chairman was Ambassador A. Giannini. Other notable Italian friends of the Ukrainians were Senator R. Ciasca, E. Insabato, Prince G. Alliata, and G. Bernabei. In 1954-6, the journal Ucraina was published in Italian. In 1951 the Italian state radio began broadcasting daily in Ukrainian; the broadcasts have been directed by V. Fedoronchuk (until 1975), Rev V. Sapeliak, and Rev R. Saba. The Vatican radio also broadcasts daily programs in Ukrainian. Ukrainian has been taught at the universities of Naples and Rome. The Milanese journal L'Altra Europa (formerly Russia Christiana) has often published articles on Ukrainian subjects, especially about religious dissent in Ukraine.

Italian-Ukrainian cultural and literary relations have continued in the 20th century. The Ukrainian Futurists followed closely the activities and writings of their Italian counterparts. Since the 1920s, a substantial body of Italian literature has been translated into Ukrainian. Dante's Divine Comedy has been translated by I. Franko, M. Ryl-sky and P. Karmansky, Ye. Drobiazko (1968, 1976), and more recently by the émigrés I. Kachurovsky and (in a prose version) B. Lonchyna; a translation of Dante's Vita nuova appeared in 1965. Petrarch's works have been translated by M. Zerov, I. Steshenko, I. Kachurovsky, and D. Palamarchuk. Translations of Boccaccio's Decameron were published in 1928 and 1969. Michelangelo's sonatas have been translated by M. Bazhan, I. Drach, and D. Pavlychko. In 1958 an anthology of Italian contemporary poetry was published in Kiev. Translations have been published separately or in the journal Vsesvit; they include works by A. Negri, G. Leopardi, G. Verga, C. Goldoni, E. De Amicis, G. di Lampedusa, G. Piovone, A. Moravia, E. Vittorini, I. Calvino, C. Pavese, C. Malaparte, D. Rodari, E. Montale, P.P. Pasolini, and others. Some Ukrainian literature, particularly T. Shevchenko's, has been translated and studied in Italy.

At the turn of the 20th century, the Ukrainian opera singers O. Myshuha and S. Krushelnyska trained in Italy and were acclaimed for their performances at the Rome Opera and La Scala in Milan. The singer I. Steshenko also trained in Italy. Since the 1960s, Soviet Ukrainian opera singers, including R. Babak, Ye. Miroschnychenko, A. Solovianenko, M. Ohrenych, and M. Kondratiuk, have trained at La Scala.

Over the centuries the Ukrainian language has acquired many Italian words and expressions. Many are *Latinisms, but others have been borrowed from modern Italian. The first loan words were ecclesiastical and religious terms; later ones were terms of finance, trade, warfare, sailing, art, music, theater, architecture, and daily life.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Hordyns'kyi, Ia. 'Ukraina i Italiia: Ohliad vzaiemyn do 1914 r.,' Zbirnyk zakhodoznavstva, 2, ed F. Savchenko (Kharkiv-Kiev 1930)
 Lonchyna, T. 'Ukrainci v Italii ta Vatykani,' in Ukrains'ki poselennia: Dovidnyk, ed A. Milianych et al (New York 1980)
 Varvartsev, N. Ukraina v rossiisko-ital'ianskikh obshchestvennykh i kul'turnykh svyaziakh (Kiev 1986)

V. Fedoronchuk, V. Markus

Itil. Capital of the Khazar kaganate (see *Khazars) in the 8th to 10th centuries, situated at the mouth of the Volga River, not far from present-day Astrakhan. Itil was an important commercial center because of its favorable location at the crossroads of the Volga River trade route and the overland trade route between Europe and Central Asia. The diverse population of Itil included many Slavic merchants. It was razed by Sviatoslav I Horevych in 965.

Itinerant tutors (mandryoni diaky). In 17th- and 18th-century Ukraine wandering graduates or older students of theological seminaries or brotherhood schools and, occasionally, clergymen without positions who supported themselves by private tutoring or short-term school teaching, and by entertaining the common people with humorous verses, comic skits, or **vertep* plays. The common people also called them pyvorizy (beer guzzlers). The works written by itinerant tutors include mostly burlesque poems, versified travesties, parodies, satires, humorous dialogues, vertep dramas, and lyric poetry. As a transitional stage from religious to secular literature, they occupy an important place in the development of Ukrainian literature. Relatively few works of this type – eg, the autobiography of I. Turchynovsky, the poem about Rev Nehrebetsky, and the poem about Kyryk – and authors' names – I. Turchynovsky, M. Mazalevsky, K. Zynoviiv, and V. Barsky – have come down to us.

The itinerant tutor appears as a literary persona in the intermedes of M. Dovhalevsky, and later in the works of N. Gogol, V. Narizhny, H. Kvitka-Osnovianenko, and I. Tobilevych. The language and style used by itinerant tutors influenced such writers as I. Nekrashevych and I. Kotliarevsky, as well as Kotliarevsky's imitators in the early 19th century. The works of itinerant tutors have been studied by I. Franko, M. Petrov, P. Zhytetsky, P. Yefymenko, O. Biletsky, and P. Popov.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Zhytets'kyi, P. 'Eneida' Kotliarevs'koho v zv'iazku z ohliadom ukrains'koi literatury XVIII stolittia (Kiev 1919)
 Bilets'kyi, O. (ed). Khrestomatia davn'oi ukrains'koi literatury (Kiev 1949)

D. Chyzhevsky

Iunak (Youth). Illustrated monthly magazine for members of the *Plast Ukrainian Youth Association between the ages of 12 and 18. The successor to Molode zhyttia, Doroha, and Na slidi, which served the same age group in interwar Western Ukraine and postwar Germany, Iunak began to appear in Toronto in January 1963. It contains articles on a broad range of topics written in a concise, clear style and richly illustrated with sketches and photographs. Its editors have been L. Onyshkevych (1963–7) and O. Kuzmovych (1968–).

Ivakh, Onufrii. See Ewach, Honore.

Ivakhiv, Vasyl [Ivaxiv, Vasyl'] (pseuds: Som, Sonar), b 1912 in Podusiv, Peremyshliany county, Galicia, d 13 May 1943 near Kolky, Volhynia. Senior *UPA officer. A longtime OUN member, he was active in 1940–1 in the Bandera faction of the Galician underground. In the subsequent year he organized and conducted various military courses for the OUN. In March 1943, Ivakhiv was sent to Volhynia by M. Lebed to bring the rapidly growing insurgency movement under unified command. He became the first chief of staff of the insurgent forces organized by the Bandera faction, and conducted negotiations with T. Borovets to unify peacefully all insurgent units under one UPA command. Before he could accomplish this act, he was killed in combat with German units. He was awarded posthumously the rank of lieutenant colonel.

Ivakhnenko, Oleksii [Ivaxnenko, Oleksij], b 30 March 1913 in Kobeliaky, Poltava gubernia. Cyberneticist; since 1961 corresponding member of the AN URSR. He worked at several of the academy's institutes before being appointed in 1962 chairman of a department in the Institute of Cybernetics. His Ukrainian language book Kybernetychni systemy z kombinovanyim keruvanniam (Cybernetic Systems in Automated Management, 1963) was the first significant work on cybernetics published in the Ukrainian SSR. His other works deal with several areas of technical cybernetics such as self-organizing systems theory, automatic-control theory, and mathematical modeling for forecasting and control.

Ivakin, Yurii, b 6 January 1917 in Katerynoslav (now Dnipropetrovske), d 1983. Literary scholar, feuilletonist, and satirist. He received a doctorate in philology from Kiev University in 1940. In 1946 he became a candidate and later an associate of the AN URSR Institute of Literature. His writing career began in 1947 with the satirical collection Perets' (Pepper). Several other collections have appeared, including Parnas'kyi tsyrul'nyk (The Barber of Parnassus, 1970), Parodii (Parodies, 1971), and Vid velykoho do smishnoho (From the Sublime to the Ridiculous, 1979). His main contribution, however, lies in his studies of T. Shevchenko: Satyra Shevchenka (Shevchenko's Satire, 1959), Styl' politychnoi poezii Shevchenka (The Style of Shevchenko's Political Poetry, 1961), as well as two volumes of commentaries to Shevchenko's **Kobzar* (1964 – poetry written before 1847; and 1968 – poetry from 1847 to 1861).

Ivan Rostyslavych. See Berladnyk, Ivan Rostyslavych.

Ivanchenko, Fedir [Ivančenko], b 12 October 1918 in Velykyi Vystrop, Lebedyn county, Kharkiv gubernia. Metallurgist; corresponding member of the AN URSR since 1982. A graduate of the Dnipropetrovske Metallurgical Institute (1945), he has been a professor of mechanics at Kiev Polytechnical Institute since 1969. Ivanchenko is one of the founders of a branch of mechanics known as heavy machinery mechanics and has developed new theories and methods of energy-exchange calculations in the design of metallurgical machines.

Ivanchenko (Ivanova) Raisa [Ivančenko, Rajisa], b 30 November 1934 in Huliai-Pole, Zaporizhia oblast. Writer and historian at Kiev University. She is the author of the prose collections Liubyty ne prosto (To Love Is Not Simple, 1976) and Ne rozmymys' iz soboiu (Do Not Part Ways with Yourself, 1980); the novel Peredchuttia vesny (Premonition of Spring, 1970); the historical novels Kliatva (The Curse, 1971, 1985, about M. Drahomanov), Hniv Peruna (The Wrath of Perun, 1982), and Zoloti stremena (Golden Stirrups, 1984, about King Danylo); and scholarly works, including Mykhailo Drahomanov u suspil'no-politychnomu rusi Rosii ta Ukraïny (II polovyna XIX st.) (M. Drahomanov in the Sociopolitical Movement in Russia and Ukraine in the Second Half of the 19th Century, 1971), which was severely criticized by the Party.

Ivanchov, Fedir [Ivančov], b 17 October 1916 in Fogarash (now Zubivka), Mukachiv county, Transcarpathia. Ukrainian writer and satirist in Slovakia. A member of the Communist Party of Czechoslovakia since 1948, he has been a teacher and an editor. Before the war he wrote two plays and a collection of short stories in Russian. He is the author of several Ukrainian collections of socialist-realist stories about life in Transcarpathia: Pidiimaiet'sia khliborob (The Farmer Is Rising, 1954), Otaki dila (Such Matters, 1957), Hrishni dushi (Sinful Souls, 1961), Dorohamy zhyttia (Along the Roads of Life, 1976), and Liudy v stroiu (People in the Ranks, 1977). From 1960 to 1971 he was the editor-in-chief of the magazine Duklia. A study of his life and work by M. Roman was published in Prešov in 1976.

Ivaneiko, M. See Shlemkevych, Mykola.

Ivanenko, Dmytro, b 29 July 1904 in Poltava, Poltava gubernia. Theoretical physicist; brother of O. *Ivanenko. After graduating from Leningrad University (1927), he worked at a number of scientific institutes in Leningrad, Kharkiv, Tomsk, Sverdlovsk, and Kiev. In 1942 he was appointed professor at Moscow University, and in 1949 he became an associate of the USSR Institute of the History of Science and Technology. He has made important contributions to the field of nuclear physics, cosmic radiation, gravitation, quantum mechanics, and mathematics. In 1929 he developed, with V. Fok, the theory of the parallel transfer of electron spinor wave functions. In 1932 he advanced the hypothesis that the atomic nucleus is composed of protons and neutrons. Simultaneously with I. Tamm (1934–6), he laid the foundations of the theory of specific nuclear forces, and then in parallel with I. Pomeranchuk and A. Sokolov (1944–8) he worked out the theory of electromagnetic radiation emitted by accelerated electrons. He proposed a new linear matrix geometry and non-linear spinor equations.

Ivanenko, Oksana, b 13 April 1906 in Poltava. Writer. After graduating from the Kharkiv Institute of People's Education (1926), she taught homeless juvenile delinquents at the Gorky Colony near Kharkiv and edited the children's monthly Barvinok. Since 1930 she has published over 40 collections of children's prose, most of which were republished in Tvory (Works, 5 vols, 1966–8); three novellas; and the biographical novels Tarasovi shliakhy (The Paths of Taras, 1961, about T. Shevchenko) and Mariia (1973, about Marko Vovchok). She also translated the tales of H.C. Andersen and the Grimm brothers into Ukrainian. A study of her life and works, by I. Shkarovska, appeared in 1969.

Ivanenko, Petro. See Petryk, Petro.

Ivane-Puste settlement. A Scythian settlement of the 6th–5th century BC. It was discovered in Ivane-Puste, Borshchiv county, Galicia, in 1935 and excavated in 1958–62. The remains of surface dwellings with ovens and open fireplaces, various farm implements, and fragments of pottery were found at the site. The inhabitants of the settlement were herdsmen and ploughmen.

Ivanets, Ivan [Ivanec'], b 1893 in Novosilky Hostynni, Rudky county, Galicia, d 10 March 1946 in Solikamsk, Perm oblast, RSFSR. Painter and graphic artist. During the war for Ukraine's independence Ivanets headed the Press Office of the Legion of Ukrainian Sich Riflemen, and then served on the legion's staff as attaché on gas warfare. A graduate of the Ukrainian Studio of Plastic Arts in Prague (1927), he worked as an illustrator, mostly for the Chervona Kalyna publishing house in Lviv. In 1942–4 he was president of the Association of Plastic Artists in Lviv. Arrested by the Soviets in Cracow in 1945, he was deported to Solikamsk. Ivanets painted battle scenes and landscapes, and wrote many articles on art.

Ivan-Horod. A fortified settlement of the 12th and early 13th century in Kiev principality near the present town of Rzhyschiv in Kiev oblast. First mentioned in the chronicles in 1151. Standing south of Kiev, it protected the capital from the steppe nomads. In 1223 it was destroyed by the Tatars. Excavations in 1960–6 uncovered the ruins of log fortifications and dwellings, pottery kilns, smithy implements, weapons, tools, various ornamental objects, and animal bones and bread grains.

Ivanivka. v-19, DB III-5. Town smt (1978 pop 10,400) in Anratsyt raion, Voroshylovhrad oblast. Founded in 1771, it has an industrial-machinery plant, a brewery, and a local food industry.

Ivanivka. vi-11. Agricultural town smt (1978 pop 2,900) and raion center in Odessa oblast on the Velykyi Kuialnyk River. It was founded as Malobaranivka in 1793; from 1858 to 1946 it was called Yanivka.

Ivanivka. vii-15. Town smt (1983 pop 5,100) on the Velyka Kalha River in the Black Sea Lowland and a raion center in Kherson oblast. It was founded in 1820. Its inhabitants are employed in agriculture and food processing.

Ivankivtsi settlement. An early Slavic settlement of the *Cherniakhiv culture (4th–6th century AD) discovered outside Ivankivtsi, Nova Ushytsia raion, Khmelnytskyi oblast. Investigations in 1951–2 and 1959–61 uncovered the remains of surface dwellings and storage pits, fragments of pottery, traces of iron working, iron knives, bronze fibulae, and silver Roman coins. Three granite idols that were discovered there are preserved at the Kamianets-Podilskyi and Chernivtsi regional museums.

Ivano-Frankivske [Ivano-Frankivs'ke]. v-5. City (1985 pop 210,000), raion center and capital of *Ivano-Frankivske oblast, an important railway and highway junction, and now the second-largest city in Galicia. Called Stanyslaviv until 1939 and Stanislav until 1962, it is situated in Subcarpathia near the confluence of the Bysstrytsia Nadvirnianska and Bystrytsia Solotvynska rivers.

Stanyslaviv was founded in 1662 on the site of the former village of Zabolotiv by the Polish magnate A. Potocki, who named it after his son, Stanislav. In 1663 it was granted the rights of Magdeburg law. The town was well protected by walls and a citadel (restored in the mid-18th century) and was densely built up. Potocki's palace was completed there in 1672 and the town hall in 1695. After the Turks captured Kamianets-Podilskyi in 1672, Stanyslaviv protected the southeastern borders of the Polish Commonwealth from the Turks and Tatars. In 1677 the Armenian community there received special privileges; thenceforth the town had two municipal councils – one for the Ukrainians and Poles and one for the Armenians. Shortly after its founding, Jews began settling there.

As a result of Armenian commerce, the town was an important trade and manufacturing center from the late 17th to the mid-18th century. Fairs were held regularly where Moldavian, Hungarian, Silesian, and Austrian goods were traded for locally produced leather and fur products. Stanyslaviv was also a flourishing cultural center. A branch of the Cracow Academy was established there in 1669; in 1722 it was converted into a Jesuit college. In 1732 the town's population was 3,321 (45 percent Ukrainian and Polish, 44 percent Jewish, and 10 percent Armenian). Later many Armenians out-migrated, and their self-government came to an end in 1769. In the 18th century, the town's development was hindered by frequent wars. During the Great Northern War Hetman I. Mazepa's forces occupied it in 1706–7, and during the Confederation of Bar it was thrice taken by Russian troops. Plagues decimated the populace in 1705, 1730, and 1770.

In 1772 Stanyslaviv came under Austrian rule and became a circle and (from 1867) county center. In 1801 the state assumed ownership of the town from the Potockis, and its fortifications were torn down in 1809–12. During the Spring of Nations in 1848, the Ukrainians there organized a circle council as a branch of the Supreme Ruthenian Council in Lviv and, in the circle itself, peasant militia units and a company of 'Ruthenian Riflemen' to fight the Hungarian and Polish insurgents.

The construction of a railway junction in 1866 stimulated the city's growth. Its population increased from 11,000 in 1849 to 18,600 by 1880 despite a major fire in 1868. By 1886 it had about 30 small industrial enterprises.

The appointment of a Greek Catholic bishop to Stanyslaviv eparchy (1885) and the establishment of a Ukrainian-language state gymnasium (1905, under the direction of M. Sabat) were milestones for the town's Ukrainians. Stanyslaviv's population continued to grow rapidly, reaching 33,400 by 1910. In 1925, after Knihynyn-Koloniia, which was originally a German settlement, and the Knihynyn-Selo had been incorporated, its population reached 54,000 (this included a 3,500-man garrison).

During the First World War Stanyslaviv was close to the front and in 1916–17 suffered much damage. From December 1918 to May 1919 it served as the capital of the Western Ukrainian National Republic (ZUNR). On 3 January 1919 the Ukrainian National Rada began holding its sessions there; on that day it passed the law on the unification of the ZUNR and the Ukrainian National Republic.

From May 1919 to September 1939 the city was under Polish rule and was one of the larger industrial centers in Galicia. Its main industries were locomotive and railway-car maintenance, petroleum refining, tanning, machine building, food processing, and woodworking. The city was a voivodeship capital (1921–39) and an important cultural center for its three principal nationalities. In 1939 its population of 64,000 included 12,000 Ukrainians (19 percent), 23,500 Poles (37 percent), 26,500 Jews (41 percent), and 2,000 Germans (3 percent).

Stanyslaviv was an important Ukrainian religious, cultural, and educational center with a Ukrainian Greek Catholic seminary, a theological lyceum, three parishes, and three monasteries. Secondary education was provided by four Ukrainian (two state and two private) and seven Polish gymnasiums. A music school, established in 1902 by D. Sichynsky and Ye. Yakubovych, became in 1921 a branch of the Lysenko Higher Institute of Music in Lviv. The city played an important role in Ukrainian musical life. A Boian choir society was organized there in 1894. The noted musicians D. Sichynsky, O. Zalesky, and Ya. Barnych worked there. Several dozen Ukrainian social and cultural organizations – such as the main office of the Skala Catholic reading halls, a branch of the Prosvita society (est 1877), artistic, religious, economic, professional, sports, and charitable associations – were active in Stanyslaviv. On the initiative of N. Kobrynska the first Ukrainian women's society – the Society of Ruthenian Women – was founded there in 1884, and the first women's almanac – Pershyi vinok – was published there in 1887. A congress of Sich societies took place there in 1910, and a Ukrainian Women's Congress was held there in 1934. The amateur Tobilevych Ukrainian People's Theater was established in 1911; in 1927 it became a permanent theater under the direction of M. Bentsal and the sponsorship of K. Vyshnevsky. Stanyslaviv was also an important publishing center: between 1879 and 1944, 43 periodicals were published there; most of them were short-lived. The most important were the economic biweekly Hospodar i promyshlennyk (1879–82), the monthly for precursors Diakovskii hlas (1895–1914, called from 1910 Holos diakiv), and Visnyk Stanyslaviv's'koi ieparkhii (1886–1939). No Ukrainian general or political newspaper, including Stanyslaviv's'ki visty (1912–13), was published for more than two years, but a Polish weekly, Kurjer Stanislawowski, came out, with a few short interruptions, from 1886 to 1939. The Ukrainian press developed rapidly while Stanyslaviv was the capital of the ZUNR: 12 newspapers and magazines, including the government daily Republyka (1919), appeared there. During the 1920s Bystrytsia was a major publishing house and in book production the city stood fifth in Galicia; by 1939 about 150 books had been published there.

During the Second World War Stanyslaviv was under Soviet (1939–41) and German (1941–4) occupation. Soviet

IVANO-FRANKIVSKE

- 1–5. Ukrainian Catholic churches
6. Episcopal residence until 1945
7. Pedagogical Institute (former theological seminary)
8. Railway station
9. Bus terminal
10. Medical Institute
11. Institute of Petroleum and Gas
12. Ukrainian Music and Drama Theater
13. Regional Museum
14. Philharmonic
15. Stadium
16. Lake
17. Collective-farm market

Ivano-Frankivske

rule after July 1944 led to mass repression, particularly in 1945–6. Because of the liquidation of Jews under the Nazi regime, the postwar resettlement of the Poles, and the influx of Russians, the national composition of the city's population changed; in the 1959 census Ukrainians accounted for 67 percent of the total population of 66,000, Russians for 25 percent, and others (mostly Jews and Poles) for 8 percent.

After the war the city's industries were rebuilt and expanded. Today there are 45 enterprises, producing consumer items, instruments, tools and equipment (particularly for petroleum and gas extraction and refining), reinforced concrete, and glass products.

The main educational institutions in Ivano-Frankivske are institutes of pedagogy, medicine, and petroleum and gas; nine specialized secondary schools; and six vocational-technical schools. Among its scientific institutions are the Carpathian Branch of the Ukrainian Scientific Research Institute of Forest Management and Agroforest Amelioration and the Planning and Design Technological Institute of the Ministry of the Forest Industry of the Ukrainian SSR. Located in the city are the *Ivano-Frankivske Ukrainian Music and Drama Theater and a puppet theater; an oblast philharmonic; the *Hutsul Song and Dance Ensemble; oblast archives with documents dating back to the 18th century; the *Ivano-Frankivske Regional Museum; two oblast newspapers, Prykarpats'ka pravda and Komsomol's'kyi prapor; and an oblast radio and tv station. Among the city's architectural monuments are the city hall (now the regional museum, rebuilt in 1870), the former Jesuit college and church (1729), a former Armenian baroque church with two steeples (1763), and remnants of the city walls. In the late 19th century the city center shifted southeast from the 'old town.' The eastern and northern districts of the city were densely built up. According to the general city plan of 1955, which was later modified, the old districts were to be reconstructed and new ones created. The city has many parks and a 38-ha artificial lake in the southwest. Ivano-Frankivske is 'closed' to foreigners.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Barącz, S. Pamiętki miasta Stanisławowa (Lviv 1858)
 Ploshchanskii, V. 'Halytsko-russkii horod Stanyslavov po dostovirnym ystochnykam,' Naukovyi zbornyk Halytsko-russkoi Matytsy, 4 (Lviv 1868)
 Szarlowski, A. Stanisławów i powiat Stanisławowski pod względem historycznym i geograficzno-statystycznym (Stanyslaviv 1887)
 Holubkov, M.; Sichkar, H. Ivano-Frankivs'k (Lviv 1963)
 Davydova, Iu. Ivano-Frankivshchyna v mynulomu i teper (Uzhhorod 1968)
Istoriia mist i sil: Ivano-Frankivs'ka oblast' (Kiev 1971)
 Kravtsiv, B. (ed). Al'manakh stanyslaviv's'koi zemli (New York, Toronto, and Munich 1975)

P. Isaiv, V. Kubijovyc

Ivano-Frankivske Institute of Petroleum and Gas (Ivano-frankivskyyi instytut nafty i hazu). Technical school of higher education under the Ministry of Higher and Specialized Secondary Education of the Ukrainian SSR. Formed in 1967 out of a branch of the Lviv Polytechnical Institute, it consists of nine departments such as geology, mechanical engineering, and automatization. It has a graduate program, an evening school, and a correspondence school. In 1979 its enrollment was 7,500.

Ivano-Frankivske Medical Institute (Ivano-Frankivskyyi medychnyi instytut). A teaching institute under the jurisdiction of the Ministry of Health of the Ukrainian SSR. Established in 1945, it includes a therapy and a stomatology department, a graduate school, and a preparatory program. In 1979 its enrollment was 2,500. The institute publishes a collection titled Mikroelementy v medytsyni.

Ivano-Frankivske oblast. An administrative region in Western Ukraine, established on 4 December 1939. Until 1962 it was called Stanyslaviv oblast. Its area is 13,900 sq km, and its population 1,374,600 (1986). The oblast has 14 raions, 352 rural soviets, 13 cities, and 26 towns (smt). The capital is Ivano-Frankivske (formerly Stanyslaviv).

Physical geography. The \*Carpathian Mountains in the west and southeast cover nearly one-half of the oblast's territory. The highest ranges are the \*Gorgany (with a maximum elevation of over 1,800 m) and \*Chornohora (reaching 2,000 m). The middle part of the oblast, stretching from the Carpathian Mountains to the Dniester River valley, lies in the Dniester Lowland. The land rises again to the northeast as part of the Opilia Upland and to the southeast as the Pokutia-Bessarabia Upland. In the north the soil is mostly eroded chernozem, gray forest podzol, and deep chernozem; in Subcarpathia it is primarily clay or peat podzolic; in the Carpathians, brown soils and mountain meadow soils predominate; and in the river valleys, meadow and bog soils are common. Forests (mainly beech, fir, and pine in the mountains and oak, sycamore, and ash in the lowlands) cover 35 percent of the oblast's territory. The rich mineral resources of the oblast include oil, natural gas, potassium salts, common salts, ozokerite, brown coal, bituminous shales, phosphorite, marl, limestone, graphite, and mineral water springs. The principal rivers are the Dniester – with its tributaries the Bystrytsia, Limnytsia, and Svirzh (on the right bank) and the Hnyla Lypa and Svicha (on the left bank) – and the Prut with its tributaries the Licha, Rybnysia, and Cheremosh. The climate of the oblast is temperate-continental: temperatures average  $-5.1^{\circ}\text{C}$  in January and  $18.8^{\circ}\text{C}$  in July. Temperatures are considerably lower in the mountains. The annual precipitation is 500–800 mm (800–1,100 mm in the mountains), and the growing season lasts 150–165 days a year.

History. Until the 12th century, the territories of the present oblast formed part of the Principality of Kiev. From the middle of the 12th century, these territories were successively part of the Galician, Volodymyr-Volynskyi, and Galician-Volhynian principalities. In the 14th century they came under Lithuanian and then Polish rule as part of the Polish-Lithuanian Commonwealth. The area was acquired by Austria in the 18th-century Polish partitions. A part of the Western Ukrainian National Republic following the First World War, the territories then came under Polish rule after the defeat of the former, as part of Stanyslaviv county. They were annexed by the USSR in 1939 as Stanyslaviv oblast, and Soviet rule was re-established in 1944.

Population. The average population density in 1986 was 98.9 people per sq km. The proportion of the urban population is rising steadily: it was 27.6 percent of the total population in 1965 and 42 percent in 1986. The total population of the oblast increased 14.5 percent in that same period. The ethnic composition of the population in 1979 (1959 figures in parentheses) was Ukrainians 95.2 (94.8) percent, Russians 3.7 (3.4) percent, and Poles 1 (0.9) percent. In 1984, three cities had a population of over 50,000: Ivano-Frankivske (200,000), Kalush (64,000), and Kolomyia (59,000).

Economy. Ivano-Frankivske oblast is an agrarian-industrial region. The major industries involve the processing of local petroleum, mineral, forest, and agricultural resources. Most industrial development has occurred since the Second World War.

Industry. Industry in Ivano-Frankivske utilizes the energy resources in the oblast: natural and coal gas, peat, and electricity generated at the regional power plant in Burshtyna. In 1983 light industry accounted for 22 percent of the gross value of production in the oblast. This was followed by machine building and metalworking (14.3 percent), the chemical industry (approx 13.7 percent), the food industry (13.1 percent), and the forestry (including woodworking and furniture making) industry (12.9 percent). Petroleum and natural-gas production, important industries in the interwar period, have steadily declined in importance as resources have been depleted. Light industry in the oblast includes leather tanning and processing (in Ivano-Frankivske and Bolekhiv), fur processing (Tysmenytsia), knitting (Ivano-Frankivske), weaving and brush production (Kolomyia), and artisanal industries such as woodcarving, incrustation, carpet weaving, and embroidery (Ivano-Frankivske, Kosiv, Kolomyia, Verkhovyna, Kutu). The machine-building and metalworking industry, centered mainly in the city of Ivano-Frankivske, specializes in the manufacture of control and regulatory apparatuses, agricultural machinery, mechanical presses, and electrotechnical and oil-industry machinery, and in the fitting and maintenance of locomotives. The chemical and petrochemical industries (in Ivano-Frankivske, Nadvirna, Kalush, and Vyhoda) produce potassium derivatives, vinyl chlorides, aerosols, butane, propane, edible paraffin, carbamic and polychlorovinyl tars, and synthetic oils. Sugar refining is the most important branch of the food industry (in Horodenka and Bovshiv). It is followed by the dairy, meat, baking and distilling, brewing, tobacco-curing, canning, and confectionary industries (in Ivano-Frankivske, Kolomyia, Kalush, and Sniatyn). The forestry industry is centered in Nadvirna, Bolekhiv, Verkhovyna, Broshniv-Osada, and Vyhoda; furniture manufacturing is based in Ivano-Frankivske, Sniatyn, and Bolekhiv; and the paper industry is concentrated mainly in Kolomyia. Oil and gas are extracted in Dolyna, Nadvirna, Bytkiv, and Bohorodchany. In 1968 the oblast accounted for 19 percent of all the gas extracted in the Ukrainian SSR.

Agriculture. Both crop cultivation and animal husbandry are practiced in Ivano-Frankivske. In 1983 there were 168 collective farms (252 in 1971) and 30 state farms (20 in 1971). The total arable land in the oblast is 609,000 ha (1983); of this 68.9 percent is cultivated, 16.4 percent is pastureland, 12.3 percent is hayfields, and 2.4 percent is used for other purposes. The total seeded area is 428,000 ha; in 1978, of the total seeded area of 430,000 ha, 176,300 ha (41 percent) was devoted to grain crops, 149,600 ha (34.8 percent) to fodder, 57,200 ha (13.3 percent) to fruits and vegetables, and 46,900 ha (10.9 percent) to industrial crops. The principal grains are winter wheat (79,900 ha) and barley (50,000 ha). Sugar beets account for about one-half of the total area devoted to industrial crops; other industrial crops grown in the oblast include flax and tobacco. Orchards and berry patches covered 24,100 ha in 1978; the principal fruits harvested are apples, pears, plums, and cherries. Walnuts are also grown.

Animal husbandry is well developed in the oblast, particularly in the hilly and mountainous regions. It consists mainly of dairy- and beef-cattle farming. In 1972 there were some 533,400 head of cattle, including 229,200 milk cows. The main breeds of cattle are the Simmenthal, Spotted Black, and Carpathian Brown. There were also some 267,700 hogs in 1972 (the Large White, the Long-eared White, and the Myrhorod) and 116,300 sheep and goats. Fishing is also practiced.

Transport. The oblast has 479 km of railways. The main railway junctions are Ivano-Frankivske, Kolomyia, and Diliatyn. The main lines are those from Lviv to Ivano-Frankivske and from Ivano-Frankivske to Kolomyia, Kalush, and Diliatyn. There are some 5,800 km of motor roads, 4,400 km of which are hard surfaced. The more important trunk roads link Ivano-Frankivske with Lviv, Kolomyia–Chernivtsi, Diliatyn–Rakhiv, Stryi–Mukachiv–Uzhhorod, and Kolomyia–Kosiv–Verkhovyna. There is also an airport in Ivano-Frankivske. The Soiuz gas pipeline passes through the oblast and the Braterstvo pipeline originates there.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Pro sotsialistychni peretvorennia na Stanislavshchyni* (Stanyslaviv 1957)
Rozkvit ekonomiky zakhidnykh oblastei URSR (1939–1964 rr.) (Lviv 1964)
Istoria mist i sil Ukrain's'koï RSR: Ivano-Frankiv's'ka oblast' (Kiev 1971)
 Koval'chak, H. (ed). Industrial'nyi rozvytok zakhidnykh oblastei Ukraïny v period komunistychnoho budivnytstva (Kiev 1973)
Pryroda Ivano-Frankiv's'koï oblasti (Lviv 1973)
Sotsial'ni peretvorennia u radians'komu seli: Na prykladi sil zakhidnykh oblastei Ukrain's'koï RSR (Kiev 1976)

B. Balan, I. Myhul

Ivano-Frankivske Pedagogical Institute (Ivano-Frankivskyi derzhavnyi pedahohichnyi instytut im. V.S. Stefanyka). A higher teaching institute under the jurisdiction of the Ministry of Education of the Ukrainian SSR. Founded in 1940 as a teachers' college, it was transformed in 1950 into a pedagogical institute. In 1982 it had seven departments: philology (Ukrainian and Russian languages and literatures), foreign languages, physics and mathematics, elementary education, music education, history, and principals' upgrading. In 1979 its enrollment was 4,539. The regular program requires five years of study; only the music education program requires four.

Ivano-Frankivske Regional Museum (Ivano-Frankivskyi kraieznavchyi muzei). Museum founded in 1940 on the basis of several existing collections in Stanyslaviv (now Ivano-Frankivske), including the Zhabivsky 'Hutsulshchyna' Museum. Many of the museum's over 84,000 exponents (as of 1979) relate to the uprising led by Hetman B. Khmelnytsky, the popular rebellion led by O. Dovbush, the activities of the Communist Party of Western Ukraine, and the Second World War. The museum has several branches: the Krylos Regional Museum, the I. Franko Literary-Memorial Museum in Kryvorivnia, the Museum of Partisan Glory in Yaremcha, the L. Martovych Literary-Memorial Museum in Torhovytsia, and the Ivano-Frankivske Museum of the History of Religion and Atheism.

Ivano-Frankivske Ukrainian Music and Drama Theater (Ivano-Frankivskyi ukrainskyi muzychno-dramatychnyi teatr im I. Franka). The theater was organized in Stanyslaviv (now Ivano-Frankivske) in 1939 out of several Galician troupes (I. Kohutiak's, Y. Stadnyk's) employing actors from central and eastern Ukraine. During the German occupation (1941–4) it functioned under the Ukrainian Central Committee. It resumed activities in 1945 after the Second World War. In the first period its repertoire included Soviet plays such as O. Korniiuchuk's Platon Krechet and K. Trenev's Liubov Iarova. During the German occupation Yu. Kosach's Obloha (The Siege) and Marsh chernihiv's'koho polku (March of the Chernihiv Regiment), as well as the operatic version of I. Kotliarevsky's Natalka Poltavka (Natalka from Poltava), were staged. Since 1945 its better productions have included adaptations of I. Franko's Dlia domashn'oho vohnyshcha (For the Home Hearth) and N. Gogol's Strashnaïa mest' (The Terrible Revenge), as well as A. Khyzhniak's Danylo Halyts'kyi (Danylo of Halych) and D. Pavlychko's Zolotorohyi olen' (The Deer with Golden Horns). O. Yakovliv, M. Ravytsky, and V. Smoliak have served as directors of the theater, and D. Narbut as set designer.

Ivano-Frankivske Ukrainian Music and Drama Theater

Ivanopil [Ivanopil']. iv-9. Town smt (1978 pop 5,800) in Chudniv raion, Zhytomyr oblast. Founded in the 17th century, until 1946 it was called Yanushpil (Januszpol). It has a sugar refinery.

Ivanov, Andrei, b 28 October 1888 in Kukshevo, Kostroma gubernia, Russia, d 10 June 1927 in Moscow. Russian communist activist in Ukraine. In 1916 he headed the Bolshevik group in the arsenal factory in Kiev. He was head of the revolutionary council and one of the leaders of the January 1918 revolt against the Ukrainian Central Rada in Kiev. In 1918 he was a member of the Presidium of the Central Executive Committee of Soviets in Ukraine and People's Commissar of Internal Affairs in the Ukrainian Soviet government. From 1919 to 1925 he headed the Kiev, Kharkiv, and Odessa provincial executive committees and from 1923 was a member of the Politburo of the CP(B)U.

Ivano-Frankivske Regional Museum

Ivanov, Andrii, b 30 December 1900 in Zamość, Poland, d 1 October 1970 in Moscow. Baritone singer. A graduate of N. Lund's Singing Studio in Kiev (1924), he sang in the Azerbaijan (1926–8), Odessa (1928–31), and Sverdlovsk (1931–4) opera and ballet theaters. In 1934 he became a soloist at the Kiev Theater of Opera and Ballet, and in 1950 he moved to Moscow to sing at the Bolshoi Theater. His main roles were Igor in A. Borodin's Prince Igor, Rigoletto in G. Verdi's Rigoletto, the Sultan in S. Hulak-Artemovsky's Zaporozhian Cossack beyond the Danube, Onegin in P. Tchaikovsky's Eugene Onegin, and Shchors in B. Liatoshynsky's Shchors. He also gave concerts in Hungary, Austria, England, Germany, and Czechoslovakia.

Ivanov, Ihor, b 26 July 1928 in Kiev, d 8 August 1980 in Kiev. Architect. A graduate of the Kiev Civil-Engineering Institute (1955), he designed such major buildings as the Kiev Hotel (1973) in Kiev, the Black Sea Hotel (1973) in Odessa, the Medical Institute (1976) in Kishinev, and the Intourist Hotel (1978) in Kharkiv. He also oversaw the reconstruction of the October Revolution Square (1977) and Obolon residential development (1977) in Kiev.

Ivanov, Ivan, b 21 November 1918 in Ramene, East Prussia. Specialist in mechanics; since 1978 corresponding member of the AN URSR. Since 1966 he has worked at the Dnipropetrovske Branch of the academy's Institute of Mechanics. He has done important research in gas dynamics, heat exchange, strength of materials, and reliability of mechanical structures.

Ivanov, Leonid, b 16 April 1913 in Katerynoslav, d 29 November 1972 in Kharkiv. Literary scholar. He taught at the universities of Dnipropetrovske (from 1940) and Kharkiv (from 1968). His publications dealing with the relations between Ukrainian and foreign literatures include Mikhail Kotsiubinskii (1956), Zarubizhna literatura 1871–1917 rr. (Foreign Literature, 1871–1917, 1959), a book on R. Rolland (1960), and numerous articles about M. Kotsiubynsky.

Ivanov, Mikhail, b 2 October 1871 in Yalta, Tavriia gubernia, d 29 October 1935 in Moscow. Animal breeder; in 1935 elected full member of the All-Union Academy of Agricultural Sciences. After graduating from the Kharkiv Veterinary Institute (1897) and studying breeding techniques abroad, he joined the institute's faculty in 1900. In 1914 he was appointed professor at the Moscow Agricultural Institute, where he taught to the end of his life. He organized and directed (1925–35) the zootechnical experimental breeding station at the Askaniia-Nova

Mikhail Ivanov

Nature Reserve. There he conducted experiments in animal acclimatization and hybridization, introducing his own methods of producing new breeds and improving existing breeds. The Askaniia sheep and the Ukrainian Steppe White hog were bred by Ivanov. In 1956 the breeding station was named in his honor.

Ivanov, Mykola (Ivanoff, Nicolai), b 22 October 1810 in Voronizh, Sumy county, Kharkiv gubernia, d 19 July 1880 in Bologna, Italy. Operatic tenor, one of the best representatives of the Halican School of bel canto. From 1820 he sang in the Imperial Court Kapelle under the tutelage of M. Glinka, who in 1830 took him to Italy to study singing. In 1832 Ivanov made his debut in Naples as Percy in G. Donizetti's Anna Bolena, and then sang in Paris, London, and Milan. In 1842 he appeared in the world premiere of G. Rossini's arrangement of the poem Stabat Mater Dolorosa, conducted by G. Donizetti. His better-known operatic roles included Edgardo in G. Donizetti's Lucia di Lammermoor and Rodrigo in G. Rossini's Othello. His performance of Ukrainian folk songs, which he enjoyed singing, made a great impression on H. Berlioz. He retired in 1852 and lived in Bologna.

Ivanov, Oleksander, b 1836 in Tavriia gubernia, d 26 September 1880 in Kiev. Ophthalmologist. A graduate of the medical faculty of Moscow University (1859), from 1867 he worked at the Kiev Military Hospital. In 1869 he was appointed professor of the new department of eye diseases at Kiev University. His publications deal with eye anatomy, the dislocation of the lens, and inflammation and swelling of the retina and optic nerve.

Ivanov, Petro, b 1837 in Chuhuiv, Zmiiv county, Kharkiv gubernia, d 1926. Ethnographer. Ivanov was a teacher and principal of the county school in Kupianka, and then an inspector of public schools (1877–84). He collected ethnographic materials and some biological data on the Kupianka and Starobilske regions. His articles on the fauna of the Kupianka region appeared in Trudy of the Kharkiv Society of Naturalists. Several of his longer articles were published also as separate works; for instance, Zhizn' i pover'ia krest'ian Kupianskogo uiezda, Khar'kovskoi gubernii (The Life and Beliefs of the Peasants of Kupianka County, Kharkiv Gubernia, 1907), Igry krest'ianskikh detei v Kupianskom uезде (The Games of Peasant Children in Kupianka County, 1889), and Iz oblasti malorusskikh narodnykh legend (From the Realm of Little Russian Folk Legends, 1894).

Ivanov, Vadym, b 30 April 1892 in Mariupil, Katerynoslav gubernia, d 15 January 1962 in Kiev. Physician; from 1957 full member of AN URSR and from 1953 full member of the USSR Academy of Medical Sciences. After graduating from Kiev University (1916), he worked in its clinics under F. Yanovsky. He was appointed professor and department chairman at the Second Kiev Medical Institute in 1933 and at the Kiev Medical Institute in 1944. From 1953 he chaired the Department of Clinical Physiology at the AN URSR Institute of Physiology. Ivanov was a leading gastrointestinal and pulmonary specialist, and author of over 80 publications.

Ivanov, Viktor, b 31 January 1909 in Koziatyn, Berdychiv county, Kiev gubernia, d 18 June 1981 in Kiev. Screen director, actor, and writer. After graduating from the All-Union Institute of Cinematography in 1936, he worked at the Kiev Artistic Film Studio. In the 1950s he also worked at film studios in Sverdlovsk, Vilnius, and Kaunas. His directing credits, combined in many cases with acting credits, include Pryhoda z pidzhakom Tarapun'ky (The Adventure with Tarapunka's Jacket, 1955), Shel'menko-denshchuk (Shelmenko the Orderly, 1957), Oleksa Dovbush (1961), Za dvoma zaitsiamy (After Two Hares, 1962), Kliuchi vid neba (Keys to Heaven, 1965), and Snihove vesillia (Snow Wedding, 1980).

Ivanov, Yevhen, b 24 February 1873 in Monashka, eastern Siberia, d 27 October 1929. Archivist. A student of D. Bahalii at Kharkiv University, in 1897 he was appointed archivist of the Kharkiv Historical Archive. From 1909 to 1918 he was the secretary of the Kharkiv Historical Philological Society. From 1920 he worked at the Central Historical Archive in Kharkiv. An expert on 17th- and 18th-century manuscripts, he is the author of articles on archival science and the history of Left-Bank Ukraine. He coedited the journal Arkhivna sprava.

Ivanychi [Ivanyči]. III-5. Town smt (1978 pop 6,400) and raion center in Volhynia oblast, situated where Volhynia, Galicia, and the Kholm region meet. First mentioned in 1545, it was under Polish (1569–1795, 1920–39) and Russian (1795–1917) rule. Its main industry is food processing.

Ivanychuk, Roman [Ivanyčuk], b 27 May 1929 in Trach, Kolomyia county, Galicia. Popular Soviet Ukrainian writer. His works include the prose collections Prut nese kryhu

Roman Ivanychuk

Vasyl Ivanys

(The Prut Carries Blocks of Ice, 1958), Ne rubaite iaseniv! (Don't Fell Ash Trees! 1961), Pid sklepinniam khramu (Beneath the Vault of the Temple, 1961), Topolyna zametil' (The Poplar Blizzard, 1965), Dim na hori (The House on the Hill, 1969), and Na perevali (At the Mountain Pass, 1981); the novels Zharin' (The Heat Wave, 1964), Spraha (Thirst, 1967), Misto (The City, 1977), and S'ome nebo (Seventh Heaven, 1985); and the historical novels Mal'vy (Hollyhocks, 1969), Cherlene vyno (Burgundy Wine, 1977), Manuskrypt z vulytsi Rus'koi (Manuscript from Ruska Street, 1979), Voda z kameniu (Water from Stone, 1981), and Chevertvyi vymir (The Fourth Dimension, 1984). Ivanychuk has been criticized for idealizing Ukraine's historical past in his works, and his Mal'vy was later banned.

Ivanys, Vasyl, b 3 April 1888 in Stanytsia Nastasivka, Temriutsk district, in the Kuban, d 28 November 1974 in Toronto. Economist and civic leader. He studied economics at the Moscow Commercial Institute and engineering at the Novochoerkassk Polytechnical Institute (1911–15). After the February Revolution Ivanys supported the *Kuban faction that demanded independence for the region and had close ties with the Central Rada in Kiev. He was a member of the Kuban Rada from 1918, minister of trade and industry in 1919, and prime minister of the Kuban government and acting otaman of the Kuban army in 1920. As an émigré in Czechoslovakia Ivanys was one of the founders and later a professor (1927–) of the Ukrainian Husbandry Academy in Poděbrady, then at the Ukrainian Technical and Husbandry Institute (УТНІ) (1932–). He published extensively on the natural and industrial resources of Ukraine and North Caucasia, including the monographs Promyslovist' Ukraïny i Pivnichnogo Kavkazu (The Industry of Ukraine and North Caucasia, 1937) and Energetychnе hospodarstvo Ukraïny ta Pivnichnogo Kavkazu (The Energy Industry of Ukraine and North Caucasia, 1934), and several works on the Kuban, including Borot'ba Kubani za nezalezhnist' (Kuban's Struggle for Independence, 1968). In 1945–8 Ivanys headed the УТНІ in Regensburg. In Canada from 1948, he played an active role in the Shevchenko Scientific Society and in the Brotherhood of St Volodymyr in Toronto. His memoirs, in five volumes, were published as Stezhkamy zhyttia (The Paths of Life, 1958–62).

Y. Boshyk

Ivanyshev, Mykola [Ivanyšev], b 17 November 1811 in Kiev, d 26 October 1874 in Kiev. Historian and jurist. After completing his theological studies in Kiev and law studies in Berlin, Prague, and Kiev, in 1840 he was appointed professor of Kiev University. He served as dean of its law faculty (1848–62) and from 1862 to 1865 as rector of the university. He was one of the founders and chairmen of the Kiev Archeographic Commission and of the Kiev Central Archive of Old Documents, and the editor of many of their publications. In 1845 Ivanyshev excavated Perepiatykha kurhan in the Kiev region (with T. Shevchenko as draftsman on the project). He wrote a number of works in the history of Ukrainian law, including Soderzhanie postanovlenii dvorianskikh provintsi-al'nykh seimov v Iugo-Zapadnoi Rossii (Contents of Resolutions of Provincial Gentry Assemblies in Southwestern Russia, 1861) and O drevnikh sel'skikh obshchinakh v Iugo-Zapadnoi Rossii (On Old Peasant Communes in Southwestern Russia, 1863). He also wrote studies of the church union based on documents in the Kiev archive and studies of Bohemian state law. In his law studies he was an adherent of the historical school. Ivanyshch is the subject of a biography by A. Romanovich-Slavatynsky (1876), and a collection of his works, edited by Romanovich-Slavatynsky and K. Tsarevsky, was published in 1876.

Ivanytsia, Hryhorii [Ivanycja, Hryhorij], 1892–193? Pedagogue. In the 1920s Ivanytsia was a professor at the Kiev Institute of People's Education, the secretary of the VUAN Pedagogical Commission, and coeditor of the journal Radians'ka osvita. He is the author of articles on the methodology of teaching Ukrainian language and literature, readers, and textbooks, including one on Ukrainian for Russian speakers (1925, 2nd edn 1927). A defendant in the Stalinist show trial of 'members' of the *Union for the Liberation of Ukraine in 1930, he died in a Soviet labor camp.

Borys Ivanytsky

Ivan Ivasiuk

Ivanytsky, Borys [Ivanyč'kyj], b 21 March 1878 in Sumy, Kharkiv gubernia, d 4 April 1953 in Detroit. Civic leader and prominent dendrologist; the founder of Ukrainian forestry science and a full member of the Shevchenko Scientific Society and the Ukrainian Academy of Arts and Sciences. He graduated from the Imperial Forestry Institute in St Petersburg (1902) and then worked in state forests throughout Ukraine. In 1917 he was one of the organizers of the Forestry Department of the UNR Ministry of Agriculture and from the end of 1918 director of the department. In 1919–20, he was lecturer at the Kamianets-Podilskyi Ukrainian State University. In 1921 he immigrated to Czechoslovakia. There he was one of the organizers, a professor, and rector (1928–32) of the Ukrainian Husbandry Academy in Poděbrady and the first president of the Ukrainian Technical and Husbandry Institute (1932–6). In 1944 he moved to Regensburg, where he helped re-establish the Ukrainian Technical and Husbandry Institute in 1945, serving again as president (1947–52). In Germany he was also involved in Ukrainian civic life and was elected chairman of the presidium of the Ukrainian National Council. Most of Ivanytsky's publications are devoted to the environment, history, and economy of Ukrainian forests. They include Lisy i lisove gospodarstvo na Ukraïni (Forests and Forest Exploitation in Ukraine, 2 vols, 1936, 1939) and the textbooks Kurs lisivnytstva (A Course in Forestry, 1922), Dendrolohiia (Dendrology, 1924), and Die Entwaldung der Ukraine (1928).

A. Zhukovsky

Ivanytsky, Hryhorii [Ivanyč'kyj, Hryhorij], 1881–1918. A political and civic leader. He studied at the Poltava Theological Seminary, where he was a member of the student hromada. Later he joined the Revolutionary Ukrainian party and then the Ukrainian Social Democratic Workers' party in the Poltava region. In April 1917, during the Russian occupation of Western Ukraine, Ivanytsky was appointed commissar of Vyzhnytsia county in Bukovyna. He was assassinated by pro-Bolshevik sailors in Odessa in April 1918 while negotiating with non-Ukrainian democratic circles for the government of the UNR.

Ivanytsky, Teodor [Ivanyč'kyj], b 1860, d 7 July 1935 in Chernivtsi. Bukovynian teacher and civic figure. From 1911 to 1918 he was a representative from the National Democratic party to the Bukovynian provincial diet. From 1912 to 1920 he headed the Selianska Kasa savings association in Chernivtsi, and from 1927 he was a member of the executive of the *Ukrainian National party, the sole legal Ukrainian party in Bukovyna under Rumanian rule. In 1929 he founded and then directed the Chas publishing house, which issued the Chernivtsi daily *Chas.

Ivanytsky-Vasylenko, Serhii [Ivanyč'kyj-Vasylenko, Serhij], b 15 February 1883 in Zolotonosha, Poltava gubernia, d 1938? Historian of Ukrainian law, cofounder and secretary of the VUAN Commission for the Study of the History of Western Ruthenian and Ukrainian Law in Kiev during the 1920s. Areas of his research and study included the history of *Magdeburg law in Ukraine and the use of land by the aristocracy in the Hetman state. Together with L. *Okinshevych, he compiled a bibliography of Lithuanian-Ruthenian law and a guide to materials on the history of Ukraine in Polnoe sobranie zakonov Rossijskoi Imperii. He translated many works on Polish legal history.

Ivashutych, Oleksander [Ivašutyč], b 15 October 1900 in Kiev, d 18 January 1970 in Kharkiv. Stage actor and director. In 1919 he debuted at the Kiev Second Raion Ukrainian Drama Theater. He appeared in the productions of the Berezil theater (1922–6) in Kiev, the Odessa State Drama Theater (1927–9), and the Kharkiv Musical Comedy Theater (1929–41). From 1945 he worked in the Kharkiv Musical Comedy Theater as a director, and appeared in many operettas, including O. Riabov's Night in May, Wedding in Malynivka, and J. Strauss the Younger's Gypsy Baron, and staged O. Riabov's Sorochyntsi Fair, C. Lecocq's Giroflé-Girofla, and U. Gadzhibekov's Vendor of Hand-made Goods.

Ivasiuk, Ivan [Ivasjuk], b 1879 in Khotyn county, Bessarabia, d 31 October 1933 in Prague. Teacher, cooperative organizer, and civic and political figure in the Kuban. He was a teacher in the Katerynoslav region and the Kuban. For eight years before the 1917 Revolution he was the director of the Tsentrosoiuz co-operative bank in Katerynodar. In 1920 he became finance minister in V. Ivanyshch's Kuban regional government. He emigrated that year to Czechoslovakia, and from 1923 he lectured at the Ukrainian Husbandry Academy in Poděbrady. His published works include studies on banking and co-operatives, a textbook on co-operative accounting, the book Kredytova kooperatsiia na Ukraïni (Credit Co-operatives in Ukraine, 1933), and the economic survey Kuban' (1925).

Mykola Ivasiuk

Ivasiuk, Mykola [Ivasjuk], b 28 April 1865 in Zastavna, Bukovyna, d 1930? Realist painter. A student of the Vienna (1884–9) and Munich (1890–6) art academies, he organized the first Ukrainian art school in Chernivtsi (1899–1908), then worked in Lviv, Vienna, and Prague. In 1925 he accepted an invitation to teach at the Kiev State Art Institute. His most important works deal with historical themes: Khmelnysky at Zboriv (1893), The Battle of Khotyn (1903), Khmelnysky's Entry into Kiev (1912), and Bohun at Berestechko (1919). He also painted a large number of genre scenes and portraits (of O. Kobylianska, Yu. Fedkovich, I. Franko, T. Shevchenko, O. Myshuha, and self-portraits). Ivasiuk is a representative of the academic style of the Vienna-Munich school at the end of the 19th century. The Ukrainian Cossack theme, which is prominent in Ivasiuk's work, was popular at the time in Polish and Russian painting. After working for a few years in Kiev, he was arrested by the secret police and disappeared.

Volodymyr Ivasiuk

Mykhailo Ivchenko

Ivasiuk, Volodymyr [Ivasjuk], b 4 April 1949 in Kitsman, Chernivtsi oblast, d ca 1 May 1979 near Lviv. Composer. From 1972 he studied music under A. Kos-Anatolsky at the Lviv Conservatory. Although he composed piano and cello pieces, Ivasiuk is best known for his songs, which number about 50. His first song, 'Vidlitaly zhuravli' (The Cranes Were Leaving), was released in 1965. In some cases – eg, in 'Lysh raz tsvite liubov' (Love Blooms but Once), 'Balada pro mal'vy' (Ballad about Hollyhocks), and 'Ia – tvoie krylo' (I am Your Wing) – he composed the melody only; in others – eg, in 'Dva persteni' (Two Rings), 'Vodohrai' (Water Fountain), 'Pisnia bude pomizh nas' (A Song Will Be among Us), and 'Chervona ruta' (Red Rue) – both the melody and lyrics. Ivasiuk's tunes are a blend of Ukrainian folk and contemporary popular music. He was one of the most popular songwriters in Ukraine. His mutilated body was discovered in a woods outside Lviv about three weeks after he had been murdered. The circumstantial evidence points to the KGB as the perpetrator of the slaying. Ivasiuk's funeral was attended by over 10,000 people.

Ivchenko, Liudmyla. See Kovalenko, Liudmyla.

Ivchenko, Mykhailo [Ivchenko, Myxajlo], b 1890 in Pryluka county, Poltava gubernia, d 1939 in Ordzhonikidze, RSFSR. Writer. Before the 1917 Revolution he worked as a statistician in the Poltava region and wrote articles on economics, natural science, and the national question for periodicals such as Rada and Khutorianyn. A Soviet 'fellow traveler' in the 1920s he was the author of the impressionistic prose collections Shumy vesniani (The Murmurs of Spring, 1919), Imlystoiu rikoiu (Along the Misty River, 1926), Porvanoiu dorohoiu (Along the Broken Road, 1927), and Zemli dzvoniat' (The Lands Peal, 1928). His most significant work, the novel Robitni syly (The Work Forces, 1929), portrays allegorically the fostering of national consciousness. A defendant at the show trial of the *Union for the Liberation of Ukraine in 1930, he received a conditional sentence and was exiled to Ossetia; the circumstances of his death are unknown.

Ivchenko, Oleksander [Ivchenko], b 23 November 1903 in Velykyi Tokmak, Tavriia gubernia, d 30 June 1968 in Zaporizhia. Aeronautical engineer specializing in engine design; full member of the AN URSR from 1964. After working in industry, he joined the staff of the Research and Design Bureau of the Kharkiv Aviation Institute in 1945. He designed a number of piston engines for agricultural and passenger planes, the first Soviet piston and gas turbine engines for helicopters, and some highly reliable turboprop engines for passenger and transport planes.

Ivchenko, Viktor [Ivchenko], b 2 November 1912 in Bohodukhiv, Kharkiv gubernia, d 6 September 1972 in Kiev. Film director. A graduate of the Kiev Institute of Theater Arts (1937), Ivchenko first worked as an actor and director in the Lviv Ukrainian Drama Theater. In 1953 he began to work as a film director at the Kiev Artistic Film Studio. There he produced such films as Dolia Maryny (Maryna's Fate, 1953, with I. Shmaruk), Shliakh do sertsia (The Way to the Heart, 1970), and Sofiia Hrushko (1971). Ivchenko's works are characterized by a theatrical style of filmmaking. He has also adapted such classics of Ukrainian literature as T. Shevchenko's Nazar Stodola (with H. Chukhrai, 1955) and Lesia Ukrainka's Lisova pisnia (The Forest Song, 1961).

Ivliiv, Trokhym, 1880–1938? Opera singer (bass) and stage actor. A member of D. Haidamaka's and M. Yarosenko's troupes, the Ukrainska Besida theater (1909–10), the Sadovsky Theater in Kiev (from 1910), the Vinnytsia Drama Theater (1920–3), and the Kharkiv Touring Opera Company (from 1928), he appeared in such operas as S. Moniuszko's Halka, M. Arkas's Kateryna, D. Sichynsky's Roksoliana, and M. Lysenko's Eneida (Aeneid), and in such plays as M. Kropyvnytsky's Vii and J. Slowacki's Mazepa.

Izarsky, Oleksa [Izars'kyj], b 30 August 1919 in Poltava. Writer. A graduate of Kiev University, he emigrated to the United States after the Second World War. He has contributed prose to various émigré journals and is the author of several novels – Ranok (Morning, 1963), Viktor i Lialia (Victor and Lialia, 1965), Chudo v Myslovytsiakh (Miracle in Myslovytsi, 1967), Kyiv (Kiev, 1971), Saksons'ka zyma (A Saxon Winter, 1972), Poltava (1977), Lito nad ozerom (Summer on the Lake, 1981) – and the study Ril'ke na Ukraïni (Rilke in Ukraine, 1952).

Izbekov, Volodymyr, b 20 July 1881 in Pogromnoe, Saratov gubernia, d 20 March 1963. Inorganic chemist; from 1939 corresponding member of the AN URSR. Upon graduating from Yurev University, he joined the faculty of the Kiev Polytechnical Institute (1909–62). He chaired the departments of inorganic chemistry of the Institute of Chemistry of the Academy of Sciences of the Ukrainian SSR (1933–41) and of Kiev University (1933–41, 1944–50). His publications deal with the electrochemistry of molten salts, the industrial conversion of raw minerals, and the recovery of rare metals from industrial wastes.

Izbornik (s'bornik, sbornik, sobornik"). A Church Slavonic liturgical book with dates of the various religious services throughout the year, sometimes with the liturgical texts included; or a collection of texts from various sources. Many of the collections were translated from Byzantine variants. The Izbornik of Sviatoslav (1073) and the collection of homilies Zlatostrui, for example, were translations. Other collections, such as the Izbornik of Sviatoslav (1076) and the book of homilies Izmarahd, probably originated in Ukraine. Some collections were only supplemented with materials of Ukrainian origin: for example, Torzhestvennik, a book of homilies for feast days, was supplemented by the sermons of *Cyril of Turiv. From the 16th to 18th centuries numerous private compilations of various texts appeared, particularly collections of verses and stories. In modern times the term izbornik is no longer used.

Izbornik of Sviatoslav (1073). Manuscript written in the ustav script consisting of 266 two-column, illustrated parchment folios. It was discovered in 1887 by K. Kalaidovich in the Resurrection Monastery of the New Jerusalem near Moscow and is preserved at the Moscow Historical Museum. A unique theological compendium, it contains excerpts from the works of the Fathers of the Church, a chronology, a survey of poetic figures and tropes, articles on grammar, logic, and philosophy, parables, riddles, and the first list of books forbidden in Ukraine. An interesting illumination of the family of Prince Sviatoslav Yaroslavych, for whom the work was prepared, was inserted. A translation of the original Greek collection was done in Church Slavonic in eastern Bulgaria for King Simeon (893–927), to whom there is a dedication in the preface. This text was merely copied in Kiev, and Sviatoslav's name was substituted for Simeon's. The copyists – two monks, one of whom was called 'Ioan the Precentor' – introduced certain phonetic Ukrainianisms. A facsimile edition of the manuscript was published using phototype in 1880 with an introduction by G. Karpov. One-third of the manuscript was prepared for printing with Greek and Latin texts by O. Bodiansky and published in 1856–66 and republished in Chtennia v Imperatorskom obshchestve istorii i drevnostei rossiiskikh in 1882. A new edition of the collection was published in Moscow in 1977. A. Rozenfeld's study of its language appeared in Russkii filologicheskii vestnik, vol 41 (1899).

O. Horbach

Izbornik of Sviatoslav (1076)

Izbornik of Sviatoslav (1076). A manuscript of 176 two-column quarto sheets compiled by an unknown monk named Ioan of Kiev from 'many princely books' during the reign of Prince Sviatoslav Yaroslavych. It contains general moral instructions, aphorisms, and interpretations of the Holy Scripture. Some scholars (A. Popov, I. Budovnits) assert that some of the material was compiled in Kiev. The language of the collection contains phonetic, morphological, and lexical Ukrainianisms. V. Shimanovsky published the manuscript in K istorii drevnerusskikh govorov (On the History of Ancient Rus' Dialects, 1887) and separately in 1894. Corrections to the text were pointed out by S. Kulbakin in Zhurnal Ministerstva narodnogo prosveshcheniia, 1898, no. 2, and by V. Bobrov in Russkii filologicheskii vestnik, vols 47–8 (1902). A new edition of the collection came out in 1965. The work is also called the Shcherbatov Izbornik after the Russian historian A. Shcherbatov, who in the 18th century owned the manuscript, and the Hermitage Izbornik after the imperial public library (now the Leningrad Public Library) where it was deposited after Shcherbatov's death.

Izhakevych, Halyna [Jižakevyč], b 23 April 1919 in Kiev. Linguist. A graduate of Kiev University (1944), she has worked as a research associate of the AN URSR Institute of Linguistics, becoming the first head of the institute's Russian department in 1971. She specializes in Ukrainian-Russian linguistic relations, particularly in the comparison of the structure of the two languages, constantly emphasizing the allegedly beneficial influence of Russian on Ukrainian. She has published numerous articles and books, including Ukraïns'ko-rosiïis'ki movni zo'iazky radians'koho chasu (Ukrainian-Russian Linguistic Contacts of the Soviet Period, 1969), and has edited collective symposia such as Funktsionirovanie russkogo iazyka v blizkorodstvennom iazykovom okruženii (The Functioning of the Russian Language in a Close Linguistic Family Environment, 1981).

Ivan Izhakevych

Izhakevych, Ivan [Jižakevyč], b 18 January 1864 in Vyshnopol, Uman county, Kiev gubernia, d 19 January 1962 in Kiev. Realist painter and graphic artist, one of the most popular artists in Ukraine. He studied art at the Kievan Cave Monastery Icon Painting Studio (1876–82), the Kiev Drawing School (1882–4), and the St Petersburg Academy of Arts (1884–8). In 1883–4 he took part in the restoration of the 12th-century frescoes in St Cyril's Church in Kiev, and later (1904–8) painted the refectory and the All-Saints Church of the Kievan Cave Monastery. A prolific illustrator, he worked for Russian journals at the time when Ukrainian ones were forbidden, and often referred to Ukrainian themes. In the 1890s he illustrated some of T. Shevchenko's poetry, such as 'Prychynna' (The Blighted Girl), 'Haidamaky' (The Haidamakas), and 'Kateryna.' In the 1920s he did easel paintings on themes from T. Shevchenko's poetry, and at the end of the 1930s a series of illustrations and the cover for the jubilee edition of Kobzar (The Minstrel, 1940). Many of his illustrations of Shevchenko's works were printed separately as postcards. Izhakevych also illustrated the works of Lesia Ukrainka, N. Gogol, M. Kotsiubynsky, H. Kvitka-Osnovianenko, I. Franko, V. Stefanyk, and I. Kotliarevsky. By style he belongs to the Populist School of the second half of the 19th century.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Kovalevs'ka, M. I.S. Izhakevych (Kiev 1949)
Ivan Sydorovych Izhakevych. Al'bom (Kiev 1964)

S. Hordynsky

Izhevsky, Vasiliï [Iževskii, Vasilij], b 16 June 1863 in Riazan, d 23 October 1926 in Kiev. Metallurgist. From 1889 to 1926 he taught at the Kiev Polytechnical Institute. He worked on problems of smelting, metallography, electrometallurgy, and thermal processing, and developed several electric furnaces, a gas generator, and a number of metallurgical processes.

Izhoi (from the Old Ukrainian hoity, 'to comfort' or 'to live'). Category of déclassé people in Kievan Rus' who retained their free status. According to the church laws laid down by Prince Vsevolod Mstyslavych in the 12th century, the izhoi consisted of illiterate sons of priests, **kholopy* who had bought their freedom but had no means of subsistence, bankrupt merchants, and even princes who had lost their properties and inheritances. Many izhoi lived under the protection of the church, but most, especially the more numerous kholopy, settled on land that they did not own and became dependent on the landowner. Izhoi are mentioned in Ruskaia Pravda. By the 14th century izhoi had ceased to exist as a separate estate but the term was still used into the 15th century for the payment that kholopy made to purchase their release. In the Lithuanian-Ruthenian state the lezni liudy corresponded to the izhoi.

Iziaslav or Zaslav [Iz'jaslav]. III-7. Town (1981 pop 14,300) and raion center in Khmelnytskyi oblast, situated in southeastern Volhynia. Founded in 987, from the 14th century it belonged to the Ostrozky princes, from the 16th century to the Zaslavsky princes, and from 1673 to the Sangushko princes. In 1754 it was granted the rights of Magdeburg law. Under Russian rule it was a vicegerency capital (1793–5) and a county town in Volhynia gubernia (1796–1917). Among its architectural monuments are a castle and a Roman Catholic cathedral from the 16th century; the city walls, with a gate and towers; and a palace from the 17th century.

Iziaslav Mstyslavych [Iz'jaslav Mstyslavych], b ca 1097, d 13 November 1154. Grand prince of Kiev; the son of Mstyslav Volodymyrovych of Novgorod and grandson of Volodymyr Monomakh. Having ruled for a time in Kursk, Polatsk, Pereiaslav, Turiv and Pynske, and Volodymyr-Volynskyi, he seized the throne of Kiev in 1146 from *Ihor Olhovych after the death of *Vsevolod Olhovych. His main opponent was his uncle, Prince *Yurii Dolgorukii of Suzdal, who defeated him in battle at Pereiaslav and forced him out of Kiev in 1149. Iziaslav fled to Volhynia, but managed to recapture Kiev after defeating Yurii in battle in 1150 and 1151; he ruled it thereafter with his uncle *Viacheslav Volodymyrovych. Iziaslav was an energetic and popular ruler who wanted to put an end to the subordination of the Rus' church to the patriarch in Constantinople. Under his protection and without the patriarch's approval, the bishops of Rus'-Ukraine elected a Ukrainian, Klym *Smoliatych, as Kiev metropolitan in 1147. After his death the dynastic struggle for the Kievan throne continued.

Iziaslav Volodymyrovych [Iz'jaslav Volodymyrovych], b and d ? A prince of the Olhovych dynasty of Chernihiv, son of Volodymyr Ihorevych of Putyvl and grandson of Ihor Sviatoslavych of Chernihiv. In 1211 he was prince of Terebovlia. During the struggle among the princes of southern Rus' for the thrones of Kiev and Halych, Iziaslav was a close ally of *Mykhailo Vsevolodovych of Chernihiv. He pillaged Halych principality in 1233, and in 1235 he helped Mykhailo to defeat *Volodymyr Riurykovich of Kiev and *Danylo Romanovych of Halych near Torcheske, to take Kiev, and to drive Danylo from Halych. Iziaslav became the prince of Kamianets in Volhynia. A Mongol vassal from 1240, his fate after he was captured by Danylo in 1255 is unknown.

Iziaslav Yaroslavych [Iz'jaslav Jaroslavyč], b 1024, d 3 October 1078. Grand prince of Kiev intermittently from 1054 to 1078; the eldest son of *Yaroslav the Wise. Before inheriting the throne of Kiev from his father, Iziaslav ruled Turiv. In the 1060s he brought most of the Rus' territories west of the Dnieper River under his control. For refusing them arms to fight invading Cumans, the inhabitants of Kiev revolted in 1068. He fled to Poland and with the aid of his brother-in-law and cousin, *Bolesław II, took Kiev a year later from Vseslav Briachyslavych of Polatsk. When his brothers *Sviatoslav II and *Vsevolod Yaroslavych of Chernihiv marched on Kiev in 1073, its inhabitants refused to support Iziaslav and he was forced to flee abroad. He sought help in 1075 from Emperor Henry IV of Germany and Pope Gregory VII, but his efforts were in vain. In 1077, after Sviatoslav, who ruled Kiev, died and was succeeded by Vsevolod, Iziaslav marched on Kiev with Polish troops. Vsevolod renounced his throne and retired to Chernihiv. Iziaslav died in battle helping Vsevolod recapture Chernihiv from Sviatoslav's son Oleh and his Cuman allies.

Izium [Izjum]. IV-18, DB 1-2. City (1982 pop 61,000) under oblast jurisdiction and raion center in Kharkiv oblast, situated in a picturesque setting at the foot of Kremianets Mountain on the right bank of the Donets River. A settlement was established there in the second quarter of the 17th century; in 1681 it was fortified by Kharkiv regiment's Col H. Donets, and the fortress served as an important defense outpost against Tatar incursions. From 1685 to 1765 Izium was a regimental capital in Slobidska Ukraine. It was a county town in Kharkiv vicegerency (1780-6) and in Slobidska Ukraine (1796-1835) and Kharkiv (1835-1917) gubernias. Because of its importance as an industrial and commercial center between Kharkiv and the Donets Basin, it has expanded rapidly (1926 pop 12,000; 1959 pop 38,000; 1970 pop 52,000). Its plants produce optical equipment, machine parts, reinforced-concrete structures, construction materials, and foodstuffs. Among its architectural monuments are the Transfiguration Cathedral (1684) and St Nicholas's Church (1809-23).

Izium Road (Iziunskyi shliakh). One of the branches of the *Murava Road, which in the 16th to 18th centuries linked Left-Bank Ukraine with Slobidska Ukraine and Muscovy. It was a major trade artery and one of the routes used by the Crimean and Nogay Tatars for their raids on central Ukraine. The Izium Road branched off from the Murava Road near the headwaters of the Orel River, crossed the Donets River near the town of Izium, and followed the right bank of the Oskil River north. It rejoined the Murava Road in the area between the Oskil, Psiol, Vorsklo, and Dinets rivers. The building of the Bilhorod Line of fortresses in the 1630s and the settlement of Slobidska Ukraine by the Cossaks ended the Tatar raids along the road.

Iziumov, Ovsii [Izjumov, Ovsij], b 1898, d ? in Kazakhstan. Linguist, lexicographer. He compiled three popular dictionaries: Slovnnyk rosiis'ko-ukraïns'kyi (A Russian-Ukrainian Dictionary, 3 edns, 1926, 1927), Ukraiïns'ko-rosiis'kyi slovnnyk (A Ukrainian-Russian Dictionary, 1930), and Pravopysnyi slovnnyk (An Orthographic Dictionary, 1931), which diverged in some respects from the standard established by the State Orthographic Commission of Kharkiv in 1929. He wrote works on Ukrainian word formation and courses in Ukrainian grammar. He was a coauthor of Slovnnyk chuzhomovnykh sliv (A Dictionary of Foreign Words, 1932). He was arrested during the Yezhov terror in 1937 and reportedly died in exile.

Izmail [Izmajil]. VIII-9. City (1984 pop 87,000) under oblast jurisdiction and raion center in Odessa oblast; an important commercial port on the left bank of the Kiliia Channel of the Danube Delta, situated about 80 km from the Black Sea. Originally called Smil, from 1484 to 1812 and from 1856 to 1877 it belonged to the Turks, who fortified the town and built a large citadel there. The Cossacks attacked it in 1603, 1609, 1610, and 1630, and pillaged it in 1632. In 1770, 1790, and 1809 it was captured by Russian armies. From 1812 to 1856 and from 1877 to 1917 Izmail belonged to Russia and was a country town in Bessarabia. From 1918 to 1940 and from 1941 to 1944 it belonged to Rumania. In 1940-1 and from 1944 to 1954 it was an oblast capital. Today the city's industries repair ships, process fish, and produce canned food and industrial equipment. Among its architectural monuments are a 16th-century mosque and three early 19th-century churches.

Izmailov, Mykola [Izmajlov], b 22 June 1907 in Sukhumi, Georgia, d 2 October 1961 in Kharkiv. Electrochemist, from 1957 corresponding member of the AN URSR. A graduate of the Kharkiv Tekhnikum of Economics and Finance (1926), he did most of his scientific work at Kharkiv University. At the same time (1929-61) he did research at the Kharkiv Chemical and Pharmaceutical Institute. His many publications deal mainly with the electrochemistry of solutions. He developed a quantitative theory of electrolyte dissociation in solution and of their adsorption from solution. He was the first to develop two-dimensional chromatography, and he demonstrated the effect of solvent on the relative strength of acids and bases.

Izmailovych, Dmytro [Izmajlovyč], b 1890 in Yuryntsi, Proskuriv county, Podilia gubernia, d October 1976 in Rio de Janeiro. Painter. In 1919 he immigrated to Turkey and in 1927 to Rio de Janeiro, where he devoted himself to painting. His works include madonnas in the Byzantine icon style, paintings of natives in northern Brazil, and portraits of famous Brazilian writers. He also painted churches. His style changed gradually from a realistic to an abstract one. Izmailovych exhibited his works in Athens, Paris, New York, Rio de Janeiro, São Paulo, and Curitiba.

Izmarahd (Emerald). An anthology of about 150 homilies compiled in the 14th century by authors such as ss

John Chrysostom, Basil the Great, Gregory I, Theodosius of the Caves, and Cyril of Turiv. Fragments of this anthology were published by V. Peretts (1929); the language was studied by Peretts and O. Trebin (1910).

Izmarahd. Publishing house and lending library in Lviv, owned by M. Matchak (1923–39). It published the complete collection of M. Cheremshyna's and V. Stefanyk's works, an artistic collection of bookplates, an anthology of contemporary Ukrainian poetry edited and prefaced by Ye. Pelensky, and the works of young writers as well as classics for schoolchildren.

---

J

---

Jabłonowski, Aleksander, b 19 April 1829 in Gozlin, near Warsaw, d 22 August 1913 in Odessa. Polish historian and ethnographer. He studied at the universities of Kiev (1847–9) and Dorpat (Tartu, 1849–52). Together with A. Pawiński, he published Źródła Dziejowe (Historical Sources), an important series of documents relating to the history of the Polish Commonwealth. Several volumes were devoted to Right-Bank Ukraine and included his introductory articles. He also wrote a number of articles on Ukrainian history for such Polish scholarly journals as Ateneum and Kwartalnik Historyczny, and two monographs: Akademia Kijowsko-mohylańska: Zarys historyczny na tle rozwoju ogólnego cywilizacji zachodniej na Rusi (The Kievan Mohyla Academy: A Historical Essay on the Development of Western Civilization in Ruthenia, 1900) and Historia Rusi południowej do upadku Rzeczypospolitej polskiej (The History of Southern Ruthenia to the Fall of the Polish Commonwealth, 1912). In these works he exaggerated the influence of Polish culture on Ukrainian. He also argued that a Ukrainian state never existed and strongly criticized the role of the Cossacks. His collected works, Pisma Aleksandra Jabłonowskiego (The Writings of Aleksander Jabłonowski), were published in Warsaw in seven volumes (1910–13); the first four volumes are devoted to Ukrainian history.

Jackiw, Roman [Jac'kiv], b 8 November 1939 in Lubliniec, Katowice voivodship, Poland. American physicist of Ukrainian descent. After teaching for three years at Harvard University, in 1969 he joined the faculty of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. He has made substantial contributions to field theory and has co-authored several advanced textbooks in physics: Intermediate Quantum Mechanics (1968), Lectures on Current Algebra and Its Applications (1972), and Dynamical Gauge Symmetry Breaking (1982).

Jacyk, Peter. See Yatsyk, Petro.

Jadwiga (Hedwig), b ca 1374, d 17 July 1399 in Cracow. The queen of Poland from 1384. With the support of the anti-Hungarian Polish nobility, she succeeded her father, King Louis I, in Poland, while her sister Maria became the queen of Hungary. The Polish nobles rejected the personal union of Poland and Hungary and brought about the annulment of Jadwiga's betrothal to Duke William of Habsburg in 1385, and in 1386 she married Grand Duke Jogaila (*Jagiello) of Lithuania, with whom the nobles had negotiated the politically advantageous Union of *Krevo in 1385. In 1387, Jadwiga and the Poles embarked on a campaign to regain Galicia, which Hungary had ruled since 1378. By promising privileges to the nobility, burghers, and clergy, they took Peremyshl and Lviv without a conflict, and met with only sporadic opposition from the Hungarian palatine Benedict elsewhere. Thenceforth, until the partition of Poland in 1772, Galicia remained under Polish rule.

Jagić, Vatroslav, b 6 July 1838 in Varaždin, Croatia, d 5 August 1923 in Vienna. Noted philologist; founder of modern Slavistics. Croatian by descent, Jagić graduated from the University of Vienna in 1860, and after a stay in Zagreb became professor at the universities of Odessa (1871–4), Berlin (1874–80), St Petersburg (1880–6), and Vienna (1886–1908). He was a member of several academies – such as those of Zagreb (from 1866), St Petersburg (from 1880), and Vienna (from 1886) – and of the Shevchenko Scientific Society (from 1903). Jagić had a command of all the Slavic languages. The journal that he founded and edited, Archiv für slavische Philologie (1876–1920) – often referred to as Jagić's Archiv – became the most authoritative forum for Slavic studies in the world. His contributions to research on Old Church Slavonic (summarized in his Entstehungsgeschichte der kirchenslavischen Sprache, 1913), including his demonstration that Macedonian was the basis of this language and that its first alphabet was Glagolitic, are relevant also for the history of the eastern Slavic languages and literatures. In his Razsuzhdeniia iuzhnoslavianskoi i russkoi stariny o tserkovno-slavianskom iazyke (Deliberations of the South-Slavic and Russian Antiquity on the Church Slavonic Language, 1896) he published and commented on texts that determined early grammatical approaches to Slavic, while in Istoriia slavianskoi filologii (History of Slavic Philology, 1910) he presented a detailed synthetic survey of Slavic philology, including Ukrainian, through the 19th century. In his works on 'Old Russian' – 'Chetyre kritiko-paleograficheskiia stati' (Four Critico-Paleographic Articles, 1884), and particularly Kriticheskie zametki po istorii russkogo iazyka (Critical Comments on the History of the Russian Language, 1889), which resulted from his disagreement with O. Sobolevsky's views – he gave a broad and objective picture of Old Ukrainian phonology and morphology, even though he believed in the existence of a common Old Russian language. His extended reviews of P. Zhytetsky's Oчерк звуковой истории малорусского наречия (Outline of the Phonological History of the Little Russian Dialect, 1876) made a further contribution to the history of Ukrainian. His characterization of the Bačka and Banat dialects enriched Ukrainian dialectology.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Materialy dlia biograficheskogo slovaria deistivnel'nykh chlenov Imperatorskoi akademii nauk*, vol 2 (Petrograd 1917)
Demianchuk, V. Hnat (Vatroslav) Jagić, 1838–1923 (Kiev 1924)
Kombol, M. Vatroslav Jagić: Izbrani kraći spisi (Zagreb 1948)
G.Y. Shevelov

Jagiello (Lithuanian: Jogaila; Ukrainian: Yahailo), b ca 1351 in Vilnius, d 1 June 1434 in Horodok near Lviv. Grand duke of Lithuania (1377–81, 1382–92) and king of Poland (1386–1434), known as Władysław II. The son of *Algirdas, he was the founder of a dynasty that ruled Poland until 1572. He concluded the Union of *Krevo between the ruling houses of Poland and Lithuania in 1385 and, after marrying Queen *Jadwiga in 1386, he was crowned king. In 1387 he officially made Lithuania a Catholic country. In 1392 he relinquished Lithuania to his cousin *Vytautas, although he formally remained grand duke. At the Battle of Grunwald (Tannenberg) in 1410, Jagiello and Vytautas's Polish-Lithuanian-Ruthenian and other forces won a decisive victory over the Teutonic Knights. After Vytautas's death he fought his brother *Švitrigaila over Podilia (1430–2). Under Jagiello the annexation of Galicia by Poland was completed, the Polish gentry was granted greater property rights, and Lithuania and Ukraine were drawn into the Polish sphere of political and cultural influence. Viceroys replaced many hereditary princes as local rulers, and Catholic nobles had a privileged status.

Jagiellon dynasty. Dynasty of Polish and Lithuanian monarchs, who ruled much of east-central Europe in the 15th and 16th centuries. The dynasty originated with Grand Duke Jogaila (*Jagiello) of Lithuania, who became King Władysław II of Poland (1386–1434) by marrying Queen *Jadwiga. His successors were his sons *Władysław III Warneńczyk of Poland (1434–44) and Hungary (1440–4) and *Casimir IV Jagiellończyk of Lithuania (1440–92) and Poland (1447–92); Casimir's sons John Albert of Poland (1492–1501), Alexander I of Lithuania (1492–1506) and Poland (1501–6), and *Sigismund I of Poland and Lithuania (1506–48); and Sigismund's son *Sigismund II Augustus of Poland and Lithuania (1548–72), with whom the Polish-Lithuanian dynasty came to an end. Casimir's fourth son, Władysław, was the king of Bohemia (1471–1516) and Hungary (1516–26); he was succeeded by his son Louis II (1516–26).

In Ukraine, Jagiellon rule was marked by the liquidation of the last independent (appanage) Lithuanian-Ruthenian principalities, the consolidation of Polish rule in the western Ukrainian lands, intensive Polonization, the imposition of Roman Catholicism and *Germanic and *Magdeburg law, urban growth, significant economic development, and the enserfment of the peasantry.

Jakóbiec, Marian, b 8 September 1910 in Hynovychi, Berezhany county, Galicia. Polish Slavist and literary critic. Educated at Lviv, Prague, and Belgrade universities, in 1947 he was appointed professor at Wrocław University. He was the vice-president of the Polish-Soviet Institute, editor of the journal Slavia orientalis, and the vice-president of the Institute of Slavic Studies of the Polish Academy of Sciences. Jakóbiec wrote many studies on Slavic literatures and, particularly, on the relations between Ukrainian and Polish literature. His major works on Ukrainian literature are Iwan Franko (1958) and Literatura ukraińska: Wypisy (Ukrainian Literature: An Anthology, 1963; coauthored with T. Holyńska-Baranowa), and lengthy introductions to Polish translations of The Tale of Ihor's Campaign (1950) and the selected works of M. Kotsiubynsky (1954), I. Franko (1955), and T. Shevchenko (1955). He also wrote many articles on Ukrainian poets such as Shevchenko, Franko, M. Rylsky, and Lesia Ukrainka.

Jakobson, Roman, b 11 October 1896 in Moscow, d 18 July 1982 in Cambridge, Massachusetts. American linguist and philologist of Jewish-Russian descent. He studied at Moscow University, and received his doctorate from Prague University. He was a professor at several universities: Brno (1933–9), Columbia (1943–9), Harvard (from 1949), and the Massachusetts Institute of Technology (from 1957). Along with V. Mathesius and N. Trubetzkoy he founded the so-called Prague school of linguistics, which developed the phonemic principle in both synchronic and historical linguistics, and the concept of linguistic leagues, ie, similarities in the development of adjacent languages independently of their genetic interrelations. During his stay in the United States Jakobson revised the notion of phoneme, defining it as a bundle of distinctive features, 12 in number, that are common to all languages of the world. The search for universals, often at the cost of ignoring the peculiarities of individual languages, is typical of his conceptual approach. In this spirit he also attempted to build a theory of a Slavic conjugation based on a single stem, to develop a general case theory, and to derive Slavic versification systems from a common source. In this approach factual evidence was often sacrificed to theoretic consistency. Accordingly, in his Remarques sur l'évolution phonologique du russe comparée à celle des autres langues slaves (1929) only the phonological development of Russian and Serbo-Croatian is held to be motivated, while the rest of the Slavic languages, including Ukrainian, appear to be devoid of independent development, but determined by either Russian or Serbo-Croatian tendencies. Transferred to the political sphere, this attitude resulted in an attack on the policy of *Ukrainization and on its promoters (1934). Similarly, Jakobson's article on the imperative in Ukrainian (1965) is an attempt to play down the peculiarities of this form. In 1952–4 Jakobson argued against A. Mazon for the authenticity of **Slovo o polku Ihorevi*.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Roman Jakobson: A Bibliography (The Hague 1971)

Holenstein, E. Roman Jakobson's Approach to Language: Phenomenological Structuralism (Bloomington, Ind 1976)

G.Y. Shevelov

Jan II Casimir Vasa, b 22 March 1609 in Cracow, d 16 December 1672 in Nevers, France. King of Poland and grand duke of Lithuania in 1648–68; the son of Sigismund III Vasa. The last ruler of the Vasa dynasty to occupy the Polish and Lithuanian thrones, Jan was elected king after the death of his brother Władysław IV. During his reign the Polish magnates pressed him to expend Poland's resources on winning the *Cossack-Polish War of 1648–57. In 1649 and 1651, he personally directed military campaigns against Hetman B. Khmelnytsky and the Cossacks in Ukraine. After the Treaty of *Pereiaslav of 1654 placed Ukraine under Muscovite protection, he was forced into a long war with Muscovy (1654–67). This further exhausted Poland, as did internal discord and the war with Sweden and its allies (1655–60). Jan concluded the Treaty of *Hadiache with Hetman I. Vyhovsky in 1658 and the Treaty of *Andrusovo with Muscovy in 1667. His attempts at strengthening royal absolutism caused a mutiny among the gentry, who forced him to abdicate in 1668 and to go to France.

Jan III Sobieski, b 17 August 1629 in Olesko, Galicia, d 17 June 1696 in Wilanów, Poland. King of Poland and grand duke of Lithuania in 1674–96. The son of Jakub, the castellan of Cracow, he fought in the Cossack-Polish War, at the battles of Zboriv (1649) and Berestechko (1651), and was severely wounded. He participated in Poland's wars with the Cossacks, Tatars, Muscovy, Sweden, and Turkey, becoming the field hetman in 1666 and grand hetman in 1668. Opposed to the reign of Michael Wiśniowiecki, he was elected king upon the latter's death. During his reign he concentrated on waging war against Turkey, becoming famous for his defense of Lviv in 1675. By the Treaty of *Zhuravno (1676) he recovered large parts of Ukraine from Turkey, but without Podilia. He led the army of Poland, in which there were many Ukrainian Cossacks, that forced the Turks to lift the siege of Vienna in 1683. In 1684 he allowed the Cossacks to resettle the devastated lands in Right-Bank Ukraine. He continued his war with Turkey until 1691, attempting unsuccessfully to occupy Moldavia and Wallachia and thus to secure Poland's access to the Black Sea. In 1686 he concluded the *Eternal Peace with Muscovy. Jan tried to introduce a hereditary, absolute monarchy and other reforms but failed because of opposition from the senate, diet, and allies.

Janissaries (Turkish: yeniçeri; Ukrainian: yanychary). Members of an elite infantry corps in the Ottoman Empire, established by Sultan Murad I (1360–89). They were recruited from prisoners of war and later, using the devşirme system, from Christian youths (Serbs, Bulgarians, and others) in the empire who were converted to Islam. Raised in the spirit of religious fanaticism, celibacy, and blind obedience to the sultan, they constituted three highly disciplined divisions numbering up to 40,000 men under the command of an aga. The janissaries became a powerful military and political force and one of the pillars of the Turkish sultans' personal rule. In the late 17th century, the celibacy rule and other restrictions on them were relaxed. From the 16th century, they frequently interfered in state affairs and staged palace coups. The corps was abolished in 1826 after it mutinied, and was massacred by order of Sultan Mahmud II. In the Ukrainian vernacular, the term yanychar connotes a renegade who faithfully and ardently serves a foreign power.

Janiv, Wolodymyr. See Yaniv, Volodymyr.

Janów, Jan, b 22 November 1888 in Moshkivtsi, Kalush county, Galicia, d 17 December 1952 in Cracow. Polish philologist, dialectologist, educator; from 1946 full member of the Polish Academy of Sciences. A graduate of Lviv University (1913), he served as professor of Lviv (1927–45) and then of Cracow University (1945–52). Janów wrote a number of works on Polish and Ukrainian philology and dialectology including Gwara małoruska Moszkowiec i Siewki Nadniestrzańskiej ... (The Little-Ruthenian Dialect of Moshkivtsi and Sivka-on-Dniester ..., 1926), Z fonetyki gwar rusińskich (From the Phonetics of Ruthenian Dialects, 1928), and Legendarno-apokryficzne opowieści ruskie o męce Chrystusa z uwzględnieniem zabytków staropolskich (Ruthenian Legendary and Apocryphal Tales on Christ's Passion Taking into Account Old Polish Sources, 1931). He also wrote extensive introductions to S. Piskorski's Żywot Barlaama i Jozafata (The Life of Barlaam and Josphat, 1935) and J. Malecki-Sandecki's Ewangeliarz z początku XVI w ... (The Gospel from the Beginning of the 16th Century ..., 1947).

Japan (Nippon, Nihon). An Asian country (1985 pop 121,000,000) occupying an archipelago consisting of four main islands (Hokkaido, Honshu, Kyushu, and Shikoku), the Ryukus, and thousands of minor islands in the northwestern Pacific Ocean; it has an area of 377,801 sq km.

The Karmeliuk-Kamensky troupe in Japan, 1915

Ukrainian-Japanese relations are a 20th-century phenomenon. The first contacts occurred during the Russo-Japanese War of 1904–5, during which Sen J. Russell of Hawaii (M. Sudzylovsky), a former medical student at Kiev University, went to Japan and organized relief for captured tsarist troops (many of them Ukrainians) and published a periodical for them. The theatrical troupe of K. Karmeliuk-Kamensky, which often toured Ukrainian settlements in the Russian Far East and China, also performed in Tokyo, Kobe, Yokohama, and Kamakura in 1916. As a result of the efforts of the Russian consul in Japan, the Ukrainian Y. Hashkevych, an Oriental Institute was established in Vladivostok; Japanese was taught there. Ukrainian students at the institute later lived in Japan: B. Vobly was the UNR government's representative there. Neznaiko, a Ukrainian from the Far East, studied at the Orthodox seminary in Tokyo. An Orthodox mission existed at the Russian consulate in Hakodate and, from 1872, in Tokyo; one of its priests in Tokyo was the Ukrainian S. Hlibov. The kobzar and Esperantist V. Yeroshenko taught in Tokyo (1914–21) and wrote poetry, stories, fairy tales, and plays in Japanese.

In early July 1917 an attaché from the Japanese embassy in Petrograd visited the Ukrainian Central Rada in Kiev, and in November 1917 Japan opened a military mission there, headed by Gen Takayanachi. A Japanese consulate in Odessa oversaw shipping between Odessa and the Far East. Japan had a representative in the *Conference of Ambassadors that recognized Poland's rule of Galicia in 1923.

The Allied military intervention in the Russian *Far

East in 1918 involved over 120,000 Japanese troops, who occupied territories with large Ukrainian populations, including the cities of Vladivostok, Nikolsk (Ussuriisk), Khabarovsk, Blagoveshchensk, and Chita. From 1920 to November 1922 these territories constituted the *Far Eastern Republic, which was a Japanese protectorate. When the republic was occupied by Soviet forces, some 200 Ukrainian activists were arrested; 24, including P. Horovy, Yu. Hlushko-Mova, V. Kyiovych, M. Pyrohiv, and V. Kozak, were tried in Chita in 1923–4 as separatists and Japanese collaborators.

Many Ukrainians in the Far East fled from Soviet rule to *Harbin, Manchuria, which was occupied by Japan in 1931 (see *China). The Ukrainians in Harbin had frequent contacts with the Japanese military authorities, who restored to them the building of the Ukrainian Club that had been confiscated by the Chinese and allowed the newspaper Man'dzhurs'kyi vistnyk (1932–7, ed I. Svit) to be published and several Ukrainian community organizations to function. The Japanese liaison officer K. Horie frequently interceded on behalf of the Ukrainians there. In the late 1920s and 1930s, UNR émigrés had contacts with Japanese officials in Europe. In Warsaw, Gen V. Salsky influenced the views of the Japanese military attaché, Col Yanagita; the latter was later transferred to Hsinking, where he helped the Ukrainians in Manchukuo in their dealings with the authorities.

In the 1930s, the OUN had political and military contacts with the Japanese, who were interested in furthering anti-Soviet activity in the Far East. In 1934 a few OUN operatives went from Europe via Tokyo to Harbin. There they became active in the Ukrainian community and conducted secret political work in the Soviet Far East. The OUN members B. Markiv, R. Korda-Fedoriv, and M. Mytliuk created the Ukrainian Far Eastern Sich youth organization in Harbin. In 1937 the Japanese authorities sided openly with émigré Russian fascist organizations and circumscribed the activity of most of the Ukrainian organizations, except for the Ukrainian National Colony in Manchukuo. However, they allowed the Ukrainians in Shanghai to publish the newspaper Ukrains'kyi holos na Dalekomu skhodi (1941–4, ed M. Milko) and to organize a Ukrainian National Committee.

Japanese-Ukrainian cultural contacts have been mainly literary. In Japan the best-known Ukrainian writer has been T. Shevchenko. The fullest Japanese collection of his poetry (26 poems), translated by T. Shibuya, S. Komatsu, T. Murai, H. Tadzawa, and T. Kinoshita, appeared in Tokyo in 1964. Several articles about him have also appeared. In 1961, an Association for Shevchenko Studies was established, and meetings of Soviet Ukrainian and Japanese writers took place on the 100th anniversary of Shevchenko's death and the 150th anniversary of his birth. A few works by I. Franko, Lesia Ukrainka, P. Tychna, and M. Stelmakh have also been translated into Japanese.

Some Japanese literature has been translated into Ukrainian; eg, A. Lototsky's Iapons'ki kazky (Japanese Fairy Tales, 1926), S. Tokunaga's Street without Sunshine (1932) and Silent Mountains (1954), W. Hosoi's Kodji the Textile Worker, and T. Kobayashi's The Crabmeat Factory Ship (1934). Translations of Japanese literature were published in 1961 in an anthology of Oriental literature edited by A. Kovalivsky. The émigré I. Shankovsky published a collection of 100 13th-century Japanese court poems in Ukrainian translation.

In the 1920s, Japanese language and literature were taught at Kharkiv University, which published F. Pushchenko's Japanese grammar in 1926. Also in 1926, the All-Ukrainian Scientific Association for Oriental Studies (VUNAS) was established in Kharkiv, with branches in Kiev and Odessa; F. Pushchenko was the director of the Japanese section. Articles in Japanese studies and translations appeared in Biuletyn' VUNAS (1926–8) and in the journal Skhidnyi svit (1927–31). In 1931, translations of 26 classical Japanese poems were published in a collection with an introductory essay by O. Kremena.

Outside Ukraine, S. Levynsky, who worked at the Polish consulate in Harbin, Peking, and Saigon from 1935 to 1946, published an account of his travels, Z iapons'koho domu (From a Japanese Home, 1932). V. Odynets studied at the Oriental Institute in Harbin and later taught East European history at Hsinking University. He and A. Dibrova, with the help of S. Levynsky, I. Svit, and several Japanese linguists, compiled a Ukrainian-Japanese dictionary (ed Y. Saburo, Harbin 1944). The Council of the Ukrainian National Colony in Harbin published the anthology Dalekyi skhid (The Far East), which included translations of Japanese poetry and articles on Japanese folkways and education.

Since the Second World War, notable Soviet Ukrainian Japanese specialists have included Ya. Pobilenky and I. Chyrko. In Japan, specialists in Ukrainian literature have been S. Fukuoka at Hokkaido University, K. Komatsu at the Institute of Foreign Languages in Kobe, and S. Kimura at Tokyo University. K. Nakai has written on Ukrainian history. Ukraine has been studied within the framework of Soviet and East European studies.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Svit, I. Ukrains'ko-iapons'ki vzaiemyny 1903–1945 (New York 1972)

A. Zhukovsky

Jargon. A vocabulary or idiom understood only by members of a specific occupational or social group (eg, tramps, kobzars, hawkers, sailors, prostitutes, beggars, thieves) which is used by them as a means of mutual identification and differentiation from the rest of society. Because of their emotivity, many words and expressions of various jargons have become part of urban *slang.

The devices of word formation in Ukrainian jargons consist of (1) the interpolation of a syllable, such as kry- or šu-, between syllables of a standard word, eg, 'kry-pi-kry-du' from pidu ('I will go'); (2) the deformation of a standard word by (a) aphaeresis, eg, 'ašoxa' from kaša ('kasha'), (b) metathesis, eg, 'Lykačiv' from 'Lyčakiv', or (c) prothesis, eg, 'šmurnyj' from durnyj ('stupid'); (3) metaphoric and metonymic substitutions, eg, cybulja ('onion') for hodynyk ('watch'); and (4) the adoption of loan words (mainly from Yiddish, Romanian, and modern Greek) that are often used figuratively, eg, oxvés ('icon,' 'picture,' or 'God') and oxcijos (a hundred-unit banknote) from the Greek o theos ('God'). Devices 1 and 2 were used mostly in occupational jargons of the 19th and early 20th century.

The phonetics and grammar of a jargon are not independent; they are taken from the local general speech.

For example, the jargon of Buchach's *lirnyks was based on the Dniester dialect, while that of Ternopil's and Vinnytsia's was based on the Podilia dialect; Lviv's slang was based on the Polonized dialect as used there, while jargons of Odessa, Kiev, and Kharkiv were based on Russified parlance used in those cities. The jargons spoken in parts of Ukraine bordering on Poland, eastern Belorussia, and Russia's Voronezh region can be traced back to the 17th century. In Ukraine various jargons were first recorded in the second half of the 19th century. These records include those of Kharkiv's beggars by V. Ivanov; of eastern Podilia's lirnyks by V. Borzhkovsky; of Ternopil's lirnyks by K. Studynsky; of Buchach's lirnyks by V. Hnatiuk; of Novyi Ropsk's (in Chernihiv gubernia) fullers by F. Nykolaichyk; of Chernihiv's blind beggars by P. Tikhanov; of thieves and hooligans by V. Trakhtenberg and V. Bets; of the homeless and school children by V. Petrov, V. Shchepotev, and V. Straten; of criminals by V. Popov (in Kiev, 1912) and A. Kurka (in Lviv, 1896).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Borzhkovskii, V. 'Lirniki,' KS, 1889, no. 9
 Hnatiuk, V. 'Lirnyky. Lirnyts'ki pisni, molytvy, slova, zvistky i t. p. pro lirnykiv povitu Buchats'kohu,' EZ (1896)
 Jagić, V. 'Die Geheimsprachen bei den Slaven,' Sitzungsberichte der Wiener Akademie der Wissenschaften, Phil.-Hist. Kl., 1 (1896)
Iazyk i literatura, 7 (1931) (articles by B. Larin, M. Fridman, A. Barannikov, and N. Dmitriev)
 Straten, V. 'Argo i argotizmy,' Trudy komissii po russkomu iazyku, 1 (1931)
 Horbach, O. 'Argot in Ukraine,' Proceedings of the Shevchenko Scientific Society, Philological Section, 1 (1952)

O. Horbach

Jaroslław (Ukrainian: Yaroslav). III-3. City (1982 pop 36,100) and county center in Przemyśl voivodeship, Poland, on the Sian River. Named after Grand Prince Yaroslav the Wise of Kiev, it was first mentioned in 1152 during the reign of Prince Volodymyrko of Halych. In 1245 the Battle of *Yaroslav took place there, during which the army of Prince Danylo Romanovych of Volhynia defeated that of Rostyslav Mykhailovych of Chernihiv and his Hungarian and Galician boyar allies. In the mid-14th century the city came under Polish rule. Granted the right of Magdeburg Law in 1375, it was an important trade center in the 15th–17th centuries. A Jesuit college was founded there in 1575. In 1722 it came under Austrian rule; from 1856 it was a county center. Destroyed during the First World War, from 1919 to 1939 it belonged to Poland. In 1939 Ukrainians composed 16 percent of the city's and 75 percent of the county's population. Under the German occupation (1939–44), a branch of the *Ukrainian Central Committee was active there; it established Ukrainian shops, a co-operative union, a gymnasium, a trade school, a People's Home, and a Farmer's Bank. The Greek-Catholic auxiliary bishop H. Lakota was based there, and the city was the center of the Ukrainian Relief Committee in the Sian region. In 1946 the UPA fought Polish partisans and government troops in the Jaroslław region, but it was unable to prevent the wholesale deportation of the county's Ukrainian population to northwest Poland. Since that time the population of Jaroslław and its county has been almost entirely Polish.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Wagner, W. Handel dawnego Jaroslawa do połowy XVII w. (Lviv 1929)
 Wondaś, A. Szkice do dziejów Jaroslawa, 3 vols (Jaroslław 1934–6)
 Gottfried, K. Ilustrowany przewodnik po Jaroslawiu (Jaroslław 1937)
 Semchysyn, M.; Borodach, V. (eds). Jaroslavshchyna i Zasiannia 1031–1947: Istorychno-memuarnyi zbirnyk (New York-Paris-Sydney-Toronto 1986)

M. Stech

Jary, Riko, b 14 April 1898 in Rjysion, Austria, d 20 May 1969 in Austria. Journalist; military and political leader of mixed Ukrainian-Austrian background. In 1929 he became a founding member of the OUN and treasurer of the Leadership of Ukrainian Nationalists. He served as the main contact between the Ukrainian Military Organization and OUN and the Abwehr (German military intelligence) and organized military and security training for Ukrainian nationalists. In March 1939, he arranged the delivery of arms by Germany to Ukrainian insurgents in Transcarpathia, and in 1939–40 he co-ordinated the assistance provided by the Abwehr to Ukrainian military formations. Jary initiated contacts between S. *Bandera and the Abwehr in November 1940 and became a member of the OUN (Bandera faction). Saved once from arrest by the Gestapo by the intervention of the chief of German intelligence, Admiral W. Canaris, he was finally arrested in 1942 and held under house arrest from February 1943 in Semering near Vienna. After the war, he lived in Austria. Jary's role in the nationalist movement is the subject of some controversy; however, allegations that he and his wife Olly (née Spiegelvogel) co-operated with the Third Communist International and speculation that they were Bolshevik agents remain unsubstantiated.

D. Zlepko

Jassy. See Iași.

Jean, Josaphat Joseph, b 19 March 1885 in Saint-Fabien near Rimouski, Quebec, d 8 June 1972 in Grimsby, Ontario. Missionary priest. Upon graduating from the Grand Séminaire of Montreal, Jean was ordained in 1910 and departed for Galicia to study Ukrainian and the Eastern rite in preparation for his work among Ukrainian settlers in western Canada. In 1912 he organized a school in Sifton, Manitoba, and served at a number of Ukrainian missions in St Boniface diocese. In the following year he returned to Galicia and entered the Basilian monastic order. During the war he served as a priest and chaplain of the Ukrainian Galician Army. In June 1919 he was appointed special secretary to the president of the Western Ukrainian National Republic (ZUNR). Then he served as a member of the ZUNR diplomatic corps in Warsaw, the Ukrainian delegation to the Riga Peace Conference, and the Ukrainian mission in Geneva. In 1923 Jean was sent to Bosnia by Metropolitan A. Sheptytsky to establish a Studite monastery for the Ukrainians in the region, but encountered strong government opposition to the plan. Returning to Canada in 1925, he established Sheptycky village (today Lac Castagnier) near Abitibi, Quebec, for emigrants from Galicia and Ukrainian refugees from Bosnia. The colony of some 50 families failed, however, and Jean served as priest in Ukrainian parishes of Montreal (1931–45). Immediately after the war he worked in London and Paris aiding Ukrainian refugees and promoting immigration to Canada. He returned to Mundare in 1949 to teach at the Basilian novitiate. His valuable collection of rare books and historical documents is preserved in Mundare.

Jedlička, Aloiz, b 14 December 1821 in Kukleny, Bohemia, d 15 September 1894 in Poltava. Ukrainian composer, folklorist, and pedagogue of Czech origin. After studying at the Prague Conservatory (1837–42), he moved to Ukraine. In 1845 he became acquainted with T. Shevchenko. From 1848 to 1892 he taught piano at the Poltava Institute for Daughters of the Nobility, where he also organized a choir. His piano pieces such as 'Leaf from an Album,' 'Kerchief,' 'Recollections of Poltava,' and 'Flowers of Ukraine' are based on Ukrainian folk music. He collected Ukrainian folk songs and published them in two collections: Sobranie malorossiiskikh narodnykh pesen (A Collection of Little Russian Folk Songs, 1861) and Sto malorossiiskikh narodnykh pesen (A Hundred Little Russian Folk Songs, 1869). He also did arrangements of folk songs and edited the musical score of I. Kotliarevsky's Natalka Poltavka (Natalka from Poltava). Several works of Ukrainian poets were set to music by Jedlička.

Jedlnia privileges. Decree issued in 1430 by the Polish king Władysław II Jagiełło in the village of Jedlnia in Kielce voivodeship. It granted the nobility important rights such as the inviolability of the individual and his property without a court decision. These rights were to apply in Ruthenian lands as well. The decree provided for the incorporation of the Grand Duchy of Lithuania in the Kingdom of Poland. The implementation of the decree finally replaced the old Ukrainian law in Galicia with Polish law.

Jędrzejewicz, Jerzy, b 2 March 1902 in Bawaria, Końskie county, Poland, d 19 November 1975 in Warsaw. Polish writer, translator, and literary critic. A professor of literature at Warsaw University, his finest contribution to Ukrainian studies was a biographical novel about T. Shevchenko titled Noce ukraińskie albo rodowód geniusza (Ukrainian Nights or the Biography of a Genius, 1966), which was a best seller in Poland and was republished twice (1970, 1972). A Ukrainian translation by Ye. Roslytsky appeared in Toronto in 1980. Jędrzejewicz translated over 30 novels, over 20 dramas, and many poems from Ukrainian, Russian, Italian, and German to Polish. His translations of Ukrainian literature include a two-volume collection of M. Kotsiubynsky's works (1954), M. Rylsky's Shopen (Chopin, 1947), T. Shevchenko's Progulka s udovol'stviam i ne bez morali (A Trip with Pleasure and Not without a Moral, 1960), a book of selected poetry by T. Shevchenko (1972), and a book of short stories by Ye. Hutsalo. He also wrote articles on Shevchenko, Kotsiubynsky, Hutsalo, and others.

Jehovah's Witnesses. A theocratic millenarian religious sect that began in the United States in the 19th century and has since spread to much of the world, including Ukraine. It is most widely represented there in Donetske, Mykolaiv, Transcarpathia, and Chernivtsi oblasts. It also has a strong following in the Kuban.

Since the Witnesses are illegal in the USSR, they operate secretly at the local, district, and regional levels. The local level cells are made up of 5–15 people. During their meetings they study literature published by the sect's headquarters in New York. They themselves publish the underground Ukrainian-language journal Vartova bashnia. They recruit from among ordinary Soviet people and are especially successful with the desperate and disillusioned.

Throughout their history in the USSR, the Witnesses have been severely persecuted because their doctrine is perceived to be anti-Soviet. Because their leadership is based in the United States, they have also been accused of being a front for espionage. Both J. Stalin and N. Khrushchev conducted major Soviet-wide campaigns against the sect (in 1951, 7,000 Witnesses were reportedly in prison or exile) and there continue to be frequent reports of the trial and imprisonment of Witnesses. However, the movement appears to be remarkably resilient; some well-informed observers believe that the Soviet branch of the Jehovah's Witnesses is one of the strongest in the world.

O. Zinkevych

Jensen, Alfred, b 30 September 1859 in Fors, near Gävle, Sweden, d 15 September 1921 in Vienna. Prominent Swedish Slavist. He wrote articles on T. Shevchenko in Swedish and a book in German, Taras Schewtschenko: Ein ukrainisches Dichterleben (1916), and translated some of his poems into Swedish. In 1909 he visited Ukraine and became personally acquainted with I. Franko and M. Kotsiubynsky; his translation of two of the latter's stories appeared in 1909 (I vilt äktenskap). Jensen produced a monograph on Hetman I. Mazepa in 1909 and studies of Hetman P. Orlyk and the Voinarovsky family. In 1921 he edited a Swedish collection on Ukrainians, which was published in the Nationernas Bibliotek series as Ukrainarna. A member of the Shevchenko Scientific Society from 1911, he contributed many articles to its periodicals and followed closely Ukrainian academic activities, about which he informed the Swedish public.

Jer (pronounced yer). Originally, the name for two letters of the Glagolitic and Cyrillic alphabets: ѣ and ѥ in Cyrillic. The origin of the name is unknown; possibly, it was derived from the jargon name of a bird (a type of swallow) whose shape in flight resembles the shape of the Glagolitic letters. The jers as sounds arose ca 800 AD in Common Slavic from the short u and i respectively. In their subsequent development in Proto-Ukrainian the jers split into weak and strong depending on their position in the word; namely, they became strong if followed in the next syllable by a weak jer. The strong jers developed into o and e respectively, while the weak jers underwent reduction and were lost ca 1150. Thus, the disyllabic words snъb ('sleep') and dnъb ('day') of late Common Slavic became son and den in modern Ukrainian. The letter ѣ is still used in the Ukrainian alphabet; not as a vowel, however, but as a 'soft sign' to indicate palatalization of the preceding consonant.

Jerlicz, Joachim, b 19 May 1598 in Kolentsi, eastern Volhynia, d after 1673. Polish chronicler of Ukrainian noble descent. A monk at the Kievan Cave Monastery, he joined the Polish army and fought in the *Cossack-Polish War. In 1648, while hiding in the Kievan Cave Monastery, he began a chronicle covering the years 1620 to April 1673. While it is virulently anti-Cossack in tone and considerably distorts events of the period, the chronicle nonetheless provides useful information about the war. It was first published in Warsaw as Latopisiec albo kroniczka różnych spraw i dziejów (Chronicle of Various Matters and Events, 2 vols, 1853).

Jerusalem. Ancient city (1986 pop 420,000) claimed as the capital by Israel, and regarded as a holy city by Jews, Christians, and Moslems. The earliest historical references to Jerusalem date back to the middle of the 2nd millennium BC and describe it as the capital of Jewish kings. The city has been destroyed twice – by the Babylonians in 587 BC and by the Romans in 70 AD.

As the site of Christ's life, death, and resurrection, Jerusalem and Palestine have attracted for many centuries pilgrims from Ukraine. Many of them left memoirs and accounts of their travels, which have been studied extensively. One of the first pilgrims from Ukraine to visit Jerusalem was *Danylo, the hegumen of a Chernihiv monastery, who wrote a widely known account of his pilgrimage in 1106–8. In the 15th century Arsenii of Thessalonica wrote an account of his pilgrimage to the Holy Land. In 1590–3 Danylo of Korsun, the archimandrite of a monastery in the Hrodna region, lived in Jerusalem and left an account entitled Peregrinatsiia ili put do Ierusalimu ... (The Pilgrimage or Voyage to Jerusalem ..., publ 1906), which imitated closely Hegumen Danylo's earlier work. More Ukrainian pilgrims visited the Holy Land at the beginning of the 18th century. Two monks of the Novhorod-Siverskyi Monastery of the Transfiguration, Makarii and Sylvestr, left some notes on their journey in 1704. A hieromonach of the Borys and Hlib Monastery in Chernihiv eparchy described his pilgrimage of 1707–9 in Puteshestvie ieromonakha Ippolita Vishenskogo v Ierusalim, na Sinai i Afon (The Travels of the Hieromonach Ipolit Vyshensky to Jerusalem, Sinai, and Mt Athos, publ 1914). At about the same time (1712–14) Varlaam Linytsky, a hieromonach of the Kievan Cave Monastery, visited Jerusalem and left some notes on his stay.

The noted 18th-century traveler V. Hryhorovych-Barsky visited many countries in Europe and the Near East, and left four illustrated volumes of recollections entitled Stranstvovan'ia Vasil'ia Grigorovicha-Barskogo po sviatym mestam Vostoka s 1723 po 1747 g. (The Travels of Vasyl Hryhorovych-Barsky to the Holy Places of the East from 1723 to 1747, 1885–7). He spent about five months in Jerusalem itself studying and sketching various sites associated with Christ's life, which he describes in detail. Separion, a monk of the Motronynskyi Holy Trinity Monastery near Chyhyryn, described his 1749 trip to Jerusalem in his Putnik ili puteshestvie vo sviatuiu zemliu ... (The Trip or Travels to the Holy Land ..., publ 1873).

Pilgrimages to Jerusalem and the Holy Land continued in the 19th century, and a number of accounts were written by pilgrims from Western Ukraine. V. *Terletsy described his two-year travels in the Near East in his two-volume Zapiski vtorogo poklonicheskogo puteshestviia z Rima v Ierusalim ... (Notes on the Second Pilgrim Voyage from Rome to Jerusalem ..., 1861). L. Turiansky, a Galician, wrote a sketch of his visit to the Holy Land titled Opys z ust palomnyka (A Description from a Pilgrim's Mouth, 1886). Rev A. Poliansky's recollections of his pilgrimage were published also in 1886. A little later Rev

T. Dutkevych's Podorozh do Ierusalymu (Journey to Jerusalem, 1899) was published in Kolomyia. In 1900 the Rev B. Kyrchiv organized pilgrimages to the Holy Land.

Metropolitan A. Sheptytsky visited Jerusalem and the Holy Land in 1904 and in 1906, when he was accompanied by 505 pilgrims. This group of pilgrims established a chapel at the Austrian hospital and donated liturgical books, rare vestments, and a golden chalice to it. The metropolitan and his group were received by the Patriarch of Jerusalem. Rev Yu. Dzerovych wrote an account of this pilgrimage titled Propamiatna knyha Pershoho Rus'ko-narodnoho palomnytstva v Sviatu Zemliu vid 5 do 28 veresnia 1906 (A Commemorative Book of the First Ruthenian Popular Pilgrimage to the Holy Land from 5 to 28 of September 1906, 1907). In the interwar period various political and bureaucratic complications discouraged organized pilgrimages and no Ukrainian group visited the Holy Land. In 1933 Y. Slipy, who was rector of the Greek Catholic Theological Seminary at the time, traveled to the Holy Land and later wrote Palomnytstvo do Sviatoi Zemli (A Pilgrimage to the Holy Land, 1935). Since the Second World War Ukrainians in the West have made a number of pilgrimages to Jerusalem. Yu. Fedoriv and M. Zhyzhka have both published accounts of their trips.

A silver plate (106 by 83 cm) with an engraving of Christ's entombment was donated by Hetman I. Mazepa ca 1707 to the Church of the Lord's Resurrection, which is part of the building complex known as the Church of the Holy Sepulchre. This gift has been preserved there and is still used as an altar covering. Otaman P. Kalnyshevsky is also known to have sent precious gifts to the Church of the Holy Sepulchre.

A. Olesnytsky, a professor of the Kiev Theological Academy and specialist in biblical archeology, published many studies in his field including Sviataia Zemlia (The Holy Land, 2 vols, 1875–6). During the Second World War Ukrainian pilgrims donated a tablet with an inscription of the Lord's Prayer in Ukrainian and Church Slavonic to the Pater Noster Church on the Mount of Olives.

In 1979 the public Committee for Jewish-Ukrainian Cooperation, which published the journal Contact, was set up in Jerusalem. In 1981 a splinter group of the committee founded the Society of Ukrainian-Jewish Contacts. It publishes a quarterly bulletin Diialohy, edited by Ya. Suslensky. Yad Vashem's list of righteous gentiles who risked their lives to save Jews in the Holocaust includes 60 Ukrainians. On 13 May 1985 a monument to the Jewish-Ukrainian and Ukrainian victims of Nazism and Russian Bolshevism, donated by Yu. Dyba, was unveiled near the Tomb of King David on Mount Zion. A few months later it was destroyed by anti-Ukrainian extremists.

A. Zhukovsky

Jesenská, Ružena, b 17 June 1863, d 14 July 1940. Czech writer and translator. Her translations of 28 poems by T. Shevchenko, together with her long introduction, were published in 1900. She also translated several poems by I. Franko, Lesia Ukrainka, and B. Lepky.

Jesuits (Societas Jesu). Roman Catholic monastic order founded in 1534 by I. Loyola and approved in 1540 by Pope Paul III. Organized originally to convert Moslems, it became the chief instrument of the Counter-Reformation. It defended and spread the Catholic faith through missions, research, publication, and education. The Jesuits often played an important political role. In 1773 Pope Clement XIV disbanded the order, but it continued its activities in the Russian Empire under the protection of Catherine II. Restored in 1814 by Pope Pius VII, it was expelled from Russia in 1820. The only Ukrainian territory in which the Jesuits continued to operate was Galicia.

Introduced to Poland by Cardinal S. Hosius in the mid-16th century, the Jesuits extended their influence throughout Ukrainian and Belorussian territories. They founded *colleges and academies that were emulated by the Orthodox and Uniates. The schools consisted of two levels: the lower with five grades, and the higher with two grades (see *Higher education). There were 23 Jesuit colleges in Ukrainian territory. The most important ones were the college in Yaroslav (est 1574, enrollment in 1600 approx 60), Lviv (est 1608), Lutske (1614 enrollment approx 400), Kamianets-Podilskyi (est 1611), Vinnytsia, Bar, Berestia, Peremyshl (est 1570), Pynske (est 1633), and Kiev (est 1647). Some of them also taught Ruthenian. The sons of many Ukrainian noble families attended these colleges and the Jesuit Academy in Vilnius (est 1570). Ukrainian clergy were often graduates of Jesuit seminaries. Through their schools the Jesuits succeeded in converting large numbers of Ukrainians and Belorussians to Roman Catholicism and in Polonizing them. Prince K. Ostrozky's sons and J. Wiśniowiecki (Vyshnevetsky), for example, became Roman Catholics.

The Jesuits, particularly P. Skarga, B. Herbst, and the papal legate A. Possevino, actively promoted the Church Union of *Berestia. Because of their enormous political influence at court and among the Polish nobility and their accumulation of landholdings (including the estates of the Ostrozky family left to them by Princess A. Ostrozka), the Jesuits drew the enmity of the Ukrainian people, and particularly of the Cossacks. During the *Cossack-Polish War they were persecuted and driven from Ukraine. In various treaties with the Poles the Cossacks demanded that the Jesuits be expelled from Ukrainian territory. Uniate metropolitans frequently petitioned the Pope to stop the Jesuit practice of converting Uniates to Roman Catholicism.

In 1781, after the abolition of the Jesuit order, the Polish Commission of National Education transferred the Jesuit college in Bar, and various Jesuit buildings in Ovruch, Ostrih, and Volodymyr-Volynskyi, to the Basilian monastic order. In the 19th century the restored Jesuits established monasteries in the larger cities of Galicia such as Lviv, Ternopil, and Stanyslaviv, a boarding school and gymnasium in Khyriv, and a pilgrimage site called Kokhavyna.

In 1882 Pope Leo XIII assigned to the Jesuits the task of reforming the Basilian order. Here the most important work was done by H. Jackowski, K. Szczepkowski, and K. Baudiss. After 1920 an eastern branch of the order was organized in Poland. Its centers were Albertin in Belorussia and Dubno in Volhynia, where the Jesuits ran a pontifical seminary. The most prominent figures of this branch were J. Urban, the editor of the bimonthly Oriens, W. Dąbrowski, and the Spaniard J. Morillo, the publisher of the journal Oriente Europeo.

The Jesuits took part in the attempts to bring about a union between the Orthodox of Transcarpathia and Rome; however, because of their policy of conversion to Roman Catholicism and Magyarization, the Jesuits failed in their efforts.

The Jesuit order produced some outstanding historians of the Eastern church such as A. Ammann. Ukrainian members of the order include Rev S. Tyshkevych, the son of M. Tyshkevych. Some prominent leaders of the Ukrainian Catholic church, including Y. Slipy, K. Bohachevsky, V. Laba, I. Stakh, and A. Ishchak, were graduates of Jesuit universities in Europe. A number of American universities and colleges at which Ukrainians teach or study are run by the Jesuits.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Pelesz, J. Geschichte der Union der ruthenischen Kirche mit Rom (Würzburg-Vienna 1878–80)

Załęski, S. Jezuici w Polsce, 5 vols (Lviv-Cracow 1900–6)

W. Lencyk

Jeunes Amis de l'Ukraine. See Organization of Ukrainian Youth in France.

Jewelry and ornamentation. Jewelry consists of objects of adornment valued for their craftsmanship and the rarity of their components. One of the oldest art forms, jewelry making in Ukraine dates to the Paleolithic period, when bones and wood were used to fashion decorative items. Ornamentation refers to the crafting of various objects (eg, chalices, book bindings, weapons) and their embellishment with gems and precious metals, particularly gold and silver.

Jewelry making and fine metalworking were well developed in the *ancient states on the northern Black Sea coast. For the inhabitants of the Greek colonies, jewelry, made mostly of bronze, played an important economic role and was widely traded. Many *Scythian artifacts, dating back to the 7th–2nd centuries BC, have been found in grave sites in southern Ukraine. The Scythians created fine jewelry and developed their own 'animalistic style,' depicting running or fighting animals on plaques of gold or silver. Outstanding examples of Scythian handiwork include a silver amphora found in the *Chortomlyk kurhan, a gold pectoral from the *Krasnokutskyi kurhan, and a gold quiver and bow cover found near Melitopol.

In Kievan Rus', the craft of enameling enjoyed great popularity and reached a high level of development (see *Enamel). The artisans of Kiev, Kaniv, Chernihiv, and elsewhere made elaborate diadems, earrings, necklaces, rings, and pendants. They also used their skills in fashioning religious artifacts: chalices, censers, crosses, and ornamental bindings on Gospels and other church books. A unique silver-covered bull's horn was uncovered in the 10th century *Chorna Mohyla. Many precious metals and stones were imported to Rus' from Central Asia and the Caucasus. The Mongol invasion in the 13th century led to a temporary decline in crafts throughout much of Ukraine.

In the 14th–16th centuries, the main centers of goldsmithing, silversmithing, and jewelry making in Ukraine were Kiev, Lviv, Kamianets-Podilskyi, and Chernihiv. A Kievan guild of goldsmiths existed from at least 1518, and the names of 28 Lviv goldsmiths from the 15th century are known today. In this period Western Europe replaced Byzantium as the main source of influence on Ukrainian ornamentation; many artisans were of foreign (particularly German and Armenian) origin, especially in the cities of Western Ukraine. The most important artifacts of the 16th century were religious ones. Designs became extremely elaborate, marked by the generous use of precious ornaments. At the same time, precious metals and gems began to be used in making household articles such as plates and flatware, and in embellishing weapons. The wealthy Right-Bank nobility provided a large market for luxury items. In the late 17th century, with the emergence of a Cossack elite, new centers of jewelry making and ornamentation developed in the Left Bank. Separate guilds of goldsmiths were established in Pryluka (1749), Chernihiv (1786), and Nizhen (1786). In this period Ukrainian artisans mastered almost all the major techniques in working with precious metals, including pouring, engraving, embossing, and inlaying. Outstanding examples of jewelry and ornamentation include the encolpion by the Kievan artisan Fedir (1655), the silver-bound Gospel by the Romny craftsmen A. Ivanovych and A. Peliakovsky (1688), and work by I. Ravych, I. Biletsky, and M. Yurevych. Gold and silver were often used to emboss iconostases and individual icons, and Cossack officers generously endowed many churches and monasteries with expensive ornaments.

Jewelry and ornaments: 1–13) rings and earrings; 14) mirror; 15) part of a necklace; 16–17) enamel earrings (Kievan Rus’); 18) bells; 19–20) water spouts; 21) golden candelabra (Kievan Rus’) [from V. Sichynsky]

From the end of the 18th century, jewelry making and ornamentation declined steadily in Ukraine. It was only in 1878 that the first modern jeweler began manufacturing jewelry in Kiev. Now in Ukraine there are five jewelry factories, which generally produce poor-quality items for mass markets. The richest collections of old Ukrainian jewelry and ornaments are found in the Museum of Historical Treasures of the Ukrainian SSR, the Historical Museum of the Ukrainian SSR, the Kiev Museum of Ukrainian Art, and the Hermitage in Leningrad.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Shcherbakivs'kyi, D. Ukrains'ke mystetstvo (Lviv-Kiev 1913)
 Pavluts'kyi, H. Istoriia ukrains'koho ornamentu (Kiev 1927)
 Petrenko, M. Ukrains'ke zolotarstvo XVI–XVIII st. (Kiev 1970)
 B. Balan

Jewish Battalion of the Ukrainian Galician Army (Zhydivskyi kurin UHA). The battalion was formed from Jewish militia units in the city of Ternopil during June 1919 as part of the *Ukrainian Galician Army (UHA). It was commanded by Lieutenant S. Leimberg and initially was under direct operational control of 1 Corps Headquarters. The battalion reached a total strength of 1,200 soldiers, who were organized into four infantry companies, one machine-gun company, one engineer company, and other units. After basic training in Ostapie, Skalat county, the battalion was sent to the Polish front and was in combat from 14 July 1919. During the withdrawal of the UHA to the east, the battalion initially had responsibility for rearguard security and later participated in combat against Bolshevik forces in Proskuriv (Khmelnyskyi) and captured the town of Mykhailpil (Mykhailivka). In Vinnytsia the battalion's mission was to secure the city and the headquarters of 1 Corps. In the march on Kiev in late August 1919 the battalion was attached to the 6th Brigade with the mission of gaining and securing the rail station at Sviatoshyne. In September 1919 the battalion was temporarily stationed in Berdychiv, where its actions in securing the town gained wide support among the local people. After transfer to Vinnytsia in late autumn 1919, the battalion was so decimated by the typhus epidemic that it was disbanded and its surviving soldiers were reassigned to other UHA units.

P.R. Sodol

Jews (Ukrainian: zhydy, ievrei). Jews first settled on Ukrainian territories in the 4th century BC in the Crimea and among the Greek colonies on the northeast coast of the Black Sea. From there they migrated to the valleys of the three major rivers – the Volga, Don, and Dnieper – where they maintained active economic and diplomatic relations with Byzantium, Persia, and the Khazar kaganate (see *Khazars). The latter empire consisted of Turkic tribes that converted to Judaism in about 740 AD. In the aftermath of Khazaria's conquest in 964 by the Kievan prince *Sviatoslav I, Khazarian Jews settled in Kiev, the Crimea (see *Karaites), and the Caucasus.

Throughout the 11th and 12th centuries Khazarian Jews steadily migrated northwards. In Ukraine the Jewish population developed a distinct presence. In Kiev they settled in their own district called *Zhydove, the entrance to which was called the Zhydivski vorota (Jewish gate). Jews fleeing the Crusaders came to Ukraine as well, and the first western-European Jews began to arrive from Germany, probably in the 11th century.

The Kievan princes Iziaslav and Sviatopolk II, Prince

Danylo Romanovych of Galicia, and the Volhynian prince Volodymyr Vasylykovich were well disposed to their Jewish subjects and assisted their activities in trade and finance. Jews were also appointed to administrative and financial posts. However, as in other parts of Europe, this benevolent treatment was not consistent. During an uprising in 1113 the Zhydove district was ransacked, and during the rule of *Volodymyr Monomakh Jews were expelled from Kiev. The Mongol conquest of the Crimea and of Kievan Rus' strengthened commercial relations, and brought peace and prosperity to the Jewish community up to the time of the Tatar-Lithuanian War (1396–99).

The expulsion of the Jews from the states and cities of Western and Central Europe in the 13th–15th centuries led Jews to flee eastward, to Austria, Hungary, Bohemia, Moravia, Poland, and the Ottoman Empire. By 1500, Jews living in Ukrainian lands under Polish rule could be found in 23 towns and constituted one-third of all Jews in the Polish kingdom. The central European Jews (ashkenazim) spoke Yiddish (a German dialect), wore distinctive dress, and lived apart from the local population, either in separate districts or ghettos of cities, or in small, predominantly Jewish, settlements (shtetl). They were usually poorer than the earliest Jewish immigrants to Ukraine. Barred from owning land and from the professions, the majority of Jews were engaged in modest occupations, as artisans and in petty trade. Protected by the Polish monarchs against hostile nobles and urban dwellers, Jews were directly subordinate to the king, paying a separate tax for which they were collectively responsible. In return, royal decrees (dating back as early as 1264) allowed the Jews to govern themselves. In 1495 King Alexander Jagiellończyk established autonomous local governments (see *Kahal), with jurisdiction over schools, welfare, the lower judiciary, and religious affairs. From the mid-16th century to 1763 the central institution of Jewish life in the Polish kingdom was the Council of the Four Lands (Great Poland, 'Little Poland,' Chervona Rus' [Galicia], and Volhynia). The council met semiannually (later irregularly), with the site alternating between Jarosław and Lublin, to apportion the responsibility for taxes and decide on matters of concern to the Jewish community.

In the late 15th century Jews from Poland and Germany began arriving in Ukrainian territories under Lithuanian rule (especially the Kievan region and Podilia). Kiev became a famous center of Jewish religious education. This period was also one of suffering for both the indigenous and the Jewish populations because of the Tatar raids. In 1482 many Jews were seized by the Tatars and sold into slavery in the Crimea.

The largest migration of Jews to Ukrainian territories took place in the last quarter of the 16th century. Some came from other parts of Poland and Lithuania to settle the newly opened areas; others from as far as Italy and Germany. In 1569, with the creation of the Polish-Lithuanian Commonwealth (see Union of *Lublin) and the transfer of Ukraine from Lithuanian to Polish administration, vast areas of Ukraine were opened to colonization and to commercial agricultural development for trade with Western Europe. Between 1569 and 1648 the number of Jews in Ukraine increased from about 4,000 to nearly 51,325, dispersed among 115 towns and settlements in the voivodeships of Kiev, Podilia, Volhynia, and Bratslav. If the older Jewish community in the Ruthenian and Belz voivodeships is included, at the turn of the century there were 120,000 Jews in Ukrainian territories, out of an estimated total population of 2 to 5 million. This rapid increase was a result not only of migration but also of natural population growth.

Jews began taking advantage of the new professional and economic opportunities in the frontier territories of Ukraine. As Polish and Lithuanian nobles accumulated more land, Jews came to act as their middlemen, providing indispensable services to the absentee and local lords as leaseholders of large estates, tax collectors (see *Tax farming), estate stewards (with the right to administer justice, including the death penalty), business agents, and operators and managers of inns, dairies, mills, lumber yards, and distilleries. In trade, they supplanted Armenians and competed with urban Ukrainians. Jews came to be perceived as the immediate overlords of the peasantry and the most important competitors to the urban Christian Orthodox population.

The situation of the Jewish population became increasingly vulnerable in the early 17th century. Dissatisfaction with the difficult conditions on the part of the enserfed peasantry, the *Cossacks, and urban Orthodox Ukrainians led to the 1648 uprising under B. *Khmelnysky. Polish landowners, Catholics, and Jews were the main victims of the uprising. In many cities, particularly in the Podilia and Volhynia regions and Left-Bank Ukraine, the Jewish population was decimated. Jewish eyewitness chroniclers (eg, Nathan Hanover) estimate the figure of casualties between 100,000 and 120,000. In light of the estimated size of the Jewish population in Ukraine in 1648 (ca 51,000), this figure reflects rather the trauma of the experience and not the actual numbers. Nonetheless Jews, perceived as representatives of the Polish landlords, suffered greatly during the uprising. To escape persecution, some Jews converted to Christianity.

The status of Jews was very different in the Russian-dominated *Hetman state. The Russian government was opposed to Jewish immigration and, beginning with Peter I, forbade Jews from settling in Left-Bank Ukraine. Nevertheless, because the economic value of Jewish settlers was recognized by officials of the Hetmanate, the decrees issued by St Petersburg for the expulsion of Jews from Left-Bank Ukraine were not always enforced, and several petitions were addressed to St Petersburg requesting permission to allow Jews in. Most Jews, however, lived in Right-Bank Ukraine, which remained under Polish control until 1772.

The economic hardship of the peasantry and the intensified national and religious oppression by Poland in these areas caused popular unrest that came to be directed also against Jews. This unrest was manifested in the *Haidamaka uprisings, and especially the *Koliivshchyna rebellion of 1768, when 50,000–60,000 Jews perished out of a total Jewish population of about 300,000 in Right-Bank Ukraine. Nevertheless, Jewish immigration to Ukraine continued throughout the 18th century, and while most Jews lived in poverty, some began to acquire great wealth.

After the partition of Poland in the late 18th century, the presence of 900,000 Jews on what was now Russian imperial territory forced the Russian government to abandon its previous policy of exclusion of Jews from Russia proper. In 1772 (and 1791, 1804, 1835) the government established a territorial region called the *Pale of Settlement beyond which Jewish settlement was prohibited. In Ukraine this area included almost all the former Polish-controlled territories; the Left-Bank gubernias of Chernihiv and Poltava, except for the crown hamlets; New Russia gubernia; Kiev gubernia, but not the city; and Bessarabia (1812). The Pale existed, with some special criteria permitting individual Jews to live outside it, until 1915.

During the reign of Alexander I (1801–25) the position of Jews initially improved as restrictions on their movement and enrollment in schools were eased and official anti-Semitic propaganda abated. Economically, Jews prospered in Southern Ukraine, where they played a major role in the grain trade; they acquired an especially strong presence in such commercial centers as *Odessa, *Kremenchuk, and *Berdychiv. In 1817 Jews owned 30 percent of the factories in Russian-ruled Ukraine. Towards the end of Alexander's rule, however, state-sponsored conversion attempts and expulsions from certain areas were encouraged.

Under Nicholas I (1825–55) official persecution of the Jews increased dramatically. Of the 1,200 laws affecting Jews between 1649 and 1881, more than half were instituted during his reign. Among these provisions were compulsory military service for Jews (1827), including the conscription of children; expulsions from cities (Kiev, Kherson, and Sevastopol); abolition of the kahal (1844); banning of the public use of Hebrew and Yiddish; aggressive conversion measures; and further travel and settlement restrictions (1835). In 1844 a decree was issued that created new Jewish schools similar to the parish and district schools and that aimed to assimilate the Jews.

Jews benefited from the brief period of liberalism that initially characterized the reign of Alexander II (1855–81). With the rise of the Jewish emancipation movement a few restrictions were loosened: some Jews – among them merchants of the first guild (1859), university graduates (1861), and various categories of artisans and tradesmen (1865) – were granted freedom of movement; and conscription of Jews into the army was placed on the same basis as for other subjects of the empire (1856), which included the abolition of the conscription of children. By 1872 Jews were actively engaged in the major industries in Ukraine: they comprised 90 percent of all those occupied in distilling and 32 percent in the sugar industry. But with the Odessa pogrom in 1871, the momentum for reform was quickly reversed, especially after the assassination of the tsar, and new laws restricting Jewish economic activity were introduced. In 1873, the rabbinical college in Zhytomyr was transformed by the authorities into a secular school.

The reign of the tsar's successors, Alexander III (1881–96) and Nicholas II (1896–1917), ushered in an era of state-supported *pogroms (1881–2, 1903, 1905), charges of ritual murder in the *Beilis affair (1913), expulsions from Kiev (1886) and Moscow (1891), and stricter segregation of the Jewish population within the Pale (1882). Wide-scale pogroms took place in October 1905, when in one month 690 pogroms were carried out in 28 gubernias (of which 329 pogroms were in Chernihiv gubernia alone). Many of these outbursts were encouraged by the anti-Semitic *Black Hundreds movement.

The government limited educational opportunities in 1887 and again in 1907 by placing a quota on Jews to be admitted to secondary schools and universities: 10 percent within the Pale, 3 percent in Moscow and St Petersburg, and 5 percent in the rest of the empire. Jews could be admitted to the bar only with permission of the minister of justice (1887), and they could not vote in district *zemstvo assembly elections (1890), even though they were obliged to pay zemstvo taxes. Economically, Jews were deprived of an important source of livelihood when the government forbade them to acquire property outside towns or large villages (1882), forcing them into the cities, and again (1894) when the state declared a monopoly on the sale of spirits, refusing Jews licences to sell spirits (see *Propination). The desperate economic position of Jews in the Pale was reflected in the fact that 30 percent had to be supported by philanthropic relief. In essence, the Jews never achieved or were never granted emancipation under tsarist Russian rule.

The reaction to these repressive measures and activities was a dramatic increase in Jewish emigration to North America, increased support for the *Zionist movement (the largest Jewish political movement by 1917), and active participation in all-Russian revolutionary or Jewish socialist political parties. Among the latter were the *Bund and the smaller Jewish Socialist Labor Party, Zionist Socialist Labor Party, and Poale Zion.

During the First World War more than 500,000 Jews were deported from the military zones, and as the Russian army defeats increased, so the position of the Jews deteriorated. They were accused of being spies and traitors and of undermining the regime.

In Austria-Hungary, Jews did not receive rights equal to those of the general population until 1868. Until then, their rights were limited by the Josephine patents, which sought to assimilate Jews and to involve them in agriculture. When Galicia (1772) and Bukovyna (1774) were incorporated into the Austro-Hungarian Empire, most Jews in Galicia were concentrated in the eastern part of this crown land. They made up about 11 percent of the population of Galicia both in 1869 (575,433) and in 1900 (811,183). Sixty percent of Jews were engaged in trade and commerce in an area where 75 percent of the population (and 94 percent of Ukrainians) earned its livelihood from agriculture and forestry. Jews formed an absolute majority in many important trading centers, such as *Brody on the Russian border. Jews figured prominently as officials attached to the estates (stewards, overseers, labor recruiters); as storekeepers, leaseholders of Polish estates, and tavernkeepers; as officials in local government; and in the working class (as workers in the oil industry centered in the *Drohobych-Boryslav Industrial Region).

Only about 60 percent of eastern Galicia's Jews lived in cities and towns. Jews in rural areas represented a sizable portion of Galicia's Jewish population, and they were an anomaly in comparison to Jewish demographic patterns elsewhere. Both in terms of their numbers and because of their precarious position as middlemen between lord and peasant, rural Jews were often the scapegoats for dissatisfaction and resentment. Many among the non-Jewish population shared a hostile view of Jews as exploiters and servants of the Polish nobility and landowners, even though the vast majority of Jews lived in poverty, like their Ukrainian neighbors. In contrast to conditions in the Russian Empire, however, there were no pogroms; rather, the social and economic character of this antagonism was expressed in political and economic competition. As a vulnerable minority, Jews in Galicia usually voted with the ruling Polish nation, and throughout the second half of the 19th century Poles and Jews worked closely during the elections to parliament. After universal male suffrage was proclaimed in 1907, some Jews (especially supporters of the Zionist movement) allied themselves with Ukrainian political parties.

The collapse of tsarism in March 1917 soon brought emancipation for the Jews in the Russian Empire. On 20 March the Provisional Government declared that Jews were now equal citizens; they were not, however, granted national minority status or autonomy.

In Ukraine, the *Central Rada established in March 1917 decided in late July to invite the minority nationalities (Russians, Poles, and Jews) to join its ranks. As a result, 50 Jews, from all the major parties, joined the Central Rada and 5 joined the Little Rada. The Jewish parties were also represented in the *General Secretariat (later the *Council of National Ministers of the UNR). M. Rafes, a Bundist, took on the post of general controller. Within the secretariat of nationalities, departments were set up for each minority and M. Silberfarb, of the United Jewish Socialist Workers' party, was appointed undersecretary for Jewish affairs. He became general secretary for Jewish affairs, with ministerial ranking, on the formation of the UNR (20 November 1917), and then minister for Jewish affairs when the proclamation of Ukrainian independence was issued (25 January 1918). Responsibility for Jewish affairs under the Central Rada thus passed from a department (undersecretariat) to a secretariat and then to a ministry. An advisory council representing the main Jewish parties was formed on 10 October 1917 and the Provisional National Council of the Jews of Ukraine convened in November 1918. Yiddish was one of the languages used by the Central Rada on its official currency and in proclamations, and the law on *national-personal autonomy gave non-Ukrainian nationalities the right to manage their national life independently. However, during the regime of Hetman P. Skoropadsky (see *Hetman government), this law was rescinded (9 July 1918) and the Ministry of Jewish Affairs abolished.

Under the *Directory, the Ministry of Jewish Affairs (headed at first by A. Revutsky) was re-established, and the law on national-personal autonomy was re-enacted. From April 1919, as the Directory was forced to move constantly westwards, the minister of Jewish affairs was P. Krasny. Other Jews who occupied prominent positions in the Central Rada or Directory governments were S. *Goldelman, a deputy minister of trade and industry and of labor, and A. *Margolin, a member of the Ukrainian Party of Socialists-Federalists who was deputy minister of foreign affairs and a diplomatic representative in London and at the Paris Peace talks. Several prominent Zionists also supported Ukrainian autonomy, including V. *Zhabotinsky, D. Pasmanik, and J. Schechtman.

The Central Rada government was the first in history to grant Jews autonomy (see *National minorities), and its relationship with Jewish political parties was generally amicable. All Jewish parties in the Central Rada voted for the creation of the UNR and, because they were categorically opposed to the Bolsheviks, saw the Republic as the only remaining parliamentary democracy. The subsequent declaration of independence, however, was opposed by the Bund, and the other Jewish parties, including the Zionists, abstained from voting. In general, the mainstream Jewish public did not respond positively to the Central Rada and Jews preferred a united all-Russian government to better represent the interests of the Jewish minority. Neither was there full confidence in the Ukrainian government's ability or willingness to halt the spread of pogroms in Ukraine and to organize a strong military presence.

The scale of the pogroms during the revolution in Ukraine was devastating for the Jewish population. The Whites (see A. *Denikin), peasant bands, otamans, and some units of the UNR Army, having regarded Jews as pro-Bolshevik, all took part in these atrocities, as did the anarchists (see N. *Makhno) and the Red Army. However, just before the formation of the Directory, elections to the Jewish communal councils indicated that of the 270,497 votes cast, 66 percent were for non-socialist parties (Orthodox and Zionist), while 34 percent voted for socialist party representatives.

The government and high command of the UNR Army tried to combat the instigators of the pogroms. Orders were issued imposing courts-martial for pogromists and some executions were carried out. The government assisted pogrom survivors and co-operated with both the Jewish community and foreign representatives in investigations of the pogroms.

In Galicia, Jews were neutral in the Polish-Ukrainian conflict but later supported the *Western Ukrainian National Republic government. They were granted equality and national rights, including permission to create their own police units. Some Jews served in the ranks of the Ukrainian Galician Army (see *Jewish Battalion).

The consolidation of Bolshevik rule brought the Jewish community both hardships and opportunities. Under *War Communism (1918–21), when free commerce was banned and private businesses nationalized, Jews suffered great economic setbacks. Moreover, the Bolsheviks seemed determined to destroy the last vestiges of organized Jewish life. In April 1919 they abolished most community organizations. As part of their general antireligious campaign they also closed down many synagogues and outlawed religious and Hebrew education. In Ukraine the Bolsheviks pursued a vigorous anti-Yiddish policy aimed at assimilating Jews; eg, the number of Yiddish books published declined from 274 in 1919 to 40 in 1923.

At the same time, formal and informal restrictions against Jewish participation in government and administration were abolished, especially for those who chose the path of assimilation. Special Jewish sections (the so-called yevsektzii) were formed within the Party to facilitate Jewish participation, and it was often these groups that most strongly attacked the Zionist and traditional Jewish parties. Individual Jews benefited from the pro-Russian and pro-urban orientation of the Party, and many became part of the system, especially in education, the economy, and the middle echelons of the Party administration and government. Although only one-half of 1 percent of the total Jewish population joined the Bolshevik party, they constituted a large percentage of all Bolsheviks in Ukraine, in 1922 approx 13.6 percent of the ЦР(Б)У. Fully 15.5 percent of the delegates to the 5th and 7th all-Ukrainian Congress of Soviets in 1921 and 1922 were of Jewish origin.

In an effort to consolidate the regime and broaden its support among the non-Russian nations, the Bolsheviks instituted a number of important changes in 1923. As a solution to the 'nationalities problem' the policy of *indigenization was adopted. This policy encouraged the use of national languages and the recruitment of non-Russians into the Party, education, and the government. It is difficult to judge what effect the Ukrainian version of indigenization, *Ukrainization, had on Ukraine's Jewish population. Since only 0.9 percent of all Ukrainian Jews (in 1926) declared their mother tongue to be Ukrainian, the introduction of Ukrainian as the official language certainly limited their opportunities in the Party, government, and scholarship. Moreover, the active recruitment of Ukrainians meant that the Jewish proportion would decline in these sectors. In 1923 Jews constituted 47.4 percent of students at higher educational institutions, but in 1929, only 23.3 percent, and their percentage in the CP(B)U fell from 13.6 in 1923 to 11.2 in 1926. Yet, in a speech to the 15th Congress of the Russian CP(B) in December 1927, S. Ordzhonikidze, the head of the Central Control Commission of the Party, reported that Jews still constituted 22.6 percent of the governmental machinery in Ukraine and 30.3 percent in the city of Kiev. The first secretary of the CC CP(B)U from 1925 to 1926, L. *Kaganovich, was of Jewish descent. In the end, Ukrainization was only a partial success, and it was finally abandoned in 1933 in favor of strict *Russification.

Indigenization brought obvious benefits to the Jews as well. Jewish culture flourished in Ukraine, and several Yiddish theaters, institutes, periodical publications, and schools were established. Soviets in which the official language was Yiddish were established to administer the Jewish population: there were 117 such Soviets in 1926 and 156 by 1931. Moreover, Yiddish-language courts were set up, and the government offered a variety of services in Yiddish.

The *New Economic Policy (NEP), which was introduced in 1921 to allow for some measure of private capitalist activity, was another significant development for the Jewish community. Many Jewish artisans re-established their private shops and at least 13 percent of all Ukrainian Jews became involved in commerce (1926). According to the census of 1926, fully 78.5 percent of all private factories in Ukraine under NEP were Jewish owned. This situation was short-lived. In the second half of the 1920s the Soviet authorities increasingly cut back on private capitalism, and NEP was for all practical purposes stopped by 1930.

In the 1920s the Soviet regime placed a major emphasis on changing the traditional social and economic structure of Jewish life, primarily by encouraging Jews to become engaged in agriculture. Jewish agricultural colonies had existed in Ukraine, especially Southern Ukraine, from the late 18th century. In 1924 the Soviet government set up two official bodies to promote Jewish rural settlement; they were assisted by the American Jewish Joint Distribution Committee, which provided funds and machinery. From 69,000 in 1926, the number of Jewish farmers in the Ukrainian SSR increased to 172,000 in 1931; of these, 37,000 lived on colonies established under Soviet rule. One of the goals of some Jewish community leaders was the establishment of a Jewish territorial unit – an *autonomous oblast or even *autonomous soviet socialist republic – on Ukrainian territory. As a first step, three Jewish raions were established: Kalinindorf (in Kherson okruha), founded in 1927; Novozlatopil (Zaporizhia okruha), in 1929; and Stalindorf (Kryvyi Rih okruha), in 1930. Eventually this plan was abandoned, at least partly because of the opposition of Ukrainian government leaders who feared the truncation of their republic; instead, in 1934 the Birobidzhan Jewish Autonomous oblast was established in the Far East. In the second half of the 1930s, most Jews left these agricultural colonies, either for Birobidzhan or for the cities.

The end of indigenization brought an end to the renaissance of organized Jewish life in the USSR. The Yiddish-language governmental institutions, the yevseksii, the Yiddish writers' organizations, and many major cultural and scholarly institutions (eg, the *Institute of Jewish Culture in Kiev) were closed down, and the formal support given by the regime to Jewish developments was replaced by a growing official anti-Semitism. Many Jewish activists fell victims to the Stalinist terror of the 1930s.

In Western Ukraine during the interwar period strong economic competition from Ukrainian co-operatives and from private commercial and industrial firms eroded the economic base of Jewish life in Poland, Czechoslovakia, and Rumania. The Polish government, and such Polish anti-Semitic groups as Rozwój, initiated anti-Jewish measures and activities. Despite the perception of economic antagonism between Jews and Ukrainians, there was some political co-operation: eg, in the 1922 and 1928 elections to the Polish Parliament, when Ukrainian and Jewish parties joined the coalition Bloc of National Minorities, and in the elections to the Czechoslovak and Rumanian parliaments. Repressive Polish measures against Ukrainians and the co-operation of some Jewish leaders with the Polish government led to resentment of the Jews.

The first Soviet occupation of Western Ukraine (1939–41) followed the pattern already established in the USSR. On the one hand, Jewish national and cultural rights were limited, traditional institutions were abolished, and the economy was restructured and nationalized, bringing great hardships to artisans and merchants. On the other, individual Jews were given better opportunities as the official quotas, limiting their access to education and the professions, were abolished. Overall, many Jews welcomed the Soviet occupation, as it brought an end to the official anti-Semitism of the Polish regime and staved off the threat of Nazi occupation.

The German occupation of Ukraine during the Second World War – and, indeed, the entire war period – was a tragedy for Ukrainian Jews. Within the enlarged 1941 boundaries of the Soviet Union, 2.5 of the 4.8 million Jews were killed. In Western Ukraine only 2 percent (17,000) of the entire Jewish population survived. The destruction of Jews began in fall 1941, initially in central Ukraine and then in Western Ukraine. In Kiev alone, 35,000–70,000 Jews were murdered at *Babyn Yar. Mass murder of Jews was carried out throughout Ukraine in 1942–4. Apart from the involvement of individuals and some organized auxiliary units, the Ukrainian population did not take part in these genocidal actions. Despite the penalty of death for aiding Jews, a number of Ukrainians, among them Metropolitan A. *Sheptytsky, tried to save Jews.

The Jewish population suffered severe discrimination in the postwar years. The crackdown on Jewish community life intensified as the teaching of Hebrew was prohibited, the Yiddish theater was abolished, Yiddish publications were suspended, hundreds of Jewish leaders were arrested (1948), and Yiddish writers were imprisoned. Twenty-four of the more prominent leaders and writers in the USSR were executed after a secret trial in August 1952. In 1953 Stalin's persecutions came to a head with the so-called doctors' plot, in which nine doctors, six of them Jewish, were accused of conspiring with Western powers to poison Soviet leaders. Thousands of Jews were removed from official posts, particularly from the armed forces and security services, and their role in the Party was reduced. In higher educational institutions quotas were imposed on the numbers of Jewish students admitted.

After Stalin's death the situation for individual Jews improved somewhat, but the assimilatory campaign and repression of Jewish culture and religion continued. Anti-Semitism in the guise of 'anti-Zionism' became, and continues to be, part of Soviet internal and foreign policy. Soviet Ukrainian educational institutions are also used in this campaign; for example, the AN URSR in 1963 published T. Kichko's anti-Semitic pamphlet, Judaism without Embellishment. Only about 60 synagogues have survived into the 1980s in the USSR, and, of these, more than half are in the Georgian Republic.

After the 1967 Six-Day War in the Middle East and the emergence of the *dissident movement in the Soviet Union, a strong Jewish emigration movement arose. In the 1970s there was a massive emigration of Jews from Ukraine to the West, including *Israel and North America. Between 1970 and 1980, 250,000 Soviet citizens emigrated on Israeli visas. By 1980 severe restrictions were placed on Jewish emigration; it is estimated that in 1981 alone, approx 40,000 were refused permission to emigrate.

Ukrainian dissidents, including I. Dziuba, S. Karavansky, Ye. Sverstiuk, V. Chornovil, L. Pliushch, and P. Grigorenko, have worked with Jewish activists (eg. E. Kuznetsov, A. Shifrin, A. Radygin, and Y. Zigels) in advocating Jewish-Ukrainian co-operation. Ukrains'kyi visnyk, the Ukrainian *samvydav journal, continuously reported on the persecution of Jewish activists.

In 1979 Ukrainian Jewish émigrés in Israel formed the Public Committee for Jewish-Ukrainian Cooperation, which in 1981 became the Society of Jewish-Ukrainian Relations, headed by Ya. Suslensky. Even earlier, in the 1950s, a commission of Jewish-Ukrainian affairs was established at the Ukrainian Academy of Arts and Sciences in New York, and in 1953 the Association to Perpetuate the Memory of Ukrainian Jews was formed in New York, headed by M. Osherovych.

Demography. At the end of the 19th century there were approx 3 million Jews living in ethnographic Ukrainian territories (see table 1). Ukraine at that time had the highest concentration of Jews in the world, with some 30 percent of the total world population of Jewry (1.3 million Jews lived in Poland and 1.2 million in Lithuania and Belorussia). In the eight Ukrainian gubernias of Russian-ruled Ukraine in 1897, 43.3 percent of all Jews worked in commerce, 32.2 in crafts and industry, 7.3 in private services, 5.8 in public services (including the liberal professions), 3.7 in communication, 2.9 in agriculture, and 4.8 in no permanent occupation.

TABLE 1
Jews in Ukraine, 1897 and 1900

Region	No. in 1,000s	% of total population
Russian Empire (1897)	2,245	7.4
Austria-Hungary (1900)	730	13.0
Galicia	610	12.8
Transcarpathia	55	11.2
Bukovyna	65	15.6
Total (1897)	2,950	8.3
Within the current boundaries of the Ukrainian SSR	2,680	9.3

TABLE 2
Jews in Ukraine, 1926-33

Region	No. in 1,000s	% of total population
Ukrainian SSR (1926)	1,580	5.4
Poland (1931)	932 <sup>1</sup>	10.1
Rumania (1930)	129 <sup>2</sup>	10.4
Czechoslovakia (1930)	89	12.1
All Ukrainian ethnographic territories (1933)	2,980	5.5
Ukrainian SSR within current borders	2,720	6.5

1 In Galicia 556,000 (10.3 percent), in Volhynia and Polisia 307,000 (10.3), and in the Kholm and Podlachia regions 69,000 (9.2)
2 In Bukovyna 55,000 (11.9) and in Bessarabia 68,000 (9.1)

Almost 60 percent of Ukrainian Jews lived in cities and constituted one-third of the urban population of the country (see *Cities and towns). Because of their confinement to the Pale, the Dnieper River served as a major demographic demarcation line. In Western and Right-Bank Ukraine, Jews made up 10-15 percent of the population, but in Left-Bank Ukraine, only 4-6 percent. In most cities of Western and Right-Bank Ukraine they constituted a relative majority (40 percent on average), while they formed an absolute majority in such cities as Berdychiv (78 percent), Uman (58 percent), and Bila Tserkva (53 percent).

The First World War and the subsequent upheavals of 1917-21 in the central and western lands led to a significant decrease in the Jewish population as a result of casualties and a sizable emigration. The abolition of the Pale of Settlement enabled Jews to move to other parts of the old Russian Empire as well as to eastern Ukraine and the Kuban region. As a result, the Jewish population in Ukrainian territories decreased from 8.3 percent of the total population in 1897 to 5.5 percent in 1926. (Jewish population distribution is given in table 2.)

Overall, the greatest percentage decreases occurred in Right-Bank Ukraine, while the greatest increases occurred in Slobidska Ukraine (particularly in Kharkiv). The distribution of Jewish population by geographic region for 1897 and 1926 is given in table 3.

Demographic data for the Ukrainian SSR in 1926 illustrate the high rates of Jewish urbanization: 26 percent of the total Jewish population lived in villages, 51.6 percent lived in cities of 100,000 or less, and 22.2 percent lived in cities with a population of more than 100,000. Moreover, the concentration of Jews in medium- and large-sized cities, a process that began in the 19th century, continued. Between 1897 and 1926, the number of Jews decreased by 33 percent in villages and by 22 percent in towns of less than 20,000; meanwhile, their number increased by 7 percent in cities of 20,000 to 100,000 and by 106 percent in cities of over 100,000. In 1897, 27.4 percent of Ukraine's urban population was Jewish; in 1926, 22.8 percent.

The cities with the largest populations of Jews in 1926 (1897 figures in parentheses) were Odessa, 154,000 or 36.5 percent of the total population (140,000, 34.8 percent); Kiev, 140,500 or 27.3 percent (31,800, 12.8); Kharkiv, 81,500 or 19.5 percent (11,000, 6.3); and Dnipropetrovske, 62,000 or 26.7 percent (40,000, 35.5). In 1931 Lviv's Jewish population numbered 98,000 or 31.9 percent (in 1900 the respective figures were 44,300 or 26.5), and in Chernivtsi, 42,600 or 37.9 percent (21,600 or 32.8 percent). Before the First World War, Odessa had the third-largest Jewish population in the world after New York and Warsaw. According to the 1926 Soviet Ukrainian census, the distribution of the Jews by occupation was as follows: 20.6 percent in arts and crafts, 20.6 in public services (administrative work), 15.3 workers, 13.3 in commerce, 9.2 in agriculture, 1.6 in liberal professions, 8.9 unemployed, 7.3 of no profession; the rest were classified in a miscellaneous category. The proportion of Jews in economic administration was 40.6 percent, and in medical-sanitary administration, 31.9 percent.

The use, and even the knowledge, of Yiddish began

TABLE 3
Distribution of Jews by geographic region

Region	1897		1926		% in cities/villages
	in 1000s	%	in 1000s	%
Western Ukraine	1,120	13.1	1,020	10.3	38.0/4.6
Central Ukraine	1,475	13.5	1,210	8.4	31.6/3.2
Left-Bank Ukraine	330	4.6	360	3.2	18.8/0.5
Slobidska region and Donbas	25	0.5	140	1.6	7.4/0.1
The Caucasus	-	-	10	0.2	0.9/ -
All ethnographic Ukrainian territories	2,950	8.3	2,740	5.5	21.5/1.8

to decline sharply in the 20th century, particularly in larger cities: in 1926 only 76 percent of Jews in the Ukrainian SSR claimed Yiddish as their mother tongue (70 percent of the urban and 95 percent of the rural population), while 23 percent listed Russian and barely 1 percent listed Ukrainian. The extent of Russification is evidenced by the fact that only 16 percent had no written knowledge of Russian and as many as 31 percent had no written knowledge of Yiddish (78 percent could not write in Ukrainian).

On the eve of the Second World War there were about 3 million Jews in Ukrainian lands; they constituted 20 percent of the total world Jewish population and 60 percent of the Jewish population of the USSR. During the war the Germans murdered most of the Jews in the territories they occupied. The only ones who survived were those who had been saved by Ukrainians at the risk of their own lives or were evacuated to the eastern reaches of the USSR before the German advance, and some in Transcarpathia, Bessarabia, and Bukovyna, where there was no direct German occupation, and where the deportation and extermination of the Jewish population was not as complete.

TABLE 4
Jews in Ukraine, 1959 and 1970, in 1,000s

	1959	1970
City of Kiev	154	152
Odessa oblast	121	117
Kharkiv oblast	84	76
Dnipropetrovske oblast	73	69
Vinnitsia oblast	50	42
Donetske oblast	43	40
Chernivtsi oblast	42	37
Zhytomyr oblast	42	36
Lviv oblast	30	28
Crimean oblast	26	26

Since the Second World War the Jewish population in the Ukrainian SSR has declined steadily. In the 20 years from 1959 to 1979 it decreased by 24.5 percent, from 840,000 in 1959 to 777,000 in 1970 (which constituted 1.65 percent of the population of Ukraine, and 36.1 percent of the total Soviet Jewish population) and 634,000 in 1979. This decline has been caused by low birth rates, the rise in intermarriages, and, since 1971, mass emigration. Table 4 shows the present distribution of Jews in Kiev and in oblasts in which they number more than 20,000. Jews now live almost exclusively in provincial centers and in larger cities. They are virtually absent in towns and villages.

Cultural life. From the very beginning of mass Jewish settlement in Ukraine, Jewish cultural and religious life was highly developed. The impressive stone synagogues throughout Ukraine serve as interesting historical monuments to Jewish material culture. The more notable ones, such as those in Volhynia (in Dubno, Lutske, and Liubomyl), date back to the 16th–18th centuries. The Cossack uprisings of the 17th century, the destruction wrought by the *Cossack-Polish War of 1648–57, and the general social and economic dislocations of the era initiated a period of great change for the Jewish population of Ukraine. Many Jewish scholars fled to the West, where they founded Talmudic centers in Holland, Germany, and Bohemia. Religious disillusionment spread and many Jews sought solace in a variety of ascetic or mystical movements. *Hasidism, which was founded in Ukraine by Israel Ba'al Shem Tov, became the dominant religious trend in Western Ukraine. In the late 18th century the Haskalah or Enlightenment movement, inspired by Moses Mendelssohn, emerged. Adherents of this movement sought a synthesis of Jewish religious tradition with the demands of modern life. The Enlightenment movement later fostered the spread of Zionism, which had many adherents in Ukraine.

The rebirth of Hebrew and its application to modern life also originated with Jews from Ukraine. Ahad Ha-Am (1856–1927), who was born in the Kiev region, is considered the founder of 'cultural' or 'Spiritual' Zionism. Also of Ukrainian origin are the famous Hebrew lyric poet Hayyim Nahman Bialik (1873–1934) and the poet Saul Tchernichowsky (1875–1943). The brilliant tradition of Yiddish culture in the 16th–18th centuries was continued in Ukraine by Shalom Aleichem (Rabinovitz, 1859–1916), who profoundly influenced an entire generation of Jewish writers. After 1920 Chernivtsi became an important center of Jewish culture.

Synagogue in Chernivtsi

The Jewish press developed rapidly from the mid-19th century. The first serials, published in Russian and Yiddish, appeared in Odessa; they included Rassvet (1860) and Zion (1861). In the early 20th century in Galicia, the Jewish daily Chvila and a number of other periodicals were established in Lviv.

In the Ukrainian SSR during the period 1923–34, Jews benefited from the granting of national rights and freedom for cultural development. Yiddish was recognized as an official language and used in administrative matters in Jewish soviets. Many Jewish periodicals were established; eg, Stern, the official organ of the CC CPU and the All-Ukrainian Council of Trade Unions. All laws and government directives were also published in Yiddish. In the Ukrainian SSR in 1925 there were 393 trade and technical schools in which the language of instruction was Yiddish, attended by 61,400 students or one-third of the total Jewish student population. There were four Jewish pedagogical institutes and separate departments in the Institute of People's Education in Odessa. In 1928, 69,000 students attended 475 Jewish schools, and by 1931 there were 831 schools and 94,000 students. The closing of Jewish schools began in 1933-4, at the same time as the abolition of Ukrainization. By the start of the Second World War, the Jewish educational system had, for all practical purposes, been abolished.

The higher academic institutions devoted to the study of Jewish culture included the VUAN Hebraic Historical-Archeographic Commission and Chair of Jewish Culture, which became the Institute of Jewish Culture in 1929. The All-Ukrainian Mendele Mokher Seforim Museum of Jewish culture was established in Odessa, while the Central Jewish Library was located in Kiev.

Jewish theaters, which had been prominent in the theatrical and artistic life of prerevolutionary Ukraine, continued to exist under Soviet rule. In 1922 permanent Jewish theaters were organized in Kiev and Odessa, and a Jewish department of the Kiev Institute of Theater Arts was established in 1934. Many Jewish poets and writers became active in the 1920s, publishing in Yiddish, including L. Kvitko, I. Fefer, D. Feldman, D. Nister, Kh. Hildin, and A. Reizin. Their works were translated into Ukrainian by P. Tychyna, M. Rylsky, and others. Jewish cultural activists were subjected to the same wave of repressions in the 1930s as were directed at Ukrainians and many Jewish institutions were closed by the authorities. After the Second World War all expressions of Jewish culture were stifled in Ukraine. From 1950 to 1952 a number of Jewish writers and cultural activists were murdered by the NKVD, among them D. Bergelson, D. Hofstein, P. Markish, I. Fefer, L. Kvitko, P. Kaganovich-Nistor, and A. Kushnirov.

Ukrainian themes are found in the works of Jewish writers active in Ukraine, such as M. Mokher Seforim (1836-1917), Shalom Aleichem, Sh. Frug, Sh. Asch, and B. Horowitz, and among those active in the diaspora, such as H.N. Bialik, Sh. Bikel, and R. Korn.

A number of Jewish writers became part of the general Ukrainian literary process: the poets L. Pervomaisky, S. Holovanivsky, I. Kulyk, A. Katsnelson; the prose writers N. Rybak, L. Smiliansky; the dramatist L. Yukhvid; the literary historians and critics Ye. Aizenshtok, A. Leites, S. Shchupak, I. Stebun (Katsnelson), O. Borshchahivsky, Ye. Adelheim, and A. Hozenpud. Also active in Ukrainian circles were the historians Y. Hermaize and S. Borovoi and the linguist O. Kurylo. Many of the above were repressed during the purges in the 1930s. In the 1970s and 1980s, the poets L. Kyselov and M. Fishbein (the latter emigrated to the West in 1979) also wrote in Ukrainian.

Two of the more prominent translators of Ukrainian poetry were D. Hofstein, who published translations of Shevchenko's poetry in 1937, and A. Klein, who published a collection of translations of Ukrainian folk works in Kolomyia, in 1936. An important role in the popularization of Ukrainian literature was played by Ya. Orenstein, the founder and owner of Ukrainska Nakladnia, a publishing house based in Kolomyia and Berlin. It was established in 1903 and in the next 30 years published hundreds of Ukrainian titles.

An interesting development was the attempt made by Jewish émigrés to establish a Ukrainian theater in the United States. In Philadelphia, I. Ginzberg led a Jewish-Ukrainian acting company in 1910-12, I. Elgard (Izydor Elgardiv) led a touring theater group in 1916-17, and D. Medovy led his own Jewish-Ukrainian theatrical company in 1917-28. All of them staged Ukrainian plays and helped popularize them.

The unique nature of Jewish-Ukrainian relations is reflected in the Ukrainian oral tradition. The popular song of the traditional spring cycle Íde íde Zel'man hearkens back to the days when Jews held leases on Ukrainian churches. Motifs on Jewish privileges appeared frequently in the *dumas. One of the so-called younger dumas is called Zhydivski utysky (Jewish Oppressions). In various **vertep* dramas and *intermedes the sympathetic and comic figure of the Jew appears with the Zaporozhian cossack, the noble, and the Gypsy. Among the many Ukrainian authors who have portrayed Jews have been T. Shevchenko, I. Franko, S. Rudansky, Ya. Shchokoliv, T. Borduliak, M. Levytsky, M. Kotsiubynsky, V. Vynnychenko, O. Oles, A. Liubchenko, L. Pervomaisky, M. Khvylovy, B. Antonenko-Davydovych, Ya. Hrymailo, and Yu. Smolych.

Today the role of Jews in Ukraine has significantly decreased, although they remain the second largest minority after the Russians. (See also *Anti-Semitism.)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Dubnow, S. History of the Jews in Russia and Poland from the Earliest Times until the Present Day, 3 vols (Philadelphia 1916-20)
- Mytsiuk, O. Agraryzatsiia zhydivstva Ukrainy na tli zahal'noi ekonomiky (Prague 1933)
- Levitas, I. The Jewish Community in Russia, 1772-1844 (New York 1943)
- Greenberg, L. The Jews in Russia: The Struggle for Emancipation, 2 vols (New Haven 1944, 1951)
- Baron, S. A Social and Religious History of the Jews, 2nd rev edn, 17 vols (New York 1952-78)
- The Russian Jew under Tsars and Soviets (New York 1964)
- Ukrainians and Jews: A Symposium* (New York 1966)
- Goldelman, S. Jewish National Autonomy in Ukraine 1917-1920 (Chicago 1968)
- Kochan, L. (ed). The Jews in Soviet Russia since 1917 (New York 1970)
- Gitelman, Z. Jewish Nationality and Soviet Politics: The Jewish Section of the CPSU (Princeton 1972)
- Weinryb, B.D. 'The Hebrew Chronicles on Bohdan Khmel'nyts'kyi and the Cossack-Polish War,' HUS, vol 1, no. 2 (June 1977)
- Frankel, J. Prophecy and Politics: Socialism, Nationalism, and the Russian Jews, 1862-1917 (New York 1981)
- Levitats, I. The Jewish Community in Russia, 1844-1917 (Jerusalem 1981)
- Redlich, S. 'Jews,' in Guide to the Study of the Soviet Nationalities: Non-Russian Peoples of the USSR, ed by S. Horak (Littleton, Colo 1982)
- Mendelsohn, E. The Jews of East Central Europe between the World Wars (Bloomington, Ind 1983)
- Pinkus, B. The Soviet Government and the Jews, 1918-1967: A Documented Study (Cambridge 1984)
- Goldberg, J. Jewish Privileges in the Polish Commonwealth (London 1985)
- Aster, H.; Potichnyj, P. (eds). Jewish-Ukrainian Relations in Historical Perspective (Edmonton 1987)
- V. Kubijovyč, V. Markus

Jimson weed (Datura stramonium; Ukrainian: durman). A poisonous annual weed of the potato family (Solanaceae), 1-2 m in height, with white or pale violet trumpet-shaped flowers and a round, spiny fruit. It grows throughout Ukraine. Its toxicity is due to atropine and other alkaloids. Jimson weed leaves are used medicinally as a sedative. Some varieties of the plant are used decoratively.

Jireček, Josef, b 9 October 1825 in Vysoké Mýto, Bohemia, d 25 November 1888 in Prague. Czech historian, philologist, and political figure. Jireček coedited or wrote several school textbooks for the various nationalities of the Austrian Empire. In 1859 he was appointed by the Austrian Ministry of Education to design a system for the Latin transcription of Ukrainian (see *Alphabet war). His proposal was published as Über den Vorschlag das Ruthenische mit lateinischen Schriftzeichen zu schreiben (1859). Although it was approved by the government and A. Gołuchowski, the governor general of Galicia, it was resisted by Galician Ukrainians as a form of Polonization and was never generally adopted. The materials on the Alphabet war were published in Die ruthenische Sprach- und Schriftfrage in Galizien (1861).

Joachim V. Patriarch of Antioch ca 1581–92. He was commissioned by the Constantinople Patriarch, Jeremiah II, to report on the status of the Kievan metropoly. In 1586 he visited Lviv and confirmed the new statute of the Lviv Dormition Brotherhood on behalf of Jeremiah granting the right of *stauropegion (direct subordination to a patriarch instead of a local bishop). This statute became the model for other Ukrainian brotherhoods.

John XXIII, Pope (secular name: Angelo Roncalli), b 25 November 1881 in Sotto il Monte, Italy, d 3 June 1963 in Rome. As pope his greatest achievement was the calling of the Second Vatican Council, which opened in 1962 and closed after his death. The most important of his seven encyclicals were Mater et Magistra (1961) and Pacem in terris (1963). Through secret diplomacy John secured in 1963 the release from Siberia of Metropolitan Y. *Slipy, whom in 1960 he had designated cardinal in pectore. Furthermore he appointed Rev A. Velyky secretary of the Preparatory Commission for the Oriental Churches, and then of the Vatican Council Commission for the Oriental Churches. In April 1963 John raised the Ukrainian Lesser Seminary in Rome to the status of a pontifical college.

John-Paul II (secular name: Karol Wojtyła), b 18 May 1920 in Wadowice, Poland. The first Slav pope, elected in October 1978. He is one of the first popes to speak openly about human rights violations in Communist countries and to defend the existence of the Catholic church, including the Ukrainian, in the USSR. Fluent in Ukrainian, during his frequent trips he has met many Ukrainian faithful, to whom he has issued addresses emphasizing the importance of maintaining rites, traditions, and national culture. In March 1979 he addressed an important letter to Cardinal Y. Slipy inaugurating the jubilee of the Millennium of the Baptism of Rus'-Ukraine. This letter drew a formal protest from the Moscow Patriarchate. In December 1979, along with Y. Slipy, he consecrated Rev M. Liubachivsky as archbishop. John-Paul II has recognized the legitimacy of regular and electoral synods of Ukrainian Catholic bishops. In 1980 he appointed M. Liubachivsky archbishop and co-adjutor of Lviv eparchy with the right of succession to Y. Slipy; Liubachivsky had been nominated by an extraordinary synod of Ukrainian bishops. In 1980 John-Paul II named a Ukrainian, Archbishop M. Marusyn, as secretary of the *Congregation of Eastern Churches, and in 1985 he elevated Liubachivsky to cardinal.

I. Khoma

Joint-stock company. A manufacturing or trading association in which the stock is divided into shares and the share owners bear a limited liability to the amount of their investment. Profits are distributed in the form of dividends proportionally to the shareholder's investment and irrespective of his function in the process of production.

In Ukraine the first joint-stock companies appeared at the end of the 18th century. By the 1860s they were quite common in the metallurgical and coal industries of the Donbas, and were financed mostly by foreign capital. Some of the more important joint-stock companies were the Cockerill-Dnieper Metallurgical Association, the Donets Company in Druzhkivka, the Central Donets Company in Almazna, and the *Prodamet and *Produgol syndicates. In 1911 joint-stock companies owned 5.3 percent of all manufacturing concerns and produced 60 percent of Ukraine's industrial output. By 1913 the shares in rail and urban transportation and other industries were worth 97 million rubles. One of the first Ukrainian joint-stock companies to appear in Western Ukraine was the *Narodna Torhovlia consumer co-operative (est 1883) in Lviv. During the NEP period the central government in Moscow used joint-stock companies as one of the means to control industry and trade in Soviet Ukraine. Thus the Radio Company created in Moscow in 1924 expanded its operations in 1925 to Kharkiv and Kiev, and then in 1927 to Dnipropetrovske, Artemivske, Staline, and Odessa. Beginning in 1928 joint-stock companies were replaced with state associations controlled by the appropriate Soviet commissariats. After the Second World War joint-stock companies, in which the Soviet Union had a controlling interest, were established in several East European countries. In the 1960s joint-stock companies with a limited participation of large Western firms began to reappear in the USSR.

L. Szuch

Jordanes or Jordanis. A 6th-century Goth historian. He was the secretary of the military leader of the Alans, Gunthigis (Baza). He is the author of the chronicle De origine actibusque Getarum (551), a basic source on the history of the *Goths, the Huns, and the tribes north of the Black Sea that contains valuable information about the ancient Slavs. The definitive edition of the work was published in Monumentae Germaniae Historica, vol 5 (1882).

Josefov. A town in Bohemia, Czechoslovakia. Between April 1921 and 1923 an internment camp for soldiers of the *Ukrainian Galician Army was located there. It was established following the liquidation of two previous internment camps in *Deutsch-Gabel and *Liberec. The internees formed a separate Ukrainian Brigade of approximately 4,000 men. They supported the Western Ukrainian National Republic (ZUNR) and filled the role of its exile army. The officers organized the Fighting Organization of Galicia, which was later transformed into the Ukrainian Military Organization Representation in Czechoslovakia, based in Prague and headed by Lt I.

*Rudnytsky. A demanding cultural-educational program was provided by members of the Cultural-Educational Committee. In 1922 the committee had 1,176 members in and outside the camp. The committee was seen as the center of all cultural and educational work for the ZUNR soldiers in Czechoslovakia.

In 1923, after Polish-Czechoslovak relations improved and the Galician question was settled internationally, the camp was gradually liquidated. Some of the internees returned to Galicia, but the majority obtained political immigrant status and remained in Czechoslovakia.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Narizhnyi, S. Ukrains'ka emigratsiia (Prague 1942)
 Motyl, A.J. The Turn to the Right: The Ideological Origins and Development of Ukrainian Nationalism 1919-1929 (Boulder, Colo 1980)

Y. Boshyk

Joseph II, b 13 March 1741 in Vienna, d 20 February 1790 in Vienna. Emperor of the Holy Roman Empire (1765-90), which he ruled together with his mother *Maria Theresa until 1780. During his rule, Austria annexed *Galicia (1772) during the first partition of Poland and acquired *Bukovyna (1774) from Turkey. Joseph concluded a formal alliance with Catherine II of Russia, forcing Austria to enter the Russo-Turkish War in 1788. An enlightened absolutist, he accelerated the reforms begun by Maria Theresa, which were aimed at strengthening the Habsburg Empire politically, economically, and militarily. Many of them benefited his Ukrainian subjects. To integrate Austria's multinational lands into a unitary state, a carefully controlled and centrally co-ordinated bureaucracy was put in charge of all branches of the administration and a police force with extensive powers was introduced. German became the official language in 1784 to facilitate the work of the central authority and to bind the empire. The Toleration Patent, which established religious equality before the law, was issued in 1781 in the belief that the loyalty of non-Catholics would thus be secured. To diminish the power of the Catholic church and raise revenue for the state, nearly 900 monasteries (including many Basilian ones) were dissolved in 1782; their properties were transformed into schools, philanthropic institutions, government buildings, army barracks, and even prisons. The priesthood was transformed into a civil service paid by the state (which dramatically improved the economic situation of the Greek Catholic clergy), bishops were deprived of much of their authority, and Greek Catholic priests received rights equal to those of the Roman clergy. *Lviv University and the *Greek Catholic Theological Seminary were opened in 1784, and the affiliated *Studium Ruthenum for Ukrainian priests was founded in 1787. Joseph's agrarian legislation of the 1780s did much to improve conditions for the Ukrainian peasantry. Among his major reforms were the limitation of corvée labor on the seigneurial estates to three days a week, the regulation of other feudal rents, and the abolition of the status of personal dependence on the seigneur (Leibeigenschaft). Joseph encouraged new agricultural methods and the colonization of Galicia by Germans. Equality before the law was promoted by the regulation of criminal procedures, the introduction of new law courts and new codes of civil law (1786), and criminal law (1787); the latter abolished torture, the death penalty, and brutal punishments. Joseph's reforms caused widespread unrest and even revolt (in the Netherlands and Hungary), and many of them were repealed even before his death. However, they did break the all-powerful position of the Polish nobility in Galicia and stimulated the rise of a Ukrainian intelligentsia.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Rosdolsky, R. Die grosse Steuer- und Agrarreform Josefs II: Ein Kapitel zur österreichischen Wirtschaftsgeschichte (Warsaw 1961)

R. Senkus

Joukovsky, Arkadii. See Zhukovsky, Arkadii.

Journal of Ukrainian Studies. A semiannual interdisciplinary journal of Ukrainian studies, published since autumn 1976 by the *Canadian Institute of Ukrainian Studies. The managing editor was R. Senkus from 1976 to 1986; M. Yurkevich succeeded him in 1986.

Journalism. See Press.

Journals. See Periodicals.

Józewski, Henryk, b 1892 in Kiev, d 23 April 1981 in Warsaw. Polish political leader. From 1914 to 1920 he was a member of the Supreme Command of the 3rd (Ukrainian) Section of the underground Polish Military Organization. During the joint Ukrainian-Polish Kiev Campaign in 1920 he served as deputy minister of the interior in S. Petliura's government. With J. Piłsudski's rise to power he returned to politics and in 1928 became voivode of Volhynia. As minister of the interior from December 1929 to June 1930, he introduced a differentiated nationalities policy that was tailored to the specific conditions in different regions. Resuming his previous post in Volhynia, Józewski tried to overcome the animosity between Poles and Ukrainians and to gain the political support of the Ukrainian community. His educational and administrative reforms favored Ukrainian participation in the cultural and political life of Volhynia. While closing down some organizations such as Plast, he permitted others to be founded. In 1930 he formed a special committee to promote understanding between the Ukrainian Orthodox and the Polish Roman Catholic churches. With the support of UNR activists, he established the *Volhynian Ukrainian Alliance. Some of its members, including P. Pevny, S. Tymoshenko, and S. Skrypnyk, won seats in the Polish Sejm and Senate and formed a separate Ukrainian parliamentary representation. Józewski failed to win the confidence of the Ukrainian population and came under attack from the local Poles and the army. In 1938 he was transferred from Volhynia to Łódź.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Chojnowski, A. Koncepcje polityki narodowościowej rządów polskich w latach 1921-1939 (Wrocław 1979)

M. Stech

Juba, Stephen [Dzjuba, Stepan], b 1 July 1914 in Winnipeg. Politician and businessman. During the 1930s he established a successful distributing firm in Winnipeg. Between 1953 and 1959 he sat in the Manitoba legislature as an independent member for Logan. From 1956 until his retirement in 1977 he was mayor of Winnipeg, the first non-Anglo and non-Celt to hold this office. Juba cultivated a populist image by living modestly and breaking with the rigid formalities of his office. He introduced Sunday sports and more liberal liquor laws, and brought the 1967 Pan-American Games to Winnipeg. In 1973 he twinned Winnipeg with Lviv. Juba was appointed to the Order of Canada in 1970.

Judaizers. A religious sect of an obscure origin and nature that arose in the late 15th century in Novgorod and Moscow principalities. According to a chronicle, the sect was founded in Novgorod by Skhariia, a Jewish merchant who arrived from Kiev with Prince Mykhailo Olelkovich in 1471 and converted two Orthodox priests to his faith. According to some scholars the sect first arose in Ukraine. Its beliefs were more closely related to Western rationalist heresies, which were known in Novgorod, than to Judaism. The Judaizers emphasized the Old Testament, celebrated Easter on the Passover, and kept the Sabbath. They rejected the church hierarchy, monasticism, icon worship, and the sacraments of Christ, and denied his divinity, the trinitarian nature of God, and the immortality of the soul. The earliest Slavonic translations of philosophical works such as the Lectures of Moses the Egyptian (Maimonidean Logic), A. Ghazali's Introduction to Philosophy, and Secreta Secretorum are attributed to adherents of the sect. The Judaizers spread to Moscow, where the sect gained adherents among the church hierarchy and protectors around the tsar's family. Having been condemned by the church, the sect was severely persecuted. Remnants of it fled to Lithuania and Poland, and their descendants were resettled by Tsar Nicholas I on Ukrainian territories along the Black Sea and in Transcaucasia. In the 18th century, Judaizing tendencies appeared among several Russian sects which were unrelated to the 15th-century Judaizers. At the beginning of the 19th century a sect of sabbath observers was discovered in Voronezh gubernia on Ukraine's northern border. In 1825 various restrictions and burdens were placed on the sect; these were not lifted until 1884.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Chyzhevsky, D. Narysy z istorii filosofii na Ukraini (Prague 1931)

Kazakova, N.; Lur'e, Ia. Antifeodal'nye ereticheskie dvizheniia na Rusi xiv–nachala xvi veka (Moscow 1955)

I. Korovytsky

Judge. See Court system.

Judicial procedure. See Civil procedure and Criminal procedure.

Judicial system. See Court system.

Juliette (stage name of Julia Sysak-Cavazzi), b 26 August 1927 in St Vital, Manitoba. Singer and entertainer of Ukrainian origin. She began to sing professionally at 13 and made her debut on CBC radio at 15. In 1954 she began to appear regularly on CBC-TV as 'Our Pet, Juliette.' Her program 'Juliette' (1956–66) was one of Canada's most popular TV shows. Later she did TV specials and hosted two CBC-TV talk shows, 'After Noon' (1969–71) and 'Juliette and Friends' (1973–5). She has recorded for RCA Camden. In 1975 she was appointed to the Order of Canada.

Juniper (Juniperus; Ukrainian: yalivets). Genus of evergreen trees and shrubs belonging to the cypress family. Nine out of about 70 species of juniper grow in Ukraine. The common juniper (J. communis) is widespread in the Carpathians, Polissia, and the northern forest-steppe belt. Its bluish cones are used to flavour foods and alcoholic beverages. Oil of juniper, which is obtained from the wood and leaves of several species, is used in cosmetics and medicines such as diuretics. The eastern red cedar (J. virginiana), savin (J. sabina), and Chinese juniper (J. chinensis) are cultivated as ornamental trees and their rot-resistant wood is used in furniture making.

Jurassic Period. See Geology of Ukraine.

Jury. See Trial by jury.

Justice of the peace. A non-professional judge who serves as an independent judicial agent in the settling of minor civil and criminal matters. This office has existed as an institution in Western Europe and England since the 14th century. In the Russian Empire, justices of the peace were introduced after the judicial reforms of 1864. Local county or city assemblies, consisting of citizens who owned property or were educated, elected the justices to three-year terms, subject to Senate ratification. In Right-Bank Ukrainian gubernias (Kiev, Volhynia, and Podilia), justices of the peace were appointed by the minister of justice. An act of 1899 abolished the office, except in large cities (Kharkiv and Odessa). In 1912 the office was re-established, and justices remained active until the 1917 Revolution.

Jute-hemp industry. A branch of the textile industry that processes hemp and jute fibers to make sacks, rope, twine, cordage, and other goods. Until the 20th century hemp processing was mostly a cottage industry and was confined to the hemp-growing regions, particularly the Chernihiv region. Yet in the late 17th and early 18th centuries hemp was the second-greatest export of Left-Bank Ukraine. Despite the crippling effect of Petrine mercantilist policies on the hemp trade, hemp processing remained one of the most important sectors in an industrially underdeveloped Ukraine. In the 19th century the industry expanded rapidly in southern Ukraine. It was close to sources of raw materials (the hemp-growing steppes and jute-exporting India), and to markets such as the Black Sea ports. In 1828 there were three privately owned rope factories in Odessa. At the end of the century the two largest jute-hemp enterprises in Ukraine were the *Odessa Jute Factory, which manufactured jute products and paper and employed 1,100 workers, and the Kharkiv Plant of Sack and Cord Products, which processed only jute and employed 300 workers. The former accounted for 70 percent, and the latter for 20 percent, of the jute production in Russian-ruled Ukraine. In 1913, 105,000 ha of land were devoted to hemp. Ukraine's output of jute and hemp products was worth 14.3 million rubles (in 1925–7 prices) and constituted 20 percent of the empire's output. In Austrian-ruled Ukraine 22,000 ha of land was devoted to hemp in 1913; however, there was almost no jute-hemp industry in Western Ukraine because of competition from Polish industry.

Under Soviet rule the jute-hemp industry underwent some important changes: cottage enterprises were replaced by large factories, and by the 1930s jute ceased to be imported and the industry became limited to domestically grown hemp and to kenaf, which was grown in the Asian republics. The First World War and the Revolution also had a devastating effect on the jute-hemp industry: in 1920 production was only 28.9 percent of the 1913 level. After recovering somewhat in the 1920s the industry was set back by the collectivization drive. Between 1927 and 1934 the land area devoted to hemp decreased from 174,000 ha to 25,000 ha (in Western Ukraine it increased from 26,000 ha [1929] to 30,000 ha [1933]). By 1940 the area devoted to hemp reached 200,000 ha and the value of the output of Ukraine's 27 jute-hemp factories increased from 25.4 million rubles (1927-8) to 88 million rubles. The jute-hemp industry accounted for 4.1 percent of Ukraine's light-industry output and for 28.6 percent of the USSR jute-hemp production.

Although interwar production levels were reached by 1955 (23,000 t), the jute-hemp industry has declined since then. The area sown to hemp dropped steadily after the Second World War and amounted to only 29,000 ha in 1984. The gross output of raw hemp has not declined as sharply as the sown area, because the traditional central-Russian varieties of hemp have been replaced with higher-yielding southern varieties. In 1984 the area sown to southern hemp, which yields 24.0 centners per ha, was twice the area sown to central-Russian hemp, which yields 6.3 centners per ha. In 1940 the areas were approximately equal. The main shortcoming of southern hemp is its low yield of oilseed. However, because seed harvesting requires manual picking, the cultivation of hemp for seed is diminishing. The gross harvests of hemp have decreased from a peak of 222,000 t in 1955 to 37,000 t in 1984. As the decreasing output of hemp yarn (from 34,600 t in 1970 to 15,400 t in 1984) shows, the jute-hemp industry is diminishing in importance. Kharkiv, Odessa, and Kirovohrad are the main centers for jute-hemp processing. As in earlier times, Western Ukraine has no jute-hemp industry.

C. Freeland, B. Wynar

Juvenile delinquency. Antisocial or criminal acts such as violence and vandalism committed by minors. In Ukraine, as in the whole Soviet Union, this is a serious social problem.

Individuals over 16 years of age, and juveniles over 14 who have committed particularly dangerous acts such as murder, robbery, and malicious hooliganism, are subject to criminal prosecution. The criminal code of the Ukrainian SSR and of the other Soviet republics treats youth as a mitigating circumstance. Criminals under 18 years of age cannot be executed or sentenced to more than 10 years' imprisonment. They are confined in special correctional labor colonies for juveniles.

Such lenient treatment was not always extended to juvenile delinquents. The Criminal Code of 1926 permitted children 12 years of age to be tried. The 7 April 1935 decree of the USSR Central Executive Committee and the Soviet of People's Commissars required that all punitive measures, including execution, be applied to 12-year-olds. The law of 31 May 1941 emphasized that children over 12 years should be prosecuted not only for premeditated crimes but also for unintentional harm due to carelessness. According to the law on misappropriating socialist property, children could be imprisoned for picking an apple in a collective-farm orchard or digging up a potato in the field, and particularly large numbers of children ended up in prison. The introduction of legal penalties for lateness for work led to the harsh treatment of many children. Even absenteeism from factory-plant schools was punished with six months' imprisonment. Child criminals, as A. Solzhenitsyn points out, adjusted quickly to camp life and became part of the criminal underworld. It was only after Stalin's death that the laws against juvenile delinquency were humanized somewhat. By the decree of 24 April 1954 the majority of juveniles who were serving their first sentence and had completed a third of it were released.

Crimes by children up to 14 years of age, minor crimes by juveniles 14-16 years of age, and various misdemeanors by 16- to 18-year-olds such as petty speculation, truancy, and refusal to work are examined by municipal and raion commissions for juvenile affairs. These commissions can either censure a young wrongdoer or his parents, impose a fine on them, or send the offender to a special psychiatric or educational institution (special school or special vocational-technical school).

Although crime statistics are not published in the Soviet Union, one can assert that juvenile delinquency is widespread. A handbook on legal statistics says that juveniles up to 18 years of age account for 7 percent of all sentences. This is equivalent to the proportion of 14- to 18-year-olds in the population. But since the juvenile sentences in question pertain only to serious crimes, which usually account for 10-15 percent of all crimes, the true number of offences by juveniles is probably 7-10 times as high and close to the total number of crimes by adults. There is also evidence to suggest that recidivism is high among juvenile offenders.

Most juvenile delinquents in the USSR are boys (93 percent); many are either out of school or enrolled in technical schools. In the prewar and the immediate postwar periods the main cause of child crime was undoubtedly homelessness, which resulted from the dislocations and high loss of life in the Revolution and the First World War, the *famine of 1931-3 in Ukraine, and the mass terror (see *Children, homeless). Today, one of the main causes of delinquency is a lack of parental supervision. In almost all families both parents work, and there are many single-parent families because of a high rate of divorce and the birth of many children to single mothers. Other important factors in juvenile delinquency are the harmful influence of idle youngsters and the lack of gainful employment and other prospects. The most prevalent juvenile offenses are hooliganism, robbery, theft, and fighting. Crimes of unmotivated brutality are not infrequent. (See *Hooliganism.)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Connor, W. Deviance in Soviet Society: Crime, Delinquency, and Alcoholism (New York and London 1972)

S. Maksudov

---

K

---

Kabachkiv, Ivan [Kabačkiv], b 6 October 1874 in Veremivka, Zolotonosha county, Poltava gubernia, d 2 December 1962 in New York. Economist and lawyer; full member of the Ukrainian Academy of Arts and Sciences in the United States. A graduate of St Petersburg University's Faculty of Law, before 1917 he held several positions in the Imperial Ministry of Finance. From 1919 to 1920 he served as a state auditor of the UNR, and after that in the UNR Government-in-exile. From 1925 to 1934 he lectured at the Higher Pedagogical Institute in Prague and in 1944 he was appointed lecturer and eventually professor of the Ukrainian Free University in Munich. He emigrated to the United States in 1949. His published works deal with the structure of the government budget in Czechoslovakia and in Ukraine, and with the USSR tax system.

Kabachok, Volodymyr [Kabačok], 1885–1937? Kobza player and artistic director of the Poltava Banduryst Kapelle (1923–33). In 1934 he was arrested and exiled to Kolyma, where he died.

Stepan Kachala

Kachala, Stepan [Kačala], b 1815 in Firmiiv, Berezhany county, Galicia, d 1888 in Shelpaky, Zbarazh county, Galicia. Ukrainian Catholic priest and political leader. A populist, he was a founding member of the *Halytsko-Ruska Matytsia (1848) and the Narodnyi Dim in Lviv (1849). He was one of the Ukrainian representatives at the Slavic Congress in Prague in 1848. Kachala was elected to the Galician Sejm in 1861 and to the Imperial Parliament in Vienna in 1873. He was a founding member and president of the Shevchenko Literary Society (later the Shevchenko Scientific Society) and the *Prosvita society. He wrote popular brochures on political and social subjects and the book Polityka Polaków względem Rusi (The Politics of the Poles with Regard to Ruthenia, 1879), which appeared in Ukrainian as Korotka istoriia Rusy (A Short History of Ruthenia, 1886).

Kachanivka [Kačanivka]. III-13. Health resort in Ichnia raion, Chernihiv oblast. Because of its mild climate, Kachanivka has a tuberculosis sanatorium. A palace was built there by P. Rumiantsev-Zadunaisky, which in the 1770s became the estate of the Tarnovsky family. In the 19th century many noted writers, such as N. Gogol, T. Shevchenko, and Marko Vovchok, visited Kachanivka. A rich collection of Ukrainian antiquities and documents connected with T. Shevchenko was transferred eventually from Kachanivka to the Chernihiv State Historical Museum.

Kachenovsky, Dmitrii [Kačenovskij, Dmitrij], b 30 December 1827 in Karachev, Orel gubernia, d 2 January 1873 in Kharkiv. Specialist in international law and the history of political institutions. A graduate of Kharkiv University, where he was appointed to the Chair of International Law (1849) and subsequently promoted to professor (1859). His O kaperakh i prizovom sudoproizvodstve (1855), which was published in London in English translation as Prize-Law, Particularly with Reference to the Duties and Obligations of Belligerents and Neutrals (1867), was instrumental in the inclusion of several articles on humanizing naval warfare and banning privateering in the Declaration of Paris (1856). In his Kurs mezhdunarodnogo prava (A Course in International Law, 1863–6) he severely criticized positivist theories of international law. He raised the issue of codifying international law and contributed to the founding in 1873 of the Institute of International Law in Ghent, Belgium.

Kachenovsky, Mikhail [Kačenovskij, Mixail], b 12 November 1775 in Kharkiv, d 3 March 1842. Russian historian and literary critic of Ukrainian and Greek origin. He finished his studies at Kharkiv College in 1789. From 1805 to 1830 (with minor intervals) he edited and published the journal Vestnik Evropy. From 1810 he was a professor at Moscow University and in 1837 he became its rector. Kachenovsky opposed the nationalist views of N. *Karamzin and was a founder of the skeptical school in Russian historiography. He questioned the authenticity of many works of the Kievan period – including Povist' vremennykh lit (Tale of Bygone Years), Slovo o polku Ihorevi (The Tale of Ihor's Campaign), and Ruskaia Pravda (Rus' Law) – believing them to be written at a later date. This provoked others to analyze these monuments in detail. He was convinced that Kievan Rus' did not have its own literature, commerce, laws, or currency and that these were imported from Germany in the 14th century.

Kachkovsky, Mykhailo [Kačkovs'kyj, Myxajlo], b 1802 in Dubno, Łańcut county, Galicia, d 20 August 1872 in Kronstadt, Russia. Galician cultural figure of a populist outlook. A judge by profession, he endorsed the Austrian regime and worked within its confines to promote the cultural and educational advancement of the Ukrainian people. He provided financial support to writers and publications of both cultural camps in Galicia – the Old Ruthenians (Russophiles) and the Populists. The Russophile newspaper Slovo (1861–87) in Lviv received large subsidies from him. He encouraged the development of literature in the local Ukrainian vernacular by rewarding writers, particularly students, with monetary prizes. In his will he left about 80,000 guilders to set up a foundation at the *People's Home in Lviv for awarding prizes for literary works written in the local Ukrainian language and for supporting periodical publications. Upon retiring Kachkovsky set out on an extended tour of Russia, in the course of which he succumbed to cholera. Although he had never been a Russophile, a society created by Russophiles in 1874 as a counterweight to the Prosvita society was named after Kachkovsky because he had supported some Old-Ruthenian causes (see *Kachkovsky Society).

Kachkovsky Society (Obshchestvo im. M. Kachkovskogo). A cultural and educational society named in honor of M. *Kachkovsky that was founded in 1874 in Kolomyia by Galician Russophiles led by Rev I. *Naumovych. It was modeled on the populist *Prosvita society (est 1868), and its purpose was to enlighten the common people. In 1876 its head office was moved to Lviv. The society had branch offices in county towns and libraries in villages. Its main activity was publishing inexpensive religious books, calendars, farming manuals, and popular entertaining novels. From 1930 its monthly booklets were known as Narodnaia Biblioteka. I. Naumovych's works came out separately in seven editions. Some of these publications were written in the local Ukrainian vernacular, and others in the artificial *yazychie. The society also reprinted the works of Russian writers. Besides publishing, it organized practical courses on farming and co-operation. In 1924 Nauka, which was founded by I. Naumovych in 1871, became the official journal of the society. Despite its large financial reserves, the society's importance diminished with the decline of the Russophile movement. In 1914 it had only about 300 reading rooms, compared to 2,944 of the Prosvita society, and in 1936 its membership was 5,975, compared to Prosvita's 306,000 (1935). The society's presidents were Rev I. Naumovych, Rev T. Pavlykiv, B. Didytsky, and P. Svystun before the First World War, and A. Aleksevysh, M. Hlushkevych, Ya. Verbytsky, and A. Kopystiansky after the war.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Andrusiak, M. Geneza i kharakter halyts'koho rusofil'stva v XIX–XX st. (Prague 1941)

A. Zhukovsky

Kachmar, Vasyl [Kačmar, Vasyl'], b 20 August 1904 in Viisko, Dobromyl county, Galicia. Journalist, OUN leader, and Catholic activist. He was imprisoned in the Polish penal camp Bereza Kartuzka for his political activities. He served as an editor on Ukrains'kyi holos in Peremyshl (1930–2), Nash prapor in Lviv (1936–9), and Krakivs'ki visti (1939–40). After the Second World War he immigrated to Germany and in 1949 to the United States. In the mid-1960s he was a founder and the first chairman of the Ukrainian Patriarchal Society in the United States.

Kachmar wrote many articles and brochures on religious subjects.

Kachmar, Volodymyr [Kačmar], b 18 March 1893 in Lviv, d December 1964 in Cracow. Bass opera singer; educator. He made his debut at the Lviv Opera in 1919. In 1924–5 he sang at La Scala in Milan. Kachmar taught singing at the Lviv Conservatory (1938–41, 1944–6) and then at the State Higher School of Music in Cracow (1946–64). His repertoire included Godunov in M. Mussorgsky's Boris Godunov, Ramfis in G. Verdi's Aida, and Zbigniew in S. Moniuszko's The Haunted Castle. His concert repertoire often included Ukrainian vocal works.

Kachor, Andrii [Kačor, Andrij], b 13 December 1908 in Borschovychi, Lviv county, Galicia. Economist and co-operative organizer. Active in the co-operative movement since 1928, until 1944 he worked as an organizer of the co-operative Maslosoiuz and auditor of the Audit Union of Ukrainian Co-operatives in Lviv. He edited Hospodars'ko-kooperatyvne zhyttia, the organ of the Alliance of Ukrainian Co-operators in Germany (1947–8). After emigrating to Canada in 1950, he published studies on the Ukrainian co-operative movement including Ukrains'ka molochars'ka Kooperatsiia v Zakhidnii Ukraini (Ukrainian Dairy Co-operatives in Western Ukraine, 1949).

Kachura, Borys [Kačura], b 1 September 1930 in Tulchyn, Vinnytsia oblast. Soviet political figure. Since 1963 he has worked in the Party administration. He was second secretary (1974–6) then first secretary (1976–82) of the Donetsk Oblast Party Committee. In 1971 he was elected a candidate member of the CC CPU and in 1976 he became a full member of the CC CPU and of the CC CPSU. Also in 1976 he became a candidate member, and in 1981 a full member, of the CPU Politburo. In 1982 he was appointed a secretary of the CC CPU with special responsibility for energy. Since 1975 he has also been a member of the presidium of the Supreme Soviet of the Ukrainian SSR.

Kachura, Yakiv [Kačura, Jakiv], b 21 October 1897 in Yurkivka, Bratslav county, Podilia gubernia, d October 1943. Writer. His works were first published in 1923 and he became a member of the writers' group *Pluh and the All-Ukrainian Association of Proletarian Writers. He is the author of several collections of stories dealing with the war, the Revolution, and contemporary life, as well as the novels Chad (Fumes, 1929) and Ol'ha (1931) and the Stalinist historical novella Ivan Bohun (1940). A Soviet war correspondent from 1941, Kachura was captured by the Germans in May 1942 and died in a concentration camp in the Donbas. His selected works (2 vols) were published in 1958; a critical biography by B. Buriak appeared in 1962.

Kachurovsky, Ihor [Kačurovsk'kyj], b 1 September 1918 in Nizhen, Chernihiv gubernia. Writer and literary scholar. A graduate of the Kursk Pedagogical Institute (1941), he fled to Austria in 1944. In 1948 he immigrated to Argentina, where he edited the monthly Porohy in Buenos Aires. In 1969 he moved to Munich; since 1979 he has taught at the Ukrainian Free University there, from 1982 as a professor. As a poet, Kachurovsky is considered a successor to the *Neoclassicists of the 1920s; he is the author of the collections Nad svitlym dzherelom (At the Lustrous Source, 1948), V dalekii havani (In the Faraway Haven, 1956), and Pisnia pro bilyi parus (Song about the White Sail, 1971) and the long poem Selo (The Village, 1960). His well-received novels include Shliakh nevidomoho (The Path of the Stranger, 1956; English: Because Deserters Are Immortal, 1979), Zaliznyi kurkul' (The Iron Kulak, 1959), and Dim nad krucheiu (The House on the Cliff, 1966). As a literary scholar, Kachurovsky has written articles about Ukrainian writers and literature, and the books Strofika (Versification, 1967), Fonika (Phonics, 1984), and Narys komparatyvnoi metryky (Outline of Comparative Metrics, 1985). He has also edited collections of Ukrainian poetry and translated Italian, Spanish, French, Russian, Polish, Belorussian, and Dutch poetry into Ukrainian, including a selection from Petrarch (1982).

Ihor Kachurovsky

I. Koshelivets

Kadets. See Constitutional Democratic party.

Kadiivka. See Stakhanov.

Kadylo (The Censer). Satirical tabloid, edited and published irregularly from 1913 to 1918 by P. *Krat in Winnipeg, Vancouver, and finally, Toronto. From a socialist viewpoint the illustrated periodical lampooned the Catholic and Orthodox clergy, satirized the Ukrainian Canadian intelligentsia, and condemned the tsarist autocracy in the Russian Empire. It serialized several of Krat's satirical works and featured political cartoons, including caricatures of prominent Ukrainian-Canadian figures. At least 25 issues appeared. Kropylo, published by Krat in Winnipeg shortly before Kadylo appeared, was very similar to its successor.

Kaffa. See Teodosiia.

Kaganovich, Lazar [Kaganovič], b 22 November 1893 in Kabany, Kiev county, Kiev gubernia. Bolshevik and Soviet political leader of Jewish descent. Joining the Bolshevik party in 1911, he organized trade unions in various towns of Ukraine. During the revolutionary period he held important Party posts in Belorussia (1917), Russia (1918–20), and Turkestan (1920–1). Transferred to Moscow, he worked in the central agencies of the Russian Communist Party (Bolshevik) (CP[B]). By 1925 he became a member of the CC CP(B), and by 1930 a member of the Politburo. Because of his unconditional loyalty, Kaganovich was used by Stalin for the most repugnant and ruthless tasks. As first secretary of the CC CP(B)U (1925–8), he was responsible for crushing O. *Shumsky's opposition while maintaining the appearance of *Ukrainization. Upon his return to Moscow he was appointed to the Party Secretariat, where he had a decisive influence on Ukrainian affairs. In 1933, as director of the agricultural department of the CC of the All-Union CP(B), he set up the political departments of the machine-tractor stations and helped V. Molotov organize the forced collectivization of Ukraine by terror and famine. From 1935 to 1944 Kaganovich held various government posts in Moscow. In 1947, he was again appointed first secretary of the CC CP(B)U and was assigned the task of pacifying Ukraine. After J. Stalin's death in 1953, he rose to first deputy premier of the USSR and member of the Presidium, but four years later lost all his government and Party posts, and even his Party membership, for participating in an abortive attempt to oust N. Khrushchev from power. He was later rehabilitated.

V. Holubovych, V. Markus

Kahal or Qahal. A Hebrew term meaning 'assembly' or 'community' referring to the autonomous governments of Jewish communities in the Polish-Lithuanian Commonwealth and the Russian Empire. Kahals emerged on Ukrainian territories under Polish rule in the early 16th century, when they were formed to administer the collective taxation of the Jews in the Commonwealth. Each community had a single kahal, although some smaller communities were placed under the jurisdiction of larger ones. In internal affairs they enjoyed virtual political autonomy: they regulated local commerce, education, the treatment of transients, hygiene and sanitation, and relations between landlords and tenants, and administered charity. Local rabbis were under their authority, and kahal courts ruled on almost all religious and secular disputes according to Jewish law. They also had the power to expel members from the synagogue, placing them outside the law. Representatives from the kahals participated in the annual meetings of the central Jewish organ in the Polish Kingdom, the Council of the Four Lands.

Kahals had at least 8 members in the smallest and 22–35 members in medium-sized communities. The executive consisted usually of 4 elders (rashim) and 3–5 'honorary' members (tuvim); they, the rabbi, and some other officials with specific responsibilities (eg, judges) were paid by the kahal. The executive was elected by the community. Initially, everyone was enfranchised, and the kahals defended the interests of all Jews, but over time the wealthy and privileged came to dominate these groups and used their powers to ensure their positions. In the 18th century many Jews began calling for abolition of kahals, especially as they were increasingly drawn into the struggles between the various religious movements and political groupings. Many kahals became indebted.

After the Polish partitions the influence of kahals within the Russian Empire progressively declined as the state assumed more direct power over Jews. In 1827, however, they were given the added responsibility of providing conscripts for the army. In 1844 they were officially abolished by the tsarist regime in Ukraine and most of the rest of the empire; they continued to exist only in the Baltic region. Afterwards, Jewish communities were given jurisdiction only over religious and charitable affairs, and occasionally over education.

P. Kachur

Kahalnyk River [Kahal'nyk]. A river flowing for 134 km through the Kuban Lowland and draining a basin of 5,080 sq km. The Kahalnyk empties into Tahanrih Bay of the Sea of Azov.

Kahanovych, Naum [Kahanovyč], b and d ? Linguist. His articles and reviews in Prapor marksyzmu and Krytyka at the beginning of the 1930s initiated a broad campaign against Ukrainian linguistics of the 1920s, characterizing it first as an expression of populism and then as an expression of 'Ukrainian bourgeois nationalism.' From 1933 to 1937 he was a corresponding member of the AN URSR, the director of the AN URSR *Institute of Linguistics, the editor of the journal Movoznavstvo, the compiler of a school textbook of Ukrainian, and the de facto dictator in the field of Ukrainian linguistics. He used his position to Russify ruthlessly literary Ukrainian and to discredit Ukrainian linguists. In 1937 he was arrested and reportedly executed.

Kaharlyk. IV-11. Town (1970 pop 10,900) and raion center in Kiev oblast, situated on the Rosava River in the Dnieper Upland. The ruins of 11th-13th-century fortifications and a park with 19th-century gardens are found there. Its industries produce foodstuffs, mixed feed, asphalt, and artistic wares.

Kaiala River [Kajala]. River mentioned in the Rus' epic **Slovo o polku Ihorevi* (Tale of Ihor's Campaign) as the place where the Cumans routed the army of Prince *Ihor Sviatoslavych in 1075. Possibly it is the present-day Kalmius River.

Kaindl, Raimund Friedrich, b 31 August 1866 in Chernivtsi, d 15 March 1930 in Graz, Austria. German historian, ethnographer, and archeologist; full member of the Shevchenko Scientific Society from 1914. A graduate of Chernivtsi University and a professor there (1901-14) and at Graz University (from 1915), he was an important scholar of the history of Bukovyna and the ethnography of the Hutsuls, as well as the history and ethnography of the Germans in Eastern Europe. Kaindl refuted the views of Rumanian historians who questioned the autochthonous origins of Ukrainians in Bukovyna. Of his numerous works relating to Ukrainian studies the most important are Die Ruthenen in der Bukowina (1889-90, coauthor A. Manastyrsky), Die Huzulen (1893), Geschichte der Bukowina (3 vols, 1896-1903), Die Ethnographie der Huzulen (1897), Das Ansiedlungswesen in der Bukowina seit der Besitzergreifung durch Österreich (1902), Geschichte der Deutschen in der Karpathenländern (3 vols, 1906-11), and Geschichte der Stadt Czernowitz (1908).

Kakhivka [Kaxivka]. VII-14. City (1979 pop 39,000), raion center, and river port in Kherson oblast, situated on the left bank of the Dnieper River. Established in 1791 as a village, it grew into an important grain and wool trading town; the largest employment exchange for agricultural laborers in southern Ukraine was located there in the late 19th century. Electric-welding and irrigation equipment, reinforced-concrete materials, furniture, and food products are manufactured there. Since 1957 a museum, and since 1964 a branch of the AN URSR Institute of Electric Welding, have been located there.

Kakhivka Hydroelectric Station. The second-largest and southernmost of the *Dnieper Cascade of Hydroelectric Stations. It was built in the years 1950-6, 12 km southwest of the city of Kakhivka, in Kherson oblast. Each of its six generators provides 58,500 kW; together they produce an annual average of 1.4 billion kWh of energy. A highway and railway traverse the station's 3.84-km dam complex, which holds back the waters of the *Kakhivka Reservoir. The city of *Nova Kakhivka has arisen next to the station.

Kakhivka Irrigation System. One of the largest irrigation systems in the USSR. It provides water to the dry steppe farmland of Kherson and Zaporizhia oblast. Construction of the system began in 1967. The planned irrigation area of 260,000 ha was increased in 1979 to 784,000 ha. The system's source of water is the *Kakhivka Reservoir, from which water is channeled via the Kakhivka Canal (130 km), the Sirohozhy Canal (114 km), the Chaplynka Canal (42 km), a network of interfarm supply and field canals (total 192 km), and 65 waterworks. In 1979, 110,000 ha of the irrigated land was cultivated.

Kakhivka Reservoir. A huge reservoir created in 1956 after the dam of the *Kakhivka Hydroelectric Station was built on the lower Dnieper River. It is 240 km long and up to 23 km wide and has a surface area of 2,155 sq km, a volume of 18.2 cu km, and an average depth of 8.4 m. Its level varies from 3 to 26 m. Its waters supply hydroelectric stations, the *Krasnoznamianka and *Kakhivka irrigation systems, industrial plants, freshwater-fish farms, and the *North Crimean and *Dnieper-Kryvyi Rih canals. The reservoir has created a deep-water route, allowing sea ships to sail up the Dnieper. (See map on page 402.)

Kakhnykevych, Kyrylo [Kaxnykevych], b 1850 in Kolomyia, Galicia, d 27 May 1926 in Lviv. Journalist and civic figure. A graduate of the University of Vienna (1876) and the Vienna Higher School of Agriculture, he taught school and then worked on the editorial staff of Dilo (1884-90). For many years he was the editor of Narodna Chasopys' (1891-1914, 1918), the Ukrainian supplement to the government daily Gazeta Lwowska. A member of the board of directors of **Silskyi Hospodar*, he edited its semimonthly Hospodars'ka chasopys' (1910-18) and its book series Hospodarska Biblioteka (Farming Library). At the same time he translated literary pieces from various European languages for Hospodars'ka chasopys' and wrote popular booklets on farming, which were published by the Prosvita society and Silskyi Hospodar.

Kalach [Kalač]. III-21. Town (1971 pop 19,000) on the Podgornaia River in Voronezh oblast, RSFSR. Founded in the early 18th century, it has a machinery plant and a food industry. According to the 1926 census Ukrainians constituted 84 percent of its population.

Kalachevsky, Mykhailo [Kalačevs'kyj, Myxajlo], b 26 September 1851 in Popivka, Kremenchuk county, Kher-

KAKHIVKA RESERVOIR

Large star indicates Enerhodar Atomic Energy Station.

son gubernia, d 1910–12 in Kremenchuk. Composer; by profession a lawyer. A graduate of the Leipzig Conservatory (1876), he settled in Kremenchuk and was active in its musical life, organizing concerts and music groups. His compositions include The Ukrainian Symphony (1876), based on Ukrainian folk melodies; a string quartet; piano pieces; a requiem; and 19 songs. M. Hordiichuk has published two monographs on him (Kiev, 1954 and 1963).

Kalakut. A pejorative term used in *Podlachia and sometimes in the Kholm region to denote Ukrainians who had become assimilated as Poles. Kalakuty spoke Ukrainian but were Roman Catholics.

Kalamitska Bay (Kalamitska zatoka). A bay of the Black Sea on the western coast of the Crimea, between the capes of Tarkhankut and Khersones. The city of *Yevpatoriia is situated on the bay.

Kalanchak [Kalančak]. vii-14. Town smt (1983 pop 9,900) and raion center in Kherson oblast, situated on the Kalanchak River. It was founded in 1794 as a settlement of exiled participants in the *Turbaï uprising. Its inhabitants are employed mainly in agriculture.

Kalannyky or Kalanni liudy. A category of unfree people in Galicia in the period of the so-called *Lithuanian-Ruthenian law (15th and 16th centuries). They were attached to the land, most frequently on state or church properties. They paid a quitrent but could dispose of their own possessions and appear in court as witnesses. In some places they lived in entire settlements. Their status was similar to that of the *zakupy in Kievan Rus' and the peasant *otchychi under Lithuanian rule.

Kalba, Semen [Kal'ba], b 22 October 1911 in Mozolivka, Nadvirna county, Galicia. Lawyer and community leader. Educated at Lviv University, the Institut des Re-cherches Economiques in Louvain, and the Ukrainian Free University in Prague (LLD 1943), after the war Kalba practiced law in the French occupation zone of Germany and represented the United Ukrainian Relief Committee (ZUADK) and the Ukrainian Canadian Relief Fund before French and German authorities. He emigrated to the United States in 1950 but returned to Europe two years later as the European director of ZUADK. Later he served as executive director of the Ukrainian Canadian Committee (1966–81).

Halyna Kalchenko

Kalchenko, Halyna [Kal'chenko], b 4 February 1926 in Borzna, Chernihiv region, d 11 March 1975 in Kiev. Sculptor. A graduate of the Kiev State Art Institute (1953) and a student of Mykhailo *Lysenko, she worked mostly in bronze and marble. Her works consist chiefly of statues such as those of M. Leontovych in Tulchyn (1970), S. Hulak-Artemovsky in Horodyshche (1971), Lesia Ukrainka (1973) in Kiev, and I. Kotliarevsky (1974) in Kiev, and portraits such as those of K. Dankevych, O. Kobylanska, L. Revutsky, Ya. Stepovy, and B. Rudenko.

Kalchenko, Nykyfor [Kal'chenko], b 27 January 1906 in Koshmanivka, Poltava gubernia. Soviet state and party official. In the 1930s Kalchenko participated in the collectivization drive in Kharkiv oblast. He was a candidate (1938–40) and a full (1940–76) member of the CC CP(B)U, and a candidate (1952–6, 1966–76) and a full (1956–66) member of the CC CPSU. From 1952 to 1976 he was a member of the Politburo of the CPU. He was in charge of various Ukrainian government ministries: economic crops (1946–7), state farms (1947–50), agriculture (1950–2), and procurements (1961–5). He also served as deputy chairman (1952–4, 1961–76) and chairman (1954–61) of the Council of Ministers of the Ukrainian SSR.

Kalenychenko, Ivan [Kalenychenko], b 1805 in Sumy, Kharkiv gubernia, d 1876. Physician, botanist, and zoologist. Kalenychenko graduated from Kharkiv University in 1829 and worked as a physician. From 1838 to 1864 he taught biology and held the Chair of Physiology and Pathology at Kharkiv University. Kalenychenko's wide interests included plant taxonomy (Daphne, Cratae- gus), entomology, and medicine. During his expeditions to the Caucasus and France he collected a large herbarium, which he donated to Kharkiv University. Kalenychenko published over 40 scientific works in Latin and French. Some plants were named after him (eg, Euphorbia kaliniczenkoï).

Kalenychenko, Luka [Kalenychenko], b 20 February 1898 in Karlivka, Kostiantynohrad county, Poltava gubernia, d 5 August 1968 in Kiev. Restoration specialist and art scholar. A graduate of the Myrhorod Art School (1918) and the Kiev Art Institute (1931), in 1938 he organized the first central research and restoration studio in Ukraine. In Kiev he oversaw the restoration of the paintings of St Volodymyr's Cathedral (1946–52), the Church of St Cyril's Monastery (1950), St Andrew's Cathedral (1951–2), and St Sophia Cathedral (1952–68). He described his work on the frescoes and mosaics of the latter in an article published in Iskusstvo in 1958. His publications include articles on art history and a monograph on O. Shovkunenko published in 1947.

Kalenychenko, Nina [Kalenychenko], b 9 March 1922 in Myrhorod, Poltava oblast. Literary scholar. She has written several studies on Ukrainian literature, most notably Ukrains'ka proza pochatku xx st. (Ukrainian Prose at the Turn of the 20th Century, 1964). The life and work of M. Kotsiubynsky has been the subject of articles and monographs by her, including Mykhailo Kotsiubynskyi (1956) and Velykyi sontsepoklonnyk (The Great Sun Worshipper, 1967).

Kaliannyk, Ivan [Kaliannyk] (pen name of I. Kalianikov), b 20 March 1911 in Diatkovo, Orel gubernia, Russia, d 10 April 1939. Poet of Russian origin. He belonged to the *Prolitfront writers' association. Although his poetry glorified Ukraine's industrialization, it was attacked for being 'nationalist.' He wrote several collections of poetry among which Strum (The Current, 1931), Vysoka put' (The Lofty Path, 1932), and Hordist' (Pride, 1936) are most notable. Collections of his poems appeared posthumously in 1959, 1962, and 1967.

Kalinin, Kostiantyn, b 29 December 1889 in Valuiky, Voronezh gubernia, d 21 April 1940 in Voronezh. Aeronautical engineer and airplane designer. A graduate of the Kiev Polytechnical Institute, he headed the Design Bureau of the Kiev Aviation Plant and in 1926 was put in charge of the Design Bureau of the new Kharkiv Plant of Research Aircraft Building. He designed the first five models of the K series of passenger planes (1925–9), the 120-seat K-7 airliner (1930–3), the K-12 tailless bomber (1937), and the K-13 special-purpose bomber (1938). Reportedly, he was purged during the 1930s for Ukrainian bourgeois nationalism and died in prison.

Kalinowski, Marcin, b ? d 2 June 1652 near Batih, now Chetvertynivka, in Trostianets raion, Vinnytsia oblast. Polish magnate with considerable landholdings in Ukraine. From 1635 he was the voivode of Chernihiv, from 1646 the Polish field hetman, and from 1651 the royal grand hetman. During the *Cossack-Polish War, in the Battle of *Korsun in 1648, he was captured by the Cossacks, who handed him over to the Crimean Tatars.

Having paid a large ransom, he returned to Poland from the Crimea in 1650. In February 1651 he attacked towns in Podilia and laid siege to Vinnytsia. After the Cossacks' defeat at the Battle of *Berestechko and the subsequent Treaty of *Bila Tserkva in 1651, he took revenge on the Ukrainian populace in the Bratslav and Chernihiv regions. At the Battle of *Batih in 1652 the Polish forces led by him were completely routed, and he himself perished.

Kalishevsky, Yevfimii [Kališevs'kyj, Jevfimij] (secular name: Yukhym), 1892–? Bishop of the Ukrainian Autocephalous Orthodox church. He was consecrated in 1922 and served in Cherkasy (1922–9) and Odessa (1929–30) eparchies. Arrested in 1936 (1930 according to some sources) and deported, his subsequent fate is unknown.

Kalisz. A city (1977 pop 95,100) and county center in Poznań voivodeship, Poland. In the 1920s and 1930s it was an important Ukrainian émigré center. An internment camp for UNR soldiers who had crossed into Poland existed there from 1920 to 1924. Cultural and educational activity – schools, courses, publishing houses, theater, V. Avramenko's folk-dance school, irregular periodicals of short duration, and the literary monthly Veselka (1922–3) – flourished in the camp. After 1924 the community's life was centered in an area of camp 10 called Ukrainska Stanytsia, where such institutions as the Society of UNR Army Soldiers, the Ukrainian Association of Disabled Veterans, and the Shevchenko Gymnasium (1921–37) were located. The latter had a total enrollment of 1,000 and graduated 130 students during its existence. The monthly Ukrains'kyi invalid was published there from 1925 to 1931. The Ukrainian Military History Society, with its annual Za derzhavnist' (1929–35), and the military journal Tabor (1923–6) were located in Kalisz before being transferred to Warsaw. About 1,500 Ukrainians remained in Kalisz and its vicinity in the 1930s.

Kaliuzhny, Denys [Kaljužnyj], b 16 October 1900 on the khutir Kaliuzhnyi in Lebedyn county, Kharkiv gubernia, d 24 June 1976 in Kiev. Hygienist and educator; corresponding member of the USSR Academy of Medical Sciences from 1961. A graduate of the Kharkiv Medical Institute (1926), from 1932 to 1973 he worked at the Kiev Research Institute of General and Communal Hygiene, directing it from 1956 to 1971. From 1933 to 1970 he also taught at post-secondary schools in Kharkiv and Kiev. He was one of the first to research industrial pollution in Ukraine.

Kaliuzhny, Naum [Kaljužnyj] (real name: Sheitelmann), b 1885 in Myrhorod county, Poltava gubernia, d ? Journalist; communist leader of Jewish descent. An active Borotbist, he participated in the process of forming the Ukrainian SSR. He edited the Borotbist newspaper Proletars'kaia pravda and later the official newspaper of the CP(B)U Selians'ka bidnota and the journal Chervomyi shliakh. From 1921 to 1926 Kaliuzhny worked at the consulate of the Ukrainian SSR in Prague, and then at the Soviet embassy in Prague, where he was active in the Soviet propaganda campaign aimed at Ukrainian students in Czechoslovakia. Most of the students who were induced to return to Ukraine were later arrested and executed. Kaliuzhny himself was arrested in 1933 and disappeared without trace.

Kaliuzhny, Oleksander [Kaljužnyj], b 1896, d ? Came-raman. From 1926 he worked at the Odessa Film Factory of the All-Ukrainian Photo-Cinema Administration shooting films such as Pidozrilyi bahazh (Suspicious Baggage, 1926), Synii paket (The Blue Package, 1926), Benia Kryk (1927), Naperedodni (On the Eve, 1928), Mertoa petlia (The Dead Noose, 1929), Pravo na zhinku (The Right to a Wife, 1930), and Karmeliuk (1931). Attacked for formalism, he was arrested in the 1930s and disappeared without trace.

Kalka River. A small river, 88 km long and draining a basin of 1,260 sq km, that flows into the Kalmiius River in the Azov steppe. Today it is called the Kalchyk or Kalets River. It was the site of the first battle between the armies of the princes of southern Rus' and the invading Mongol-Tatar hordes of Genghis Khan. Because of lack of leadership and the plight of their Cuman allies, the Rus' forces were routed on the banks of the river in 1223 after a three-day battle. After the battle the Mongols ravaged the southern frontier of Rus' before returning to the Volga region.

Kálmán, b ca 1070, d 3 February 1116. King of Hungary from 1095. He married Yefimii, the daughter of Prince Volodymyr Monomakh. During his rule, he seized Dalmatia, Croatia, and part of Transcarpathia. In 1099, as the ally of Sviatopolk II Iziaslavych of Kiev, he was defeated in battle near Peremyshl by the united armies of the princes Volodar and Vasylo Rostyslavych of Galicia and Khan Boniak and the Cumans.

Kalmiius or Kalmius River [Kal'mijus]. A river dissecting the Donets Ridge and emptying into the Sea of Azov. It is 210 km long and has a basin area of 5,070 sq km. This unnavigable river supplies the northwestern Donbas with water for domestic and industrial use. The upper Kalmiius is connected to the Donets River by the Donets-Donbas Canal. Four reservoirs have been built on the river.

Kalmyk ASSR. An autonomous republic (1982 pop 304,000) in the Russian RSFSR, lying in the west Caspian Depression. Its territory, most of which is semidesert, covers 75,900 sq km. The capital is Elista. A Kalmyk autonomous oblast was established in 1920; it became an autonomous republic in 1935. The republic was abolished in 1943 for alleged wartime collaboration with the Germans by the Kalmyks, who were deported en masse to eastern Siberia. They were allowed to return beginning in 1956, and the autonomous oblast and republic were reconstituted in 1957 and 1958 respectively. In 1926 its national composition was 75.6 percent Kalmyk, 10.1 percent Russian, and 10.3 percent Ukrainian. Ukrainian peasants began settling in Kalmykia's arable western part in the late 19th century; there they constituted 21 percent of the population in 1926. In 1979 Kalmyks constituted 41.5 percent, Russians 42.6 percent, and Ukrainians 1.3 percent of the population; only 40.5 percent of the population was urban.

Kalnofoisky, Atanasii [Kal'nofojs'kyj, Atanasij], b and d ? A 17th-century monk who was ordered by Metropolitan P. *Mohyla to record the wondrous events that occurred at the Kievan Cave Monastery in the immediate past. The result was the Polish work Teratourgema lubo cuda, ktore byly tak w samym swięto cudotwornym Monastyru Pieczarskim, Kiiowskim ... (Teraturgima, or the Miracles That Did Occur So in the Very Miraculous Kievan Cave Monastery ..., 1638). This work was analyzed in detail by M. *Hlobenko in an article in Zbirnyk 'Ukrains'koi literaturnoi hazety' (1956).

Kalnyn, Liudmila [Kalnyn', Ljudmila], b ? Russian linguist. Kalnyn is an associate of the Institute of Slavic and Balkan Studies at the Academy of Sciences of the USSR. After studying Slavic historical phonology, Kalnyn turned to the investigation of Slavic dialects, especially Ukrainian ones. In this field she has published many articles and the monograph Opyt modelirovaniia systemy ukrainskogo dialektного iazyka (An Attempt at Modeling the System of Ukrainian Dialectal Language, 1973). On the basis of her fieldwork in several villages where the Boiko, Hutsul, and Sian dialects are spoken, as well as in some Polisian villages with a transitional Ukrainian-Belorussian dialect, she constructs generalized models of the dialects and compares them with each other and with some Slavic languages to arrive at a typology of dialectal speech. She has also studied such dialectal phenomena as sandhi, voicing and devoicing of consonants, and syllable boundaries.

Petro Kalnyshevsky; medal by V. Masiutyn

Kalnyshevsky, Petro [Kalnyševs'kyj], b 1690, d 31 October 1803 in Solovki, Arkhangelsk. The last kish otaman of the New Sich (1762, 1765–75). An able administrator and diplomat, he did much for the economic and cultural development of Zaporizhia and the defense of its independence. He encouraged the colonization of Zaporizhian territory and the expansion of grain production and trade. Several times he was sent as an envoy to St Petersburg to defend the territorial rights of Zaporizhia from encroachment by the Russian government and the foreign army colonies that were established in southern Ukraine (New Serbia and Slovia-Serbia). He did not succeed, however, in preventing the ultimate destruction of the Sich in 1775. In 1776 he was exiled to a monastery on the *Solovets Islands, where he was kept a prisoner in extremely difficult conditions until his release in 1801. After his release, he became a monk there at the age of 110.

Kalos Limen. An ancient Greek city founded in the 4th century BC on the west littoral of the Crimea. Its ruins are located 1.5 km northwest of the present-day village of Chornomorske (formerly Ak-Mechet) in Crimea oblast. The site was excavated six times between 1837 and 1959. Uncovered were the remains of defensive walls, towers, and buildings; amphorae, and pottery; grain mortars; millstones; and terra-cotta figurines. In the 4th–3rd century BC the town was ruled by the city state *Chersonese Taurica. It was subsequently controlled by the Scythians and later destroyed at the end of the second century BC. The upper layers of the site contained remains of other cultures, dating from the 1st through the 3rd centuries AD and from medieval times. A necropolis with kurhans is located near the ruins. (See also *Ak-Mechet burial site.)

Kalush [Kaluš]. IV-5. City (1984 pop 64,000) and raion center, in and under the jurisdiction of Ivano-Frankivske oblast, situated in the Kalush Depression on the Syvka River. First mentioned in the Galician-Volhynian Chronicle under the year 1241, in 1549 it received the rights of Magdeburg law. Under Austrian and Polish rule Kalush was a county town. Its rapid growth in the early 19th century was conditioned by rock-salt mining in its vicinity. As salt production fell the town declined, and in the latter half of the 19th century the population grew very little (1857 pop 8,000; 1914 pop 9,000). Its fortunes improved with the development of potassium-salt extraction and processing, and its population grew to 40,700 by 1970. Today the city's major industries are the Khlorvinil chemical-metallurgical conglomerate, a reinforced-concrete complex, and a metalworking complex. A branch of the All-Union Scientific Research Institute of Halurgy and a chemical-technology tekhnikum are located there.

Kalush-Holyn potassium deposits. One of the largest deposits of potassium salts in Ukraine, covering an area of 80 sq km. The deposits, which are Miocene sediments of the Subcarpathian Foredeep, are located in Kalush raion, Ivano-Frankivske oblast, at a depth of 15–1,000 m. The seams range from a few centimeters to 40 m in thickness and consist of such minerals as rock salt (halite), kainite, sylvite, carnallite, anhydrite, and polyhalite. Most of the mining is underground, but some surface mining has been introduced recently. Rock salt has been mined in this area since the 15th century.

Kaluzhniatsky, Omelian [Kalužnjac'kyj, Omeljan] (Kałuźniacki), b 23 January 1845 in Turie, Sambir circle, Galicia, d 3 July 1914 in Chernivtsi. Slavist and Slavic paleographer; corresponding member of the Russian Imperial Academy of Sciences from 1891. After studying at Lviv and Vienna universities, he was professor at Chernivtsi University (1875–1914). He published several Old Ukrainian and Old Bulgarian monuments such as the Putna Gospel and the Horodysheche Apostol, and did much research on the influence of Church Slavonic on Rumanian. He also wrote the monograph Obzor slaviano-russkikh pamiatnikov iazyka i pis'ma nakhodiashchikhsia v bibliotekakh i arkhivakh l'vovskikh (A Survey of Slavonic Russian Monuments of Language and Literature Found in Lviv Libraries and Archives, 1878).

Kalyn, Andrii, b 3 May 1908 in Horinchove, near Khust, Transcarpathia, d 11 December 1979. Foremost folk storyteller in Transcarpathia. In 1946 his narration of 120 tales and many other oral prose works were transcribed. Most of them appeared in the book Zakarpats'ki kazky Andriia Kalyna (The Transcarpathian Tales of Andrii Kalyn, 1955) and in a number of collections and anthologies. Collections of his tales were also published in Russian (1957, 1960) and Czech (1958).

Kalyn, Volodymyr, b 19 September 1896 in Lviv, d 14 January 1923 in Ternopil. Stage actor with a varied repertoire. He worked with L. *Kurbas in the Ternopilski Teatralni Vechory theater (1915–17), Molodyi Teatr (1917–19), the First Theater of the Ukrainian Soviet Republic (1919), the New Lviv Theater (1920), and the Kyidramte (1920–2). His repertoire included such roles as Stepan and Koval in M. Kropyvnytsky's Nevil'nyk (The Prisoner), Leiba and Gonta in Kurbas's adaptation of T. Shevchenko's Haidamaky (The Haidamakas), Macduff in W. Shakespeare's Macbeth, Schigorski in M. Halbe's Jugend, Cavaliere di Ripafratra in C. Goldoni's La Locandiera, and Podkolosin in N. Gogol's Zhenit'ba (The Wedding).

Kalyna, Volodymyr, b 18 August 1896 in Kolokolyn, Rohatyn county, Galicia, d 5 November 1965 in New York. Physicist, mathematician, educator; full member of the Shevchenko Scientific Society. In 1914 he joined the Ukrainian Sich Riflemen (uss), and by 1918 rose to company commander, then adjutant of the First Kurin. After the war he completed his studies at Graz University (PH D 1929) and returned to Lviv, where he taught mathematics and physics. Settling in the United States after the Second World War, he chaired the School Council of the Ukrainian Congress Committee of America and was active in other Ukrainian organizations. His publications include a study of the suspension of paint particles in emulsions, articles on the uss, and war memoirs titled Kurin' Smerty uss (The Death Kurin of the Ukrainian Sich Riflemen).

Kalyna. See Viburnum.

Kalyna Co-operative. The oldest Ukrainian consumer co-operative in Canada, incorporated in 1940 in Winnipeg. It was originally founded by the Ukrainian Riflemen's Hromada on the model of the Chervona Kalyna Publishing Co-operative in Lviv. At first it served as the exclusive Canadian agent for several Ukrainian publishers in Europe and sold embroidered clothing and handicrafts. Among its early organizers were V. Topolnytsky, S. Tsybulsky, P. Shulha, D. Gerych, P. Ustash, O. Tarnovetsky, and I. Bobersky. After the Second World War the co-operative began to sell various home furnishings, appliances, musical instruments, and other items, and in 1949 it established an automobile and home insurance agency.

Kalynets, Ihor [Kaly nec'], b 9 July 1939 in Khodoriv, Lviv oblast. Poet. A graduate of Lviv University (1961), Kalynets was employed at the Lviv Oblast State Archive. In 1972 he and his wife were victims of a wave of political arrests. Both were imprisoned, he for 'anti-Soviet activity' (ie, because his poetry had been published in the West) to six years in labor camp and three years of exile. In May–June 1974 Kalynets took part in a hunger strike of political prisoners in a Perm region labor camp; later he signed several appeals from political prisoners to the authorities. Since his release from exile in Chita oblast in 1981, Kalynets has lived in Lviv, his poetic muse silenced.

Ihor Kalynets

Inspired by the imagistic verse of B.I. *Antonych, Kalynets developed his poetry into the finest exponent of modern Ukrainian 'engagé' lyricism. He employs images that are often primeval and a vocabulary that is rich in cultural allusions while using a prosodic cadence that is contemporary. Only a few of his poems have been officially published in Ukraine, in journals in the early 1960s. His collection Vohon' Kupala (The Fire of Kupalo) was published in Kiev in 1966 but was immediately suppressed and all copies were confiscated. Since that time his poetry has been blacklisted in the ussr and he has been published only in the West: the collections Poezii z Ukrainy (Poems from Ukraine, 1970), Pidsumovuiuchy movchannia (Summing up Silence, 1971), Koronuvannia opudala (The Crowning of a Scarecrow, 1972), and Vohon' Kupala (1975; reprint of the confiscated 1966 edition). Some poems have been translated into German and French as the collections Bilanz des Schweigens (1975) and Les balladins du sel (1980).

D.H. Struk

Kalynets, Iryna [Kaly nec'] (née Stasiv), b 6 December 1940 in Western Ukraine. Dissident; wife of I. *Kalynets. A graduate of Lviv University, she taught Ukrainian literature and language at the Lviv Polytechnical Institute and published children's stories and verses. An active defender of V. *Moroz in 1970 and a founding member of the Committee in Defense of N. *Strokata in 1971, she was arrested in Lviv in January 1972 and sentenced in August for anti-Soviet agitation and propaganda to six years in prison and three years of exile. In the Mordovian labor camps, where she served her sentence, she joined protests against camp conditions and made demands for the recognition of political prisoners. After serving her term of exile in Chita oblast, she was released in 1981 and returned to Lviv.

Kalynivka. iv-9. Town smt (1978 pop 16,100) and raion center in Vinnytsia oblast, situated on the Zherd River in eastern Podilia. It was founded in the early 18th century.

Valentyna Kalynovska

Kalynovska, Valentyna [Kalynovs'ka], b 28 July 1938 in Kiev. Ballerina. After graduating from the Kiev Choreography School in 1957, she joined the Kiev Theater of Opera and Ballet. She appeared in such roles as Varia in V. Homoliaka's Black Gold, Palahna in V. Kyreiko's Shadows of Forgotten Ancestors, Donna Anna in V. Hubarenko's The Stone Master, the title roles in G. Bizet's Carmen, R. Shchedrin's Carmen Suite, and A. Glazunov's Raymonda, the Mistress of the Copper Mountain in S. Prokofiev's The Stone Flower, and Odette-Odile in P. Tchaikovsky's Swan Lake.

Kalynovsky, Hryhorii [Kalynovs'kyj, Hryhorij], b ? in Krolevets, Chernihiv region, d ? A tsarist army officer, he published the first separate Ukrainian ethnographic study: a description of Ukrainian wedding rituals (St Petersburg 1777). A modern Ukrainian translation was published in the collection Vesillia (Wedding), vol 1 (Kiev 1970).

Kalynovych, Fedir [Kalynovyč], b 1 March 1891 in Hanivtsi, Rohatyn county, d ? A mathematician in Kiev. An associate of the VUAN Institute of the Ukrainian Scientific Language, he compiled a Ukrainian dictionary of mathematical terminology (3 parts, 1925–6, 1931; the last part with H. Kholodny).

Kalynovych, Ivan [Kalynovyč], b 28 November 1885 in Lviv, d 12 November 1927 in Lviv. Bibliographer, publisher, and political figure. He was a founder of the Vsesvitna Biblioteka publishing house in Zolochiv and editor of the newspapers Drohobyt's'kyi Lystok (1919) and the Lviv Nashe Slovo (1927). He wrote numerous bibliographies that appeared in journals such as Knyzhka (1921–3) and Nova Ukraïna (1923) and in the calendars of the Prosvita society (1924–6). His bibliography of works on Ukraine in foreign languages and publications appeared in Kul'tura in Lviv and Ukraïna in Kiev (1925, 1927). He published an index to the publications of the Prosvita society (1924) and separate bibliographies of Ukrainian studies (1924) and sources on the history of the Ukrainian Sich Riflemen (1924). Kalynovych also prepared a catalogue of over 300,000 index cards on Ukrainian bibliography; it is now located in the Lviv Scientific Library of the AN URSR. In 1918–19, Kalynovych was a deputy to the Ukrainian National Council of the Western Ukrainian National Republic and a representative to the Labor Congress in Kiev.

Kalynovych, Mykhailo [Kalynovyč, Myxajlo], b 13 October 1888 in Zhakhnivka, Bratslav county, Podilia gubernia, d 16 January 1949 in Kiev. Linguist; full member of the AN URSR from 1939. A graduate of Kiev University (1912) and professor there from 1916, he also worked at the AN URSR Institute of Linguistics from 1924, serving as director from 1939 to 1941. He published works in general linguistics, including Vstup do movoznavstva (Introduction to Linguistics, 1939; 2nd edn, 1947), studies of modern French literature, and translations from Sanskrit. He also served as the editor in chief of a Russian-Ukrainian dictionary (80,000 words, 1948) compiled in the official spirit of Russification.

Kalynovych, Volodymyr [Kalynovyč], b 1884, d 1945 in Dresden, Germany. Educator and publicist. He was the author of German grammars and articles on educational themes and the publisher of the newspaper Ukrainische Blätter (Vienna 1918) and the journals Ukraïna (Kiev 1919) and Ukrains'ka shkola (Lviv 1925). Kalynovych and his wife and daughter were killed during the Allied bombing of Dresden.

Kalynsky, Tymofii [Kalyns'kyj, Tymofij], b early 1740s, d after 1809. Civic leader; artist. Descended from old

Tymofii Kalynsky: Zaporozhian Cossacks Dancing (watercolor, 1778–82)

Ukrainian gentry in Right-Bank Ukraine and educated at the Kievan Mohyla Academy, he served in various provincial chancelleries. He wrote several legal and historical memoranda, only some of which have been published, defending the noble status not only of the Ukrainian gentry but also of the Cossacks. In 1778–82 he painted some 30 large watercolors depicting members of the various estates in their characteristic dress. These works were preserved at the Imperial Society of History and Russian Antiquities in Moscow and were reproduced in A. *Rigelman's Letopisnoe povestvovanie o Maloi Rossii i ee narode i kazakakh voobshche (A Chronicle Account of Little Russia, Its People, and the Cossacks in General, 1847).

Vitalii Kalynychenko

Kalynychenko, Vitalii [Kalynychenko, Vitalij], b 1935. Dissident. Employed as an engineer in Leningrad, in 1966 he attempted to cross the Finnish border and was punished for this act of 'treason' with 10 years in prison. Having served his sentence, he lived in Dnipropetrovske, where he joined the *Ukrainian Helsinki Group. He was arrested in November 1979 and sentenced for anti-Soviet agitation and propaganda to 10 years in prison and 5 years of exile.

Kalytovska, Marta [Kalytovs'ka], b 22 October 1916 in Stryi, Galicia. Poet, journalist, and translator. She studied at Louvain University in Belgium. Now residing in France, she contributes to émigré periodicals and has written two collections of gentle, personal lyrics: Liryka (Lyrics, 1955) and Rymy i ne-rymy (Rhymes and Non-rhymes, 1959). She also writes poetry in French and in 1974 published Dix lettres à Sophie, a slim collection of poems dedicated to the writer S. Yablonska, whose memoirs she has collected and edited in a Ukrainian and a French edition. She has also translated German, French, and Spanish literature into Ukrainian.

Kalytovsky, Omelian [Kalytovs'kyj, Omeljan], b 1855 in Butyny, Zhovkva circle, Galicia, d 18 March 1924 in Lviv. Pedagogue. A graduate of Lviv University, he taught at the Ukrainian Academic Gymnasium in Lviv, (1878–1900) and was the principal of the new Ukrainian gymnasium in Ternopil (1900–7). He was the author of schoolbooks and articles on historical and educational topics in the newspapers Dilo and Zoria (he edited the latter in 1886).

Kalytva Ridge. A landmark on the right bank of the Orel River in Tsarychanka raion, Dnipropetrovske oblast; it is 82 m high, 5 km long, and 3 km wide.

Kamanin, Ivan, b 1850 in Dymer, Kiev county, Kiev gubernia, d 1921. Historian, archivist, and paleographer. A graduate of Kiev University (1872), where he studied under V. Antonovych and M. Drahomanov, Kamanin was a specialist in 16th- and 17th-century Ukrainian history. From 1883 he worked at and then directed the Kiev Central Archive of Old Acts. He helped compile and edit the series **Arkhiv Iugo-Zapadnoi Rossii*, and was a member of the VUAN Commission for the Study of the History of Western Ruthenian and Ukrainian Law. His monographs, some of which also appeared in Kievskaiia starina and Chteniia v Istoricheskom obshchestve Nestora-letopystsa, include Ocherk getmanstva P. Sahaidachnogo (An Essay on the Hetmanate of P. Sahaidachny, 1901), K voprosu o kozachestve do Bogdana Khmel'nitskogo (On the Problem of the Cossacks up to the Time of Bohdan Khmelnytsky, 1894), and Poslednie gody samoupravleniia Kieva po Magdeburskomu pravu (The Last Years of Kiev's Self-Government under Magdeburg Law, 1888). He also published many important collections of documents, especially on the history of the Khmelnytsky uprising, and such valuable studies of Ukrainian paleography as Paleograficheskiy Izbornik (Paleographic Collection, 1909) and Vodiiani znaky na papery ukrains'kykh dokumentiv xvi i xvii vv. (1566–1651) (Watermarks on the Paper of Ukrainian Documents of the 16th and 17th Centuries [1566–1651], with O. Vitvytska, 1923).

A. Zhukovsky

Kamchatka oblast. An administrative region of the RSFSR consisting of Kamchatka Peninsula and part of the mainland along the Pacific coast. The mountainous, volcanic country has a cold humid climate. Its area is 472,300 sq km and its 1986 population was 435,000, 358,000 of which was urban. The oblast capital is Petropavlovsk-Kamchatskii (1986 pop 248,000). According to the 1979 census, Ukrainians account for 7 percent of the population. The main industries are fishing, lumbering, canning, woodworking, and boat building. Little is known about the labor camps, in which Ukrainians constitute a high proportion of the inmates. The camps, at least six in number, belong to the Dalstroï system. Their inmates are employed in logging, mining, construction of military facilities, and submarine repairs.

Kamenetsky, Danylo [Kamenec'kyj], 1830–81. Publisher, folklorist, and civic figure. An active member of the St Petersburg Hromada, he managed P. Kulish's printing press and the journal **Osnova*. Thanks to his capable assistance, T. Shevchenko's Kobzar (1860), Marko Vovchok's Narodni opovidannia (Folk Stories, 1857), and other Ukrainian literary works appeared in print. Kamenetsky introduced popular booklets for the common people that were known as metelyky. He collected Ukrainian folk songs and published a collection of them entitled Ukrains'ki pisni z holosamy (Ukrainian Songs with Music, 1861).

Kamenetsky, Ihor [Kamenec'kyj], b 2 January 1927 in Rohatyn, Galicia. Political scientist. He immigrated to the United States in 1949 and received a PH D in political science from the University of Illinois, Urbana, in 1957. He has been a professor at Central Michigan University since 1957, specializing in comparative government and international relations. His major works are Hitler's Occupation of Ukraine 1941-1944: A Study of Totalitarian Imperialism (1956) and Secret Nazi Plans for Eastern Europe: A Study of Lebensraum Policy (1961).

Kameniar (Stonecutter). A republican publishing house of the State Committee of the Ukrainian SSR for Publishing, Printing, and the Book Trade. It was established in Lviv in 1939 as a book-editing firm and in 1940 became part of the Vilna Ukraina newspaper and magazine publishing house. In 1950 this firm was reorganized into the Lviv Oblast Book and Journal Publishing House, which in 1964 was turned into a republican publishing house and was named Kameniar. It published the journals Literatura i mystetstvo (1940-1), Radians'kyi L'viv (1945-51), and Zhovten' (1951-present). Its book publications include literary works of writers from Western Ukraine (mainly Lviv), children's literature and translations, regional studies, art books, and guidebooks for historical sites and museums. Many of its publications are political propaganda brochures for mass distribution.

Kamieniari (Stonecutters). A semimonthly newspaper published by the Free Organization of Ukrainian Teachers in Bukovyna from 1908 to 1914 in Chernivtsi. It was edited first by O. Ivanytsky and then by I. Karbulytsky and L. Yasinchuk. It was revived after the war and began to appear from 15 February 1921 under the editorship of I. Danylyevych. Besides professional and educational questions, the paper discussed broader social and political issues; it reached a wide public. Its contributors included Z. Kuzelia, O. Remez, K. Danyliuk, M. Milkovych, V. Kmitykevych, and M. Korduba. In early November 1922 the paper was banned by the Rumanian authorities.

Kamieniari (Stonecutters). A monthly magazine published by the Union of Ukrainian Progressive Youth from 1932 to 1939 in Lviv. Its editors were I. Luchyshyn and P. Kostiuk.

Kamieniari. See Union of Ukrainian Progressive Youth.

Kamiana baba. See Stone baba.

Kamiana Mohyla. A knoll of sandstone deposits from the Miocene epoch resembling a large kurhan, situated near Terpinia, Melitopil raion, Zaporizhia oblast. Beneath it several caves have been discovered containing petroglyphs of wild bulls, wolves, horses, and other animals, human beings, and geometric patterns dating back to the Upper Paleolithic and Mesolithic periods and the Bronze Age, when this was a site of religious worship. The caves were discovered by M. Veselovsky in 1890 and were investigated in 1936-8, the 1950s, and the 1970s. Neolithic campsites were also excavated nearby.

Kamianets [Kam'janec']. 1-4. Town smt (1972 pop 5,100) and raion center in Brest oblast, Belorussian SSR. Its previous name was Kamianets Lytovskiy. The town was founded in 1276 by Prince Volodymyr Vasylykovich of Volhynia. In the early 14th century it became part of the Grand Duchy of Lithuania. By the mid-17th century it had declined to an insignificant village. Of its former fortifications, only the medieval White Tower has been preserved. Kamianets and its environs are on Ukrainian ethnic territory, and in the Peace Treaty of Brest-Litovsk (1918) they were recognized as a part of Ukraine.

Kamianets-Podilskiy [Kam'ianec'-Podil's'kyj]. v-7. City (1985 pop 97,000) under oblast jurisdiction and raion center of Khmelnytskyi oblast, situated picturesquely on the Smotrych River in eastern Podilia.

First mentioned in an Armenian chronicle of the 11th century, when it belonged to Halych principality, the town was destroyed by the Mongols in 1240. In the 1360s it fell under the rule of the Lithuanian Koriatovych princes. In 1430 Poland gained control of the town; in 1432 it was granted the rights of Magdeburg law; and in 1463 it became the capital of Podilia voivodeship. Under the Poles it grew into a center of international trade and artisanry, second only to Lviv. Its wooden Rus' fortress was replaced in the 15th and 16th centuries by a large stone citadel, and the city was well fortified with walls and towers. It protected the southeastern frontier of the Polish Commonwealth from the Tatars and Turks. In 1463 Kamianets was proclaimed a royal city and was granted duty-free status.

Citadel in Kamianets-Podilskiy (14th-17th century)

The city's first inhabitants were Ukrainians and Armenians; eventually many Poles and Jews settled there. The Ukrainian, Armenian, and Lithuanian-Polish burghers each had municipal self-government, beginning in the Lithuanian period. Under the Poles, however, the Ukrainian citizens saw their rights diminished: in 1534 they were forced to live outside the city walls, and in 1670 the Ukrainian municipal council (magistrat) was united with the Polish council, in effect annulling Ukrainian self-government. During the *Cossack-Polish War the city was besieged by Cossack forces in 1648, 1651, and 1655. In 1672 the city was captured by Hetman P. Doroshenko and his Turkish allies; it remained in Turkish hands until 1699, when it was restored, with the rest of Podilia, to Poland by the Treaty of Karlowitz.

Under the Turks the city declined economically and demographically. Slow growth resumed under Russian rule in 1793. The city was a Russian vicegerency (1795-7) and gubernia (1797-1917) capital. In 1812 its citadel, which had been strengthened by the Turks, was dismantled. Because of the absence of a railway link (established only in 1914) the city remained primarily a center of trade and artisanship, with very little industry. Its population grew from 3,450 in 1793 (a third of what it had been in the mid-16th century) to 16,000 in 1820, 22,800 in 1860, 37,000 in 1893, and 50,000 on the eve of the First World War. It played a far greater role as the cultural capital of Podilia: an Orthodox brotherhood school had been established there in 1589; many prominent figures – eg, M. Leontovych, A. Svydnytsky, M. Kotsiubynsky, and S. Rudansky – studied at its theological seminary (est 1805); it had one of the first *Prosvita societies in Russian-ruled Ukraine; it was the home of a historical-archeological society and a historical-archeological museum, founded in 1890 by Ye. Sitsynsky; and it had 10 secondary schools and a theater.

Town hall in Kamianets-Podilskyi (16th–18th century)

Under Ukrainian rule (1917–20) the *Kamianets-Podilskyi Ukrainian State University was established there in the summer of 1918 by the Hetman government. In 1919 and 1920 the city served on several occasions as the seat of the Directory of the UNR and the government of the Western Ukrainian National Republic.

In November 1920 the city fell under Soviet rule and functioned as an okruha (1923–30) and oblast (1937–41) capital. After the destruction it had suffered during the First World War and Revolution, which was repeated during the Second World War, the city grew very slowly until the 1960s. In 1926 it had a population of 32,100, consisting of Ukrainians (45 percent), Jews (40 percent), Russians (7 percent), and Poles (6 percent). By 1959 its population had grown to 40,000, by 1970 to 57,000, and by 1979 to 84,000. In 1959 Ukrainians made up 71 percent of its population, Russians 21 percent, Poles 5 percent, and Jews 3 percent.

Today the city's industries produce auto parts, farm machinery, electrical machines and equipment, cables, tools, woodworking instruments, reinforced-concrete structures, asphalt, concrete, wall materials, cement, food products, furniture, textiles, and clothing. The city has a pedagogical institute (est 1921), an agricultural institute (est 1921), seven specialized secondary schools, three technical schools, a historical museum (since 1919), a botanical garden (est 1930), and a dendrological park.

The city's old town lies on a high plateau within a loop formed by the Smotrych River. Since 1948 it has been an all-Union state historical preserve. Located there are centuries-old narrow, winding streets and buildings, the citadel, which was separated from the rest of the town by a deep ravine and controlled access to it, remnants of the city walls, several towers, and the fortified Ruska and Polska gates.

Other architectural monuments have also been preserved in the city: the town hall (16th–18th century), St Nicholas's Church (1280, the oldest Armenian church in Ukraine), the Church of St John the Baptist (16th century), the Church of ss Peter and Paul (15th–16th century), a late Renaissance Dominican church, the Catholic Gothic cathedral (late 15th century) with a minaret added in the Turkish period, and a number of Renaissance and baroque buildings.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Setsinskii, E. Gorod Kamenets-Podol'skii (Kiev 1895)
 Plamenyts'ka, Ie.; Vynokur, I.; Khotiun, H.; Medvedovs'kyi, I. Kam'ianets' Podil's'kyi (Kiev 1968)
Kam'ianets' Podil's'kyi: Putivnyk (Lviv 1970)

V. Kubijovyč

Kamianets-Podilskyi Agricultural Institute (Kamianets-Podilskyi silskohospodarskyi instytut). An institution of higher learning under the Ministry of Agriculture of the USSR. It was separated from the Kamianets-Podilskyi Ukrainian State University and turned into an independent institution in 1921. In the 1920s all lectures were given in Ukrainian. In 1924–8 the institute published five volumes of Zapysky. At the end of the 1920s and during the 1930s many of its faculty, including M. Velychkiivsky, I. Oliinyk, V. Khramevych, O. Melnyk, S. Pliuiko, N. Homorak, M. Herashchenko, P. Nalyvaiko, and V. Zhyvan, were arrested and imprisoned. Today the institute has six faculties: agronomy, zoological engineering, veterinary science, economics, agricultural mechanization, and upgrading for farm managers and specialists. The institute has a graduate program. The enrollment in 1979 was 5,300, of which 2,360 were correspondence students.

Kamianets-Podilskyi Historical Museum and Preserve (Kamianets-Podilskyi istorychnyi muzei-zapovidnyk). A museum and preserve that dates back to the Depository of Antiquities established in 1890 by the Podilia Church Historical Archeological Society. Many of the old manuscripts and exponents from the original museum were transferred to Kiev in the 1930s or destroyed during the Second World War. After the war the museum was reopened and reorganized. Today its collection (some 89,000 items in 1979) is housed in three historic buildings: articles relating to the history of the city and Podilia are located in the remains of the 14th-century castle; the division of the history of religion and atheism is housed in the 15th-century Roman Catholic cathedral; and the fine-art collections are housed in the 16th-century town hall. In recent years the museum and preserve has been developed as a major tourist center.

Kamianets-Podilskyi oblast. See Khmelnytskyi oblast.

Kamianets-Podilskyi Pedagogical Institute (Kamianets-Podilskyi derzhavnyi pedahohichnyi instytut im. V. Zatonkoho). An institution of higher education under the Education Ministry of the Ukrainian SSR. It was formed in 1948 out of the Kamianets-Podilskyi Teachers' Institute (1935–48), whose origin can be traced back to the Kamianets-Podilskyi Ukrainian State University (1918–21), the Kamianets-Podilskyi Institute of People's Education (1921–30), and the Kamianets-Podilskyi Institute of Social Education (1930–4). The institute has (1982) six faculties: philology, history, physical education, physics and mathematics, elementary education, and part-time studies. The regular program is four years, but in the faculties of history, physics and mathematics, and part-time studies it is five. In 1979 the enrollment was 3,700.

Kamianets-Podilskyi Ukrainian State University (Kamianets-Podilskyi derzhavnyi ukrainskyi universytet). An institution of higher education founded in the period of Ukraine's independence. It was organized thanks to the initiative of gubernial zemstvo and municipal council leaders such as O. Pashchenko, V. Prykhodko, K. Solukha, and O. Shulminsky, and was chartered by Hetman P. Skoropadsky on 22 October 1918. I. *Ohiienko, one of the university's organizers, became rector. It was divided into five faculties: history and philology (headed by L. Biletsky), natural sciences and mathematics (headed by P. Buczyński), theology (headed by V. Bidnov), law (opened in fall 1919 and headed by Kh. Lebid-Yurchyk), and agriculture (opened in fall 1919 and headed by S. Bachynsky). By summer 1920 there were 65 scholars – including 11 professors and 25 docents – on the faculty, and the enrollment, 80 percent of which was Ukrainian, reached 1,400. Besides the names mentioned above, the more prominent faculty members included D. Doroshenko, M. Drai-Khmara, M. Fedorov, P. Klymenko, O. Mytsiuk, M. Plevako, S. Ostapenko, M. Vikul, and the chaplain, Archpriest Yu. Sitsinsky. When the Bolsheviks gained control of the city at the end of 1920, the theology and law faculties were abolished. In the following year the other faculties were separated and reorganized into the Kamianets-Podilskyi Institute of People's Education and the Kamianets-Podilskyi Agricultural Institute. Some of the professors emigrated and joined the faculties of Ukrainian higher schools in Prague or the staff of Ukrainian research institutes in Warsaw and Berlin. Others stayed behind and continued to teach at the new institutes. Many of them were purged in the 1930s and disappeared in prison or exile.

Kamiani Mohyly Nature Reserve (Zapovidnyk Kamiani Mohyly). A branch of the *Ukrainian Steppe Nature Reserve. Covering an area of 356 ha, the reserve lies in the Azov Upland near Rozivka, Volodarske raion, Donetsk oblast. Rising up to 150 m above the surrounding steppe, it constitutes a miniature highland region built of gray granite, gneiss, and syenite and overlaid by a rocky steppe with many endemic plant species. The reserve was founded in 1927 and became a state reserve under the jurisdiction of the Academy of Sciences in 1951.

Kamianka [Kam'janka]. iv-13. Town (1972 pop 14,600) and raion center in Cherkasy oblast, situated on the Tiasmyn River. It was founded in the early 17th century. Its industries produce machinery, building materials, foodstuffs, and alcohol.

Kamianka [Kam'janka]. v-9. Town smt (1972 pop 12,500) and raion center in the Moldavian SSR, situated on the left bank of the Dniester River. Viticulture and fruit growing are the main occupations in the region. According to the 1926 census, Ukrainians constituted 46.6 percent and Rumanians 38.4 percent of the population in Kamianka raion.

Kamianka Dormition Monastery. A monastery located on the Snov River, near Kamianka khutir, Novozybkov county, in northern Chernihiv gubernia. It was founded in 1681 by the local starosta I. Bolkhovsky with funds provided by Hetman I. Mazepa. Originally a men's monastery, it was closed in 1764 and reopened in 1786 as a convent. The convent was closed permanently after the Revolution of 1917. Its cathedral housed a famous icon of the Mother of God.

Kamianka fortified settlement (Kamianske horodyshche). The ruins of a large (almost 12 km long) fortified settlement located on the left (east) bank of the Dnieper River opposite the present-day city of Nykopol in Zaporizhia oblast. The site was excavated by D. Serdiukov in 1899–1900 and by B. Grakov in 1938–41 and 1944–50. Large, wooden ground dwellings and pit dwellings and an acropolis were excavated. This trading and metalworking center was probably Ateas's capital. It is the largest Scythian settlement discovered in Ukraine after *Bilske. Beyond its walls other settlements of that and later periods and a burial ground of the *Cherniakhiv culture were found. The inhabitants of the settlement engaged in farming, animal herding, and trade, particularly with the Hellenic colonies on the Black Sea coast. The settlement was abandoned, except for the acropolis, in the 3rd century BC. At the beginning of the 18th century the fortress Kamiani Zaton was built on the site by Peter I to defend against Tatar incursions. Most of the ruins are now submerged by the Kakhivka Reservoir. The settlement has been described in books by B. Grakov (1954) and I. Griaznov (1978).

Kamianka-Buzka [Kam'janka-Buz'ka]. iii-5. City (1968 pop 9,200) and raion center on the Buh River in Lviv oblast. It was first mentioned as the village of Dymoshyn in 1406. In the 1440s it was renamed Kaminka, and in 1485 Kaminka Strumylova, after Yu. Strumylo, Lviv's palatine and the town's former starosta, who had a castle built and obtained the right of Magdeburg law for the town in 1471. The town became an important crafts and trading center situated on the routes from Kiev and Volhynia to Lviv and Poland. It was destroyed during the Cossack-Polish War of 1648–57. Under Austrian rule it lost the right of Magdeburg law in 1786 and declined. From 1867 to 1939 it was a county center. It had a Prosvita society from 1892 and a People's Home from 1911. In 1939 its population was 9,600 (3,100 Ukrainian, 3,850 Jews, and 2,550 Poles); 5,830 (including virtually all of the Jews) were killed during the war, and 3,200 were forcibly taken to work in Germany. Under Soviet rule it received its present name in 1944. Parquetry (famous throughout the USSR), lumber, clothing, linen, bricks, and food products are made there. The city's Church of the Nativity of the Virgin Mary (1882) and wooden St Nicholas's Church (1667) have been preserved. The Basilian Sisters' Annunciation Monastery existed there until 1782.

Kamianka-Dniprovska [Kam'janka-Dniprovs'ka]. vi-15. Town (1972 pop 16,900) on the left bank of the Kakhivka Reservoir and a raion center in Zaporizhia oblast. Founded in 1793, until 1920 it was called Mala Znamianka. Near the city the large Scythian *Kamianka fortified settlement of the late 5th to the late 3rd centuries BC was discovered.

Kamianske. See Dniprodzerzhynske.

Kamiński, Franciszek, b 9 October 1851 in Lublin, d 16 September 1912 in Warsaw. Polish botanist. Kamiński studied at Warsaw (1870–1) and Strasbourg (PH D 1875) universities, then taught botany at Lviv University, the Lviv Polytechnical Institute, and the Lviv Higher Veterinary School (1877–83). In 1888 he became a professor at Odessa University and from 1895 he also directed the Odessa Botanical Garden. Kamiński published over 40 scientific works in plant anatomy and morphology and floristics. He also researched the flora of Crimea, grape diseases, and the adaptability of osiers in southern Ukraine. He became famous for his description of the phenomenon of mycorrhiza (1880) and his studies on Indian pipe (Monotropa uniflora).

Kamin-Koshyrskiy [Kamin'-Košyrs'kyj]. II-5. Town (1970 pop 6,300) and raion center in Volhynia oblast, situated on the Tsyur River in western Polisia. First mentioned as Kosher in historical sources under the year 1196, it received the rights of Magdeburg law in 1430. Logging and woodworking are its main industries. The wooden Church of the Nativity, built in 1723, is preserved there.

Kaminka-Strumyl'ova. See Kamianka-Buzka.

Kaminka-Strumyl'ova Gospel. A manuscript gospel transcribed from a south-Slavic source in 1411 in Kaminka-Strumyl'ova (now Kamianka-Buzka), a town on the Buh river in the Galician-Volhynian Principality. It is preserved in the Central Scientific Library in Kiev. Its language contains some traces of Volhynian dialects. The work was described by G. Kryzhanovsky in Rukopisnye evangeliia v kievskikh knigokhranilishchakh (Manuscript Gospels in Kievan Libraries, 1889), and its language was analyzed by him in an article published in Volynskie eparhial'nye vedomosti, 1886, nos 17–18.

Kaminsky, Anatol [Kamins'kyj, Anatol'], b 17 May 1925 in Koshliaky, Zbarazh county, Galicia. Publicist and political figure. A graduate of the Ukrainian Free University in Munich and the London School of Economics and Political Science, he is a contributor to Ukrains'kyi samostiinyk and Suchasnist'. He is a member of the Political Council of the OUN, and since 1982 of the Presidium of the External Representation of the *Ukrainian Supreme Liberation Council. Having worked many years for the *Prolog Research Corporation in New York, in 1984 he became editor in chief of the Ukrainian desk at Radio Liberty in Munich. As a publicist he has written several books on the political struggle for Ukrainian independence: Na novomu etapi (On a New Standpoint, 1965), Za suchasnu kontseptsiiu ukrains'koï revoliutsii (For a Contemporary Concept of the Ukrainian Revolution, 1970), Dynamika vyzvol'noi borot'by (Dynamics of Liberation Struggle, 1973), and Do perspektyv nashoi polityky (Toward a Perspective on Our Politics, 1977).

Kaminsky, Andrii [Kamins'kyj, Andrii] (pseud: Pidesha), b 1873 in Galicia, d 1957 in Yugoslavia and buried in Maribor. Priest, pedagogue, and publicist. From 1906 to 1918 he was a coeditor of the newspaper Svoboda in the United States. After the First World War he settled in Yugoslavia and in his writings propagated Slavophile ideas, particularly the idea of Ukrainian and Russian cooperation against Polish and German expansionism in Eastern Europe. He wrote a novel about student life, Vostok i Zapad (The East and the West, 1903), and numerous popular political booklets such as Halychchyna piemontom (Galicia as the Piedmont, 1924), Zahačka Ukraïny i Halychchyny (The Riddle of Ukraine and Galicia, 1927), Narodnyky i obshcherosy (Populists and All-Russians, 1930), and Synteza ukrainstva i rusofil'stva (The Synthesis of Ukrainianism and Russophilism, 1937).

Kaminsky, Bonifatii [Kamins'kyj, Bonifatii], b 1873? in Pryluka, Poltava gubernia, d 1919 in Kiev. Community and political leader. He was one of the founders of the Revolutionary Ukrainian party and later a member of the Ukrainian Social Democratic Workers' party. He worked for the Kherson zemstvo (1914–17) and then for the All-Ukrainian Zemstvo Union.

Kaminsky, Fedir [Kamins'kyj], b 1845 in Minsk gubernia, d 1 April 1891 in Kruhlyk, Lubni county, Poltava gubernia. Archeologist. Kaminsky studied at Kiev University and then worked as a teacher in Pereiaslav, Khorol, Lubni, and Pryluky. In 1873 he was the first to excavate a Paleolithic site in Ukraine, at *Hintsy in the Poltava region. His discoveries were published in the proceedings (Trudy) of the Third Archeological Congress in Kiev, and sparked interest in the study of Paleolithic monuments in Eastern Europe. He also excavated monuments in the region of Lubni, particularly Scythian kurhans. He contributed articles to the journal Kievskaiia starina.

Kaminsky, Viacheslav [Kamins'kyj, Vjačeslav], 1869–1938? Ethnographer; a specialist in Ukrainian customary law. For over 10 years he was the secretary of the VUAN Commission for the Study of Ukraine's Customary Law. Kaminsky contributed articles to the commission's series Pratsi Komisii ... and to the journals Etnohrafichnyi visnyk and Zapysky Istorychno-filolohichnogo viddil' VUAN; a separate collection of his essays appeared as Narysy zvyčaiievoho prava Ukraïny (Sketches of the Customary Law of Ukraine, 1928). Kaminsky was arrested by the Soviet authorities in 1934 and died in prison.

Kaminsky, Yosyf [Kamins'kyj, Josyf], b 17 November 1878 in Rakovec nad Odnovou, Zemplén county, Hungary, d 1944 in Uzhhorod, Transcarpathia. Priest, editor, lawyer; pro-Hungarian political leader. In 1920 he helped found the opposition Autonomous Agricultural Union, but in 1923 went over to the pro-government Agrarian party and won a seat in parliament (1924–5). Turning against the regime, he returned to the Autonomous Agricultural Union and published his own paper, Karpatorusskii golos (1932–4), and edited calendars for the Dukhnovych Society. In 1939, upon Hungary's occupation of Transcarpathia, he was appointed to the Upper House of the Hungarian Parliament. He disappeared when the Red Army entered Hungary in 1944. Besides some brief studies on local history, his publications include Natsional'noe samosoznanie nashogo naroda (The National Self-consciousness of Our People, 1925) and Istoriia Tsentral'noi russkoi narodnoi rady (A History of the Central Russian People's Council, 1927).

Kampov, Pavlo, b 21 September 1929 in Dilok, Transcarpathia. Dissident. A graduate of Uzhhorod University (1952), he taught mathematics at the university. In 1970 he stood as an unofficial candidate in the elections to the Supreme Soviet of the Ukrainian SSR. He was arrested and sentenced to six years in prison and three years of exile for his booklet Dvadtsiat' piat' rokiv nadii i rozcharovan' (Twenty-five Years of Hopes and Disappointments). Because of severe illness, he was released in 1977, two years before completing his term. In 1981 he was arrested again and sentenced to 10 years in prison and 3 years of exile. He became almost totally blind at the Lviv labor camp. His samvydav book Vykhovuvaty liudei dobrymy (To Educate People to Be Good) and his letters, protests, and appeals to the authorities are widely circulated in Ukraine.

Kamula. iv-5. A hill situated southeast of Lviv in the western part of the *Holohory and marking the highest point (471 m) of the Podolian Upland.

Kanada (Canada). Weekly newspaper published from 2 September 1913 to 4 January 1915 in Winnipeg by the Ruthenian Publishing Company, which was organized by such prominent Ukrainian members of the Conservative party as T. Stefanyk, P. Gigeichuk, and H. Bodnar. Its editors were I. Sluzar and N. Bachynsky. The paper was subsidized by the Conservative party in Manitoba, and it portrayed the party as a friend of the Ukrainian farmer. Kanada attacked vehemently all Ukrainian leaders and organizations except for Bishop N. Budka and the Ukrainian Catholic church. Its most known contributor was P. *Karmansky.

Kanadiis'ka Sich (The Canadian Sitch). Ukrainian monthly published from 15 April 1928 to 15 August 1930 in Winnipeg by the *Canadian Sitch Organization and edited by V. Bosy. The paper propagated a monarchist ideology based on the writings of V. *Lypynsky, and featured an English-language section under the motto 'Work and Order.' Altogether 19 issues were published.

Kanadiiskaia nyva (The Canadian Field). A Russo-ophile religious and political fortnightly published from September 1908 to 1910 in Winnipeg and from 1909 also in Edmonton. The publisher and editor was Hegumen A. Chekhovtsev, who was assisted by M. Gowda. An organ of the Russian Orthodox Mission in Canada, the purpose of the newspaper was to attract Orthodox, and even Catholic, Ukrainians to the Russian church and to gain their support for the tsarist regime. It was printed in Ukrainian with Russian transliteration.

Kanadiiskaia pravoslavnaia Rus' (Canadian Orthodox Rus'). An anti-Ukrainian religious and political fortnightly published from 28 September 1916 to 1917 in Winnipeg by the Russian Orthodox Mission in Canada. The tabloid was printed mainly in Russian with a few articles in Ukrainian. It contained mostly political articles by Archimandrite A. Fylypovsky and V. Hladyk, which denied the distinctiveness of the Ukrainian people and propagated Russian patriotism. The paper's appearance marked the beginning of independence for the Russian Orthodox Church in Canada.

Kanadiis'kyi farmer (Canadian Farmer). First Ukrainian-language newspaper in Canada, published weekly in Winnipeg from 12 November 1903 to 9 November 1981. Its first owner was the North West Publishing Company formed by K. Genik, I. Bodrug, and I. Negrich. During its first decade it was subsidized by the Liberal party, and it maintained essentially a pro-Liberal policy until 1963. An advocate of Ukraine's independence, the paper was a staunch opponent of Communism and a strong supporter of the Ukrainian Canadian Committee. Except for a brief period (1928–32) when it belonged to the National Press, a pro-Conservative group led by H. Kurdydyk and L. Biberovych, it was owned from 1913 to 1973 by F. Dojaček and his sons. In 1966 an American edition of the paper, Vil'nyi sviit, appeared. In the fall of 1973 it was purchased by Trident Press, the publisher of Ukrains'kyi holos, with which it was amalgamated in 1981. Its editors included I. Negrich, O. Megas, A. Novak, O. Hykavy (1913–32, 1944–5), M. Hykavy (1945–61), M. Shkavrytko (1963–73), B. Martynovych (1974–8), and Yu. Mulyk-Lutsyk (1978–81). Between 1929 and 1969 the circulation was approximately 15,000.

Kanadiis'kyi farmer

Kanadiis'kyi ranok (Canadian Morning). Ukrainian religious newspaper published from 19 October 1920 to 31 August 1961. It was set up through the merger of the Methodist Kanadyiets' and the Presbyterian **Ranok*. Subsidized by the United Church of Canada, until 1932 the paper appeared monthly and thereafter semimonthly. It followed a moderate editorial policy and covered not only religious issues but also cultural and social developments in Canada and Ukraine. Among its editors were D. Pynch, Z. Bychynsky, M. Karabut, M. Berezynsky, I. Kovalevych, and L. Standret. When the United Church withdrew its support, the Ukrainian Evangelical Alliance of North America assumed responsibility for it and changed its name to **levanhel's'kyi ranok*.

Kanadiis'kyi rusyn. See Kanadiis'kyi ukrainets'.

Kanadiis'kyi ukrainets' (Canadian Ukrainian). Ukrainian Catholic weekly inspired by Metropolitan A. Sheptytsky. It began publication on 27 May 1911 in Winnipeg under the name Kanadiis'kyi rusyn (Canadian Ruthenian). Financed until 1916 by St Boniface diocese under Archbishop A. Langevin, it sought to neutralize the influence of Protestant, Russian Orthodox, and secular ideas within the Ukrainian Canadian community. Supported by Bishop N. Budka, it was an important organ of the Ukrainian Catholic church. In April 1919 it was renamed Kanadiis'kyi ukrainets'. Burdened with debts resulting from costly libel suits by the Ukrainian Greek Orthodox church during the 1920s, it was sold to a private company in 1927. The last issue appeared on 11 March 1931. Among its editors were M. Syroidiv, O. Sushko, I. Petrushevych, Rev M. Zalitch, Rev P. Oleksiv, R. Kremar, I. Rudachek, T. Martsiniv, A. Zahariichuk, V. Bosy, and V. Biberovych.

Kanadyiets' (The Canadian). Religious newspaper published semimonthly from January 1912 to June 1920 in Edmonton. It was edited by M. Belegai and subsidized by the Methodist church. The paper contained expositions of the Bible, articles on the history of Protestantism, attacks on the Catholic church, and practical information for farmers. It paid little attention to developments in Ukraine or in Ukrainian-Canadian communities and, therefore, found few readers. In 1920 it was merged with the Presbyterian paper **Ranok* to form **Kanadiis'kyi ranok*.

Kandyba. Name of a Cossack starshyna family originally from Right-Bank Ukraine that later settled in the Konotip region. Andronyk's descendants Semen, Mykhailo, and Petro all served as captains of Pishchane company in Cherkasy regiment in the mid-18th century. Fedir was colonel of Korsun regiment (1669–72), captain of Konotip regiment (from 1681), and then Nizhen regimental quartermaster (1698–1700). He participated in the Chyhyryn (1677–8) and Crimean (1687, 1689) campaigns against the Turks. His son Andronyk (Andrii, d 1730) was captain of Konotip regiment (1698–1707), colonel of the Korsun regiment (1708–9), and later general judge (1729). He was interned in Moscow from 1710 to 1715 for supporting I. Mazepa's alliance with Sweden against Russia.

Ivan Kandyba

Kandyba, Ivan, b 7 July 1930 in Stoino, Podlachia (now in Poland). Dissident, active in the national and human rights movements in Ukraine. A graduate of Lviv University, he practiced law until his arrest in 1961. He was accused of treason and anti-Soviet agitation and propaganda for having organized with L. *Lukianenko the Ukrainian Workers' and Peasants' Union and having raised the issue of Ukraine's right to secede from the USSR. Kandyba served 15 years in strict-regime labor camps in Mordovia. His account of his trial and similar political trials in the 1950s, titled Za pravdu i spravedlyvist' (For Truth and Justice), was smuggled out of prison and published in the West. After being released in 1976, Kandyba made every effort to emigrate. In 1976 he became a founding member of the *Ukrainian Helsinki Group. This led to his arrest in 1977 and to the maximum sentence of 10 years in prison and 5 years of exile for anti-Soviet agitation and propaganda.

Kandyba, Oleh. See Olzhych, Oleh.

Kandyba, Oleksander. See Oles, Oleksander.

Kaniuk, Serhii [Kanjuk, Serhij], b 15 July 1880 in Khlyvyshche, Kitsman county, Bukovyna, d 15 March 1945 in Karaganda, Kazakhstan. Bukovynian political leader and publicist. By profession a teacher and an inspector of primary schools, he led the left wing of the Social Democratic party of Bukovyna. In 1918 he helped organize the Communist Party of Bukovyna. He was the publisher and editor of the pro-Soviet weeklies Volia narodu (1919–20) and Hromada (1921), which appeared in Chernivtsi. In 1922 he immigrated to the Ukrainian SSR, where he served in the People's Commissariat of Education. Kaniuk's publications include brochures in defense of Bukovynian Ukrainians such as Pid chobotom rumuns'kykh boiar (Under the Heel of Rumanian Boyars, 1930) and Bukovyna v rumuns'kii nevoli (Bukovyna in Rumanian Captivity, 1930), short stories, and pedagogical articles. In the 1930s he was imprisoned and died in a labor camp.

Kaniv: Shevchenko Museum (designed by V. Krychevsky and P. Kostyrko, 1934–7)

Kaniv. IV-12. City (1971 pop 18,800) under oblast jurisdiction, raion center in Cherkasy oblast, situated on the right bank of the Dnieper River (now the Kaniv Reservoir). One of the most important cities in Kievan Rus', it was mentioned in the Kievan Cave Patericon as existing in the last half of the 11th century. Kaniv arose on the site of, or near, the fortified city of *Roden. From the middle of the 12th century it was an important trade center on the Dnieper route to Constantinople (until the latter's capture by the Turks in 1453), the residence of various appanage princes and of Mstyslav Mstyslavych and Roman Mstyslavych, and a fortress defending the frontier of Rus' and traders from Cuman invaders. Under Lithuanian rule (1362–1596) it was governed by *starostas. In 1556 it was granted the rights of Magdeburg law. In the Cossack period it was a regimental center (1637–78). Under Russian rule (from 1793) it was a county town in Kiev gubernia (1838–1917). In the summer of 1920 UNR and Bolshevik forces fought each other there. Kaniv was also a raion center in Kiev gubernia (1923–5), Cherkasy okruha (1925–30), and Kiev oblast (1932–54). Today food production, an electromechanical plant, and the *Kaniv Hydroelectric Station are the mainstays of the city's economy. Located there are a cultural-educational school, a vocational-technical school, and a museum of decorative folk art. St George's (or Dormition) Cathedral, built in 1144 by Vsevolod Olhovych, has been preserved there to this day. The *Kaniv Museum-Preserve, where T. Shevchenko is buried, the *Kaniv Nature and Historical Reserve, and the archeological sites of *Kniazha Hora and the *Kaniv settlement are located nearby.

V. Kubijovyc

Kaniv Hills. A range of hills, 3–9 km wide, forming the eastern edge of the Dnieper Upland. They extend a distance of 70 km, from Trakhtemyriv to the mouth of the Ros River, and are clearly demarcated from the rest of the Dnieper Upland. The hills are 80–255 m high and descend steeply (down to 160 m) to the Dnieper River. They consist of Triassic, chalk, and Tertiary strata that were dislocated by the Dnieper glacier and are dissected by numerous ravines. Their slopes are covered with forest. The *Kaniv Nature and Historical Reserve and the *Kaniv Museum-Preserve, where T. Shevchenko is buried, are located there.

Kaniv Hydroelectric Station. One of stations of the Dnieper Cascade of Hydroelectric Stations, built near Kaniv between 1963 and 1975. Its 24 turbine generators (total capacity: 444,000 kW) produce an annual average output of 323 million kWh.

Kaniv Museum-Preserve (Kanivskiy muzei-zapovidnyk 'Mohyla T.H. Shevchenka'). A park containing the grave of Ukraine's greatest poet and national figure, T. *Shevchenko, and a museum dedicated to his memory, located near the city of Kaniv on Tarasova (formerly Chernecha) Hill. A monument by K. Tereshchenko was first erected on Shevchenko's grave in 1923. The park was created in 1925 by government decree. In 1939 a new, bronze monument to the poet by the sculptor M. Manizer was erected, and the museum, designed by the architects V. Krychevsky and P. Kostyrko, was opened. Destroyed during the Second World War by the German army, the museum and the monument were rebuilt. Both are major tourist attractions.

Kaniv Museum-Preserve: Monument to Taras Shevchenko

Kaniv Nature and Historical Reserve (Kanivskiy pryrodnycho-istorychnyi zapovidnyk). A reserve located on the right bank of the Dnieper River near Kaniv in Cherkasy oblast. Established in 1931 as the National Forest Steppe Reserve, it was renamed the Middle Dnieper National Reserve in 1934 and the Kaniv Biogeographical Reserve in 1939 before assuming its present name in 1948. It has an area of 1,035 ha. The reserve is located in the northern part of the Ukrainian *forest-steppe region in the *Kaniv Hills. Forests, mainly elm and oak, predominate. The hills are broken by deep ravines, where several geological strata, containing fossils of some extinct plants and animals, are visible. The fauna of the reserve is typical of the forest-steppe; the most common animals are roe deer, badger, and marten. Approximately 275 species of birds are also found there. The Kaniv reserve is rich in historical artifacts. Archeological research has uncovered artifacts from the late Paleolithic and Neolithic eras, the Trypilian culture, and Scythian settlements, and some traces of Antes and Polianian tombs.

Kaniv Reservoir. A reservoir created in 1972 by the dams of the Kaniv Hydroelectric Station on the Dnieper River. It is 162 km long and up to 5 km wide and has a

KANIV RESERVOIR

- A. Railway line
- B. Kaniv-Bila Tserkva underground canal

Large star indicates hydroelectric station; small stars are river ports.

surface area of 675 sq km, a volume of 2.6 cu km, and an average depth of 5.5 m. Together with the *Kakhivka and *Kiev reservoirs it has created a deep-water route on the Dnieper, allowing sea ships to sail upstream as far as the Prypiat River.

Kaniv settlement. An ancient Slavic settlement dating back to the 7th–9th centuries AD, situated along the right bank of the Dnieper River near the city of Kaniv. Excavations carried out in 1957–62 uncovered the remains of pit dwellings and semi-pit dwellings containing ovens and sleeping platforms, fragments of pottery ware and farm implements, iron knives, fishing hooks, arrowheads, and bronze and glass ornaments. The inhabitants of the settlement lived by farming and herding, supplemented by hunting and fishing, and practiced pottery and metalworking.

Kantemyrivka settlements and burial site. Early Slavic settlements and burial ground of the *Cherniakhiv culture (2nd–6th centuries AD), situated near Kantemyrivka, Chutove raion, Poltava oblast. Excavations of the site in 1924 and 1948 uncovered the remains of a storage shed, three kurhans with a catacomb, a niche, and a pit burial, and 10 other graves. Remnants of earthen and glass ware, bone combs, bronze fibulas and buckles, glass counters, gold ornaments, and iron fishing rods were found in the graves.

Kantianism. The distinctive system of philosophy developed by I. Kant (1724–1804). In Ukraine it received some attention, but never gained much of a following among thinkers. Information on Kant's philosophy was disseminated mostly by followers of F. Schelling and G. Hegel (see *Hegelianism) such as J. Schad in Kharkiv. Some of Kant's doctrines were expounded by P. Lodi in his Logicheskie nastaveniia rukovodstvuiushchiiia k poznaniuu i razlichiiu istinnogo ot lozhnogo (Logical Rules Leading to the Understanding of and Distinction between Truth and Falsehood, 1915) and by V. Dovhovich in his Extractus systematis Kantiani (manuscript). In the 1830s and 1840s Kant's philosophy was studied at the Kiev Theological Academy from a historical point of view. Graduates of the academy such as S. Hohotsky and P. Yurkevych devoted some attention to Kant: the first wrote Kriticheskii vzgliad na filosofiiu Kanta (A Critical View of Kant's Philosophy, 1847) and the second 'Razum po ucheniiu Platona i opyt po ucheniiu Kanta' (Reason According to Plato's Teaching and Experience According to Kant's Teaching, 1865). Towards the end of the century two professors of Kiev University analyzed certain Kantian doctrines: A. Kozlov published Genesis teorii prostranstva i vremeni Kanta (The Genesis of Kant's Theory of Space and Time, 1884) and G. Chelpanov published Istoriia osnovnykh voprosov etiki (History of the Fundamental Problems of Ethics, 1897). Kant had a certain positivist influence on the later works of V. Lesevych. Some work on Kant was done at Odessa University: professor M. Lange discussed Kant in his Istoriia nraivstvennykh idei XIX v. (History of Moral Ideas of the 19th Century, 1888), and M. Hordiievsky published 'Kriticheskii razbor dvukh pervykh antinomii Kanta' (A Critical Analysis of Kant's First Two Antinomies, 1910) in the university's Zapiski. B. Kistiakovsky's theory of method in the social sciences owes much to modern German Kantianism. A Ukrainian translation of Kant's Prolegomena to Any Future Metaphysics, edited and introduced by I. Mirchuk, was published in 1930.

D. Chyzhevsky, T. Zakydalsky

Kaolin. A soft white clay consisting of the mineral kaolinite and varying amounts of other minerals. It is used in the making of porcelain, china, refractories, paper, rubber, paint, cosmetics, and many other products. Kaolin is widespread in the Ukrainian Crystalline Shield, and small deposits are found in Transcarpathia and Subcarpathia. Of about 1,000 deposits in Ukraine, only 12 are mined. The largest ones are near Hlukhivtsi in Vinnytsia oblast, Prosiana in Dnipropetrovske oblast, and Polohy in Zaporizhia oblast. Kaolins mined in Ukraine account for 85 percent of all Soviet production.

Pylp Kapelhorodsky

Kapelhorodsky, Pylp [Kapel'horods'kyj], b 26 November 1882 in Horodyshe, Lebedyn county, Kharkiv gubernia, d 21 November 1942. Writer and journalist. A student at the Poltava Theological Seminary (1897–1902), he was persecuted for his revolutionary activity by the tsarist authorities. From 1904 he lived in the Kuban and worked as a teacher and journalist. After the 1917 Revolution he returned to Ukraine. In the 1920s he worked for newspapers in Lubni and Poltava and belonged to the peasant writers' organization Pluh. His first poems were published in the 1905 almanac Persha lastivka. In 1907 his book Ukrainci na Kubani (Ukrainians in the Kuban) and the poetry collection Vidhuky zhyttia (Echoes of Life) appeared. In the late 1920s he published three short collections of satirical and humorous prose and the novella Neporozuminnia (Misunderstanding, 1928). His novel-chronicle about the revolution in the Kuban, Shurhan, appeared in 1932. Kapelhorodsky was repressed during the *Yezhov terror and rehabilitated after J. Stalin's death. A collection of his works was published in Kiev in 1961.

Kapelle (Ukrainian: kapelia). An ensemble of singers or instrumentalists or both. Kapellen originated in Ukraine in the 15th century as church-choir ensembles. In the 16th and 17th centuries, choral-instrumental or purely instrumental kapellen, performing both sacred and secular music, appeared. From the 16th century on, choral kapellen were organized at the bursas (residences) of brotherhood schools and at metropolitans' cathedrals. Manor kapellen, primarily at the palaces of hetmans, arose in the 17th century. During the 19th and early 20th centuries, itinerant choral ensembles were organized by such composers and conductors as M. Lysenko, Ya. Kalishevsky, H. Davydovsky, and K. Stetsenko. Professional ensembles, which emerged later, included the *Ukrainian Republican Kapelle (1919–21, conductor O. Koshyts), the DUMKA choral kapelle (1919–), the Poltava Banduryst Kapelle (1925–35), the State Ukrainian Choir in Kharkiv (DUKh, 1920s), the Kiev Banduryst Kapelle (1918–35), the State Banduryst Kapelle of the Ukrainian SSR (1935–) in Kiev, and the Ukrainian Bandurist Chorus in Detroit. Among the best-known amateur ensembles are those of the Kiev Polytechnical Institute and the Donets Railroad.

Kapishovsky, Vasyl [Kapišovs'kyj, Vasył'], b 7 July 1914 in Komloš (now Chmelova) in the Bardejov district in Eastern Slovakia. Pedagogue and Communist Party activist. He has been a Party functionary since 1945. From 1946 to 1948 he directed Ukrainian schools in Slovakia. He has also been a delegate to the Slovak national council and, since 1969, a delegate to the federal national congress. From 1963 to 1968 he headed the Central Committee of the *Cultural Association of Ukrainian Workers in Czechoslovakia. After the Soviet invasion in 1968 he was accused of 'bourgeois nationalism.' He has written several socioeconomic studies and cultural histories of the Ukrainian minority in the Prešov region, including Skhidnia Slovachchyna vchora i s'ohodni (Eastern Slovakia, Past and Present, 1983).

Kapitula, Dmytro, b 14 October 1873 in Sviatkova Velyka, Jasło county, Galicia, d 25 December 1953 in McAdoo, Pennsylvania. One of the first Ukrainian community leaders in the United States. Settling in the United States in 1888, he served as president of the *Ukrainian National Association (1908–17) and then as chairman of its auditing committee (1933–53). He was one of the founding members of the Ukrainian Congress Committee of America.

Kapka, Dmytro (real name: Kapkunov), b 7 November 1898 in Kiev, d 23 October 1977 in Kiev. Comic actor. He began to perform on the stage of the State People's Theater in 1918 and then sang in the choir DUMKA. He studied film acting in Warsaw. From 1923 to 1964, except for the 1930s, he worked in the cinema, appearing in such roles as Smith in Pidozrilyi bahazh (Suspicious Baggage, 1926), the doll merchant in Iahidky kokhannia (The Berries of Love, 1926), Matnia in Mykola Dzheria (1927), Kozhukh in Bohdan Khmel'nyts'kyi (1941), and Tkach in Vechori na khutori bilia Dykan'ky (Evenings at the Khutori near Dykanka, 1961).

Kapkan, Yurii, 1875–? Senior officer of the UNR Army. A lieutenant colonel in the Russian army and author of a field manual on machine guns, he joined the Ukrainian army in the spring of 1917. Promoted to colonel, he commanded the *Khmelnysky Regiment and the First Serdiuk Division. At the end of 1917 he was in charge of the Ukrainian forces at the Bolshevik front. In 1919 he served as an infantry inspector of the UNR Army.

Kapnist. Name of a noble family that owned estates in Left-Bank Ukraine. Its members used the title of count, which was granted to their Greek ancestor Stomatello Kapnissis in Venice in 1702; it was not recognized in Russia until the 1870s. Stomatello's brother (?) Basilio (?–1757) enrolled as Vasył Kapnist in the Russian army during the 1711 Prut campaign of Tsar Peter I. He became a captain in Izium regiment in 1726, the colonel of Myrhorod regiment in 1737, and brigadier of the Slobidska Ukraine regiments in 1751. He was killed during the Seven Years' War near Gross Jägersdorf in East Prussia. Three of his sons – Mykola, Petro, and Vasył – were Ukrainian patriots. Mykola became the marshal of the Katerynoslav gubernia nobility in 1795. Petro (ca 1750–1826) was a guard officer who lived abroad for 20 years; he returned to Ukraine a convinced republican and established a 'republic' on his estate in the village of Turbaitsi, Khorol county. Vasył *Kapnist was a famous poet and civic leader. One of Vasył's sons, Ivan (ca 1794–1860), was the marshal of the Poltava gubernia nobility and a friend of Prince M. Repnin. He took part in designing a project for the renewal of Ukrainian Cossack regiments in 1831. Later he became the governor of Smolensk and of Moscow. Oleksa (ca 1796–1869), marshal of the nobility of Myrhorod county and a friend of T. Shevchenko, and Semen (ca 1791–1843), the marshal of Kremenchuk county, were involved in the Decembrist movement.

O. Ohloblyn

Vasył Kapnist

Kapnist, Vasył, b 23 February 1758 in Obukhivka, Myrhorod regiment, d 9 November 1823 in Kybyntsi, Poltava gubernia. Noted poet; civic and political figure. He served as marshal of the nobility for Myrhorod county in 1782 and for Kiev gubernia in 1785–7. In 1782 he composed 'Oda na rabstvo' (Ode on Slavery) protesting the Russian government's abolition of Ukraine's autonomy. During the Russian empire's two-front war with Turkey and Sweden his plan for reviving volunteer Cossack regiments in Ukraine, drafted in 1788, was not implemented by the tsarist government. In 1791 Ukrainian patriotic circles, probably from Novhorod-Siverskyi, entrusted him with secret negotiations in Berlin for Prussian aid in the event of a Russian-Prussian war and a possible Cossack rebellion against Russia, but he did not obtain a definite commitment. His comedy labeda (Calumny, 1798) condemned Russia's centralist policy in Ukraine. As general judge (1802) and marshal for Poltava gubernia (from 1820), he defended Ukrainian interests, especially during the Napoleonic invasion of 1812–13 when 15 Cossack regiments were re-established and when Cossacks were exempted from the draft and various taxes. In this period he wrote lyrical poetry, modeling himself on classical poets such as Horace. He also translated Slovo o polku Ihorevi (The Tale of Ihor's Campaign) into Russian, adding an interesting commentary emphasizing the poem's Ukrainian origin and distinctive Ukrainian qualities. His collected works were published in 1796, 1806, 1849, and 1960.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Berkov, P. V. V. Kapnist (Moscow-Leningrad 1950)
 Ohloblyn, O. 'Vasyl' Kapnist,' Literaturno-naukovyi zbirnyk UVAN, vol 1 (New York 1952)
 Matsai, A. 'Iabeda' V. V. Kapnista (Kiev 1958)

O. Ohloblyn

Petro Kapshuchenko: Spanish Dance

Kapshuchenko, Petro [Kapšučenko] (Kapschutenko, Pedro or Peter), b 27 September 1915 in Ukraine. Sculptor specializing in miniatures. He studied art in Ukraine and Germany. Immigrating in 1949 to Argentina, he won recognition for his work and was elected honorary member of the Universidad Libre de Humanidades in Buenos Aires. In 1963 he settled in Philadelphia, USA, where he took part in many Ukrainian exhibits. His one-man shows in 1973 at the Museum of Fine Arts in Springfield, Massachusetts, and at the Washington County Museum, Hagerstown, Maryland, introduced him to the wider American public. Most of his works deal with contemporary everyday life (eg, Mexican Roundup, Spanish Dance, Old Woman Sewing, and Street Musician), but some have a religious (eg, Blessing of St John) or historical (eg, Kozak with Bandura and Hopak) theme. His monumental works include the statue of Metropolitan V. Lypkivsky at the Ukrainian Orthodox Center in South Bound Brook, New Jersey. Kapshuchenko's style is very expressive and often humorous.

Kaptarenko-Chornousova, Olha [Kaptarenko-Čornousova, Ol'ha], b 21 May 1899 in Nova Ivanivka, Besarabia. Geologist and paleontologist. She graduated from the Kamianets-Podilskyi Institute of People's Education in 1923 and received her doctorate from the Institute of Geological Sciences of the AN URSR in 1947. From 1928 Kaptarenko-Chornousova was an associate and from 1947 a department head of the Institute of Geological Sciences of the AN URSR. Her scientific works deal with the study of rhizopods, stratigraphy, and paleontology of the Jurassic, cretaceous, and paleogene seams of Ukraine.

Kapto, Oleksander, b 14 April 1933 in Vyshchetarasivka, Tomakivka county, Dnipropetrovske oblast. Communist Party activist. From 1957 he worked in the Communist Youth League of Ukraine, editing its newspaper Komsomol'skoe znania (1963–6) and serving as second and then first secretary of the Central Committee (1966–72). After a brief term as secretary of the Kiev city committee of the CPU, he was appointed secretary of the Kiev oblast committee (1972–9). Since 1979 he has been a secretary of the CC CPU and a candidate member of the Politburo.

Kapusta, Lavrin, b and d ? Otaman of Chyhyryn, and one of the men in charge of intelligence for Hetman B. Khmelnytsky. He investigated a circle of spies working for the Poles, which included a number of people close to the hetman; among them was Khmelnytsky's second wife, M. Czaplińska. He uncovered Col M. Fedorovych's plot to overthrow the hetman and the assassination plans of the Polish spy J. Smiarowski. Kapusta also carried out important diplomatic assignments. In September–October 1653 he was sent by Khmelnytsky to Moscow to urge the tsar to begin his campaign against Poland. In 1657 he was sent on a mission to Constantinople.

Kapustiansky, Ivan [Kapustjans'kyj], b 1894 in Zhovtneve in the Poltava region, d 1939? Literary scholar and journalist. A graduate of the Nizhen Historical-Philological Institute, he taught at the Poltava Institute of People's Education (1921–5) and then was a graduate student at the Kharkiv Institute of People's Education and a scholarly associate of the Shevchenko Institute of Literature in Kharkiv. In 1923 he joined the peasant writers' organization Pluh. His literary, pedagogical, and publicistic articles appeared in Soviet Ukrainian periodicals; reprinted separately were Sotsiial'na pisnia na ukraïns'komu grunty (The Social Song on Ukrainian Soil, 1924) and Uchytel'stvo v ukraïns'kii literaturi (Teachers in Ukrainian Literature, 1925). He also wrote the monograph Valerian Polishchuk (1925). In 1934 he disappeared in the GULAG.

Kapustiansky, Mykola [Kapustjans'kyj], b 1 February 1879 in Chumaky, Katerynoslav gubernia, d 19 February 1969 in Munich. Senior officer of the Ukrainian army in 1917–20 and member of the OUN Leadership. A graduate of the General Staff Academy in St Petersburg (1912), he fought in the Russian-Japanese War and the First World

Mykola Kapustiansky

War, and by 1917 reached the rank of colonel. After the Revolution he joined the Ukrainian units of the Russian army and served as their delegate to the Second All-Ukrainian Military Congress. In August 1917 he was appointed chief of staff of the First Division of the First Ukrainian Corps, and in early 1918 chief of staff of the southwestern front. Under the Directory, he served as operations chief and then as general quartermaster of the UNR Army. In 1920 he was promoted to brigadier general. After the war he emigrated to Poland and then France, where he organized and headed the *Ukrainian National Union. Kapustiansky was a founder of the OUN and a member of its Leadership (1929–69). In 1935–6 he visited Ukrainian communities in the United States and Canada to gain support for the OUN. During the Second World War he served as vice-president of the Ukrainian National Council in Kiev, and was imprisoned by the Germans. After the war he was the first chief of the military section of the Government-in-exile of the UNR. He wrote Pokhid ukrains'kykh armii na Kyiv-Odesu v 1919 rotsi (The March of Ukrainian Armies on Kiev-Odesa in 1919; 1922, 2nd edn 1946) and numerous articles on military affairs.

P. Sodol

Kapynos (Kupynos), Voitykh, ?–ca 1610. Architect. From 1582 he was listed as a master in the Lviv builders' guild register. In 1597 he joined his father-in-law, P. Romanus, in building the famous Dormition Church in Lviv.

Karabelesh, Andrii [Karabeš, Andrij], b 24 September 1906 in Tybava (now in Svaliava raion), Transcarpathia, d there 4 September 1964. Russophile poet and writer. In the 1930s he worked as a teacher in Transcarpathia. From 1941 to 1945 he was imprisoned in German concentration camps. After the war he became a professor at Prešov University. Writing only in Russian, he remained outside the mainstream Ukrainian revival in eastern Slovakia. He authored the collections Izbranye proizvedeniia (Collected Works, 1928), V luchakh rassveta (In Dawn's Rays, 1929), Na smertel'nom rubezhe (Zapiski iz fashists'kikh kontslageri) (On the Verge of Death [Notes from Fascist Concentration Camps], 1953), and V Karpatakh (In the Carpathians, 1955).

Karabinevych, Apolinariia [Karabinevyč, Apolinarija] (née Lopukhovych; stage name: Liucia Barvinok), b 8 October 1896 in Chernihiv, d 22 August 1971 in Rochester, New York. Character actress and stage director.

She began her acting career in the O. Sukhodolsky and O. Mitkevych troupes. From 1920 to 1939 she worked as an actress and stage director in the Galician touring company known as the Sadovsky Ukrainian Drama Theater, and then became artistic director of the Ternopil Oblast State Ukrainian Drama Theater (1939–41). Her repertoire included Kylina in O. Sukhodolsky's Khmara (The Cloud), Hanna in O. Barvinsky's Het'man Polubotok, and Khyvria in M. Starytsky's Sorochyns'kyi iarmarok (The Sorochyntsi Fair). Having left Ukraine before the war's end, she immigrated to the United States in 1949.

Karabinevych, Opanas [Karabinevyč], b 1892?, d 1970? in Lviv. Stage actor and director. From 1924 to 1939 he was the director of the Galician touring company known as the Sadovsky Ukrainian Drama Theater, which specialized in ethnographic and historical plays. During the Soviet occupation of Galicia in 1939–41, he reorganized this company into the Ternopil Oblast State Ukrainian Drama Theater. Later, he was assigned to a collective-farm theater in Berezhany. After serving a long term as a prisoner of conscience, he was released in the 1960s and returned to Lviv.

Karabi-Yaila [Karabi-Jajla]. The largest tablelike massif in the main range of the *Crimean Mountains.

Karabynevych, Mykolai [Karabynevyč, Mykolaj], b 1888 in the Podilia region, d 1932? Bishop of the Ukrainian Autocephalous Orthodox church. He graduated from the Podilia Theological Seminary and was ordained in 1911. In 1923 he was consecrated bishop of Mohyliv-Podilia and in 1931 he became bishop of Ūman. He contributed to the journal Tserkva i Zhyttia (1927). In 1932 he was arrested and shot in Moscow (according to some sources he was executed in 1935).

Karabyts, Ivan [Karabyč'], b 17 January 1945 in Yalta, Pershotravneve raion, Donetsk oblast. Composer and conductor. A graduate of the Kiev Conservatory (1971) and a student of B. *Liatoshynsky and M. Skoryk, he conducted the Song and Dance Ensemble of the Kiev Military Okruha (1968–74). His compositions include a cycle of 24 preludes for piano, a piano trio, 3 symphonies, 3 song cycles for voice and piano (including Pastels to the words of P. Tychyna), the oratorio Charming the Fire, a cantata based on H. Skovoroda's poem collection Sad bozhestvennykh pisen' (The Garden of Divine Songs), and film scores.

Karachai-Cherkess Autonomous oblast. An autonomous region in *Stavropol krai, situated on the northern slopes of the Caucasus. Established in 1922, it has an area of 14,100 sq km and population of 369,000 (1979), consisting of Karachais (30 percent), Cherkessians (9 percent), Russians (45 percent), Abazinians (7 percent), Nogais (3 percent), Ukrainians, Greeks, and Ossetians. In 1926 there were 2,800 Ukrainians (0.4 percent of the population); in 1970 there were 4,800 (0.1 percent), of whom 68 percent were urban dwellers. The Cherkessians had their own national district in 1926–8 and autonomous oblast in 1928–57. In 1944 the entire Karachai population was deported to Soviet Central Asia for alleged collaboration with the Germans in August 1942–January 1943. Many died in transit. In 1957 the Karachais were allowed to return to their homeland, and the Karachai-Cherkess Autonomous oblast was reinstated.

Kara-Dag. IX-16. A volcanic ridge, up to 577 m in elevation, lying in the eastern part of the *Crimean Mountains on the coast of the Black Sea, into which it drops abruptly in ledges. The lower slopes of the Kara-Dag are forested with oak, hornbeam, and ash, and the upper slopes are covered with steppe vegetation. In 1907–14 the Kara-Dag Biological Station, which later became the Kara-Dag branch of the Institute of the Biology of Southern Seas of the Academy of Sciences of the Ukrainian SSR, was set up to study the biology of the Kara-Dag.

Kara-Dag Nature Reserve (Karadagskyi zapovidnyk AN URSR). A reserve in the Crimea established in 1979 to study the physical geography of the *Kara-Dag Mountains and to conserve their natural resources (soils, flora, and fauna). From 1907 to 1979 the Kara-Dag Biological Station fulfilled this role.

Karadžić, Vuk, b 6 November 1787 in Tršić, Serbia, d 6 February 1864 in Vienna. Eminent Serbian philologist, folklorist, and historian; the founder of modern literary Serbian. He published the first grammar, alphabet, and phonetic orthography of vernacular Serbian; the influence of M. *Smotrytsky's grammar on this work is considerable. In 1814 he also published the first collection of Serbian folk songs. Thereafter he devoted himself to promoting the adoption of vernacular Serbian as the literary language and collecting Serbian folklore. His orthography was officially adopted in Serbia in 1868. Karadžić's pioneering contributions – opposed by both Serbian conservatives and Austrian censors – had a profound impact on 19th-century Ukrainian intellectuals, particularly M. Shashkevych, Ya. Holovatsky, I. Vahylevych, O. Barvinsky, and Ye. Zhelekhivsky in Galicia and M. Maksymovych, A. Metlynsky, and T. Shevchenko in Russian-ruled Ukraine, who used them as a model and inspiration for their own work; they translated some of his writings into Ukrainian. While living in Vienna, Karadžić became a close friend of the Galician journalist I. Holovatsky. In 1819 he visited Kiev, Chernivtsi, and Lviv and became acquainted with several Ukrainian cultural figures. Later he corresponded with and influenced O. Bodiansky and I. Sreznevsky, who wrote his biography (1846). He was elected a full member of the Odessa Society of History and Antiquities (1842) and the Austrian (1848), Prussian (1850), and Russian (1851) academies of sciences, and an honorary member of the Kharkiv University Council (1846).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Kyryliuk, Ie. Vuk Karadžych i ukrains'ka kul'tura (Kiev 1978)
M. Hnatiukivsky

Karaffa-Korbut, Sofiia, b 23 August 1924 in Lviv. Graphic artist. A graduate of the Lviv Institute of Applied and Decorative Arts (1953) and a student of R. Selsky and V. Manastyrsky, she specializes in printmaking and book illustrations. Her favorite technique is the linocut. Her works include colored linocuts such as Verkhovyna Spring (1962) and Fairy Tale (1963), based on Lesia Ukrainka's Lisova pisnia (The Forest Song); a series of prints based on T. Shevchenko's historical poems (1963–6); linocut illustrations to I. Franko's poem 'Ivan Vyshensky' and novelette Boryslav smiiet'sia (Boryslav Is Laughing, 1964–5); and illustrations for many children's books. Combining elements of modern art and folk art, she is one of the most talented and original graphic artists in Ukraine, and a worthy continuator of the Lviv graphic arts school founded by P. *Kovzhun and M. *Butovych.

Sofiia Karaffa-Korbut: woodcut (1969)

Karaganda oblast. An administrative region in the central part of Kazakhstan. Its climate is dry and continental, and its chief natural resource is coal. The oblast has an area of 85,400 sq km and a population (1986) of 1,354,000. Ukrainians account for about 8.3 percent of the population (112,400). The proportion of Ukrainians is much higher in the Karlag, a large system of labor camps established before the Second World War. The system consists of 27 departments, and each department has several camps. The inmates work in coal mining, construction, and farming.

Karagodeuashkh kurhan. A large Scythian kurhan near Krymska stanytsia, Krasnodar krai, containing the richest treasures of all known kurhans from the 4th–3rd century BC in the Kuban. Excavations in 1888 revealed two stone burial chambers with corridors. The main chamber, which was adorned with frescoes, contained the remains of a warrior, arms, gold ornaments, a gold coin, and earthen, bronze, and silver ware. In the corridor of the second chamber the remains of a young woman in luxurious ritual dress and of a funeral feast, a carriage, and two horse skeletons were found. This kurhan resembles the Scythian royal kurhans of the lower Dnieper region.

Karaimovych, Illiash [Karajimovyč, Illjaš], b? d 4 May 1648 in Kamiany Zaton (near present-day Dniprovo-kamianka, Verkhnodniprovske raion, Dnipropetrovske oblast). Leader of the *registered Cossacks. He was their acting hetman in the Novhorod-Siverskyi region during the Polish-Muscovite War in 1634. In 1637 he was made colonel of Pereiaslav. In April 1648 Karaimovych and I. Barabash led the 4,000–5,000 registered Cossacks accompanying the Polish forces sent to crush the Cossack rebellion begun by Hetman B. *Khmelnysky at the Zaporozhian Sich. On the way, the registered Cossacks held a general council at which Karaimovych, Barabash, and their pro-Polish supporters were killed. Under F. Dzhallali and B. Topyha, Cossacks joined the rebels on 12 May 1648 near *Zhovti Vody and took part in the battle there a few days later.

Karaites (Ukrainian: Karaimy). A non-Talmudic Jewish sect acknowledging no authority except the Holy Scriptures. It arose in the 8th century. Karaites in Ukraine are ethnically Turkish, probably descendants of Khazarian Jews (see *Khazars). They began settling in the Crimea (especially in *Chufut-Kaleh) sometime after the 9th century, and in Lithuania, near Trakai and Vilnius, in the 17th century; from there some moved to Western Ukraine, settling near Lutske and Halych. Until the 20th century they lived in small, tight-knit communities, where they maintained their Turkic language and customs. In 1863 they were officially recognized in the Russian Empire as a distinct ethnic group and exempted from the laws that applied to Jews. From 1837 the Karaim Religious Board in Yevpatoriia administered the Karaite community. Yet, their numbers continued to decline through assimilation. In the USSR they are considered to be a separate nationality. Their number there has fallen steadily, from 8,324 in 1926 to just 3,341 in 1979. In 1970 there were 2,596 in the Crimea. They are also found in Volhynia and Odessa oblasts. Their language belongs to the Kipchak group of Turkish, although the Karaites in Western Ukraine and elsewhere have their own dialects. Now, most use Russian.

Karamzin, Nikolai, b 12 December 1766 in Mikhailovka, Simbirsk gubernia, Russia, d 3 June 1826 in St Petersburg. Russian historian, publicist, and writer; the founder of the sentimental school in Russian literature. At the request of Tsar Alexander I, he wrote Istoriia gosudarstva rossiiskogo (The History of the Russian State, 12 vols, 1816–29), up to the year 1611, which, although it contains a wealth of documentary material, identifies the history of Russia with the history of the Russian state and autocracy. He was a proponent of the *Normanist theory of the origin of Kievan Rus' and wrote about Rus' as the historical heritage of Russia. Among those who aided Karamzin's research was the Ukrainian historian M. *Bantysh-Kamensky. Karamzin's views formed the basis of much of official 19th-century Russian historiography.

Karanovych, Dariia [Karanovyč, Darija], b 18 October 1908 in Kolomyia, Galicia. Pianist and pedagogue; daughter of Ya. *Hordynsky. She studied with V. Barvinsky at the Lysenko Higher Institute of Music in Lviv, with P. Weingarten and E. von Sauer in Vienna, and with E. Steuermann at the Vienna Academy of Music. She gave concerts in Vienna, Lviv, Warsaw, Salzburg, Berlin, and Prague and played for Vienna and Salzburg radio. Since 1953 she has been teaching in New York at the Ukrainian Music Institute of America, of which she has served as president (1967–70, 1986–). Her extensive piano repertoire is rich in Ukrainian works. In 1985 she released a record of piano music by Ukrainian composers such as M. Lysenko, V. Barvinsky, N. Nyzhankivsky, and L. Revutsky.

Karas, Yosyp [Karas', Josyp], b 5 October 1918 in Khorol, Poltava region. Landscape painter. A graduate of the Kharkiv Art Institute (1948), he lectured at the institute until 1957. In 1969 he began to teach at the Kharkiv Industrial Design Institute. His works include Hay Making (1950), Close to Autumn (1954), Native Fields (1960–1), Endless Fields (1964), The Last Hectares (1972), and Ukrainian Wheat (1977).

Joan Karasevich

Karasevich, Joan [Karasevyč, Ivanna], b 12 November 1937 in Winnipeg. Singer and actress. A graduate of the National Theatre School of Canada, at the 1965 Stratford Festival Karasevich became the first actress to receive the Tyrone Guthrie Award. Besides appearing frequently at Ukrainian concerts, she has written and staged two productions dealing with the Ukrainian experience in Canada, and created the role of Anna in the production 'Just a Kommedia' (1984). Karasevich has also performed in films and on radio and television, including the role of Anna in The Newcomers, about Ukrainian immigrants in the 1920s.

Karatnytsky, Modest [Karatnyc'kyj], b 1858 in Galicia, d 30 November 1940 in Lviv. Jurist, civic leader. He was president of the Society of Ukrainian Lawyers and of the Land Mortgage Bank in Lviv. After the First World War he presided over the circuit court in Berezhany. A firm believer in the advancement of the Ukrainian cause, he headed the Ukrainian National Society for Child and Adolescent Care and supported the Plast Ukrainian Youth Association.

Karavaiv, Volodymyr, b 9 March 1864 and d 7 January 1939 in Kiev. Ukrainian zoologist and traveler. After graduating from Kiev University, Karavaiv was a scientist there from 1890 to 1919. He was one of the founders of the Zoological Museum of the AN URSR (1919) and its director (1926–34). He participated in numerous scientific expeditions throughout Ukraine, to the Caucasus, Africa, and Asia. He donated detailed descriptions of the expeditions as well as collections of animals and insects, especially ants, to the Zoological Museum of the AN URSR. Karavaiv is best known for his works on myrmecophilism. His other scientific works deal with ants, crayfish, and radiolaria.

Karavan. A Scythian fortified settlement of the late 5th to early 2nd centuries BC discovered near Karavan, Derhachi raion, Kharkiv oblast. Excavations carried out in 1954–5 uncovered the remains of fortifications, clay and wood surface dwellings, ceramics, and the bones of domestic and wild animals. Miniature clay vessels, a fragment of an anthropomorphic statuette, clay 'breads,' and 170 clay models of grains found by a sacrificial altar and in an ash mound were probably associated with a Scythian agricultural cult.

Sviatoslav Karavansky

Vasyl Karazyn

Karavansky, Sviatoslav [Karavans'kyj, Svjatoslav], b 24 December 1920 in Odessa. Poet, translator, dissident. Because he had fought for Ukraine's independence during the Second World War, he was sentenced in 1945 to 25 years in prison. After serving 17 years in the labor camps of Kolyma, Magadan, and Mordovia, he was released and returned to Odessa. His poems, translations, and articles appeared in the Soviet press. His protests against Russification and official abuses led to his arrest in 1965, and the revocation of his amnesty. Before he had served his term, he was sentenced to another five years. Although he had joined the *Ukrainian Helsinki Group at the beginning of 1979 he was released in the fall and forced to emigrate with his wife, N. *Strokata. Since his arrival in the United States, he has published several collections of original and translated poems: Sutyckha z taifunom (Encounter with a Typhoon, 1980), Moie remeslo (My Trade, 1981), Iaryna z horodu Khomy Chereshni (Vegetables from the Garden of Khoma Chereshnia, 1981), and Humorystychnyi samvydav (A Humorous Self-Publishing, 1982).

Karazyn, Vasyl, b 10 February 1773 in Kruchy, near Bohodukhiv, Slobidska Ukraine, d 16 November 1842 in Mykolaiv. Civic leader, economist, and inventor, of Greek noble descent. Karazyn studied mining and metallurgy in St Petersburg and then secretly traveled to Western Europe to continue his studies. A committed liberal, he tirelessly worked to reform the Russian Empire. In a series of letters and memoranda to influential officials and the tsar, he urged the establishment of a constitutional monarchy in the empire and the abolition of serfdom. His most important achievements were in the field of education. As the director of schools in the Ministry of Education (1801–4) he began reforming the educational system along Western lines. He also convinced the nobility and merchants of Slobidska Ukraine to establish and fund *Kharkiv University. His progressive ideas, however, eventually led him to fall into disfavor in official circles, and he was imprisoned in Shlisselburg Fortress (1820–1) and confined to his estate for many years.

Karazyn's political and economic theories helped to lay the basis for Ukrainian territorial autonomy. He strongly criticized policies that encouraged the concentration of industry and manufacturing in central Russia, policies which reduced Ukraine to a simple supplier of raw materials for the imperial economy. He also stressed the need to expand foreign trade and to improve agricultural practices by introducing new grain varieties, potatoes, and other crops, and abandoning the three-field rotation system. He devoted considerable energy to developing agricultural and metallurgical machinery. His inventions include steam heating and drying machines and machines used in saltpeter extraction. He founded and headed (1811–18) the Philotechnical Society, which popularized his scientific ideas and promoted the modernization of agriculture. Karazyn also made several important contributions to *climatology and meteorology and established one of the first meteorological stations in the empire. In total, he wrote over 60 articles and studies; his collected works Sochineniia, pis'ma i bumagi V.N. Karazina were published in 1910 (ed D. Bahalii).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Danilevskii, G.P. 'Vasilii Nazar'evich Kazarin,' Sochineniia G.P. Danilevskogo, vol 21 (St Petersburg 1901)
 Flynn, J. 'V.N. Karazin, the Gentry, and Kharkov University,' SR, 28 (1969), no. 2
 Lavrinenko, Iu. Vasyl' Karazyn – arkhitekt vidrodzhennia. Materialy i dumky do 200-littia z dnia narodzhennia 1773–1973 (Munich 1975)

B. Balan, A. Zhukovskiy

Karbovanets [Karbovanec']. The Ukrainian equivalent of the Russian *ruble. The term was first used for the main unit of paper *currency in the independent Ukrainian state of 1917–20.

Karbulytsky, Iliarii [Karbulyc'kyj, Iljarij], b 5 September 1880 in Voloka, Vyzhnytsia county, Bukovyna, d 31 January 1961 in Chernivtsi. Teacher, political leader, and publicist. An elementary school teacher by training, he was editor of the teachers' journal Promin' (1904–7) and newspaper Kameniari (1908–14). For a time he edited the Kreitsarova Biblioteka (Kreutzer Library, 1902–8) book series for children. Besides many articles, he wrote a historical study, Rozvii narodn'oho shkil'nytstva na Bukovyni (The Development of Public Schools in Bukovyna, 1907), and a play about the Hutsuls, Zradnyk (The Traitor, 1936). An active member of the Ukrainian National party, in 1937 he was elected to its executive board. After the war he was imprisoned by the Soviets for 12 years in labor camps in the RSFSR.

Karger, Mikhail, b 30 May 1903 in Kazan, Russia, d 26 August 1976 in Leningrad. Archeologist and art scholar. Specializing in the archeology of Kievan Rus', he excavated architectural monuments in such cities and towns as Kiev, Novgorod, Pereiaslav-Khmelnyskyi, Halych, and Volodymyr-Volynskyi. He wrote dozens of archeological articles and the books Arkheologicheskie issledovaniia drevnego Kiev: Otchety i materialy (1938-1947 gg.) (Archeological Investigations of Ancient Kiev: Reports and Materials [1938-1947], 1950) and Drevnii Kiev ... (Ancient Kiev ..., 2 vols, 1958, 1961), and coauthored Istoriia kul'tury drevnei Rusi (A History of the Culture of Ancient Rus', 2 vols, 1948, 1951).

Karhalsky, Serhii [Karhal's'kyj, Serhij] (real surname: Slynko), b July 1889 in Odessa, d 1938 in a Soviet labor camp. Stage actor and director. A graduate of Mochalova's Odessa Drama School, from 1912 he worked in Russian provincial troupes in Ukraine. In 1919 he joined the First Theater of the Ukrainian Soviet Republic in Kiev, and in 1922 the Berezil theater. He was an organizer and the director (1925-8) of the First Ukrainian State Opera in Kharkiv. Then he worked as a stage director at the Ukrainian opera in Kharkiv and Kiev and at the Second Ukrainian Touring Opera in Vinnytsia. From 1935 to 1937 he was chief stage director at the Kiev Theater of Musical Comedy. His actor's repertoire included the Dam Wrecker in Lesia Ukrainka's Lisova pisnia (The Forest Song), Banquo in W. Shakespeare's Macbeth, Lacey Granitch in L. Kurbas's adaptation of U. Sinclair's Jimmie Higgins, and Figaro in P. Beaumarchais's Le Mariage de Figaro. He directed operas such as M. Lysenko's Taras Bulba (1928), A. Vakhnianyn's Kupalo (1929), V. Kostenko's Karmeliuk (1931), and the Ukrainian versions of A. Dargomyzhsky's Rusalka (1931), A. Borodin's Prince Igor, and C. Zeller's The Bird Dealer (1936).

Karkhut, Spyridon [Karxut], b 30 September 1869 in Novosilka Kostinkova, Borshchiv county, Galicia, d 14 March 1931 in Lviv. Ukrainian Catholic priest, educator, civic leader. He was ordained in 1892 and graduated from Lviv University (PH D 1914). He was a teacher of classical philology at the Ukrainian Academic Gymnasium in Lviv (1906-28) and then professor of Old Church Slavonic at the Theological Academy in Lviv (1928-31). In 1929-30 he was also the dean of the Faculty of Theology at the academy. Karkhut was the author of Hramatyka ukrains'koï tserkovno-slovians'koï movy (The Grammar of the Ukrainian Church Slavonic Language, 1927).

Karkhut, Vasyl [Karxut, Vasyl'], b July 1905 in Markivtsi, Tovmach county, Galicia, d 9 October 1980 in Lviv. Physician, writer, and civic leader. Upon graduating from Lviv University (1932), he practiced medicine in Volhynia. When *Plast was banned in 1930, he organized clandestine units for young tradesmen and edited the Plast magazine Vohni. He wrote short stories for young people and a novel, Vistria v temriavi (A Blade in the Darkness, 1934; repr 1941 under the title Polumianyi vykhor [The Flaming Whirlwind]). In the mid-1930s he served two years in the Polish concentration camp of Bereza Kartuzka. After the war he spent 18 years in Soviet labor camps. Released in 1963, he practiced medicine in a village near Sniatyn and compiled a handbook on medicinal plants, Liky navkolo nas (Remedies around Us, 1975).

Karlivka. IV-16. Town (1980 pop 17,000) and raion center in Poltava oblast, situated on the Orchyk River in the Dnieper Lowland. It was founded in the 1740s. Its machine-building plants supply food-processing and distilling industries.

Karlo-Marksove. V-19, DB III-4. An smt (1979 pop 15,000) in the Donets Basin in Donetsk oblast, under the jurisdiction of the Yenakieve city soviet. Established in 1783, until 1924 it was called Sofiiivka. Located there is a coal mine opened in 1858.

Karmaliuk, Pavlo [Karmaljuk], b 6 January 1908 in Osivtsi, Radomyshl county, Kiev gubernia, d 1986 in Lviv. Operatic baritone. A graduate of the Kiev Conservatory (1941) and a student of D. Yevtushenko, in 1944 he joined the Lviv Theater of Opera and Ballet. From 1950 he taught singing at the Lviv Conservatory. His repertoire included Rigoletto in G. Verdi's Rigoletto, Figaro in G. Rossini's Barber of Seville, Onegin in P. Tchaikovsky's Eugene Onegin, Igor in A. Borodin's Prince Igor, Ostap in M. Lysenko's Taras Bulba, Bohdan in K. Dankevych's Bohdan Khmelnytsky, and Maksym in A. Kos-Anatolsky's The Sky's Glow. He also performed as a chamber singer.

Ustym Karmaliuk

Karmaliuk, Ustym [Karmaljuk], b 10 March 1787 in Holovchyntsi (now Karmaliukove), Lityn county, d 22 October 1835 in Shliakhovi Korychyntsi (now Korychyntsi), Liatyshiv county, Podilia gubernia. Ukrainian folk hero, the 'last haidamaka.' Karmaliuk (Karmeliuk) was born a serf. Sent into the army in 1812 by his landowner, Karmaliuk fled the army and, together with other deserters, organized rebel bands, which he led in attacks on landowners and merchants. He was captured in 1814, sentenced in Kamianets-Podilskyi to 500 blows while running a gauntlet, and sent to a military unit in the Crimea. On his way he escaped and again organized a peasant rebellion, which from 1814 to 1828 encompassed a significant portion of Lityn, Liatyshiv, and Proskuriv counties in Podilia gubernia, attracting not only peasants, but also army deserters and the urban poor. The rebellion occurred at a time when serfdom in the Russian Empire had become commercially profitable and was at its most repressive and exploitative stage of development; landowners had increased the amount of compulsory peasant labor to as much as six days a week. This social oppression also had a national dimension in Podilia, where most of the magnates were Polish.

Karmaliuk's struggle was at its height in 1830-5, when it spread from Podilia into the neighboring regions of Kiev, Volhynia, and Bessarabia and involved up to 20,000 peasants. Approximately 1,000 raids were made by the rebels on landowners' estates. Whatever was captured in the attacks was distributed among the village poor, who always gave Karmaliuk refuge and help. To quell the uprising, the tsarist government quartered units of soldiers in the regions where peasant unrest was strongest. Karmaliuk was apprehended and sentenced four times to hard labor in Siberia, but each time he managed to escape and return to lead a rebellion. He was killed in an ambush by the nobleman Rutkowski. Karmaliuk's struggle against oppression has been immortalized in many Ukrainian sayings and folk songs ('Za Sybirom son-tse skhodyt' [The Sun Rises beyond Siberia]), in literature (Marko Vovchok, M. Starytsky, S. Vasylychenko, V. Kucher), and in music (V. Kostenko).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Ustym Karmaliuk. Zbirnyk dokumentiv (Kiev 1948)
Hurzhii, I. Ustym Karmaliuk (Kiev 1955)

Petro Karmansky

Karmansky, Petro [Karmans'kyj] (pseud: Petro Hirky, Les Mohylnytsky), b 29 May 1878 in Chesniv, Galicia, d 16 April 1956 in Lviv. Poet, civic leader, and journalist. Karmansky was a prominent member of the modernist group *Moloda Muza, and his early collections of poetry – Z teky samovybytisia (From the Briefcase of a Suicide, 1899), Oi liuli smutku (Sleep Sadness, Sleep, 1906), Bludni vohni (Will-o-the-Wisp, 1907), Plyvem po moriu t'my (We Sail on the Sea of Darkness, 1909), and Al fresco (1917) – reflect the typical fin-de-siècle ennui and pessimism of the modernist poets throughout Europe. His particular idiom is characterized by the frequent use of religious imagery – an influence of his studies at the Collegium Ruthenum in Rome – and the often satiric tone provoked by the estrangement between the brooding modernist poet and 'callous' society. Discontent did not leave him even when he tried to work within the needs of the society by being a high-school teacher, then a representative in the diplomatic missions of the Western Ukrainian National Republic to Rome, the United States, Canada, and Brazil, and finally an editor (1922–5). After the Soviet occupation of Western Ukraine, Karmansky lectured at Lviv University and wrote two collections distinguished by their official optimism: Do sontsia (Toward the Sun, 1941) and Po iasnii dorozh (On the Bright Road, 1952). Karmansky was also a proficient translator. Of his numerous translations (primarily from Italian) The Divine Comedy (translated together with M. *Rylsky) is the most ambitious. Toward the end of his life he wrote memoirs of his experiences abroad as well as virulent attacks against Ukrainian 'bourgeois nationalists' and the Vatican.

D.H. Struk

Karmazyn-Kakovsky, Vsevolod [Karmazyn-Kakovs'kyj], b 16 September 1898 in Cretești, Iași county, Rumania. Art scholar and landscape architect. He taught at several universities – in Kharkiv (1931–41), Odessa (1942–4), and Iași (1945–65) – and worked as a research associate at the Institute of History and Archeology of the Rumanian Academy of Social and Political Sciences. He designed sanatorium gardens and was responsible for landscaping of some resorts on the Black Sea and the botanical garden of Iași University. Since 1972 he has been living in Munich. His publications include over 300 works, most of them in Rumanian dealing with the curative effects of landscapes. He has written some articles and monographs in Ukrainian on the history of Ukrainian art; eg, Ukrains'ka narodna arkhitektura (Ukrainian Folk Architecture, 1972) and Mystetstvo lemkiiv's'koi tserkvy (The Art of the Lemko Church, 1975).

Karmeliuk-Kamensky, Kostiantyn [Karmeljuk-Kamens'kyj, Kostjantyn], b 1858 in Koziatyn, Berdychiv county, Kiev gubernia, d 1932 in Harbin, Manchuria. Stage actor and director. He organized a Ukrainian theatrical troupe that, starting in 1904, toured Caucasia, Turkestan, Siberia, and the Far East (1912). In 1916 it toured Japan (Kobe, Tokyo, Yokohama, and Kamakura) and China (Shanghai), and in the following year it visited Ussuriisk and Vladivostok. Its repertoire included I. Kotliarevsky's Natalka Poltavka (Natalka from Poltava), M. Kropyvnytsky's Vii, M. Starytsky's Tsyhanka Aza (Aza, the Gypsy Girl), and O. Sukhodolsky's Khmara (The Cloud). In 1918 the troupe broke up, but many of its members remained in the Far East and joined other drama groups.

Karnauchivka [Kanauchivka]. v-15. Town smt (1979 pop 8,200) located on the right bank of the Dnieper River in Dnipropetrovske oblast. The settlement was established in 1737 and is now under the jurisdiction of the Bahlii raion soviet in Dniprodzerzhynske. Most of its inhabitants work in Dniprodzerzhynske or Dnipropetrovske.

Karnovsky, Mykhailo [Karnovs'kyj, Myxajlo], b and d ? Printmaker and book illustrator of the early 18th century. A representative of O. Tarasevych's school of copper engraving, he was educated probably at the Chernihiv College and the Kievan Mohyla College. From 1701 to 1710 he worked as an engraver at the Printing House in Moscow. Karnovsky is known for his illustrations of L. Magnitsky's first arithmetic textbook (1703), including a fine frontispiece depicting Pythagoras and Archimedes, the teza posters in honor of Metropolitan Y. Krovovsky (1706) and the patriarchal locum tenens S. Yavorsky (1708), and a print of the Kievan Cave Mother of God among the Stars. Karnovsky and other Ukrainian engravers introduced the traditions of Ukrainian graphic art to Russia and influenced the development of Russian engraving.

Karovets, Makarii [Karovec', Makariij], b 1873 in Galicia, d 1944 in Bratislava. Ukrainian Catholic priest of the Basilian order, writer, and journalist. Karovets was a chaplain of the Ukrainian Sich Riflemen and lived in Soviet-ruled Ukraine until the late 1920s. After he returned to Galicia he wrote Velyka reforma Chyna sv. Vasylia Velykoho (The Great Reform of the Order of St Basil the Great, 4 vols, 1932–8) and articles on historical, social, and religious issues.

Karpat' (The Carpathian). A religious educational weekly, published in Uzhhorod from 20 June 1873 to 13 April 1886 by the eparchial administration and the Society of St Basil the Great. It was edited by M. Homychkov with the assistance of O. Homychkov. The paper had a pro-Hungarian profile. It came out in Russian-Ukrainian *yazychie. A Hungarian supplement was added in 1875–7. From 1882 most of the articles were published in Hungarian. Its main contributors were O. Popovych, A. Kralytsky, I. Sylvai, Ye. Fentsyk, I. Rakovsky, Yu. Stavrovsky-Popradov, M. Beskyd, and T. Zlotsky. Besides religious articles, the paper published official announcements, news from correspondents, feuilletons, and belles-lettres. Later, it reprinted articles from the Budapest, Moscow, St Petersburg, and Odessa press. It contained much information about Transcarpathian Ukrainians.

Karpatia. A mutual life-insurance company that operated in Lviv from 1911 to 1939. In 1939 its capital reserve was 220,000 zlotys ($41,800), and its insurance fund amounted to one million zlotys ($190,000). B. Yaniv, the first director, was succeeded by I. Gyzha in 1930. L. Makarushka served as assistant director.

Karpatorusskii golos (Carpathoruthenian Voice). A Russophile daily, then weekly, newspaper published in Uzhhorod from 1932 to 1934 and from 1938 to 1944. Because of its opposition to the Czechoslovak government, it was banned, and was replaced by Nash karpatorusskii golos (1934–5). It resumed publication under Hungarian rule. Its publishers were Y. Kaminsky and S. Fentsyk, and its editor was V. Labanich.

Karpats'ka pravda (Carpathian Truth). A weekly newspaper of the Transcarpathian Regional Committee of the Czechoslovak Communist party published in Mukachiv in 1920–38. From 1920 to 1921 it was titled Prauda and was published in *yazychie. From 1925 it appeared in literary Ukrainian. Its editors were I. Mondok, P. Boichuk, and O. Borkaniuk. In October 1938 the paper was banned by the Czechoslovak government. It resumed publication in November 1944 as the daily Zakarpats'ka pravda.

Karpatskyi soiuз. See Carpathian Alliance.

Karpaty (Carpathians). A publishing house in Uzhhorod under the jurisdiction of the State Committee of the Ukrainian SSR for Publishing, Printing, and the Book Trade. Founded in 1945 as the Transcarpathian Book-Newspaper Publishers, it changed names several times before assuming its present name in 1964; it became an oblast-level publisher in 1951 and a republic-level publisher in 1964 serving Transcarpathia, Ivano-Frankivske, and Chernivtsi oblasts. At first, Karpaty published Ukrainian literary works and regional guides; now its production includes political, art, technical, agricultural, and folklore books. It has collaborated with Hungarian firms in publishing Hungarian translations of Ukrainian and Russian classics and other books since 1958, and has copublished books with Slovak publishers since 1975. Karpaty also publishes in Moldavian, and produces tourist guides in various languages. In 1979, its total press-run was more than 2 million.

Karpeka, Volodymyr, b 31 May 1877 in Kiev, d ? Jurist; educator. In 1917 he served on the faculty of Kiev University. In 1930 he taught history of law at the Kiev Agricultural Institute. His publications in economics and law include 'Perevaha vydatkiv yak pryntsyp derzhavnoho hospodarstva' (Deficit Spending as a Principle of State Economics, 1929). He was arrested in 1937 and disappeared without trace.

Karpeko, Oleksander, 1891–? Educator. In the 1920s he taught at the Nizhen Institute of People's Education and was, for a while, its rector. He was the deputy director of the Department of Agitation and Propaganda of the СС СР(Б)У in 1930, the deputy people's commissar of education of the Ukrainian SSR in 1932–3, and the head of the All-Ukrainian Radio Committee. He was arrested during the Stalinist terror in 1934, and his further fate is unknown.

Karpenko, Dmytro (nom de guerre: Yastrub), b 1920 in Poltava gubernia, d 17 December 1944 in Strilyska Novi, Drohobych oblast. Prominent UPA field commander. A lieutenant of a Red Army tank unit, in 1943 he joined the OUN in the Odessa region. Advancing quickly in rank, he became commander of the Siromantsi Company, which in November 1943 was assigned to the Ternopil Military District. In the spring and summer of 1944 Karpenko fought the Polish Home Army and Soviet partisans in the Rava-Ruska area. Returning to his base in September, he rose to battalion commander and fought several large battles with the NKVD Internal Troops, including the Battle of Univ on 30 September. Killed in action, he was awarded posthumously the rank of captain and the Gold Cross of Combat Merit First Class. Karpenko was the first officer to receive this medal.

Karpenko, Heorhii, b 6 June 1910 in Tomsk, Russia, d 15 November 1977 in Lviv. Specialist in materials mechanics; full member of the AN USSR from 1967. From 1946 to 1950 he was scientific secretary of the Presidium of AN USSR, and then director of the academy's Institute of Mechanical Engineering and Automation (1952–71), which in 1964 was renamed the Physical Mechanics Institute. He did pioneering work on the physicochemical mechanics of materials, contributing new theories of corrosion fatigue and hydrogen brittleness in steel.

Karpenko, Oleksander, b 1896 in Lypova Dolyna, Hadiache county, Poltava gubernia. Agronomist. A graduate of the Kiev Polytechnical Institute (1928), he taught at the Kiev Institute for the Mechanization and Electrification of Agriculture and worked at the Ukrainian Research Institute of Agricultural Machine Building (1930–6). From 1936 to 1950 he headed the Sowing Machinery Laboratory of the All-Union Institute for the Mechanization and Electrification of Agriculture in Moscow. He wrote over 120 articles on such topics as agricultural machines and equipment, the mechanization of fieldwork, and the technology of farming in dry regions.

Karpenko, Oleksander, b 15 June 1921 in Sloboda village in the Chernihiv region. Historian. He taught in higher educational institutions from 1944 to 1949, and worked in Lviv from 1949 to 1960 as an associate of the Institute of Social Sciences of the AN URSR. He was criticized for his attempts to restore the ZUNR as a legitimate subject of research. In 1960 he received a position at Lviv University. His works deal with the history of Poland and Western Ukraine, and the 1920s in Soviet Ukraine. One of his chief works is Imperialistychna interventsia na Ukraïni 1918–20 (The Imperialist Intervention in Ukraine in 1918–20, 1964).

Karpenko, Yurii, b ? Linguist. In 1956 he became affiliated with Chernivtsi University and later with Odessa University. After a series of articles on the history of Ukrainian numerals, he published studies of toponyms, especially the hydronyms of Bukovyna, the Lower Dniester Basin, and the Odessa region. His research was summarized in the monograph Toponimiia Bukovyny (Toponymy of Bukovyna, 1973) and the collective work that he edited, Hidronimy Nyzhn'oho Podnistrovia (Hydronyms of the Lower Dniester Region, 1981). In Vstup do movoznavstva (Introduction to Linguistics, 1983) he describes the various trends in modern linguistics.

Ivan Karpenko-Kary

Karpenko-Kary, Ivan [Karpenko-Karyj] (pen name of Ivan Tobilevych), b 29 September 1845 in Arsenivka, Bobrynets county, Kherson gubernia, d 15 September 1907 in Berlin. Famous Ukrainian actor and playwright; the brother of the theater figures P. *Saksahansky, M. *Sadovsky, and M. *Sadovska-Barilotti. From the age of 14 he worked as a clerk (from 1869 as a police secretary in Yelysavethrad). In 1863 he met M. *Kropyvnytsky and with him became involved in producing amateur theater in Yelysavethrad. In 1883 he lost his job for his involvement with Ukrainian revolutionaries and for procuring passports for them and joined M. *Starytsky's troupe. In 1884 he was exiled to Novocherkassk; returning to Ukraine in 1886, he lived under police surveillance until 1889. From 1887 until his illness in 1904 he lived on his farmstead, wrote, and worked as a stage actor and director, mostly in the traveling troupe of his brother P. Saksahansky. He was acclaimed for his principal dramatic and comic roles in many Ukrainian plays, some of them his own. He was buried on his farmstead near Yelysavethrad (now Kirovohrad); the memorial museum-preserve Khutir Nadiia was opened there in 1956.

Karpenko-Kary was renowned as a playwright. He began writing quite late in life: his first story, Novobranets (The New Conscript), and first play appeared in 1883. Altogether he wrote 18 frequently produced plays: the satiric comedies Rozumnyi i duren' (The Wise Man and the Fool, 1885), Martyn Borulia (1886), Chumaky (Chumaks, 1897), Sto tysiach (One Hundred Thousand, 1889), Khaziain (The Master, 1900), Suieta (Vanity, 1902), and Zhyteiske more (The Sea of Life, 1904); the dramas Burlaka (The Vagabond, 1883), Pidpanyky (The Status Seekers, 1883), Naimychka (The Servant Girl, 1885), Beztalanna (The Fortuneless Maiden, 1886), Bat'kova kazka (The Father's Tale, 1892), and Ponad Dniplom (Along the Dnieper, 1897); and the historical ethnographic plays Bondarivna (The Cooper's Daughter, 1884), Palyvoda XVIII st. (A Madcap of the 18th Century, 1893), Lykha iskra pole spalyl' i sama schezne (The Evil Spark Will Burn the Field and Itself Disappear, 1896), Sava Chalyi (1899), and Handzia (1902).

While realistically and perceptively portraying life and social relations in the village, Karpenko-Kary also reflected in his plays the impact of colonialism in Russian-ruled Ukraine: land poverty and rural overpopulation, and the ignorance and evil deeds of the peasant in a position of authority (in Burlaka), the rich peasant (Kalytka in Sto tysiach), and the large landowner (Terentii Puzyr in Khaziain).

Some of Karpenko-Kary's plays were an important step forward in Ukrainian theater. In them he abandoned the sentimental populist-ethnographic approach and melodramatic, operatic forms; instead he highlighted social relations and conflicts and concentrated on psychological portrayal and character development, thereby creating the finest examples of turn-of-the-century Ukrainian didactic plays about peasant life and laying the foundations of modern Ukrainian theater. His plays are still often produced in Ukraine. His works have been republished many times; the most complete editions are Tvory (Works, 6 vols, 1929–31), P'iesy (Plays, 1949), and Tvory (Works, 3 vols, 1960–1).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Iefremov, S. Karpenko-Karyi (Kiev 1924)
 Tobilevych, S. Zhyttia I. Tobilevycha (Kiev 1948)
 Stetsenko, L. I. Karpenko-Karyi (I.K. Tobilevych): Zhyttia i tvorchyia diial'nist' (Kiev 1957)
 Kravchenko, Zh. Karpenko-Karyi: Anotovanyi bibliohrafichnyi pokazhchyk (Odessa 1958)
 Skrypnyk I. Ivan Karpenko-Karyi: Literaturnyi portret (Kiev 1960)
 Tsyban'ova, O. Litopys zhyttia i tvorchosti I. Karpenka-Karoho (I.K. Tobilevycha) (Kiev 1967)

I. Koshelivets

Karpenko-Krynytsia, Petro [Karpenko-Krynycja] (pseud of Petro Horban), b 22 December 1917 in Baklanova Muraviika near Chernihiv. Poet and journalist. He began writing in 1938. In 1950 he immigrated to the United States. Karpenko-Krynytsia's first collections of poetry reflect the romantic heroism of the Ukrainian national struggle during the Second World War; they include Hrymliat' dorohy (The Roads Are Thundering, 1942), Polum'iana zemlia (The Flaming Earth, 1947), Pidniati vi-tryla (Raised Sails, 1950), and Soldaty moho legionu (The Soldiers of My Legion, 1951). A notable stylistic change occurred in his last three poetry collections (especially in the genre of the lyrical longer poem) Poemy (Poems, 1954), Povernennia druha (The Return of a Friend, 1958), and Indiians'ki baliady (Indian Ballads, 1968).

Karpiak, Volodymyr [Karp'jak], b 28 July 1909 in Peremyshl, Galicia, d 19 January 1972 in Philadelphia. Stage actor and operetta tenor. From 1934 to 1939 he acted in various theaters in Galicia such as the Tobilevych Ukrainian People's Theater, the Kotliarevsky Theater, and the Lesia Ukrainka Ukrainian Drama Theater and, during the war, at the Lviv Opera Theater. Having immigrated to West Germany, he belonged to the Ensemble of Ukrainian Actors. In 1950 he settled in Philadelphia, where in 1963 he joined the Teatr u Piatnytsiu company. His repertoire included Sándor, Paganini, and Józsi in F. Lehár's Where the Lark Sings, Paganini, and Gypsy Love.

Karpov, Gennadii, b 14 February 1839, d 6 May 1890. Russian historian. He studied with S. *Solovev at Moscow University. In 1870–1 he was a professor at Kharkiv University and then lived in Moscow. He is the author of works on 17th-century Ukraine, among them Kriticheskii obzor razrabotki glavnykh russkikh istochnikov do istorii Malorossii otnosiashchikhsia za vremia 1654–1672 gg. (A Critical Survey of the Treatment of Major Russian Sources on the History of Little Russia in the Years 1651–1672, 1870), Kostomarov kak istorik Malorossii (Kostomarov as a Historian of Little Russia, 1871), and Nachalo istoricheskoi deiatel'nosti Bogdana Khmel' nitskogo (The Beginning of the Historical Activity of B. Khmelnytsky, 1873). He also edited Akty, otnosiashchiesia k istorii Iuzhnoi i Zapadnoi Rossii (vols 10, 14, 15) and the Izbornyk of Sviatoslav of 1073, published in 1880. Although written from a biased Russian imperialist perspective, his works contain a wealth of documentary material on the history of Ukraine. A bibliography of his works is found in AUA, 5–6 (1957).

Karpovych, Leontii [Karpovyč, Leontij] (secular name: Lonhyn), b 1580? in the Pynske region, d October 1620. Orthodox church leader, pedagogue, and polemist. He studied at the Ostrih Academy, then became rector of the brotherhood school in Vilnius. A defender of the Orthodox church, he condemned the Church Union of *Berestia. While working at the Vilnius monastery press (1610), he was involved in the publication of M. Smotrytsky's antiunion work, Trenos; for this he was imprisoned for two years. After his release he was the founder and archimandrite of the Holy Spirit Monastery in Vilnius (1613–20) and then was elected bishop of Volodymyr and Berestia but died before being consecrated. A renowned preacher and polemist, he authored Kazan'e dvoe (Two Sermons, 1615) and Kazanie na pogrzebie kniazia Wasila Wasilewiczja Galiczyna (Sermon at the Grave of Prince Vasyl Vasylovych of Galicia, 1619), and wrote prefaces to the collections Vertohrad dushevnyi (A Spiritual Garden, 1620) and Sviatoho Ioanna Zlatoustaho ... (St John Chrysostom ..., 1620).

Karpukhin, Petro [Karpuxin], b 26 September 1902 in Makiivka, Bakhmut county, Katerynoslav gubernia, d 31

May 1974 in Kharkiv. Organic chemist; from 1939 corresponding member of the AN URSR. After graduating from the Kharkiv Chemical-Technological Institute (1926), he taught there for many years. He specialized in the synthesis of organic dyes out of coal tar and published over 80 papers on the subject.

Karpynsky, Oleksander [Karpyns'kyj], b 1869 in Biala Podlaska in Podlachia, d 1929 in Rivne. Civic and political leader. Under the tsarist regime he served as a judge in Chernihiv. In the revolutionary period he was deputy minister of internal affairs in V. Vynnychenko's cabinet (1918), a member of the Council of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of the Hetman government, and then adviser to the UNR diplomatic mission in Warsaw (1919–20). After the war he practiced law in Rivne and headed the local Prosvita society. From 1922 to 1928 he served as deputy to the Polish Senate and as president of the Ukrainian Senate Club in Warsaw.

Karsky, Evfimii [Karskij, Evfimij], b 1 January 1861 in Lasha, Belorussia, d 29 April 1931 in Leningrad. Linguist. Karsky was a professor at Warsaw (1894–1916) and then Petrograd (later Leningrad) universities (1916–28), and editor of Russkii filologicheskii vestnik. In addition to fundamental works in the history and dialectology of Belorussian and the history of Belorussian literature, he wrote studies of Old Church Slavonic texts and the syntax of the Laurentian Chronicle and published critical editions of the Laurentian Chronicle, Ruskaia Pravda, and a Ukrainian Lucidarius of the 17th century. His important textbook Slavianskaia kirillovskaia paleografiia (Slavic Cyrillic Paleography) was published in 1928. Karsky also published materials on southern Ukrainian dialects, and gave a general survey of Ukrainian dialects in Russkaia dialektologiiia (Russian Dialectology, 1924). A bibliography of his publications appeared in Izvestiia Akademii nauk sssr, Otdel obshchestvennykh nauk (1932).

Karst. Terrain consisting of soluble rock such as limestone or gypsum and characterized by barren, rocky ground, sinkholes, precipices, caves, and underground streams and lakes. The term is derived from the Karst, a limestone plateau in the Dinaric Alps of Yugoslavia. In Ukraine karst features are most prominent in regions built of Upper Jurassic limestones, such as the Crimean Mountains (particularly the *Yaila plateaus) and the Podilian *Tovtry; of gypsum, such as southwestern Podilia and Pokutia; or of marls, such as southwestern Podilia and Volhynia. They are much less prominent in the southern Donbas and the Central Upland. In Caucasia karst features are widespread in the Black Sea littoral and Rocky Caucasus ranges.

Kartvelishvili, Lavrentii [Kartvelišvili, Lavrentij], b 28 April 1890 in Samtredia, Georgia, d 22 August 1938. Bolshevik leader. In 1918 he became a member of the All-Ukrainian Party Provisional Committee and served in the Red Army in the Odessa region. In the 1920s and 1930s he served in various party positions in Ukraine, Russia, and Georgia. In 1929–30 he was second secretary of the CC CP(B)U and a member of its Politburo and Organizational Bureau. He perished in the political purges of the 1930s and was rehabilitated in the 1950s.

Kasha, Michael [Kaša, Myxajlo], b 6 December 1920 in Elizabeth, New Jersey. Physical chemist of Ukrainian descent; member of the US National Academy of Sciences. A graduate of the universities of Michigan and California (PH D 1945), since 1951 he has been a professor at Florida State University and director of the Institute of Molecular Biophysics (1960–). Kasha has published extensively in the areas of molecular biophysics, emission spectroscopy of molecules, classification of electronic transitions, radiationless transitions, theoretical photochemistry, and molecular excitons and energy transfer.

Andrii Kashchenko

Mykola Kashchenko

Kashchenko, Andrii [Kaščenko, Andrij], b 1858 on the Veselyi khutir, Oleksandrivske county, Katerynoslav gubernia, d 29 March 1921. Writer. He began writing in 1883, but became known only after the Revolution of 1905, when the ban on Ukrainian publishing in Russian-ruled Ukraine was lifted. He is the author of many stories and novellas, most set in the Cossack period. Although they have little literary value and are historically inaccurate, because of their easy and romantic representation of Ukraine's past they became extremely popular and played an important didactic role, instilling a fundamental sense of Ukrainian patriotism in their peasant and young readers. Consequently they have been banned in Soviet Ukraine; numerous editions, however, appeared in interwar Galicia.

Kashchenko, Mykola [Kaščenko], b 7 May 1855 at Veselyi khutir, Oleksandrivske county, Katerynoslav gubernia, d 29 March 1935 in Kiev. Biologist, embryologist, and plant breeder; from 1919 full member of the Ukrainian Academy of Sciences. A graduate (1880) of Kharkiv University, he taught at Tomsk University (1895–1912) and then at the Kiev Polytechnical Institute. He directed the Acclimatization Garden in Kiev (1914–35) and the Zoological Museum of the Ukrainian Academy of Sciences (1919–26), both of which he had organized. Kashchenko contributed to many areas of biology. His pioneering studies in pathological embryology included microscopic analysis of human embryonic terata. He wrote many taxonomic works on Siberian fauna and acclimatized many medicinal, industrial, decorative, and edible plants (pears, apricots, grapes) to Ukraine and Siberia. A biography of him by N. Konotopets was published in Kiev in 1980.

Kashchenko, Vasyl [Kaščenko, Vasyli'], b 1812, d 15 December 1894. Horticulturalist and forester. For over 50 years he developed new fruit trees at his estate Pryiut in Katerynoslav gubernia. He was one of the first agronomists in the Russian Empire to introduce shelterbelts and urged their application in steppe farming.

Kashshai, Antin [Kaššaj], b 24 February 1921 in Dubrynyn near Perechyn, Transcarpathia. Landscape painter. A student of Y. *Bokshai, Kashshai is known for such works as Winter in the Carpathian Mountains (1952), First Snowfall (1952), The Mountain Pass (1954), Under the Mountain Meadows (1963), October (1970), and A Misty Morning (1979). A book about him was written by G. Ostrovsky in 1962.

Kashynsky, Pavlo [Kašyns'kyj], b 25 September 1890 in Kiev, d 3 January 1980 in Munich. Publisher, publicist, and educator. He was head of the Brotherhood of Independentists in Kiev. He served as principal of Ukrainian secondary schools in Kiev and Dashiv (1917), Kiev (1918), Vienna (1942–5), and Munich (1946–53). For many years Kashynsky was director of the Vernyhora publishing society in Kiev (1916–21), Vienna (1918–23, 1939–), and Munich (1946–8). From 1925 to 1935 he published and edited Östeuropäischer Pressedienst in Vienna.

Kasianenko, Hryhorii [Kasjanenko, Hryhorij], 1891–? Aeronautical engineer and political leader. During the period of Ukrainian independence he was a member of the Central Rada and the Committee for the Defense of the Revolution. Under the Soviet regime he worked as an engineer in the aircraft industry. He perished during the Stalinist terror of the 1930s.

Volodymyr Kasianenko

Kasianenko, Volodymyr [Kas'janenko], b 16 November 1901 in Velykyi Yanyzol, Mariupol county, Katerynoslav gubernia, d 18 January 1981 in Kiev. Anatomist; from 1951 a full member of the AN URSR. He graduated from the Kiev Veterinary Institute in 1926 and worked there until 1950 as professor (from 1938) and head of the division of evolutionary morphology. Then he worked at the Institute of Zoology of the AN URSR as institute director (1950–63) and consultant (1964–81). Most of Kasianenko's research dealt with the evolution and anatomy of muscle and bone structures in mammalian limbs.

Kasianenko, Yevhen [Kasjanenko, Jevhen], 1889–? Political leader and journalist. During the revolutionary period he sat on the Central Rada (1917–18) as a representative of the Ukrainian Social Democratic Workers' party. As a member of the party's left wing led by Ye. Neronovych, he went over to the Bolsheviks and joined the ЦР(Б)У. He edited various publications, including the semiofficial organ of the government Visti Vseukraïns'koho tsentral'noho vykonavchoho komitetu. He disappeared in the late 1930s during the Party purges in Ukraine.

Kasianov, Oleksander [Kas'janov], b 23 February 1906 in Kharkiv, d 23 September 1961 in Kharkiv. Architect; corresponding member of the Academy of Construction and Architecture of the Ukrainian SSR. A graduate of the Kharkiv Art Institute (1930), he was Kharkiv's chief architect (1943–50) and director of the Institute of Urban Planning of the Academy of Construction and Architecture. He helped draft the general plans for Kharkiv, Chernihiv, Kamianets-Podilskyi, Lviv, and Voroshylovhrad. Kasianov edited the journal Budivnytstvo i arkhitektura and wrote books on city planning: Misto maibutn'oho (The City of the Future, 1957) and Radian'ke mistobudivnytstvo na Ukraïni (Soviet Urban Planning in Ukraine, 1955).

Vasyl Kasiian: Self-Portrait (1931)

Kasiian, Vasyl [Kasijan, Vasyl'], b 1 January 1896 in Mykulyntsi, Stanyslaviv county, Galicia, d 26 June 1976 in Kiev. Graphic artist of the realist school; from 1947 full member of the USSR Academy of Arts and the Academy of Architecture of the Ukrainian SSR. A graduate of the Prague Academy of Arts (1926) and a student of M. Švabinský, he assumed Soviet citizenship and in 1927 immigrated to the Ukrainian SSR, where he taught at the Kiev State Art Institute (1927–30 and 1944–76), the Ukrainian Printing Institute in Kharkiv (1930–7), and the Kharkiv Institute of Arts (1938–41). A prolific and versatile artist, he excelled in all the graphic techniques – wood engraving, copper engraving, linocut, and lithography – as well as pen drawing and watercolors. During his Prague period Kasiian dealt with social themes, depicting the poverty and hard life of the lower classes in Europe. Coming to Ukraine, he created several series of propaganda wood and copper engravings about collective-farm life, the building of the Dnieper Hydroelectric Station, mining in the Donbas, and the building of the Kiev Metro. He also devoted a series of engravings to V. Lenin and to J. Stalin (almost 50 works). Following N. Khrushchev's condemnation of the personality cult, Kasiian destroyed whole portfolios of his engravings of Stalin. The most valuable part of his rich, technically flawless legacy consists of the works on industrial themes, which document the economic transformation of Ukraine, and the illustrations to works by T. Shevchenko, Lesia Ukrainka, I. Franko, M. Kotsiubynsky, V. Stefanyk, and O. Kobylanska. Socialist realism, which Kasiian defended in his articles, led him to adopt elements of naturalism and had a detrimental effect on his later work. He wrote many works on graphic techniques, and collaborated with Yu. Turchenko on a study of T. Shevchenko's graphic works. He was the editor of Taras Shevchenko: Mystets'ka spadshchyna (Taras Shevchenko: The Artistic Legacy, 4 vols, 1961–4), which contains all of Shevchenko's known works, and a coeditor of the six-volume Istoriia ukrains'koho mystetstva (History of Ukrainian Art, 1966–8). From 1927 Kasiian's numerous artistic works were displayed at one-man exhibitions, including six in Kiev, three in Kharkiv, two in Odessa, and one each in Lviv, Moscow, Prague, and Bucharest. His works were included in most official Soviet exhibitions abroad, including the Venice Biennale.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Portnov, H. Vasyl' Illich Kasiian (Kiev 1962)
 Kostiuk, S. Vasyl' Kasiian. Bibliografichnyi pokazhchyk (Lviv 1976)
 Vladych, L. Vasyl' Kasiian (Kiev 1978)

S. Hordynsky

Kasperovych, Mykola [Kasperovyč], b 1885 in Kozets, Chernihiv gubernia, d 1934? Painter and art restorer. A friend and student of M. Boichuk, he studied art in Paris and in 1910 took part in a group exhibit of Boichuk's students at the Salon des Indépendents. From 1914 he oversaw the restoration work at museums in Chernihiv and in 1924 became director of the Restoration Studio of the Kievan Cave Monastery Museum of Cults and Customs. When the monastery was closed in 1926, he was appointed director of the Restoration Studio of the All-Ukrainian Museum Village, located on the grounds of the monastery and encompassing the collections of several important museums. Besides conserving art objects, the studio conducted systematic research in the history of Ukrainian painting. When the museum village was abolished in 1934, Kasperovych was arrested and disappeared without a trace.

Kasymenko, Oleksander, b 23 June 1905 in Velyka Burimka, Zolotonosha county, Poltava gubernia, d 13 January 1971 in Kiev. Soviet historian and Party functionary. From 1931 he taught at Kiev University. From 1933 to 1947 he held various Party posts. In 1946 he was a member of the Soviet Ukrainian delegation at the Paris Peace Conference. From 1947 to 1964 he served as director of the Institute of History at the Academy of Sciences of the Ukrainian SSR and editor of many of its publications. His works are written in a propagandistic manner and deal mostly with Ukrainian-Russian relations.

Katamai, Bohdan [Katamaj], b 10 August 1911 in Yamnytsia, Stanyslaviv county, Galicia. Journalist, editor, and civic leader. Arriving in the United States in 1930, he became a founder and the first president of the Ukrainian Catholic Youth League in America. In 1934 he was elected president of the Society of Mazepists and editor of its monthly journal Holos Mazepynstiv. Returning to Galicia in 1936, he worked as an editor on the newspaper Ukraïns'ki visti. With the outbreak of war he returned to the United States, and became editor (1943–50) of the newspaper Ameryka, which he transformed into a daily. At the same time, Katamai served on the executive of the Ukrainian Congress Committee of America (1941–50) and on the board of directors of the United Ukrainian American Relief Committee (1947–9).

Katamai, Dmytro [Katamaj], b 1886 in Yamnytsia, Stanyslaviv county, Galicia, d 3 April 1935 in Vienna. Political and civic figure. He sat on the executive committee of the Ukrainian Radical party and edited its weekly Hromads'kyi holos (1911–14). In 1913 he founded the literary and scientific monthly Iliustrovana Ukraïna. Before the First World War, Katamai was an organizer of the Sich movement. During the war he served as secretary (1914–17) on the Combat Executive of the Ukrainian Sich Riflemen (USS) and as a lieutenant colonel in the Army of the UNR. He designed the mazepynka cap, known originally as the katamaivka, which was part of the USS uniform.

Katerynodar. See Krasnodar.

Katerynopil [Katerynopil']. v-11. Town smt (1979 pop 6,800) and raion center in Cherkasy oblast. First mentioned in the mid-16th century as the town of Kalnyboloto. From 1648 to 1712 it was a company town in Korsun regiment. In 1793 it came under Russian rule; it was renamed in 1795. From 1795 it was a county town (from 1797 in Kiev gubernia). Bricks and animal feed are produced there.

Katerynoslav. See Dnipropetrovske.

Katerynoslav Cossack Army. A military formation centered between the Boh and Inhul rivers in southern Ukraine. It was formed in 1787 by Russian Gen G. *Potemkin from two former units of the *Boh Cossack Army and local peasants and military colonists to defend southern Ukraine against the Turks and to fight in the Russian-Turkish War (1787–91). The subsequent conscription of merchants, artisans, and Old Believers from the region increased the size of the army to some 50,000, including 10,000 active soldiers organized in 10 regiments. The army gained renown in battles against the Turks at Akerman (Bilhorod-Dnistrovskiy). The Katerynoslav Cossack Army was disbanded in 1796. In 1802 some 3,000 of the former Cossacks were resettled in the Kuban, where they joined the *Kuban Cossack Host.

Katerynoslav group (Ukrainian: Katerynoslavtsi). The popular name for the Donets–Kryvyi Rih Basin regional organization of the Russian Social Democratic Workers' Party (Bolshevik) (RSDRP[B]), created in the summer of 1917 with centers in Kharkiv and Katerynoslav. The largest Bolshevik organization in Ukraine, its leaders included E. Kvirring, Ya. Yakovlev, and Artem (F. Sergeev). Located in the industrial center of Ukraine, with its concentration of Russian or Russified workers, the group consistently and adamantly defended a centralist position on the question of Party and state organization. It considered Ukraine to be an integral part of Russia and opposed the idea of a separate Soviet Ukrainian republic and the establishment of an autonomous Ukrainian Communist party with a single party center. In 1918 it was behind the formation of the *Donets–Kryvyi Rih Soviet Republic. Throughout the Revolution the members had serious disagreements with the Kiev-based wing of the Bolshevik party, which was generally more conscious of the strength of Ukrainian national sentiment and therefore recognized the need to compromise with pro-Ukrainian forces and establish a distinct all-Ukrainian party. When the Moscow Bolshevik leadership eventually sided with the Kievan wing, the Katerynoslav group was forced to dissolve and was incorporated into the *Communist Party of Ukraine (Bolshevik).

Katerynoslav gubernia. An administrative-territorial unit in Russian-ruled Ukraine. Katerynoslav (Russian: Ekaterinoslav) – today *Dnipropetrovske – was the capital. In 1764 *New Russia gubernia had been created to administer much of Southern Ukraine, including the lands of the Zaporozhian Host after the destruction of the New Sich in 1775. It was replaced by Katerynoslav vicegerency in 1783 but was reinstated in 1796. In 1802 its territory was divided among the newly created Mykolaiv (from 1803 *Kherson), *Tavriia, and Katerynoslav gubernias. Katerynoslav gubernia consisted of Katerynoslav and Verkhnodniprovsk counties west of the Dnieper, and Bakhmut, Novomoskovsk, Oleksandriivsk, Pavlohrad, Slovianoserbske, and Rostov counties east of the river; in 1874 Oleksandriivsk county was divided to create Mariupol county, and in 1887 Rostov county was transferred to the Don Cossack province. The gubernia's population was 662,000 in 1811, 902,400 in 1851, 1,204,800 in 1863, and 1,792,800 in 1885; the vast majority were peasants. From the second half of the 19th century the gubernia was the coal-mining and metallurgical center of Ukraine, incorporating the *Dnieper Industrial Region and the *Donets Basin. Consequently its population multiplied, increasing by 1897 to 2,113,700 (69.5 percent Ukrainian, 18.2 percent Russian, 4.2 percent Jewish, 4 percent German, 2.3 percent Greek, 1.1 percent Tatar). In 1924 it had 3,424,100 (13.6 percent urban) inhabitants, living in 5,165 settlements, 36 of them cities and towns; close to half were non-Ukrainian, and the largest social category was that of workers (25 percent). Under Soviet rule the gubernia was abolished in 1925, and its territory (76,912 sq km) was divided among seven okruhas: Katerynoslav, Oleksandriivsk, Berdianske, Zaporizhia, Kryvyi Rih, Melitopol, and Pavlohrad.

I. Myhul, R. Senkus

Katolyts'kyi Vskhid (Catholic Dawn). A quarterly published from 1904 to 1907 in Lviv by the Vlasna Pomich Bohosloviv society. It consisted of theological studies, news about theologians, and the first literary efforts of young writers. The editor was Rev H. Plakyda.

Katonin, Yevhen, b 5 April 1889 in Odessa, d 27 February 1984 in Kiev. Architect; from 1948 full member of the Academy of Architecture of the Ukrainian SSR and then of the Academy of Construction and Architecture of the Ukrainian SSR (1956–64). A graduate of the All-Russian Academy of Arts in Petrograd (1918), he was appointed lecturer (1922) and then professor (1937) at the academy. In 1948 he joined the faculty of the Kiev State Art Institute. As an architect he helped design the Victory Park in Leningrad, the Kiev Station of the Moscow Metro, and the Vokzalna Station of the Kiev Metro. He also worked as a graphic artist.

Katsap [kacap]. Derogatory name applied to Russians by Ukrainians. It is used often in the folk tradition and literature. P. Kulish wrote about T. Shevchenko: 'He made us despise the Muscovites ... We called them katsapy.' Marko Vovchok wrote: 'The market was seething with bustle ..., the hucksters were jabbering, the gypsies swearing, the katsapy railing.' The word can also be found in the works of T. Shevchenko, P. Myrny, A. Svydnytsky, S. Rudnytsky, and D. Bedzyk. According to some scholars (A. Brückner, M. Vasmer) katsap is derived from the Ukrainian tsap (goat); according to others (A. Krymsky, D. Yavornytsky) it comes from the Tatar kassap (butcher).

Katsnelson, Abram [Kacnel'son], b 14 January 1914 in Horodnia, Chernihiv gubernia. Poet and literary critic. He graduated from Kiev University in 1941 with a degree in the theory of literature. His first collection of poems, Krapli sontsia (Droplets of the Sun, 1935), was followed by many other collections of rather average Soviet lyrical poetry – Dostyhaiut' plody (The Fruits Are Ripening, 1938), Riast (Corydalis, 1940), Perednii kraï (The First Land, 1947), V im'ja zhyttia (In the Name of Life, 1953) – as well as the novelette in verse Posered buri (Amidst a Storm, 1963). His contribution as a literary scholar to poetics is notable, and his numerous articles have been published as separate collections of essays: Krasa i syla virshovanoho slova (The Beauty and Strength of the Poetic Word, 1963), Pravdyva iskra Prometeia (The True Spark of Prometheus, 1968), Pro poeziuu i poetiv (About Poetry and Poets, 1972), and Pro poeziuu (About Poetry, 1977). The essays range from studies of individual poets or poems to general analyses of poetic language and tropes.

Kavaleridze, Ivan, b 26 April 1887 at Ladanskyi khutir in Kharkiv gubernia, d 3 December 1978 in Kiev. Sculptor, film director, dramatist, and screenwriter. He studied art at the Kiev Art School (1907–9), the St Petersburg Academy of Arts (1909–10), and with N. Aronson in Paris (1910–11). His sculptures include busts of famous people such as F. Chaliapin (1909), and over 100 monuments in various cities of Ukraine: eg, the monument to Princess Olha in Kiev (1911), which was destroyed in 1934; the Shevchenko monuments in Kiev (1918), Romen (1918), Poltava (1925), and Sumy (1926); and the Skovoroda monuments in Lkhvytsia (1922) and Kiev (1977). In the 1920s his work was influenced by Cubism. His group compositions – Bohdan Khmelnytsky Sends the Kobza Players into the Villages (1954), A. Buchma in the Role of M. Zadorozhny (1954), and Prometheus (1962) – are somewhat stylized.

Ivan Kavaleridze: Don Quixote

In 1928 he became interested in filmmaking. He scripted and directed a number of innovative historical films marked by stylization and monumentalism: Zlyva (The Downpour, 1929), Perekop (1930), Koliivshchyna (1933), and Prometei (Prometheus, 1936). Accused of 'nationalist deviation' and formalism, he was forced to turn to popular themes and a simplified style. He adapted the operas Natalka Poltavka (Natalka from Poltava, 1936) and Zaporozhets' za Dunaiem (Zaporozhian Cossack beyond the Danube, 1938) for film. After the Second World War he directed the films Hryhorii Skovoroda (1960) and Poviiia (The Strumpet, 1961) based on P. Myrny's novel.

A retrospective exhibit of his sculptures was held in 1962. He wrote several heroic dramas: Votaniiv mech (Wotan's Sword, 1966), Perekop (1967), and Persha borozna (The First Furrow, 1969).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Nimenko, A. Kavaleridze – skul'ptor (Kiev 1967)
 Zynych, S.; Kapel'horods'ka, N. Ivan Kavaleridze (Kiev 1971)
 V. Revutsky

Kavetsky, Rostyslav [Kavec'kyj], b 1 December 1899 in Samara, Russia, d 12 October 1978 in Kiev. Oncologist. A graduate of Samara University (1925); from 1951 full member of the AN URSR. At the Academy of Sciences of the Ukrainian SSR he directed its Institute of Clinical

Rostyslav Kavetsky

Vladimir Kaye-Kysilewsky

Physiology (1946–51) and served as head of its biological sciences division (1952–61, 1963–6). He was a founder and the first director of the Kiev Institute of Experimental and Clinical Oncology of the republic's Ministry of Public Health (from 1970, the AN USSR Institute for Problems of Oncology). Kavetsky was a leading cancer specialist. His research dealt with the role of the nervous and endocrine systems in tumor growth.

Kavunnyk, Danylo. See Vellansky, Danylo.

Kaye-Kysilewsky, Vladimir [Kysilevs'kyj, Volodymyr], b 4 August 1896 in Kolomyia, Galicia, d 30 July 1976 in Ottawa. Historian and civil servant; son of O. *Kysilevska. During the First World War he served with the Ukrainian Sich Riflemen and the Ukrainian Galician Army. After the war he studied history at Vienna University (PH D 1924). Having emigrated to Canada in 1925, he became editor of the newspapers Zakhidni visti in Edmonton (1928–30) and Ukraina in Chicago (1931). While working as director of the Ukrainian Press Bureau in London, England (1931–40), he completed his doctoral studies at the School of Slavonic and East European Studies (1933–6). He returned to Canada in 1940 and, eventually, worked for the Department of National War Services as a liaison officer with ethnic groups. He played an advisory role in the formation of the Ukrainian Canadian Committee. After the war he continued his career in the civil service and taught history and Slavic studies at the University of Ottawa (1948–60). In 1954 he was elected first president of the Canadian Association of Slavists. Kaye-Kysilewsky wrote Early Ukrainian Settlements in Canada, 1895–1900 (1964) and compiled the Dictionary of Ukrainian Canadian Biography: Pioneer Settlers of Manitoba 1891–1900 (1975). In 1974 he was appointed to the Order of Canada.

Kazakhstan or Kazakh Soviet Socialist Republic.

The second-largest republic (1986 pop 16,028,000) in the USSR, with an area of 2,717,300 sq km. It is bounded by the Volga region and the Caspian Sea on the west, the Sinkiang Uighur Autonomous region of the People's Republic of China on the east, the Ural Mountains and western Siberia on the north, and the Central Asian Soviet republics of Turkmenistan, Uzbekistan, and Kirgizia on the south. The capital is Alma-Ata (1986 pop 1,088,000).

The republic has 19 oblasts, 222 raions, 83 cities, and 204 towns (smt). In 1986, 57.5 percent of the population was urban. The northern and northeastern parts of Kazakhstan have been settled by Ukrainians, and today, based on estimates of cumulative immigration, almost 26 percent of the republic's population is of Ukrainian origin.

Kazakhstan is essentially a tableland, much of which is covered by deserts or semideserts. Its western and southwestern parts consist of the Caspian Depression and the Ustiurt Plateau. Farther east, the Ural Plateau separates the Caspian Depression from the vast Turan Plain, in the south of which lies the Aral Sea. The north is part of the West Siberian Plain. Central Kazakhstan is an undulating upland. In the east and southeast, the desert expanses are bounded by the Altai, Tarbagatai, and Dzhungarian Alatau mountains and the northern and western ranges of the Tian Shan.

A narrow belt of forest-steppe with chernozem soils – a continuation of the Siberian forest-steppe – stretches across northern Kazakhstan. Farther south lies a wide steppe belt with chernozem and chestnut-brown soils and a belt of infertile deserts and semideserts. In the southern and eastern piedmont lies another belt of fertile steppes with loess soils. Only the forest-steppe and steppe belts and the larger river valleys (where irrigation and reclamation are feasible) are arable.

Kazakhstan was originally populated by nomadic Turkic tribes, out of which the Kazakh hordes and khanate evolved in the 15th century. Russian penetration began in the 1730s, and by the 1860s all of Kazakhstan had been annexed. The first Slavic settlers were Cossacks.

Beginning in the last two decades of the 19th century, northern Kazakhstan, along with the adjacent parts of Siberia and the Urals, attracted the largest number of Russian and Ukrainian agricultural settlers (see *Emigration). In 1897 there were 37,700 Ukrainians there. More than a million settlers had arrived by 1916. Before the 1917 Revolution the eastern parts of Kazakhstan were within the Steppe and *Turkestan general-gubernias. After occupying Central Asia, the Bolshevik authorities set up various autonomous oblasts and republics in the region. In 1920 the territory settled by the Kazakhs became the Kirgiz Autonomous SSR; in 1925 it was renamed the Kazakh Autonomous SSR. In 1936 the Kazakh SSR – an artificial entity that does not correspond to either historical or (in the north) ethnographic developments – was constituted.

Beginning in the 1880s the nature of Kazakhstan's economy changed from one of nomadic herding to a settled herding and farming type. In the late 1920s a mixed economy based on the mining of more than 90 ferrous and non-ferrous metals and coal began to develop. Since 1954 cultivation of the 'virgin lands' (which saw the influx of over half a million Ukrainians) has made agriculture an important branch of the economy. Today Kazakhstan is one of the main regions of grain growing (wheat, millet, rice) and sheep and cattle farming in the USSR. It is the principal Soviet supplier of chromite and non-ferrous metals (silver, gold, copper, lead, zinc, titanium, magnesium, rare and precious metals) and the third most important supplier of coking coal (the Karaganda and other basins). Its electric-power, chemical, petroleum and natural-gas extraction and refining, machine-building, clothing, and food industries are not insignificant.

As the country's economic structure has changed, so has its population. In the 1926 census the population of Kazakhstan was 6,503,000, with Kazakhs constituting 57.1 percent, Ukrainians 13.2 percent, and Russians 19.7 percent. Collectivization, famine, and Stalinist repressions caused a decline in the population in general and of Kazakhs in particular. According to the unreliable 1939 census, Kazakhstan's population was 6,094,000, a decline of some 7 percent from the 1926 figure. The total number of Kazakhs in the republic between 1926 and 1939 dropped by 35 percent. In 1939 Kazakhs constituted 38.2 percent of the population and Ukrainians, 10.8 percent. In 1959 the population of Kazakhstan was 9,310,000; Kazakhs accounted for 30 percent and Ukrainians, 8.2 percent. In 1979 Kazakhs constituted 36 percent, Russians 40.8 percent, Ukrainians 6.1 percent, and Germans 6 percent of the population.

The Kazakhs have remained primarily a rural people. In 1970 only 26 percent of them lived in urban centers, and the Kazakhs constituted only 17 percent of the republic's urban population (Russians constituted 58 percent) and 23 percent of its specialists. In 1959 only 19 percent of the republic's working class was Kazakh. Despite being a minority in their own republic, the Kazakhs have maintained their national identity. In 1979, 99 percent of them considered Kazakh their mother tongue.

In 1979 there were 898,000 Ukrainians in Kazakhstan; in 1970, 933,000. The actual number of Ukrainians or inhabitants of Ukrainian origin – if one extrapolates from pre-Soviet emigration data and the 1926 census – should be much higher, from 3 to 4 million. In 1979, only 41.3 percent of those who identified themselves as Ukrainians considered Ukrainian to be their mother tongue; 58.6 percent considered it to be Russian. Ukrainians have lived mostly in the agricultural regions of the north and the southeast piedmont. The territories they have inhabited form, along with the adjacent areas of western *Siberia, the *Urals, and the northern *Kirgiz SSR, a compact region of Ukrainian settlement – like the *Far East – in Asia. Ukrainians settlers have called this region Siryi Klyn (the Gray Wedge) or Sira Ukraina (Gray Ukraine).

Ukrainian-Kazakh relations have been mainly cultural and have been associated primarily with the figure of T. Shevchenko, who was exiled to Kazakhstan (1848–57). Kazakh themes and subjects occur in several poems and stories he wrote there and in the 200 paintings and drawings he executed as a member of an expedition to the Aral Sea in 1848–9. In 1939 the port on the Caspian Sea in Mangyshlak oblast in whose fortress Shevchenko was forced to live in 1850–7 was renamed Fort Shevchenko in his honor; a Shevchenko Memorial Museum was founded there. The Kazakh State Art Gallery in Alma-Ata was also named in Shevchenko's honor in 1939; paintings by Shevchenko and exhibits dealing with Ukrainian-Kazakh cultural ties are housed there. A Kazakh edition of Shevchenko's Kobzar was published in 1935, and several editions of his works have been published in Kazakh since then; 17 Kazakh poets prepared the 1964 edition. The Kazakh scholar T. Beisov published a monograph on Shevchenko in Kazakhstan in 1952, and the Academy of Sciences of the Kazakh SSR published a collection of essays about Shevchenko in 1964. Many articles about him have also been written; he has appeared in Kazakh artworks and literature; and the Kazakh film studio released a film about him.

Works by other Ukrainian writers (I. Franko, Lesia Ukrainka, P. Tychna, M. Bazhan, O. Honchar, M. Stelmakh, and others) have been translated into Kazakh and published in separate editions, anthologies, and journals. Works by Kazakh writers (Abai Kunanbaiev, Dzhambul Dzhabaiev, M. Auezov, G. Mustafin, G. Musrepov, S. Mukanov, and others) have been translated into Ukrainian. Kazakhstan has been the setting of works by O. Desniak, O. Donchenko, T. Masenko, Yu. Smolych, I. Senchenko, N. Zabala, and other Ukrainian writers.

During the Second World War many Ukrainians lived as evacuees in Kazakhstan; among them were the artist A. Petrytsky, the sculptor M. Lysenko, the composer M. Skorulsky (who composed a quintet based on the works of Abai Kunanbaiev), and the companies of the Kiev Ukrainian Drama Theater (in Semipalatinsk), the Kiev Russian Drama Theater (in Karaganda), and the theaters of Poltava, Dnipropetrovske, Luhanske, and other cities. The faculty members of the Kiev Agricultural Institute worked at the Kazakh Agricultural Institute in Alma-Ata, while those of Kiev and Kharkiv universities were consolidated into one Ukrainian State University, which took over the buildings of the Kzyl-Orda Pedagogical Institute.

From the early 19th century the tsarist authorities exiled their political opponents to Kazakhstan. This practice has been continued in the Soviet period. In the 1930s and 1940s, in particular, thousands of Ukrainians were sent to *concentration camps around Karaganda (the Karlag system), where many of them died. Those who survived were not allowed to return to Ukraine, and many remained in Kazakhstan.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Korbut, S. Siryi Klyn i ukrains'ka kolonizatsiina sprava (Lviv 1937)
 Demko, G. The Russian Colonization of Kazakhstan, 1896–1916 (Bloomington and The Hague 1969)
 Marunchak, M. Ukrainci v sssr poza kordonamy urssr (Winnipeg 1974)
 Koishibaeva, R. Kazakhsko-ukrainskie literaturnye svyazi (Alma-Ata 1977)
 Alekseenko, N. Naselenie dorevoliutsionnogo Kazakhstana (chislennost', razmeshchenie, sostav, 1870–1914 gg.) (Alma-Ata 1981)
 Bekmakhanova, N. Mnogonatsional'noe naselenie Kazakhstana v epokhu kapitalizma: 60-e gody XIX veka–1917 g. (Moscow 1986)
 B. Krawchenko, V. Kubijovyč, A. Zhukovsky

Kazanets, Ivan [Kazanec'], b 12 October 1918 in Lotsmanska Kamianka (now a part of Dnipropetrovske), Katerynoslav gubernia. Government and Communist Party leader. He was first secretary of the Stalin oblast Communist Party of Ukraine committee (1953–60) and second secretary (1960–3) and a member of the Presidium of the CC CPU (1960–5). From 1963 to 1965 he served as head of the Council of Ministers of the Ukrainian SSR and then as minister of metallurgy of the USSR.

Kazanka. VI-13. Town smt (1978 pop 8,500) and raion center in Mykolaiv oblast, situated on the Vysun River in the Black Sea Lowland. Founded in the early 19th century, it has a food industry and a regional museum.

Kazennyi Torets River [Kazennyj Torec']. A right-tributary of the Donets River, the Kazennyi Torets flows for 134 km through the northwestern Donets Basin and drains a basin of 5,410 sq km. Its waters supply industry and are used for irrigation.

Kazka, Arkadii, b 24 September 1890 in Sedniv, Chernihiv gubernia, d 1933. Poet. Supporting himself by teaching, he was published, beginning in 1919, in such journals as Literaturno-naukovyi visnyk, Nova hromada, and Chervonyi shliakh. In 1928 he joined the writers' group *Pluh. A collection of his poetry, 'Lamentabile,' remains unpublished. Kazka cultivated the classical forms of the sonnet, triolet, and rondeau. He committed suicide in an NKVD prison in Odessa.

Bohdan Kazymyra

Volodymyr Kedrovsky

Kazymyra, Bohdan, b 19 October 1913 in Cherniiv, Stanyslaviv county, Galicia. Historian, educator, journalist. A graduate of Louvain University (1935), the Greek Catholic Theological Academy in Lviv (1941), and Vienna University (PH D 1955), he taught sociology at the Theological Academy in Lviv (1935–9, 1942–4). In 1948 he established and directed the Ukrainian Press Bureau in Brussels and lectured at the Ukrainian theological seminary in Culemborg, Holland. Settling in Canada in 1950, he organized the Ukrainian Press Bureau in Edmonton and edited the monthly Katolyts'ka aktsiia (1950–5). Since then he has worked as a librarian and archivist. In 1963 he was appointed professor of sociology at the Ukrainian Catholic University in Rome. Kazymyra's publications include numerous articles in history and sociology and pamphlets on the history of the Ukrainian Catholic church in Canada.

Kedrovsky, Volodymyr [Kedrovs'kyj], b 13 August 1890 in the Kherson region, d 13 March 1970 in New York. Journalist; military and political activist. He was a member of the Central Committee of the Ukrainian Party of Socialist Revolutionaries and an organizer of the Ukrainian armed forces during the Ukrainian struggle for independence of 1917–20. Elected vice-president of the *Ukrainian Military Committee, Kedrovsky was a member of the Central Rada, serving as the UNR undersecretary of war in 1917 and as chief inspector of the UNR armed forces in 1919. In 1920 he was appointed ambassador to the Baltic republics. He immigrated to Vienna in 1921, where he was the head of the Ukrainian League of Nations Association until 1924 and active in the Association of Ukrainian Journalists in Europe. In 1926 he immigrated to the United States. He was coeditor of the daily newspaper Svoboda (1926–33) and chief of the Ukrainian section of Voice of America (1955–63). His memoirs, Obrysy mynuloho (Sketches of the Past) and 1917-yi rik (The Year 1917, vol 1), were published in 1966.

Ivan Kedryn

Ivan Keivan: Self-portrait

Kedryn, Ivan (pen name of Ivan Rudnytsky), b 22 April 1896 in Khodoriv, Bibrka county, Galicia. A prominent journalist and political leader; full member of the Shevchenko Scientific Society. He is the brother of Milena, Mykhailo, and Anton Rudnytsky. A graduate of Vienna University (1923), he worked on the staff of the journal Volia in Vienna (1920–2) and the newspaper Dilo in Lviv (1922–39). For a time he served as Dilo's Warsaw correspondent (1926–36) and as the first press attaché of the Ukrainian Parliamentary Representation in Warsaw (1925–31). In 1937–9 he was Dilo's editor for political affairs. As a veteran of the UNR Army and a leading member of the Ukrainian National Democratic Alliance (UNDO), he was responsible for liaison between the UNDO and Col Ye. Konovalets of the OUN, and between the UNDO and the UNR Government-in-exile. In 1944 he immigrated to Austria, where he headed the Ukrainian Central Relief Alliance in Austria (1946–9). Having settled in the United States in 1949, he served for many years on the editorial board of Svoboda. He was president of United Ukrainian War Veterans in America and coeditor of its Visti kombatanta. Kedryn has edited various collections and almanacs, including the history of the Sich Rifleman Zoloti Vorota (The Golden Gates, 1937). His more important works are Beresteis'kyi myr: Spomyny i materiialy (The Peace Treaty of Brest-Litovsk: Recollections and Materials, 1928), Prychyny upadku Pol'shchi (The Causes of Poland's Fall, 1940), Paraleli z istorii Ukraïny (Parallels in the History of Ukraine, 1971), a book of memoirs, Zhyttia – podii – liudy (Life – Events – People, 1976), and a collection of selected articles, U mezhakh zatsikavolennia (Within the Range of [My] Interests, 1986). As a journalist he wrote numerous articles for the Ukrainian, Polish, German, and English press on a wide range of topics, including Ukrainian political and community life, world politics, and cultural developments.

S. Yaniv

Kehychivka [Kehyčivka]. IV-16. Town smt (1979 pop 7,500) and raion center in Kharkiv oblast. Founded in the late 19th century, it has a food industry. Natural gas is extracted in the raion.

Keivan, Ivan [Kejvan] (Keywan), b 16 September 1907 in Karliv, Sniatyn county, Galicia. Painter, graphic artist, and art scholar. Completing his art studies at the Cracow (1928–9) and Warsaw (1932–7) academies of fine art and the Ukrainian Art School in Lviv (1937), he taught art at the Ukrainian gymnasium in Kolomyia and after the war at Ukrainian schools in Germany. Since 1949 he has been living in Edmonton, Canada, where he helped found the Ukrainian Association of Artists. He has done a series of large portraits – which includes portraits of I. Franko, T. Osmachka, V. Lesych, and the artist's wife – and a self-portrait. His publications include many articles and a number of monographs: Taras Shevchenko – obrazotvorchyi mystets' (T. Shevchenko as a Plastic Artist, 1964), Volodymyr Sichyns'kyi (1957), Dmytro Antonovych (1966), and Ukrains'ke obrazotvorche mystetstvo (Ukrainian Fine Arts, 1984). His oil paintings and graphic works have been exhibited in Lviv, Warsaw, Paris, Munich, Amsterdam, and various cities in Canada and the United States.

Keller, Fedor, b 1857, d 20 December 1918 in Kiev. Russian count and army general. In 1914 as commander of the Tenth Cavalry Division of the Russian army, he ordered pogroms of the Ukrainian population in Galicia. In 1918 Hetman P. Skoropadsky appointed him supreme commander of the Ukrainian armed forces. During the uprising against the hetman regime, Keller was captured by troops loyal to the Directory and killed in an escape attempt.

Kelmentsi [Kel'menci]. v-7. Town smt (1979 pop 6,900) and raion center in Chernivtsi oblast, situated in the Khotyn region of northern Bessarabia. First mentioned in 1559.

Kempe, Lavrentii, b 22 August 1901 in Volodarka, Skvyra county, Kiev gubernia, d 27 January 1981 in Toronto. Character actor. From 1921 he worked with various Galician touring companies, the Tobilevych Ukrainian People's Theater in Stanyslaviv (1928), Y. Stadnyk's company, O. Karabinevych's company in Volhynia, and the Franko Ukrainian Theater in Stanyslaviv (1940–4). Emigrating from Ukraine during the war, he was active in the Ukrainian theater in Austria and from 1949 in Canada. Kempe's repertoire included Shostenko and Nevodomy in Yu. Kosach's Obloha (The Siege) and Marsh chernihiv's'koho polku (The March of the Chernihiv Regiment), respectively. In Toronto he directed and appeared in operettas such as Ya. Barnych's Hutsulka Ksenia (Ksenia, the Hutsul Girl) and Sharika.

Kentzhynsky, Bohdan [Kentzhyns'kyj] (Kentschynskyj), b 22 February 1919 in Rivne, Volhynia gubernia, d 23 May 1969 in Stockholm. Political figure, publicist, and historian. During the Second World War he was the official representative of the OUN (Melnyk faction) in Finland. From 1945 he headed the Ukrainian Information Bureau (UIB) in Stockholm and acted as the Scandinavian representative of the Executive of the Ukrainian National Council. For many years he was a member of the Leadership of Ukrainian Nationalists (PUN). From 1957 he lectured on history at Stockholm University and served as research associate of the Swedish Royal Academy. Based on his research in Scandinavian archives, he wrote a number of important articles on the Khmelnytsky and Mazepa periods, which were published in Karolinska Förbundets Årsbok, and a monograph Mazepa (1962). He also wrote several popular histories of Ukraine: Kampen om Ukrainas självständighet (1942), Sanningen om Ukraina (1943), and Katajaisena kasvaa vapautemme (1944).

Kerch, Oksana [Kerč] (pen name of Yaroslava Kulish), b 24 October 1911 in Przeworsk, Galicia. Writer. After the Second World War she emigrated to Argentina, where she wrote the novel Al'batrosy (Albatrosses, 1957). After moving to the United States she wrote the novels Narechenyi (The Fiancé, 1965) and Takyi dovyhy rik (Such a Long Year, 1971). She has also contributed many reviews and articles to Ukrainian periodicals.

Kerch: the dromos of the Royal kurhan (4th century BC)

Kerch [Kerč]. VIII-17. City (1985 pop 168,000) under oblast jurisdiction and port in the eastern Crimea. It is divided into three city raions and is an important transportation center.

Kerch originated in the 6th century BC as the Greek colony of *Panticapaeum, which in the succeeding century became the capital of the *Bosporan Kingdom. From the middle of the 1st century BC it was under Roman and then Byzantine control. It suffered severely from barbarian invasions and was devastated by the Huns in AD 375. From the 10th to the 12th century the Slavic settlement of Korchev, which belonged to *Tmutorokan principality, was a center of trade between Rus' and the Crimea, Caucasia, and the Orient. In the 14th and 15th centuries the Genoese colony of Cerco (Cerchio) was established there, which in the late 15th century passed to the Turks, who built a citadel there. By the Peace Treaty of *Küçük Kaynarca in 1774, Kerch and the neighboring fortress of Yenikale (built in 1706) were ceded to Russia.

Kerch: wall painting in the vault of the Royal kurhan (4th century BC)

Because of its location, from 1821 Kerch developed into an important trade and fishing port. Its population grew from 8,230 in 1840 to 34,780 in 1897. It was looted by the British during the Crimean War in 1855. After suffering a decline during the First World War and the civil war (1926 pop 34,600), the city resumed its growth in the late 1920s with the expansion of various industries, iron ore and metallurgy in particular, and by 1939 its population had reached 104,500. Severely damaged during the Second World War it has been completely rebuilt.

Kerch is the center of the *Kerch Iron-ore Basin, the base of a fishing fleet, and an important fish-processing center for numerous varieties of fish products. Shipbuilding, building-materials manufacturing, food processing, and light industry also play a significant role in the city's economy. Its port handles agglomerate produced by the Komysh-Burunskiy Iron-ore Complex, iron pipes, coal, building materials, grain, and fish. Its railway ferry links the Crimea with Caucasia. The city has research institutes of fish farming and oceanography, a metallurgical and shipbuilding tekhnikum, a medical school, and six vocational-technical schools. Its large history and archeology museum (est 1826) has a valuable collection reflecting the region's past. Its most impressive architectural monuments are Demeter's Vault with Greek mythological frescoes (1st century AD), the Church of St John the Baptist (10th century, with murals from the 13th–14th century), and the Yenikale fortress. Located nearby are several ancient kurhans and excavated cities.

V. Kubijovyč

Kerch Iron-ore Basin. A group of iron-ore deposits in the northern and eastern parts of the Kerch Peninsula with an area over 250 sq km and estimated reserves of 8 billion t (0.3 percent of Ukraine's total reserves). Two-thirds of the reserves consists of tobacco ores, and one-third of the more valuable brown ores. The latter have an iron content of approximately 37 percent and some harmful impurities; hence, these ores must be subjected to concentration and chemical treatment. Iron-ore seams extend no deeper than 100–160 m and can be easily strip-mined.

The Kerch deposits began to be mined at the end of the 19th century. In 1913, 370,000 t or 5 percent of Ukraine's iron ore was mined in Kerch. The industry employed 3,000 workers. During the 1920s production was low: in 1928 only 51,000 t were mined. When the *Komysh-Buruny Iron-ore Complex was built in the 1930s, the industry expanded rapidly and by 1940 reached an output of 1.3 million t. After the Second World War the mines were reopened only in 1951. In 1955 their output was 2.6 million t and in 1975 it peaked at 4.8 million t (3.9 percent of Ukraine's output). As the brown ores became depleted and grave problems were encountered in upgrading the tobacco ores, production declined to 3.5 million t (2.9 percent of Ukraine's output) by 1984.

An integrated iron and steel mill in Kerch was uneconomical and was not rebuilt after the Second World War. The ore mined in the Kerch Peninsula is shipped across the Sea of Azov to the *Zhdanov Azovstal Metallurgical Plant.

B. Somchynsky

Kerch Peninsula. A 3,000-sq-km, riverless peninsula in the eastern Crimea, connected to it by the 17-km Parapach Isthmus. It is washed by the Sea of Azov to the north, the Black Sea to the south, and the Kerch Strait to the east. The rich *Kerch Iron-ore Basin is found there. The soils are mainly chestnut alkaline; chernozems are found in pockets in the north and southeast. The vegetation is mostly of the treeless steppe variety. Ruins of the ancient *Bosporan Kingdom are located on the coast. The main city in the peninsula is Kerch. The peninsula's hilly northern parts consist of calcites, marls, and sandstone; saline lakes (from which salt is extracted) and many mud volcanoes are found there. Its southern part is steppe land.

Kerch Strait. Known in ancient times as the Cimmerian Bosphorus, the strait is situated between the Kerch Peninsula of the Crimea and the Taman Peninsula of the Kuban and joins the Black and Azov seas. Its length is 41 km; its width, 4–15 km; and its depth, 5–13 m. The strait is an important navigation route. For two months of the year it is covered by ice floes. A railway ferry and other boat services maintain communications between its two shores.

Kerensky, Aleksandr [Kerenskij], b 4 May 1881 in Simbirsk (now Ulianovsk), Russia, d 11 June 1970 in New York. Russian statesman during the 1917 Revolution. He became the minister of justice in the Russian *Provisional Government in March 1917 and the minister of war in May 1917. On 12 July he became prime minister. He fled from Russia during the Bolshevik takeover in November and lived in London and Paris. In 1940 he moved to the United States.

Kerensky had criticized the tsarist regime's nationalities policy and its persecution of the Ukrainian language. However, as prime minister his primary concern was to keep the Russian Empire intact. As the Ukrainian government, the *Central Rada, grew stronger and more inclined toward independence for Ukraine, Kerensky became more opposed to it. As war minister he had banned the Second *All-Ukrainian Military Congress that met in June 1917; as prime minister he was forced to recognize the legitimacy of its decisions and to withdraw his ban. After the declaration of the First *Universal, he had no choice but to negotiate with the Rada's *General Secretariat in July 1917 and to recognize the Rada and the autonomy of Ukraine. The last months of his government were marked by a steady deterioration in Ukrainian-Russian relations and the political situation in Russia in general.

Kerkinitidis. An Ionic polis founded at the turn of the 5th century BC on the western coast of the Crimea on the site of present-day Yevpatoriia. It flourished in the 4th and 3rd centuries BC, when it came under the control of *Chersonese Taurica. It was destroyed by the Huns in the 4th century AD. Excavations carried out in 1917–18, 1929, and 1950 uncovered a part of the city wall, streets, and the remains of buildings.

Ivan Kernytsky

Kernytsky, Ivan [Kernyc'kyj], b 30 September 1909 in Hai, Lviv county, Galicia, d 9 April 1979 in Lviv. Ukrainian linguist. A research associate of the AN USSR Institute of Social Sciences specializing in Middle Ukrainian, he devoted his attention particularly to the morphology of 16th-century Ukrainian. He is the author of numerous articles in this field and a monograph, Systema slovozmyny v ukrains'kii movi na materialakh pamiatok XVI v. (The Inflectional System of Ukrainian Based on the Materials of 16th-Century Monuments, 1967). He also studied the Lemko dialect and published Lemko texts from the 16th and 17th centuries in Akty sela Odrekhova (Documents of the Village of Odrekhiv, 1970). He was coeditor of Slovnnyk staroukrains'koi movy XIV–XV st. (Dictionary of Old Ukrainian of the 14th–15th Centuries, 1977–8).

Kernytsky, Ivan [Kernyc'kyj] (pseud: Iker, Gzyms, Papai), b 12 September 1913 in Sukhodil, Bibrka county, Galicia, d 15 February 1984 in New York. Writer and feuilletonist. He began as a staff writer for Nash prapor in Lviv (1933–9) and worked also as a correspondent and feuilletonist for other periodicals in Ukraine, in displaced persons camps, and, after 1949, in the United States, mainly for the daily Svoboda. He was also the coeditor of the humor magazine Lys Mykyta. Although he wrote several comedies, his main work consisted of humorous short stories and novelettes, including Sviatoivans'ki vohni (The Fires of St John's Eve, 1934), Tsyhans'kymy dorohamy (Along Gypsy Roads, 1947), Heroi peredmistia (The Suburban Hero, 1958), and Budni i nedilia (Weekdays and Sunday, 1973).

KGB (Komitet gosudarstvennoi bezopasnosti; in Ukrainian: KDB or Komitet derzhavnoi bezpeky [Committee for State Security]). Soviet political police in charge of intelligence at home and abroad as well as the security of the borders, atomic installations, and weapons programs. Legally, a government agency responsible to the USSR Council of Ministers, it is in reality the Party's instrument of control over political life in the Soviet Union. It was established as a separate agency on 13 March 1954 to break up the power of the Ministry of Internal Affairs (MVD), and its authority was restricted to matters of state security. Coming directly after L. Beria's thwarted attempt to use the security system under his control to establish himself as J. Stalin's successor, the reorganization of the security machine had the purpose of ensuring the Party's control over it and preventing it from ever again threatening the principle of collective leadership. KGB heads are ex officio members of the Council of Ministers. The KGB remains the Soviet security organization to the present time; thus, it has lasted longer than any previous political police force (*Cheka, *GPU, OGPU, *NKVD, *MGB).

The agency consists of three levels: the central organs under the USSR Council of Ministers, the republican organs under the republican council of ministers, and the local organs in oblasts, kraia, cities, and raions. It is a complex organization, divided into four main directorates: the First has charge of all intelligence operations abroad, the Second controls the activities of the Soviet people and foreigners in the USSR, the next, numbered as the Fifth (est 1969), deals with ideological opponents and dissidents, and the unnumbered Border Guards Directorate watches over the borders. The main directorates are supported by seven independent directorates (sections) and six independent departments, which are subdivided into a host of smaller units. The number of people employed by the agency is estimated at over 100,000.

The first chairman of the KGB was I. Serov, who played an important role in N. Khrushchev's rise to power. In Ukraine the agency was headed by V. Nikitchenko. A new emphasis on legality reduced the power of the secret police to organize mass terror without depriving the police of arbitrary power over individuals. Many inmates, mostly non-political prisoners of corrective labor camps, were released, and conditions in the camps were improved. Strikes and revolts in the camps from 1953 to 1956 were ruthlessly crushed, but were followed also by some reforms. The KGB made a concerted effort to deny nationalist émigré groups any influence within the USSR and to paralyze them by destroying their leadership and demoralizing their members. The execution in May 1954 of V. *Okhrymovych, an underground organizer sent into Ukraine by the OUN, set the stage for a wave of trials of former OUN members and a broad propaganda campaign against the OUN and the Ukrainian Catholic church in Western Ukraine. In Munich the two leaders of the OUN L. *Rebet (1957) and S. *Bandera (1959) were assassinated by the KGB agent B. Stashynsky. In 1960 V. Kuk, R. *Shukhevych's successor in command of the UPA, appealed to Ukrainians abroad to give up their struggle against the Soviet regime and to return to Ukraine, and M. Matviieiko, the former head of the security section of the OUN (Bandera faction), turned out to be an agent provocateur. In spite of some liberalization, Soviet citizens could not discuss important political issues outside official forums. Any attempts to organize political groups without state approval were suppressed and the organizers were punished severely. In Ukraine the KGB uncovered several such groups: the 'United Party for the Liberation of Ukraine' in 1957, the 'Ukrainian National Committee,' and the 'Ukrainian Workers' and Peasants' League,' both in 1961.

Under the chairmanship of A. Shelepin (1958–61) and V. Semichastny (1961–7), the KGB became more sophisticated in its methods of repression. The new criminal code of 1958 introduced a new, vaguely defined crime against the state – ‘anti-Soviet agitation and propaganda’ – which became widely used by the KGB to give an appearance of legality to political oppressions. Although victims no longer disappeared without warning or trace, the trials were contrived and closely controlled by the police. Physical torture was much reduced, but various psychological pressures were exploited to the full. The detention of political opponents in mental hospitals to obviate the inconveniences of public trial became an increasingly favored method of repression. A gamut of less severe measures from police harassment and searches to loss of residency or job was instituted as means of greater intimidation. Furthermore, the ‘heroic tradition’ of the secret police and its current exploits were glorified in the mass media. The agency was given an air of omniscience and invincibility.

The Twenty-Second CPSU Congress (1961) led to bold demands for further de-Stalinization. In Ukraine the intelligentsia called for a complete exposure of past crimes and a reversal of the Russification policy. In the mid-1960s the KGB struck at the Ukrainian cultural movement, arresting over 20 young intellectuals in Ukraine. A year later, more than 70 Ukrainians were arrested and harshly punished for circulating samydav literature. Far from intimidating the young intelligentsia, the trials produced the opposite effect.

The new chairman of the KGB, Yu. *Andropov (1967–82), responded to the rising tide of protest in the wake of the invasion of Czechoslovakia in 1968 with arrests, trials, and forcible psychiatric treatment. In July 1970 V. Nikitchenko was replaced by V. *Fedorchuk as chairman of the Ukrainian KGB and the agency intensified its activity in Ukraine. Its ranks increased greatly. To discredit the *dissident movement, a strong propaganda campaign was launched linking the dissidents with nationalist circles abroad. The trial of Ya. Dobosh, a Belgian citizen of Ukrainian origin, on a charge of anti-Soviet activities served as the pretext for another wave of arrests in Ukraine in early 1972. The most common charge was ‘anti-Soviet agitation and propaganda.’ The next major operation of the KGB was directed against the *Ukrainian Helsinki Group, established on 9 November 1976 in Kiev. Its members were harassed and then arrested, many of them on false criminal charges such as rape, theft, and drug trafficking. In spite of loud protests from abroad, they were given maximal sentences. With the arrest of dissidents and the virtually automatic resentencing of those who had completed their terms, the dissident movement in Ukraine was severely crippled. In the 1970s and 1980s the KGB also devoted some attention to religious groups. The KGB largely controlled the activities of the official Russian Orthodox church and persecuted the Evangelical Christian Baptists and Roman Catholics as well as the banned Greek Catholic church. In the 1960s the KGB launched a propaganda campaign against the Jewish faith.

Changes in the KGB leadership in the 1980s had little effect on the organization’s established policies and practices. In May 1982 V. Fedorchuk was promoted to the top post in the union agency and his republican post was assumed by S. Mukha. In December 1982 V. Chebrikov replaced Fedorchuk. Alongside the Party and the armed forces, the KGB remains one of the principal power bases in Soviet society. In spite of M. Gorbachev’s emphasis on legality and openness, the KGB has retained its arbitrary powers and continues to operate outside the law and beyond public scrutiny.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Levytsky, B. The Uses of Terror: The Soviet Secret Police 1917–1970 (New York 1972)
 Corson, W.R.; Crowley, R.T. The New KGB: Engine of Soviet Power (New York 1985)

M. Stech

Khabarovsk: Third Ukrainian Far Eastern Congress, 7–12 April 1918; the head of the congress, Yu. Mova, is in the center wearing a hat.

Khabarovsk [Xabarovsk]. Capital (1982 pop 553,000) of Khabarovsk krai and principal city of the Soviet *Far East. It was founded in 1858 as a military outpost called Khabarovka. The present name was adopted in 1893. At the beginning of the 1880s it had more than 4,000 inhabitants. Since then its population has grown rapidly, reaching 15,000 in 1897, 49,700 in 1926, 207,300 in 1939, 322,700 in 1959, and 436,000 in 1970. Situated on the Amur River near its confluence with the Ussuri River, the city is an important transport junction and industrial center (machine building, metalworking, petroleum refining, woodworking, food processing, and light industries). It is located in an ethnically mixed region, called Zelenyi Klyn by its Ukrainian inhabitants. According to the 1926 census, 3,800 or 7.3 percent of the city’s inhabitants were Ukrainian; in 1970 about 30,000 or 6.8 percent were Ukrainian. Together with Vladivostok, Khabarovsk was the most important center of Ukrainian settlement in Zelenyi Klyn. Ukrainian organizations flourished there during the Revolution of 1917–22. The second and third *Far Eastern Ukrainian congresses were held in Khabarovsk, and a number of Ukrainian newspapers – Khvyli Ukrainy, Ranok, and Nova Ukraina – were published there. After Soviet occupation in 1922, Ukrainian political activities ceased, but cultural activities, under Soviet control of course, continued. Since the mid-1930s intensive, officially promoted Russification has taken its toll among the large and growing Ukrainian population.

V. Kubijovyč

Khabarovsk krai. An administrative region of the RSFSR on the Pacific coast. Covering 824,600 sq km, it has (1986) a population of 1,760,000, 79.5 percent of which is urban. According to the 1979 census, 86.6 percent of the population is Russian and 5.8 percent is Ukrainian. Judging by the 1926 census, according to which Ukrainians accounted for 23 percent of the population, the number of people of Ukrainian descent is much higher. The number of political prisoners, many of them Ukrainians, who are held in the labor camps scattered throughout the region is unknown. They are forced to work in logging.

Khadzhybei Estuary (Khadzhybeisky lyman). VIII-11. An estuary on the northwest coast of the Black Sea near Odessa. Separated from the sea by a 4.5-km-wide sandbank, the estuary is 31 km long, 0.5–2.5 km wide, and up to 2.5 m deep. It covers an area of 70 sq km. The purported curative properties of its black silt led to the establishment of the Khadzhybei health resort on its shore. The Malyi Kuialnyk River empties into the estuary.

Khalansky, Ivan [Xalans'kyj], b 1749 in Khalan, Slobidska Ukraine, d ca 1825 in Novhorod-Siverskyi, Chernihiv gubernia. Cultural figure and organizer of education, a member of the *Novhorod-Siverskyi patriotic circle. After serving in the imperial bureaucracy in St Petersburg (from 1774), in 1778 he entered military service, becoming quartermaster (1780) and then captain (1782) of a Ukrainian Hussar regiment. He became the procurator first of the Novhorod-Siverskyi Upper Court in 1784 and then of the Upper Lord Court (1790–5). From 1789 Khalansky devoted himself to the cause of public education in Novhorod-Siverskyi, Starodub, Hlukhiv, and Chernihiv, introducing many reforms in educational practices. In 1805 he founded and became the first director of *Novhorod-Siverskyi Gymnasium.

Khalansky, Mykhailo [Xalans'kyj, Myxajlo], b 13 November 1857 in Raskhovets, Shchigry county, Kursk gubernia, Russia, d 12 April 1910 in Kharkiv. Literary historian and ethnographer; corresponding member of the Russian Academy of Sciences. He studied at the universities of Kharkiv and St Petersburg. In 1891 he was appointed professor of the Chair of Russian Language and Literature at Kharkiv University. His research was greatly influenced by O. *Potebnia and dealt with the bylyny, South and East Slavic epic poetry and legends, dumas, and literary monuments of the Rus' period. His many publications include Velikorusskie byliny Kievskogo tsikla (Russian Bylyny of the Kievan Cycle, 1885), Tuzhno-slavianskie skazaniia o Kralevice Marke v sviazi s proizvedeniami russkogo bylevogo eposa' (South Slavic Legends about Prince Mark in Relation to the Works of the Russian Bylyna Epic, Russkii filologicheskii vestnik, 1892–6), and Ekskursiia v oblast' drevnikh rukopisei i staropechatnykh izdani (An Excursion into the Realm of Early Manuscripts and Old Printed Works, 1900–2).

Khalupnyk. Category of peasant in territories ruled by Poland and the Grand Duchy of Lithuania and later by the Austrian and Russian empires. Peasants lost their land as a result of the **Voloka* land reform of 1557 to the Polish nobility and magnates and were left only with their own houses (khalupy, hence the name) and small land allotments. Deprived of their livelihood, khalupnyky were forced to become hired laborers on the **filvarok*, or artisans, or to seek work in the cities. In addition, they performed compulsory labor for the lord (25 days a year of 'pedestrian corvée,' ie, without the use of draft animals) and other services. In the Russian Empire of the late 18th and early 19th centuries, the growth of serfdom increased the number of khalupnyky. They numbered 7.5 percent of peasant households in Right-Bank Ukraine in 1848 and 24 per cent in Left-Bank Ukraine in 1859. After the abolition of serfdom in 1861 they did not receive land but remained farm laborers or were forced to migrate to the city in search of work.

Khamula, Mykhailo [Xamula, Myxajlo], b 28 September 1885 in Bortkiv, Zolochiv county, Galicia, d 25 November 1969 in New York. Businessman. He was the owner of a large-scale kilim and woven-products factory in Hlyniiany. His products were designed by Ukrainian artists such as S. Borachok, M. Butovych, V. Diadyniuk, and P. Kholodny and won many awards at exhibitions. He was commercially represented in many cities of Western Europe and the United States. In 1939 Khamula's factory was nationalized by the Soviet authorities. He emigrated during the Second World War and in 1950 settled in the United States. His memoirs, Hlyniiany, misto moikh kylymiv (Hlyniiany, Town of My Kilims), were published in 1969.

Khandrykov, Mytrofan [Xandrykov], b 1 January 1837 in Moscow, d 7 August 1915. Astronomer and geodesist; corresponding member of the Russian Imperial Academy of Sciences from 1896. A graduate of Moscow University (1858), from 1870 he was a professor at Kiev University and the director of the Kiev Astronomical Observatory (to 1901). His main contributions were in theoretical and descriptive astronomy, particularly the computation of the orbits of planets and comets and prediction of eclipses. He is the author of numerous works, including the three-volume Sistema astronomii (The System of Astronomy, 1875–7).

Khanenko [Xanenko]. Cossack officer family established by Stepan Khanenko, who at the beginning of the 17th century joined the Zaporozhian Sich. Prominent political leaders of the Hetman state and important cultural figures of the 19th–20th centuries came from this family. In the late 1650s Mykhailo *Khanenko, Stepan's son, attained the office of colonel of Uman regiment, and later became hetman of Right-Bank Ukraine (1669–74) and P. *Doroshenko's opponent. One of Stepan's grandsons, Fedir (d 1744), became quartermaster of Kiev regiment, while another, Danylo, became acting colonel of Lubni regiment and took part in a joint Russian campaign against the Tatars; he perished at the siege of Kizi-Kermen in 1697. Danylo married the daughter of General Quartermaster I. *Lomykovsky. Mykola *Khanenko (1693–1760), Danylo's son, was a prominent political and diplomatic figure of the *Hetman state. Among his sons the most successful was Vasyl (ca 1730–?), who studied in Hlukhiv, St Petersburg, and Kiel, and served from 1752 to 1762 as cavalry captain of the Holstein Corps in St Petersburg and abroad, and as personal adjutant of Peter III. In 1762 he resigned his military commission and settled in Lotaky village in Starodub regiment on an estate granted to him by Hetman K. Rozumovsky. He was one of the largest landowners of the Hetman state. Vasyl's younger brother, Ivan (1743–ca 1797), after studying in St Petersburg, was appointed *fellow of the standard in 1767 and fought in the Russo-Turkish War of 1768–74. Later he served as Count P. Rumiantsev's personal adjutant. In 1783, having retired from military service, he was marshal of the nobility for Pohar county. His extensive landholdings consisted of villages in Pohar and Starodub counties. Towards the end of his life he resumed military office as lieutenant-colonel of the Hlukhiv Rifle Regiment. His wife, Sofiia Horlenko, was the great-granddaughter of Hetman D. Apostol. Ivan's older son, Oleksander (ca 1776–1830), served under the patronage of the chancellor, Prince O. *Bezborodko, as a court councilor at the Collegium of Foreign Affairs from 1799. In 1800 he was appointed secretary to the Russian legation in London. Eventually, he retired to his estate in Surazh county and was elected marshal of the county nobility. He also belonged to a Ukrainian autonomist circle (see *Autonomy). Ivan's grandson, Mykhailo (1818–52), served in the 1840s as marshal of the nobility of Novhorod-Siverskyi county, and was interested in Ukrainian history. He wrote articles on the economy of the northern Chernihiv region. Mykhailo's brother Oleksander *Khanenko (ca 1816–95) wrote a number of historical studies. A third brother, Ivan (1817–91), published materials on Surazh county. The son of Ivan Ivanovych, Bohdan (1848–1917), was a noted art collector, archeologist, and art patron.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Bodianskii, O. 'Istoricheskoe svedenie o general'nom khorunzhem Nikolae Daniloviche Khanenke,' Chteniia v Imperatorskom obshchestve istorii i drevnostei rossiiskikh, 1 (1858)
 Lazarevskii, O. 'Predislovie k Dnevniku Nikolaia Khanenko,' ks, no. 3 (1884)
 Titov, A. 'Dnevnik Nikolaia Khanenko,' ks, nos 7–8 (1896)
 Modzalevskii, V. Malorossiiskii rodoslovnik, vols 1–4 (1908–14)
 Ohloblyn, O. Khanenky. Storinka z istorii ukrains'koho avtonomizmu 18 st. (Kiel 1949)
 – 'Khanenky,' Liudy staroi Ukrainy (Munich 1959)
 A. Zhukovskiy

Khanenko, Bohdan [Xanenko], b 23 January 1848 on the Khanenko family estate in Chernihiv region, d 8 June 1917 in Kiev. Collector of Ukrainian antiques and art, archeologist, and arts patron, honorary member of the St Petersburg Academy of Arts. A great-grandson of Mykola Khanenko and son of I. Khanenko, he was president of the All-Russian Union of Industrialists and a permanent member of the State Council. Most of his archeological and art collection was donated to the Museum of Arts in Kiev, which later formed the foundation of the VUAN Museum of Art (now the Kiev Museum of Western and Eastern Art). Khanenko financed his own archeological digs, mostly in the Kiev region, and with the assistance of his wife, Varvara, published a six-volume catalogue of the discovered treasures titled Drevnosti Pridneprov'ia Chernogo moria i poberezh'ia (Antiquities of the Dnieper Region and the Coast of the Black Sea, 1899–1907). He was a member of the Archeological Commission, the Historical Society of Nestor the Chronicler, and other scientific societies.

Khanenko, Mykhailo [Xanenko, Myxajlo], ca 1620–80. Hetman of Right-Bank Ukraine from 1669/70 to 1674. As colonel of the Uman regiment in 1656–60 and 1664–9, he supported the pro-Polish orientation of hetmans Yu. Khmelnytsky and P. Teteria. In 1668 he sided with the Zaporozhian Cossack faction that, with Crimean Tatar support, opposed the authority of Hetman P. *Doroshenko in Right-Bank Ukraine and tried to replace him with P. *Sukhovii. In July 1669, after Sukhovii was decisively defeated by Doroshenko, Khanenko was proclaimed hetman at a council of three Right-Bank regiments in Uman. Continuing the struggle against Doroshenko, he was defeated in battle at Stebliv on 29 October 1669. On 2 September 1670 Khanenko's envoys concluded a treaty with the Poles at Ostrih in which Khanenko received Polish recognition and military aid, after agreeing to swear fealty to the Polish king, to limit his rule only to a small part of the Right Bank, and to extend autonomy only to the Cossack stratum. Khanenko lost several more battles in his war with Doroshenko. In 1674, after the forces of the Moscow-supported hetman of Left-Bank Ukraine, I. *Samoilovych, crossed the Dnieper River to fight Doroshenko and were joined by most of the Right-Bank regiments, Khanenko relinquished his power to Samoilovych in exchange for estates in Left-Bank Ukraine. Later he was accused of conducting secret talks with the Poles in 1677–8, and the tsar ordered Samoilovych to imprison Khanenko in Baturyn. Khanenko succeeded in establishing his innocence, but he died shortly after.

Mykhailo Khanenko

A. Zhukovskiy

Khanenko, Mykola [Xanenko], b 6 December 1693, d 27 January 1760 in Hlukhiv. Noted political figure and statesman of the *Hetman state; general flag-bearer, diplomat, memoirist. The son of Col D. Khanenko, he was educated at the Kievan Mohyla Academy and then at the Lviv Dormition Brotherhood School. In 1710 he entered military service. In 1717 he was appointed military secretary, and in 1721 assistant *general chancellor.

He enjoyed the confidence of hetmans I. Skoropadsky and P. *Polubotok. In May 1723 Polubotok sent him to St Petersburg as a member of a delegation requesting permission to elect a new hetman. In response, both Khanenko and Polubotok were imprisoned in the Peter and Paul Fortress.

On Khanenko's return to Ukraine in 1726, he was appointed judge (1727–38) and then quartermaster of the Starodub regiment. During the Russo-Turkish War (1735–9), he saw action in the Crimea and was rewarded for his service with the office of *general standard-bearer in 1738. Two years later he became a member of the *General Court, and then in 1741 he received the office of *general flag-bearer, which he held until shortly before his death.

Khanenko was a member of the Commission for Translating and Codifying Little-Russian Law Books, which produced the *Code of Laws of 1743. Under Hetman K.

*Rozumovsky, Khanenko was one of the leading officials of the *General Military Chancellery. His correspondence with his son, Vasyl, which was published in part in Chernigovskie gubernskie vedomosti (1852) and in his Dnevnik (Diaries; from 1719 to 1754), is a valuable source for Ukraine's history. Dnevnik for 1727–52 was published in Kievskaiia starina, vols 8–16 (1884–6); Dnevnik for 1719–21 and Partikuliarnii zhurnal (Journal of Particulars) for 1754 were also published in Kievskaiia starina (1896); Dnevnik for 1732–3 appeared in Chernigovskie eparkhial'nye izvestie (1865); and Diariush, ili zhurnal (Diary or Journal) for 1722 was published by O. Bodiansky in Chteniia v Imperatorskom obshchestve istorii i drevnostei rossiiskikh, bk 1 (1858). Khanenko left a rich archive of valuable historical materials: Ukrainian–Russian treaties (known as *Hetman Articles), constitutions of Polish Sejms, 17th–18th-century tsarist ukases, official and family records, the Constitution of *Bendery, and a manuscript, 'Kratkoe opisaniie Malorossiiskogo kraia' (A Brief Description of the Little-Russian Land).

A. Zhukovsky

Khanenko, Oleksander [Xanenko], 1805/16–1895. Civic figure, historian, and collector of Ukrainian antiquities. In the 1840s he served as marshal of the nobility of Surażh county in Chernihiv gubernia. In 1858 he was appointed to the Chernihiv Gubernia Committee for the Improvement of the Peasants' Condition, and later he was active in implementing the reforms of 1861. In 1860 he became a member of the Land Survey Chamber in Chernihiv. He is the author of the valuable Istoričeskie očerki mezhevykh uchrezhdenii v Malorossii (A Historical Outline of Land-Surveying Institutions in Little Russia, 1870) and of historical articles in Chernigovskie gubernskie vedomosti and elsewhere. His articles on the town of Pohar (1871), St T. Uhlytsky, the history of several localities in Chernihiv Gubernia (1887), and the documents of the Khanenko family (1887) also appeared as separate brochures. Khanenko amassed a large collection of 17th- and 18th-century books printed in Kiev and Chernihiv.

Kharchenko, Vasyl [Xarčenko, Vasył'], b 14 January 1910 in Kamianka, Chyhyryn county, Kiev gubernia, d 26 October 1971 in Kiev. Stage director and pedagogue. Graduating from the Lysenko Music and Drama Institute in Kiev (1933), he worked as an actor and stage director at the Zankovetska Ukrainian Drama Theater in Zaporizhia, which in 1944 became the Lviv Ukrainian Drama Theater. After the war he was artistic director of the Lviv Young Spectator's Theater (1947–52), and chief stage director of the Lviv Theater of Opera and Ballet (1952–6), the Kiev Ukrainian Drama Theater, and the Kiev Operetta Theater (1957–60). From 1956 Kharchenko taught at the Kiev Institute of Theater Arts. He directed plays such as W. Shakespeare's Othello, I. Kocherha's Svichchyne vesillia (Svichka's Wedding), and L. Smiliansky's Muzhyts'kyi posol (The Peasant Deputy); and such operas as K. Dankevych's Bohdan Khmelnytsky, G. Verdi's Othello, and M. Arkas's Kateryna.

Kharchuk, Borys [Xarčuk], b 13 September 1931 in Lozy, Kremianets county, Volhynia. Writer. Since 1957 he has published 13 collections of stories and novelle and the novels Volyn' (Volhynia, 4 vols, 1959–65), Maidan (The Square, 1970), Khlib nasushchnyi (Daily Bread, 1976), Dovha hora (The Long Hill, 1979), and Krevniaky (Relatives, 1985). Many of his works are set in rural Volhynia before, during, and after the Second World War.

Kharkevych, Edvard [Xarkevych], b 23 February 1855 in Stanyslaviv, Galicia, d 24 September 1913 in Lviv. Educator, Germanist, and classical philologist. Kharkevych was a director (1895–1909) of the *Academic Gymnasium of Lviv and established a second branch of that institution. He headed (1896–1902) the Ukrainian Pedagogical Society, the forerunner of the *Ridna Shkola society, and in 1898 founded the first private Ukrainian secondary school for girls in Lviv. He also created and headed a financial aid society, Ruslan, to help needy students further their education.

Kharkiv, Oleksander [Xarkiv], b 1 March 1897 in Kremenchuk, Poltava gubernia, d 14 September 1939 in Stryi, Galicia. Monumentalist painter and graphic artist. After serving in the UNR Army in 1918–20, he settled in Western Ukraine. Upon graduating from the Cracow Academy of Arts in 1925, Kharkiv did restoration work on the polychrome murals of Wawel Castle and the frescoes of the Jagiełło Library in Cracow. He taught art at secondary schools in Yavoriv, where he helped found the Yavorivshchyna Museum. From 1934 he taught art in Stryi and collaborated with the Verkhovyna Museum. As an artist he painted churches and iconostases in the Byzantine style, landscapes, and portraits (Countess Dębicka, Ukrainian hetmans), and designed bookplates. Some of his work was exhibited at the World's Fair in Chicago in 1933. Kharkiv was shot by the Polish underground.

Kharkiv. A literary almanac of the Kharkiv oblast branch of the Writers' Union of Ukraine. Eight issues were published between 1952 and 1955 in Kharkiv. Besides literary works, it contained literary criticism, publicistic articles, a chronicle of literary and artistic events, and a section for young writers. Its contributors included such writers as P. Panch, I. Muratov, I. Vyrhan, Yu. Shovkoplias, and V. Kochevsky. In January 1956 the almanac was replaced by the journal *Prapor.

Kharkiv [Xarkiv]. III-17. Ukraine's second-largest city (1985 pop 1,554,000) and the capital of Kharkiv oblast, situated at the confluence of the Lopan, Udy, and Kharkiv rivers; the historic capital of *Slobidska Ukraine, it is an important industrial, communications, scientific, and cultural center. From 1920 to 1934 it was the capital of Soviet Ukraine. Kharkiv's proximity to the Donets Basin and its location at the intersection of the trade routes between Russia and the Black Sea and central Ukraine and Caucasia have facilitated its economic growth. The city is over 300 sq km in area and is divided into nine raions: Chervonozavodskyi, Dzerzhynskyi, Frunzenskyi, Kominternivskyi, Kyivskyi, Leninskyi, Moskovskyi, Ordzhonikidzevskyi, and Zhovtnevyi.

Origins. Kharkiv's name is most likely derived from the Kharkiv River. The Russian historian N. Aristov believed it was derived from the Cuman settlement of Sharukan, which existed on the territory of the present-day city. According to popular legend, the city is named after a Cossack, Kharko.

History. Kharkiv's vicinity has been settled since the 2nd millennium BC. Bronze Age settlements, Scythian kurhans (6th–3rd centuries BC), and Sarmatian relics (2nd–1st centuries BC) have been excavated there. Relics of the *Cherniakhiv culture (2nd–5th centuries AD) have been unearthed in the city, and the Donets fortified Slavic settlement of the early Middle Ages has been excavated nearby.

From the 12th to the 17th century the large territory around present-day Kharkiv was wild steppe dominated by the Cumans and then by the Tatars. From the early 17th century the territory belonged formally to Muscovy, which stationed frontier garrisons there and sent out scouts and explorers to reconnoiter and map the region. Later, networks of fortifications against the Crimean and Nogay Tatars – the Bilhorod, Izium, and *Ukrainian lines – were built, and non-serf villages (slobody, hence the name 'Slobidska Ukraine') and more numerous settlements of refugees from the war-torn Hetman state and Right-Bank and Western Ukraine sprang up. By the mid-17th century several such settlements existed in Kharkiv's vicinity.

The generally accepted date of Kharkiv's founding is 1654/5, when Ukrainian Cossacks led by I. Karkach built a fortified settlement on the plateau surrounded by the Kharkiv and Lopan rivers. A fortress was completed in 1659. Although they were formally under the jurisdiction of a Muscovite military governor, as military frontiersmen the Cossacks were allowed to be self-governing, according to 'Cherkessian custom,' with the right of free settlement, enterprise, and trade, until the reign of Peter I. In 1655 the population of Kharkiv was about 2,000, including about 600 Cossacks.

KHARKIV IN 1787

0. College and monastery
1. School
2. Wooden churches
3. Parish churches (stone)
4. Residence of governor-general
5. Post office
6. Bank
7. State pharmacy
8. Food warehouse
9. Gubernia administration building
10. Walls of fortress

For the remainder of the 17th and most of the 18th century Kharkiv remained a defensive outpost; the Russian garrison and artisans and merchants lived within the fortress, but most of the Cossack population lived outside in nearby expanding slobody and engaged in farming, fishing, beekeeping, and barter trade. From 1659 to 1765 Kharkiv was the capital of *Kharkiv regiment, one of the largest Cossack administrative and military units in Slobidska Ukraine. In 1660–2 a new citadel, with administrative buildings (a governor's house) and churches, was built.

18th century to 1917. By the 18th century, the outside fortress had expanded beyond the Lopan and Kharkiv rivers. Alarmed by Hetman I. Mazepa's uprising and the rebellious Don Cossacks during the Russian-Swedish War, Peter I had Kharkiv's fortifications enlarged in 1708 and imposed restrictions and taxes on the Cossack population.

In 1724 the town had 61 streets and 1,300 courtyards. In 1732 its male population was 3,700, 2,500 of whom were Cossacks. The town changed gradually from a military outpost into a trading center as the borders of the Russian state shifted southward. Tatars still attacked the fortress (12 times between 1672 and 1738), however, and devastated the slobody. Russia's wars with Turkey, Sweden, and Poland drained the town of its Cossack population and burdened it economically. Much of the town was destroyed by a fire in 1733, and its population was decimated by plague in 1738 and 1741. Kharkiv nonetheless revived and grew because of its economically advantageous location, which facilitated its advancement as a cultural center. During the 18th century Kharkiv's annual fairs (four in the 18th and five in the 19th century) attracted increasingly more merchants not only from Kiev but also from the Baltic, central Russia, the Crimea, Poland, Silesia, Moldavia, and Germany. *Kharkiv College was founded in 1734; until the founding of Kharkiv University in 1805, it was the best educational institution in Slobidska Ukraine. In 1789 two public schools were opened. In 1765 the Russian government abolished the Cossack regimental system in Slobidska Ukraine.

As the capital of the new Slobidska Ukraine gubernia (1765–80) and then Kharkiv vicegerency (1780–96), again of Slobidska Ukraine gubernia (1796–1835), and *Kharkiv gubernia (1835–1925), Kharkiv prospered. From 1835 to 1882 it was also the seat of the governor-general of three gubernias: Kharkiv, Poltava, and Chernihiv. The social differentiation that had begun in Kharkiv and the frontier society of Slobidska Ukraine in the 17th century accelerated greatly in the late 18th: the Cossack starshyna was incorporated into the Russian nobility, the rank-and-file Cossacks were reduced in status to military settlers equal to state peasants, and hitherto free peasants became serfs. The merchants and petty artisans organized themselves into Russian-type guilds and emerged as distinct classes.

Under the governors and vicegerents (to whom the city administration was subject from 1787) Kharkiv was developed according to imperial standards of urban architecture, which were set in St Petersburg. New government, commercial, and private stone buildings were erected, some of them – the cathedral of the Holy Protectress Monastery (1689), the governor's house (1766–77), the stone office building (begun in 1785), and the Dormition Cathedral (1783) – within the fortified town. From 1776 to 1810 P. Yaroslavsky designed many of the city's buildings.

Kharkiv: Tevelev Square

In 1799 *Kharkiv eparchy was constituted. From the reign of Paul I (1796–1801) to the 1890s, Kharkiv was also the center of a military district, with a high concentration of military personnel and their families. After the legal reforms of 1867, Kharkiv became the seat of a high court whose jurisdiction exceeded the gubernia's boundaries.

With the founding of *Kharkiv University and the university press in 1805 (through the efforts of V. *Karazyn and Kharkiv's Ukrainian nobility), the city also became an important educational and publishing center in Ukraine and the Russian Empire as a whole. In the 19th century four boys' gymnasiums, six secondary schools, a Real-schule, a post-secondary veterinary institute (1873, replacing a veterinary school founded in 1839), a post-secondary technological institute (1885), and secondary commercial, technical, skilled-trade, agricultural, railway, music, art, and zemstvo midwifery schools were opened in the city. By the turn of the 20th century there were 60 societies there, including a philotechnical (1811), scientific (1813), Bible (1816), folklore (1817), philanthropic (1843), medical (1861), Red Cross (1876), Orthodox missionary (1876), and orphanage society (1874). The *Kharkiv Literacy Society (1869) was one of the most successful of its kind in Ukraine. The city also had an art school (1861), stock exchange (1867), opera house (1874), music school (1883), museum (1886), and public library (1886). A nobles' assembly (1815–20), military academy (1825–8), theater (1840–3), technological institute (1879–85), дума building (1885), and many new commercial and private buildings were constructed. From the 1890s O. Beketov designed numerous buildings in the modern style. In 1913 the art school building was built in the Ukrainian style by K. Zhukov.

Municipal services, however, were inadequate, and Kharkiv was known as a 'dirty city.' Until the 1830s its streets were unpaved and impassable in wet weather. The water from the rivers running through the city was undrinkable; an aqueduct was built only in 1881 and enlarged in 1912–13, when a water tower supplying the main streets was erected. Residents of side streets and suburbs had to rely on wells. Construction of a sewage system was begun only in 1912. Gas lighting was introduced in the 1880s, and electric lighting in 1898 (on the city's outskirts). From 1882 a horse-drawn trolley line, which from 1886 was owned by a Belgian stock company, operated on the central streets. The first tramway was laid in 1906. Medical care was also inadequate. In 1878 there were only four hospitals in the city; in 1901 there were only eight hospitals and 390 doctors.

The city's population grew almost twentyfold in the 19th century: from 11,000 in 1787 to 23,000 in 1837, 35,600 in 1856, 50,300 in 1861, 128,500 in 1881, 174,000 in 1897, 198,300 in 1901, and 244,700 in 1914. Most of the increase after 1861 was due not to natural growth but to municipal annexation and particularly the influx of Russian workers, merchants, tradesmen, and civil servants. According to the 1897 census, over two-thirds of Kharkiv's residents were born in Ukraine. Because of the impact of Russification, however, only 25 percent of the residents stated that Ukrainian was their native language.

In 1855 Kharkiv had 212 small primitive manufacturing enterprises with a total of 4,256 workers (2,460 of them serfs) producing carriages, bricks, beer, tanned leather, wool, tobacco, soap, wax, rendered fat, wadding, copper and iron goods, lead shot, consumer items, and vegetable oil. Kharkiv's industries and commerce expanded rapidly after the emancipation of the peasants and particularly after the railway reached the city in 1868. Between 1871 and 1900 the number of factories and plants increased from 79 to 259 (the number of machine-building and metalworking plants from 12 to 59). In 1900 there were over 12,000 workers and 22,700 artisans in the city. By 1904 there were 106 officially registered factories and 1,112 lesser enterprises employing a total of 17,000 workers in the city. In 1917 there were over 150 factories and over 35,000 workers. Because of primitive working and living conditions, economic exploitation, and political oppression, workers' unrest was a common occurrence in Kharkiv from the 1870s.

From the 1810s Kharkiv was an important center of the Ukrainian cultural renaissance. Many of the first Ukrainian linguistic, ethnographic, historical, and modern literary works were published there. Published also were the first periodicals in Russian-ruled Ukraine: the weekly newspaper Khar'kovskii ezhenedel'nik (1812), the satirical journal Khar'kovskii demokrit (1816), the cultural-political monthly Ukrainskii vestnik (1816–19), the weekly Khar'kovskie izvestiia (1817–23), the agricultural journal Ukrainskii domovod (1817), and the scholarly-literary journal Ukrainskii zhurnal (1824–5 at Kharkiv University). Key Ukrainian cultural figures lived and worked in Kharkiv: H. Kvitka-Osnovianenko, P. Hulak-Artemovsky, L. Borovykovsky, I. Sreznevsky, M. Petrenko, O. Korsun, A. Metlynsky, Ya. Shchokoliv, and M. Kostomarov; many of them belonged to the *Kharkiv Romantic School. Several of the earliest Ukrainian miscellanies were also published in Kharkiv: Ukrainskii al'manakh (1831), Utreanniaia zvezda (1833), Ukrainskii sbornik (1838, 1841), Snip (1841), and Molodyk (1843–4). Russian newspapers in Kharkiv – Khar'kovskie gubernskie vedomosti (1838–1915), Khar'kovskie eparkhial'nye vedomosti (1867–83), Khar'kov (1877–80), Iuzhnyi kraj (1880–1917), and Khar'kovskii listok (1898–?) – also covered developments in Ukrainian cultural life. (By the turn of the 20th century, 3 dailies and 16 other periodicals were being published in Kharkiv.)

The first professional theater troupe in Ukraine was established in Kharkiv in 1789, but it was not until 1842 that L. Mlotkovsky opened a theater building there. H. Kvitka-Osnovianenko directed the Kharkiv theater in 1812–18 and staged his plays there. M. Shchepkin, I. Dreisig, and K. Solenyk and the Stein troupe (1823–36) appeared on the Kharkiv stage. The earliest Ukrainian plays were performed there, including the original production of I. Kotliarevsky's Natalka Poltavka (Natalka from Poltava) in 1821. In the 1880s and 1890s the Ukrainian troupes of M. Kropyvnytsky, M. Sadovsky, P. Saksahansky, and M. Zankovetska performed in Kharkiv, and in 1901 H. Khotkevych organized the first Ukrainian workers' theater there. Ukrainian cinema originated in Kharkiv in the late 1890s, with the short documentaries of A. *Fedetsky. Many artists lived in Kharkiv, including D. Bezperchy, S. Vasylykivsky, M. Tkachenko, M. Raievska-Ivanova, P. Levchenko, M. Berkos, I. Skolov, and M. Samokysha. In 1906 an art society was founded there.

Kharkiv: Gagarin Avenue

Various revolutionary groups had adherents in Kharkiv. In 1856–8 the *Kharkiv-Kiev Secret Society was active there, as were anarchist-populist cells of Zemlia i Volia and Narodnaia Volia beginning in the 1860s. K. Alchevska, the wife of the Kharkiv industrialist O. Alchevsky, funded and ran the famous *Kharkiv Women's Sunday School from 1862 to 1919, until 1870 secretly. The liberal members of the region's *zemstvos conducted legal, educational, medical, agronomical, co-operative, and social work among the masses from 1864; in 1878 a secret zemstvo conference took place in Kharkiv. From the 1890s various Marxist socialist groups and cells of the Russian Social Democratic Workers' party were active in the city. At the turn of the 20th century and during the Revolution of 1905 the Mensheviks organized and led workers' strikes and demonstrations; they were the most popular of the revolutionary groups.

Kharkiv's Ukrainian intelligentsia (eg, P. Lobko, O. Potebnia, V. Mova, and F. Pavlovsky) was involved in the secret Kharkiv Hromada from the early 1860s. From 1906 to 1916 the Kvitka-Osnovianenko Ukrainian Club (later the Prosvita society) was active in the city, and a co-operative publishing house published books in Ukrainian. Members of gentry families of Cossack starshyna descent – the Donets-Zakharzhevskys, Shydlovskys, and Alchevskys, to name a few – contributed much to the economic and architectural development of the city. M. Mikhnovsky, a lawyer in Kharkiv, was one of the founders of the *Brotherhood of Taras; his advocacy of a program for an independent Ukraine resulted in the founding of the *Revolutionary Ukrainian party at a Kharkiv student meeting in 1900. In 1906 the Ukrainian-language newspaper for peasants, Porada (ed M. Lobodovsky), came out in Kharkiv. Other prominent Ukrainian scholars and civic and literary figures lived in Kharkiv in the late 19th and early 20th century: D. Bahalii (later the university rector and head of the city council), M. Sumtsov, D. Yavornytsky, I. Bilokonsky, I. Manzhura, P. Hrabovsky, and B. Hrinchenko.

Kharkiv: Khalturin Descent, Cascade Square

1917–20. After the 1917 February Revolution Kharkiv was governed by the gubernial commissioner of the Russian Provisional Government, the city duma, and the zemstvos. Workers' soviets dominated by Russian Mensheviks and Socialist Revolutionaries attempted to seize power, particularly after the October Revolution. Many of the Ukrainian residents supported the *Central Rada in Kiev; to influence developments in the Russified city and to provide leadership for the Ukrainian population of the region, they held a congress and formed a Ukrainian Gubernial Council, headed by a man called Rubas, in late April 1917. A gubernial peasant congress was held in June, and a congress of Slobidska Ukraine's Prosvita societies was held in Kharkiv in August. A Ridna Shkola society was created to promote the Ukrainization of elementary schools. New Ukrainian newspapers – the weekly Ridne slovo, the Social Democratic triweekly Robotnyk, and the socialist daily Nova hromada – appeared in 1917–18.

The Central Rada's first two universals (decrees) did not explicitly extend its authority to the Kharkiv region, but the Third Universal (7 November 1917) – which proclaimed the existence of the UNR – did so without defining the republic's borders, and Ukrainized regiments were stationed in the city. But Kharkiv's proximity to Russia proper and to the Donbas, which were both under Bolshevik control, sealed the city's fate. In late November 1917 units of Russian Red Guards and Bolshevized sailors from the Baltic region reached the city. On 10 December, with the help of local Bolsheviks, they disarmed the UNR and the Russian anti-Bolshevik troops there. On 24–25 December an 'All-Ukrainian Congress of Soviets' convened in Kharkiv. It elected a Soviet government of Ukraine – the *People's Secretariat – which remained there until February 1918, when the city became the capital of the *Donets–Kryvyi Rih Soviet Republic. German units and the UNR Zaporozhian Division under P. Bolbochan's command took Kharkiv from the Bolsheviks on 19 April 1918. Col O. Shapoval was appointed the gubernial commander there. Many local Ukrainians joined the Zaporozhian Division, which was enlarged into a corps.

Under the *Hetman government a gubernial starosta, P. Zalesky, resided in Kharkiv until 2 July, when he was removed for his anti-Ukrainian actions. The Hrinchenko Gymnasium (directed by M. Plevako) was set up, and other schools were Ukrainized. The government shut down the opposition newspaper Narodne dilo. In November 1918 the city was taken by troops of the UNR *Directory. On 3 January 1919 it was recaptured by the Bolsheviks. A. Denikin's Volunteer Army occupied the city on 25 June and held it until 11 December.

1920–41. After Denikin's defeat by the Red Army, Kharkiv became the capital of Soviet Ukraine. The All-Ukrainian Central Executive Committee, the Council of People's Commissars, and the central offices of the CP(B)U, commissariats, trade unions, and republican organizations and periodicals were located in Kharkiv from 1920 to 1934. Central co-operative institutions were also based there until they were shut down in the early 1930s. In the early 1920s some diplomatic missions and consulates were also opened there. The Ukrainian Autocephalous Orthodox church flourished in Kharkiv from 1923 to 1926, when Archbishop O. Yareshchenko was arrested by the GPU. As part of the policy of *Ukrainization, post-secondary Soviet schools, including the *Kharkiv Institute of People's Education (1921–30), the Institute of the National Economy, and the Artem Communist University, were Ukrainized in the 1920s. Because of frequent reorganization, the number of post-secondary schools in Kharkiv grew: there were 10 in the early 1920s, 23 in 1931, and 36 in 1940 (with an enrollment of 31,000). In 1926 some faculties of the old Technological Institute were reorganized into separate machine-building, chemical-technology, and electrotechnical institutes; after the Second World War these were amalgamated again in the *Kharkiv Polytechnical Institute. The university, which was abolished in 1920, was reopened in 1932. The Ukrainian School of Red Officers was opened in Kharkiv in 1920; it was closed down in the early 1930s with the abandonment of Ukrainization.

From 1920 to 1934 many important scientific institutions were located in Kharkiv: the Scientific Committee of Ukraine, the Agricultural Scientific Committee of Ukraine, the Central Historical Archive, the Central Statistical Administration of Ukraine, the Central Archival Administration of the Ukrainian SSR, the All-Ukrainian Agronomic Society, the All-Ukrainian Association of Oriental Studies, and the All-Ukrainian Association of Marxist-Leninist Scientific Research Institutes. Important contributions to Ukrainian studies were made by the scholars of the Ukrainian Scientific Research Institute of Geography and Cartography, the Scientific Research Institute of the History of Ukrainian Culture, the Chair of the History of Ukraine, and the Shevchenko Institute of Literature; most of these scholars became victims of the Stalinist terror.

A number of museums were opened, including the All-Ukrainian Historical Museum, the Museum of Slobidska Ukraine, the Museum of Social Culture, and the Museum of Ukrainian Art. Large publishing houses such as the State Publishing House of Ukraine, Proletarii, and Radianskyi Selianyn, and the co-operative publishers Knyhospilka and Rukh (which were closed down eventually), were located there. The Ukrainian Book Chamber ran a wide range of operations. Important artists' and writers' associations such as Pluh, Hart, Vaplite, Nova Generatsiia, the All-Ukrainian Association of Proletarian Writers, and Prolitfront were active until 1932, when all associations were dissolved. A single Writers' Union of Ukraine was established in Kharkiv in 1934 at the First Ukrainian Writers' Congress. In 1930 the Second International Conference of Revolutionary Writers was held there. Several important cultural periodicals were published in Kharkiv: Chervonyi shliakh, Hart, Pluh, Vaplite, Literaturnyi iarmarok, Vsesvit, Foto-kino, and Nove mystetstvo. Important Ukrainian theaters existed there: the Kharkiv Children's Theater (1922–41), the Franko Theater (1923–6, transferred to Kiev), the Ukrainian People's Theater (1924–8), the Kharkiv Theater of Opera and Ballet (1925–), the Berezil Theater (1926–33, transferred from Kiev), the Veselyi Proletar Theater (1926–ca 1933), the Kharkiv Chervonozavodskyi Ukrainian Drama Theater (1927–33), the Kharkiv Theater of Musical Comedy (1929–), and the Kharkiv Theater of the Revolution (1931–7). Actors were trained at a music and drama institute (1923–34). In 1940 there were 14 theaters in Kharkiv, including several amateur ones.

As the capital of Soviet Ukraine, Kharkiv was developed more intensively than other cities. Its area grew substantially, from 141 sq km in 1924 to 272 sq km in 1939. The Derzhprom complex of high-rise office buildings (1925–9, designed by S. Serafimov, S. Kravets, and M. Felger) – the new administrative center – was built near Dzerzhinsky Square. The Electromechanical Plant's Palace of Culture (now the building of the Kharkiv Chervonozavodskiy Ukrainian Drama Theater), decorated with frescoes by M. Boichuk, V. Sedliar, and I. Padalka that were later destroyed, was erected on Povstannia Square (1933–8). In 1930–4 the Design Building (now a university building) and Co-operative Building were built. New industrial plants were constructed and prerevolutionary ones were reconstructed and modernized. To house the rapidly growing population, apartment subdivisions (Novyi Pobut, Chervonyi Promin, Studentske Mistechko) were constructed. The tramway network was extended and bus and trolleybus lines were introduced. The reconstruction of industries destroyed during the 1917 Revolution and subsequent Ukrainian-Russian wars was followed by accelerated industrialization. In 1931 the huge *Kharkiv Tractor Plant went into production; in 1933, the Kharkiv Machine-Tool Plant; and in 1934, the Kharkiv Turbine Plant. Prerevolutionary plants such as the electromechanical (est 1887), cable (1890), motor (1882), and transport-machine-building (1885) increased their output. In 1930 the Kharkiv Regional Electric Station began supplying the city with electricity. By 1937 the output of Kharkiv's industries was 35 times greater than in 1913.

As new buildings went up, many structures of historical or cultural value were senselessly destroyed in the 1930s, including most of the baroque churches: St Nicholas's Cathedral of the Ukrainian Autocephalous Orthodox church, the Church of the Myrrhophores, St Demetrius's Church, and the Church of the Nativity (a fortified Cossack church).

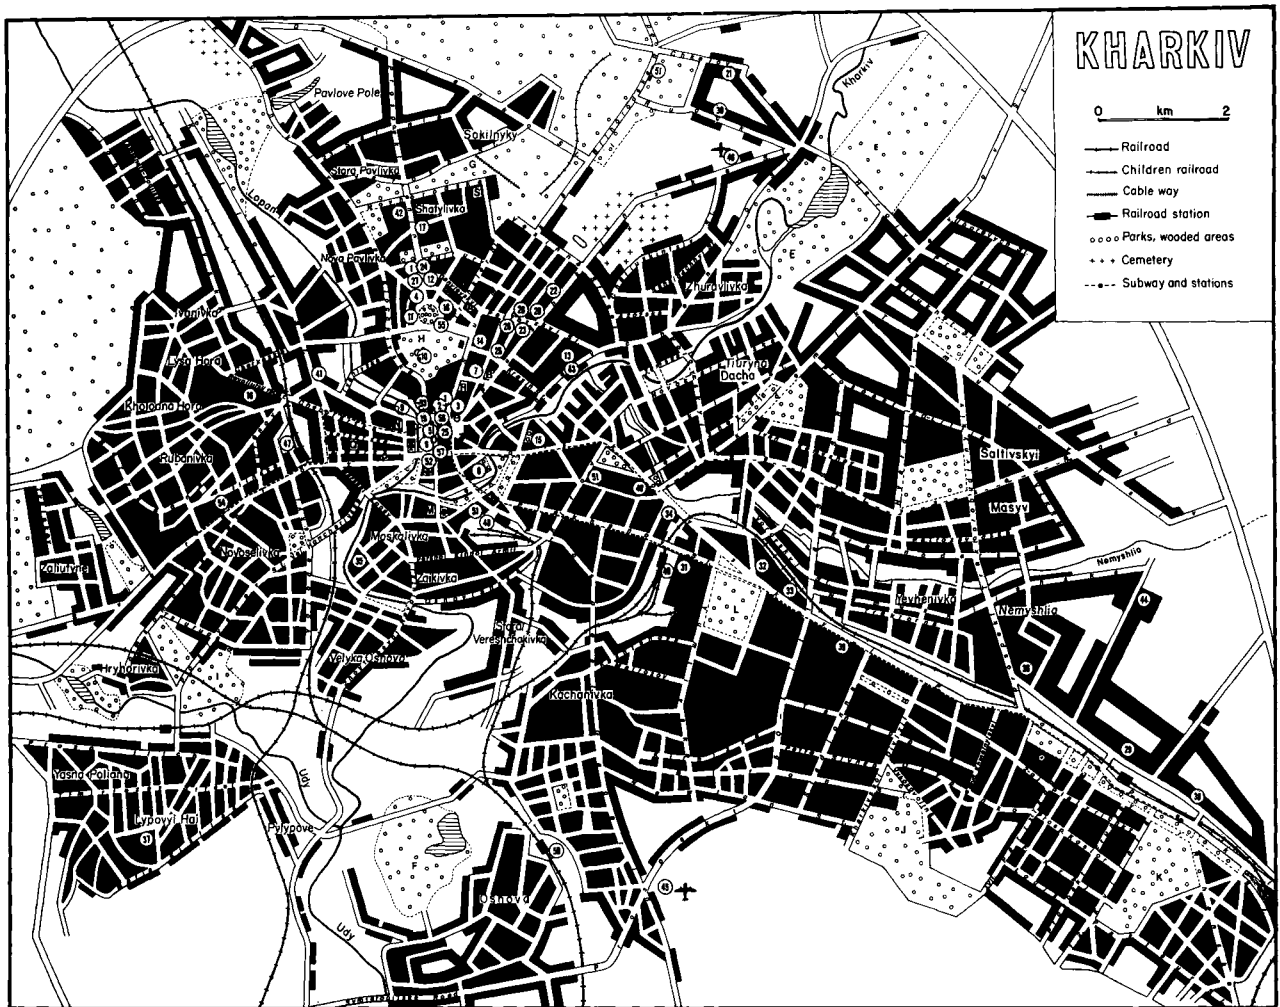

Kharkiv: Cathedral of the Holy Protectress (1689)

During the 1920s the impact of Ukrainization on Kharkiv had been great. In the early 1930s this policy was abandoned, and after the Stalinist suppression of Ukrainian institutions and cultural figures, the man-made *famine of 1932–3, intensified Russification, and the transfer of the capital to Kiev in 1934, Kharkiv lost much of its Ukrainian character.

1941–3. During the Second World War Kharkiv suffered extensive damage. As the German armies advanced toward the city, the Soviet authorities dismantled and evacuated many of the factories and institutions and over 400,000 of the inhabitants to Soviet Asia. Thousands of prisoners in Kharkiv's NKVD prisons were executed during the retreat, and all of the city's railway tracks and yards, power stations, water-supply systems, and other utilities were dynamited. The Germans took Kharkiv on 25 October 1941. Since the city was within the front zone, it remained under direct German military control. The Ukrainians who remained in Kharkiv were allowed to establish a city council; it was chaired by O. Kramarenko (rector of the Kharkiv Polytechnical Institute) until he was executed by the Germans in 1942 and then by O. Semenenko until 1943. Other institutions, such as a city bank, an oblast administration (headed by M. Vetukhiv), consumer association (A. Yaremenko), Prosvita society (V. Dubrovsky), Ukrainian Civic Committee (V. Dolenko), newspaper (Nova Ukraïna, ed V. Tsarynyk) and journal (Literaturnyi zasiv), and a revived Ukrainian Autocephalous Orthodox church (Metropolitan T. Buldovsky), were allowed to function. A Ukrainian nationalist underground (led by M. Kononenko) was active in the city until its key figures were suppressed.

During the 22-month German occupation, thousands of Kharkiv's inhabitants died of hunger, disease, and cold (14,000 in the first three months of 1942 alone). Thousands of nationalist activists and real and suspected Soviet partisans and their supporters were shot or hanged by the Gestapo. Many Jews were murdered. By the time the Germans abandoned Kharkiv they had killed 100,000 people and forcibly transported 60,000 to Germany as **ostarbeiter*. Soviet forces recaptured Kharkiv on 16 February 1943, held it until 15 March, and finally established permanent control there on 23 August. At that time the population of the city was between 160,000 and 192,000. The Soviet special police squads (SMERSH) proceeded to shoot or imprison real and suspected German collaborators and Ukrainian nationalist supporters.

Postwar Kharkiv. Reconstruction of the city began almost immediately and continued for some years after the war. Since the war, apartment subdivisions (eg, Saltivka, Pavlove Pole, Oleksiivka, Danylivka, Kholodna Hora, Selektiina Stantsiia, and Chervona Bavariia) have been built up to house the burgeoning population. Municipal utilities have been improved: buildings were supplied with natural gas from the Shebelynka deposit in 1956, a new aqueduct from the Krasnopavlivka Reservoir was built, tramway routes have been increased to 33, bus routes to over 50, and trolleybus routes to 36. The local rivers have been cleaned up. In 1968–75 the first line of the Kharkiv Metro (17.3 km long, with 13 stations) was built; in 1978 a second line was begun, and a third line is being planned. The commercial network, educational facilities, and health-care system have all been expanded. In Kharkiv's vicinity several sanatoriums, rest homes, and resorts have been opened. In 1976 there were

- |  |   |   |
|--|---|---|
| 1. Ukrainian Drama Theater                       | 26. Institute of Agricultural Mechanization and Electrification | 51. Bus stations                                |
| 2. Theater of Opera and Ballet                   | 27. Industrial Engineering Institute                            | 52. Annunciation Cathedral                      |
| 3. Philharmonic                                  | 28. Book Palace of the Ukrainian SSR                            | 53. Dormition Cathedral                         |
| 4. Television studio                             | 29. Tractor Plant   | 54. Kholmohory Church                           |
| 5. Conservatory                                  | 30. Aircraft Plant  | 55. Dzerzhinsky Square                          |
| 6. Historical-Regional Museum                    | 31. Transport-Machinery Plant                                   | 56. Soviet Ukraine Square                       |
| 7. Art Gallery                                   | 32. Electrotechnical Plant                                      | 57. Rosa Luxemburg Square                       |
| 8. Korolenko Library                             | 33. Turbine Plant   | A. Natural Science Museum                       |
| 9. Institute of Culture                          | 34. Serp i Molot Plant (agricultural machinery)                 | B. Art Museum                                   |
| 10. Astronomical Observatory                     | 35. Svitlo Shakhtaria Plant (mineshaft lighting equipment)      | C. Planetarium                                  |
| 11. University                                   | 36. Pivdennkabel Plant (cables)                                 | D. Historical Museum                            |
| 12. Medical Institute                            | 37. Rope Plant  | E. Zhuravlivka Hydropark                        |
| 13. Polytechnical Institute                      | 38. Tile Plant  | F. Osnova Meadow Park                           |
| 14. Civil-Engineering Institute                  | 39. Air-Conditioner Plant                                       | G. University Botanical Garden                  |
| 15. Institute of Railway-Transport Engineers     | 40. Bicycle Plant   | H. Shevchenko Park                              |
| 16. Institute of Communal-Construction Engineers | 41. Machine-Tool Plant  | I. Hryhorivka Woods                             |
| 17. Institute of Automatics and Cybernetics      | 42. Chemical-Reagents Plant                                     | J. Park of the 50th Anniversary of the USSR     |
| 18. Military Academy                             | 43. Pharmaceuticals Plant                                       | K. Park of the 40th Anniversary of the Komsomol |
| 19. Institute of Arts                            | 44. Elektrovazhmash Plant (heavy electrical machinery)          | L. Artem Park                                   |
| 20. Juridical Institute                          | 45. Civil airport   | M. Circus                                       |
| 21. Aviation Institute                           | 46. Military airport  | N. Central Department Store                     |
| 22. Pharmaceutical Institute                     | 47. Pivdenna railway station                                    | O. Puppet Theater                               |
| 23. Automobile and Road Institute                | 48. Levada railway station                                      | P. Young Spectator's Theater                    |
| 24. Radioelectronics Institute                   | 49. Balashivska railway station                                 | Q. Theater of Musical Comedy                    |
| 25. Pedagogical Institute                        | 50. Osnova railway station                                      | R. Russian Drama Theater                        |
|  |   | S. Dynamo Sport Complex                         |

about 7,000 physicians and 70 hospitals (with about 60,000 beds) in Kharkiv.

Today there are over 2,500 streets and 26 squares in the city. There are 110 parks, the largest being Gorky Park, Shevchenko Garden (with a zoo), Artem Park, the Forest Park, the University Botanical Garden, and Maikovskiy Park.

Kharkiv's role as a transportation hub has grown. Railway lines radiate from it in eight directions. The largest station is Pivdenna. The city is connected by air with the major cities of Ukraine and the Soviet Union; the present airport was built in 1954. The suburban and intercity bus network has 290 routes.

Population. In the Soviet period, as earlier, Kharkiv's population has grown steadily, from 285,000 in 1919 to 417,000 in 1926 (the third-largest city, after Kiev and Odessa, in Ukraine). By 1926 Ukrainians formed a relative majority at 38 percent, compared to Russians (37 percent) and Jews (19.5 percent); in 1897 the corresponding figures were 29, 60, and 6 percent. The population continued growing in the 1920s and 1930s, mostly because of the influx of peasants; in 1939 it was 833,000. As a result the city's area more than doubled between 1910 (67 sq km) and 1924 (141 sq km), and doubled again by 1939 (272 sq km). Since the drastic decline during the Second World War, the population has increased significantly: from 192,000 in 1943 to 672,000 in 1946, 856,000 in 1953, 953,000 in 1959, 1,223,000 in 1970, and 1,554,000 in 1985. In 1939 and 1959 the ethnic composition figures for the city were: Ukrainians, 49 and 48 percent; Russian, 33 and 40 percent; and Jews, 16 and 9 percent. Russification has been quite detrimental: in the 1959 census, only 64.1 percent of Kharkiv's Ukrainians stated that Ukrainian was their native language; today there would probably be even fewer.

Economy. Kharkiv is one of the largest industrial centers in both Ukraine and the USSR, with over 250 enterprises. It is third in machine building and metalworking after Moscow and Leningrad, with such large plants as the Kharkiv Tractor Plant, Transport Machine-Building Plant, Electromechanical Plant, Machine-Building Plant (mining machines), Motor Plant, Electrotechnical Plant (electric motors), Machine-Tool Plant, Turbine Plant, Aircraft Plant, Bicycle Plant, Elektrovazhmash Plant (turbogenerators), Cable Plant, and Bearing Plant. Also manufactured there are hydraulic lifts, refrigerators, construction equipment, automobiles, electronic, mining, and medical equipment, television sets, cameras, plastics, chemicals, paints, cosmetics, and pharmaceuticals. The woodworking, furniture, building-materials, construction, and printing industries are well developed. The food industry includes a confectionery association, breweries, a vegetable-oil and animal-fat processing complex, and a meat-packing complex. Clothing, textiles, leather, footwear (the largest factory in Ukraine), and rope are the main products of light industry. The number of industrial workers in the city was over 350,000 in 1961 and 500,000 in 1980.

Education, science, and culture. Kharkiv has been a major cultural and scientific center in Soviet Ukraine, second only to Kiev. In 1982 there were 20 post-secondary schools in Kharkiv: Kharkiv University, the Kharkiv Polytechnical, Agricultural, Medical, Juridical, Industrial Design, Pedagogical, Industrial Engineering, Civil Engineering, Automobile and Roads, Radioelectronics, Aviation, Pharmaceutical, and Zootechnical-Veterinary institutes; and the Kharkiv institutes of Agricultural Mechanization and Electrification, Communal-Construction Engineers, Railway-Transport Engineers, Public Consumption, Culture, and Arts. The former Kharkiv Conservatory (1923-63) and Theater Institute (1939-63) now constitute the Institute of Arts. In 1982 the city had 188 elementary, 38 specialized secondary, and 46 secondary vocational-technical schools; about 150 research and planning and design institutes affiliated with post-secondary schools, the CPU, or ministries; and 6 research institutes constituting the Northeastern Scientific Center of the AN USSR. Since the early 1930s and particularly after the Second World War, Russification in Kharkiv's schools and research institutions has been intense. A good half of its Writers' Union members write only in Russian.

The city's other prominent scholarly institutions are the Kharkiv Astronomical Observatory, Mathematical Society, Scientific Library (nearly six million volumes), University Library (over three million volumes), Scientific Medical Library, Oblast Archive, Historical Museum, Art Museum, and the Natural Science Museum. The city supports an oblast philharmonic, circus, and 6 professional theaters: the Kharkiv Theater of Opera and Ballet, Ukrainian Drama Theater, Russian Drama Theater, Young Spectator's Theater, Theater of Musical Comedy, and puppet theater; only the first two stage productions in Ukrainian. The public enjoys the use of the large Ukraine cinema and concert hall, 22 other cinemas, 249 libraries, 38 community-run museums, a sports palace, water sports palace, 5 parks of culture and recreation, 2 stadiums, and the Mala Pivdenna children's railroad. There are 65 hospitals in the city.

The following newspapers and journals are published in Kharkiv: the oblast newspapers Sotsialistychna Kharkivshchyna (from 1934), Lenins'ka zmina (1938), and Krasnoe znamia (1958); the city newspaper Vechernii Kharkiv / Vechernii Khar'kov (from 1963 in Ukrainian, from 1983 in both Ukrainian and Russian); and the monthly journal Prapor (1956). The Prapor and Vyshcha Shkola publishing houses, Book Chamber of the Ukrainian SSR, Sotsialistychna Kharkivshchyna Publishing House and Printing Complex, and Frunze Book Factory are involved in publishing and printing. Two television channels are available: a Russian all-Union one and a republican-oblast one in both Ukrainian and Russian. In 1979 a new telecenter was established.

The city is ornamented with a large number of monuments, many of them dedicated to Soviet leaders and heroes and victims of the Second World War. Monuments to Ukrainian cultural figures include those of T. Shevchenko (1935), M. Kotsiubynsky (1957), V. Karazyn (1905), and N. Gogol (1909). Prerevolutionary architectural monuments include the cathedrals of the Holy Protectress (1689) and Dormition (1771, damaged in the mid-1930s), an 18th-century palace, and the former bishop's residence (now the Historical Museum).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Karpov, V. Khar'kovskaia starina (Kharkiv 1900)
 Gusev, A. Khar'kov, ego proshloe i nastoiashchee (Kharkiv 1902)
 Bagalei, D.; Miller, D. Istoriia goroda Khar'kova za 250 let ego sushchestvovaniia (s 1655-go po 1905-yi god), 2 vols (Kharkiv 1905, 1912)

- Al'bovskii, E. Khar'kovskie kazaki (St Petersburg 1914)
 Ivolhin, I. Staryi Kharkiv (Kharkiv 1920)
 Taranushenko, S. Stari khaty Kharkova (Kharkiv 1922)
 Kas'ianov, O. Kharkiv: Istorychno-arkhitekturnyi narys (Kiev 1956)
 Diachenko, M.; Rozin, S.; Riabko, V. Kharkiv: Mistsia istorychnykh podii, pam'iatnyky i zaklady kul'tury, vydatni diachi (Kharkiv 1957)
Istoriia mist i sil URSR: Kharkivs'ka oblast' (Kiev 1967; Russian edn 1976)
 Myklashevs'kyi, I. Muzychna i teatral'na kul'tura Kharkova kintsia XVIII-pershoi polovyny XIX st. (Kiev 1967)
 Danylov, V. Kharkiv (Kiev 1968)
 Kurman, M.; Lebedinskii, I. Naseleniie bol'shogo sotsialisticheskogo goroda (Moscow 1968)
 D'iachenko, N. Ulitsy i ploshchadi Khar'kova (Kharkiv 1974, 1977)
 Semenko, O. Kharkiv, Kharkiv ... (New York 1976)
 Alferov, I.; Antonov, V.; Liubarskii, R. Formirovanie gorodskoi sredi (Na primere Khar'kova) (Moscow 1977)
 Sokil, V. 'Zdaleka do bliz'koho,' Suchasnist', 1981, no. 2
 Andreeva, G.; Oleinik, V. Znakom'tes' - Khar'kov: Putevoditel' (Kharkiv 1982)

V. Markus, R. Senkus

Kharkiv Agricultural Institute (Kharkivskiy silskohospodarskyy instytut im. V.V. Dokuchaieva). A higher educational institution supervised by the Ministry of Agriculture of the USSR. Its origins stem from the Agronomy Institute founded in Marymont near Warsaw in 1816, which was renamed the Institute of Agriculture and Forestry in 1840, moved to Puławy, Poland, in 1869, and evacuated to Kharkiv in 1914. It has been known by its present name since 1921. The institute has faculties of agronomy, plant protection, soil science and agrochemistry, economics, land-management engineering, architecture and farm construction, and one for the upgrading of agricultural specialists, a correspondence school, a graduate school, and two teaching and research farms. In 1976–7 it had over 5,500 students, 32 chairs, 310 teachers, a library with over 450,000 volumes, and about 100 cabinets and laboratories.

Kharkiv Art Institute. See Kharkiv Industrial Design Institute.

Kharkiv Art Museum (Kharkivskiy khudozhnii muzei). One of the most important museums in Ukraine. Founded in 1920, it has been reorganized and renamed several times since then. At first known as the Kharkiv Museum of Church History, it consisted basically of the antiquarian collections of Kharkiv and Volhynia eparchies and the art collection of Kharkiv University. Its holdings were enriched with precious religious articles that were acquired in the course of registering historical objects belonging to the churches and monasteries of the Kharkiv region. In 1922 the museum was renamed the Kharkiv Museum of Ukrainian Art. It consisted of three departments: architecture, sculpture, and painting. The last encompassed medieval mural paintings, 16th–19th-century icons, portraits, folk paintings, and 19th–20th-century paintings. In 1931 the plastic arts collection was separated from the museum to form the National Ukrainian Painting Gallery. During the 1930s the museum was closed to the public. After the war it resumed operations in 1944. From 1949 to 1965 it was known as the Kharkiv State Museum of Fine Art, and since 1965 by its present name. The exhibits, which occupy 25 halls, are divided into five sections: prerevolutionary Ukrainian and Russian art, Soviet art, foreign art (very meager), and decorative and applied art. The works of noted Ukrainian masters such as V. Borovykovsky, D. Levytsky, A. Losenko, and I. Aivazovsky are displayed in the Russian art section. A collection of S. Vasylykivsky's works, as well as paintings by P. Martynovych, P. Levchenko, M. Berkos, D. Bezperchy, M. Tkachenko, and T. Shevchenko (a self-portrait), forms an important part of the Ukrainian section. A separate hall is devoted to I. Repin's works, including one version of his famous painting The Zaporozhian Cossacks Writing a Letter to the Sultan. In the Soviet art section, Ukrainian and Russian artists are exhibited side by side, including such noted Ukrainian artists as M. Samokysha, M. Burachek, O. Slastion, F. Krychevsky, O. Murashko, M. Derehus, I. Izhakevych, Yu. Narbut, M. Pymonenko, and T. Yablonska. In the 1980s, the museum possessed nearly 20,000 art works. The Kharkiv Art Museum organizes one-man, thematic, and touring exhibitions. The museum building was designed by O. Beketov. An album of the museum with a Ukrainian, Russian, and English text was published in 1983.

S. Hordynsky

Kharkiv Astronomical Observatory (Kharkivska astronomichna observatoriia). A research facility of Kharkiv University. Largely because of the efforts of H. Levytsky, the astronomical cabinet (est 1808) was reorganized in 1888 into an observatory with its own building and proper equipment. The observatory is equipped with a meridian circle, a spectroheliometer, a 700-mm optical telescope, and other instruments. The chief areas of research are astronomy, the physics of the moon, planets, and solar activity, and optical methods of processing astronomical data. The first photographs of the other side of the moon were processed, and a map and catalogue were prepared, at the observatory. Noted astronomers such as L. Struve, M. Yevdokymov, B. Ostaschenko-Kudriavtsev, and M. Barabashov have worked there.

Kharkiv Automobile and Roads Institute (Kharkivskiy avtomobilno-dorozhnyi instytut im. Komsomolu Ukrainy). A technical institution of higher education under the jurisdiction of the Ministry of Higher and Specialized Secondary Education of the Ukrainian SSR. Formed in 1930 out of the road-building departments of several technical institutes, it has departments of automobile engineering, mechanical engineering, road construction, and industrial engineering, as well as an evening and correspondence school. It offers a graduate program and a qualifications upgrading program. Its enrollment in 1984 was over 6,800.

Kharkiv Aviation Institute (Kharkivskiy aviatsiyniy instytut im. M. Zhukovskoho). A technical institution of higher education under the jurisdiction of the USSR Ministry of Higher and Specialized Secondary Education. Formed in 1930 out of the aviation department of the Kharkiv Polytechnical Institute, it has departments of airplane construction, aviation instruments, motors, control systems, and radiotechnology as well as an evening and a graduate school and an airplane-design office.

Noted engineers such as O. Antonov, A. Liulka, and Yu. Proskura have worked at the institute. In 1983 its enrollment was over 8,000.

Kharkiv Chervonozavodskiy Ukrainian Drama Theater (Kharkivskiy chervonozavodskiy derzhavnyi ukrainskyi dramatychnyi teatr). A theater established in 1927 in the Chervonozavodskiy district in Kharkiv. Its first artistic director was O. Zaharov, who was succeeded in 1928 by V. Vasylo. L. Klishcheiev was the stage director, and B. Kosariev and Yu. Wagner were the set designers. Many of its original actors came from the Shevchenko Ukrainian Drama Theater. The company included such names as Ye. Zarnytska, M. Petlishenko, L. Hakkebush, V. Masliuchenko, Y. Maiak, M. Tahaiv, I. Tverdokhlib, and A. Kramarenko. Its repertoire consisted mostly of Soviet plays by I. Mykytenko, Ya. Mamontov, M. Irchan, L. Pervomaisky, and I. Kocherha, but included also L. Starytska-Cherniakhivska's Rozbinyk Karmeliuk (The Highwayman Karmeliuk), V. Vynnychenko's Hrikh (Sin), E. O'Neill's Desire under the Elms, and Voucha Zhraia (Wolf Pack), based on J. London's novel. Following L. Kurbas's example, in 1928 V. Vasylo formed an acting and directing laboratory. After being attacked for constructivism, the theater was disbanded in 1933. Some of its staff were transferred to Staline (now Donetsk), where they formed the core of the new Staline Ukrainian Drama Theater.

V. Revutsky

Kharkiv Civil-Engineering Institute (Kharkivskiy inzhenerno-budivelnii instytut). A technical institution of higher education under the jurisdiction of the Ministry of Higher and Specialized Secondary Education of the Ukrainian USSR. Formed in 1930 out of the construction department of the Kharkiv Technological Institute and the architecture department of the Kharkiv Art Institute, it has departments of architecture, construction, mechanics-technology, and sanitary engineering as well as an evening, correspondence, and graduate school. Its enrollment in 1984 was about 4,000.

Kharkiv College (Kharkivskiy kolehium). One of the most important religious secondary schools in the Russian Empire in the 18th century. It was founded originally (1722) as an eparchial seminary in Belgorod by Bishop Ye. Tykhorsky, and was transferred to Kharkiv in 1726 by Prince M. Golitsyn. Modeled on the Kievan Mohyla Academy, the seminary provided at first the kind of general education that was demanded of candidates for priesthood. Its six-grade curriculum stressed the Slavonic, Greek, and Latin languages; hence the seminary became known as the Slavonic-Greek-Latin School. In 1734 it assumed the title of college, and quickly attained a reputation for learning, second only to the Kievan Mohyla Academy. To attract students interested in a civil career, Bishop P. Smelech introduced in 1737 mathematics, French, and German, and invited foreign instructors to teach these subjects. It was transformed into the Kharkiv Theological Seminary in 1817 and thereafter provided only ecclesiastical education. In 1765 supplementary classes in French, German, mathematics, drafting, engineering, artillery, and geodesy were introduced for secular students. Physics and natural history were added in 1795, and agriculture and medicine at the beginning of the 19th century. Instruction took place mainly in Latin. The enrollment in 1727 was close to 400 and later rose as high as 800. The faculty included some famous artists and thinkers: I. Sabluchok, A. Vedel, and H. Skovoroda (1759–66). Many of the college's graduates gained distinction as church leaders, scholars, or cultural figures: N. Gnedich, M. Kachenovsky, Y. Mukhin, T. Smilivsky, and P. Yaroslavsky, among others. With the opening of Kharkiv University in 1805, the college's role in secular education declined. In 1817 the college was again converted into a theological seminary.

D. Saunders

Kharkiv Conservatory (Kharkivska konservatoriia). A higher school of music under the Ministry of Culture of the Ukrainian SSR. It was formed in 1917 out of the Kharkiv Music School (est 1883). In 1924 the conservatory was reorganized into the Kharkiv Music and Drama Institute and was reconstituted 10 years later out of the institute's music faculty. The conservatory consisted of eight faculties: piano, orchestra, folk instruments, singing, chorus conducting, musicology, composition, and music research. Evening and correspondence courses were offered. Its faculty included S. Bohatyrov, who raised a whole generation of composers such as D. Klebanov, M. Koliada, Yu. Meitus, V. Nakhabin, M. Tits, M. Fomenko, and A. Shtoharenko. In 1963 the conservatory was turned into the music faculty of the new Kharkiv Institute of Arts.

Kharkiv Electromechanical Plant (Kharkivskiy elektromekhanichnyi zavod or KhEMZ). A large industrial complex established in Kharkiv in 1915. During the Second World War it was evacuated east and its production machinery was used to equip five new factories in various parts of the USSR. Its buildings in Kharkiv were demolished. By 1950 the plant had been rebuilt, and in 1976 it was reorganized into an industrial complex. Its production consists mostly of large electric machines (200–25,000 kW), electric motors, transformers, automatic switches, and consumer products.

Kharkiv eparchy. An Orthodox eparchy founded in 1799 and comprising the territory of Slobidska Ukraine (later Kharkiv) gubernia. Until 1836 the bishops were officially titled Bishop of Slobidska Ukraine and Kharkiv, later Bishop of Kharkiv and Okhtyrka. Now the eparchy comprises only Kharkiv oblast, and the bishop is titled Bishop of Kharkiv and Bohodukhiv. The eparchy published a semimonthly newsletter, Khar'kovskie Eparkhial'nye Vedomosti (1867–83), succeeded by Listok Khar'kovskoi Eparkhii (1884–1917), and the religious journal Vera i Razum, which all contained important material on the history of the Ukrainian church. Before the 1917 Revolution there were six men's and six women's monasteries in the eparchy and 1009 priests (1913). In the 1920s a 'regional church' or eparchy of the *Ukrainian Autocephalous Orthodox church was established in Kharkiv, and the church's monthly journal, Tserkva i Zhyttia, was published there. A representation of the *All-Ukrainian Orthodox Church Council was also established. The more renowned hierarchs of the eparchy were Archbishops I. *Borisov, F. *Humilevsky, and M. *Bulgakov.

Kharkiv gubernia. An administrative-territorial unit in Russian-ruled *Slobidska Ukraine. *Kharkiv was the capital. In 1765 Slobidska Ukraine gubernia superseded the abolished Cossack regiments of Izium, Okhtyrka, Ostrohozke, Sumy, and Kharkiv. It was replaced by Kharkiv vicegerency in 1780 but restored in 1796 and renamed Kharkiv gubernia in 1835. From 1835 the gubernia consisted of 11 counties: Bohodukhiv, Izium, Kharkiv, Kupianka, Lebedyn, Okhtyrka, Starobilske, Sumy, Valky, Vovchanske, Zmiiv. In 1773 the gubernia had a male population of 666,000 living in 670 settlements; 58.6 percent consisted of Cossacks and military settlers, and 34 percent of peasants. The total population was 1,030,000 (90 percent peasant) in 1811, 1,590,900 in 1863, and 2,492,300 (18 percent urban) in 1897 (Ukrainians represented 82.7 percent; Russians, 16.3 percent). In 1924 the population was 2,728,400 (20 percent urban, of which only 55 percent was Ukrainian). The gubernia was primarily an agricultural region. Industry was underdeveloped and consisted mainly of beet-sugar processing, distilling, brewing, and metalworking. The gubernia was abolished in 1925, and its territory (36,727 sq km) was divided among Izium, Kupianka, Starobilske, Sumy, and Kharkiv okruhas; most of it made up *Kharkiv oblast in 1932.

R. Senkus

Kharkiv Historical Museum

Kharkiv Historical Museum (Kharkivskiyi istorychnyi muzei). One of the richest museums in Ukraine. Its origin goes back to the City Museum of Industry and Art founded in 1886 on the initiative of H. *Danylevsky. In 1920 the Skovoroda Museum of Slobidska Ukraine was formed out of this museum, the contents of the exhibition of Far Eastern Art and Ethnography of the Seventh Archeological Congress (1902), which had been kept by Kharkiv University, and the museum collection of the Kharkiv Historical-Philological Society. M. Sumtsov, one of its founders, became the museum's director. In the 1930s, during the suppression of Ukrainian learning, the museum was closed. It was reopened only after the Second World War and was renamed. Today the museum consists of four departments: archeology, pre-Soviet history, Soviet history, and Soviet-Czechoslovak friendship (located in Sokolove village near Kharkiv). Its holdings amount to about 200,000 articles. Besides archeological treasures such as V. *Gorodtsev's finds in the Izium region, the relics of a Saltiv burial site (8th–10th centuries), and the memorials from a fortified settlement in the Donets region (9th–12th centuries), it has a collection of articles from the early history of Kharkiv and numismatic, ethnographic, arms, flag, and art collections. From the Soviet period it has collections of propaganda materials, weapons, and memorabilia of Bolshevik leaders.

Kharkiv Historical-Philological Society (Kharkovskoe istoriko-filologicheskoe obshchestvo). Scholarly society founded at Kharkiv University in 1876, whose objective was to study Left-Bank and Slobidska Ukraine and subsequently carry on educational and cultural work. The Kharkiv society, along with a number of other official Ukrainian scientific societies, focused exclusively upon scholarly subjects following a period of increased intolerance that culminated in the *Ems ukase in 1876. The society's members consisted of lecturers from the university and other educational institutions and the local intelligentsia, among them such prominent figures as D. Bahalii, V. Buzeskul, O. and P. Yefymenko, O. Rusov, D. Yavornytsky, B. Liapunov, D. Ovsianyko-Kulykovsky, M. Khalansky, M. Hrunsky, V. Rezanov, Ya. Novytsky, V. Barvinsky, O. Vetukhiv, Ye. Ivanov, I. Manzhura, and O. Biletsky. The presidents of the society were V. Nadler (1877–8), O. Potebnia (1878–90), M. Drinov (1890–7), and M. Sumtsov (1897–1918). The society founded an archive (1880), containing significant documentation from the period of the hetmanate before 1782 and the *Little Russian Collegium, an ethnographic museum, and two libraries. It organized archeological and ethnographic expeditions, describing them in its various serial publications: Sbornik Khar'kovskogo Istoriko-filologicheskogo obshchestva (21 vols, 1886–1914), Trudy (7 vols, 1893–1902), and Vestnik (5 issues, 1911–14). The society ceased to function under Soviet rule in 1919. Its archive is now located at the Central State Historical Archive of the Ukrainian SSR.

Kharkiv Industrial Design Institute

Kharkiv Industrial Design Institute (Kharkivskiyi khudozhno-promyslovyyi instytut). A five-year art school under the Ministry of Higher and Specialized Secondary Education of the Ukrainian SSR. It was formed in 1963 out of the Kharkiv Art Institute (1927–63). The institute has two faculties: industrial design and interior design. The former is subdivided into such departments as the design of industrial furnishings, of transportation means, and of consumer goods, industrial graphics, and packaging. The second consists of such departments as the design of interiors, exhibits, advertisements, and small architectural forms, and monumental-decorative art. The enrollment is close to 650 per year.

Kharkiv Industrial-Engineering Institute (Kharkivskiy inzhenerno-ekonomichnyi instytut). A technical institution of higher education under the jurisdiction of the Ministry of Higher and Specialized Secondary Education of the Ukrainian SSR. Formed in 1930 out of the industry department of the Kharkiv Institute of the National Economy, it has a number of departments: machine-building, economics, chemistry, information processing, and labor management. It offers a graduate program and has an evening and a correspondence school. In 1984 its enrollment was about 5,000.

Kharkiv Institute of Arts (Kharkivskiy instytut mystetstv im. I. Kotliarevskoho). An institution of higher learning under the jurisdiction of the Ministry of Culture of the Ukrainian SSR. It was formed in 1963 out of the Kharkiv Conservatory and the Kharkiv Theater Institute. The institute has 10 faculties: stage acting, puppetry acting, stage directing, theater studies, piano, vocal music, folk instruments, orchestra, choir conducting, and theory and history. Its regular program for performing artists and drama or music teachers requires four years to complete; its correspondence and evening programs require one or two years more. Well-known actors such as O. Serdiuk and L. Tarabarynov have served on its faculty. The enrollment is over 800.

Kharkiv Institute of Culture (Kharkivskiy instytut kultury). An institution of higher learning under the Ministry of Culture of the Ukrainian SSR. Organized in 1929 out of the faculty of political education of the Kharkiv Institute of People's Education, it was reorganized and renamed several times before assuming its present form and name in 1966. Its task is to train librarians, bibliographers, and cultural-educational workers (organizers of clubs and directors of amateur ensembles). It has two departments – library science, and culture and education, both with a four-year program – and a correspondence school. The institute publishes collections of papers: Bibliotekarstvo i bibliohrafiia and Kulturno-osvitnia robota. In 1984 its enrollment was about 4,000.

Kharkiv Institute of People's Education (Kharkivskiy instytut narodnoi osvity im. O. Potebni or KhINO). A post-secondary educational institution organized in 1921 out of *Kharkiv University. It had three faculties: professional education, social education, and political education, each with a four-year program. For many years its principal was M. Havryliv. In 1925 its enrollment was almost 2,000 and in 1930 over 3,000. The faculty in 1925 had 205 members. In the 1920s KhINO underwent *Ukrainization. In 1932–3 Kharkiv University was restored by merging the KhINO, the Institute of the National Economy, and faculties of several other institutes.

Kharkiv Institute of Railway-Transport Engineers (Kharkivskiy instytut inzheneriv zaliznychnoho transportu im. S. Kirova). A post-secondary technical school under the jurisdiction of the Ministry of Roads of the USSR. In 1930 it succeeded the Kharkiv Railroad School established in the 1880s. The institute has five daytime faculties (mechanics; construction; automation, tele-mechanics, and communications; transportation management; and economics), an evening faculty, a correspondence faculty, an upgrading faculty, a graduate program, and a library with over 500,000 volumes. Branches of the institute are located in Donetsk and Kiev. In 1983/4 it had 8,500 students. Between 1930 and 1983 over 36,000 engineers completed its 5–6-year program.

Kharkiv Juridical Institute (Kharkivskiy yurydychnyi instytut). An institution of higher education for the training of lawyers and legal staff. Its origins stem from the Faculty of Law of Kharkiv University, which in 1920 became a faculty of the Kharkiv Institute of the National Economy and in 1930 was reorganized into the separate Institute of Soviet Construction and Law. In 1935 it received its present name. The only juridical institute in Ukraine, in the 1970s its annual enrollment was over 4,000, most in correspondence and evening programs. The institute has 17 chairs, a graduate school, and a library with over 300,000 volumes. Well-known jurists – eg, M. Paliienko, V. and M. Hordon, V. Koretsky, M. Maksymeiko, P. Nedbailo, and S. Vilniansky – have been part of its faculty.

Kharkiv Literacy Society (Kharkivske tovarystvo dlia poshyrennia v narodi hramotnosti or Kharkivske tovarystvo hramotnosti). Society established in 1869 on the initiative of several Kharkiv university faculty members, especially N. Beketov, M. Sumtsov, V. Danylevsky, and D. Bahalii. The society drew on broad public support to develop programs and schools to promote literacy and education in the whole gubernia. Loosely connected to similar societies in other regions, it supported the founding of four separate Sunday literacy schools for men and women, trade schools, programs on personal hygiene, handicrafts courses, and five small circulating libraries. In 1903 it acquired a building to house its headquarters, a museum of visual teaching aids, and a library. In 1912 it sponsored the publication of the multivolume Narodnaia entsiklopediia nauchnykh i prikladnykh znani (People's Encyclopedia of Scientific and Practical Knowledge). After the 1905 Revolution it began sponsoring public discussions on current political affairs. Its activities were severely curtailed during the First World War, and after the 1917 Revolution its work was taken over by the Ukrainian Scientific and Technical Society and the Ukrainian Commissariat of Education.

M. Bohachevsky-Chomiak

Kharkiv Machine-Tool Plant (Kharkivskiy verstatobudivnyi zavod im. S.V. Kosiora). One of the largest plants of the machine-tool industry in Ukraine, built in 1933. It was destroyed during the Second World War and rebuilt by the early 1950s. The plant has 14 primary and auxiliary shops such as the foundry, modeling, smithy, and assembly shops. Its basic production consists of automatic and semiautomatic machine tools, automatic conveyer belts, and large, medium, and special cylinder-and-cone grinding machines. Machine tools produced there are exported throughout the USSR and Eastern Europe.

Kharkiv Mathematics Society (Kharkivske matematychnе tovarystvo). Society founded in 1879 at Kharkiv

University to promote the study of mathematics. The organizer and first president was V. Imshenetsky. Since 1947 it has had two sections: scientific research and pedagogy. The society published protocols of its meetings from 1879 to 1888 and the journal Soobshcheniia Khar'kovskogo matematicheskogo obshchestva from 1888 to 1956. Since then, it has published a journal together with the mathematics department of Kharkiv University in the series Uchenye zapiski Khar'kovskogo universiteta. Its members have included O. Grave, A. Liapunov, and V. Steklov.

Kharkiv Medical Institute

Kharkiv Medical Institute (Kharkivskiyi medychnyi instytut). A post-secondary institution in Kharkiv under the jurisdiction of the Ministry of Health Protection of the Ukrainian SSR. It originated as the Faculty of Medicine (est 1805) at Kharkiv University, which was merged with the Kharkiv Women's Medical Institute (est 1910) to form a medical academy in 1920 and the institute in 1921. A second institute was created in 1935; it was merged with the first in 1943. The institute has four faculties (therapeutics, pediatrics, hygiene, stomatology), a preparatory department, and a graduate program. In 1984 it had over 5,000 students in a six-year program; 60 chairs; a central research laboratory; laboratories devoted to cardiology, virology, ophthalmic microsurgery, and the female reproductive system; four research museums; and a research library with over 620,000 volumes. Since 1935 the institute has published collections of scientific papers. It has graduated about 40,000 physicians and medical scientists. Some of the prominent medical scientists who have taught there are V. Danylevsky, V. Vorobiov, V. Protopopov, G. Folbort, O. Cherkes, V. Belousov, M. Bokarius, I. Hryshchenko, V. Derkach, B. Zadorozhny, H. Karavanov, Ye. Popov, M. Sytenko, N. Trinkler, V. Prykhodko, Yu. Orlenko, N. Tytarenko, V. Matvieieva, O. Nalbat, R. Synelnykov, M. Solovev, and A. Utevsky.

Kharkiv Motor Plant (Kharkivskiyi motorbudivnyi zavod 'Serp i molot'). A large agricultural-machinery manufacturing plant based on a factory founded in 1875 by M. Helferich and a Belgian industrial trust. In the interwar period the plant produced tractor parts, threshing machines, and other agricultural machines. Largely destroyed during the Second World War, it was rebuilt beginning in 1943. Since the 1960s the factory has specialized in producing motors for tractors and combines.

Kharkiv oblast. An administrative region in northeastern Ukraine, formed on 27 February 1932. Its area is 31,400 sq km; in 1986 its population was 3,146,900. The oblast has 25 raions, 328 rural soviets, 16 cities, and 62 towns (smt). The capital is Kharkiv.

Physical geography. The oblast is essentially located in the Dnieper Lowland; only its northern part is in the Central Russian Upland. The vegetation is of the steppe and forest-steppe variety. The oblast's northwestern forest-steppe has medium-humus chernozem, dark-gray podzolized, and podzolized chernozem soils. Its eastern and southern steppe has ordinary medium-humus chernozems and, in the river valleys, soddy, weakly podzolized meadow-chernozem and also marshy soils. Forests cover 11 percent of the oblast. Large deposits of petroleum, natural gas, peat, anthracite, lignite, rock salt, iron ores, phosphates, limestone, marls, ordinary and quartzose sands, chalk, refractory clays, zinc, and ocher are located there.

The largest rivers are the Donets; its right-bank tributaries the Udy, Kharkiv, Lopan, Mozh, Chepil, and Bereka; its left-bank tributaries the Vovcha, Velykyi Burluk, Voloska Balakliika, and Oskil; and the Merlia, Orel, Orelka, Berestova, Brytai, and Bahata rivers of the Dnieper Basin. Mineral springs and several small lakes are found in the oblast; most of the lakes are in the Donets marshlands (Lyman, Borove, Bile, Lebiazhe, Chaika). The climate is temperate-continental, with an average temperature in January of  $-7$  to  $-8^{\circ}\text{C}$  and in July of  $20$ – $21.5^{\circ}\text{C}$ . The annual precipitation ranges from 457 mm in the east to 568 mm in the west. Dry spells occur in the summer, and dry winds and dust storms in the spring.

History. The oblast's territories once belonged to the Kievan and Chernihiv lands of Kievan Rus'. With the Mongol invasions of the 13th century they were largely unsettled and constituted part of the so-called Dyke Pole (Loca Deserta). In the 16th century they became nominally part of Muscovy. Ukrainian Cossacks and Russian peasants began settling there, and they became part of *Slobidska Ukraine. In the 17th and 18th centuries they constituted parts of the Kharkiv and Izium regiments. From 1765 they were under direct Russian rule, as part of Slobidska Ukraine gubernia (1765–80, 1796–1835), Kharkiv vicegerency (1780–96), and Kharkiv gubernia (1835–1917). After the February Revolution of 1917, they changed hands several times among the UNR, the Hetman government, the Directory of the UNR, the Bolsheviks, and the Whites. Under Soviet rule from 1920, the gubernia was abolished in 1925 and replaced by Kharkiv, Izium, Kupianka, and Sumy okruhas. In 1932 these okruhas were replaced by Kharkiv oblast. Its borders were modified several times; in 1937 parts of it were incorporated into the newly created Poltava oblast, and in 1939, Sumy oblast.

Population. The oblast's population did not grow because of the many deaths and deportations that occurred during the Stalinist terror, the man-made *famine of 1932–3, and the Second World War. In 1965 it was 2,650,000. Between 1965 and 1984, however, it increased by 18 percent. In 1965, the average density was 75 inhabitants per sq km; in 1984 it was 99.5. The proportion of urban dwellers grew from about 25 percent in the mid-1920s to 53 percent in 1939, 69 percent in 1970, and 78 percent in 1986. Ukrainians made up only 68.8 percent of the population in 1959 and 64.2 percent in 1979; Russians, 26 percent and 31.8 percent; and Jews, 3.3 percent and 2.1 percent. Linguistic Russification is well advanced: in 1979 only 80.5 percent of the oblast's Ukrainians claimed Ukrainian as their first language, and only 52.2 percent of the population as a whole did. The most populous cities are Kharkiv, Izium, Lozova, Chuhuiv, Kupianka, Balakliia, and Liubotyn.

Industry. The oblast is one of the most industrialized in the USSR. In 1983, the main industries were machine building and metalworking (51 percent of gross output), food (15.3 percent), light industry (14.3 percent), and building materials (3.5 percent). Machine building, metallurgy, and metalworking are concentrated in *Kharkiv; secondary plants are found in Kupianka, Chuhuiv, Lozova, Derhachi, Paniutyne, and Izium. The oblast is the primary producer in Ukraine of confectioneries. Other branches of the food industry manufacture sugar products (in Kharkiv, Kupianka, Savyntsi), meat products (Kharkiv, Vovchanske, Kupianka, Krasnohrad, Izium, Chuhuiv, Bohodukhiv), flour and groats (Kharkiv, Krasnohrad, Lozova, Barvinkove), dairy products, vegetable oil, tobacco, beer, and spirits.

Light industry is also concentrated in Kharkiv, where plants produce clothing, textiles, footwear, and leather goods; other plants are found in Valky, Vilshany, Kupianka, Krasnohrad, Bohodukhiv, Komarivka, Liubotyn, and Lozova. Porcelain and ceramic tiles are made in Budy and Balakliia; wood products, furniture, and cellulose, in Kharkiv, Merefa, Izium, Chuhuiv, Hotvald, Derhachi, Vilshany, Zmiiv, and Rohan. The printing industry is concentrated in Kharkiv. Chemicals, pharmaceuticals, and cosmetics are made in Kharkiv and Pervomaiske; medical equipment, in Kharkiv and Izium. Building materials (cement, asbestos, bricks, slates, lime, reinforced-concrete materials, and glass) are made in Kharkiv, Balakliia, and Merefa. Natural gas extracted from the deposits at *Shebelynka, Kehychivka, Yefremivka, Melykhivka, Khrestyshche, Sosnivka, and elsewhere is the oblast's main source of fuel. Power is produced by large hydroelectric stations in Zmiiv and Eskhar and several thermal stations.

Agriculture. Grains, vegetables, fruits, and fodder and industrial crops are grown, and farm animals are raised at 274 collective and 158 state farms (in 1983). In 1983 there was 2,673,000 ha of farmland in the oblast; 90.5 percent (2,418,000 ha) was being used: of the latter 82.5 percent (1,994,000 ha) for crops, 11.9 percent (287,000 ha) as pasture, and 4.0 percent (95,000 ha) as hayfields. Of the total cropland, 1,853,000 ha (93 percent) were sown; 97,300 ha were irrigated, and 8,700 ha were drained. The main grain crops are winter wheat (40 percent), summer barley, corn, millet, and buckwheat. The main industrial crops are sunflowers and sugar beets (46 percent). Fodder crops consist of beets, roots, and grasses. Animal husbandry accounts for 55.6 percent of the agricultural output; cattle farming prevails, but hogs, poultry, rabbits, honey bees, and fish are also raised.

Transportation. In 1976 the oblast had 1,520 km of railway, of which 907 km was electric. Trunk lines crossing the oblast include the Moscow–Kharkiv–Sevastopol, Briansk–Kharkiv–Zhdanov, Moscow–Kharkiv–Donetske, and Lviv–Kiev–Poltava–Kharkiv–Kupianka–Valuiky lines. The major junctions are Kharkiv, Lozova, Kupianka, Krasnohrad, Merefa, and Liubotyn. In 1983 there were 8,300 km of roads, of which 6,600 were paved.

The major highways include Moscow–Kharkiv–Symferopil and Kiev–Kharkiv–Rostov-na-Donu. An airport is located near Kharkiv.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Istoriia mist i sil Ukrain's'koï RSr: Kharkivs'ka oblast' (Kiev 1967; Russian edn 1976)

I. Myhul, R. Senkus

Kharkiv Painting School (Kharkivska maliuvalna shkola). Founded in 1869 as a private art school by M. *Raievska-Ivanova, it was reorganized in 1896 into the City Painting School. In 1912 it was turned into a secondary art school whose graduates were admitted to the art academies. Its teachers and patrons included P. Levchenko, S. Vasylykivsky, I. Repin, and M. Fedorov. In 1921 the Kharkiv Art School was transformed into a higher art institution, the Kharkiv Art Tekhnikum, which in 1927–8 was renamed the Kharkiv Art Institute and included a vocational art school.

Kharkiv Pedagogical Institute

Kharkiv Polytechnical Institute

Kharkiv Pedagogical Institute (Kharkivskiy derzhavnyi pedahohichnyi instytut im. H. Skovorody). An institution of higher learning for preparing secondary-school teachers, under the Ministry of Education of the Ukrainian SSR. It was formed in 1933 out of the Kharkiv Institute of Social Education, which had been organized in 1931 out of the faculty of social education of the Kharkiv Institute of People's Education. It consists of five faculties: philology, physics and mathematics, natural science, preparation of elementary-school teachers, and physical education. The institute has a correspondence school and a graduate program. Its undergraduate program requires four or five years to complete. The total enrollment in 1983–4 was 4,700.

Kharkiv Polytechnical Institute (Kharkivskiy politekhnichnyi instytut im. V. Lenina). An institution of higher education under the Ministry of Higher and Specialized Secondary Education of the Ukrainian SSR, and one of the leading technical schools of the USSR. It was formed in 1929 out of the Kharkiv Technological Institute, which was founded in 1885. In 1930 it was replaced by a number of specialized institutes – mechanical, electrical, chemical, civil engineering, and aviation – but it was restored in 1949. It has 13 faculties – including the faculties of machine building, electric power, metallurgy, farm machinery, engineering and physics, and automatization – and over 100 laboratories. A graduate program and several upgrading programs are offered to postgraduates. The regular undergraduate program requires five years to complete. Branches of the institute exist in Sumy and Kremenchuk. In 1984 the enrollment was about 24,000. In 1952 its journal Ucheni zapysky / Uchenye zapiski was renamed Visnyk, and in 1976 it began to be published in Russian as Vestnik.

Kharkiv regiment. An administrative and military unit in Slobidska Ukraine centered in Kharkiv. It was formed in 1659–60 by Cossacks and peasants from Right- and Left-Bank Ukraine and occupied the sparsely populated territory between the Bakhmutka, Merla, Uda, and Orel rivers. In 1685, a separate Iziium regiment was detached. The regiment's territory was crossed by the *Murava Road and was often raided by Crimean and Nogay Tatars. Kharkiv regiment comprised 18 companies (in 1680 – 1715). In 1732 it had a population of 75,000 in 135 settlements. Its most prominent colonel was I. *Sirko (1664–5 and 1667). The regiment fought in the Russian-Turkish and Russian-Swedish wars of the late 17th and 18th centuries. It was abolished in 1765 and its territory became part of Slobidska Ukraine gubernia. Some of the Cossacks were organized into a regular lancer unit while the rest lost their remaining Cossack privileges.

Kharkiv Romantic School. A group of young poets who were professors or students at Kharkiv University in the 1830s–1840s. The term 'school' was proposed by A. *Shamrai, who researched and published their poetry. The school's main representatives were I. Sreznevsky, A. Metlynsky, M. Kostomarov, L. Borovykovsky, M. Petrenko, and O. Shpyhotsky. Like young poets of other nations in the Romantic period, they were imbued with an incipient national consciousness, which prompted them to study the ethnography of their people. While collecting, publishing, and imitating folk songs, legends, and stories, the Kharkiv romantics developed their own, predominantly historical, themes. As a result of their ethnographic interest, their view of the common people differed from the patronizing attitude of their predecessors I. Kotliarevsky and H. Kvitka-Osnovianenko. Instead of treating the people as naive children of nature, they saw in them a source of spiritual renewal and strength and poetic inspiration. This new view was shared even by those who, like A. Metlynsky, were cowed by the suppression of the *Cyril and Methodius Brotherhood and did not believe in the feasibility of a national renaissance of the Ukrainian people. Without entirely overcoming the traditional inclination toward verbosity, the Kharkiv romantics nonetheless rejected the literary burlesque cultivated by the previous generation and reminded educated Ukrainians that, as P. Kulish wrote, their 'native language exists not only for the purpose of berating the shiftless peasant.' This new attitude towards the people later gave rise to a Ukrainian messianism, which was articulated in M. Kostomarov's **Knyhy bytiia ukrains'koho narodu* (Books of the Genesis of the Ukrainian People).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Shamrai, A. (ed). Kharkivs'ka shkola romantykiv, 3 vols (Kharkiv 1930)

Luckyj, G. Between Gogol' and Ševčenko: Polarity in the Literary Ukraine, 1797–1847 (Munich 1971)

P. Petrenko

Kharkiv Scientific Society (Kharkivske naukove tovarystvo). A society uniting researchers and lecturers from various institutions of higher learning in Kharkiv founded in 1924. Its six sections (technology, natural science, medicine, agriculture, education, and linguistics-literature) published their own annual reports and journals: eg, Visnyk pryrodoznavstva (1927–31), Biuletyn' Postinoi komisii vyuchannia krovianykh uhrupovan' (4 issues, 1927–30), and Naukovo-tehnichnyi visnyk (over 90 issues from 1926 to 1936). The society also published its own periodical and annual report – Biuletyn' (9 issues, 1927–8) and Zvit pro diialnist' (1924–6). Among its more prominent collaborators were S. Rudnytsky, V. Rubashkin, M. Bilousiv, M. Barabashov, and O. Yanata. In the mid-1930s the society was dissolved and its sections were merged with other institutes.

Kharkiv Society of Naturalists (Kharkivske tovarystvo doslidnykiv pryrody). Society established in 1869 at Kharkiv University to promote the study of the natural sciences and research on the natural resources and geology of the Kharkiv region and southern Ukraine. Its membership increased from 40 in 1869 to 108 in 1897 and 212 in 1927. In 1914 the society established the Donetsk Hydrobiological Station. It published the journal Trudy obshchestva ispytatelei pryrody pri Khar'kovskom universitete (Works of the Society of Naturalists at Kharkiv University, 1869–1925 in Russian and 1927–30 in Ukrainian). The society ceased to exist in 1930.

Kharkiv Theater Institute (Kharkivskiy derzhavnyi teatralnyi instytut). A higher school set up in 1939 for training stage actors and directors. It was formed out of the Kharkiv Theater School, which had arisen in 1934 out of the Kharkiv Music and Drama Institute (est 1923 as a result of the reorganization of the Kharkiv Conservatory). Until 1934 L. *Kurbas's system of training was used, while Kurbas himself and some of his students (V. Vasylo, H. Ihnatovych, B. Tiahno, M. Verkhatsky, and L. Hakkebush) served on the faculty. The longest-serving members on the institute's faculty were I. Marianenko (1925–34, 1934–41, and 1944–61) and M. Krushelnytsky (1946–52). During the Second World War the Kharkiv Theater Institute operated in Saratov as the Ukrainian department of the Moscow Institute of Theater Arts. Returning to Kharkiv in 1943, it resumed work as a branch of the Kiev Institute of Theater Arts, and in 1945 became an independent institute. In 1963 the Kharkiv Theater Institute was abolished and was replaced by two faculties – acting and directing – in the new Kharkiv Institute of Arts.

Kharkiv Theater of Musical Comedy (Kharkivskiy teatr muzychnoi komedii). Founded in 1929, it is the oldest Ukrainian operetta theater. Its inauguration, which coincided with the Ukrainization of the Odessa Opera, was celebrated as a victory for the state's *Ukrainization policy. At first the company concentrated on classical operettas, rendering them, thanks to the influence of L. *Kurbas's school, in an experimental style. It staged such musicals as J. Offenbach's Orpheus in the Underworld, S.

Hulak-Artemovsky's Zaporozhian Cossack beyond the Danube, and J. Strauss's Gypsy Baron. Since 1936 the theater has served as a laboratory of the new Ukrainian operetta. Its more successful productions include O. Riabov's Wedding at Malynivka, D. Klebanov's and V. Nakhabin's The Amorous Guest, S. Zhdanov's Palyvoda (The Madcap), K. Bents's Starry Nights, H. Finarovsky's Palm Island, and O. Sandler's At Dawn. Its stage directors were M. Avakh, Ya. Bortnyk, and B. Balaban; its conductors, B. Kryzhanivsky and B. Cheboksarov; its choreographer, V. Verkhovynets; and its soloists, V. Novynska, D. Ponomarenko, and O. Ivashutych. During the Second World War the theater was evacuated to Uzbekistan; it returned to Kharkiv in 1945. Since then its most successful productions have been those of classical Viennese operettas.

V. Revutsky

Kharkiv Theater of Opera and Ballet

Kharkiv Theater of Opera and Ballet (Kharkivskiy derzhavnyi akademichnyi teatr opery ta baletu im. M. Lysenka). The first Ukrainian opera theater with a resident company. It was founded in 1925 as the Ukrainian Capital Opera, and received its current name in 1944. The first permanent opera company in Kharkiv arose in 1880, and it became the first company to stage M. Lysenko's Ukrainian operas Christmas Night (1883) and The Drowned Maiden (1885). In 1918 the company became known as the People's Opera, and in 1920 as the Russian State Opera. By 1934 the theater had produced 32 operas and 11 ballets, including B. Liatoshynsky's The Golden Ring, V. Kostenko's Karmeliuk, A. Vakhnianyn's Kupalo, M. Lysenko's Taras Bulba, O. Chyshko's Apple Blossom Captivity, and the Ukrainized versions of A. Dargomyzhsky's The Water Nymph and A. Borodin's Prince Igor. The ballets produced there included B. Yanovsky's Ferenji and M. Verykivsky's The Nobleman Kanovsky, in which the choreographer V. Lytvynenko combined for the first time elements of classical ballet and Ukrainian folk dances. Many masterpieces of Russian and world opera were produced; eg, E. Wolf-Ferrari's The Jewels of the Madonna and G. Puccini's Turandot. In 1934–41 new productions of S. Hulak-Artemovsky's Zaporozhian Cossack beyond the Danube and M. Lysenko's Natalka from Poltava were staged. During this period G. Meyerbeer's The Huguenots was one of the more successful productions of a classical opera. In 1941–5, the company worked in Chita and, later, collaborated with the Kiev Opera in Irkutsk. After 1945 the company's opera repertoire included M. Verykivsky's The Servant Girl and K. Dankevych's Bohdan Khmelnytsky and Nazar Stodolia; its ballet repertoire consisted of such productions as V. Nakhabin's Danko, Tavriia, The Burgher from Tuscany, and Spring Tale, and K. Dankevych's The Lily. In the 1970s the number of Ukrainian operas and ballets in the theater's repertoire was minimal: a new production of Taras Bulba (sets by A. Petrytsky) was directed by V. Skliarenko, and M. Skorulsky's ballet The Forest Song (1970, 1980) and V. Hubarenko's The Stone Master (1972, 1974) were performed. The opera's stage directors have included S. Karhalsky, D. Smolych, M. Foregger, M. Stefanovych, and V. Skliarenko. Among its stage designers have been A. Petrytsky, O. Khvostenko-Khvostov, D. Ovcharenko, and L. Bratchenko. A. Pazovsky, V. Tolba, Ye. Dyshchenko, I. Zak, and Ya. Skybysky worked at the opera as conductors, and K. Holeizovsky, P. Virsky, M. Moiseiev, P. Yorkyn, V. Lytvynenko, and V. Shkilko as choreographers. Among its better-known opera soloists have been V. Budnevych, M. Hryshko, B. Hmyria, I. Patorzhynsky, Yu. Kyporenko-Domansky, M. Donets, I. Kuchenko, M. Mykysya, V. Huzhova, Y. Chervoniuk, and M. Lytvynenko-Volhemut. Its ballet soloists have included V. Dulenko, A. Yarygina, S. Kolyvanova, O. Sobol, and T. Popesku.

V. Revutsky

Kharkiv Theater of the Revolution (Kharkivskiy derzhavnyi teatr revoliutsii). An affiliate of the All-Ukrainian Association of Proletarian Writers, it was founded in 1931 to counteract the influence of *Berezil theater. The company consisted of actors from the Odessa Ukrainian Drama Theater of the Revolution, from other Kharkiv theaters, and from the Kiev Ukrainian Drama Theater. Its artistic director was M. Tereshchenko; its literary director, I. Mykytenko; its composers, M. Verykivsky and B. Yanovsky; its choreographer, P. Virsky; and its stage designers, A. Petrytsky and B. Kosariev. Its actors included Yu. Shumsky, V. Varetska, M. Dykova, P. Stoliarenko-Muratev, V. Sokyрко, V. Masliuchenko, and P. Mikhnevych. The repertoire consisted of such plays as I. Mykytenko's Marusia Shurai, Solo na fleiti (A Flute Solo), and Divchata nashoi kraïny (The Girls of Our Country), I. Kocherha's Maistry chasu (Masters of Time), and A. Afinogenov's Strakh (Fear). After the closing of *Berezil, the Kharkiv Theater of the Revolution was merged in 1937 with the Kharkiv Theater of Working Youth to form the Kharkiv Lenin Komsomol Theater. In 1940 the latter was transferred to Bukovyna and was renamed the Chernivtsi Oblast Ukrainian Music and Drama Theater.

V. Revutsky

Kharkiv Tractor Plant (Kharkivskiy traktornyi zavod im. S. Ordzhonikidze). The largest plant of its kind in Soviet Ukraine. Constructed in 1930–1, it produced wheel-drive (from 1931) and caterpillar (from 1937) tractors. During the Second World War the plant was dismantled and evacuated to Rubtsovsk in Siberia. It was rebuilt in Kharkiv from 1944 to 1949. Beginning in 1949 diesel caterpillar tractors, such as the DT-54, and small wheel-drive tractors (the KhTZ-7, DT-14, and DT-20) were built there. Today the plant's 50 departments produce mainly the fast-moving caterpillar tractors T-74 and T-150, the 3-ton wheel-drive T-150K, the small garden tractor T-25, engines, and parts, which are used throughout the USSR and the Comecon countries.

Kharkiv Tractor Plant

Kharkiv Transport Machine-Building Plant (Kharkivskiy zavod transportnoho mashynobuduvannia im. V.O. Malysheva). One of the oldest and largest heavy-machine-building plants in Ukraine. It was founded in 1895 by the Russian Steam Locomotive and Machine Company. During the Second World War the plant was dismantled and evacuated to the Urals. It was rebuilt beginning in 1943. The plant produced steam locomotives, boilers, and agricultural machines from 1897, internal-combustion engines from 1913, and diesel engines from the 1920s. Since 1947 powerful locomotives – most recently the 2TE-40 Ukraina – have been built there. The plant also specializes in building diesel generators.

Kharkiv Turbine Plant (Kharkivskiy turbinni zavod im. S.M. Kirova). One of the largest power-generating-machinery plants in Ukraine. Completed in 1934, in 1941 it was dismantled and evacuated to the Urals. The plant was rebuilt in Kharkiv in 1944 and modernized several times. It produces steam, hydraulic, and gas turbines, mainly 100,000 to 1,000,000 kW steam turbines for thermal, hydro (since 1954), and nuclear (since 1975) power stations, which are used throughout the USSR and abroad.

Kharkiv Ukrainian Drama Theater (Kharkivskiy ukrainskyi dramatychnyi teatr im. T. Shevchenka). A national theater founded in 1935 out of remnants of the suppressed *Berezil theater as an explicit negation of the latter. The chief features of the new theater's policy were the adoption of socialist realism, a preference for Russian Soviet plays in its repertoire, an imitation of the Kiev Ukrainian Drama Theater, a predilection for O. *Kornii-chuk among Ukrainian playwrights, and the restriction of its Western European repertoire to 19th-century classics. By decree of the People's Commissariat of Education, M. Krushelnitsky was appointed director of the Berezil theater in October 1933 and retained this position in the new theater until 1952. He was succeeded by B. Nord (1952–7), a product of the Moscow Artistic Academic Theater, O. *Serdiuk (1957–62), and V. Krainychenko (1962–4). Thereafter, the theater gradually regressed to a repertoire of contemporary socialist-realist plays, populist-realist classics, and increasingly frequent guest performances staged by Russian directors of K. Stanislavsky's school. The theater's stage directors included H. Kononenko (1965–9), a postwar graduate of the Kharkiv Institute of Arts, V. Ohloblyn (1967–71), of the Moscow school, and later B. Meshkis (1971–4), A. Litko (1974–9), and O. Bieliatsky. Among the more memorable plays produced by the company after the war were V. Mynko's Ne nazyvaichy pryzvysch (Without Naming Names), H. Ibsen's Ghosts, W. Shakespeare's Hamlet (1956), O. Kolomiit's Planeta Speranta (Planet Speranta, 1966), I. Kavaleridze's Perekop, M. Kulish's Patetychna sonata (The Sonata Pathétique, 1972), and W. Shakespeare's Richard III (1976). The theater's stage designers included V. Meller, V. Hrechenko, D. Vlasiuk, H. Batii, O. Kostiuchenko, V. Kravets, and T. Medvid. Besides the former Berezil actors (A. Buchma, D. Antonovych, I. Marianenko, L. Dubovyk, Ye. Bondarenko, N. Uzhvii, S. Fedortseva, and V. Chystiakova), the company included such actors as L. Krynytska, N. Herasymova, N. Lykho, R. Kolosova, S. Chybisova, L. Popova, O. Svystunova, L. Bykov, A. Litko, V. Shestopalov, V. Maliar, A. Dzvonnarchuk, V. Ivchenko, and L. Tarabarynov.

Kharkiv Ukrainian Drama Theater

V. Revutsky

Kharkiv University (Kharkivskiy derzhavnyi universytet im. A.M. Gorkoho). The first university in Russian-ruled Ukrainian territory. It was founded in 1805 on the initiative of V. *Karazyn, and with the financial support of the local nobility, burghers, and the municipal council. The university enjoyed a broad autonomy: its highest governing body was the Professorial Council, which elected the rector and all the professors. Count S. Potocki was appointed curator of the university, and the first rector was the philologist I. Rizhsky. During the first decade the faculty consisted mostly of foreign scholars, the majority of whom were German. The more noted ones were the philosopher J. Schad and the historian D. Rommel.

During the 19th century the university consisted of four faculties: physics-mathematics, history-philology, law, and medicine. A veterinary school, which was added to the medical faculty in 1839, became an independent institute in 1850. The university was provided with a surgical laboratory and clinic; art, astronomy, physics, technology, zoology, and mineralogy cabinets; a botanical garden; a library; and a printing press. The Philotechnical Society (est 1811) and the Kharkiv Learned Society (est 1812) admitted not only university professors but also interested members of the public. The first periodicals in eastern Ukraine, including Khar'kovskii ezhe-nedel'nik (1812), Ukrainskii vestnik (1816-19), and Ukrainskii zhurnal (1824-5), were published by cultural circles closely connected with the university. In the 1830s a number of professors and students of Kharkiv University formed a literary group known as the *Kharkiv Romantic School. Until 1832 the university oversaw the whole educational system in Slobidska Ukraine. In the first 30 years of its existence Kharkiv University was an important cultural force in Ukraine. It introduced Western ideas and trends and recognized the cultural significance of Ukrainian folklore. Its cultural role declined as the university's autonomy was abolished.

In 1835 a new charter strengthened the power of the centralized bureaucracy. A government-approved curator and rector were put in charge of the university. By 1848 all publications and even lectures were subjected to censorship. Scholars were prohibited from traveling abroad. After the death of Nicholas I the restrictions were lifted gradually. The new charter of 1863 enlarged the powers of the Professorial Council and the rector. Funds for museums and libraries, and particularly for scientific research, were increased greatly. These changes inaugurated the university's golden age of scholarship. Its professors made some important contributions to various sciences. In the early 1860s the faculty numbered about 50 and the enrollment was 425. Several learned societies with a broad membership promoted research:

the *Kharkiv Society of Naturalists (est 1869), the *Kharkiv Historical-Philological Society (est 1876), and the *Kharkiv Mathematics Society (est 1879). The university began to publish its Zapiski in 1874. During the period of reaction after the assassination of Alexander II, the university's autonomy was again severely restricted. In 1884 the Ministry of Education acquired control over appointments and even the curriculum. In spite of political interference, studies in Ukrainian history, literature, and language continued to expand. The Kharkiv Historical-Philological Society published a wealth of materials in these fields. Many professors of the university became active in the city's cultural institutions, such as the public library and the Literacy Society. Enrollment rose, reaching some 1,500 in 1887. Student *hromadas sprang up and became involved in political activities. The Revolution of 1905 led to an easing of government controls and a quickening of the development of national consciousness. On the initiative of M. Sumtsov, D. Bahalii, and A. Zaikevych, the Professorial Council issued a memorandum in 1905 recommending an end to the censorship of Ukrainian publications. Although the Ministry of Education rejected in 1906 the rector's proposal to set up a chair of Ukrainian history and a chair of Ukrainian literature and language, it permitted a course in the history of 'Little Russian' literature. The course was conducted in the following year by M. Sumtsov in Ukrainian, as were D. Bahalii's and M. Khalansky's courses in Ukrainian history and the history of the Ukrainian language. In 1905 the university conferred honorary doctorates on M. Hrushevsky and I. Franko, and in 1910 on O. Yefymenko. Enrollment grew rapidly from 1,486 in 1904 to 3,450 in 1907.

Kharkiv University

The building complex housing the university changed little during the 19th century. In the second half of the century, I. Kharytonenko financed the construction of a medical building and a student residence. During D. Bahalii's rectorship at the beginning of the 20th century, additional facilities were built.

Before 1917 the more notable professors of Kharkiv University were the philologists I. Sreznevsky, N. and P. Lavrovsky, O. Potebnia, and S. Kulbakin; the ethnographers A. Metlynsky and M. Sumtsov; the historians D. Bahalii and V. Buzeskul; the jurists and sociologists I. Tymkovsky, D. Kachenovsky, and M. Kovalevsky; the economist V. Levytsky; the statisticians A. Roslavsky-Petrovsky and P. Köppen; the mathematicians A. Liapunov and T. Osypovsky; the physicists M. Pylchikov and D. Rozhansky; the chemists N. Beketov, V. Tymofiev, and O. Danylevsky; the botanists V. Palladin and A. Krasnov; and the geologists N. Borysiak and I. Levakovsky. Among the professors of medicine were M. Trinkler, V. Vorobiov, V. Krylov, and N. Melnikov-Razvedenkov.

During the revolutionary period of 1917–20 the predominantly Russian faculty recognized the linguistic and cultural rights of the Ukrainian people but resisted the idea of political independence. Control of the university changed several times before the Bolsheviks finally established their power in Kharkiv. In 1920 the university was reorganized into various institutes such as the Academy of Theoretical Sciences (in 1921 turned into the Kharkiv Institute of People's Education), the Kharkiv Medical Institute, and the Kharkiv Institute of the National Economy. In the early 1920s research in Ukrainian history, literature, and language developed vigorously, but in the late 1920s and early 1930s almost all the scholars in Ukrainian studies were arrested. P. Ritter perished in prison. Others were exiled, many of them never to return: S. Taranushenko, A. Kovalevsky, A. Shamrai, Yu. Savchenko, P. Petrenko, I. Kapustiansky, K. Nimchynov, B. Tkachenko, N. Mirza-Avakians, M. Yohansen, I. Troian, O. Matviienko, M. Plevako, and O. Syniavsky. In 1933 the institutes were consolidated into one university with seven faculties: physics-mathematics, chemistry, biology, geology-geography, literature-linguistics, history (including the philosophy department), and economics (including the economic geography department). Eight research institutes were brought under the university and large funds were provided to stimulate research. In 1936 the university was named after the Russian writer M. Gorky although he had never been connected with it in any way. Its enrollment rose from 1,900 in 1933–4 to 2,900 in 1938–9, but few students specialized in Ukrainian studies. During the Second World War the university was evacuated to Kzyl-Orda in Kazakhstan.

A number of noted professors who worked at Kharkiv University before the Revolution stayed on its faculty under the Soviet regime. They were joined by some other prominent faculty members: the mathematicians S. Bernshtein, N. Akhiezer, V. Marchenko, D. Syntsov, A. Sushkevych, and O. Pohorielov; the physicists O. Akhiezer, A. Walter, Ye. Lifshyts, and A. Zhelykhivsky;

the astronomer M. Barabashov; the physiologists O. Nahorny and V. Nikitin; the biochemist V. Zalesky; the geologist D. Soboliev; the economist O. Liberman; the classicist A. Kotsevalov; the literary scholar O. Biletsky; and the linguist L. Bulakhovsky. Some faculty members of Kharkiv University, such as A. Kotsevalov, O. Paradynsky, V. Derzhavyn, M. Hlobenko, and Yu. Shevelov, emigrated after 1943. After the war the biologist I. Bulankin was for a long term the non-elected rector.

Today Kharkiv University has 11 faculties: mechanics-mathematics, physics, physics-technology, radio-physics, chemistry, biology, geology-geography, economics, history, philology, and foreign languages. It also has a graduate school, evening school, and correspondence courses. There are 4 research institutes, dozens of laboratories, an astronomical observatory, a botanical garden, 4 museums, a central library, and 50 departmental libraries. The enrollment (1983–4) is 11,000 and the faculty numbers about 700. According to social origin (1968), 55 percent of the students came from white-collar, 30 percent from worker, and 15 percent from peasant families. Out of the 777 lecturers (1965), only 104 or 13 percent lectured in Ukrainian.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Bagalei, D. Opyt istorii Khar'kovskogo universiteta, 2 vols (Kharkiv 1893, 1904)
 Bagalei, D.; Sumtsov, N.; Buzeskul, V. Kratkii ocherk istorii Khar'kovskogo universiteta za pervye sto let ego sushchestvovaniia (Kharkiv 1905)
Khar'kovskii Gosudarstvennyi Universitet im. A. Gor'kogo za 150 let (Kharkiv 1955)

V. Markus

Kharkiv Women's Sunday School (Kharkivska zhi-nocha nedilna shkola). One of the first and most important institutions of adult education not only in Ukraine but in the Russian Empire. It was founded by Khrystyna *Alchevska in 1862 as a literacy school for women, mostly working-class women, and for many years it was the only school of its kind in the entire Russian Empire. Before its official opening in 1870, it operated illegally at the home of its founder. Instruction was free and the minimum age of admission was 10. By the 1890s the enrollment reached over 450. For four hours on Sundays the students were taught elementary-school subjects and read the works of Ukrainian writers, particularly of T. Shevchenko. With her teaching staff Alchevska worked out a methodology for adult education that stressed the use of literary works instead of primers, close student-teacher contact, discussion instead of rote learning, and student involvement in curriculum planning. Convinced that students should be taught in the language that they know best, Alchevska taught in Ukrainian until it was banned. The school's teachers compiled a bibliographic guide for adult students, Chto chitat' narodu (What the People Should Read, 3 vols, 1884–1906), and a teaching manual for instructors, Kniga vzroslykh (Book for Adults, 3 vols, 1899–1900). Funded by private donations, the school existed for over 50 years and served as a model for literacy schools throughout Ukraine and Russia.

M. Bohachevsky-Chomiak

Kharkiv Young Spectator's Theater (Kharkivskiy teatr yunoho hliadacha im. Leninskoho komsomolu). One of the first theaters for young spectators in Ukraine. It was founded in 1920 on the initiative of the Kharkiv Higher Theater School, and was reorganized several times – into the Fairy-Tale Theater, the First State Theater for Children, and the Gorky Young Spectator's Theater (1933–44) – before it was transferred to Lviv. It was only in 1960 that a new theater for young spectators was formed in Kharkiv out of the oblast music and drama theater. At first its plays were produced only in Russian, but since 1925 they have been produced in both Ukrainian and Russian. From a teaching and demonstrating theater it evolved, eventually, into a professional theater. Besides Ukrainian, Russian, and world classics, its repertoire includes contemporary Soviet plays, often on political themes. Among its directors have been V. Skliarenko, M. Verkhatsky, V. Vilner, and L. Klishcheiev, and its stage sets have been designed by B. Kosariev. Its repertoire consists of such plays as M. Kropyvnytsky's Doky sontse ziide, rosa ochi vyist' (By the Time the Sun Rises, the Dew Will Burn out the Eyes), V. Sukhodolsky's Iunist' Tarasa (Taras's Youth), N. Gogol's Zhenit'ba (The Marriage), J. Molière's Les Fourberies de Scapin, and F. Schiller's Kabale und Liebe.

V. Revutsky

Kharkiv Zootechnical-Veterinary Institute (Kharkivskiyi zooveterynarnyi instytut im. M. Borysenka). A post-secondary institution under the jurisdiction of the Ministry of Agriculture of the USSR, located in the town of Mala Danylivka north of Kharkiv. It was established in 1960 by merging the Kharkiv Veterinary (est 1851) and Zootechnical (est 1922) institutes. The institute has faculties of zootechnics; veterinary medicine; preparation by correspondence; foreign students; and the upgrading of veterinarians, collective and state farm directors, and agricultural lecturers. It has 23 chairs, a graduate program, 2 research farms, and a library with over 385,000 volumes. In 1983 the institute had over 2,000 full-time and 1,700 correspondence students. It publishes collections of scientific articles.

Kharkiv-Kiev Secret Society (Kharkivsko-kyivske taємne tovarystvo). Secret conspiratorial political organization founded by students at Kharkiv University in 1856. It represented a fusion of two Kharkiv groups that had formed independently; the originators of the first group were Ya. Bekman, M. Muravsky, P. Yefymenko, and P. Zavadsky, and the second group was composed of wealthy noble students as represented by N. Raevsky. The society's objectives were the overthrow of tsarist autocracy, emancipation of the peasants, and the establishment of a republican government in the Russian Empire. The society distributed banned works, anti-tsarist leaflets, and manuscript journals, among them Svobodnoe slovo (The Free Word, Kharkiv) and Glasnost' (Suffrage, Kiev). Its members established "Sunday schools among the workers and artisans and maintained contacts with other underground circles. In April 1858 the society instigated student protests in Kharkiv, resulting in the expulsion of the majority of its members. They subsequently moved to Kiev, where they founded a similar group and continued their activities. In late 1859 the society had more than 100 members. In January–February 1860, 22 of its members were arrested and exiled. Later that year the society ceased to exist. Several of the society's members joined the revolutionary organization *Zemlia i Volia.

Khar'kov (Kharkiv). A daily newspaper devoted to literature and politics that was published in Kharkiv from 1877 to 1880. It followed closely the activities of the local zemstvo. Its contributors included O. Bodiansky, D. Kachenovsky, and M. Sumtsov.

Khar'kovskie izvestiia (Kharkiv News). A weekly newspaper published in Kharkiv from 1817 to 1823. Published and edited at first by A. Verbytsky, in 1819 it was placed under the jurisdiction of the Council of Kharkiv University. P. Hulak-Artemovsky, E. Filomafitsky, A. Sklabovsky, and O. Kunytsky served as editors appointed by the council. The newspaper printed news about the theater, reviews of new publications, statistical reports, and sketches of everyday life in Kharkiv. It published the poems of H. Kvitka-Osnovianenko in Ukrainian.

Khar'kovskii demokrat (Kharkiv Democrat). The first satirical magazine in Ukraine. It was published monthly in Kharkiv in 1816 by V. Maslovych, who was also its editor. Its contributors included I. Sreznevsky, O. Somov, A. Sklabovsky, R. Honorsky, F. Zelensky, and D. Yaroslavsky. H. *Kvitka-Osnovianenko made his debut as a poet and satirical feuilletonist in the magazine. It published some of the first Ukrainian-language works to appear in the periodical press. The butt of its criticism was the social conditions in the Russian Empire. Altogether, six issues appeared.

Kostiantyn Kharlampovych

Kharlampovych, Kostiantyn [Xarlampovyč], b 30 July 1870 in Rohachi, Berestia county, Hrodna gubernia, d 23 March 1932. Historian; corresponding member of the Imperial Academy of Sciences from 1916 and full member of the VUAN from 1920. A graduate of the St Petersburg Theological Academy (1894), he was a privatdocent (from 1899) and then professor (1909–21) at Kazan University. Kharlampovych was a specialist in church history and culture and education in the 16th to 18th centuries. Although he was forced to live in Moscow in the 1920s, he actively participated in the work of the VUAN, contributing numerous articles to the journal Ukraina, and was a member of the VUAN Archeographic Commission. His monographs and major studies include Zapadnorusskie pravoslavnye shkoly XVI i nachala XVII veka (Western Ruthenian Orthodox Schools in the 16th and Early 17th Centuries, 1898), 'Zapadnorusskie tserkovnye bratstva i ikh prosvetitel'naia deiatel'nost' v kontse xvi i nachale xvii v' (Western Ruthenian Church Brotherhoods and Their Educational Activities in the Late 16th and 17th Centuries, Khristianskoe chtenie, 1899), Malorossiiskoe vliianie na velikoruskuiu tserkovnuiu zhizn' (Little Russian Influence on Great Russian Church Life, 1914), 'Narysy z istorii hrets'koi kolonii xvii–xviii st. v Nizhyni' (Sketches from the History of the Greek Colony of the 17th–18th Centuries in Nizhen, Zapysky Istorychno-filolohichnoho viddilu VUAN, 24 [1929]). Kharlampovych also contributed articles to such journals as Kievskaiia Starina and Volynskie Eparkhial'nye vedomosti. In 1929 he was expelled from the VUAN for political reasons, and to this day he is rarely mentioned in official Soviet histories of the academy. He is the subject of a biography by K. Bidnov (Warsaw 1933).

A. Zhukovsky

Khartsiiiev, Vasyl [Xarcijev, Vasyl'], b 12 January 1866 in Katerynoslav (now Dnipropetrovske), d 29 November 1937 in Kharkiv. Linguist and literary theorist. A graduate of Kharkiv University (1890), he taught at gymnasia in Kharkiv, Katerynoslav, and Yelysavethrad (later Kirovohrad), and from 1929 at the Yelysavethrad Pedagogical Institute. He wrote articles in linguistics, literary theory, and language teaching methods. A student of O. *Potebnia, his main achievement was to publish Potebnia's uncompleted, unpublished manuscripts, particularly the third volume of Iz zapisok po russkoi grammatike (From Notes on Russian Grammar, 1899), and to popularize his ideas.

Khartsyzke [Xartyz'ke]. v-19, DB III-4. City (1986 pop 68,000) under oblast jurisdiction in Donetske oblast. Established as a railroad station and coal-mining settlement in 1869, it has grown substantially since the Second World War. In 1897 its population was 674; in 1912, 1,500; in 1923, 3,000; in 1931, 8,300; in 1963, 38,000. From 1923 to 1962 it was a raion center. Its several plants produce large-diameter steel pipes, steel wire and cables, machinery, armatures, metal products, and food concentrates.

Kharytonenko, Ivan [Xarytonenko], b 1820 in Nyzhnia Syrovatka, Sumy county, Kharkiv gubernia, d 12 December 1891. Landowner, industrialist, philanthropist. He owned five sugar-beet refineries in Kharkiv gubernia and was one of the wealthiest sugar factory owners in Ukraine. From 1890 he was a leading member of the Kiev Refined-Sugar Syndicate. Kharytonenko funded a childrens' home, a student residence at Kharkiv University, and a church in Nyzhnia Syrovatka.

Khasevych, Nil [Xasevyč] (noms de guerre: D. Bei, Bei-Zot), b 1905 in Diuksyn, Rivne country, Volhynia gubernia, d 1952. Graphic artist. As a student of the Warsaw Academy of Arts (1925–37), he belonged to the Ukrainian art circle Spokii. Specializing in bookplates produced by the woodcut technique, he participated in many exhibitions, particularly in the Berlin and Prague exhibitions of Ukrainian graphic art and in the International Exhibition of Woodcuts in Warsaw (1936–7). Joining the UPA in 1943, he worked as an underground artist designing and illustrating its publications. Two albums of his work have been published: Ekstlibrys Nila Khasev- ycha (Bookplates by Nil Khasevych, 1939) and Hrafika v bunkrakh UPA (Graphic Art in the Bunkers of the UPA, 1952). He was killed by Soviet counterinsurgency forces.

Nil Khasevych: Sleeping Boy (woodcut)

Khata (Home). A literary almanac edited and published by P. *Kulish in St Petersburg in 1860 in two printings. The almanac contained a selection of T. Shevchenko's poetry, published under the heading 'Kobzars'kyi hostynets' (The Kobzar's Gift), fables by Ye. Hrebinka, and poems by Ya. Shchoholev and P. Kuzmenko. Furthermore, it published O. Psol's poems (unsigned) dedicated to the persecuted members of the *Cyril and Methodius Brotherhood, and particularly to T. Shevchenko. A play by P. Kulish, Kolii (Kolii Rebels), and a number of short stories were included: M. Vovchok's 'Chary' (Charms), P. Kulish's 'Sira kobyla' (The Gray Mare), H. Barvinok's 'Lykho ne bez dobra' (Evil Is Not without Good), 'Voseny lito' (Summer in Autumn), and 'Try sl'ozy divochi' (A Girls' Three Tears), and M. Nomys's 'Did Myna i baba Mynykha' (Grandpa Myna and Grandma Mynykha).

Khata (Home). The first Ukrainian magazine in Canada. It was an illustrated monthly devoted to literature, politics, and current issues. Published in Winnipeg in 1911–12, it folded after the sixth issue. Its editor was J. *Krett, and contributors included the best Ukrainian writers in Canada at the time: P. Krat-Ternenko, O. Zherebko, O. Boian, P. Kazan, and V. Kudryk. The magazine also published established writers in Ukraine such as H. Khotkevych, B. Hrinchenko, and O. Kovalenko. Translations of J. London were very popular. Articles on education, co-operatives, and political questions, as well as materials on the history of Ukrainians in Canada, were an important part of its contents.

Khataevich, Mendel [Xatajevič, Mendel'], b 22 March 1893 in Homel, Belorussia, d 1 February 1939. Bolshevik leader and Soviet official. Joining the Russian Social Democratic Workers' party (Bolshevik) in 1913, he worked on provincial Party committees in Belorussia and Samara gubernia during the 1917 Revolution. In 1923–4 he was secretary of the Odessa Gubernia Committee of the CP(B)U and then held Party posts outside Ukraine. In October 1932 he became secretary of the CC CP(B)U, and in January 1933 secretary of the Dnipropetrovske Oblast Party Committee as well. In 1937 he was second secretary of the CP(B)U. An influential Party official, he carried out J. Stalin's orders in collectivizing Ukrainian farming and organizing the man-made *famine of 1932-3. Arrested in 1937, he died in prison; he was later rehabilitated by N. Khrushchev.

Khaustov, Pavlo [Xaustov], b 14 November 1882 in Sharinovsky, Tomsk gubernia, d 26 September 1949 in Kiev. Architect. A graduate of the Moscow (1915) and Kiev (1933) civil-engineering institutes, he oversaw the drafting of the development plans for the Zaporizhia metropolitan area, Kiev, Yasynuvata, Voroshylovhrad, and Bila Tserkva. His publications deal with urban planning and include articles on the planning of Zaporizhia and Kiev.

KHAZAR KAGANATE

1. Borders in the 8th century
2. The eastern limits of Kievan Rus' and its colonies in the 10th century

Khazars (Ukrainian: khozary). Seminomadic, Turkic-speaking people that appeared in southeastern Europe after the expulsion of the *Huns in the 4th century and lived in the area until the 11th century. They were the eastern neighbors of the eastern Slavic tribes and then of Kievan Rus'. There are various hypotheses on the origin of the Khazars; they considered themselves close to the Bulgars, Oghuz, and Avars. The territory first settled by them encompassed the Caspian steppes between the Sulak River and the lower Don River. At first the Khazars were nomads and herders, but eventually some of them turned to farming and especially trade.

From the second half of the 6th century the Khazars were ruled by the western Turkic kaganate. After the dissolution of the kaganate in the middle of the 7th century, the Khazars conquered some of the Bulgar and other Caucasian (eg, *Alans) and Slavic tribes, and established the Khazar kaganate, the first state in eastern Europe. The supreme sovereign was the kagan, the high priest, but the actual ruler was the vicegerent or assistant kagan. The kaganate's first capital was Semender (Sամандар) in northern Daghestan. In the mid-8th century, under pressure from the Arabs to the south, the capital was transferred to *Itil on the Volga River, near present-day Astrakhan. Itil became an important trade center between East and West. In 835 the fortified city of Sarkil was built on the Don River with the help of Byzantine craftsmen. Among its inhabitants were many Rus', Greek, Iranian, and central-Asian merchants.

The Khazar kaganate reached its zenith in the late 8th century when it gained control over northern Caucasia, the Azov steppe, and most of eastern Europe up to the Dnieper River. The proto-Ukrainian Siverianians and Polianians paid tribute to the Khazars. The kaganate dominated the trade routes between the Far East and Byzantium and between the Arabic Empire and the Slavic territories and Scandinavia to the north. Until the mid-10th century, Khazar trade with these centers was interrupted only by intermittent wars between these same powers.

Khazars; arrow shows campaign of Prince Sviatoslav I.

At the beginning of the 8th century, Jews from Iran and Byzantium settled among the Khazars in northern Daghestan. Although some Khazars soon converted to Judaism, it was only at the beginning of the 9th century that Kagan Obadiah proclaimed non-Talmudic Judaism the state religion. Prior to that (ca 735), Arabs had invaded the kaganate and forced some members of the ruling class to adopt Islam. Meanwhile, Byzantium tried to convert the Khazars to Christianity: in 860-1 St Cyril conducted a mission among them and a metropoly with seven eparchies was organized. The Khazars even played a role in spreading Christianity in Rus' before its official conversion under Volodymyr the Great. All of these faiths coexisted peacefully on Khazar territory.

In the late 9th century the Black Sea steppes (southern Ukraine) that were under Khazar control were invaded by the *Pechenegs, whose incessant raids on the kaganate considerably weakened the Khazar state. From the late 9th century Kievan Rus' also emerged as a major opponent. According to the chronicles, Askold and Dyr's Varangian troops liberated Kiev from the Khazars in 862, and in 883–5 Prince Oleh freed the Polianians and Siverianians from Khazar rule. Prince Ihor's army twice (913–14 and 943–4) marched through Khazarian territory to the Caspian Sea and brought back rich booty. In his 941 campaign against Byzantium, however, Ihor received support from the kaganate and there were Christian Khazars among his warriors.

In 964–5 Prince Sviatoslav I Ihorevych inflicted the final blow to the Khazar state: he destroyed Itil and Semender, and annexed Sarkil and the northwestern part of Khazar territory to Rus' (see *Tmutorokan principality). This action proved to be detrimental to Rus', which became vulnerable to constant nomadic invasions from the east. In 985 Volodymyr the Great defeated the Bulgars and Khazars and forced them to pay tribute. The Khazars are last mentioned in the chronicles under the year 1079 when they conspired to seize Prince Oleh Sviatoslavych in Tmutorokan and hand him over to the Byzantine emperor. After the fall of the kaganate, the Khazars gradually intermixed with the Turkic and *Cuman populations and eventually disappeared as a distinct people.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Rybakov, B. 'K voprosu o roli Khazarskogo kaganatu v istorii Rusi,' Sovetskaia arkhologiiia, 18 (1953)
 Dunlop, D. The History of the Jewish Khazars (New York 1954)
 Artamonov, M. Istoriia khazar (Leningrad 1962)
 Pletneva, S. Khazary (Moscow 1976)
 Pritsak, O. 'The Khazar Kingdom's Conversion to Judaism,' HUS, 2 (1978), no. 3

A. Zhukovsky

Kherson [Xerson]. VII-13. Oblast capital (1985 pop 346,000), a large sea and river port and railway terminus.

Kherson in the late 18th century; painting by F. Alekseev

Kherson: shipyard

The town, with a fortress, admiralty, and shipyard, was founded in 1778 on the site of the Russian fortress Aleksandr-shants (1737–9) and was named after the ancient city of *Chersonese Taurica. Its construction was completed rapidly using thousands of conscripted sailors, laborers, soldiers, prisoners, and serfs. In 1783 the first warship of the Russian Black Sea fleet was launched there. In 1784 Kherson became a county town and in 1803 a gubernia capital. Shipbuilding, commerce, and shipping (particularly the export of grain and lumber to western Europe) were the cornerstones of its economy. With the deepening of the Dnieper Estuary waterway at the turn of the 20th century, Kherson's role as an export port increased. A railway link was established in 1907. The city's manufacturing sector (food and wool processing, machine building, and pig-iron founding) remained secondary. Its population grew from 2,000 in 1799 to 23,650 in 1846, 43,900 in 1859, 59,100 in 1897, and 81,000 in 1913.

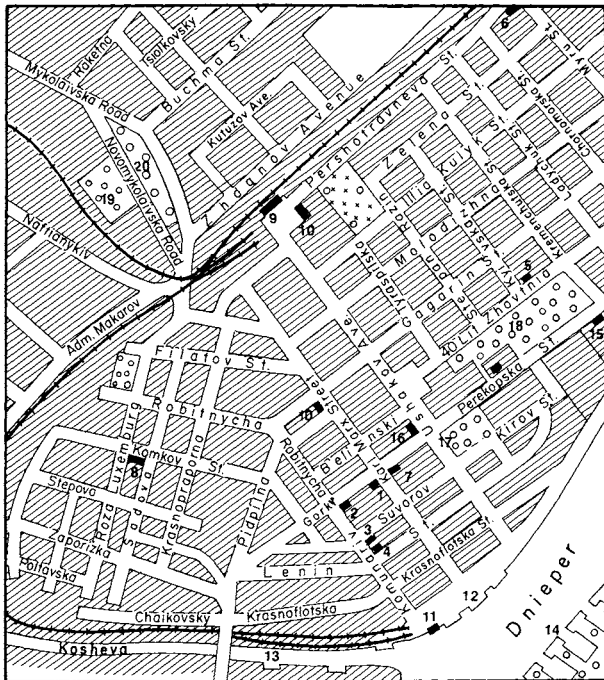

In the second half of the 19th century, Kherson became a cultural center with a teacher's seminary and public library (1872), an archeological museum (est 1890 by V. Hoshkevych), a gubernia scholarly archival commission

Kherson: grain elevators

(1898), a people's home and a branch of the imperial music society (1905), and the daily Iug (est 1897, ed V. Hoshkevych). The writers Dnirova Chaika, M. Cherniavsky, and I. Karpenko-Kary lived and worked in the city.

During 1917–20, Kherson was occupied by various forces: Ukrainian, Bolshevik, French, White, and Polish. As a consequence of several years of war and destruction, its population fell (74,500 in 1920). It decreased radically to 41,300 in 1923, probably as a result of the 1921 *famine, but then rose steadily, reaching 58,800 in 1926 and 97,200 in 1939. The city was an okruha capital from 1923 to 1932. It suffered devastation and great population loss during the Second World War. In 1944 it became an oblast capital. After the war the city and its

KHERSON

1. Oblast Ukrainian Music and Drama Theater
2. Oblast Philharmonic
3. Planetarium
4. Art Museum
5. Pedagogical Institute
6. Industrial Institute
7. Branch of the Mykolaiv Shipbuilding Institute
8. Agricultural Institute
9. Railway station
10. Bus stations
11. Dnieper Sea and River station
12. Commercial port
13. Naval port and shipyards
14. Wharfs
15. Former residence of the poet M. Cherniavsky
16. Building in which the first state telegraph station in Ukraine was installed in 1902
17. Site of the former fortress
18. Komsomol Park
19. Botanical garden
20. Park of the 50th Anniversary of the October Revolution economy were rebuilt and expanded. Its population grew to 158,000 in 1959 and 261,000 in 1970. Its ethnic composition has changed, particularly since the war. In 1897, 1926, and 1959, the percentage of Ukrainians was, respectively, 19.6, 36, and 63; of Russians, 47.2, 36, and 29; of Jews, 29.1, 26, and 6.

Kherson is an important industrial center. Of its 56 large enterprises, the most important are the Petrovsky Combine Plant, the Comintern Shipbuilding and Repairs Complex, the Kuibyshev Ship Repair Complex, and the Kherson Cotton Manufacturing Complex (one of the largest textile plants in the USSR). Kherson's port facilities handle a large volume of exports and imports from many countries around the world.

Kherson is also a scientific and cultural center. Located there are 4 institutes; 15 post-secondary vocational and technical schools; an oblast library, philharmonic, and theater; a regional-history and an art museum; the oblast newspaper Naddnyprians'ka pravda; and the Ukrainian Scientific Research Institute of Irrigation Farming. Among its 316 cultural and historical monuments are the remnants of the fortress walls and gates (dismantled in 1835), the Black Sea Hospital (designed by A. Zakharov and built in 1803–10), the naval arsenal (18th century), and the Cathedral of the Transfiguration (1781).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Babashov, Iu. Kherson (Kiev 1964)
Kherson za 50 rokov radians'koi vlady, 1917–1967 (Odessa 1966)
 Sergeeva, G.; Arkhipov, E. Kherson (Kiev 1968)
Kherson. Putevoditel' (Symferopil 1977)
Khersonu 200 let. 1778–1978. Sbornik dokumentov i materialov (Kiev 1978)
 Mel'nikov, A.; et al (eds). Istoriia gorodov i sel Ukrainskoi SSR: Khersonskaia oblast' (Kiev 1983)

V. Kubijovyč

Kherson Cotton Textile Manufacturing Complex

Kherson Cotton Textile Manufacturing Complex (Khersonskiy bavovnyanyi kombinat). One of the largest textile plants of the USSR. Construction of the complex began in 1952. The first section went into operation in 1961; the second in 1964. The complex consists of three spinning and weaving factories and a finishing mill. Utilizing cotton and synthetic rayon staple fiber as raw materials, it produces various types of fabrics for upholstery and articles of clothing, pile fabrics, and terry-cloth goods. The complex produces 388,000 t of yarn and 194,300,000 running m of fabric per year (1976). The value of its total annual production is 387,000,000 rubles. Many countries import its fabrics.

Kherson eparchy. An Orthodox eparchy, founded in 1837, with its see in Odessa (hence it is officially called Kherson and Odessa eparchy). Before the Revolution of 1917, the territory of Kherson eparchy corresponded to Kherson gubernia; until 1859 it also included Tavriia gubernia and was known as Kherson and Tavriia eparchy. Now it comprises the Odessa, Mykolaiv, and Kherson oblasts (Voroshylovhrad eparchy, which includes Voroshylovhrad and Donetsk oblasts, is temporarily under its jurisdiction). Before the Revolution there were two mens' and three womens' monasteries and 815 priests (1913). An eparchial newsletter, Khersonskie Eparkhial'nye Vedomosti, was published semimonthly from 1860. Now, there is only one monastery for men and one for women. Since 1945, the only theological seminary in the Ukrainian SSR has been located in Odessa.

Kherson gubernia. An administrative-territorial unit in Russian-ruled Southern Ukraine between the Dnieper and Dniester rivers. One of the three new gubernias created after *New Russia gubernia was abolished in 1802, it was called Mykolaiv gubernia until 1803, when Kherson became the new capital. From 1809 the gubernia had five counties: Kherson, Oleksandriia, Olviopil, Tyraspil, and Yelysavethrad. Odessa county was added in 1825. A seventh county – Bobrynets – existed from 1828 to 1865. Ananiv replaced Olviopil as a county center in 1834. The cities of Odessa and Mykolaiv (in 1803–61) and their vicinity were governed separately: Odessa by a gradonachalnik answerable directly to the tsar and (from 1822) the governor-general of New Russia and Bessarabia, and Mykolaiv by a military governor. A third of the population (military settlers, admiralty settlements, foreign colonists) was subject to martial law until 1858.

The gubernia had a population of about 245,000 in 1812, 893,000 in 1851, 1,330,000 in 1863, 2,027,000 in 1885, 2,733,600 in 1897, and 3,744,600 in 1914. In the 1850s it consisted of Ukrainians (68–75 percent), Rumanians (8–11 percent), Russians (3–7 percent), Jews (6 percent), Germans (4 percent), Bulgarians (2 percent), Serbs, Greeks, and Gypsies. In 1914 Ukrainians composed only 53 percent of the population, while Russians made up 22 percent and Jews 12 percent. Urban dwellers made up 10–20 percent of the population until the 1850s; in 1897 they composed almost 30 percent. In-migration accounted for much of the population growth; eg, in 1897, 46 percent of the population was born outside of the gubernia. The gubernia's economy was predominantly agricultural. Thousands of agricultural laborers from the other Ukrainian gubernias found work there during the grain harvest. Industry, consisting primarily of flour milling, distilling, metalworking, iron mining, beet-sugar processing, and brick making, was underdeveloped.

Under Soviet rule, in 1920 the gubernia's territory (70,600 sq km) was divided to form the new Odessa gubernia. Kherson gubernia was renamed Mykolaiv gubernia in 1921 and amalgamated with Odessa gubernia in 1922. In 1925 Odessa gubernia was abolished, and its territory was divided into six okruhas: Kherson, Kryvyi Rih, Mykolaiv, Odessa, Pershomaiske, and Zinoviivske. In 1932 much of this territory was incorporated into the new Odessa oblast, which was divided to form Mykolaiv oblast in 1937. The latter was divided in 1944 to form the new Kherson oblast.

I. Myhul, R. Senkus

Kherson oblast. An administrative region (1986 pop 1,220,000) in southern Ukraine, formed on 30 March 1944. It covers an area of 28,500 sq km, divided among 18 raions, 237 rural soviets, 9 cities, and 30 towns (smt). The capital is *Kherson.

Physical geography. The oblast is located in the steppe of the Black Sea Lowland on both banks of the Dnieper River directly north of the Black Sea and the Sea of Azov. The land is flat and dissected by ravines and small depressions. Its jagged coastline is dotted with shallow saltwater lakes, limans, bays, spits, and sandy islands. In its northern part the soils are mostly low-humus chernozems; in the south they are mostly of the dark-chestnut alkaline variety. Virgin steppe flora and fauna are preserved at the \*Askaniia-Nova and \*Black Sea nature reserves and five other conservation sites. Limestone, marl, kaolin, and sand deposits abound. Salt and curative muds are extracted from Lake Syvash and the coastal lakes. The principal rivers in the oblast are the Dnieper and its tributary the Inhulets; they supply the Kakhivka, Krasnoznamianka, and Inhulets irrigation systems. The Kakhivka Reservoir and Hydroelectric Station are located on the Dnieper. The climate is temperate-continental, with an average temperature of  $-4^{\circ}\text{C}$  in January and  $22.5^{\circ}\text{C}$  in July. The average annual precipitation is 300 mm in the south and 420 mm in the north. Winters are mild, with little snowfall; summers are hot and dry, with dust storms and droughts.

History. In ancient times the oblast's territory was populated by Scythians and Sarmatians. Later it was nominally ruled by Kievan Rus' and Lithuania. In the 15th century it came under Crimean Tatar rule. After the Russo-Turkish War of 1768–74, it was annexed by Russia and colonized (see *Southern Ukraine) as part of New Russia gubernia (1774–83, 1797–1803) and Katerynoslav vicegerency (1783–96). In 1803 it was divided between *Kherson gubernia (1803–1921) on the Dnieper's right bank and *Tavriia gubernia (1802–1918) on the left bank. Under Soviet rule it became part of Mykolaiv gubernia in 1921, Odessa gubernia in 1922, Kherson and Melitopil okruhas in 1925, Odessa oblast in 1932, and Mykolaiv oblast in 1937.

Population. The population of the oblast increased by 46 percent between 1959 and 1984. Urbanization has been primarily a postwar phenomenon, rising from about 15 percent of the population in the early 1930s to 51 percent in 1965 and 61 percent in 1986. The average population density in 1986 was, at 42.8 inhabitants per sq km, still the lowest in Ukraine. The percentage of Ukrainians has dropped from 81.1 in 1965 to 76.7 in 1979, while that of Russians has risen from 15.6 to 19.5. The oblast's largest cities are Kherson and Nova Kakhivka.

Industry. The oblast's main industries are machine building and metalworking (30.6 percent of all output), light industry (23.1 percent), food production (20.7 percent), and fuel production (10.5 percent). In Kherson, large cargo ships, tankers, and other seacraft are built and repaired, and agricultural machines (combines, tractors), irrigation equipment, electric measuring devices, and electric equipment are made. Industrial engines and generators are made in Nova Kakhivka; electric-welding equipment, in Kakhivka. The food industry consists of canning (Kherson, Skadovske), flour milling (Kherson, Kakhivka, Henicheske, Tsiurupynske, Skadovske, Beryslav), meat packing (Kherson, Novotroitske, Nova Kakhivka), wine making (Kherson, Nova Kakhivka, Beryslav, Henicheske, Tsiurupynske), sea fishing, and the making of dairy products, vegetable oil, and feed. Petroleum is refined in Kherson. Cellulose for paper is processed in Tsiurupynske. The Kherson Fiberglass-Container Plant is the largest of its kind in the USSR. In light industry, textile production predominates (see *Kherson Cotton Textile Manufacturing Complex); shoes and clothing are made in Kherson, Henicheske, and Tsiurupynske. Reinforced concrete, asphalt, bricks, and other building materials are made in Kherson, Nova Kakhivka, and Kakhivka; lime, in Bila Krynytsia and Arkhanhelske. Energy is provided by the Kakhivka Hydroelectric Station, the Kherson Thermoelectric Central Station, and several regional thermal stations using imported coal, oil, and gas.

Kherson oblast: land irrigation

Agriculture. In 1983 there were 147 collective farms and 145 state farms. They had at their disposal 2,190,000 ha of land; 1,964,000 ha were used directly for agriculture: of this 88.8 percent was cultivated, 7.9 percent was pasture, and 0.7 percent was hayfield. Irrigated land constituted 397,100 ha (70,000 ha in 1963). The main crops were winter wheat (53 percent of the land sown with grains), sunflowers (62.5 percent of the land sown with industrial crops), corn, barley, legumes, rice, millet, castor beans, alfalfa, tomatoes, peppers, eggplants, squash, and melons. (Of the total cultivated area in 1976, grain crops took up 48 percent; fodder crops, 39.2 percent; industrial crops, 8.1 percent; and garden vegetables, melons, and potatoes, 4.4 percent.) Vineyards took up 26,700 ha, and fruit orchards (apricots, peaches, cherries, quinces, plums, apples, pears), 15,600 ha. Animal husbandry (56.4 percent of the total value of agricultural output) consists primarily of dairy and beef cattle farming, but also of pig, sheep, poultry, fish, and silkworm farming.

Transportation. In 1983 there were 456 km of railroads. Trunk lines crossing the oblast include the Kherson-Dnipropetrovske, Kherson-Symferopil, and Kherson-Mykolaiv lines. Kherson and Kakhivka are the main junctions. There are 5,300 km of roads, of which 4,500 are paved. The main highways crossing the oblast are Moscow-Symferopil and Rostov-Odessa-Reni. Kherson has an airport. Kherson, Skadovske, and Henicheske are important seaports; ships sailing up the Dnieper stop at the river ports of Kherson, Nova Kakhivka, Beryslav, and Velyka Lepetykha.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Istoriia mist i sil Ukraini's'koï RSR: Kherson's'ka oblast' (Kiev 1973; Russian edn 1983)

I. Myhul, R. Senkus

Kherson Regional Museum (Khersonskyyi kraieznachnyi muzei). A museum organized in 1963 after the merger of the Kherson Historico-Archeological Museum with the Kherson Natural Historical Museum. The first museum had contained the collections of two earlier museums, a local archeological museum founded by V. Hoshkevych in 1890 and a historical museum organized by J. Paczosi in 1899. Now the museum has three sections, with over 100,000 exponents (1984), covering the region's natural history, prerevolutionary history, and history under Soviet rule. It is especially rich in archeological artifacts uncovered near the village of Berezna and in the excavations of the ancient Greek colony of Olbia. The Kherson Regional Museum has branches in Kakhivka, Henicheske, Beryslav, and Tsiurupynske.

Khersones Historical-Archeological Museum (Khersoneskyi istoryko-arkheolohichnyi muzei-zapovidnyk u Sevastopoli). Called originally a 'depository of local antiquities,' the museum was established in 1892 at a former monastery to house the archeological artifacts discovered during the excavation of the old Greek city of *Chersonese Taurica. The museum contains about 200,000 items from the 5th century BC to the 15th century AD and displays about 5,000 of these as well as an epigraphic and numismatic collection, multicolored ceiling paintings (4th-3rd century BC), mosaics, ceramics, and remnants of the city's architectural features. The museum publishes research news in Khersonesskii sbornik (1926-59) and Soobshchennia Khersonesskogo muzeia.

Khinkulov, Leonid [Xinkulov], b 1 January 1912 in Kiev. Literary scholar and critic of the Stalinist generation specializing in Ukrainian-Russian literary relations. He is the author of more than a dozen books in Russian and Ukrainian, including two on M. Gorky and Ukraine (1961, 1963), four on T. Shevchenko (1957, 1960, 1962, 1963), and one on famous writers who visited Kiev (1982).

Khira, Oleksander [Xira], b 17 January 1897 in Vilkhivtsi, Transcarpathia, d 26 May 1983 in Karaganda, Kazakhstan. Ukrainian Catholic bishop. A graduate of the Central Seminary in Budapest (1920), from 1924 to 1947 he taught canon law, church history, and moral and pastoral theology at the Mukachiv Theological Seminary. In 1934 he was appointed rector of the seminary, but he was dismissed in 1939 by the Hungarian authorities for his pro-Ukrainian activities. He was secretly consecrated bishop in 1945 by T. Romzha, whom he succeeded as bishop of Mukachiv eparchy in 1947. In 1949 he was arrested by the Soviet authorities and imprisoned in labor camps in Central Asia. He was released in 1956 and returned to Vilkhivtsi, but in 1957 he was forbidden to live in Ukraine and exiled to Kazakhstan. There he ministered to Germans, Lithuanians, Poles, and, unofficially, Ukrainians. In 1978 the local Soviet authorities registered his parish and gave him permission to build a church in Karaganda.

Oleksander Khira

Khliborob (Farmer). A popular semimonthly (later monthly) published in Lviv and Kolomyia from April 1891 to September 1895 by the *Ukrainian Radical party. Its editors were I. Franko, M. Pavlyk, and S. Danylovych. The paper discussed sociopolitical and economic issues affecting the rural population. It published articles by M. Drahomanov, I. Herasymovych, V. Stefanyk, and L. Martovych, as well as literary works by I. Franko, L. Martovych, and V. Korolenko.

Khliborob (Farmer). A popular semimonthly newspaper for farmers published in Chernivtsi from 1904 to 1913 by the Council of Regional Culture for the Crownland of Bukovyna. Its editor was S. *Smal-Stotsky.

Khliborob (Farmer). The first newspaper in Russian-ruled Ukraine to appear in Ukrainian. A weekly aimed at farmers and peasants, it was published without official permission in Lubni, Poltava gubernia, in November and December 1905 by the local Ukrainian hromada. Its editor was M. Shemet. The fourth issue was confiscated, and with the appearance of the fifth issue the paper was banned by the authorities. Its maximum circulation was estimated to be 5,000.

Khliborob (Farmer). An illustrated semimonthly devoted to co-operative affairs and farming, which was published in Kharkiv from 1907 to 1918 by the Kharkiv Society of Agriculture. It came out in both Ukrainian and Russian and its editor was S. Kuznetsov.

Khliborob (Farmer). A weekly newspaper of a nationalist orientation published in Curitiba, Brazil, from 1938 to 1941 and from 1948 to 1974, when it was replaced by a monthly bulletin. It was a continuation of the weekly Ukraïns'kyi khliborob, which had been founded in Porto Uniao in 1924 by P. *Karmansky and transferred to Curitiba in 1935. Both papers were published by the Ukrainian Union, which in 1938 was reorganized into the Union for Agricultural Education. In 1931 Ukraïns'kyi khliborob published a Portuguese supplement Vida Ukraina, and in 1938–40 Khliborob had a humor supplement Batizhok. Before 1941 the more noted editors of the two papers were P. Karmansky, V. Kuts, I. Paliatynsky, and I. Horachuk. From 1948 the editors were M. Hets, S. Plakhtyn, and O. Vashchenko.

Khliborob Ukraïny (Farmer of Ukraine). A popular monthly journal published since 1963 in Kiev by the Ministry for the Production and Delivery of Agricultural Products of the Ukrainian SSR. It is the successor to Kolhospne selo, which in 1949 replaced Kolhospnyk Ukraïny (est 1939). It publishes articles dealing with soil cultivation, economics, farm mechanization, and labor management. It also publishes advice on specific problems of production.

Khliborobs'ka molod' (Farm Youth). An educational monthly published from 1934 to 1939 in Lviv by the *Khliborobskyi Vyshkil Molodi organization, which was affiliated with the Silskyi Hospodar society. Its editor was Ye. Khraplyvy.

Khliborobs'ka pravda (Farmer's Truth). A political weekly newspaper published irregularly in Chernivtsi from 1924 to 1938. In 1923 it came out under the title Khliborob (Farmer). Until 1930 it described itself as the official paper of the Rumanian National Farmer's party, and then of the Ukrainian Farmer's party (although no such party existed). It supported official Rumanian policy and attacked the Ukrainian National party. The publisher and editor was K. Krakaliia. Among its contributors were H. Andriashchuk, S. Nykorovych-Hnidy (who also edited its literary and scholarly supplement and the women's page in 1935), O. Kovalsky, and I. Bordeiny.

Khliborobs'ka Ukraina (Agrarian Ukraine). An ideological, irregular collection published from 1920 to 1925 in Vienna by the Ukrainian Union of Agrarians-Statists (USKhD). Five volumes appeared, edited by V. *Lypynsky. They contained his fundamental political treatise 'Lysty do brativ khliborobiv' (Letters to Brother Agrarians) and his polemical articles (such as 'Poklykannia variahiv' (The Calling of the Varangians) and 'Orhanizatsiia Khliborobiv' (The Organization of Agrarians); D. Doroshenko's analyses of the events of 1918 in Ukraine, and particularly of Ukraine's foreign policy; S. Tomashivsky's theoretical articles 'Istoria i polityka' (History and Politics) and 'Vlada i kul'tura' (Power and Culture); and M. Tymofiiiv's studies of Ukraine's economic potential and of the role played by Jews in its economy. E. Borshchak, D. Olianchyn, and O. Skoropys-Yoltukhovsky contributed articles on history, while S. Shemet wrote on the development of the Ukrainian Democratic Agrarian party and on current activities of the USKhD abroad. Extracts from the memoirs of P. *Skoropadsky were published in one of the volumes. When the USKhD dissolved, the collection ceased to appear. Later it reappeared as a publication of the Brotherhood of Ukrainian Clasmocrats-Monarchists Hetmanites in Prague (2 vols, 1931 and 1933).

Khliborobsko-osvitnii soiuz. See Union for Agricultural Education.

Khliborobskyi Vyshkil Molodi (Agricultural Training for Youth or KhVM). An organization for young farmers set up in 1932 by the *Silskyi Hospodar society in Lviv. It consisted of young (age 12–18) male, female, or mixed groups affiliated with local Silskyi Hospodar circles, to replace the rural farming schools in Galicia. Its founder was Ye. *Khraplyvy. Assisted by agronomists and community activists, he developed a program for the KhVM and published it in the form of a handbook, Iak pratsiuvaty v Khlivorobs'komu vyshkoli molodi (How to Work in the Khlivoroboskyi Vyshkil Molodi, 3 edns). The training lasted four years: theoretical courses were taught in the fall and winter, practical instruction (competitions) was given in spring and summer. The main purpose of this training was to upgrade the skills of young farmers and to inculcate a sense of social responsibility and national pride in them. Besides Ye. Khraplyvy, the leading organizers were V. Tomashivsky, H. Eliiashevsky, V. Dmytrenko, R. Holod, and P. Zeleny. The organization published the monthly Khlivorobs'ka molod'. By 1938 it encompassed 1,180 groups in 550 villages with a total membership of 13,080 men and 840 women. Instructors supervised the work in the villages, while county agronomists oversaw the work in the counties. During the first Soviet occupation the KhVM was closed down, but in 1941 the German authorities permitted it to resume its activities. When Soviet forces recaptured Galicia in 1944, it was dissolved.

V. Kubijovyč

Khloporoboskyi Vyshkil Molodi; standing, from left: O. Khoinovskyy, V. Vasylevskyy, V. Vynarsky; sitting, from left: T. Rylskyy, V. Antonovych

Khloporoboskyi Vyshkil Molodi. Adherent of a populist movement of Ukrainian students and intelligentsia in Right-Bank Ukraine in the 1850s–1860s. The derogatory Polish term 'chłopoman,' meaning lover of the peasantry, was adopted eventually by those who propagated the notion of 'love for the simple Ukrainian people.' The movement, which was greatly influenced by French socialists (P.-J. Proudhon, L.-A. Blanqui) and democratic populism, originated among students of Kiev University who belonged to the Polonized nobility. Recognizing the duty to serve 'the people among whom one lives,' they turned away from Polish student organizations and established a Ukrainian society. The khloporoboskyi vyshkil molodi movement also had an impact on young people in Left-Bank Ukraine, particularly in Kharkiv, Poltava, Chernihiv, and Odessa. The movement's founders included V. Antonovych, T. Rylskyy, B. Poznansky, K. Mykhalchuk, P. Zhytetsky, and P. Chubynsky. V. *Antonovych articulated its ideological principles and basic program. In replying to Polish accusations of treason and defection, he rejected the Polish nobility's social order and Jesuitism as alien to the 'spirit of our people and harmful to its life,' and encouraged his contemporaries to love the people, to expiate the sins of their fathers towards the people by actively serving them. Charged with collaborating with Russian revolutionaries, the khloporoboskyi vyshkil molodi published a denial, 'Otzyv iz Kieva' (A Reply from Kiev), in Sovremennaia letopis', vol 11 (Moscow 1862). The 21 signatories of this statement rejected revolutionary methods and declared that their sole concern was to educate the recently emancipated peasantry. They also refuted the charge of separatism, arguing that separatism could have no practical significance for a mostly illiterate people. A cautious attitude towards the authorities and the conviction that educational and cultural progress must precede political action prompted them to emphasize the apolitical nature of the movement.

The khloporoboskyi vyshkil molodi operated strictly within the law to avoid any suspicion of revolutionary activity. From 1859 they were active in the *Hromada of Kiev. They helped found *Sunday schools and contributed to the journal **Osnova*. During summer vacations they organized tours of Ukraine, known as 'going to the people,' to acquire knowledge of the land and its people. Because of their cultural and educational work, the khloporoboskyi vyshkil molodi were falsely accused by Russian reactionary circles of being politically implicated in the Polish rebellion of 1863. Despite the repressive conditions that followed, including the implementation of the Valuev ukase (see P. *Valuev), they continued to participate in the work of the Hromada of Kiev and in other community efforts.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Antonovich, V. 'Moia ispoved', Osnova, 1 (1862)
 Drahomanov, M. 'Do istorii ukrains'kykh khloporoboskyi vyshkil molodi 1860 rr.', Zhyttie i slovo, 1895, no. 3
 Antonovych, V. 'Avtobiohrafichni zapysky', LNV, 1908, nos 7–9
 Lipiński, W. Szlachta na Ukrainie (Cracow 1909)
 Poznanski, B. 'Vospominaniia', Ukrainskaia zhizn', 1914, nos 8–10
 Mytsiuk, O. Ukrains'ki khloporoboskyi vyshkil molodi (Chernivtsi 1933)
 Doroshenko, D. Volodymyr Antonovych, ioho zhyttia i naukova ta hromads'ka diial'nist' (Prague 1942)
Suspil'no-politychnyi rukh na Ukraini v 1863–1864 rr.: Materialy i dokumenty (Kiev 1964)
 Tabiś, J. Polacy na uniwersytecie Kijowskim 1834–63 (Cracow 1974)

A. Zhukovskyy

Khlysts. Members of a mystical Orthodox sect that arose in the mid-17th century at the same time as the *Old Believer movement. The sect was characterized by an extremely conservative devotion to ritual and the liturgy. Suffering severe persecution in Russia, many Khlysts fled to Ukraine in the 1860s. Their communities (called korabli, 'ships') survived in the Kiev, Podilia, Poltava, Kharkiv, and Kuban regions, and elsewhere until the 1930s. In Ukraine the Khlysts were called shalaputy, although they called themselves Bozhi liudy (God's people). The main tenets of their religion were contained in 12 commandments; in particular, they believed that divinity could enter a human being for leading a saintly life. The Khlyst creed never became popular among Ukrainians. D. Tuptalo was the first Ukrainian author to mention them in his works.

Vasyl Khmeliuk: Rue de Poteau (oil)

Khmeliuk, Vasyl [Xmeljuk, Vasyl'], b 31 July 1903 in Cherniatyn, Volhynia gubernia, d 2 November 1986 in Paris. Postimpressionist painter and poet. He studied art at the Cracow Academy of Arts and at the Ukrainian Studio of Plastic Arts in Prague. In 1928 he settled in Paris, where his work attracted the attention of prominent collectors, such as A. Vollard and S. Shchukin, and appeared at well-known galleries. In the 1930s his paintings were exhibited also in England, Italy, and Switzerland. From 1943 he was associated with the Durand-Ruel Gallery, which organized exhibitions for him in Paris, New York, and other cities. His works, done in strong contrasting colors, include paintings of flowers, still lifes, landscapes, and portraits. They can be found in museums in Paris, London, Stockholm, Lviv, and Lucerne, in the collection of Oxford University, and in private collections. Three collections of Khmeliuk's experimental poetry have been published in Prague: Hin (Instinct, 1926), Osinnie sontse (The Autumn Sun, 1928), and 1926, 1928, 1923 (1928).

Khmelnysky, Bohdan (Fedir) Zinovii [Xmel'nyc'kyj], b ca 1595–6, d 6 August 1657 in Chyhyryn. Hetman of the Zaporozhian Host from 1648 to 1657, founder of the *Hetman state (1648–1782). By birth he belonged to the Ukrainian lesser nobility and bore the Massalski, and later the Abdank, coat of arms. His father, M. *Khmelnysky, served as an officer under the Polish crown hetman S. Żółkiewski and his mother, according to some sources, was of Cossack descent. Kmelnytsky's place of birth has not been determined for certain. Little more is known about Khmelnysky's education. Apparently, he received his elementary schooling in Ukrainian and his secondary and higher education in Polish at a Jesuit college, possibly in Jarosław, but more probably in Lviv. He completed his schooling before 1620 and acquired a broad knowledge of world history and fluency in Polish and Latin. Later he acquired a knowledge of Turkish, Tatar, and French. The Battle of *Cecora (1620), in which he lost his father and was captured by the Turks, was his first military action. After spending two years in Istanbul, he was ransomed by his mother and returned to Ukraine.

Hetman Bohdan Khmelnysky, portrait in the Kievan Cave Monastery (destroyed)

There is no reliable information about Khmelnytsky's activities from 1622 to 1637. All later accounts of his exploits in wars against the Tatars, Turks, and Russians (1632–4) have no documentary foundation. Only one fact is certain – that in the 1620s he joined the *registered Cossacks. Sometime between 1625 and 1627 he married Hanna Somko, a Cossack's daughter from Pereiaslav, and settled on his patrimonial estate in Subotiv near Chyhyryn. By 1637 he attained the high office of military chancellor. His signature appeared on the capitulation agreement signed at Borovytsia on 24 December 1637 that marked the end of a Cossack rebellion.

There are grounds to believe that Khmelnytsky belonged to the faction of officers that favored an understanding between the *Zaporozhian Host and Poland. Subsequent events, however, dashed any hopes of reconciliation. By the Ordinance of 1638 the Polish king revoked the autonomy of the Zaporozhian Host and placed the registered Cossacks under the direct authority of the Polish military command in Ukraine. The office of military chancellor, which Khmelnytsky had held, was abolished and Khmelnytsky was demoted to a captain of Chyhyryn regiment. In the fall of 1638 he visited Warsaw with a Cossack delegation to petition King Władysław IV Vasa to restore the former Cossack privileges.

In the next few years Khmelnytsky devoted his attention mostly to his estates in the Chyhyryn region, but in 1645 he served with a detachment of 2,000–2,500 Cossacks in France, and probably took part in the siege of Dunkirk. By this time his reputation for leadership was such that King Władysław, in putting together a coalition of Poland, Venice, and other states against Turkey, turned to him to obtain the support of the Zaporozhian Cossacks. In April 1646 he was one of the Cossack envoys in Warsaw with whom the king discussed plans for the impending war. These events contributed to his reputation in Ukraine, Poland, and abroad, and provided him with wide military and political contacts.

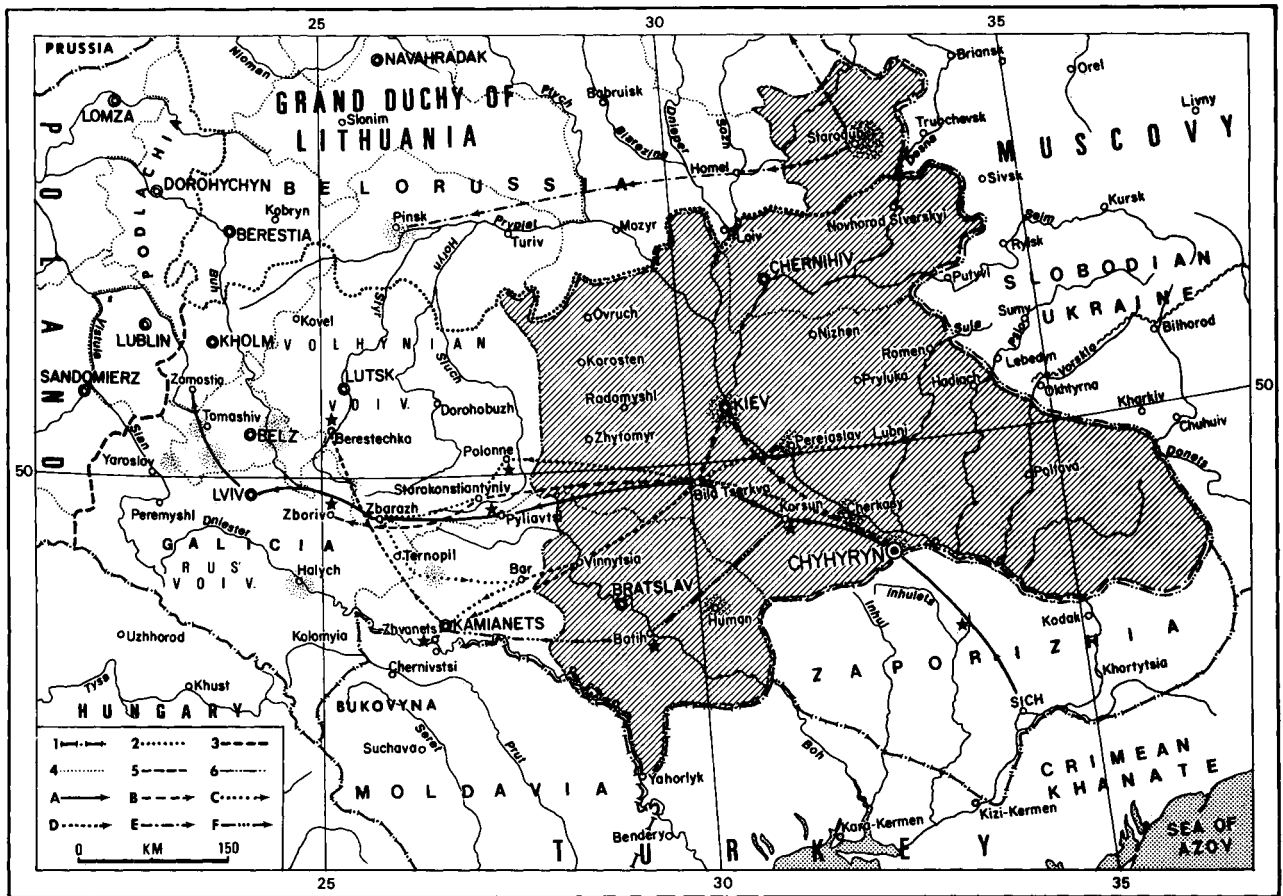

Khmelnytsky, however, had been regarded with suspicion for many years by the Polish magnates in Ukraine who were politically opposed to King Władysław. The new landowners of the Chyhyryn region, A. Koniecpolski, Crown Hetman S. Żółkiewski, and his son, Crown Flag-bearer Aleksander, treated Khmelnytsky with particular hostility. With the collusion of the Chyhyryn assistant vicegerent D. Czapliński, who bore some personal grudge against Khmelnytsky, they conspired to deprive Khmelnytsky of his Subotiv estate. In spite of the fact that Khmelnytsky received a royal title to Subotiv in 1646, Czapliński raided the estate, seized movable property, and disrupted the manor's economy. At the same time Czapliński's servants severely beat Khmelnytsky's small son at the marketplace in Chyhyryn. Under these conditions of violence and terror Khmelnytsky's wife died in 1647, and towards the end of the year A. Koniecpolski ordered Khmelnytsky's arrest and execution. It was only the help and the surety put up by his friends among the Chyhyryn officers, and particularly by Col S. Krychevsky, that saved Khmelnytsky from death. At the end of December 1647 he departed for Zaporizhia with a small (300–500-man) detachment. There he was elected *hetman. This event marked the beginning of a new Cossack uprising, which quickly turned into a national revolution (see *Cossack-Polish War).

Khmelnytsky was married three times. His first wife, who was the mother of all his children, died prematurely. His second wife, Matrona, whom he married in early 1649, was the former wife of his enemy D. Czapliński. In 1651 while Khmelnytsky was away on a military campaign, she was executed for conspiracy and adultery by his son Tymish. In the summer of 1651 Khmelnytsky married Hanna Zolotarenko, a Cossack woman from Korsun and the widow of Col Pylyp (Pylypets). Surviving him by many years, she entered a monastery in 1671 and adopted the religious name of Anastasiia. Khmelnytsky had two sons and four daughters. His older son, Tymish *Khmelnytsky, died on 15 September 1653 in the siege of the Moldavian fortress of Suceava. The younger son, Yurii (Yuras) *Khmelnytsky, was elected during his father's lifetime heir apparent under I. Vyhovsky's regency. Eventually, Yurii twice held the office of hetman. Khmelnytsky's daughter Kateryna (Olena) was married to D. Vyhovsky, and after his death in Muscovite captivity she married Hetman P. Teteria. The second daughter, Stepaniia, was the wife of I. Nechai, who died in Muscovite exile. She later became a nun in Kiev. The names of the other two daughters are unknown. One of them was married to Capt Hlyzko of Korsun regiment, who died in 1655 fighting against Poland. The other was married in 1654 to L. Movchan, a Cossack from Novhorod-Siverskyi. Khmelnytsky's line died out at the end of the 17th century. The Khmelnytskys were numerous in Left-Bank Ukraine and Russia but were of a different lineage. Khmelnytsky was buried on 25 August 1657 in St Elijah's Church in Subotiv, which he himself had built.

Khmelnytsky's greatest achievement in the process of national revolution was the Cossack Hetman state of the Zaporozhian Host (1648–1782). His statesmanship was demonstrated in all areas of state-building – in the military, administration, finance, economics, and culture. With political acumen he invested the Zaporozhian Host under the leadership of its hetman with supreme power in the new Ukrainian state, and unified all the estates of Ukrainian society under his authority. Khmelnytsky not only built a government system and developed military and civilian administrators, including I. Vyhovsky, P. Teteria, D. and I. Nechai, I. Bohun, H. Hulianytsky, and S. Mrozovytsky-Morozenko, out of Cossack officers and Ukrainian nobles, but also established an elite within the Cossack-Hetman state. In spite of setbacks and difficulties, this elite preserved and maintained its gains in the face of Muscovy's invasion and against Polish and Turkish claims almost to the end of the 18th century.

Khmelnytsky's Realm (Khmelnychchyna). The national uprising of 1648–57 headed by B. Khmelnytsky liberated a large part of Ukrainian territory from Poland and established a Cossack-Hetman state that was abolished only in the 1780s (see *Hetman state). Khmelnytsky's uprising induced some changes in the political system of eastern Europe, and brought about certain changes in the socioeconomic structure of Cossack Ukraine. It gave rise to a new elite of Cossack officers

UKRAINE UNDER BOHDAN KHMELNYTSKY

1. Border of the Kingdom of Poland in 1648
2. Boundary between the Polish Commonwealth and the Grand Duchy of Lithuania
3. Westernmost limit of Ukrainian ethnic territory
4. Voivodeship (palatinate) boundaries
5. Northernmost limit of the lands of the Zaporozhian Cossacks
6. Border of the Hetman state according to the 1649 Treaty of Zboriv

- A. Khmelnytsky's first campaign (1648)
- B. Second campaign (1649)
- C. M. Kryvonis's campaign (1648)
- D. Khmelnytsky's third campaign (1650)
- E. I. Zolotarenko's campaign (1654)
- F. Cossack campaign of 1652

The stars mark main battles of the Cossack-Polish War, and the speckled areas mark local rebellions.

that eventually, in the 18th century, evolved into a Ukrainian variant of the Polish nobility and, in the 19th century, into a Ukrainian variant of the Russian nobility.

The Cossack state, or 'kozatske panstvo,' emerged long before the Khmelnytsky period. According to historians such as I. Krypiakievych, N. Polonska-Vasylenko, and L. Okinshevych, a Ukrainian Cossack state – the Zaporozhian Sich – was established as early as the 16th century. V. Lypynsky believed that the Cossacks 'in a nationally alien Poland slowly became a state within a state.' But the Sich and the Cossack estate were only embryonic forms of the Cossack state that was established in the 17th century on old Cossack territories – the Dnieper region, including Kiev – and on the recently colonized southern Left-Bank Ukraine. The Cossacks claimed these lands as their own by right of conquest and use. From the time of Hetman P. Konashevych-Sahaidachny, Cossackdom as a 'state within a state' became absorbed into the Cossack world view. This view was accepted in Poland and in Western Europe, particularly in Sweden and Transylvania; eg, in 1628 Prince Bethlen-Gábor of Transylvania said: 'The Cossack people can secede from Poland and build its separate Commonwealth ... if only it finds for its struggle a wise and noble leader and organizer.' Khmelnytsky turned out to be that leader.

The first reports about Khmelnytsky's uprising and his alliance with the Turks and Crimean Tatars informed the Polish government that this was more than just a rebellion. Both Crown Hetman M. Potocki and A. Kysil, the voivode of Bratslav who was knowledgeable in Ukrainian affairs, wrote in March and May 1648 respectively that the Cossacks 'absolutely want to rule in Ukraine' and that Khmelnytsky 'will form a new duchy.'

In Ukrainian political circles there were different ideas on the structure of the new state. Among the Orthodox nobility and higher clergy the conception that two sovereigns – the Kiev metropolitan and the hetman of the Zaporozhian Host – would enter into relations with Poland was quite popular. But Khmelnytsky's military victories in 1648–9 and his triumphal entry into Kiev in 1648, at which he was hailed as 'the Moses, savior, redeemer, and liberator of the Rus' people from Polish captivity ... the illustrious ruler of Rus', weighed on the side of a Cossack state. In February 1649 during negotiations with a Polish delegation headed by A. Kysil in Pereiaslav, Khmelnytsky declared that he was 'the sole Rus' autocrat' and that he had 'enough power in Ukraine, Podilia, and Volhynia ... in my land and principality stretching as far as Lviv, Kholm, and Halych.' It became clear to the Polish envoys that Khmelnytsky had 'denied Ukraine and all Rus' to the Poles.' A Vilnius panegyric in Khmelnytsky's honor (1650–1) asserted: 'While in Poland it is King John Casimir, in Rus' it is Hetman Bohdan Khmelnytsky.'

Entrance of Hetman Khmelnytsky into Kiev, 1649 by M. Ivasiuk (oil, 1949)

Khmelnytsky claimed the divine right to rule over Cossacks as early as 29 July 1648, when in a letter to a Muscovite voivode he titled himself 'Bohdan Khmelnytsky, by Divine grace hetman with the Zaporozhian Host.' This formula was repeated in all official Cossack documents. In a letter from the Hlukhiv captain, S. Veichyk, to the Sevsk voivode, Prince T. Shcherbatov, written on 22 April 1651, the following title is used: 'By God's grace our Great Ruler, Sir Bohdan Khmelnytsky, the Hetman of the entire Zaporozhian Host.' Foreigners addressing Khmelnytsky titled him 'Illustrissimus Princeps' or 'Dux.' Greek metropolitans who visited Ukraine in 1650 prayed for him during the liturgy as 'the Ruler and Hetman of the Great Rus'. The Turkish sultan called him a prince and monarch, and other foreign rulers called him 'illustrissimus dux.'

The *Pereiaslav Treaty of 1654 did not change the political status of Ukraine, or the title or authority of its hetman. Although the presence of a Russian garrison in Kiev and the tsar's new title 'Tsar of Little Russia, Grand Prince of Kiev and Chernihiv' laid symbolic claim of Muscovite supremacy in Ukraine, the 'Zaporozhian Host' remained a separate, independent state known as the Rus' state, or Hosudarstvo rosiiske, as it was called by B. Khmelnytsky in his letter of 17 February 1654 to the tsar. In Muscovite sources it was called the Little-Russian state (Malorossiiskoe gosudarstvo). It had its own head of state – the hetman of the Zaporozhian Host, elected for life – its own government and army, foreign policy, legislature and judiciary, finances, and independent religious and cultural life.

Khmelnytsky retained full state powers in both internal and external affairs. The hetman continued to be 'the master and hetman' of the Ukrainian state, 'the supreme ruler and master of our fatherland,' as he was called in official Ukrainian documents. Metropolitan S. Kosiv referred to him in 1654 as 'the leader and commander of our land.' Khmelnytsky referred to himself as 'the master of the entire Rus' land' (1655) and as 'Clementia divina Generalis Dux Exercituum Zaporoviensium' (letter to C. Șerban, the ruler of Wallachia, 1657). General Chancellor I. Vyhovsky described Khmelnytsky to a Transylvanian envoy in 1657 thus: 'As the tsar is a tsar in his realm, so the hetman is a prince or king in his domain.' Ukraine's status as a sovereign state received international recognition. The Korsun Treaty of Alliance with Sweden of 6 October 1657 recognized Ukraine as 'a free people, subject to no one' (pro libera gente et nulli subjecta).

Khmelnytsky's Cossack state can be regarded as a new political entity – 'Ukraine of the Zaporozhian Host,' as it was known in Moscow – or as a restoration of the old Rus' state (Hosudarstvo rosiiskoie, as Khmelnytsky called it in his letter to the tsar of 17 February 1654). In all his negotiations with Sweden and Transylvania, Khmelnytsky demanded that his claims 'to all old Ukraine, or Rus' (Roxolania), wherever the Greek faith and their language still exist, as far as the Vistula River,' be recognized.

The issue of the legitimate historical boundaries of the Cossack state brought the Belorussian question to the forefront of Ukrainian politics. The Zaporozhian Cossacks were interested in Belorussia as early as the 16th century, as is evident from H. Loboda's and S. Nalyvaiko's campaigns. Khmelnytsky paid close attention to Belorussia from the very beginning of his uprising. He supported the Cossack movement led by K. Poklonsky in eastern Belorussia. A Belorussian regiment under the control of the Zaporozhian Host existed in 1655–7. In 1656 Khmelnytsky took under his protection Slutsk principality, which belonged to Prince B. Radziwiłł, then in 1657 Staryi Bykhau, granting it the right to free trade with Ukraine, and finally, on 8 July 1657, at the request of the Pynske nobility, Pynske, Mazyr, and Turau counties. These actions greatly disturbed Muscovy, which began, in V. Lypynsky's words, 'the struggle of two Rus'es over the third Rus'. Although B. Khmelnytsky's death put an end to Ukraine's expansion into Belorussian territory, the tradition of a 'Rus' state' was preserved in the policies of I. Vyhovsky, and traces of it can be found even later.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Hrushevs'kyi, M. Istoriia Ukraïny-Rusy, vols 8, 9 (Kiev 1907, 1931; repr, New York 1954, 1957)
 Kubala, L. Szkice historyczne: Wojna moskiewska (Warsaw 1910)
 Lipiński, W. Z dziejów Ukraïny (Cracow 1912; 2nd edn in his Twory, vol 2, Philadelphia 1980)
 Kubala, L. Wojna szwedzka (Lviv 1913)
 – Wojna brandenburska i najazd Rakoczezo (Lviv 1917)
 Lypyns'kyi, V. Ukraïna na perelomi (Vienna 1920; 2nd edn, New York 1954)
 Kryp'iakovykh, I. 'Studiï nad derzhavoiu Bohdana Khmel'nyts'koho,' ZNTSH, vols 139–40, 144–5, 147, 151 (1926–7, 1931)

Petrovs'kyi, M. Vyzvol'na viina ukrains'koho narodu proty hnitu shliakhets'koi Pol'shchi i pryiednannia Ukraïny do Rosii 1648–54 rr. (Kiev 1940)

Vernadsky, G. Bohdan, Hetman of Ukraine (New Haven 1941)

Iakovliv, A. Dohovir Het'mana Bohdana Khmel'nyts'koho z moskovs'kym tsarem Oleksiïem Mykhailovychem 1654 r. (New York 1954)

Kryp'iakevych, I. Bohdan Khmel'nyts'kyi (Kiev 1954)

Ohloblyn, O. Dumky pro Khmel'nychchynu (New York 1957)

Shevchenko, F. Politychni ta ekonomichni zv'iazky Ukraïny z Rosiïiu v seredyni xvii st. (Kiev 1959)

Ohloblyn, O. Problema derzhavnoi vlady na Ukraïni za Khmel'nychchyny i Pereiaslavs'ka uhoda 1654 r. (Munich-New York 1960)

Golobutskii, V. Diplomatskaia istoriia osvoboditel'noi voïny ukrainskogo naroda 1648–54 gg. (Kiev 1962)

Kryp'iakevych, I. 'Administratyvnyi podil Ukraïny 1648–54 rr.' Istorychni dzhherela ta ikh vykorystannia, vol 2 (Kiev 1966)

Wójcik, Z. Dzisiejepola w ogniu, 3rd edn (Warsaw 1968)

Shevchenko, F. 'Istorychne mynule v otsyntsi B.

Khmel'nyts'koho, Ukraïns'kyi istorychnyi zhurnal, 12 (1970)

Zlepko, D. Der grosse Kosakenaufstand 1648 gegen die polnische Herrschaft (Wiesbaden 1980)

Zagorovskii, L. Rossiiia, Rech' Pospolitaia i Shvoetsiia v seredine xvii veka (Moscow 1981)

O. Ohloblyn

Khmelnysky, Ivan [Xmel'nyc'kyj], b January 1742, d 13 January 1794. Philosopher. After graduating from the Kievan Mohyla Academy, he attended Königsberg University where he received a doctorate for his Razsudzhenie ob osnovaniiakh filosofskikh (Discourse on Philosophical Foundations, 1762). Settling in St Petersburg, Khmelnytsky wrote several original works including Razsuzhdenie o rabstve po zakonam estestvennym i pravu vsenarodnomu (Discourse on Slavery according to Natural Law and Universal Customary Law) and translated a number of scholarly books including one by J. Comenius. His chief works, which were written in Latin, survive only in Russian translation. Khmelnytsky's philosophical views were strongly influenced by C. Wolff and G. Leibniz.

Khmelnysky, Mykhailo [Xmel'nyc'kyj, Myxajlo], b ?, d October 1620. The father of B. *Khmelnysky, he was a petty Orthodox nobleman probably from the village of Khmelnyk in the Peremyshl region. As a young man he worked at the court of Crown Hetman S. Żółkiewski in Zhovkva and then at the court of Ya. Danylovych, the starosta of Chyhyryn and Korsun. In the Chyhyryn region, he established a number of new settlements, acquired his own estate in Subotiv, and eventually became vice-starosta. He maintained close links with the Zaporozhian Cossacks. During the Polish-Turkish War of 1620–1, Khmelnytsky commanded a detachment of volunteers from Chyhyryn in S. Żółkiewski's army in the Moldavian campaign. He died while fighting the Tatars at the Battle of *Cecora.

Khmelnysky, Tymish [Xmel'nyc'kyj, Tymiš], b 1632, d 15 September 1653. The eldest son of B. *Khmelnysky. In February-March 1648, his father left him as a hostage with the Crimean khan, Islam-Girei, to guarantee their alliance. Later, as captain of Chyhyryn company, he distinguished himself as a capable commander in the Cossack-Polish War. In 1650 he led a large Cossack-Tatar army against Moldavia, forcing the hospodar of Moldavia, V. *Lupu, to abandon his co-operation with the

Tymish Khmelnytsky

Hetman Yurii Khmelnytsky

Poles and form an alliance with the Cossacks instead. To strengthen this alliance, Lupu promised his daughter, Roksana *Lupu, in marriage to Khmelnytsky, who led (in 1652) another army into Moldavia and married Roksana. During this campaign his army participated in the Battle of *Batih, where the Cossacks scored a decisive victory over the Poles. These developments made Moldavia's neighbors uneasy; Prince György Rákóczi II of Transylvania and hospodar Matei Basarab of Wallachia, fearing the growth of Cossack influence in the region, supported a revolt by Moldavian boyars against Lupu. Khmelnytsky led another Cossack army to Lupu's defense. In May 1653, after early victories at Iasy and Focșani, his army was defeated at Finta (17 May). That autumn Khmelnytsky came a second time to help his father-in-law; however, this time he was killed in battle in Suceava. His death ended his father's attempts to develop a Cossack-Moldavian alliance as the cornerstone of his foreign policy.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Vengrzhenovskii, S. 'Svad'ba Timosha Khmel'nitskago (epizod iz istorii malorussko-moldavskikh otnoshenii)', ks, 1897, nos 3 and 5

A. Zhukovskiy

Khmelnysky, Yurii [Xmel'nyc'kyj, Jurij] (aka Khmelnychenko, Yuras), 1641–85. Hetman of Ukraine (1657, 1659–63) and hetman of the Right Bank (1677–81, 1685); the younger son of B. *Khmelnysky. His father, who hoped to establish a hereditary hetmancy, designated him as his successor after the death of his older son, Tymish. Although this was opposed by many Cossacks, who favored an elected hetmancy or had their own ambitions to become hetman, Yurii was initially chosen hetman while his father was still alive. At the Cossack Council in Chyhyryn in August 1657, however, after his father's death, when it became clear that the 16-year-old was incapable of governing on his own, the Cossacks elected I. *Vyhovsky as hetman. Subsequently, however, Vyhovsky lost the support of the Cossacks and abdicated in September 1659. Khmelnytsky was again elected hetman of Ukraine, supported primarily by the pro-Muscovite Cossack families who opposed Vyhovsky's pro-Polish policies (see the Treaty of *Hadiache).

Capitalizing on the anarchy that was developing in Ukraine and Khmelnytsky's inexperience and weakness, the Muscovite government and its plenipotentiary Prince A. Trubetskoi forced Khmelnytsky to ratify the *Pereiaslav Articles of 1659, which limited the sovereign rights of Ukraine, giving Moscow the power to appoint its own voivodes and to keep garrisons in six Ukrainian towns. This treaty greatly angered most Cossacks. In 1660, when the Muscovite army on whose side the Cossacks were obliged to fight in the war against Poland was defeated, the Cossacks went over to the Poles and the Muscovites were forced to surrender at Chudniv. In October 1660, Khmelnytsky concluded the Treaty of *Slobodyshche with the Poles, dissolving the alliance with Moscow and restoring the union with Poland, and annulling the Pereiaslav articles. This treaty, approved by the Cossack Council in Korsun, was opposed by some Left-Bank regiments led by Ya. Somko and by the Cossacks of the Zaporozhian Sich led by I. Briukhovetsky, who favored a pro-Moscow orientation. Khmelnytsky, unable to control the situation, abdicated at the beginning of 1663 and became a monk, taking the name Gedeon. The emergence of both pro-Polish and pro-Muscovite forces in Ukraine, led by competing hetmans, led to the partition of the Cossack state into Left- and Right-Bank Ukraine and initiated the period of Ukrainian history known as the Ruin.

In 1664, the Polish government accused Khmelnytsky of treason and arrested him. When he was released in 1667, he entered an Uman monastery where in 1670 (1673 according to some sources) he was captured by Crimean Tatars and taken to Istanbul. After a period of imprisonment, Khmelnytsky became the archimandrite of a Greek monastery. Eventually, the Turks attempted to use him to consolidate their rule over Right-Bank Ukraine. In 1677, Khmelnytsky was allowed to return to Ukraine, where he proclaimed himself Prince of Little Russia-Ukraine and Commander-in-Chief of the Zaporozhian Host, and established his capital in Nemyriv. In 1678–9, with the help of Tatar and Turkish troops, he attempted to annex the Left Bank. Once again, however, he proved to be incompetent and alienated even some of his closest collaborators. The southern Right Bank became depopulated as the population fled east beyond the Dnieper to escape his oppressive rule and the constant fighting between the Turks, Cossacks, Muscovites, and Poles. Following these failures, and the reconciliation between Moscow, Turkey, and the Crimean Khanate, Khmelnytsky was again deposed as hetman. In 1685, he proclaimed himself hetman once more, but after half a year he was executed at Kamianets-Podilskyi for disobeying Turkish orders. Yu. Khmelnytsky was a weak, unbalanced individual whose activities proved detrimental to the course of Ukrainian history and attempts at establishing a Ukrainian state.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Antonovych, V.; Bets, V. Istoricheskie deiateli Iugo-zapadnoi Rossii (Kiev 1883)
 Kostomarov, M. Het'manuvannia Vyhovs'koho i Iuriiia Khmel'nyts'koho (Ternopil 1892)
 Herasymchuk, V. 'Vyhovs'kyi i Iurii Khmel'nyts'kyi,' ZNTSh, 59–60 (1904)
 Rawita-Gawroński, F. Ostatni Chmielniczczenko (Zarys monografi-czny) 1640–1679 (Poznan 1919)

A. Zhukovskiy

Khmelnysky Regiment (Pershyi ukrainskyi kozachyi im. hetmana B. Khmelnytskoho polk, aka Bohdanivtsi). Organized with the help of Gen M. Khodorovych and proclaimed on 1 May 1917 by Ukrainian soldiers of the Kiev étape station, it became the first regular unit of the Ukrainian army. The regiment consisted of 16 companies with 3,600 men. From August to November it served at the front as part of the Tenth Infantry Division. In April 1918 the regiment was renamed the Third Khmelnytsky Zaporozhian Infantry Regiment and assigned to the Zaporozhian Corps. Its commanders were Capt D. Putnyk-Hrebeniuk, Lt Col Yu. Kapkan, Lt Col Yu. Lastovchenko, Col O. Shapoval, Lt Col M. Lubianysky, Col S. Lazurenko, and Col I. Kyrychenko. The regiment fought for Ukraine's independence until the end of 1920.

Khmelnyskyi

Khmelnyskyi [Xmel'nyc'kyj]. iv-7. City (1985 pop 217,000), the capital of Khmelnytskyi oblast. Until 1954 it was called Proskuriv, when it was renamed to honor hetman B. Khmelnytsky. First mentioned as the Polish royal outpost of Ploskyriv (Polish: Płoskirów) in 1493, it was fortified in the 16th century. Its inhabitants took part in the Cossack-Polish wars and in the Haidamaka rebellions. In 1780 the town was renamed Proskuriv. In 1793 it came under Russian rule and became a county center (from 1797 in Podilia gubernia).

From 1917 to November 1920 Proskuriv was controlled much of the time by the UNR. Under Soviet rule from 1920, it became an okruha center (1923–30, 1935–7) and then an oblast capital (in 1941 and 1944–54 of Kamianets-Podilskyi oblast). The Second World War brought about radical changes in the national composition of its population: the Ukrainians rose from 39 percent in 1926 to 53 in 1959, and Russians from 7 to 21 percent, while Jews fell from 42 to 10 percent, and Poles from 10 to 7 percent.

Until the Soviet period the city's economy was based on sugar refining, grain markets, and cottage industries. Today Khmelnytskyi is a rail junction and an important industrial center. Over 50 enterprises produce various machines, transformers and substations, thermoplastics machinery, auto and tractor parts, metal-stamping and pressing equipment, dairy, sugar, and meat products, furniture, footwear, clothing, leather goods, chemical products, reinforced-concrete products, and bricks.

Located in the city are a technological institute of consumer services; three tekhnikums (autoelectromechanical, Soviet trade, and co-operative); three specialized secondary schools (music, pedagogy, and medicine); a regional museum (est 1925); an oblast Ukrainian music and drama theater, a puppet theater, and a philharmonic orchestra; and the oblast newspaper Radianske Podillia.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Humeniuk, S. Svidky istorychnykh podii: Rozpovid' pro pam'iatni mistisia m. Khmel'nyts'koho (Lviv 1970)
Istoriia mist i sil Ukraïns'koi RSR. Khmel'nyts'ka oblast'
 (Kiev 1971)

V. Kubijovyč

Khmelnyskyi oblast. An administrative region (1986 pop 1,527,700) in Podilia in Right-Bank Ukraine, formed on 22 September 1937. The oblast covers an area of 20,600 sq km; it has 20 raions, 465 rural soviets, 12 cities, and 25 towns (smt). Since 1941 the capital has been *Khmelnyskyi; until 1954 it was called Proskuriv.

Physical geography. The oblast is located in the forest-steppe of the central part of the Volhynia-Podilia Upland. Its undulating plain is dissected by many river valleys and is terraced in the northeast; in the south belts of canyons, limestone hills, cliffs, and ridges (the \*Tovtry) occur. The topsoil consists of loess and loess-like loamy deposits. The central part of the oblast has mainly low-humus chernozems; the south, podzolized chernozems and gray and light-gray podzolized soils; and the north, a mixture of soddy podzolized, carbonate, and chernozem soils. Forests cover 13 percent of the oblast's area; in the north they are mostly pine, with some birch and aspen, while in the south they consist of oak, hornbeam, linden, ash, hazel, and other deciduous trees. Reforestation is occurring in the south (20,300 ha in 1973-84). Deposits of limestone, gypsum, chalk, kaolin, bentonite, dolomite, and granite are widespread, and there are small phosphorite and peat deposits and several mineral springs. There are 165 rivers longer than 10 km. They are part of the Dnieper Basin in the north (the tributaries Khomora, Horyn, and Sluch), the Boh Basin in the east (the Buzhok, Vovk, and Ikva), and the Dniester Basin in the south (the Dniester, Zbruch, Zhvanchyk, Smotrych, Ushytsia, Ternava, Muksha, Kalius, and Studenytsia). There are many ponds and 44 small reservoirs. The climate is temperate-continental, with an average temperature of  $-5.5^{\circ}\text{C}$  in January and  $18.5^{\circ}\text{C}$  in July. The annual precipitation is 576-628 mm. Native flora and fauna are protected in 13 estate conservation areas and numerous other areas.

History. Already settled in the early Stone Age, from the 9th century the oblast's territory belonged to Kievan Rus'; from the mid-12th century it was part of the principality of Galicia and then Galicia-Volhynia. In the 13th century parts of it came under Mongol rule. In the 14th century it belonged to Lithuania, and from the 1430s, to Poland (from the 1460s as part of *Podilia voivodeship). In the 17th century, most of it was taken by the Turks but returned to Poland at the end of the century. It was annexed by the Russian Empire in 1793 and divided between *Volhynia and *Podilia gubernias in 1797. Under Soviet rule, it was partitioned among Kamianets-Podilskyi, Proskuriv, and Shepetivka okruhas in 1925 and became part of Vinnytsia oblast in 1932. In 1937 it constituted the new Kamianets-Podilskyi oblast, which was renamed Khmelnytskyi oblast in 1954.

Population. The population of the oblast has not grown. In 1926 the three okruhas now composing the oblast had a population of 1,774,000. During the man-made *famine of 1932-3, 15-20 percent of the population died. Much of the sizable Jewish population (eg, 8 percent of Proskuriv okruha in 1926) was annihilated by the Germans during the Second World War, and many Poles (10.2 percent of Proskuriv okruha in 1926) were resettled in Poland after the war. The oblast's population decreased by 6 percent between 1963 (its high point, at 1,627,000) and 1984. The increase in the urban population has been primarily a phenomenon of the 1970s. In 1959, only 24 percent of the population was urban; in 1971, 28 percent; and by 1986, 44 percent. The average population density has decreased: from 88 inhabitants per sq km (in the three okruhas) in 1926 to 79 in 1959 and 74.5 in 1984. Ukrainians composed 90.1 percent of the population in 1959 and 90.8 percent in 1979; Russians, 3.8 and 4.9 percent; Poles, 4.3 and 2.8 percent; and Jews, 1.2 percent (in 1959) and 1.0 percent (in 1970). In 1979, 98.7 percent of the oblast's Ukrainians and 80 percent of the Poles claimed Ukrainian as their first language; only 6 percent of the entire population claimed Russian. The largest cities are Khmelnytskyi and Kamianets-Podilskyi.

Industry. The oblast specializes in food processing (34.6 percent of gross industrial output in 1983); machine building and metalworking (31.9 percent); light industry (13.9 percent); building-materials manufacturing (7.7 percent); and lumbering, cellulose and paper making, woodworking, and furniture making (4.6 percent). In 1983 the oblast's 16 sugar refineries (in Teofipol, Volochyske, Horodok, Yasne, and Starokostiantyniv) produced 8.4 percent of Ukraine's beet sugar. Vegetable and fruit canneries are found in Kamianets-Podilskyi, Medzhybizh, Nova Ushytsia, Vinkivtsi, and Sataniv; confectionery plants, in Khmelnytskyi, Zinkiv, and Slavuta; large dairies, in Khmelnytskyi, Kamianets-Podilskyi, Shepetivka, Starokostiantyniv, and Dunaivtsi; meat-packing plants, in Khmelnytskyi, Kamianets-Podilskyi, and Shepetivka; breweries, in Khmelnytskyi, Slavuta, and Zinkiv; and flour mills, in Bohdanivtsi, Volochyske, Kamianets-Podilskyi, Slavuta, and Polonne. There are 27 feed plants.

Machine tools are made in Kamianets-Podilskyi, Khmelnytskyi, and Horodok; electronic equipment and electric machinery, in Kamianets-Podilskyi and Khmelnytskyi; agricultural machines, in Khmelnytskyi, Kamianets-Podilskyi, and Shepetivka; and equipment for the food industry, in Krasyliv. Textiles are made in Kamianets-Podilskyi, Dunaivtsi, and Slavuta; clothing, in Kamianets-Podilskyi, Khmelnytskyi, and Chornyi Ostriv; leather goods, in Khmelnytskyi and Kamianets-Podilskyi; and wood products, in Shepetivka, Slavuta, Iziaslav, Dunaivtsi, Vovkovyntsi, and Liatyshiv. Reinforced-concrete materials are made in Khmelnytskyi, Kamianets-Podilskyi, and Slavuta; exterior tiles and drywall, in Kamianets-Podilskyi; drainpipes, in Romanyn; asphalt and concrete, in Khmelnytskyi; cement, in Kamianets-Podilskyi; ceramic tiles and glass products, in Slavuta; china, in Polonne; gravel and tar paper, in Slavuta; lime, in Zakupane and Humentsi; and refractories, in Burtyn. There are 13 brick plants in the oblast.

Agriculture. In 1983 there were 437 collective and 34 state farms in the oblast. They had at their disposal 1,790,000 ha of land, of which 1,568,000 ha was farmland; of the latter, 88.5 percent was cultivated, 5.3 percent was hayfield, and 3.1 percent was pasture. Of the seeded land (1,397,000 ha), 5.1 percent consisted of grain crops; 28.1 percent, of fodder crops; 12.8 percent, of industrial crops; and 8 percent, of garden vegetables, melons, and potatoes. Orchards and berry fields occupied 64,600 ha. The principal grain crops are winter wheat (45.7 percent), spring barley (19.7 percent), corn (7 percent), and buckwheat (3 percent). The principal fodder crops are corn, grasses, clover, and alfalfa. The principal industrial crop is sugar beets (81.9 percent in 1970). Sunflowers, medicinal plants, and tobacco are also grown. Animal husbandry consists primarily of dairy and beef cattle and pig farming. Poultry farming, beekeeping, and pond fishing are secondary.

Transportation. In 1983 there were 732 km of railroad in the oblast. The main trunk lines crossing it are the Kiev-Lviv and Kiev-Kamianets-Podilskiyi. There are 7,000 km of roads, of which 6,000 are paved. The main highways are Kiev-Lviv, Khmelnytskyi-Chernivtsi, and Vinnytsia-Rivne. There is a domestic airport near Khmelnytskyi.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Verkhovnyi, O. Khmel'nyts'ka oblast' (Heohrafichnyi narys) (Kiev 1960)

Istoriia mist i sil Ukraïns'koi RSR: Khmel'nyts'ka oblast' (Kiev 1971)

I. Myhul, R. Senkus

Khmelnytskyi Ukrainian Music and Drama Theater (Khmelnytskyi ukrainskyi muzychno-dramatychnyi teatr im. H.I. Petrovskoho). Founded in 1931 in Novocheerkassk as the North Caucasia Regional Ukrainian Drama Theater, it was transferred to Ukraine and in 1934 became the Vinnytsia Touring Workers' and Collective Farmers' Theater. In 1938 it was renamed the Kamianets-Podilskiyi Oblast Theater, and in 1954 it was transferred to Khmelnytskyi and assigned its current name. During the Second World War, the company toured the Far East and the northern fronts. For many years it operated under the tutelage of the Kiev Ukrainian Drama Theater, which lent it stage directors and actors such as H. Yura, K. Koshevsky, A. Buchma, and Yu. Shumsky. At first its repertoire consisted of Ukrainian classics, which in the 1940s were supplemented with Russian and Soviet plays and in the 1950s with the works of European dramatists including C. Goldoni, B. Brecht, F. García Lorca, and W. Shakespeare.

Khmil, Ivan [Xmil'], b 16 October 1923 in Stari Shepelychi, Kiev oblast. Historian. A graduate of Kiev University (1951), he was the chief editor of the AN USSR publishing house (1960-3) and a functionary at the UN Secretariat in New York (1965-71). Since 1971 he has worked at the AN USSR Institute of History. He is the author of monographs on the diplomatic activity of the Ukrainian SSR from 1917 to 1920 (1962) and anticommunism in the United States (1975).

Khmilevsky, Prokop [Xmilev's'kyj], b ca 1600 in the Mazowsze region, Poland, d 1664 in the Derman Monastery, Volhynia. Basilian monk and bishop of Pere-myshl. He studied in Braunsberg, Prussia. In 1639 he was rector of the ecclesiastic school in Volodymyr-Volynskyi and archimandrite of the Dubno Monastery. In 1651 he was appointed coadjutor of Peremyshl eparchy, and in the next year he succeeded A. *Krupetsky as bishop of Peremyshl, Sambir, and Sianik. At about the same time he became archimandrite of Derman Monastery and was given responsibility for administering Lutske eparchy. Khmilevsky was bitterly opposed by the Orthodox bishop of Peremyshl, A. *Vynnytsky, who refused to permit the spread of the Church Union into the eparchy. He was never allowed to occupy his see and remained in Volhynia until his death.

Khmilnyk

Khmilnyk [Xmil'nyk]. iv-8. City (1974 pop 20,000) and raion center in Vinnytsia oblast. First mentioned in 1362, when it came under Lithuanian rule; from 1434 to 1793, with interruptions, Khmilnyk belonged to the Polish Commonwealth. In 1448 it was granted the rights of Magdeburg law. Growing slowly because of repeated Tatar attacks, in 1534 it was fortified. Its inhabitants participated in the 1594-6 and 1637 Cossack rebellions against Poland, and from 1648 to 1667 it was part of the Hetman state. Under Turkish rule (1672-9) the town declined. Annexed by Russia in 1793, from 1797 to 1804 it was a county center in Podilia gubernia. In 1923 it became a raion center. Earlier the city's population consisted mostly of Jews (56 percent in 1926) and Ukrainians (41 percent). In 1959 only 2 percent of the population was Jewish; Ukrainians constituted 92 percent. Over 50,000 people annually visit the city's sanatoriums and health resorts, where radioactive mineral waters (discovered in 1934) and peat baths are used to treat various physical disorders.

Khmilnyk Chronicle (Khmilnytskyi litopys). A monument of Ukrainian historiography and literature dating from the middle of the 17th century. It is one of the so-called Cossack chronicles and was probably written in the town of Khmilnyk in Podilia. The anonymous author described events in Khmilnyk and Right-Bank Ukraine in the period 1636–50, including the Cossack uprisings of 1636–8 led by P. *Pavliuk and K. Skydan, the devastation of Podilia by Tatar and Turkish raids, and the first years of B. *Khmelnysky's rebellion: the battles at *Zhovti Vody, *Korsun, and *Pyliavtsy, the defeats of the Polish armies in Podilia, and the victories of M. Kryvonis at Nemyriv, Makhnivka, Zhyvotiv, Berdychiv, and Tulchyn. The chronicle also contains valuable information on everyday life in the 17th century, such as descriptions of agricultural practices and the availability and prices of various commodities in Khmilnyk. The Khmilnyk Chronicle was published with an introduction by O. Levysky in Letopis' Samovidtsa po novootkrytyim spiskam ... (The Samovydets Chronicle According to Recently Discovered Manuscripts ..., Kiev, 1878). It has also been researched by V. Ikonnikov.

Khmury, Vasyl [Xmuryj, Vasyl'] (real name: Butenko), b 1896 in Rashivka, Hadiache county, Poltava gubernia, d ? Journalist; art and theater critic. A graduate of the Sorochyntsi Teachers' Seminary, in the 1920s and 1930s he edited the journal Nove mystetstvo, worked in the Rukh co-operative publishing house in Kharkiv, and contributed articles on the theater, cinema, and art to the newspaper Visti VUTsKV and its weekly supplement Kul'tura i pobut, and to the journals Chervonyi shliakh and Sil's'kyi teatr. He wrote the text to A. Petrytsky's Teatral'ni stroi (Theater Costumes, 1929) and a number of books: Notatky pro teatr, kino i prostorove mystetstvo (Notes on the Theater, Cinema, and Spatial Art, 1930), Iosyp Hirniak (1931), and Mar'ian Krushel'nyts'kyi (1931). Khmury was arrested in 1937 and disappeared without trace.

Khodchenko, Pavlo [Xodchenko], b 15 January 1880 in Lukianivka, near Mykolaiv, d 11 January 1967 in Kiev. Writer. He is the author of the novels Na khutori (On the Khutir, 1929), Sorochyns'ka trahediia (The Sorochyntsi Tragedy, 1940–57), Stepova khvylia (The Steppe Wave, 1945), and Zrostannia (Growing up, 1956); several plays; and the memoirs Vyprovovuvannia zrilosti (Testing Maturity, 1958) and Dosvitni zahravny (The Twilight Glow, 1967).

Khodetsky, Starion [Xodec'kyj], b 21 February 1821 in Symferopil, Tavriia gubernia, d 10 February 1887 in Kiev. Biologist, forester, educator. A graduate of St Petersburg University (1842), he studied abroad and then gave public lectures on agriculture. From 1854 to 1878 he held the Chair of Agriculture and Forestry at Kiev University and edited (1863–73) Universitetskie izvestiia. He wrote a number of studies on farming in Russia and animal husbandry, and several farming manuals. He developed the first Russian nomenclature for wool (1847), and proposed a number of methods for steppe afforestation.

Khodoriv [Xodoriv]. iv-5. Town (1971 pop 10,200) in Zhydachiv raion, Lviv oblast, situated on the Luh River on the western fringes of Podilia. First mentioned in 1394 as the village of Khodoriv-stav or Khodorostav, in 1772 it came under Austrian rule. A railway link was established in 1866, and in the 1890s the town became an important railway junction. During the Ukrainian-Polish War of 1918–19 the supreme headquarters of the Ukrainian Galician Army was located there. Under Soviet rule it has been a raion center in now-defunct Drohobych oblast (1940–1, 1944–59) and in Lviv oblast (1959–63). The town's sugar refinery (est 1913) was one of the largest in interwar Poland.

Khodorovsky, Hryhorii [Xodorovs'kyj, Hryhorij] (real name: Moroz-Khodorovsky), b 2 December 1853 in Kokhnyvka, Zolotonosha county, Poltava gubernia, d 1 July 1927 in Sevastopol. Pianist, composer, and pedagogue. Having studied at the Leipzig (1865–9) and St Petersburg (1870–2) conservatories, he served under F. Liszt for one year as choirmaster in Weimar. Then he taught piano at the music school of the Russian Music Society in Kiev (1875–94), and in 1913 was appointed professor at the Kiev conservatory. After the 1917 Revolution he moved to Sevastopol, where he organized a people's conservatory. Khodorovsky composed piano music, including the Ukrainian Rhapsody, and under the pseudonym Konstantinov, arranged Ukrainian folk songs for piano. K. Kvitka and L. Revutsky were his students.

Khodorovych, Mykola [Xodorovyč], b 18 December 1857 in Kiev, d 1936 in Prague. General. After graduating from the Imperial General Staff Academy in St Petersburg, he served in various regions of the Russian Empire. During the Russo-Japanese War he was promoted to major general. He was chief of staff (July 1914–1915) and then commander-in-chief (1915–17) of the Kiev Military District. In this capacity he organized the Jan Hus legion out of Czech and Slovak prisoners of war. In late 1917 he was instrumental in the formation of the *Khmelnysky Regiment (Bohdanivtsi) of the UNR Army out of Ukrainians serving in the Russian army. After the First World War he was granted asylum by the Czechoslovak government and moved to Prague.

Khodyka, Fedir [Xodyka] (aka Kobyzevych), b ca 1550, d January 1625 in Kiev. Member of the city council of Kiev in 1592–1613, and Kiev magistrate in 1613–18 and 1621–5. Khodyka was a wealthy textile merchant and Polish sympathizer whose policies were highly repressive toward the Ukrainian Orthodox population. He supported the increase of Polish power in Ukraine by such measures as the building up of a Polish garrison in Kiev at the expense of the Ukrainian inhabitants. At the end of 1624, with the aid of the Uniate priest I. Yuzefovych and Catholicized administrators, he began to close down Kievan Orthodox churches and hand them over to the Uniates, although he did prevent the seizure of St Sophia Cathedral and the Vydubychi Monastery. In a significant show of solidarity the townspeople and a large contingent of Zaporozhian Cossacks under the leadership of A. Lazorenko and Ya. Chyhyrnets reopened the churches and drowned Khodyka and Yuzefovych in the Dnieper River.

Khoynatsky, Andrii [Xojnac'kyj, Andriij], 1836–88. Orthodox church leader, pedagogue, and church historian. A graduate of the Kiev Theological Academy, he taught at the Kremianets Theological Seminary and then became a lecturer in theology at the Nizhen Historical-Philological Institute. Khoynatsky specialized in the history of the church in Volhynia, especially the Pochaiv Monastery and the Church Union, and folk rites and beliefs. In addition to numerous journal articles, he wrote Zapadnorusskaia Tserkovnaia Uniiia v eia Bogosluzhenii i obriadakh (The Western Ruthenian Church Union in Its Liturgies and Rites, 1871) and Ocherki iz istorii Pravoslavnoi Tserkvy i drevnego blagochestii na Volyni (Outlines on the History of the Orthodox Church and Early Religiosity in Volhynia, 1878); a revised version of his Pochaevskaia Us-penskaia Lavra (The Pochaiv Dormition Monastery) appeared posthumously in 1897.

Khokhol [xoxol]. A derogatory Russian term for Ukrainians. Khokhol literally means a sheaf or tuft of cereal stalks and is derived from an old Slavic word. As a term used to describe Ukrainians, it may have originally referred to the customary tufts of hair worn by the Cossacks, called oseledtsi. Although it was primarily used by Russians to denigrate Ukrainians, at times, especially in the 19th century, it was used by Ukrainians as a term of self-identification. In these contexts, the term khokhol has appeared in Ukrainian literature, mainly in historical literary works by such writers as O. Dovzhenko ('Eh, you, khokhol. You would only joke') and Z. Tulub ('Our khokhly always wear moustaches'). In the 20th century the term began to be used by Ukrainians as a scornful epithet for Russified Ukrainians.

Kholm [Xolm] (Polish: Chełm). 11-4. The principal city (1977 pop 49,000) of the *Kholm region, situated on the steep bank of the Uherka River, a tributary of the Buh River; since 1975 the capital of Chełm voivodeship in Poland. The date of its origin is unknown. In 1237 Prince Danylo Romanovych of Volhynia built a castle there and reinforced the town with stone walls and with defensive towers in the neighboring villages of Bilavyne and Stovp. As a result Kholm withstood the Mongol invasion of 1240. At that time the trade route linking Rus' via Galicia with the Mediterranean lost its importance because of Constantinople's decline and the Mongols' control of the steppes and was supplanted by the route linking western Rus' via the Buh and Vistula with the Baltic ports and the realm of the Teutonic Knights. Because Kholm was located on the latter route, after also becoming the ruler of Galicia, Danylo made it his capital and the see of *Kholm eparchy.

As the capital of Galicia-Volhynia (until 1272) and then of an appanage principality, the town withstood another Mongol siege (1261) but suffered greatly during the Lithuanian-Polish-Hungarian wars for control of Galicia-Volhynia in the 14th century before being annexed by Poland in 1387. In 1392 the city obtained the rights of Magdeburg law, which were later supplemented with royal privileges. From 1484 it and the Kholm land were part of Rus' voivodeship. From the mid-15th century Kholm was an important trade center. Yet in 1612 it had only 2,200 inhabitants, 800 of whom were Jews. As an eparchial see and religious-educational center, it had some cultural influence. From the mid-17th century Kholm declined because of Poland's continual wars. In 1648 it was captured and briefly held by the Cossack army of Hetman B. Khmelnytsky. Later it was ravaged by Swedish and Muscovite troops, particularly during the Great Northern War (1700–21). In the late 18th century its population was only 2,500 (over 1,000 Jews, 1,000 Poles, and only 200 Uniate Ukrainians).

After the Third Partition of Poland the town belonged to Austria (1795–1807), the Grand Duchy of Warsaw (1807–12), the Congress Kingdom of Poland (1812–32), and Russia (1832–1917). It remained a small Polonized county capital and trade center with a predominantly Jewish population (in 1860, 2,480 of its 3,600 inhabitants were Jews). Its importance was as the see of a Uniate eparchy. In the second half of the 19th century, Russians, mostly civil servants, began settling in Kholm. In 1873 it had a population of 5,595, consisting of 263 Orthodox (Russians), 530 Uniates (Ukrainians), 1,294 Roman Catholics (Poles), and 1,503 Jews. By 1911 its population had grown to 21,425, consisting of 5,181 Orthodox (Ukrainians and Russians), 3,820 Roman Catholics (Poles), 12,100 Jews, and 315 Lutherans (Germans). With the abolition of the Uniate church and the influx of Russian Orthodox clergy, Russian influence grew, and Kholm became the center of Russification in the Kholm region, with several Russian secondary schools and a theological seminary. During the brief liberal period after the Revolution of 1905 the city's Ukrainian inhabitants were able to establish the Enlightenment Society of Kholm Rus' (which published the bilingual Ukrainian-Russian journal Brats'ka besida) and a *Prosvita society, but after *Kholm gubernia was formed in 1912, Russification pressures increased with the rise in the number of Russian functionaries in the city.

Kholm: Cathedral of the Nativity of the Virgin Mary

During the First World War almost all of Kholm's Ukrainians and Russians were evacuated east in 1915, before its capture by the Austrian army. Many Ukrainians returned in 1920–2, those who had been in the UNR with a developed national identity. Under interwar Polish rule (1921–39) the city was a minor center of Ukrainian life. The region's cultural-educational *Ridna Khata society was centered there. Published there were the pro-Soviet and Socialist weeklies Nashe zhyttia (1921–8), Selians'kyi shliakh (1937–8), and Nove zhyttia (1927–8), calendars, and other materials. In the late 1920s, however, these activities and publications were suppressed by the Polish authorities, as was Ukrainian church life (the city's Orthodox cathedral and cemetery were desecrated by the Poles and closed down as early as 1919).

After Germany invaded Poland in 1939, Kholm was part of the *Generalgouvernement and experienced a resurgence of Ukrainian activity to which refugees from Soviet-occupied Galicia made an important contribution. A Ukrainian Committee and Provisional Church Council were formed. Thanks to the efforts of the *Ukrainian Central Committee in Cracow the Orthodox cathedral was restored to the Ukrainians, and Kholm became the see of the new Kholm-Podlachia eparchy; its archbishop, I. *Ohiienko, established a small seminary there. A Ukrainian Relief Committee was also active there. Ukrainian schools (including a gymnasium, a technical school, and two trade schools), educational and artistic groups, a drama troupe, co-operatives, and various private businesses were allowed to function. This revival was cut short by the Soviet and Polish Communist occupation in July 1944. Many of Kholm's active Ukrainians fled west to Germany and emigrated after the war to the New World. The majority of those who stayed behind were forcibly resettled in 1946 by the Polish authorities in the former German territories of western Poland. Today only a small number of Ukrainians live in Kholm, where they have an Orthodox parish.

The city's most important architectural monument is the Cathedral of the Mother of God built by Prince Danylo in the mid-13th century on Castle Hill. Rebuilt after being destroyed by fire in 1256, at the end of the 16th century it became the residence of the Uniate bishop. It underwent major alterations in 1638–40 under Bishop M. Terletsky and was renovated in 1735–56 in the style of the late baroque. Minor alterations were made in 1874–8 after it became an Orthodox church. Its iconostasis, many icons, and several murals were destroyed by the Poles in 1919, after which it belonged to the Roman Catholic church. Further changes were made after the building was restored to the Orthodox church in 1940, and again after it was taken over once more by the Roman Catholic church in 1946. The miraculous medieval icon of the Theotokos has been preserved in the cathedral. Other architectural monuments in the city include the Orthodox Church of the Holy Spirit (1849), a Roman Catholic church in the late rococo style (1753–63) designed by P. Fontana, and the monastery of the Franciscan Reformaci (1736–40, rebuilt in the 19th century). The city's museum contains many masterpieces of church art.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Batiushkov, M. Kholmskaia Rus' (St Petersburg 1887)
 Czernicki, K. Chełm, przeszłość i pamiątki (Kholm 1936)
 Sichyns'kyi, V. Misto Kholm (Cracow 1941); repr in Nadbuzhanshchyna: Istorychno-memuarnyi zbirnyk, 1, ed M. Marty-niuk et al (New York-Paris-Sydney-Toronto 1986) Pasternak, Ie. Narys istorii Kholmshchyny i Pidliashshia (Novishi chasy) (Winnipeg-Toronto 1968)
 Zimmer, B. Miasto Chełm: Zarys historyczny (Warsaw-Cracow 1974)

V. Kubijovč

Kholm eparchy. An eparchy founded in the first half of the 13th century by prince Danylo Romanovych of Galicia-Volhynia in the *Kholm region and Podlachia. The see was in Uhrusk until ca 1240, when it was transferred to Kholm. Kholm eparchy was under the Kievan metropolitan except for a short period in the 14th century, when it was part of Halych metropol. From the mid-14th century it was known as Kholm and Belz eparchy. The eparchy's hierarchy joined the Church Union of *Berestia in 1596, although Orthodox forces continued to fight for control of the eparchy for several decades. The more renowned Uniate bishops were D. *Zbiruisky (1585–1603), who accepted the Church Union, M. *Terletsky (1630–49), who defended the Uniate church against Latinizing clergy, Ya. *Susha (1652–87), F. Volodkovych (1731–56), and M. Rylko (1759–84). During their tenures, Kholm eparchy had a theological seminary, a school for training deacons, and three monasteries (in Kholm, Yablohyn, and Turkovychi).

Kholm eparchy was divided in the First Polish Partition of Poland in 1772: the north, including Kholm, remained under Poland while the south was annexed by Austria. The entire eparchy became part of the Grand Duchy of Warsaw in 1809, and part of the Russian-ruled Polish Kingdom in 1815. Its location within the semi-autonomous kingdom allowed it to remain a Uniate eparchy throughout the first half of the 19th century when Tsar Nicholas I was destroying the Uniate Church in Russia and forcing its followers to convert to Orthodoxy. In 1807 it was again placed under the jurisdiction of Halych metropol, and in 1830 it was directly subordinated to the Vatican.

From its inception, Kholm eparchy was faced with strong Latinizing and Polonizing pressures, because of its proximity to Poland. A Roman Catholic diocese of Kholm existed from the 19th century and it attracted many followers from among Polonized Ukrainians. Under Bishop F. Tsikhanovsky (1810–28), the number of Uniate parishes fell from 317 to 278. In the mid-19th century, the Russian authorities again began pressuring the bishops to return to Orthodoxy. When Bishop I. Kaminsky resisted, he was dismissed and the Russophile Y. Voitsitsky (1866–8) was appointed administrator of the eparchy. He maintained a pro-Russian policy and recruited Russophile priests from Galicia for the eparchy. When the Vatican refused to recognize Voitsitsky as bishop, the tsarist authorities agreed to the appointment of a new bishop, M. Kuzemsky (1868–71), a canon from Lviv. He attempted to stop the Latinization but at the same time remained loyal to Rome. In 1875 the authorities appointed M. Popel, a supporter of Orthodoxy from Galicia, administrator of the eparchy. On 18 February 1875, on behalf of the Kholm clergy and consistory, Popel formally requested the admission of 120 parishes into the Orthodox church. As a result of widespread opposition to this move in the eparchy, 74 priests were deported to Siberia, 60 priests were expelled to Galicia, scores of faithful were killed, and some 600 were also deported to Siberia.

After the abolition of the Church Union, Kholm eparchy was incorporated within the Warsaw Orthodox eparchy, which was renamed Kholm and Warsaw eparchy, and Popel became the vicar-general of Kholm. In 1902 E. *Georgievsky became bishop of Kholm, and in 1905 Kholm eparchy again became a separate entity, headed by Georgievsky. The great resentment on the part of the clergy and faithful to the forced conversion to Orthodoxy is evidenced by the mass conversions to Roman Catholicism in the eparchy after the granting of some religious freedom by the authorities in 1905.

After the First World War, Kholm eparchy was incorporated into Warsaw eparchy, headed by D. *Valedynsky. Although the cathedral in Kholm was given to the Roman Catholic church by the Polish authorities in 1919 and Russians controlled the Orthodox church in Poland, the Kholm region became a major center of Ukrainian Orthodoxy, and many religious publications were issued in Ukrainian there. Under the German occupation during the Second World War, Kholm cathedral was returned to Orthodox Ukrainians and Kholm eparchy, officially called Kholm and Podlachia eparchy, was re-established (with I. Ohienko as bishop) and Ukrainianized. In 1943 it was raised to the status of a metropol; at that time it had 91 parishes. Kholm eparchy was finally abolished when it became part of Poland after the Second World War.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Pelesz, J. Geschichte der Union der Ruthenischen Kirche mit Rom, 1 (Vienna 1878)
- Likowski, E. Dzieje Kościoła Unickiego na Litwie i Rusi w XVIII-XIX wieku, 2nd edn (Warsaw 1906)
- Sonevyts'kyi, L. 'Ukrains'kyi iepyskopat Peremys'koi i Kholms'koi eparkhii v xv-xvi st.,' ZchVV, 1 (1955), no. 6; repr in L. Sonevyts'kyi, Studii z istorii Ukrainy (Paris-New York-Sydney-Toronto 1982)
- Vlasovs'kyi, I. Narys istorii Ukrain'skoi Pravoslavnoi Tserkvy, 3 (Bound Brook, NJ 1957)
- Glinka, L. 'Diocesis Ucraino-Cattolica di Cholm,' AOBM 1 (1975), no. 34

W. Lencyk

Kholm Gospel. A 167-sheet gospel written in the late 13th century, probably in Kholm. Its Church Slavonic language is distinguished by Ukrainian phonetic features. An excerpt from the work appeared in A. Sobolevsky's Ocherki iz istorii russkogo iazyka (Outlines on the History of the Russian Language, 1884). The gospel is preserved in the Lenin Library in Moscow.

Kholm gubernia. An administrative-territorial unit in the Russian Empire, created in 1912 out of the eastern borderlands of Lublin and Siedlce gubernias of the Congress Kingdom of Poland. The capital was Kholm. The gubernia's territory (10,456 sq km) was divided among six counties: Kholm, Biela Podlaska, Volodava, Hrubeshiv, Tomaszów, and Konstantyniv. Its population (841,800 in 1914) consisted of Ukrainians (53.2 percent), Poles (23.9 percent), Jews (15.4 percent), Russians (3.7 percent), and Germans (3.7 percent). During the First World War it was under martial law. From 1918 to 1920 its territory was part of the UNR. In 1921 it was ceded by Soviet Russia to Poland. (See *Kholm region.)

Kholm region (Kholmshchyna). A historical-geographical land west of the Buh River, bordering on the Polish Lublin region in the west, Volhynia in the east, Podlachia in the north, and Galicia in the south. The boundary between Siedlce and Lublin gubernias of the Russian Empire can be taken as the boundary between the Kholm region (Kholm, Hrubeshiv, Krasnostaw, Tomaszów, Za-

KHOLM REGION

1. Western boundary of Rus' (10th-14th centuries)
2. Kholm land in the late 14th-15th centuries
3. Borders of the territory of the Cherven towns in the 10th-12th centuries
4. Cherven principality in 1210
5. Border of the UNR according to the 1918 Peace Treaty of Brest-Litovsk
6. Present Polish-Ukrainian border
7. Capital of the Kholm land
8. Capital of Cherven principality
9. Capitals of principalities and lands
10. Other settlements

mość, and Biłgoraj counties) and Podlachia (Biela Podlaska, Volodava, Konstantyniv, and Radzyń Podlaski counties). In the interwar period the Kholm region within Lublin voivodeship had an area of 7,270 sq km. The name of the region, which has also been called Kholm Rus', the Transbuh region (Zabuzhia), and Transbuh Rus', has often been extended to include *Podlachia, because the latter was part of *Kholm eparchy and (from 1912 to 1917) *Kholm gubernia; except for northern Podlachia, which was part of Bielsk Podlaski county in Hrodna gubernia, the two regions have shared a common history since 1795.

Because it was a borderland, the Kholm region did not develop strong ties with the rest of Ukraine's territories, and until the 20th century its Ukrainian population had a relatively weak sense of national identity. The reign of Prince *Danylo Romanovych of Galicia-Volhynia was the exception: being on the periphery of the Mongol invasion, the region enjoyed relative peace and prosperity, and Danylo made *Kholm, its major city, his capital. Its proximity to Poland, however, made the region susceptible to Polish influences and facilitated its Polonization, beginning in the 14th century. Thereafter the history of both the Kholm region and Podlachia unfolded in a manner that was unique for Ukraine's lands, particularly in the religious sphere. Since 1921 they have belonged to Poland; since 1975 they have constituted most of Chełm, Zamość, and Biała Podlaska voivodeships and the southern part of Białystok voivodeship. After the Second World War most of the Ukrainian population was forcibly resettled by the Polish authorities, and few Ukrainians live there today.

Physical geography. Most of the Kholm region lies in the western part of the *Volhynia-Kholm Upland. Its gently undulating plain has an average altitude of 200–250 m and is built on a chalk foundation overlain with Tertiary strata, loess, and fertile soils (chernozems around Hrubeshiv). The region's small northern and northeastern parts lie in the medium-fertile Podlachia Lowland into which the descent (20–40 m) from the upland forms a distinct step. The southwest lies in the less fertile *Sian Lowland. The rivers are part of the large Vistula Basin; they include the Buh with its tributaries the Uherka and Huchva, the Wieprz with the Bystrzyca, and the Sian's tributary, the Tanew.

The region's climate is transitional between continental and oceanic. Winters are mild: in Kholm the median January temperature is  $-4.4^{\circ}\text{C}$ . Summers are temperate: in Kholm the median July temperature is  $18.5^{\circ}\text{C}$ . The average annual temperature is  $7.4^{\circ}\text{C}$ . In neighboring Lublin there are 137 clear days per year and the annual precipitation is 546 mm, mainly in summer (250 mm). Almost all of the region belongs to the central-European mixed-forest zone. The eastern limit of the beech, fir, larch, and hornbeam and northwestern limit of the spruce run through it and Podlachia. At one time large forests covered the southwest. The region's soils are of the sandy (20 percent), loess (20 percent), chernozem (10 percent), loam (12 percent), peat-and-bog (16 percent), and pine-forest (15 percent) variety.

History

To 1815. The Kholm region has been inhabited since the Upper Paleolithic period. In the early medieval period it was settled by the East Slavic *Dulibians. From the second half of the 10th century it was ruled by the Volhynian princes of Kievan Rus' (see *Cherven towns), and from the 13th century to 1340, by the Principality of Galicia-Volhynia. Its southern part constituted the historical *Belz land. In the 14th century territorial wars for control of the region raged. It was held by Lithuania (1340–77) and Hungary (1377–87) before Poland consolidated its four-century rule there. In the 15th century almost all of the region was part of the Kholm land, which was divided into Kholm and Krasnystaw counties; it was governed from Kholm by a castellan appointed by the palatine of Rus' voivodeship in Lviv. In 1648, during the Cossack-Polish War, the army of Hetman B. Khmelnytsky captured Kholm and Zamostia (Zamość) and briefly held the Kholm region and Podlachia. In the 1650s and in 1704–10 Polish-Swedish battles took place there.

Under Polish rule the region's upper social strata succumbed to Polonization, which was bolstered by the influx of Polish colonists there and, in even greater numbers, in Podlachia. The Uniate church played a leading role in the region's cultural and educational life, beginning in the 17th century. The Kholm Uniate brotherhood and Basilian monks ran church schools; Bishop M. Terletsy founded a Uniate gymnasium in Kholm in 1639; and Bishop M. Ryllo founded a Uniate seminary there in 1760. After the Third Partition of Poland in 1795, the region and Podlachia were annexed by Austria. From 1809 to 1814 they were part of the Grand Napoleonic Duchy of Warsaw; from 1815 to 1832, the Congress Kingdom of Poland; and from 1832 to 1917, the Russian Empire.

1815–1914. As part of the Congress Kingdom, the Kholm region and Podlachia were governed by Poles, and linguistic and religious Polonization increased. The Greek Catholic (Uniate) church was the only bulwark against complete assimilation. The region's nobles and magnates of Ukrainian descent had long been Polonized, however, and only the Ukrainian peasants remained loyal to the Uniate church and its clergy. Consequently even the Uniate church was unable to withstand the pressures of Romanization, and its clergy modified its structure by introducing chapters (see *Canon), corrupted its ritual with such Roman trappings as organ music and monstrances, had iconostases removed, and delivered sermons in Polish. Thus the Uniate church in the Kholm region came to resemble the Roman Catholic church more than it did its counterpart in Galicia. Unlike the Galician clergy, few priests in the Kholm region and Podlachia had a higher education. Some spoke only Polish and did not know Church Slavonic, and they and their families regarded themselves as Poles. The failure of the Polish Insurrection of 1830 did not diminish Polish influence in the Kholm region and Podlachia, for the laws, official language, and administration in Russian-ruled Poland remained Polish. In 1839 the Uniate church was outlawed in the Russian Empire except in the Kholm region and Podlachia; there it continued to be tolerated but was closely supervised by the Russian viceroy in Warsaw, who influenced the nomination of bishops. At the same time, the church was able to retain some measure of Ukrainianness because of the presence of Galician-born priests there and because the metropolitan of Halych still had some say in the election of its bishops, even after Kholm eparchy was subordinated directly to the Vatican in 1830. The position of the church deteriorated after the defeat of the Polish Insurrection of 1863–4, which some local Uniate clergy supported and many priests' sons joined. The tsarist regime in Poland became more repressive, replaced Polish with Russian as the language of government and education, and brought many Russian bureaucrats and colonists into the region. To counteract Polish influence, in 1875 it abolished the Uniate church there, incorporating its 120 parishes into the new Kholm-Warsaw Orthodox eparchy. Around 100,000 of the Uniate faithful, particularly in Podlachia, refused to become Orthodox, and the tsarist authorities resorted to police and military violence, mass arrests, exile to Siberia, and even killing to suppress religious opposition. Only 59 of 214 Uniate clergy embraced the Orthodox faith; 74 others were exiled, and 66 were expelled to Galicia. At the same time, some Greek Catholic clergy from Galicia voluntarily converted and became Orthodox parish priests in the region, and many teachers from central Ukraine moved there and disseminated Ukrainian populist ideas among the peasantry.

Religious and ethnic relations in the region changed during the Russian Revolution of 1905, when Tsar Nicholas II issued an ukase on religious tolerance. Because the Uniate church was still outlawed, 170,000 of 450,000 'Orthodox' converted to Roman Catholicism by 1908; many peasants were blackmailed and coerced by Polish landowners to do so. This conversion resulted in another upsurge of Polonization, particularly among the younger people. As a result the region's population was split into three groups: the nationally conscious Ukrainian-speaking Orthodox, the ethnic Polish Roman Catholics, and the Ukrainian-speaking converts, who by and large lacked a clear sense of national identity and were contemptuously called *'Kalakuty' or 'Pereketsi' (turncoats) by the first group.

Alarmed by the conversions, the Russian Holy Synod created a separate Orthodox eparchy under Bishop E. Georgievsky. To counteract Catholicism and Polonization, Georgievsky allowed the use of certain local liturgical customs and sermons in Ukrainian. At the turn of the 20th century the state of education in the Kholm region was better than in the central and eastern regions of Ukraine. A relatively dense network of elementary schools was in place and teachers were trained at pedagogical seminaries in Kholm and Biała Podlaska and the Kholm Theological Seminary. After the Revolution of 1905 the Ukrainian national movement found adherents among many of these teachers. From 1905 O. Spolitalak and O. Losky published several popular booklets and one issue of the confiscated newspaper Buh in Hrubeshiv. The Popular Enlightenment Society of Kholm Rus' published books, the Russian and Ukrainian weekly Bratska besida (ed M. Kobryn), and the popular Kholmskii narodnyi kalendar. The Kholm Orthodox Brotherhood (est 1885) published the daily Kholmskaia Rus' (1912-17).

To undermine Polish influence, local Orthodox circles (particularly the Kholm Brotherhood) proposed that the Kholm region become a separate gubernia. After many public hearings, written submissions, and debates in the Russian State Duma, where the gubernial project was opposed not only by the Polish caucus but also by the deputies of other national minorities (except the Ukrainians), the Kadets, and the socialists, the bill creating Kholm gubernia was passed and enacted by the tsar on 23 June 1912. The gubernia was formed out of the Ukrainian-populated parts of Lublin and Siedlce gubernias; its borders were delineated on the basis of V. Frantsev's ethnographic maps. It was placed under the direct jurisdiction of the Ministry of Internal Affairs in St Petersburg, but its school system came under the supervision of the Kiev school superintendent. The outbreak of the First World War prevented the law from being fully implemented.

1915-19. In August 1915 the Kholm region and Podlachia became a theater of war. Having already deported all German colonists into the Russian hinterland, before its retreat the Russian army conducted a mass evacuation of the region's population. Fearful of Polish persecution if they remained, almost all Russians and Ukrainians left voluntarily. Only the Poles and practically all the Kalakuty stayed behind. During its retreat the Russian army burned down almost all the Ukrainian villages. After the retreat only 25,000 Ukrainians remained - 15,000 in the Kholm region and 10,000 in Podlachia.

Under the Austrian occupation, Ukrainian cultural and educational activity in the Kholm region was ruled out because of the small Ukrainian population and because the Austrian authorities, who were influenced by the Poles, forbade it. In Podlachia, however, which was occupied by the Germans, the *Union for the Liberation of Ukraine was allowed to open Ukrainian schools in early 1917, and the Ukrainian Hromada in Biała Podlaska was allowed to publish the newspaper Ridne slovo (1917-19).

The 300,000 evacuees from the Kholm region and Podlachia suffered severe hardships during their chaotic evacuation to the east. Most of them lost their belongings on the way, and many succumbed to disease. Eventually the tsarist authorities set up relief committees to help them resettle in the Volga region or in Central Asia. Most worked as farm laborers; because of their agrarian skills, they managed to live reasonably well. Being displaced among Russians made the refugees aware that they were not Russian. The Revolution of 1917 and the creation of the *Central Rada in Kiev had an even greater impact on their national consciousness. In spring 1917 they held a number of local congresses in various places of the empire and chose 276 delegates to the All-People's Congress of the Kholm Region. Held in Kiev on 7-12 September 1917, the congress resolved that the people of the Kholm region were Ukrainian and should be part of Ukraine and elected a Kholm Gubernia Executive Committee whose members - O. Vasylenko, Rev A. Mateiuk, T. Olesiuk, A. Duda, S. Liubarsky, K. Dmytriuk, and M. Shketyu - automatically became delegates to the Central Rada.

On 27 November 1917 the Central Rada adopted the resolution proposed by the Kholm delegates that the Kholm region and Podlachia were an integral part of the UNR and placed all the evacuees and their institutions under the protection of the *General Secretariat, which was to establish political and administrative order in these regions. The Peace Treaty of *Brest-Litovsk, signed by the UNR and the Central Powers on 9 February 1918, recognized the Kholm region and Podlachia region, defined roughly by the borders of Kholm gubernia, as part of the UNR. This recognition provoked widespread Polish protest even in the Austrian Parliament. Ukrainian commissioners (O. Skoropys-Yoltykhovskiy, K. Dmytriuk) were sent to establish order in the regions, and the evacuees slowly began returning home. There they met with concerted Polish opposition, tacitly supported by the Austrian authorities.

After the Central Powers capitulated, German troops were evacuated in December 1918, and in February 1919 Polish units occupied the Kholm region and Podlachia. Skoropys-Yoltukhovskiy and many Ukrainian teachers and leaders were imprisoned. Of the 389 Orthodox churches there in 1914, 149 were transferred to the Polish Catholic church; 111 were desecrated, looted, and closed down; and 79 were destroyed during the war or after by the Polish authorities.

1920-39. During the Polish-Soviet War of 1920 the Kholm region and Podlachia were briefly occupied by Soviet troops in August. Polish rule of these regions was affirmed by the Polish-Soviet Peace Treaty of *Riga. By 1922 many Ukrainian evacuees had returned to their devastated villages, even though the Polish authorities had made it difficult for them, particularly the Ukrainian intelligentsia, to do so. Because of Polish enmity, many remained in the USSR. Altogether, the number of Ukrainians in the region was about 120,000, or a third less than it had been in 1914.

In the interwar period no other Ukrainian territory under Polish rule was subjected to as much official Polonizing pressure as were the Kholm region and Podlachia within Lublin voivodeship. The schools were exclusively Polish, many of the prewar Ukrainian Orthodox churches were given to the Polish Catholic church, the land was distributed to the many Polish colonists who were brought in, and concerted efforts were made to convert the Orthodox to the newly fabricated 'Roman Catholic church of the Eastern Rite.' Yet the Ukrainians managed to set up their own community institutions, including the cultural-educational *Ridna Khata society with 125 branches, co-operatives (which came under the Audit Union of Ukrainian Co-operatives in Lviv), the newspaper Nashe zhyttia, and prayer houses to replace the churches that were not allowed to reopen by the authorities. They demonstrated their political unity in the 1922 Polish elections and, despite gerrymandering, managed to elect P. Vasynchuk, Y. Skrypa, S. Liubarsky, S. Makivka, A. Vasynchuk, and Ya. Voitiuk to the Sejm and I. Pasternak to the Senate. From 1926 the Polish regime became more authoritarian and repressive. It closed down the Ridna Khata society in 1930, prohibited Ukrainian theater and press, cut off the co-operative movement's links with Lviv, and instituted police surveillance and persecution of activists, many of them members of the Communist Party of Western Ukraine or the Ukrainian National Democratic Alliance. Democratic Sejm elections were rendered impossible, and in 1928 only one Ukrainian was elected. Hundreds of citizens were imprisoned, many of them on trumped-up charges of being subversive communists. The only Ukrainian institution that was not outlawed was the Orthodox church, but even it was forced to use Polish as the official language of publication, religious instruction, and sermons. Its clergy was closely watched by the police, and many nationally conscious priests were relieved of their duties and not allowed to minister to their flocks. In late 1937 the Polish authorities began a mass demolition of Orthodox churches as 'superfluous entities'; by 1938, of 389 Orthodox churches in the Kholm region and Podlachia in 1914, 149 had become Roman Catholic churches and 189 had been wantonly destroyed by the Polish authorities (112 in 1938 alone). In the late 1930s the authorities tacitly condoned another means of repression against the Ukrainians: armed Polish gangs ('krakusy') that attacked Ukrainian homes and destroyed property.

1939-44. Two weeks after Germany invaded Poland in September 1939, German troops had occupied all of the Kholm region and Podlachia, which became part of the Lublin district of the occupied *Generalgouvernement of Poland. The Germans tolerated Ukrainian cultural activity, and in the larger Ukrainian communities various civic organizations sprang up within the first few weeks of the occupation. They organized refugee relief, defended the interests of the Ukrainian population before the authorities, established a network of Ukrainian schools, revived the branches of the Ridna Khata society and Ukrainian co-operatives, and took back many Orthodox churches that had been Romanized by the Poles. Local Ukrainians were assisted in this work by about 1,500 to 2,000 refugees from the Soviet-occupied Western Ukrainian territories and liberated political prisoners from Polish prisons and concentration camps, living in Lublin and other cities, where they worked as clerks in the German administration, agents of co-operatives, teachers, and community leaders. From 1940 a sizable number of refugee clergymen from Bukovyna performed pastoral functions in the region's Orthodox church. At the same time the German authorities resettled all indigenous Germans in western Poland and replaced them with Poles deported from there, thus increasing the local Polish population. In addition according to a German-Soviet repatriation agreement, about 5,000 indigenous Ukrainians were allowed to emigrate to Soviet Ukraine in 1940.

Soon after the occupation began, Ukrainian committees were created in Biłgoraj, Ternohorod, Tomaszów, Zamość, Hrubeshiv, Kholm, Lublin, Volodava, Krasnystaw, and Biała Podlaska. A Central Kholm Committee was established in Kholm to oversee all Ukrainian activity, but in practice it limited itself to that of Kholm and Volodava counties. The most influential local leaders were A. Pavliuk (chairman of the Central Kholm Committee), S. Liubarsky, V. Kosonotsky, V. Ostrovsky, O. Rochniak in Zamość, I. Pasternak in Biała Podlaska, and T. Olesiuk in Volodava. By November 1940 all the Ukrainian committees recognized the authority of an umbrella committee in Cracow headed by V. Kubijovyč which from June was called the *Ukrainian Central Committee (ucc), and the local committees became known as Ukrainian relief committees.

During the German occupation, the Ukrainian church underwent a revival. On 5 November 1939 a Provisional Orthodox Church Council already existed in Kholm, and soon a separate administration of the Orthodox church, led by Rev I. Levchuk and with Rev M. Maliuzhynsky as vicar general, was functioning. By the beginning of 1940 the number of Orthodox parishes had increased from 51 to 91. The restoration of the Kholm Cathedral to the Orthodox church on 19 May 1940 symbolized an end to Polish religious domination in the region. Representations by the ucc on behalf of the church before the German authorities led to the official sanctioning of the restored Ukrainian Autocephalous Orthodox church and the restoration of Kholm eparchy (as the Kholm-Podlachia eparchy) and the consecration of Prof I. Ohiienko as archbishop of Kholm.

For the first time in the Kholm region and Podlachia, Ukrainian became the language of instruction in a network of elementary schools, the secondary technical and trade schools in Kholm, and the commercial schools in Volodava, Biała Podlaska, and Hrubeshiv. A Ukrainian gymnasium (with as many as 625 students) in Kholm and student residences in Kholm, Biała Podlaska, and Volodava were opened. Correspondence courses were organized by *Ukrainian educational societies allowed by Germans. Local co-operatives were subordinated to county unions and an audit union in Lublin. Public Ukrainian activity was co-ordinated locally by the Ukrainian relief committees. A significant number of Ukrainians lived and worked in Lublin; there V. Tymtsiurak and, from 1941, L. Holeiko represented the ucc before the district governor. B. Hlibovytsky and Ye. Pasternak in Biała Podlaska, M. Strutynsky in Hrubeshiv, and R. Perfetsky in Zamość were noted local Ukrainian relief committee leaders. Thus Ukrainian national life flourished in the region as it never had before. Problems arose, however, with the Kalakuty, most of whom were indifferent to the Ukrainian organizational efforts.

After most of the Galician refugees returned to Galicia when it was occupied by the Germans in the summer of 1941, Ukrainian activity in the Kholm region and Podlachia began declining. In 1942 the anti-German Polish nationalist underground, later known as the *Polish Home

Army, also began a campaign of terror against the Ukrainians, burning down their villages and murdering the inhabitants. In Hrubeshiv county, the Ukrainians responded by organizing Samooborona (self-defense) units that had links with the UPA. In 1943 the chairman of the Hrubeshiv relief committee, M. Strutynsky, the former senator I. *Pasternak, the Samooborona commanders Ya. Halchevsky-Voinarovsky and Yu. Lukashchuk, and other Ukrainian leaders were assassinated by the Polish underground. In 1943 the Germans began forcibly deporting the inhabitants of many Polish and Ukrainian villages in Zamość and Tomaszów counties with the aim of resettling Germans there and undermining the popular base of the undergrounds. This led to an upsurge in Polish underground activity and further German reprisals, which inflicted heavy losses on the Ukrainian peasants. In the summer of 1943 Soviet partisans also appeared in the Kholm region and Podlachia. In 1944, as the Soviet army advanced into the regions, Polish communist partisans became active there.

1944 to the present. In July 1944 the entire Kholm region and Podlachia were occupied by Soviet troops, and Kholm became the provisional capital of the Communist Polish People's Republic. In September 1944 a temporary Soviet-Polish border, following roughly the former *Curzon Line along the Buh River, was agreed upon. The border was settled in August 1945, and the Kholm region and Podlachia remained part of Poland as the eastern part of Lublin voivodeship.

On 3 September 1944 the Polish-Soviet authorities had signed an agreement in Lublin on the voluntary resettlement of Ukrainians living in Poland to Ukraine and of Poles living in Soviet Ukraine to Poland. The population transfer began in October 1944. By August 1946, 193,500 Ukrainians from the Kholm region and Podlachia had been resettled in Ukraine. Both the Polish Home Army and the UPA opposed the postwar regime and tried to sabotage the resettlement operation; in 1945 they even co-operated by restricting their operations to mutually agreed spheres of interest. Soviet and Polish government forces ensured the success of the resettlement operation, however, and only a small Ukrainian population – 25,000 to 40,000 – remained when it ended, in the southeastern part of Hrubeshiv county and in a thin strip along the Buh River in Biała Podlaska and Volodava counties.

In 1947 almost all of the remaining Ukrainians were forcibly resettled in the western and northern territories annexed by Poland after the war. Between 1953 and 1966 about 12,000 managed to return to their ancestral lands. Today they number about 20,000 and are concentrated in a strip along the Buh River, mostly in Podlachia. Although they belong to the *Polish Autocephalous Orthodox church, they lack many of the limited rights that are enjoyed by Ukrainians in other parts of postwar Poland; the Ukrainian language is not taught in any school, branches of the *Ukrainian Social and Cultural Society cannot be organized there, and persecution and discrimination have caused most Ukrainians to hide their ethnic identity and even to assimilate. The Ukrainian population in northern Podlachia is somewhat better off; most of it was not resettled, but it is officially considered to be Belorussian and is served by Belorussian schools and associations.

Population. In the second half of the 16th century, the Kholm land had 20 towns and 401 villages with a population of approximately 67,000. In 1867 the Ukrainian population was 217,300, of whom only 2,000 were Orthodox. In 1900 the population consisted of 463,902 Ukrainians and Belorussians (51.8 percent), 268,053 Poles (29.9 percent), 135,239 Jews (15.1 percent), and 29,123 others (3.2 percent). In 1939 the total population was 720,000, comprising 220,000 Ukrainians and 160,000 Kalakuty (together 52.8 percent), 260,000 Poles, 70,000 Jews, and 13,000 Germans. The most densely populated areas were the fertile chernozem parts of Hrubeshiv and Tomaszów counties, while the least populated was the sandy-soil area of Biłgoraj county. In 1931 only 18 percent of the population was urban; the largest towns were Kholm (1931 pop 38,600), Zamość (24,700), Hrubeshiv (12,600), Tomaszów (9,600), and outside Ukrainian ethnic territory, Krasnystaw (14,600) and Biłgoraj (13,800).

As a result of assimilation, the proportion of Ukrainian population in the Kholm region dropped over the years, though not as much as it did in Podlachia. Tables 1 and 2 show this decline in terms of religious affiliation. It must be pointed out, however, that many of those who were classified as Roman Catholics were of Ukrainian

TABLE 1
Orthodox inhabitants in Kholm region

County	Year	Orthodox pop
		In 1000s	In %
Biłgoraj	1905	34.0	28.6
	1908	28.8	21.7
	1921	15.6	16.4
	1931	21.1	18.0
Hrubeshiv	1905	73.6	57.0
	1908	60.1	41.9
	1921	38.5	37.0
	1931	47.8	37.8
Zamość	1905	17.4	12.9
	1908	11.2	8.3
	1921	5.5	4.3
	1931	7.0	4.7
Krasnystaw (in part)	1905	10.1	26.0
	1908	6.4	17.0
	1921	4.0	11.6
	1931	4.3	11.0
Tomaszów	1905	50.6	43.6
	1908	42.1	33.8
	1921	23.3	23.8
	1931	32.5	26.8
Kholm	1905	60.2	44.4
	1908	48.1	27.4
	1921	25.1	20.6
	1931	36.8	22.6

TABLE 2
Changes in the Kholm region's religious populations

Year	Orthodox		Roman Catholics
	In 1000s	In %	In 1000s	In %
1905	245.9	37.0	296.2	33.4
1908	196.7	26.2	421.7	56.1
1921	113.6	19.7	384.2	57.8
1931	149.5	20.9	487.3	68.1

origin. The Kholm region was a mixed Ukrainian-Polish ethnic territory. The Ukrainians were in a majority only in a narrow strip along the Buh River, particularly in Hrubeshiv county, but they were in a minority in every other county.

In 1931 the unreliable Polish census listed a population of 2,464,900 in Lublin voivodeship, of which Ukrainians made up 8.6 percent (212,000). Jews made up 12.8 percent (315,500), of whom about 70,000 lived in the Kholm region. Most of them lived in urban centers (up to the 20th century two-thirds of the region's urban population was Jewish). Most of them perished in the Nazi Holocaust. In 1931 there were only 13,000 Germans in Kholm county and the adjacent part of Volodava county. In 1914 there had been 31,500, most of whom had arrived after 1883 and settled on land as agricultural colonists. In 1915 all the Germans were deported by the Russian army, mostly to Siberia; only some of them were repatriated in 1920. In fall 1939 the German occupation authorities resettled them in the Third Reich. Thus, after the forced resettlement of Ukrainians in 1947, the Kholm region became an essentially Polish ethnic territory.

Economy. Throughout its history the Kholm region has been an agricultural land. Until 1939 about 80 percent of the population, including virtually all the Ukrainians, depended on subsistence farming for their livelihood. Large forests remained only in Bilgoraj county and the Roztochia Hills in the south. Arable land constituted 70 percent of the region's area; 51 percent of it was cultivated, 1.5 percent was orchards and gardens, 18 percent was meadows and hayfields, 24 percent was still forested, and 5.5 percent was wasteland. The principal crops grown were rye (30 percent of the seeded area), wheat (18 percent), potatoes (16 percent), oats (15 percent), fodder crops (11 percent), barley (8 percent), and industrial crops (mostly sugar beets, 2 percent). Dairy farming and hog raising were the only agricultural branches that generated large surpluses.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Bańkowski, E. Ruś Chełmska od czasu rozbioru Polski (Lviv 1887)
 Batiushkov, P. Kholmkaia Rus' (St Petersburg 1887)
 Kolberg, O. Chełmskie: Obraz etnograficzny, 2 vols (Cracow 1890-1; repr: Wrocław-Poznań 1964)
 Ploshchanskii, I. Proshloe Kholmkoii Rusi (Vilnius 1899)
 Frantsev, V. Karty russkogo i pravoslavnogo naseleniia Kholmkoii Rusi (Warsaw 1909)
 Dymcha, L. de. La question de Chelm (Paris 1911)
 Wierciński, H. Jeszcze z powodu wydzielenia Chełmszczyzny (Cracow 1913)
 – Ziemia Chełmska i Podlasie (Warsaw 1916)
 Korduba, M. Istoriia Kholmshchynny i Pidliahshhia (Cracow 1941)
 Pasternak, Ie. Narys istorii Kholmshchynny i Pidliahshhia (novishii chasy) (Winnipeg-Toronto 1968)
 Kubiiovych, V. Ukraïntsi v Heneral'niï Hubernii, 1939–1941 (Chicago 1975)
 Nahaievs'kyi, I. 'Prychynky do istorii Kholm's'koï zemli,' Bohoslovia 39 (1975)

V. Kubijovych

Kholm'sky, Ivan. See Krypiakievych, Ivan.

Kholodny, Hryhorii [Xolodnyj, Hryhorij], b 3 March 1886 in Tambov, Russia, d 1938. A mathematician and astronomer by training, Kholodny devoted himself to the development of Ukrainian scientific terminology. In 1918 he published a dictionary of Ukrainian physics terms.

As secretary and then director of the VUAN *Institute of the Ukrainian Scientific Language and chief editor of its journal Visnyk IUNM (1928–30), he played an important role in defining the principles underlying the institute's work: a reliance on the popular language, especially in the formation of neologisms, and the extensive use of the results of terminological work in Galicia. Kholodny was arrested in 1929 during the *Union for the Liberation of Ukraine trials and charged with 'nationalist wrecking.' He survived many years in exile before he was reportedly executed.

Mykola Kholodny

Petro Kholodny Sr

Kholodny, Mykola [Xolodnyj], b 22 June 1882 in Tambov, Russia, d 4 May 1953 in Kiev. Plant physiologist, microbiologist; from 1929 full member of the AN URSR. After graduating from Kiev University in 1906, he taught there until 1941. From 1920 to 1949 he also worked at the AN URSR Institute of Botany. At the beginning of the 1920s he did important research on iron-fixing bacteria, and then pioneering work on plant hormones and their role in phytotropism. He also published work on ecology, soil science, the origin of life, and evolution. Besides writing numerous scientific articles, Kholodny wrote two important books – Zhelezobakterii (Iron Bacteria, 1921, 1953) and Fitogormony (Phytohormones, 1939) – and edited and wrote the commentary for the two botanical volumes of Darwin's collected works in Russian (1935–59). After his death the Institute of Botany at which he had worked was named in his honor.

Kholodny, Petro [Xolodnyj], b 18 December 1876 in Pereiaslav, Poltava gubernia, d 7 June 1930 in Warsaw. Distinguished painter, by profession a chemist. A graduate of the Kiev Drawing School, he began to exhibit his work in 1910. His early paintings include Girl and Peacock, Ivasyk and the Witch, The Wind, Kateryna, and A Gray Day. As a chemist, he was interested in paint manufacturing and application techniques. Attracted by ancient Galician icons in 1914, he became fascinated with the tempera technique and used it frequently. During the Revolution and Ukraine's independence, Kholodny worked in the Central Rada's Secretariat of Public Education and Ministry of Education. Under the Directory he was deputy minister of education. Leaving Ukraine with the UNR government in 1920, he was interned by the Poles in Tarnów and in 1921 settled in Lviv.

The subsequent period proved to be the most productive one in Kholodny's artistic career. In 1922 he helped found the Circle of Promoters of Ukrainian Art and took part in its exhibitions. He began to paint icons and churches and to design stained-glass windows. His principal works of this period are the icons and stained-glass windows of the Dormition Church in Lviv, the iconostasis and murals of the Chapel of the Greek Catholic Theological Seminary in Lviv, numerous icons of the parish churches in Radelychi, Kholoiv, Borshchovychi, and Zubrets, and the stained-glass windows of the church in Mraznytsia. The basic features of his work, rooted in Ukrainian artistic traditions that grew out of the synthesis of Byzantine iconography with folk art, were compositional unity, the primacy of the line, and harmonious, warm colors. In his stained-glass windows, Kholodny juxtaposed elements of pure colored glass to achieve lightness and transparency. He painted many portraits: V. Samiilenko, A. Nikovksy, Yu. Romanchuk, Rev Y. Slipy, and Ukrainian army officers such as generals M. Yunakiv, M. Bezruchko, V. Salsky, M. Omelianovych-Pavlenko, Yu. Tiutiunyk, and V. Sinkler and Colonel D. Vitovsky. Historical compositions such as Leaving the Castle, Prince Ihor's Campaign against the Cumans, and Oh, the Rye in the Field are worthy of note.

Kholodny's style can be described as a mature impressionism of a Ukrainian variety that is profoundly lyrical. His neo-Byzantine works, which rivaled those of M. *Boichuk, revealed new potentialities of the ancient style, free of schematism or archaism. Kholodny also worked in graphic art, developing his own style of drawing. A posthumous exhibition of his works was held in Lviv in 1931. After the Red Army occupied Lviv, many of Kholodny's works were destroyed for their allegedly 'nationalist' spirit and his church murals were painted over.

S. Hordynsky

Petro Kholodny Jr

Kholodny, Petro [Xolodnyj], b 22 July 1902 in Kiev. Painter and graphic artist, son of P.*Kholodny. Having left Ukraine in 1920, he studied art at the Ukrainian Studio of Plastic Arts in Prague (1926–7) and the Warsaw Academy of Arts (1928–34), where, following his research tours of Italy and France, he taught drawing and tempera. As a member of the Spokii group of Ukrainian artists in Warsaw and of the Association of Independent Ukrainian Artists in Lviv, he took part in numerous exhibitions in Lviv and other European cities. In 1950 he immigrated to the United States, where he became a member of the Ukrainian Artists' Association in the USA. His main works are monumental – icons, stained-glass windows, and mosaics – and are done in a neo-Byzantine style. They include the iconostasis and mosaics of St Andrew's Church in Bound Brook, New Jersey; the stained-glass windows and mosaics of St John the Baptist's Church in Newark, New Jersey; the icons of the Ukrainian churches in Hunter and Glen Spey, New York, and Trenton, New Jersey; the stained-glass windows of St George's Church in New York; and the iconostasis of the Ukrainian Catholic Church in Lourdes, France. A versatile artist, Kholodny is also known for his landscapes and figural compositions such as his paintings of beetles. His work was influenced by modern trends, particularly by cubism and constructivism. Thus it is closely related to M. *Boichuk's school. In his search for maximal simplicity of form, Kholodny combines the flatness and colors of the Byzantine tradition with elements of modern painting. In graphic arts he has proved himself as an illustrator (for many years he illustrated the children's journal Veselka) and as a bookplate, logo, and monogram designer. His work is distinguished by its elegant, light line. One-man exhibitions of his work were held in New York, Philadelphia (1973 and 1977), and Chicago (1977), and a New York retrospective exhibition was held on his 80th birthday in 1982.

S. Hordynsky

Kholodnyi Yar [Xolodnyj Jar]. A landmark near the city of Chyhyryn and the Motronyn Trinity Monastery, now in Chyhyryn raion, Cherkasy oblast. The densely forested hills and gullies around Kholodnyi Yar for centuries served the local villagers as a refuge from Polish reprisals or Tatar invasions. The *Haidamakas gathered there to prepare their rebellions: in the 1730s under the leadership of the Zaporozhian Cossacks M. *Hryva and I. Zhyla, in the 1740s under H. *Holy, and in 1768 under M. *Zalizniak. From 1918 to 1924 Kholodnyi Yar was the operations base for contending Bolshevik and pro-UNR partisan detachments. The UNR partisans were commanded by a former teacher from the village of Melnyky, Otaman V. Chuchupaka, whose headquarters were at the Motronyn Monastery, and operated in the Cherkasy–Chyhyryn–Znamiianka–Dnieper sector. Among the several thousand partisans there were soldiers from the Kuban (Otaman Uvarov), the Kiev region, and Galicia, as well as local peasants. During the Second World War, Soviet partisans under the command of P. Dubovy were active in the vicinity.

Kholop. The term designating a male slave (a female slave was called roba); it was used interchangeably with cheliadnyk. According to Ruskaia Pravda a kholop was an object, rather than a subject, of law: for taking the life of a kholop one paid a monetary fine known as **prodazha*, not a **vyra*, the fine for killing a freeman. A kholop's master was responsible for any crime committed by him. One could become a kholop voluntarily or involuntarily. A freeman could assume the status by marrying a roba, by selling himself to a prince or boyar, or by serving in the capacity of a **tyvun* or of keeper of the keys. Involuntary kholopy were either war captives, **zakupy* who committed a crime, debtors unable to repay their debts, or descendants of kholopy. Voluntary kholopy and kholopy who were artisans had a higher value and received better treatment than ordinary kholopy (riadovychi). A master could dispose of his kholopy freely and could even sell or kill them. In fact they were often bought and sold. Yet khology enjoyed the right to own property. Their condition changed somewhat after the church promoted their redemption through monetary payments and provided protection to some categories of khology (see *Slavery). Full (obelni) khology were of a lower status than half-free individuals (zakupy). In Muscovy most khology became serfs in the 14th–15th centuries, but the institution survived, particularly in the form of debtor servitude. In the Polish Commonwealth the khlop (Polish: chłop) was not a slave, but a dependent peasant. In modern times the term has been applied to peasants in general.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Zimin, A. Khology (Moscow 1973)

V. Markus

Kholostenko, Mykola [Xolostenko], b 7 December 1902 in Łódź, Poland, d 3 May 1978 in Kiev. Architect. A graduate of the Kiev State Art Institute (1929), he designed many residential buildings and high-rise developments in Kiev: Veteran's (1947–55) and Verstatozavod (1948–50) developments, Zhovtneve (1950–6), and the building complex of the Central Botanical Garden of the AN USSR (1951–64). He drew up the restoration plans for the ss Borys and Hlib Cathedral (1947–56), the Cathedral of the Transfiguration (1953–6), and the Church of Good Friday (1947–51) in Chernihiv, as well as St Cyril's Church in Kiev (1955) and the Great Belfry of the Kievan Cave Monastery (1959–60).

Kholostenko, Yevhen [Xolostenko, Jevhen], b May 1904 in Łódź, Poland, d 1945 in Yugoslavia. Monumentalist painter and art scholar. A graduate of the Kiev State Art Institute (1928) and a student of M. Boichuk, he was a member of the Association of Revolutionary Art of Ukraine. He was among the artists who in 1928 painted the Peasant Sanatorium in Odessa. He wrote a number of monographs: V. Ovchynnikov (1932), B. Kratko (1933), M. Rokyt's'ky (1933), V. Sedliar (1934), Monumental'ne maliarstvo radians'koi Ukraïny (Monumental Painting of Soviet Ukraine, 1931), and Ukraïns'kyi revoliutsiynyi pliakat (The Ukrainian Revolutionary Poster, coauthor, 1933). He died at the front.

Khoma, Ivan [Xoma], b 27 November 1923 in Khyriv, Dobromyl county, Galicia. Clergyman and (since 1977) honorary archimandrite. Khoma studied theology in Peremyshl and at the Pontifical 'Urbaniana' University in Rome (1946–51). He has served as the secretary to Archbishop I. Buchko (1951–62), chancellor to Cardinal Y. Slipy (1963–84), professor at the Ukrainian Catholic University in Rome (1963–), and its rector since 1975. Coeditor of the journal Bohosloviia, he is the author of many articles on Ukrainian church history. He is one of the coeditors of the collected works of Cardinal Slipy (8 vols, 1968–76).

Khoma, Paraska [Xoma], b 10 November 1933 in Cherniatyn, Horodenka county, Galicia. Folk artist. Her paintings, done in pencil, watercolors, gouache, and occasionally in ink or distemper, depict mainly flowers and plants. Her numerous works are grouped in such series as Garden Flowers, Poppies, My Land, Fantasy, and Songs. An album of her work was prepared by V. Kachkan and published in 1983.

Khomenko, Arsenii [Xomenko, Arsenij], b 14 July 1891 in Baturyn, Konotip county, Chernihiv gubernia, d 1939 in prison. Demographer. A graduate of the physics and mathematics faculty of Kiev University, in 1923 he became head of the demography department of the Central Statistical Administration of Ukraine (TsSUU). During 1930–4, he headed the demographic section of the All-Ukrainian Institute of Socialist Health Care. Subjected to political persecution in 1934, he moved to Kharkiv and was arrested there in 1938. Khomenko oversaw the preparations for the 1926 census and supervised its implementation. He published many statistical surveys, and edited periodical publications of the TsSUU and the journal Radians'kyi statystyk, which contained many of his own studies. Besides population dynamics, he devoted much attention to Ukraine's national minorities. His ingenious projections of Ukraine's population are particularly important in that they make it possible to estimate the enormous loss of life in Ukraine during the 1930s. He wrote only in Ukrainian and, when research ceased to be published in Ukrainian after 1935, his work no longer appeared. Most of his manuscripts were seized by the NKVD and have disappeared. Along with O. Korchak-Chepurkivsky, he had a major influence on the younger generation of Ukrainian demographers. His most important works are Do pytannia pro suchasnyi riven' zahal'noi smertnosti na Ukraïni (On the Question of the Current Level of Mortality in Ukraine, 1925), Naseleennia Ukraïny 1897–1927rr. (The Population of Ukraine 1897–1927, 1927), Natsional'nyi sklad liudnosti usRR (The National Composition of the Population of the Ukrainian Socialist Soviet Republic, 1929), and Suchasna smertnist' nemovliat v usRR (Current Infant Mortality in the Ukrainian Socialist Soviet Republic, 1930). Sen'ia i vosproizvodstvo naseleniia (The Family and Population Reproduction) was published posthumously in Moscow in 1980.

S. Maksudov

Khomenko, Ivan [Xomenko], b 7 September 1882 in Kobi, Dushets county, Tbilisi gubernia, Georgia, d 7 August 1935 during an expedition to Sakhalin Island. Paleontologist. A graduate of Odessa University (1908), he was a professor at the Odessa Agricultural Institute (1918–25), then a research associate of the Geological Committee (1926–31) and Petroleum Institute (1931–5) in Leningrad. Khomenko researched the hipparion fauna of southern Ukraine and Moldavia, and paleolithic and neolithic mollusk fossils in southern Ukraine and on Sakhalin Island. Most of his work in paleontology was combined with research in stratigraphy to identify oil and coal deposits.

Khomenko, Ivan [Xomenko], b 11 November 1892 in Podilia gubernia, d 10 April 1981 on the Isle of Capri, Italy. Ukrainian Catholic priest and biblical scholar. He studied at Kiev and Vienna universities and theology in Rome. In 1918–20 he worked in the Ministry of Foreign Affairs in Kiev and in the embassy of the UNR in Vienna. Influenced by Metropolitan A. Sheptytsky, he became a priest in 1940. In 1945 he immigrated to Italy. There he translated the Bible into Ukrainian from the original Aramaic, Hebrew, and Greek texts. In 1963 the Basilian order in Rome published his complete translation of the Bible as Sviate Pys'mo Staroho i Novoho Zavitu (The Holy Scriptures of the Old and New Testament).

Khomenko, Varvara [Xomenko], b 12 December 1916 in Vertiivka, Nizhen county, Chernihiv gubernia, d 20 December 1974 in Kiev. Ethnographer and teacher. After graduating from the Nizhen Pedagogical Institute in 1938, she taught Ukrainian literature at the Konotip Teachers' Institute. In 1947 she completed her graduate studies at the Kiev Pedagogical Institute and became an associate of the AN URSR Institute of Fine Arts, Folklore, and Ethnography. From 1971 she taught at the Kiev Institute of Culture. Khomenko published over 50 studies, including monographs on the Cossack-Polish War in Ukrainian folklore (1953), the influence of the folk epic on M. Starytsky's and I. Karpenko-Kary's historical dramas (1958), B. Khmelnytsky in Ukrainian folklore (1970), and folk poetry of the October Revolution and the civil war in Ukraine (1971). She also edited, with introductions, the AN URSR collections of historical songs (1971) and dumas (1974).

Khomenko, Vasyl [Xomenko, Vasył'], b 1 January 1912 in Tiflis, Georgia. Graphic artist. A graduate of the Kharkiv Polygraphic Institute (1937) and a student of V. Kasiiian and M. Derehus, he designed books of various types: eg, Ukrains'ki narodni dumy (Ukrainian Folk Dumas, 1955), a three-volume collection of T. Shevchenko's works (1949), the six-volume Istoriia ukrains'koho mystetstva (History of Ukrainian Art, 1966–70), and I. Kotliarevsky's Natalka Poltavka (Natalka from Poltava, 1957). He designed a new Ukrainian typeface.

Khomiak, Mykhailo [Xom'jak, Myxajlo], b 12 August 1905 in Stroniatyn, Lviv county, Galicia, d 16 April 1984 in Edmonton. Journalist and community leader. A graduate of Lviv University (1931), he worked as a correspondent and editor of Dilo (1928–39) and Krakovs'ki visti (1940–5). Immigrating to Canada in 1948, he contributed to the newspapers Svoboda in the United States and Ukrains'ki visti in Edmonton (1981–2). Besides writing articles for the press, he edited a number of books: on the Plast Ukrainian Youth Association in Edmonton (1959, 1963), on the Ukrainian People's Home in Edmonton (1966), and on the painter Yu. Butsmaniuk (1982).

Khomychevsky, Mykola [Xomyčevs'kyj], 1898–? Orthodox church leader. A graduate of Kiev University, in 1921 he was ordained a priest of the Ukrainian Autocephalous Orthodox church in Kiev, eventually becoming an archpriest. He organized Ukrainian parishes in eastern Volhynia and served as the deputy chairman of the All-Ukrainian Orthodox Church Council (1924–6). He also contributed to the journal Tserkva i Zhyttia (1927–8). In 1929 he was arrested by the Soviet authorities and sentenced to 10 years' imprisonment in a concentration camp. His subsequent fate is unknown.

Khomyn, Petro [Xomyn], b 12 July 1890 in Piddnistriany, Bibrka county, Galicia. Clergyman and cultural figure. Khomyn studied theology and philosophy at Lviv and Vienna universities and law at Brno University in Czechoslovakia. Ordained in 1923, from 1924 he lived in Lviv, where he was a pastor and taught catechism in several Ukrainian secondary schools (until 1939) and served as secretary of the Greek Catholic Theological Academy (1928–39), coeditor of the quarterly Bohosloviia (1924–6), and editor of the clerical monthly Nyva (1929– 39). From 1941 he edited the biweekly Voskresennia in Cracow. In 1944 he immigrated to Austria and in 1950 to Canada. In Toronto he has edited the Catholic weekly Nasha meta (1951–83) and the revived literary quarterly Nyva (1977–80). From 1971 he was the president of the *Ukrainian Catholic Press Association.

Rev Petro Khomyn

Metropolitan Hryhorii Khomyshyn

Khomyshyn, Hryhorii [Xomyšyn, Hryhorij], b 25 March 1867 in Hadynkivtsi, Kopychyntsi county, Galicia, d 17 January 1948 in Kiev. Ukrainian Catholic bishop and church leader. He studied theology in Lviv and at Vienna University (D TH 1899) before serving as rector of the Theological Seminary in Lviv (1902–4). In 1904 he was consecrated bishop of Stanyslaviv eparchy. As bishop he instituted significant reforms in religious and community life in his eparchy. He founded a theological seminary in 1906 and established the quarterly **Dobryi Pastyr* for priests in 1931. Khomyshyn also created a network of reading rooms called Skala, and encouraged charitable and relief work and the activity of various monastic orders and religious organizations. Politically, he supported the *Ukrainian Catholic People's party and its weekly **Nova Zoria*. For some time he also supported the pro-Polish policy of *normalization. As a Catholic hierarch, Khomyshyn was a 'Westerner' who favored the latinization of the rite. In 1916 he attempted to introduce the Gregorian calendar, which provoked great opposition from the faithful, and in 1921 he decreed obligatory celibacy for priests in his eparchy. Arrested in 1945 by the Soviet authorities, he was sentenced in March 1946 to 10 years' forced labor for 'anti-people's activity.' He died in a prison in Kiev.

V. Markus

Khorol [Xorol]. IV-14. Town (1971 pop 12,600) and raion center in Poltava oblast. First mentioned in 1083, from 1648 to 1782 it was a company town in Myrhorod regiment. From 1782, as part of the Russian Empire and the USSR, it was a county center in the Kiev (1782–5) and Chernihiv (1795–7) vicegerencies; in the Little Russia (1797–1802), Poltava (1802–1920), and Kremenchuk (1920–2) gubernias; and a raion center in Kremenchuk okruha (1923–32) and Kharkiv (1932–7) and Poltava (1937–) oblasts.

Khorol River [Xorol]. A right-bank tributary of the Psoł River in Sumy and Poltava oblasts. It is 308 km long and drains a basin of 3,870 sq km; it has an average width of 40–80 m, a maximum width of 200 m, and an average depth of 3.5–5 m. It is fed mostly by meltwaters (85 percent). Seven sluices have been built on the river, and it is used for water supply and irrigation.

Khorosheve [Xoroševe]. iv-17. Picturesque town smt (1976 pop 5,900) on the Udy River in Kharkiv raion, Kharkiv oblast, 10 km south of Kharkiv. Much of its population works in Kharkiv. The town's chief architectural monument is St Michael's Church built in 1785.

Khoroshun, Antin [Xorošun], b 23 July 1893 in Tulyntsi, Kaniv county, Kiev gubernia, d 5 March 1970 in Dnipropetrovske. Dramatic actor. After acting in several amateur troupes, in 1914 he joined the Society of Ukrainian Actors in Kiev and then worked in the State People's Theater (1918–19) and the Shevchenko Ukrainian Drama Theater in Kiev (1921–6) and then in Dnipropetrovske. His repertoire included the leads in W. Shakespeare's Othello and H. Balzac's Eugénie Grandet, Gonta in the stage adaption of T. Shevchenko's Haidamaky (The Haidamakas), Hnat Holy in I. Tobilevych's Sava Chalyi, and Don Gonzago de Mendoza in Lesia Ukrainka's Kaminnyi hospodar (The Stone Host).

Metropolitan Mykhail
Khoroshy

Khoroshy, Mykhail [Xorošyj, Myxajil], b 10 July 1885 in Fedorivka, Kherson gubernia, d 18 May 1977 in Toronto. Orthodox metropolitan. Following studies at the Kiev Theological Academy and Kiev University, Khoroshy was ordained in the Ukrainian Autocephalous Orthodox church (UAOC) in 1920. From 1920 to 1929 he was a pastor in Ternivka and Cherkasy and from 1923 head of the Cherkasy okruha church council. Arrested in 1929, he spent eight years in Soviet concentration camps. In May 1942 he was consecrated bishop of the Yelysavethrad (Kirovohrad) eparchy of the UAOC, and in November 1942 he became archbishop with duties in Mykolaiv (until 1944). As archbishop of the UAOC in Bavaria after the war, he helped establish the Ukrainian Orthodox Theological Academy in Munich and served as its first administrative curator (1946–8). From 1946 to 1951 he was vice-metropolitan and vice-chairman of the Holy Synod of the UAOC. He moved to Belgium in 1948. In 1951 he became archbishop of the Eastern eparchy and vice-metropolitan of the Ukrainian Greek Orthodox Church of Canada, and he was acting primate of the church from 1967 to 1975. He was elevated to metropolitan in 1975. Khoroshy is the author of religious texts and studies, poetry, and numerous musical compositions; he also completed one of the first translations of the Psalter into Ukrainian (1919).

Khorostkiv [Xorostkiv]. iv-6. Town smt (1973 pop 7,500) in Husiatyn raion, Ternopil oblast. It was first mentioned in 1564. Sugar, alcohol, and animal feed are produced in the town, and an oblast agricultural research station has been located there since 1962.

Khorovod. The most ancient form of Ukrainian *folk dance, which combines movement, singing, instrumental music, speech, and mime. Magic was once also an important component: in primitive Ukrainian society it was believed that khorovody could influence the gods to bring about a successful hunt, a bountiful harvest, family harmony, and the like. With the decline of pagan beliefs khorovody became simply a ritual form of entertainment that was performed by young maidens during calendric holidays, such as Christmas, Easter (see **Vesnianky-hahilky*), and the *Kupalo festival, and during community or family celebrations, especially weddings (see *Wedding songs); married women and men in general rarely took part in them. Beginning in the second half of the 19th century, the relationship between ritual and khorovody was gradually severed.

Thematically, khorovody are divided into those depicting (1) the behavior of mammals and birds, anthropomorphizing them; (2) the work of artisans and farmers, using mime and dialogue-like, question-and-answer songs; (3) family and social relations, particularly courtship, betrothal, and married life, frequently in a humorous fashion; and (4) natural events or calendric rituals, using trees covered in garlands, masks, and bonfires. In terms of performance, khorovody are divided into those that are (1) mimetic and illustrative or (2) ornamental. Depending on the nature of the accompanying song, the dancers stand individually or in a group, file, row, semi-circle, circle, or two circles, linked by holding hands or kerchiefs. The texts and melodies of the songs themselves are frequently ancient in origin. In the 20th century, khorovody have been a fundamental part of the repertoire of almost all professional and amateur Ukrainian dance and song ensembles.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Humeniuk, A. (ed). Ukraïns'ki narodni tantsi (Kiev 1962)
 Dei, O.; Humeniuk, A. (eds). Ilry ta pisni (Kiev 1963)

M. Hnatiukivsky

Khors. In Slavic mythology a god of the sun and the source of righteousness. According to the Primary Chronicle, an idol to Khors was located near the palace of Volodymyr the Great in Kiev. He is also mentioned in **Slovo o polku Ihorevi*. In the apocryphal Khozhdeniia Bohorodytsi po mukakh and other later sources he is sometimes referred to as Velykyi Khors (the Great Khors). Some scholars believe that Khors is of Iranian origin.

Khortytsia [Xortycja]. A co-operative publishing house in Lviv, founded and directed by members of the Ukrainian Society of Aid to Emigrants from Eastern Ukraine. During its existence (1928–39) it published the annual calendar Dnipro; some historical novels, such as A. Chai-kivsky's Polkovnyk Mykhailo Krychev'skyi (Colonel My-khailo Krychevsky, 1935) and E. Borschak's Voinarovs'kyi sestrinok Ivana Mazepy (Voinarovsky, the Nephew of Ivan Mazepa, 1939); and biographical materials such as Lystuvannia Lesi Ukrainky z O. Makoveiem (Lesia Ukrainka's Correspondence with O. Makovei, 1938), edited by V. Simovych, and S. Rusova's memoirs (1939). It also distributed the publications of other firms.

KHORTYTSIA

A. Railroad
B. Harbor

1. Lock
2. Dnieper Hydroelectric Station dam
3. Durna Skelia; according to legend, the cliff where Cossacks were punished
4. Sich Gate; the site of Cossack docks, now the site of the Zaporizhia City Museum
5. Zmiina Pechera ravine
6. Chorna Skelia; according to legend, the cliff where Grand Prince Sviatoslav I was killed by the Pechenegs in 972
7. Baida Island (Little Khortytsia)
8. Restaurant
9. Lake Richyshche
10. Lake Osokorove (Prohni)

Khortytsia Island [Xortycja]. The largest island in the Dnieper River, situated south of the *Dnieper Hydroelectric Station and now a part of the city of *Zaporizhia. It is 12 km long and 2.5 km wide, and covers an area of over 3,000 ha. The island was located on 'the route from the Varangians to the Greeks' and was first mentioned as St Gregory's Island in the mid-10th century by Constantine VII Porphyrogenitus in his De-administrando imperio. In 972 Prince Sviatoslav I Ihorevych died in battle against the Pechenegs at the nearby Dnieper Rapids. The princes of Rus' under Sviatopolk II Iziaslavych gathered on the island in 1103 to begin their campaign against the Cumans. In 1224 the Rus' princes conferred there before engaging the Tatars in battle. The island played an important role in the Cossack wars with the Tatars and Poles. In the 1550s Prince D. *Vyshnevetsky built a Cossack fortress 10 km north on Mala Khortytsia Island, which served as a bulwark against various invaders. In 1557 a Tatar-Turkish army attacked the stronghold and eventually destroyed it. With brief intervals, a garrison of registered Cossacks was stationed on Khortytsia Island between 1596 and 1648. Hetmans T. Fedorovych (1630) and I. Sulyma (1635) launched their anti-Polish rebellions from there, and in 1648 Hetman B. Khmelnytsky routed its Polish garrison. In the 1660s and 1670s the Zaporozhian otaman I. Sirko used the island as his military base. The island was part of the territory held by the *Zaporozhian Sich until its destruction in 1775. During the Russo-Turkish War of 1735–9 a fortress and shipyard were built there in 1737; their remains have been preserved to this day.

The 18 September 1965 resolution of the government of the Ukrainian SSR entitled 'On Eternizing the Monumental Places Related to the History of the Zaporozhian Cossacks' decreed the island to be a historical-cultural preserve. It is not yet reconstructed and is used for recreational purposes.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Evarnitskii, D. Istoriia zaporozhskikh kozakov, vol 1 (St Petersburg 1892)

Kytsenko, M.; Pieshchanov, V. Khortytsia (Kiev 1968)

A. Zhukovsky

Khorunzhy, Anatolii [Xorunžyj, Anatolij], b 5 November 1915 in Malomykhailivka, Katerynoslav gubernia. Writer of socialist-realist short prose. A graduate of the Kharkiv Institute of Journalism (1938), he is the author of over a dozen prose collections, including Bukovyns'ki opovidannia (Bukovynian Stories, 1949), Vesnianyi doshch (Spring Rain, 1954), and Strohist' (Severity, 1961), as well as of 10 short novels, including Nezakinchenyi polit (The Unfinished Flight, 1958), Kovyla (Feather Grass, 1960), Try verby (Three Willows, 1964), and Duzhchyyi za okean (Mightier than the Ocean, 1978). In 1977 he was awarded the Aleksandr Fadeev Prize for his work.

Khorunzhyi [xorunžyj] (flag-bearer). Military rank or administrative title. In the Polish-Lithuanian Commonwealth, the chorąży was a county official in command of the recruitment of the szlachta or local military unit, or the king's flag-bearer. Modeled on this role, a rank was created in the 17th-century *Cossack starshyna and state administration. Attached to each regiment was a regimental (polkovyi) khорunzhyi who was responsible for the regimental flags, banners, and other regalia. A heneralnyi khорunzhyi was attached to the General Officer Staff; he was responsible for the flag in battle, and afterwards represented the hetman at various ceremonies. In Ukrainian military formations of the 20th century, a khорunzhyi was equivalent to a second lieutenant.

Khorvat, Ivan [Xorvat], ?–1780. Serbian colonel and nobleman who led a group of 218 Serbian immigrants to southern Ukraine in 1751. In 1752 he was appointed by Elizabeth I first Russian commander and lieutenant general of a corps of military settlers and governor of *New Serbia, to which extensive territories of the Zaporozhian Sich were annexed. In 1762 he was removed from office and exiled to Vologda, Russia, for his oppression of the military settlers and other abuses of authority.

Khotinok, Isaak [Xotinok], b 31 December 1908 in Borzna, Chernihiv gubernia. Graphic artist and medalist. A graduate of the Kharkiv Art Institute (1928) and student of I. Padalka and V. Yermilov, he works in printmaking and book graphics. He has illustrated and designed such books as I. Senchenko's Dubovi hriady (Oak Ranges, 1929), Sh. Rustaveli's Vytiaz' u tyhrovii shkuri (Knight in a Tiger Skin, 1950), Ukraïns'ki narodni pisni (Ukrainian Folk Songs, 1951), Ukraïns'ke narodne dekoratyvne mystetstvo (Ukrainian Folk Decorative Art, 1956), T. Shevchenko's Kobzar (1957), collections of translations from H. Heine (1956) and J. Słowacki (1959), and Ukraïns'ki filihrani (Ukrainian Filigree, 1972). His prints include The Yard (linocut, 1927), a landscape series (oil, gouache, 1968–9), and portraits of H. Barbusse (ink 1949) and I. Padalka (1970). Khotinok's work was displayed at the 1932 exhibition of the Association of Independent Ukrainian Artists in Lviv. He designed medals commemorating the centenary of T. Shevchenko's death and the jubilees of I. Franko, Dante, and I. Kotliarevsky.

Hnat Khotkevych

Khotkevych, Hnat [Xotkevych], b 31 December 1877 in Kharkiv, d 8 October 1938. Modernist writer, scholar, composer, theater director, and civic figure. After graduating from the Kharkiv Technological Institute in 1900, he worked as a railway engineer. In 1899 he arranged a performance by *kobzars and *lirnyks at the 11th Archeological Conference in Kharkiv. Politically persecuted for being one of the leaders of a railwaymen's strike in Liubotyn in 1905, he was forced to emigrate to Galicia in 1906, where he lived in Lviv and then (1906–12) in Kryvorivnia, Kosiv county. He toured Galicia and Bukovyna with concerts of Ukrainian folk songs accompanied by the bandura and in 1910 founded the *Hutsul Theater in Krasnoilia, Kosiv county. Returning to Kharkiv in 1912, Khotkevych became involved in the cultural life there: he gave public lectures; founded a workers' theater, which in three years staged over 50 plays, mostly of Ukrainian classics; and in February 1913 became the editor of the literary journal Visnyk kul'tury i zhyttia. Again he came under political persecution and in 1915 was banished from Ukraine. Until the outbreak of the February Revolution he lived in Voronezh. He was opposed to the Bolshevik occupation of Ukraine, but from 1920 on was an active participant in Soviet cultural life. From 1920 to 1928 he taught Ukrainian literature and language at the Derkach Zootechnikum. Later he taught bandura-playing at the Kharkiv Music and Drama Institute. Throughout his life he worked at perfecting the art of bandura-playing and wrote a manual, Pidruchnyk hry na banduri (A Manual on Playing the Bandura, 1909; repr 1930), on the subject. He also composed a number of songs, including 'Baida,' 'Buria na Chornomu mori' (A Storm on the Black Sea), 'Sofron,' 'Nechai,' and 'A v poli korchomka' (There's a Tavern in the Field).

Khotkevych began writing in 1897; his first short story 'Hruzyinka' (The Georgian Girl) appeared in the Lviv journal Zoria. His rich literary legacy, much of it published in contemporary periodicals, consists of such works as the stories 'Bludnyi syn' (The Prodigal Son, 1898) and 'Rizdviani vechir' (Christmas Eve, 1899); the cycle 'Zhyttievi analohii' (Life's Analogies, 1897–1901); the novel Berestechko; the collection of stories Hirs'ki akvareli (Mountain Watercolors, 1914); stories written in 1914–15 and published under the title Hutsul's'ki obrazy (Hutsul Pictures, 1931); and the novelette Aviron (1917). His greatest literary achievement is the romantic novelette about Hutsuls, Kaminna dusha (The Stone Soul, 1st edn, 1911). Khotkevych also wrote a number of plays, including Dobush (1909) and Hutsul's'kyi rik (The Hutsul Year, 1910). Neproste (Non-simple, 1911) and other plays were written especially for the Hutsul Theater. His historical plays – O polku Ihorevim (Thor's Campaign, 1926) and the tetralogy Bohdan Khmel'nyts'kyi (1929) – were highly acclaimed by contemporary critics. In the last drama of the tetralogy, Pereiaslav, the playwright condemned the Treaty of *Pereiaslav of 1654 as an instrument of Russia's subjugation of Ukraine.

Khotkevych's literary and artistic interests were wide and varied. He wrote many studies, including Hryhorii Savych Skovoroda (1920), Narodnyi i seredn'ovichnyi teatr u Halychyni (Folk and Medieval Theater in Galicia, 1924), Muzychni instrumenty ukraïns'koho narodu (The Musical Instruments of the Ukrainian People, 1930), and Teatr 1848 roku (The Theater of 1848, 1932), and a series of articles on T. Shevchenko. In the Soviet period, he translated such world classics as the works of W. Shakespeare, Molière, F. Schiller, and V. Hugo.

Although he was politically suspect and stood aloof from Soviet literary discussions, Khotkevych remained one of the most popular writers in Ukraine. This is evident from the publication of an eight-volume collection of his works in 1928–32. Eventually, he again suffered persecution; his last novel, 'Dobush,' was never published, and his tetralogy about T. Shevchenko, which he began in 1928, was never completed. During the *Yezhov terror he was arrested and perished under unknown circumstances. After Stalin's death he was posthumously rehabilitated, and two volumes of his works were published in 1966.

I. Koshelivets

Khotkevych, Volodymyr [Xotkevych], b 11 April 1913 in Kiev, d 9 July 1982 in Kharkiv. Physicist and a corresponding member of the AN URSR from 1967; the son of H. *Khotkevych. A graduate of the Kharkiv Mechanics and Machine Building Institute (1935), he was a research associate at the Kharkiv Physical-Technical Institute of the AN URSR (1932–50). From 1950 he was a professor and rector (1966–75) at Kharkiv University. Khotkevych published over 70 scientific works dealing with superconductivity and low-temperature metal physics. Together with L. Shubnykov, he gave the first description of some of the magnetic properties of superconductive alloys.

Khotovytsky, Stepan [Xotovyc'kyj], b 1791–4 in Krasyliv, Podilia, d 11 March 1885 in St Petersburg. Pioneering physician and medical scientist. Khotovytsky graduated from the St Petersburg Medical Surgery Academy in 1817 and then studied in Vienna, Paris, Göttingen, Edinburgh, and London. He worked at the academy from 1822 to 1847, from 1832 as professor of gynecology, forensic medicine, and obstetrics. From 1828 to 1833 he was also the municipal obstetrician. He edited the Russian journal of military medicine, Voенно-медицинский журнал, in 1833–9, to which he contributed studies on gynecology, venereal disease, pediatrics, obstetrics, and social hygiene. He wrote the first Russian textbook of folk medicine (1844), a pediatrics textbook (1847), and monographs on pestilence in St Petersburg (1831) and cholera (1832), and translated European textbooks of gynecology and surgery.

Khotyn: northern tower of castle (13th century, rebuilt in 15th–16th century)

Khotyn [Xotyn]. v-7. Town (1970 pop 11,900) and raion center in Chernivtsi oblast. Founded by the Dacians and named after one of their leaders (Kotizon) Khotyn in the 10th century became part of Kievan Rus'; from the 12th century it belonged to the Principality of Galicia-Volhynia. In the second half of the 13th century the Genoese constructed a fortress there. In 1373 the town became part of the Moldavia principality.

From the turn of the 16th century to 1812 it remained, with intervals, a Turkish vassal; its stronghold played a key role in Turkey's control of Moldavia. In the 17th and 18th centuries Khotyn was an object of conquest in the Cossack, Polish, and Russian wars with Turkey. At the Battle of *Khotyn in 1621, the combined Cossack and Polish armies defeated the Turks, but the *Khotyn Peace Treaty left the citadel in Turkish hands. Cossack armies led by T. Khmelnytsky captured and held Khotyn in 1650 and 1652–3. After routing the Turkish army there on 11 November 1673 with the help of Moldavian and Cossack troops, the Polish hetman J. Sobieski took the citadel and revoked the *Buchach Peace Treaty of 1672. In 1711 the town was restored to Turkey. During the Russo-Turkish wars it was held by Russian troops in 1739, 1769–74, 1787–91, and 1806.

With the *Bucharest Peace Treaty of 1821, Khotyn came under Russian rule. Its citadel was dismantled in 1856. In 1873 Khotyn became a county center in Bessarabia gubernia. In 1897 its population was 23,800. Since most of the town's inhabitants were Jewish or Russian, Ukrainian cultural life was insignificant until the early 20th century.

In April 1918, during the Austrian occupation, Ukrainians held rallies in Khotyn and elsewhere in the county demanding that the region be annexed to the UNR, and the Central Rada sent its commissioner, I. Liskun, to Khotyn. Rumanian occupation of the region in November precipitated the January 1919 *Khotyn uprising. Its population declined from 24,000 in 1915 to 7,000 in 1940. In June 1940, the city was occupied by Soviet troops, but during the German-Soviet War, in July 1941, it was reoccupied by Rumania. In April 1944 it was incorporated into the Ukrainian SSR.

The war and Soviet rule brought about major changes in the city's ethnic composition. Whereas Ukrainians, Russians, Jews, and Rumanians constituted 15, 37, 38, and 9 percent of a 15,300 population in 1930, the respective figures in 1959 were 72, 16, 8, and 4 percent. The city's enterprises produce dairy and other food products, wood products, kilims, textiles, clothing, and handicrafts. An agricultural tekhnikum, a boarding school for handicapped children, and a museum are located there.

A. Zhukovsky

Khotyn, Battle of. A battle in 1621 during which joint Cossack and Polish forces defeated their Turkish enemy after 26 days of fighting near Khotyn in northern Bessarabia. This compelled Sultan Osman II to put an end to the Turkish-Polish War, which had begun with the Turkish victory at the Battle of *Cecora in 1620. The sultan had planned to conquer Ukraine, Poland, and eventually all of central Europe, and his army of 150,000 Turks and Tatars marched on Moldavia, which had allied with Poland. Unable to muster more than 30,000 soldiers to fight the Turks, the Polish government turned to the Ukrainian Cossacks for help. The Cossack council held on 15–17 June 1621 at Sukha Dibrova in the Cherkasy region decided to come to Poland's aid and sent a delegation headed by P. *Sahaidachny to Warsaw to petition for increased privileges for the Cossacks and recognition of the Orthodox hierarchy in Ukraine. Not waiting for the results, the Cossacks began attacking Turkish and Crimean Tatar coastal towns. A 40,000-man Cossack army commanded by the Zaporozhian hetman Ya. *Borodavka crossed the Dniester River into Moldavia and during August succeeded in slowing down the Turkish forces heading towards the Polish encampment near Khotyn. Distrusting the Poles, Borodavka refused to advance further until the Polish army began fighting the Turks. After Sahaidachny returned from Warsaw and informed the Cossack council near Mohyliv-Podilskyi that the Sejm had agreed to their demands, the Cossacks deposed Borodavka and elected Sahaidachny hetman. On 1 September the Cossack forces broke through the Turkish lines and joined the Poles at Khotyn. Bearing the brunt of fierce battles from 2 to 28 September 1621, the Cossacks were instrumental in saving the Polish forces from destruction and repelling the sultan's army. Osman was forced to call a halt to the fighting and his expansionist plans and to negotiate the Peace Treaty of *Khotyn.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Vasylenko, H. Khotyns'ka viina (Kiev 1960)
 Meysztowicz, J. Pod Cecorą i Chocimiem, 1620-1621 (Warsaw 1974)

A. Zhukovsky

Khotyn, Peace Treaty of. An agreement concluded in October 1621 after the Battle of *Khotyn, putting an end to the Polish-Turkish War of 1620-1. It designated the Dniester River as the border between Poland and Turkey. Turkey and the Crimean Khanate agreed to desist from raids on Ukraine and Poland in return for gifts of money and valuables; Poland undertook to return Khotyn to Moldavia, Turkey's vassal, and to curtail Cossack raids on the Crimea and Turkey. The Cossacks, who had fought bravely on the Polish side, were not party to the treaty. Their rights curtailed and their efforts not suitably rewarded, they felt that they had been treated unfairly and continued their sea raids on Turkey.

Khotyn uprising. An uprising from 23 to 31 January 1919 by the Ukrainian inhabitants of Khotyn county against the Rumanian occupation of Bessarabia. It was directed by the so-called Khotyn Directorate, whose members (chairman: M. Lyskun; secretary: L. Tokan) established friendly relations with the *Directory of the UNR. The UNR representative I. Maievsky supplied the three insurgent regiments – Rukshyn, Anadoly, and Dankivtsi – with arms. The rebels captured the town of Khotyn and most of the county's villages, and expelled the Rumanian authorities from the region. After fierce battles the Rumanian troops forced 4,000 rebels to retreat beyond the Dniester River together with about 50,000 refugees. The Rumanian authorities subjected eight villages (Rukshyn, Nedoboivtsi, Shyryvtsi, Kerstentsi, Stavchany, Dankivtsi, Vladychna, and Ataky) to severe reprisals. About 5,000 (15,000 according to Soviet sources) people were executed, 500 of them in Khotyn.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Dembo, V. Nikogda ne zabyt. Krovavaia letopis Bessarabii (Moscow 1924)
 Okhotnikov, J.; Batchinsky, N. L'Insurrection de Khotine dans la Bessarabie et la paix européenne (Paris 1927)
Heroïchna Khotynshchyna. Materialy naukovoi sesii, prysviachenoi 50-richchiu Khotyns'koho povstannia (Lviv 1972)
Khotynskoe vosstanie: Sbornik dokumentov i materialov (Kishinev 1976)

A. Zhukovsky

Khotynsky, Yevhen [Xotyns'kyj, Jevhen], b 25 December 1877 in St Petersburg, d 30 June 1959 in Kharkiv. Organic chemist. After completing his higher education in Geneva, in 1909 he joined the faculty of Kharkiv University and in 1934 was appointed professor. He published about 60 works, including 20 secondary and advanced textbooks of organic chemistry. His Kurs organichnoi khimii (Course in Organic Chemistry) went through several printings in Ukrainian and Russian, and was translated into Chinese. He studied bromination and reduction of pyrrole and its derivatives, and coal-tar aromatics, and he developed methods of analyzing organic compounds.

Khramatyka slovens'ka iazyka [Khramatyka slovens'ka jazyka] (Grammar of the Slavic Language). The earliest printed grammar for Ukrainian students based on the widespread manuscript treatise 'On Eight Parts of Speech' compiled in Serbia in the 14th century. It was commissioned by Prince K. Ostrozky for the Ostrih Academy and printed by the Mamonich brothers in Vilnius in 1586.

Khraplyva, Lesia [Xraplyva, Lesja] (married name: Shchur), b 27 May 1927 in Lviv. Writer and educator. A graduate of Columbia University (MS 1953), she edited the *Plast cubs' magazine Hotuis' (1953-70) and wrote literature for children and young people. She published collections of children's stories and fairy tales such as Viter z Ukraïny (The Wind from Ukraine, 2 vols, 1958, 1965) and Kozak Nevmyraka (The Cossack Nevmyraka, 1961), the novel Otaman Volia (1959), several children's plays, a book of children's verses, and a collection of poetry, Dalekym i blyz'kym (For the Distant and the Close, 1972).

Yevhen Khraplyvy

Khraplyvy, Yevhen [Xraplyvyj, Jevhen], b 22 June 1898 in Lysivtsi, Zalishchyky county, Galicia, d 6 May 1949 in Erlangen, Germany. Agricultural economist, co-operative leader; from 1935 full member of the Shevchenko Scientific Society. A graduate of the Higher School of Agriculture in Vienna (1924), he earned a doctorate in 1933 at the Ukrainian Husbandry Academy in Poděbrady, Czechoslovakia. From 1925 he worked as an inspector of dairy co-operatives at the Audit Union of Ukrainian Co-operatives (RSUK), and then as director of the Silskyi Hospodar society (1928-39). At the same time he edited a number of co-operative periodicals such as the weekly Hospodars'ko-kooperatyvnyi chasopys (1930-3), the semimonthly Sil's'kyi hospodar (1926-?), and the quarterly Ukrains'kyi agronomichnyi vistnyk (1934-8). During the Second World War he taught agronomy at the Lviv Polytechnical Institute and the State Agricultural Courses in Dubliany (1942-4) and then emigrated to Germany, where he taught agricultural economics at the Ukrainian Technical and Husbandry Institute in Regensburg and at the Ukrainian Free University in Munich. Besides numerous articles, his publications include popular and scholarly monographs: for example, Osnovy kooperatyvnoho molocharstva (Foundations of Co-operative Dairying, 1927), Sil's'ke hospodarstvo halyts'ko-volyms'kykh zemel' (Agriculture in Galician-Volhynian Territories, 1936), and Hospodarstvo Kholmshchyny i Pidliashchia (Farming in the Kholm and Podlachia Regions, 1944). Only the first booklet of his Ukrains'ka sil's'ko-hospodars'ka entsyklopediia (Ukrainian Agricultural Encyclopedia) appeared in print before the outbreak of the Second World War.

B. Krawchenko

Khrapovitsky, Antonii (Aleksei) [Xrapovickij, Antonij (Aleksej)], b 17 March 1863, d 8 August 1936 in Belgrade. Russian Orthodox metropolitan, ultraconservative Russian church and civic leader. In 1902 he became the bishop of Volhynia; in 1914, the archbishop of Kharkiv; and in 1917, the metropolitan of Kiev. He was known for his hostility to the Ukrainian national movement. In 1917–18 he staunchly opposed the proponents of an autocephalous Ukrainian Orthodox church. He was removed from his post by the Directory government in December 1918. From 1921 on he headed the Russian Orthodox hierarchy in emigration. Khrapovitsky is the author of many works on Eastern Orthodoxy. A nine-volume biography was published in 1956–63 by Bishop Nikon (Rklitsky).

Khrenov, Konstantin [Xrenov], b 25 February 1894 in Borovsk, Kaluga gubernia, d 11 October 1984 in Kiev. Specialist in electrical welding; from 1945 full member of the AN URSR. A graduate of the Petrograd Electrotechnical Institute (1918), he lectured at higher technical institutions in Moscow and Leningrad, and after 1945 worked in Kiev at the AN URSR Institute of Electric Welding, then at the Institute of Electrotechnics (1952–63). From 1947 he taught at the Kiev Polytechnical Institute and then at the Kiev Institute of Civil Aviation Engineers (1965–75). His main publications deal with arc welding, particularly underwater welding and metalcutting and cold-welding. His methods are used widely in restoring bridges and repairing ships.

Khreshchatyk [Xreščatyk]. The name of Kiev's main thoroughfare. Important administrative, economic, commercial, cultural, and educational institutions are located there. It runs through the center of the city from Komсомol Square and the Volodymyr Slope to Bessarabian Square and Shevchenko Boulevard; its overall length is 1.2 km. When the street was built, it replaced a forested valley (called Khreshchata Valley in the 17th century) with a stream flowing through it. The valley was used as a game preserve by the Kievan princes. In the early 18th century a road from the *Podil to the Pecherske district ran along the valley.

Construction of the first dwellings began in 1797. Most of the early buildings were one-story wooden houses. The city's development plan of 1837 determined the present course and length of Khreshchatyk. From the 1870s on mostly three-story stone structures with apartments, hotels, shops, government offices, banks, and theaters were built, predominantly in the eclectic or modern style.

Khreshchatyk: in September 1941

In 1876 the hall of the city дума was erected, and in 1892 the first electric tramline in the Russian Empire was installed, linking the street with the Podil district. By the beginning of the 20th century the street had become an important commercial center. In 1910 the first covered market in Ukraine was built on Bessarabian Square. In 1935 the street was paved with asphalt and the tramline was replaced by a trolleybus line. From 1936 to 1941 the street was radically reconstructed and built up. During the Second World War while the Soviets retreated from the advancing German army, Khreshchatyk was mined and most buildings destroyed (1941).

After the war Khreshchatyk was rebuilt. Multi-storied office and residential buildings went up, and the street was widened from 34–44 m to 75–100 m and was adorned with rows of chestnut and other trees and a boulevard. Today numerous institutions are located there, including nine ministries, the State Committee for Television and Radio Broadcasting, the Kiev Institute of Theater Arts, the central post office, the offices of the journals Dnipro and Ranok, the Ukrainian Association of Consumer Cooperatives, and various stores, offices, cinemas, and hotels.

A. Zhukovskiy

Khrin. See Stebelsky, Stepan.

Khronika Katolyts'koï tserkvy na Ukraïni (Chronicle of the Catholic Church in Ukraine). A samvydav journal of the Initiative Group for the Defense of the Rights of Believers and the Church, which was formed in September 1982 in Ukraine. Between March and November 1984, eight issues, and a special unnumbered issue, appeared. Some of them were published in Ukrainian, others in Russian and Ukrainian. The journal had a militant religious profile and accepted the principle of Ukraine's independence. It published materials on a wide range of subjects: religious questions, the activities of the clandestine Ukrainian Catholic church, the sociopolitical situation in Ukraine, the persecution of various religious groups, and the arrests of Ukrainian human-rights activists. Some of the articles and petitions went beyond the limits of a religious journal; eg, the article on Raul Wallenberg (no. 2), Y. Terelia's letters to the president of Israel, to L. Wałęsa (no. 3), and to President R. Reagan (no. 4), and V. Kobryn's declarations to the Presidium of the Supreme Soviet of the USSR (no. 5) and to the USSR minister of defense. The materials collected by the Initiative Group were confiscated, and announcement was made in the eighth issue that the Khronika ... would cease publication, but future issues of the Khronika ... continued to appear. Issues 11–13 did not get to the West, but beginning with spring 1987, issues 14 to 17 appeared.

Khreshchatyk: after reconstruction

O. Zinkevych

Khronika tekushchikh sobytii. See Chronicle of Current Events.

Khronoviat, Mykhailo [Xronov'jat, Myxajlo], b 18 January 1894 in Rybotychi, Dobromyl county, Galicia, d 20 July 1981 in Los Angeles. Officer of the Ukrainian Galician Army (УГА), agronomist, and civic leader. Having served as commander of a reserve platoon and the Sambir Officer Academy of the УГА, he was interned in Czechoslovakia and stayed there to complete his studies at the Higher Technical School in Prague (1926). Returning to Lviv, he assumed important positions in a number of Ukrainian organizations: in the *Maslosoiuz co-operative (1926–39) he became, eventually, executive director; in *Sil'skyi Hospodar he served on the Board of Directors; in *Prosvita he was a member of the Executive Committee; and in *Sokil-Batko he was president (1934–9). During the Second World War he headed the agricultural department of the Ukrainian Central Committee (1940–1) in Cracow, restored the co-operative Maslosoiuz in Lviv, and served on the Military Board of the Division Galizien (1943–5). After the war Khronoviat lectured at the Ukrainian Technical and Husbandry Institute in Germany and sat on the Presidium of the Ukrainian National Council. Immigrating to the United States in 1953, he presided over the Ukrainian Engineers' Society of America and a branch of the United Ukrainian War Veterans in America.

Khrukalova, Zinaida [Xrukalova, Zinajida], b 25 June 1907 in Novoiehorlyk, Salsk okrug, Don Cossack province. Actress. Upon graduating from the Lysenko Music and Drama Institute in Kiev in 1929, she joined the Kiev Ukrainian Drama Theater. Then she worked at the Theater of the Revolution in Odessa (1932–3) and the Dnipropetrovske Ukrainian Music and Drama Theater (1933–62). Her repertoire included the lead role in V. Hugo's Marie Tudor, Anna in I. Franko's Ukradene shchastia (Stolen Happiness), Marusia in M. Starytsky's Marusia Bohuslavka, Donna Anna in Lesia Ukrainka's Kaminnyi hospodar (The Stone Host), and Lady Milford in F. Schiller's Kabale und Liebe.

Khrushchev, Nikita [Xruščev], b 17 April 1894 in Kalinovka, Kursk gubernia, Russia, d 11 September 1971 in Moscow. Soviet political leader, first secretary of the CPSU, and premier of the USSR. Joining the Russian Communist Party (Bolshevik) in 1918 and the Red Army in 1919, he rose through the Party ranks to become a member of the CC by 1934. As head of the Moscow Party organization, he served J. Stalin zealously during the purges of the 1930s. From 1938 to 1949, except for nine months in 1947, he was first secretary of the CC CP(B)U. He presided over the forced introduction of Russian into Ukrainian schools, and the final year of the bloody purges known as the *Yezhov terror, in which thousands of Ukrainians, including Party members, were executed or imprisoned. In 1939 he was rewarded for these achievements with a seat on the Presidium. Under his secretaryship Galicia and Volhynia (1939), and then Bukovyna (1940), were incorporated into the Ukrainian SSR, and their inhabitants were subjected to repression and terror for two years. After the war his primary task was to restore agricultural production in Ukraine and to rebuild its industry as quickly as possible. At the same time he launched a propaganda campaign against Ukrainian nationalism and a military assault against UPA pockets of resistance. Writers and artists who dwelled on Ukraine's history or were influenced by European cultural currents came under severe criticism. Hundreds of Ukrainian intellectuals, including distinguished writers such as M. Ryl'sky, V. Sosiura, and O. Vyshnia, were persecuted.

After Stalin's death Khrushchev emerged victorious from a power struggle with G. Malenkov. On 25 February 1956 Khrushchev launched his de-Stalinization campaign with a secret speech to the 20th Party Congress in Moscow. His denunciation of Stalin's brutality, abuses of power, deportation of ethnic minorities, and mass terror had far-reaching effects. It not only led to a restriction of the powers of the secret police, greater freedom of expression, the release of thousands of political prisoners, and the 'rehabilitation' of some of the terror's victims, but also destroyed the cult of personality and faith in the Party's infallibility.

In 1958 Khrushchev unveiled his new seven-year plan, promising to overtake the United States in economic performance. Educational reforms were introduced to meet the demands of the new economic program. To Russify Ukraine's educational system, parents were allowed to choose their child's language of instruction in school, and Ukrainian was no longer a required subject in schools using Russian as the language of instruction. Khrushchev denied the need for languages other than Russian in scientific and technical fields. His ambitious agricultural plans, which opened up vast tracts of virgin land to cultivation, failed to achieve their production goals. A new scheme of industrial regionalization and a restructuring of the Party into industrial and agricultural sectors caused confusion and resentment. Reversing his policy of liberalization, in 1962 Khrushchev began to criticize writers, artists, and intellectuals for 'abstractionism,' 'modernism,' and 'formalism.' In Ukraine the Sixtiers, particularly I. Dziuba, Ye. Sverstiuk, and I. Svitlychny, came under increasing attack.

His frequent policy shifts and arbitrary administrative methods cost him the support of many Party and government officials, while the quarrel with China and the failures in agriculture led to widespread disillusionment among the people. Khrushchev's opponents steadily consolidated their power and in October 1964 ousted him from office. Confined to his dacha outside Moscow, he wrote his memoirs, which were smuggled to the West and published in two volumes entitled Khrushchev Remembers (1970, 1974).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Maistrenko, I. Istoriia Komunistychnoi partii Ukraïny (Munich 1979)
 Lewytskyj, B. Politics and Society in Soviet Ukraine 1953-1980 (Edmonton 1984)
 Krawchenko, B. Social Change and National Consciousness in Twentieth-Century Ukraine (Oxford 1985)

M. Stech

Khrushchev, Vasilii [Xruščev, Vasilij], b 12 June 1882 in St Petersburg, d 19 December 1941. Electrical engineer; full member of the AN URSR from 1939. A graduate of the Tomsk Technological Institute, he taught there from 1914 to 1923, and then was appointed professor of the Kharkiv Technological Institute. In 1930 he transferred to the Kharkiv Electrotechnical Institute and in 1939 became director of the AN URSR Institute of Power Engineering. His numerous publications, which include 16 monographs and textbooks, deal with such topics as AC machinery, power transmission, arc and mechanical rectifiers, and high-tension synchronous generators.

Khrutsky, Serhii [Xruc'kyj, Serhij], b 2 August 1887 in Kmichyn, Kholm region, d? Political and church figure. A gymnasium teacher, from 1922 to 1935 he was a deputy from the Kholm region in the Polish Sejm, the president of the Ukrainian Club in the Sejm, and vice-chairman of the Sejm Educational Commission. In 1925 he joined the *Ukrainian National Democratic Alliance and became a member of its Central Committee. He was a spokesman for Ukrainian autonomy in interwar Poland and spoke out against the persecution of the Ukrainians under Poland, Polonization, and the destruction and confiscation of Orthodox churches. A supporter of the movement to Ukrainianize the Russified Orthodox church in Volhynia, the Kholm region, and Podlachia, he became a member of the Ukrainian Church Committee in 1927. He and his family were arrested in 1939 during the Soviet occupation of Western Ukraine and imprisoned in concentration camps in Kazakhstan. His subsequent fate is unknown.

Pavlo Khrystiuk

Khrystiuk, Pavlo [Xrystjuk], b 1880 in the Kuban, d? Co-operative organizer, political figure, and publicist. Before the Revolution he worked for the Kiev daily Rada, contributed to the organs of the *Ukrainian Party of Socialist Revolutionaries (UPSR) – Borot'ba and Trudova respublika – and served as an editor of the co-operative journal Muraveinik-komashnia (1916-17). During the revolutionary period he was a leading member of the central committees of the UPSR and the *Peasant Association. He served as a deputy of the *Central Rada and a member of its Little Rada. As general chancellor in the first UNR government (1917-18), led by V. Vynnychenko, he helped draft the land law of 31 January 1918. He served as minister of internal affairs and later state secretary (from the end of February 1918) in V. Holubovych's UNR government, and deputy minister of internal affairs in I. Mazepa's UNR government (1919). After the 4th Congress of the UPSR in May 1918, he joined the centrist faction. In 1919 he emigrated to Vienna, where he was a member of the foreign delegation of the UPSR and contributed to its journal **Boritiesia-Poborete*. After returning to Ukraine in 1924, he worked for the Society of Scientific and Technical Workers for the Promotion of Socialist Construction (Kharkiv 1928-31) and contributed to the journal Chervonyi shliakh. His Zamitky i materialy do istorii ukrains'koi revoliutsii 1917-1920 rr. (Comments and Materials on the History of the Ukrainian Revolution, 1917-20, 4 vols, 1921-2) is a valuable source for the history of the Ukrainian revolution. He also authored several studies including 1905 rik na Ukraïni (The Year 1905 in Ukraine, 1925) and Istoriia klasovoi borot'by (styslyi kurs) (A History of Class Struggle [A Concise Course], 1927). Arrested in 1931, he disappeared without trace.

A. Zhukovsky

Khrystych, Zoia [Xrystyč, Zoja], b 1 November 1932 in Tiraspol, Moldavian ASSR. Soprano opera singer. A graduate of the Odessa Conservatory, in 1956 she was appointed soloist at the Kiev Theater of Opera and Ballet. Her classical repertoire includes Leonora in G. Verdi's Il trovatore, Marguerite in C. Gounod's Faust, Elsa in R. Wagner's Lohengrin, Queen of the Night in W. Mozart's Magic Flute, and Bianca in V. Shebalin's Taming of the Shrew. Her Ukrainian repertoire includes the heroine in M. Arkas's Kateryna, Helena in K. Dankevych's Bohdan Khmelnytsky, Oksana in S. Hulak-Artemovskyy's Zaporozhian Cossack beyond the Danube, and Natalka in M. Lyсенko's Natalka from Poltava. Since 1965 she has been teaching at the Kiev Conservatory. A book about her was written by E. Yavorsky in 1975.

Khrystyians'kyi holos (The Christian Voice). A Catholic religious weekly published since January 1949 in Munich. In 1959, it was adopted as the semiofficial newspaper of the Ukrainian Catholic exarchate in Germany. Its editors were P. Isaiv (1949), R. Danylevych (1949–54), M. Konovalets (1954–65), and I. Voliansky (1965–). In 1957–8 a monthly supplement devoted to the Ukrainian Christian Movement appeared in the paper under the editorship of M. Zaiats. The supplement's better-known contributors have been Rev A. Velyky, I. Hvat, Rev R. Holovatsky, A. and O. Horbach, O. Zelenetsky, Rev I. Nazarko, Z. Pelensky, and S. Shakh.

Khrystynivka [Xrystynivka]. v-10. Town (1972 pop 12,100) and raion center in Cherkasy oblast, situated in the Dnieper Upland. First mentioned in 1574 as the town of Khrystyhorod, in 1793 it came under Russian rule. A railway junction since 1891, its enterprises service the railway and produce asphalt, mixed feed, and food and dairy products.

Khrystynopil Apostol. See Horodyshche Apostol.

Khrystynopil Monastery (Khrystynopilskyy sviatouirskyy manastyr). A Basilian monastery founded in 1763 in Khrystynopil (also known as Krystynopil, now Chervonohrad), Galicia, by the Belz voivode S. Potocki. Its patron is St George. The large baroque church was famous for its icon of the Mother of God, which attracted numerous pilgrims. The monastery's valuable library contained several old parchment church books originally from the Basilian monastery in Horodyshche, eg, the *Horodyshche Apostol of the 12th century and the *Horodyshche (Buchach) Gospel of the 12th–13th centuries. The monastery was abolished in 1946 by the Soviet government. Since 1980 it has housed a branch of the Lviv Museum of the History of Religion and Atheism.

Khrzhonshchevsky, Nikanor [Xrzhonščevskij], b 7 July 1836 in Perm, d 1 September 1906 in Kiev. Pathologist; a founder of histophysiology. A graduate of Kazan University (1859), he taught at Kharkiv University (1867–8) and chaired the Department of Pathology of Kiev University (1869–1906). His research dealt with the structure and function of the liver, kidneys, lungs, and blood vessels. In 1886 he demonstrated, by injecting dyes, the capacity of liver cells to produce bile and determined the nature of the branching of the liver's bile ducts. He was one of the leading figures in Kiev's medical community, serving as president of the Kiev Medical Society (1869–72, 1886–9) and of the Kiev Society of Naturalists (1870–2).

Khudash, Mykhailo [Xudaš, Myxajlo], b 1925. Linguist. As a senior research associate of the AN URSR Institute of Social Sciences in Lviv, Khudash has published several articles and monographs on the history of Ukrainian. Using the documents of the Lviv Stauropegian Brotherhood, he published the monograph Leksyka ukrains'kykh dilovykh dokumentiv kintsia XVI–pochatku XVII st. (The Vocabulary of Ukrainian Official Documents of the End of the 16th–Beginning of the 17th Centuries, 1961). He has also researched P. Berynda's language and anthroponymy of the 16th century, publishing the survey Z istorii ukrains'koi antroponimii (From the History of Ukrainian Anthroponymy, 1977).

Khudorba, Arkhyy [Xudorba, Arxyp], b ca 1750 in Koman, near Novhorod-Siverskyi in the Chernihiv region, d early 19th century. Cossack officer, historian, and member of the *Novhorod-Siverskyi patriotic circle. He was appointed osaul (1769), otaman (1773), and captain of Sheptaky company, fellow of the standard (1783), and second major (1785) and first major (1790) of the Starodub Carabineer Regiment. He is the author of a lost history of 'Little Russia,' which was inspired by a liberal, anti-Russian spirit and, according to O. Ohloblyn, was an important source for **Istoriia Rusov*.

Khurgin, Ivan [Xurgin], ?–1926. Jewish socialist leader. A member of the Little Rada in 1917 from the United Jewish Socialist Workers' party and one of the architects of Jewish national autonomy in Ukraine, he participated actively in drafting the Central Rada's law on *national-personal autonomy. He served as deputy to the minister of Jewish affairs, M. *Silberfarb, in the governments of V. Vynnychenko and V. Holubovych. From 1919 he collaborated with the Bolsheviks.

Khust [Xust] (Hungarian: Huszt; Czechoslovak: Chust). v-4. City (1987 pop 34,000) and raion center in Transcarpathia oblast, situated on the Khustets River in the Maramureş Basin near the confluence of the Rika and Tysa rivers. It arose in the 10th century at the foot of a mountain of volcanic origin, on which a Hungarian castle was built from 1090 to 1191 to control access to salt mines 50 km away near the future town of Solotvyna. It was razed by the Mongols in 1242 but was soon rebuilt. Khust belonged to the Principality of Galicia-Volhynia from 1281. In 1321 Hungarian rule was restored. In the 16th and 17th centuries the Habsburgs and the Transylvanian princes fought each other for control of the town and its castle. It was besieged by the Crimean Tatars in 1594, 1659, and 1717, the Poles in 1657, and the Turks in 1661–2. Prince Ferenc Rákóczi II took the town in 1703 and convened a Transylvanian diet there in 1709. The castle burned down after lightning hit its gunpowder tower in 1766. A Ukrainian People's Council was founded there in November 1918. On 21 January 1919 the 425 delegates of the All-People's Congress of Hungarian Ruthenians in Khust created the *Central Ruthenian People's Council and voted to unite Transcarpathia with Ukraine. From 1919 to 1938 the city belonged to Czechoslovakia, from 1928 as a county center. Branches of the *Prosvita and *Dukhnovych societies were established there. After Hungary occupied southwestern Transcarpathia, in November 1938, the autonomous Carpatho-Ukrainian government headed by A. *Voloshyn was evacuated from Uzhhorod to Khust, which became the capital of Carpatho-Ukraine. Congresses of the *Carpathian Sich National Defense Organization were held there in December 1938 and February 1939. In mid-March 1939 battles between *Carpathian Sich and Czech and Hungarian troops and the session of the Carpatho-Ukrainian Diet that proclaimed state independence took place there. In 1938–9 Khust was also the seat of Bishop D. Niaradi, the apostolic administrator of the Greek Catholic Mukachiv eparchy, and the home of the daily **Nova svoboda* and of the **Nova Stena* state theater. From March 1939 to October 1944 the city was under Hungarian rule. Since then it has been part of Soviet Ukraine. Felt hats, footwear, artistic wares, clothing, lumber, furniture, ceramics, bricks and tiles, and food products are made there. It has a small museum.

V. Markus

Khutir [xutir] (plural: khutory). A term used in the Russian Empire and the Soviet Union to denote a separate rural settlement built on privately owned land and consisting usually of a single farm. The name was also applied to offshoots of peasant villages and Don and Kuban Cossack **stanytsi* regardless of the number of farms. Similar settlements have existed in Europe and Central Asia for many centuries. Beginning in the 16th century Zaporozhian Cossacks built winter settlements (**zymovnyky*) to winter their horses and cattle. Khutory became widespread in Ukraine after serfdom was abolished in 1861 and spread throughout the empire during the **Stolypin* agrarian reforms. The decree of 9 November 1906, which initiated the reforms, permitted a household head to demand of the village commune (**obshchina*) an allotment of land as his very own, to farm, lease, and sell as he pleased. If the household settled on this land, the new farmstead and land together were called a khutir; if the household remained in the village, the land it received was known as an otrub (plural: otruby).

During the reform years (1906–16) 400,000 khutory and otruby (14 percent of all peasant households), with a land area of 2.7 desiatins, were created in the Ukrainian gubernias. They were most widespread in Southern and Slobidska Ukraine. In Kherson and Kharkiv gubernias, for example, 22.5 percent of all farms were khutory or otruby, while in Poltava gubernia the number was only 12.9 percent. Better-off families or those large enough to be able to handle all the necessary farm work themselves settled on khutory. Often they leased or purchased other khutory; therefore, the land area at their disposal was often much larger than that of those who remained in the obshchina. Thus, in Poltava gubernia the average khutir household owned 26.7 ha while the average obshchina household had 7.7 ha of farmland. The rich khutir owners were often identified as **kulaks* (kurkuls), and poor and middle peasants strenuously opposed the detachment of khutory from the obshchina by fighting, chasing away land surveyors, and resisting the police.

After the October Revolution, Soviet land redistribution affected gentry landowners and khutir owners alike. About 20 percent of the richest farms had half or more of their land redistributed among the poorer peasants. In 89 percent of the cases, the redistribution was forced and occurred only after violent struggle. By 1922 the proportion of khutory and otruby in the total number of farms had plummeted to 4 percent. During the Soviet *collectivization drive the victims of dekulakization measures were first and foremost peasant khutir owners. By the time collectivization was completed, the khutir as a form of farming had disappeared. Part of the population, however, continued living on khutory while working on collective farms. Because this arrangement enabled people to avoid the system of social control, in 1939, 1940, and after the Second World War farmers living on khutory were moved to collective-farm settlements. After the war, part of the private farmsteads in newly annexed Western Ukraine were also eliminated.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Rubach, M. Ocherki po istorii revoliutsionnogo preobrazovaniia agrarnykh otnoshenii na Ukraine v period provedeniia Oktiabr'skoi revoliutsii (Kiev 1957)
 Dubrovskii, S. Stolypinskaia zemel'naia reforma (Moscow 1963)
Rozvytok narodnogo hospodarstva Ukraïns'koi RSR, 1917–1967, 2 vols (Kiev 1967)

S. Maksudov

Khutorna, Yelysaveta [Xutorna, Jelysaveta] (real name: Ostroverkhova), b 11 June 1886 in Iznoskovo, Ivanovskoe county, Kursk gubernia, d 8 January 1980 in Kiev. Actress. From 1906 to 1920 she worked in the Sadovsky Theater in Kiev, then in various theaters in Vinnytsia, Odessa (1925), Poltava (1936), and Uzhhorod (1945), and finally in the Zaporizhia Ukrainian Music and Drama Theater (1947–57). Her repertoire included Vasylyna in I. Tobilevych's Suieta (Vanity), Khveska in M. Kropyvnytsky's Dvi sim'i (Two Families), Zinka in L. Yanovska's Lisova kvitka (The Forest Flower), Dolores in Lesia Ukrainka's Kaminnyi hospodar (The Stone Host), Anna Andreevna in N. Gogol's Revizor (The Inspector General), and Sirchykha in M. Sadovsky's Za dvoima zai-tsiamy (After Two Hares).

Khvastiv or Fastiv [Xvastiv]. III-10. City (1986 pop 54,000) and raion center in Kiev oblast, situated in the Dnieper Upland on the Unava River, a tributary of the Irpin. First mentioned in 1390, in 1601 it received the rights of Magdeburg law. From the mid-1680s to the beginning of the 18th century it was a Polish county town and the center of a Cossack regiment, whose Cossacks played a key role in Col S. *Pali's anti-Polish rebellion. Annexed by the Russian Empire in 1793, it became a town in Kiev gubernia in 1797 and an important gubernial grain-trade center. In 1923 the town became a raion center. In 1926 it had a population of 14,200, of which 66 percent was Ukrainian and 25 percent was Jewish. It is an important railway junction and depot; chemical machinery, electrothermal equipment, furniture, clothing, and food products are made there. A municipal museum, the wooden Church of the Holy Protectress (1779–81), and a large, beautiful Catholic stone church (1903–11) are located there.

Khvoika, Vikentii [Xvojka, Vikentij] (Czech: Chvojka), b 1850 in Semín, near Pířelouč, Bohemia, d 2 November 1914 in Kiev. A pioneering Ukrainian archeologist of Czech origin. As an active member of the Kiev Society of Friends of Antiquities and Art, he helped found the Kiev City

Vikentii Khvoika

Oleksander Khvostenko-Khvostov

Museum of Antiquities and Art in 1899; he became the director of its archeological department in 1904.

From 1893 to 1903 Khvoika discovered, excavated, and studied the Kyrylivska settlement in Kiev and other Paleolithic sites (in Kiev's Protasiv ravine, Selyshche in Kaniv county, Korosten), sites of the Neolithic *Trypilian culture, Bronze and Iron Age tumuli and fortified settlements in Ukraine's forest-steppe (eg, *Pastyrskye and Motronynske), and the 'burial fields' of cremation urns and settlements of the *Zarubyntsi and *Cherniakhiv cultures. He was a leading proponent of the theory that the Slavic inhabitants of the middle Dnieper Basin were autochthonous. He also excavated and studied medieval palaces, fortifications, and churches in Chyhyryn (1903), Kiev (*Kyselivka hill in 1894 and *Starokyivska Hora in 1907–8), and *Bilhorod.

Khvoika participated in the 11th to 14th All-Russian archeological congresses and published over 20 monographs and articles, including Kamennyi vek Srednego Pridneprov'ia (The Stone Age in the Middle Dnieper Region, 1901), Raskopki v oblasti tripol'skoi kul'tury (Excavations in the Area of the Trypilian Culture, 1901), Polia pogrebenii v Srednem Pridneprov'e (Burial Fields in the Middle Dnieper Region, 1901), Kievo-Kirillovskaia paleoliticheskaia stoianka i kul'tura epokhi madlen (Kiev's Kyrylivska Paleolithic Settlement and the Culture of the Magdalenian Epoch, 1903), Gorodishcha Srednego Pridneprov'ia, ikh znachenie, drevnost' i narodnost' (The Fortified Settlements of the Middle Dnieper Region, Their Significance, Antiquity, and Nationality, 1905), and Drevnie obitateli Srednego Pridneprov'ia i ikh kul'tura v doistoricheskie vremena (The Ancient Inhabitants of the Middle Dnieper Region and Their Culture in Prehistoric Times, 1913). For his archeological contributions he was elected a full or honorary member of 11 scholarly societies. Many of the artifacts he unearthed are preserved in the Historical Museum of the Ukrainian SSR in Kiev.

A. Zhukovsky

Khvorostetsky, Ivan [Xvorostec'kyj], b 18 April 1888 in Yurydyka, Kremianets county, Volhynia gubernia, d 19 November 1958 in Pochaiv, Ternopil oblast. Landscape painter and pedagogue. A graduate of the Kiev State Art Institute (1928), he belonged to the Association of Revolutionary Art of Ukraine, and later the Ukrainian Art Alliance, and took part in their exhibitions. He lectured at the Kiev Civil-Engineering and the Kiev State Art institutes. His paintings, which he began to exhibit in 1915, include The Komsomol Girl in the Village (1927), Washerwomen (1929), The Lake in Ternopil (1955), Winter in Kremianets (1957), and Pochaiv Motif (1958). In 1928 he won recognition at an international exhibition in Venice. His works are found in art museums in Kiev, Ternopil, Kamianets, and Mykolaiv. A monograph on Khvorostetsky was written in 1981 by V. Pavlov.

Khvostenko-Khvostov, Oleksander [Xvostenko-Xvostov] (real surname: Khvostenko), b 17 April 1895 in Borysivka, Hraivoron county, Kursk gubernia, d 16 February 1968 in Kiev. Stage designer and graphic artist, a founder of Ukrainian stage design. A graduate of the Moscow School of Painting, Sculpture, and Architecture (1917), he worked in book and newspaper graphics in Moscow and then in Ukraine. From the early 1920s he designed stage sets in Kharkiv. From 1925 he was the chief set designer of the Ukrainian State Metropolitan Opera in Kharkiv, preparing the sets for C. Gounod's Faust (1924), G. Rossini's Barber of Seville (1926), G. Bizet's Carmen (1934), R. Wagner's Lohengrin (1934), and I. Kotliarevsky's Natalka from Poltava (1934). At the Kiev Ukrainian Opera he designed the sets for R. Glière's Red Poppy (1928), B. Liatoshynsky's The Golden Ring (1930), S. Hulak-Artemovsky's Zaporozhian Cossack beyond the Danube (1935), B. Liatoshynsky's Shchors (1937), M. Verykivsky's Servant Girl (1943), M. Skorulsky's The Forest Song (1946), and M. Lysenko's The Drowned Maiden (1950). At the same time he drew satirical cartoons for a number of Kharkiv newspapers and taught at the Kharkiv Art Institute. A monograph on Khvostenko-Khvostov by A. Drak was published in 1962.

S. Yaniv

Khvyliya, Andrii [Xvylia, Andrii] (real name probably Oliner), b 1898 in Khotyn county, Bessarabia gubernia, d ? Communist leader, journalist. A member of the Borotbists, he joined the CP(B)U in 1918 and later directed the Press Section (1926–8) and the Cultural Propaganda Section (1928–33) of its Central Committee. In 1933 he became Ukraine's deputy commissar of education. A Party loyalist, Khvyliya was particularly opposed to what he regarded as Ukrainian nationalism. In print he attacked Ukrainian cultural organizations such as *Vaplite and the *Berezil theater, and prominent Ukrainian cultural and political figures such as M. *Khvylovy, L. *Kurbas, O. *Shumsky, and M. *Skrypnyk. He was responsible to a large extent for the death in the 1930s of many Ukrainian cultural activists. Besides numerous articles, he wrote books and booklets on Ukrainian nationalism; eg, Natsional'nyi vopros na Ukraine (The Nationality Question in Ukraine, 1926), Vid ukhylu v prirvu: Pro 'Val'dshnepny' Khvyly'ovoho (From Deviation to the Precipice: On Khvylovy's Val'dshnepny, 1928), and Do rozv'iazannia natsional'noho pytannia na Ukraini (On the Solution to the Nationality Question in Ukraine, 1930). After M. Skrypnyk's suicide in 1933, Khvyliya published a collection of articles, Znyshchyty korinnia ukrains'koho natsionalizmu na movnomu fronti (To Destroy the Roots of Ukrainian Nationalism on the Linguistic Front, 1933), attacking the orthographic changes approved by Skrypnyk. Khvyliya was arrested in 1937, and disappeared soon afterwards.

M. Stech

Khvyliia, Oleksander [Xvylja], b 15 July 1905 in Oleksandro-Shuvelino in the Donets Basin, d October 1977. Stage and screen actor. He began his stage career in an amateur group, and in 1924 joined the Zankovetska Ukrainian Drama Theater. Then he worked in the Berezhil theater and, finally, in the Kharkiv Ukrainian Drama Theater (to 1941). His repertoire included Husak in I. Mykytenko's Dyktatura (Dictatorship), the Balt in O. Korniichuk's Zahybel' eskadry (Destruction of the Squadron), and Kudriash in A. Ostrovsky's Groza (The Storm). In 1932 he made his film debut as the orator in O. Dovzhenko's film Ivan, and he played the leading roles in Karmeliuk (1938) and Oleksander Parkhomenko (1942).

Mykola Khvylovy

Khvylovy, Mykola [Xvyl'ovyj], b 14 December 1893 in Trostianets, Kharkiv gubernia, d 13 May 1933 in Kharkiv. Prominent Ukrainian writer and publicist of the Ukrainian cultural renaissance of the 1920s. Born Mykola Fitilev, he graduated in 1916 as an extension student from the Bohodukhiv Gymnasium. In 1919 he joined the CP(B)U. In 1921 he moved to Kharkiv, where he worked as a millwright and also joined a body of writers grouped around V. *Blakytny and the newspaper Visti VUTsVK. In 1921, with V. *Sosiura and M. *Yohansen, he signed the literary manifesto 'Our Universal to the Ukrainian Workers and Ukrainian Proletarian Artists' (published in the collection Zhovten'). In the same year his poem 'V elektrychnyi vik' (In the Electrical Age) and his poetry collection Molodist' (Youth) were published.

After his second collection, Dosvitni symfonii (Twilight Symphonies, 1922), appeared, he switched to writing prose. His first short story, 'Zhyttia' (Life), was published in 1922. His first collections of short stories – Synii etiudy (Blue Etudes, 1923) and Osin' (Autumn, 1924) – immediately won him the acclaim of various critics including S. Yefremov, O. Biletsky, the party critic V. Koriak, and the émigrés Ye. Malaniuk and D. Dontsov.

The ornamental, impressionistic style of these and later lyrical-romantic stories – which exhibited the influence of expressionism (including its inherent naturalism) – became paradigmatic for most young Soviet Ukrainian writers then beginning their careers. Khvylovy experimented boldly in his prose, introducing into the narrative diaries, dialogues with the reader, speculations about the subsequent unfolding of the plot, philosophical musings about the nature of art, and other asides. In his brief period of creativity (less than five years) he masterfully depicted the revolution in Ukraine and the first hints of its degeneration, using a rich gallery of characters, most of them members of the intelligentsia. The characters' initial infatuation with the revolution ends in disillusionment, and their expected rebirth of Ukraine reifies into a new embodiment of the 'snout of the indomitable boor' in such stories as 'Redaktor Kark' (Editor Kark), 'Na hlukhim shliakhu' (On the Overgrown Path), and 'Synii lystopad' (Blue November). A later cycle of stories consists of merciless satires of insipid philistines and the transformation of former revolutionaries into bureaucrats and parasites. From 1924 on, Khvylovy's stories depict life much more psychodramatically and tragically, as in the novella 'Ia' (I) and 'Povist' pro sanatoriinu zonu' (Tale of the Sanatorium Zone).

At the same time Khvylovy played a key role in the life of literary organizations. One of the founders of the proletarian-writers' group *Hart in 1923, he soon became dissatisfied with its toeing of the official line and left it with a small group of writers to form the group Urbino. Later he opposed both Hart and the peasant-writers' group *Pluh for promoting mass participation in literary work instead of striving for artistic quality. He initiated and inspired with his ideas the group *Vaplite – the Free Academy of Proletarian Literature. Formed in November 1925, it numbered among its members the most talented writers, most of them former Pluh or Hart members. During Vaplite's brief existence (1925–8), Khvylovy tried his hand at large prose works. Around 1925 he began working on the novel 'Iraida,' of which only one excerpt was published under the title 'Zav'iazka' (The Beginning). It reveals a change in Khvylovy's style: instead of being lyrical-ornamental and fragmentary, his narrative becomes balanced and more realistic. This change is also discernible in the novel Val' dshnepny (Woodcocks), of which only the first part was published (in the periodical Vaplite, no. 5, 1927); the second part, although it had been printed, was confiscated at the press by the authorities and destroyed. Despite diverse assessments of the purely literary aspects of the novel, Khvylovy's followers saw Val' dshnepny as the culmination of his literary work, while others, like Ye. Malaniuk, considered it an 'obvious failure.'

Khvylovy was a superb pamphleteer and polemicist. His polemical pamphlets provoked the well-known Ukrainian *literary discussion of 1925–8. In the first series of pamphlets, published in the supplement Kul'tura i pobut to Visti VUTsK in April–June 1925 and later that year separately as Kamo hriadeshy? (Whither Goest Thou?), he raised the decisive question 'Europe or "enlightenment"?' using the term 'enlightenment' to refer to Ukraine's provinciality and backwardness under Russian oppression. And his reply was, 'For art it can only be Europe.'

In the second series, 'Dumky proty techii' (Thoughts against the Current), which appeared in Kul'tura i pobut in November–December 1925 and separately in 1926, Khvylovy further developed his argument against the 'cult of epigonism.' By adopting a psycho-intellectual orientation on Europe, he argued, Ukrainians can enter onto their own path of development. To this they have a perfect right, 'Insofar as the Ukrainian nation sought for several centuries its independence, we accept this as evidence of its unconquered desire to manifest and fully develop its national (not nationalist) being.' Again he underlined the necessity of overcoming its cultural backwardness and the psychological dependence on Moscow, in the belief 'that a nation can manifest itself culturally only if it finds its own, unique path of development.'

The third series of pamphlets, 'Apolohety pysaryzmu' (The Apologists of Scribbling), was published in Kul'tura i pobut in February–March 1926, but not separately. The idea of a completely independent development for Ukrainian literature, oriented 'at least not on Russian [literature],' was developed further, and the idea of Ukraine's right to sovereignty was formulated as follows: 'Is Russia an independent state? Yes, it's independent! Well then, we too are independent.' His last, and probably most radical, polemical work, 'Ukraïna chy Malorosiia?' (Ukraine or Little Russia?), was suppressed by the authorities; only a few quotations from it that appeared in the official critiques – A. 'Khvyliia's Vid ukhlylu v prirvu ... (From Deviation to the Precipice ...) and E. Hirschak's Na dva fronta v bor'be s natsionalizmom (On Two Fronts in the Struggle with Nationalism) – are known.

Khvylovy's prose, particularly Val'dshnepyy, which Khvyliia described as antiparty, counterrevolutionary, and even fascist, and his polemical pamphlets make him the central figure in the above-mentioned literary discussion, which by its very nature turned into a political discussion of the direction Ukraine should take in its development. The National Communist opposition in the CP(B)U, led by O. *Shumsky, the *Neoclassicists (particularly M. *Zerov), and the entire nationally conscious, progressive Ukrainian intelligentsia more or less openly sided with Khvylovy. On the opposing side were not only Khvylovy's literary opponents, such as S. *Pylypenko, S. Shchupak, and V. *Koriak, but also the party leaders A. Khvyliia, L. *Kaganovich, V. *Chubar, H. Petrovsky, and other members of the Politburo of the CP(B)U. Moscow's chauvinistic proponents of a great (unitary 'Russian') state – V. Vaganian, Yu. Larin, and J. Stalin himself – threw their support behind Khvylovy's opponents. In a letter to Kaganovich, Stalin warned the CC CP(B)U against adopting Khvylovy's Western orientation and condemned it as 'bourgeois nationalism.'

Thenceforth Khvylovy was subjected to unrelenting persecution and was forced to move gradually from an offensive to a defensive tactic. To save Vaplite from forced dissolution, in December 1926 he was compelled to admit his 'errors,' and in January 1927 he, M. Yalovy, and O. Dosvitnii agreed to expulsion from Vaplite. From December 1927 to March 1928 Khvylovy lived in Berlin and Vienna, and according to some accounts in Paris. In January 1928, before returning to Ukraine, he sent an open letter from Vienna to the newspaper Komunist renouncing his slogan 'Away from Moscow' and recanting his views.

Yet he did not truly surrender: on his initiative an unaffiliated journal, **Literaturnyi iarmarok*, was established in 1928, and it continued Vaplite's orientation. In it Khvylovy's satirical stories 'Ivan Ivanovych' and 'Revizor' (The Inspector-general) appeared. In 1930 Literaturnyi iarmarok ceased publication, and Khvylovy inspired one last organization, the Union of Workshops of the Proletarian Literary Front, or *Prolitfront, which published a journal of the same name. None of his stories, but only his polemical articles refuting the hostile criticism of *Nova Generatsiia and the *All-Ukrainian Association of Proletarian Writers (VUSPP), appeared in the journal. When Prolitfront was disbanded in 1931 and many of its members joined VUSPP, Khvylovy no longer had a journal in which he could express his ideas. His attempts at writing on party-approved themes, as in the stories 'Maibutni shakhtari' (The Future Miners), 'Ostannii den' (The Last Day), and 'Shchaslyvyi sekretar' (The Happy Secretary), were dismal failures. Thus, by the early 1930s Khvylovy's every opportunity to live, write, and fight for his ideas was blocked. Since he had no other way to protest against the Postyshev terror and famine that swept Ukraine in 1933, he committed suicide. This act became symbolic of his concern for the fate of his nation.

Immediately after his death, Khvylovy's works and even his name were banned from the public domain. Even after the post-Stalin thaw, when many other writers were 'rehabilitated' and selected works of some were published, the ban on his works and ideas has been enforced.

Khvylovy expressed in his works his own concept of Ukraine's renaissance spawned by the Revolution of 1917. Ukraine could overcome its slavishness and provinciality and 'catch up to other nations,' he believed, only by unreservedly breaking 'away from Moscow' and orienting itself psychologically and culturally on the progressive aspects of 'Europe.' As an alternative to both 'Moscow' and 'Europe' Khvylovy proposed the romantic idea of an 'Asiatic renaissance' – an awakening of Asia and other colonial, underdeveloped parts of the world. This renaissance was to begin in Ukraine, situated as it was between the West and the East, and spread to all parts of the world. Like M. Zerov, he considered Ukraine's orientation towards 'psychological Europe' a necessary precondition for Ukraine to fulfill its messianic role in this renaissance. As a romantic writer and thinker, Khvylovy believed that a 'vitalized romanticism' (romantyka vitalizmu) would be the literary style of the first period of the Asiatic renaissance.

Khvylovy's historiosophical vision has become known as Khvylovism, and his followers, as Khvylovists. They were physically destroyed during the Stalinist terror or were forced to reconstruct themselves as socialist realists. Several of them – Yu. Blokhyn, P. Holubenko, H. Kostyuk, Yu. Lavrinenko, A. Liubchenko, and P. Petrenko – emigrated during the Second World War to the West, where they popularized and studied Khvylovy's works. A first complete collection of his works has appeared (5 vols, 1978–86) under the editorship of H. Kostyuk.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Leites, A.; Iashek, M. (eds). Desiat' rokiv ukrains'koi literatury (1917-1927), 2 vols (Kharkiv 1927-8)
- Rudnyts'kyi, M. Vid Myrnoho do Khvyl'ovoho (Lviv 1936)
- Hordyns'kyi, Ia. Literaturna krytyka pidsoviets'koi Ukraïny (Lviv 1939)
- Han, O. Trahediia Mykoly Khvyl'ovoho (np 1947)
- Holubenko, P. Mykola Khvyl'ovyi i suchasnist' (np 1947)
- Luckyj, G. Literary Politics in the Soviet Ukraine, 1917-1934 (New York 1956)
- Lavrinenko, Iu. (ed). Rozstriliane vidrozhennia: Antolohiia, 1917-1933 (Paris 1959)
- Khvylovy, M. Stories from the Ukraine, trans with an intro by G. Luckyj (New York 1960)
- Sherekh, Iu. Ne dlia ditei (New York 1964)
- Liubchenko, A. Ioho taiemnytsia (Paris 1966)
- Smolych, Iu. Rozpovid' pro nespokii (Kiev 1968)
- Lavrinenko, Iu. Zrub i parosty (Munich 1971)
- Luts'kyi, Iu. (ed). Vaplitiants'kyi zbirnyk (Edmonton and Toronto 1977)
- Khvy'ovyi, M. Tvory v p'iat'okh tomakh, vols 1-5, ed H. Kostyuk; intros by H. Kostyuk, D. Ferguson, M. Shkandrij, and Iu. Shevelov (New York, Baltimore, and Toronto 1978-86)
- Mace, J. Communism and the Dilemmas of National Liberation: National Communism in Soviet Ukraine, 1918-1933 (Cambridge, Mass 1983)
- Khvylovy, M. The Cultural Renaissance in Ukraine: Polemical Pamphlets, 1925-1926, trans with an intro by M. Shkandrij (Edmonton 1986)

I. Koshelivets

Khyliak, Volodymyr [Xyljak], b 27 July 1843 in Wierchomla Wielka, Nowy Sącz circle, Galicia, d 25 June 1893 in Litynia, Drohobych county. Greek Catholic priest, writer, feuilletonist, and ethnographer. He wrote under pseudonyms (Ieronim Anonim, Lemko-Semko, Ya-sam, Neliakh, and others). His works appeared in such newspapers as Slovo (1870-87) and Russkii Sion. He wrote an ethnographic study 'Svadebnye zvychai u lemkov' (Marriage Customs of the Lemkos, Literaturnyi sbornik, 1872). His realistic novelettes and short stories about everyday life, and his humorous stories, are written in the artificial, bookish language then popular in Galicia - yazychie. His collected works were published under the title Povisti i rozskazy Ieronima Anonima (Novelettes and Stories of Ieronim Anonim) in three volumes in 1882; a fourth volume, with a biographical sketch by I. Levytsky, came out in 1887. His most popular work was the novelette Shybenychnyi verkh (The Scaffold Hill, 1877-8), which was twice reprinted in literary Ukrainian.

Khymii, Yeronim Isydor. See Chimy, Isidore.

Khymych, Yurii [Xymyč, Jurij], b 12 April 1928 in Kamianets-Podilskyi. Architect and painter. A graduate of the Kiev Civil-Engineering Institute (1954) and the Academy of Architecture of the Ukrainian SSR (1958), he painted a series of watercolors of architectural monuments in Ukraine, particularly in old cities such as Kiev, Lviv, and Chernihiv.

Khyriv [Xyryv]. IV-3. Town (1970 pop 3,500) in Saryi Sambir raion, Lviv oblast, situated in Subcarpathia on the Stryvhor River. First mentioned in 1374 under Polish rule, it was razed by the Tatars in 1502-5. In 1528 it received the right of Magdeburg law. In 1939 its population was 4,250, of whom 1,900 were Poles and 1,000 were Jews. The town has remained undeveloped. Insulation, bricks, and furniture are made there.

Khyzhniak, Anton [Xyžnjak], b 8 December 1907 in Zachepylivka, Poltava gubernia. Writer. From 1950 to 1961 he was editor-in-chief of Literaturna hazeta. He is the author of several collections of short stories and essays, a play, the historic novels Danylo Halyts'kyi (Danylo of Halych, 1951) and Kriz' stolittia (Through the Centuries, 1980), and five novelettes - Tamara (1959), Nevhamovna (The Unrestrainable Woman, 1961), Onuky spytaiut' (Grandchildren Will Ask, 1963), Nil's'ka lehenda (The Nile Legend, 1965), for which he received the Nasser Prize in 1973, and Kyiv's'ka preliudiia (Kievan Prelude, 1977). His works, in two volumes, were published in 1977.

Khyzhynsky, Leonyd [Xyžyns'kyj], b 3 January 1896 in Miatkivka, Olhopil county, Podilia gubernia. Graphic artist of Yu. *Narbut's school. A graduate of the Kiev Art School (1918), he studied with Narbut in 1920-1 and then at the Higher Artistic and Technical Institute in Leningrad (1922-7). He worked mostly in book graphics, designing such books as M. Rylsky's De skhodiat'sia dorohy (Where the Roads Meet, 1929) and M. Bazhan's Poezii (Poems, 1930), and illustrating a volume of selected short stories by H. Keller, a collection of C. Goldoni's comedies, and P. Mérimée's novel La Chronique du temps de Charles IX (1960). He was particularly innovative in the art of bookplate. His works were displayed at the exhibitions of the Association of Independent Ukrainian Artists held in Lviv in 1932 and 1933-4. From the 1930s Khyzhynsky worked in Leningrad. A monograph about him was written by K. Kravchenko in 1964.

Kibernetika (Cybernetics). Bimonthly, Russian-language journal of the *Institute of Cybernetics of the AN URSR in Kiev. It is devoted to the theoretical, methodological, and technical aspects of cybernetics and computers. Its editor in chief has been V. *Hlushkov since its inception in 1965. The journal appears in English in the United States under the title Cybernetics.

Kibzei, Ambrosii [Kibzej, Ambrosij], b 1888 in Myshkiv, Zalishchyky county, Galicia, d 25 April 1954 in Sault Sainte Marie, Michigan. Psychiatrist and community leader. Arriving in Canada in 1905, he completed college and worked as a teacher in Saskatchewan. Upon obtaining his medical degree from McGill University in 1922, he immigrated to the United States. From 1945 he specialized in psychiatry in Detroit. He was active in such Ukrainian organizations as the Mohyla Ukrainian Institute in Saskatoon, the Hrushevsky Institute in Edmonton, and the Ukrainian National Association. Kibzei wrote a popular medical handbook, Ukrains'kyi likar (The Ukrainian Doctor, 1945; 2nd rev edn 1954).

Kiev [Kyjiv]. III-11. The historic and current political, religious, scientific, and cultural capital of Ukraine. It is also the largest city (1987 pop 2,559,000) in Ukraine and the third-largest in the USSR (with a metropolitan area of 780 sq km), one of the largest industrial centers, and an important transport and communications hub.

Location. Kiev is situated on the banks of the main river of Ukraine - the Dnieper. For over a millennium it has been the primary marketplace for the agricultural and forest products of the Dnieper Upland, Polisia, and the Dnieper Lowland. In the Middle Ages, however, far more significant was Kiev's location at the intersection of international trade routes: the *Varangian routes down the Dnieper and its tributaries to Constantinople; the overland *Zaloznyi route to the Azov Sea and Caucasia; the overland *Soliany route to the Crimea; and the overland route to Galicia, Volhynia, Transcarpathia, and the rest of Europe. Consequently, by the 11th century Kiev was the largest economic and political center in eastern Europe. Its proximity to the Eurasian steppe, however, also rendered it vulnerable to the invasions of Asiatic hordes, which brought about its decline.

Plan of Kiev in A. Kalnofoisky's Teraturgima ... (1638)

The oldest part of Kiev lies along the high right bank of the Dnieper and its adjacent lower terrace among the picturesque hills between the Dnieper and the valley of its right-bank tributary, the Lybed. The highest points in the city are 200 m above sea level, 110 m above the Dnieper's surface; many of them rise steeply from the river, which is contained now by an embankment. The upper city was divided by the Khreshchatyi ravine; to the northwest was Old Kiev and the newer city to its west; to the southeast was the settlement of Pecherske. The main street of Kiev – *Khreshchatyk – runs along this ravine. The plateau on which the old city stands gradually drops towards the west and northwest into the wide Lybed Valley, which was built up only in the second half of the 19th century. On the other side of the valley, hills (up to 100 m high) again rise; there the settlements of Batiyova Hora, Solomianka, Chokolivka, Sovky, and Holiivie arose. In the southwest periphery of the city the hills give way to relatively flat rolling land.

The most western and northwestern parts of Kiev (Sviatoshyno, Pushcha-Vodytsia) lie on a sandy plain amid pine forests. Northeastern Kiev is situated on a plain of the Dnieper Lowland and consists of a lower floodplain-meadow terrace and an upper wooded terrace with sandy soil and remnants of pine forests. On the Dnieper's right bank this plain covers only a small area; on its southern part lies *Podil, the old lower district closest to the river, while farther north lie Kurenivka and Priorka. Both terraces cover a larger area on the left bank; there, at some distance from the water, lies the new Darnytskyi city raion. The *Dnieper River serves as the city's main water source. The natural vegetation in Kiev's 66 parks is both coniferous (pine) and deciduous (oak and hornbeam).

History. The oldest human traces on the territory of Kiev date from the late Paleolithic period (see *Kyrylivska settlement). Traces of Neolithic Trypilian culture settlements are numerous, as are those of the Iron and Bronze ages. Excavated hoards of Roman coins and of burial grounds of the 2nd–4th centuries AD show that Kiev was already a large settlement and an important trading locus at that time.

According to the Rus' Primary Chronicle, the founders of Kiev were the brothers *Kyi, Shchek, and Khoryv, leaders of the Slavonic Polianian tribe, and the city was named after the eldest, Kyi. According to Soviet historiography, Kiev was founded in the latter half of the 5th, or the early 6th century, and in 1982 its 1,500th anniversary was officially celebrated.

The rise of Kiev. Kiev was the capital city of the *Polianians from the 8th century. At that time there were three distinct fortified settlements – one on St Andrew's Hill, one on Kyselivka Hill, and one in the vicinity of present-day Kyrylivska Street – which were amalgamated in the 10th century. The court of the princes was located in one of these settlements. The trading district was Podil, at the mouth of the now non-existent Pochaina River, where there was a landing.

With the founding of *Kievan Rus' in the second half of the 9th century, Kiev became its capital.

Grand Prince Volodymyr the Great (980–1015) extended the city's boundaries, and constructed the Church of the *Tithes and new, finely ornamented stone palace buildings. The houses of boyars and the royal retinue stood nearby, as did the tradesmen's quarters and the market square (Babyn Torzhok), which was decorated with trophies. Grand Prince Yaroslav the Wise (1019–54) extended the upper city onto a neighboring plateau and fortified it with a 14-m-high rampart with gates and palisades and a moat. In 1037 he built the *St Sophia Cathedral and many other churches and secular buildings. Under Yaroslav, Kiev became a trade and political center of international stature. The opulence of his court, the beauty and luxury of Kiev's buildings, and the city's populousness (50,000–100,000 by the 12th century) are documented in contemporary foreign travelers' accounts.

At that time Kiev was the religious center of Eastern Europe. A metropolitan's see, it had numerous churches and monasteries (the most famous being the *Kievan Cave Monastery). It was also a center of learning, writing, book transcribing, and painting. The first Rus' chronicles were written there (particularly at the Kievan Cave and *Vydubychi monasteries). The St Sophia Cathedral housed the prince's library – the first library in Ukraine.

For centuries, the upper city was primarily the administrative, military, and cultural center, while the more populous lower city (Podil) was mainly the commercial

- A. City of Prince Volodymyr the Great (ca 1000)
- B. City of Prince Yaroslav the Wise (ca 1050)
- C. St Michael's Monastery
- D. Kopyriv Kinets
- E. Zamkova Hora hill
- F. Shchekavytsia hill
- G. Podil
- H. Khorevytsia hill

and manufacturing district, with many shops, merchants' quarters, and foreign enclaves. The city's viche (popular assembly) took place in Podil. The prince's village of Berestove, the Kievan Cave Monastery, and, farther north, the Vydubychi Monastery stood outside the walls of the original city.

The richness and fame of Kiev attracted many plunderers, and it sustained numerous attacks and ruin by the *Pechenegs and the *Cumans. With the partition of Rus' among the various princes, Kiev was assigned to

View of Kiev from the Dnieper's Left Bank, a lithograph by P. Svinin (1840)

KIEV IN THE 10TH-12TH CENTURIES

1. Church of the Tithes (989-96)
- 2-5. Princes' palaces (10th century)
6. St Theodore's Monastery
7. St Andrew's Church and Yanchyn Monastery (1131)
8. Church of the Three Saints (1183)
9. Church of the Elevation of the Holy Cross (1215)
10. Rotunda (12th-13th century)
11. St Sophia Gate (late 10th century)
12. St Sophia Cathedral (1037)
13. St George's Church and Monastery (1051-3)
14. St Irene's Church and Monastery (1051-3)
15. Church (11th century)
16. Stone palace (11th century)
17. Metropolitan's residence (11th century)
18. Golden Gate (1037)
19. Polish Gate (1037)
20. Jewish Gate (1037)
21. St Michael's Golden-Domed Cathedral (1108-13)
22. St Demetrius's Church (1062)
23. St Peter's Church (1085-7)
- 24-25. Churches of St Simeon's Monastery (second half of the 11th century)
26. St John's Church (1121)
27. Church (late 12th century)
28. Church of the Theotokos of Pyrohoshcha (1132-6)
29. St Michael's Church (mid-12th century)
30. Church of ss Borys and Hlib (mid-12th century)
31. Stone building
32. Church (1183)
33. St Nicholas's Church (12th century)
34. Stone building

the eldest son of the grand prince. Incessant internecine battles for the throne of Kiev ensued. The sack of the city by Prince Andrei Bogoliubskii of Suzdal in 1169 and by Prince Riuryk Rostyslavych and his allies (the Olhovich princes of Chernihiv and the Cumans) in 1203 were particularly destructive.

Kiev in decline, 13th-16th centuries. As a result of the unceasing wars and plunderings, Kiev's importance dwindled. In December 1240, it was sacked by the Mongol-Tatar army of Batu Khan, which decimated its population. In the second half of the 13th century, the city underwent a revival under the rule of the vassal princes of the *Golden Horde. In 1362-3 Grand Duke Algirdas of Lithuania annexed the Kiev land to his realm as an appanage principality; it was governed by his son Volodymyr and the latter's descendants until 1470. From 1471 to 1569 Kiev was governed by Lithuanian viceroys. In 1471 it became the capital of *Kiev voievodship. In the early 15th century, Kiev's trade and crafts revived to the extent that the burghers of Podil were granted self-government by Grand Duke Vytautas, and between 1494 and 1497 the entire city received the right of *Magdeburg law.

Kiev suffered greatly from Tatar depredations in the 15th and 16th centuries. In 1482, the Crimean khan Mengli-Girei, an ally of the Muscovite grand prince Ivan III, plundered Kiev and sent a golden chalice and dyskos taken from the St Sophia Cathedral to Moscow. The upper city lay in ruin for over a hundred years, during which time Podil was the center of activity. Above Podil, on a hill later called Kyselivka, the castle of the Lithuanian voievode was built in 1510. In 1569, in keeping with the provisions of the Union of *Lublin, Kiev and Kiev voievodship came under Polish rule and cultural influence.

Maquette reconstruction of medieval Kiev

17th and 18th centuries. In the early 17th century, Kiev underwent a renaissance, becoming the political, religious, and cultural center of Ukraine. The Cossack hetman P. Sahaidachny (ca 1610–22) resided there and belonged to the Kiev Brotherhood. In 1615 the Kiev Epiphany Brotherhood School was founded in Podil and the Kievan Cave Monastery Press was established. In 1620 Patriarch Theophanes III of Jerusalem restored the Ukrainian Orthodox hierarchy and Kiev metropol (after the 1596 Church Union of *Berestia, Kiev had been the see of only the Uniate metropolitan). As the archimandrite of the Kievan Cave Monastery (1627–32) and the metropolitan of Kiev (1632–47), P. Mohyla did much to make Kiev an important cultural center. The school he founded at the monastery in 1631 was amalgamated with the brotherhood school in 1633 to form the famous Kiev College (renamed the *Kievan Mohyla Academy in 1701). He initiated and funded the restoration of many of Kiev's old churches (particularly the St Sophia Cathedral) and the erection of many new ones.

Hetman B. Khmelnytsky and his army triumphantly entered Kiev in December 1648 to the joyful welcome of the populace. His army cleared the city of Polish forces in 1648, and Kiev became the capital of *Kiev regiment. In 1651, however, Kiev was ravaged by the Polish-Lithuanian army. After the 1654 Treaty of *Pereiaslav, a Muscovite garrison was stationed in Kiev, and a Muscovite fortress was built in the upper city. The Muscovite-Polish Treaty of Andrusovo (1667) granted Kiev to Muscovy for two years, but the Muscovites managed to retain it permanently and had their control formalized in the *Eternal Peace of 1686. Thenceforth until 1793, Kiev was an autonomous border town linked to the Muscovite-Russian state, the rest of Right-Bank Ukraine remaining under Poland.

Hetman I. Mazepa (1687–1709) contributed much to Kiev's cultural and architectural development. After his defeat by Peter I at the Battle of Poltava in 1709, Kiev's economic and religious importance was severely undermined by tsarist policies. The Russian monarchs, particularly Peter, Anna Ivanovna (1730–40), and Catherine II (1762–96), progressively eliminated Kiev's municipal autonomy, appointing their own functionaries to traditionally elective posts such as that of mayor (viit). Trading restrictions were imposed on Ukrainian merchants, while Russian merchants and artisans received preferential treatment and began settling in the city in increasing numbers. City-owned taverns (an important source of municipal revenue) were replaced by state-run ones. Outsiders and foreigners were allowed to reside in the city, changing its composition. In 1786 monastic properties were secularized.

In the late 18th century, Kiev still consisted of three separate, fortified, and built-up settlements: Podil, which had its own town council (magistrat); the fortified upper (old) city, where the metropolitan resided; and Pecherske, around the Kievan Cave Monastery and the *Kievan Cave Fortress (completed in 1723), where the Russian military and civil authorities were based from 1711. In 1782 Catherine II abolished the Cossack *regimental system, and Kiev became the capital of a vicegerency encompassing the Left-Bank lands of Kiev, Pereiaslav, Lubni, and Myrhorod regiments. After the second partition of Poland in 1793, Russia annexed much of Right-Bank Ukraine. In 1796 Kiev vicegerency was abolished, and Kiev became the capital of *Kiev gubernia in 1797.

below

The 19th and early 20th centuries. As the capital of Kiev gubernia, Kiev became the capital of Right-Bank Ukraine (the 'Southwest Region'). It attracted new residents, many of them Poles from the Right Bank, and its population rose steadily, from 30,000 in the late 18th century to 45,000 in 1840, despite cholera epidemics and a high mortality rate. Urban reconstruction, planning, and development began in earnest, particularly in Podil, after the great fire of 1811. The Kievan Cave Fortress was renovated and much enlarged in 1831–61. Residents displaced by this construction moved to the newly developed districts in the Lybed Valley and Khreshchatyi ravine – upper-class Lypky, lower-class Shuliavka, and others. Old roads were repaired and new ones were built (eg, Khreshchatyk, Volodymyrska Street, and Bibikov [now Taras Shevchenko] Boulevard) in the 1830s and 1840s. The government and private individuals constructed new stone residences, churches (eg, one at Askoldova Mohyla, 1810; the Church of the Nativity in Podil, 1812), and public buildings (eg, the Contract Building in Podil [1801] and Kiev University [1837–43]) in the neoclassical style. The slopes of the hills along the Dnieper were reinforced, and the first suspension bridge spanning the river was built in 1848–53 (destroyed in 1929). As a result of all this development, the once separate districts began merging, and the suburbs began growing.

In the 1830s and 1840s, after the suppression of the Polish uprisings of 1830–1, intensive government-directed Russification of the city and of Right-Bank Ukraine occurred in an attempt to destroy the power of the Poles there; Ukrainians and their traditions were greatly affected by this process. In 1835 Kiev's right of *Magdeburg law was officially rescinded. The city duma (a council based on the Russian model), which replaced the magi-

KIEV IN 1810

- A. Wall around the old city
  - B. Münnich walls
  - C. Kievan Cave Fortress
  - D. Trench
  - a. Navodnytskyi floating bridge and road to Pecherske
  - b. Old Ivanivskyi road from Pecherske up to the old city
  - c. Road from Pecherske to Podil
  - d. Andriivskyi road from Podil up to the upper city
  - e. Kudriavets (or Voznesenskyi) road from the upper city down to Podil
- I. Old upper city (Hora)
  - II. Pecherske
  - III. Podil (lower city)

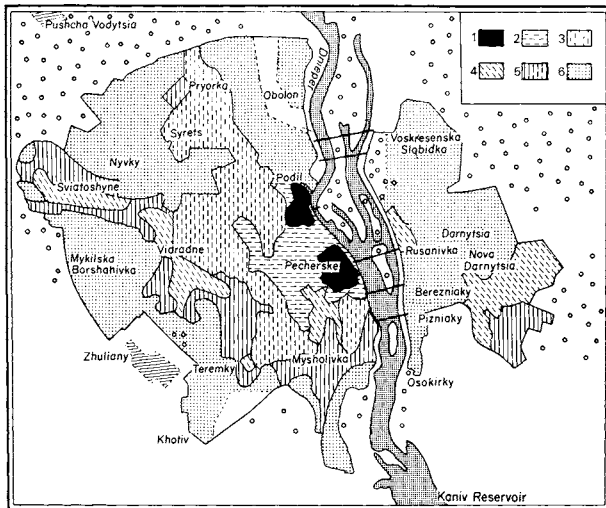

1. St Sophia Cathedral
2. St Barbara's Church
3. Kievan Cave Monastery
4. Klov Palace
5. Mariinskyi Palace
6. Navodnytska dock
7. Lower monument to St Volodymyr, celebrating the restoration of Magdeburg law
8. St Florus's Monastery for women
9. Dormition Cathedral
10. Market Building (hostynnyi dvir)
11. City Hall (magistrat)
12. Contract Building (kontraktovyi dvir)
13. Brotherhood Building
14. Shchekavytsia Cemetery

strat in administrative matters in 1785 and in judicial matters in 1835, became dominated by Russian merchants. Russians were encouraged to settle in Kiev by the imperial government, which offered them tax exemptions and other economic incentives to do so, and their weight in the city's population rose swiftly. To promote Russification, the tsarist regime concentrated on education. It brought in Russian teachers and opened St Vladimir University (now Kiev University) and a second gymnasium (the first was opened in 1809) in 1834, an institute for girls of noble birth in 1838, and a military cadet school in 1852. Russification of religion was fostered at the Kiev Theological Academy, which replaced the Mohyla Academy in 1819. In 1838, the regime began publishing the Russian newspaper Kievskie gubernskie ведомosti (three issues per week).

Despite Russification and repression, a Ukrainian national movement arose in Kiev. The secret Society of United Slavs (1823–5) and the *Cyril and Methodius Brotherhood (1845–7) were based there, and the Ukrainian scholar M. Maksymovych was the first rector of Kiev University. In the late 1850s and 1860s, the **khlopoman* movement had a number of adherents among Kiev's university students and other members of the intelligentsia, as did the Kharkiv-Kiev Secret Society. The Ukrainophile student society, which later became the famous *Hromada of Kiev in 1859, had among its members many figures who came to play leading roles in Ukrainian life. In the years 1859–62, Kiev's Ukrainian intelligentsia organized the first *Sunday schools in the Russian Empire. In 1870, Galagan College was founded; many of its teachers were Ukrainophiles. Kiev became the center of revolutionary *Populism in Russian-ruled Ukraine; active there were such revolutionary groups as the Kiev Commune (1873–4), the South Russian Workers' Union (1880–1), and Narodnaia Volia (1884).

Kiev grew rapidly in the second half of the 19th century as a result of the general economic development of Russian-ruled Ukraine and the building of the first railway line, which connected it with Odessa and Moscow in 1869–70. The most important economic sector in Kiev continued to be trade, 50 percent of which was in beet sugar; Kiev was the main market of the sugar industry in the Russian Empire. The other 50 percent of Kiev's trade was in grain, machinery, and manufactured goods, which were sold at the *Kiev Contract Fair, at five smaller annual fairs, and at 1,060 (in the 1860s) trading houses. Kiev's commercial-financial center shifted from Podil to Kreshchatyk. Industry was of secondary importance in Kiev's economy: it consisted mainly of food processing

KIEV'S GROWTH

- |            |            |
|------------|------------|
| 1. By 1650 | 4. By 1935 |
| 2. By 1850 | 5. By 1945 |
| 3. By 1917 | 6. By 1985 |

(62 percent of all production), distilling, tanning, metal-working, machine building (for the food-processing industry and water and railway transport), brickmaking, printing, and footwear and clothing manufacturing. Kiev's factories were relatively primitive and small; in 1900 there were 121, employing a total of 11,230 workers. In 1912, there were 14,600 industrial workers and 30,000 artisans and cottage-industry workers. As an industrial center, Kiev lagged behind such cities as Kharkiv, Katerynoslav, and Odessa, mainly because of its distance from the nearest sources of fuel (coal) and raw materials (iron ore).

Because it was an important administrative center, however, Kiev's population multiplied: from 65,000 in 1861 to over 127,000 in 1874 and 248,000 in 1897. Its various districts and main streets were increasingly built up. The city expanded mainly westward, absorbing adjacent villages and locales (Lukianivka, Shuliavka, Protasiv Ravine); at the turn of the 20th century it had an area of 18,000 ha. Limited public utilities were established in the central part of the city: a telegraph (1854), street gaslights (1872), a river water-supply system (1872), city hospital (1874), telephone system (ca 1886), electricity (1890), horse-drawn streetcars (1891), an electric tramway (1892, the first in the Russian Empire and the second in Europe), sewage system (1894), artesian water-supply system (1896), and new river port (1900). Poor sanitation, water shortages, cholera, urban poverty, and substandard housing, however, remained major problems, and labor conflict (over low wages, long hours, and unsafe conditions) was a common occurrence from the mid-1890s.

Many new buildings were erected in the 1890s and 1900s: banks, schools, libraries, a city museum (1899), theaters, an opera house, two People's homes (1897, 1902), a public auditorium (1895), hospitals, hotels, and a covered market. Their architecture was, in most cases, an eclectic combination of styles, ranging from Renaissance to Art Nouveau and Modern. At the turn of the century, Kiev was considered to be in the vanguard of the Russian Empire's cities in terms of communal planning. Only its core districts, however, were well planned: in 1912, there were still more wooden (11,500) than stone (5,500) buildings; two-thirds of all homes were one- or two-story; and electric power, water supply, sewers, and paved roads existed only in the city's central area.

Russification did not diminish in the latter half of the 19th century. It was even intensified after the Polish Insurrection of 1863–4. The use of Polish was forbidden, and the government established a network of elementary schools, many secondary boys' and girls' schools, and several Russian libraries and professional cultural-educational societies; it also subsidized a new newspaper, **Kievlianin* (1864–1919). In an attempt to counteract official Russification, in 1873 members of the Kiev Hromada created the Southwestern Branch of the Imperial Russian Geographic Society, and in 1874 the Hromada turned the newspaper **Kievskii telegraf* into its semi-official organ.

In 1875–6, the imperial government forbade all Ukrainophile activities and outlawed the Ukrainian language (see **Ems Ukase*), forcing the Ukrainian movement underground. Thenceforth until the 1900s, a number of illegal, mostly student, political and educational organizations existed in Kiev; influenced mainly by the writings of M. **Drahomanov*, an entire generation of Ukrainian activists matured within their ranks. The only legal Ukrainian-content periodical in Kiev in this period was the Russian-language **Kievskaiia starina* (1882–1906), which was founded by the Hromada. From 1893 to 1898 Kiev was the center of the **Brotherhood of Taras*, headed by B. Hrinchenko. In 1897, members of the Hromada founded the clandestine **General Ukrainian Non-Party Democratic Organization*. The first Ukrainian revolutionary parties were established in Kiev: the Revolutionary Ukrainian party (1900), the Ukrainian Socialist party (1900), the Ukrainian People's party (1902), the Ukrainian Democratic party (1904), the Ukrainian Social Democratic Workers' party (1905), the Ukrainian Democratic Radical party (1905), the Ukrainian Social Democratic Spilka (1905), and the Ukrainian Party of Socialist Revolutionaries (1905).

During the liberal period after the **Revolution of 1905*, Kiev was the focal point of Ukrainian cultural, scholarly, publishing, and political activity. Various periodicals were published: the daily Hromads'ka dumka (1906) and Rada (1906–14); the weekly Slovo (1907–9), Ridnyi kraj (1908–14), Selo (1909–11), Zasiv (1911–12), Muraveinyk-komashnia (1912–19), and Maiak (1912–14); the semimonthlies Rillia (1911–18) and Nasha kooperatsiia (1913–14); and the monthlies Literaturno-naukovyi vistnyk (1907–14, 1917–19), Ukrains'ka khata (1909–14), Svitlo (1910–14), Dzvoin (1913–14), and Siaivo (1913–14). In 1906, a **Prosvita* society was founded; in 1907 the **Ukrainian Scientific Society* and the first permanent Ukrainian professional theater, the **Sadovsky Theater*; and in 1908, the clandestine **Society of Ukrainian Progressives*. Over 10 Ukrainian publishing houses (see **Publishers*) were founded, numerous Ukrainian art exhibits were held, a literary-cultural Ukrainian Club was opened in 1908, and a committee to erect a monument to T. Shevchenko was struck. The Lysenko Music and Drama School (est 1904) became the main center of musical education.

The forces of the Russian reaction (eg, the **Black Hundreds* and the **Kiev Club of Russian Nationalists*) tried to undermine and suppress this multifarious activity (a notable example was the official banning of celebrations of the 100th anniversary of Shevchenko's birth), but only after the outbreak of the First World War were most Ukrainian organizations and institutions closed down by the authorities. On the eve of the war, Kiev's population was 626,000, almost 10 times greater than it was in 1861 (65,000). In area it was the third-largest city in the Russian Empire.

Kiev as the capital of the independent Ukrainian state, 1917–20. After the February Revolution of 1917, Kiev became the center of the Ukrainian national revival, led by the Ukrainian Central Rada. The newspaper Rada was revived as Nova rada. A Provisional Ukrainian Military Council and various clubs (eg, Soldiers', Railway Workers') were established. On 1 April 1917, a massive Ukrainian national demonstration (estimated at 100,000 participants) took place. Several All-Ukrainian congresses followed (see *Central Rada); the All Ukrainian Orthodox Church Council was established; and education, art education, and theater arts training in Ukrainian and the Ukrainian co-operative movement flourished. The General Secretariat of the UNR was based in Kiev, and the formation of the *Ukrainian National Republic (20 November 1917) and its independence (25 January 1918 [predated to 22 January]) were both proclaimed there.

From 29 January to 8 February 1918, a Bolshevik uprising took place in Kiev (see *Arsenal); Soviet rule and terror lasted there until 2 March, when UNR and German troops regained the city. On 29 April a military coup took place in Kiev, and until 14 December 1918 Kiev was the capital of the conservative *Hetman government, which founded the Ukrainian Academy of Sciences, the National Library (now the AN USSR Central Scientific Library), the State Drama Theater, the State People's Theater, and other institutions there. On 14 December the anti-Hetman forces of the *Directory of the UNR took Kiev, and on 22 January 1919 the union of the UNR and the *Western Ukrainian National Republic was proclaimed there. On 5 February 1919, Bolshevik forces once again seized Kiev, and a *Cheka reign of terror ensued. On 30 August, combined forces of the UNR and Ukrainian Galician armies forced the Bolsheviks to abandon Kiev, but they were themselves forced to withdraw by the advancing Russian Volunteer Army of Gen A. Denikin. On 16 December, the Bolsheviks again took Kiev. They were expelled on 6 May 1920 by a joint UNR-Polish offensive, but on 12 June they reoccupied the city.

The years of the war for Ukrainian independence and the frequent battles for control of Kiev caused much destruction and suffering to the city's residents, and many of them fled from the hunger and terror. As a result of wartime deaths and this exodus, Kiev's population fell from 544,000 (1919) to 366,000 (1920).

The interwar years. Although Kiev was rebuilt, its importance was diminished after Kharkiv became the capital of Soviet Ukraine in 1920. Kiev was neglected, and its economy and population (which reached 513,600 in 1926) grew at a slower pace than in the new capital and the cities of the industrial regions. Kiev remained, however, the focal point of Ukrainian scholarly life because the VUAN and numerous institutions of *higher education were established there. It also remained the main center of Ukrainian religious life, particularly of the *Ukrainian Autocephalous Orthodox church, which was established there in 1920. Kiev was also an important center of the literary and cultural renaissance that accompanied the policy of *Ukrainization in the 1920s. The *Neoclassicists and the writers' group Lanka-*MARS were based there, and the important cultural journal Zhyttia i revoliutsiia (1925–34) was published there. The famous *Berezil theater was founded in Kiev in 1922 and remained there until 1926, and the All-Ukrainian Photo-Cinema Administration was relocated to Kiev in 1928.

By the late 1920s, however, Kiev's intelligentsia was subjected to the first onslaught of Stalinist repressions and terror: the arrests and show trials of the alleged members of the *Union for the Liberation of Ukraine (1929–30). Ukrainization was abandoned in the early 1930s, and Russification of the Party and government apparatus and of all educational institutions intensified. In most post-secondary and professional schools, instruction in Ukrainian virtually disappeared, and by the mid-1930s Ukrainian was rarely spoken in public.

In 1934, the Soviet regime decided to move the capital back to Kiev, 'the natural geographic center' of Ukraine, and began a program of intensive industrialization of the city. Consequently Kiev boomed, and its population grew from 578,000 in 1930 to 930,000 in 1940, much of it fed by peasants fleeing from the impoverished countryside. This transformation and growth necessitated the construction of new public and residential buildings. Much of Kiev's formerly undeveloped land was used for this purpose, and the city expanded east across the Dnieper, incorporating Darnytsia. In 1934–6, while the buildings and squares of the new government center were being designed, over two-dozen churches and other landmarks were senselessly destroyed in the old city, including St Michael's Golden-Domed Monastery, the Church of the Tithes, and the Church of the Three Saints. Iconostases were removed from many churches, including the churches of St George and St Michael at the Vydubychi Monastery. Landmarks were also destroyed in Podil (the Pyrohoshcha Church of the Dormition, St Flor's Monastery, and the Epiphany Church of the former Brotherhood Monastery), in Pecherske (St Nicholas's Military Cathedral), and in other parts of Kiev (St Cyril's Monastery); singled out for destruction were the churches whose construction had been funded by Hetman I. Mazepa. Several historic cemeteries, where many eminent Kievans were buried, were desecrated and paved or turned into parkland. Nevertheless, public utilities and the railway and public-transit networks in and around Kiev were improved; a second railway bridge (1929) and a new suspension bridge spanning the Dnieper (1925), a large new train station in the constructivist style (1932), a second airport (1933, in Brovary), a 150-kW radio station (1936), an automatic telephone exchange (1935), and a new thermal-power station (1936) were built.

The Second World War. After Nazi Germany invaded the USSR in June 1941, most of Kiev's intelligentsia and over 300,000 of its inhabitants were evacuated and 197 factories were dismantled and shipped to Soviet Asia. Before their final withdrawal, the Bolsheviks mined many public and residential buildings and destroyed the three bridges spanning the Dnieper, the railway station, and all railway shops, power stations, waterworks, and food and fuel depots. The Germans occupied Kiev on 19 September. Soviet mines began detonating on the 20th, and a huge fire raged for 10 days, destroying the buildings on Khreshchatyk and many adjacent streets. On 3 No-

KIEV TODAY

- 1. Kiev in 1940 (inset)
- 2. Center of Kiev mined by retreating Soviet army in 1941 (inset)

- A. Railway
- B. Metro

vember a Soviet mine destroyed the Dormition Cathedral of the Kievan Cave Monastery.

Under the Germans, limited Ukrainian nationalist activity was briefly tolerated. A writers' and artists' associations were organized, and some publishing was allowed (eg, the dailies Ukrains'ke slovo [1941] and Nove ukrains'ke slovo [1941-3]). The Ukrainian Autocephalous Orthodox church, Ukrainian Red Cross, and Ukrainian co-operative movement were revived and a military club was founded by the new German-approved municipal administration headed by O. Ohloblyn and then V. Bahazii and L. Forostivsky. In October 1941 the OUN (Melnyk faction) created a *Ukrainian National Council in Kiev, headed by M. Velychkivsky, but it was soon outlawed by the Germans, who began a campaign of forced labor, terror, and suppression throughout the country. Many OUN activists were arrested, tortured, and shot. All schools were closed down, and no organized activity was allowed.

During the German occupation of Kiev, at least 200,000 of Kiev's residents, mostly Jews but also Ukrainians and Russians, were murdered (see *Babyn Yar). About 100,000 Ukrainians were forcibly sent as **Ostarbeiter* to Germany. About 100,000 Soviet soldiers died in German prisoner-of-war camps in Darnytsia and Syrets. During the winter of 1941-2, the Germans forbade the importation of food to Kiev and caused a famine there. By the summer of 1943, Kiev's population was only 305,000. Before the Germans withdrew from Kiev in November 1943, they looted its museums, libraries, factories, and homes, razed the settlements on the Dnieper's left bank, burned Kiev University and many other buildings, and destroyed the bridges they had rebuilt. Over 800 of Kiev's 1,176 enterprises, 42 percent of its living space, 940 government and public buildings, and most of its central streets lay in ruins. When the Red Army entered Kiev on 6 November, 80 percent of its residents were homeless.

The postwar period. After the war, Kiev's buildings, streets, public utilities, and industries were rebuilt and modernized. Kiev's population grew from 180,000 in 1943 to 472,000 in 1945 and 1,174,000 in 1961. New residential districts were created in the suburbs, and new industries were established. By 1949 industrial production attained the prewar level and it increased thereafter. The city's area increased from 680 sq km in 1940 to 769,000 sq km in 1960. In 1946-60, 5.2 million sq m of housing was built. By 1948 the city was utilizing the Kiev-Dashava gas pipeline. In 1949 construction of the *Kiev Metro began; it was opened in 1960. In 1951-8 the pavilions of the permanent Exhibition of Economic Achievements of the Ukrainian SSR were built.

Since the war Kiev has steadily expanded, annexing villages to its west, east, and north. Since 1957, and particularly in the 1970s, many large apartment complexes have been constructed in these new suburbs. Kiev's total housing fund rose from 6.74 million sq m in 1950 to 33.6 sq m in 1981. Kiev is one of the most verdant cities in Ukraine and the USSR. Its 'green zone' of 60 parks, suburban forested areas, and chestnut-, poplar-, and linden-lined boulevards and squares has a total area of 383,000 ha (1980), 18,300 ha of it in the city proper.

Economy. Since the 1930s the main economic sector in Kiev has been industry. After the consolidation of Soviet rule, it reached its pre-First World War level in 1925-6 and was significantly strengthened and modernized during the first two Five-Year Plans in the 1930s and again after the Second World War, particularly in the areas of machine building and light industry. Kiev's industry has grown thirtyfold since the Second World War. The main changes in output are shown in table 1. The importance of Kiev's heavy industry has grown even more in the last decade (see table 2).

Besides the main industrial branches listed in tables 1 and 2, other industries that are important in Kiev's economy include the building-materials, woodworking, medical-technology, pharmaceutical, and printing industries. The city is powered by two central thermoelectric stations (one of them, the TETS-5 [completed in 1971], is one of the largest in the USSR), the Kiev Hydroelectric Accumulation Station (HAES, completed in 1970, 37,500 kW), the *Kiev Hydroelectric Station (completed in 1968, 361,200 kW), and the thermal Trypillia Regional Electric Station (completed in 1972, 1.8 million kW).

A large part of Soviet Ukraine's industrial output is

TABLE 1
Changes in the weight of Kiev's industrial branches
(% of total industrial output)

	1913	1957
Heavy industry	18.5	42.8
Light industry	14.3	35.6
Food industry	60.0	18.7
Other industries	7.2	2.9

TABLE 2
Changes in the weight of Kiev's industrial branches
(% of total industrial output)

	1978	1983
Machine building and metalworking	45.0	47.0
Light industry	17.0	17.4
Food industry	15.0	12.5
Chemical and petrochemical industries	8.8	7.7
Other industries	14.2	15.4

produced by Kiev's enterprises: in 1983, 100 percent of all motorcycles, 40 percent of all tape recorders, 26.2 percent of all chemical fertilizers, 10.9 percent of all excavators, and 16.7 percent of all chemical fibers were produced there. Kiev's industries also account for a significant portion of Ukraine's industrial machines, precision tools and instruments, aircraft, hydraulic elevators, electrical equipment and instruments, armatures, audio and video equipment, textiles, wood products, furniture, building materials, cameras, clothing, foodstuffs, leather goods, consumer products, printed matter, and watercraft.

Kiev is the major transportation hub of Ukraine. It has five railway stations; the bus station Avtovokzal (from 1961), which services 50 intercity routes; a domestic airport near Zhuliany (from 1924) and an international one near Boryspil (from 1959); and an important river port, from which 22 million tons of cargo and 5 million passengers are transported per year (1979 figures). Six major bridges join Left- and Right-Bank Kiev: Paton (completed in 1953) and Moscow (1976) automobile bridges, the Podil and Darnytsia railway bridges (1949), the Metro Bridge (1965) and its extension the Rusanivka Bridge (1957), and the pedestrian Park Bridge (1957) from the center to Trukhaniv Island (and the Central Park of Culture and Recreation) in the Dnieper.

Ethnic composition. The first ethnic census of Kiev was conducted as part of the 1874 census by members of the Kiev Hromada. At that time, there were three major nationalities: Ukrainians, Russians, and Jews. Up to the 1917 Revolution and the subsequent formation of the Polish Republic, Kiev was also inhabited by many Poles, who played an important cultural and economic role there. The number of Jews rose steadily after they were allowed to leave the Pale of Settlement and settle there in 1856 and dropped drastically after many of them were murdered by the Nazis. Table 3 shows the change in Kiev's ethnic composition; the figures for the Russians include a sizable proportion of Russified Ukrainians ('Little Russians'), particularly in 1874, 1917, and 1920, which accounts for the significant drop in the percentage of Ukrainians between 1874 and 1917. In 1979, 52.8 percent

TABLE 3
Kiev's ethnic composition

	Total pop	Ukrainians (%)	Russians (%)	Jews (%)	Poles (%)	Others (%)
1874	127,500	30.3	47.0	11.0	8.2	3.5
1897	247,700	22.1	54.4	13.0	8.0	2.5
1917	430,500	16.4	50.0	18.6	9.1	5.9
1919	544,000	25.1	42.7	21.1	6.8	4.3
1920	366,000	14.3	46.8	32.0	3.8	3.1
1923	413,000	25.0	36.2	32.1	3.0	3.3
1926	513,000	41.6	25.5	26.3	3.3	3.3
1959	1,104,300	60.0	23.0	14.0	1.0	2.0
1970	1,632,000	64.9	22.0	9.3	0.6	2.3
1979	2,144,000	68.7	22.4	-	-	8.9

of Kievans claimed Ukrainian as their native language; 44.8 percent claimed Russian. The use of Russian, however, remains dominant in the city; 87.3 percent of the population spoke Russian, while only 76.3 percent spoke Ukrainian.

Education, science, and culture. Kiev is the cultural and academic center of Soviet Ukraine. The Presidium of the AN URSR, 43 of its 62 research institutes, the Central Scientific Library, the Central Republican Botanical Garden, and the Main Astronomical Observatory are located there. In 1954 the Ukrainian Agricultural Academy was founded in Kiev and the Academy of Construction and Architecture existed there from 1956 to 1964. Over 200 other research and planning and design institutes in the fields of economics, politics, pure and applied sciences, technology, and medicine that are under the jurisdiction of the CPU, Kiev University, the All-Union Academy of Agricultural Sciences, the various ministries, or other trade and industrial organizations are also based in Kiev. Kiev has 18 post-secondary schools: Kiev University, the Ukrainian Agricultural Academy; the Kiev Polytechnical, Art, Civil-Engineering, Automobile and Roads, Medical, Trade and Economics, and Pedagogical institutes; the Kiev Conservatory; the Kiev institutes of Theater Arts, Culture, Physical Culture, Civil-Aviation Engineers, and the National Economy; the Kiev technological institutes of the Food Industry and of Light Industry; and the Kiev Pedagogical Institute of Foreign Languages. The Higher Party School of the CC CPU was founded in Kiev in 1946. In 1983, 150,800 students were enrolled in Kiev's post-secondary schools. Another 61,900 attended 40 secondary specialized schools; 29,500, 41 vocational-technical schools; and 313,000, 308 elementary schools.

The executives of the Writers', Artists', Composers', Cinematographers', Journalists', and Architects' unions of Ukraine are based in Kiev. In 1980 there were 1,334 libraries in Kiev, including Ukraine's largest - the AN URSR Central Scientific Library (over 10 million volumes), the History Library of the Ukrainian SSR (over 650,000 volumes), the Republican Library (over 2.8 million volumes), the Kiev University Library (over 3 million volumes), republican Medical, Agricultural, and Technical libraries, libraries at the other 17 post-secondary schools, and city central libraries for adults, youths, and children.

In 1987 there were 28 government-funded museums in Kiev: the AN URSR Natural History Museum; the Historical Museum of the Ukrainian SSR; Kiev museums of Ukrainian Art, Ukrainian Decorative Folk Art, Russian Art, Western and Eastern Art, and Theater, Music, and Cinema Arts; Kievan Cave Historical-Cultural Preserve; St Sophia Museum; Museum of Kiev's History (opened in 1982); Museum of Ukraine's Literature (opened 1986); Taras Shevchenko Museum; the Ukrainian SSR museums of Historical Treasures, Sports Fame, Pedagogy, Book and Book Printing, and Folk Architecture and Folkways; literary-memorial museums dedicated to Lesia Ukrainka, T. Shevchenko, M. Lysenko, M. Rylsky, O. Korniiuchuk, H. Svitlytsky, P. Tychnyna, and V. Kosenko; the Lenin Museum; the Kosyi Kaponir Museum (a former tsarist prison); and the Memorial Complex of the Great Patriotic War. There are also 40 smaller museums organized and run by private individuals, three observatories (the AN URSR Main Astronomical Observatory [est 1944], the Kiev University Astronomical Observatory [1845], and the Ukrainian Meteorological Observatory [1855]), a planetarium (1952), two botanical gardens (1839 and 1936), and a zoo (1908).

In 1987 there were 12 professional theaters in Kiev: the Kiev Theater of Opera and Ballet, Kiev Ukrainian Drama Theater, Kiev Russian Drama Theater, Kiev Operetta Theater, Kiev Young Spectator's Theater, Kiev Puppet Theater, Kiev Druzhba Theater, Kiev Theater of Comedy and Drama, Kiev Variety Theater, Kiev Theater of Historical Portrayal, Kiev Music Hall, and Kiev Young People's Theater. Professional musical ensembles include the Kiev State Philharmonic, DUMKA chorus, State Banduryst Kapelle of the Ukrainian SSR, Kiev Chamber Orchestra, Kiev Chamber Choir, Verovka State Choir, Symphony Orchestra of the Ukrainian SSR, Revutsky Men's Chorus, Virsky State Dance Ensemble, Dance and Song Ensemble of the Kiev Military District, Kiev Folk

Kiev: St Volodymyr's Hill

KIEV

1. Historical Museum of the Ukrainian SSR
  - 1a. Historical Archive of the Ukrainian SSR
  2. St Sophia Cathedral and Museum
  3. St Cyril's Church
  4. St Volodymyr's Cathedral
  5. Kievan Cave Monastery
  6. Vydubychi Monastery
  7. St Andrew's Cathedral
  8. Golden Gate
  9. Building of the former Kievan Mohyla Academy
  - 9a. Former building of the Central Rada (1917-18)
  10. Natural science museums
  11. Museum of the Book and Book Printing of the Ukrainian SSR
  12. Museum of Theater, Musical, and Cinematic Arts of the Ukrainian SSR
  13. Museum of Ukrainian Decorative Folk Art of the Ukrainian SSR
  14. Museum of Ukrainian Art of the Ukrainian SSR
  15. Museum of Western and Eastern Art
  16. Archive-Museum of Literature and Art of the Ukrainian SSR
  17. T.H. Shevchenko Literature and Art Museum
  18. M.V. Lysenko Building and Museum
  19. Lesia Ukrainka Literary-Memorial Museum
  20. Exhibit of the Economic Achievements of the Ukrainian SSR
  21. Planetarium (new building opened in 1984)
  22. Museum of Historical Treasures of the Ukrainian SSR
  23. Theater of Opera and Ballet of the Ukrainian SSR
  24. Ukrainian Drama Theater
  25. Russian Drama Theater
  26. Young Spectator's Theater
  27. Puppet Theater
  28. Operetta Theater
  29. Philharmonic
  30. Circus
  31. Kiev Artistic Film Studio
  32. Television Center
  33. Republican Library
  34. University Library
  35. Central Scientific Library of the AN USSR
  36. Republican Medical Library
  37. Scientific-Technical Library
  38. History Library of the Ukrainian SSR
  39. Republican Children's Library
  40. Central City Library for Adults
  41. University
  42. Polytechnical Institute
  43. Medical Institute
  44. Institute of Culture
  45. Ukrainian Agricultural Academy
  46. Automobile and Roads Institute
  47. Trade and Economics Institute
  48. Institute of the National Economy
  49. Technological Institute of the Food Industry
  50. Technological Institute of Light Industry
  51. Civil-Engineering Institute
  52. Branch of the Kharkiv Institute of Railway-Transport Engineers
  53. Institute of Civil-Aviation Engineers
  54. Institute of Theater Arts
  55. Pedagogical Institute
  56. Conservatory (new building)
  57. Art Institute
  58. Pedagogical Institute of Foreign Languages
  59. University Astronomical Observatory
  - 59a. Ukrainian Hydrometeorological Observatory
  60. Higher Party School of the CC CPU
  61. Plant of Automatic Machine Tools
  62. Bilshovyk Manufacturing Association of Polymer-Products Machine Building
  63. Chervonyi Ekskavator Machine-building Plant
  64. Leninska Kuznia Shipyard
  65. Aviation Manufacturing Association
  66. Motorcycle Plant
  67. Transsyhnl Electromechanical Plant (railroad machinery)
  68. Darnytsia Railway-Car Repair Plant
  69. Electric Railway-Car Repair Plant
  70. Tochelektroprylad Manufacturing Association (electric precision apparatuses)
  71. Ukrkabel Electrotechnical Plant (cables)
  72. Arsenal Plant
  73. Darnytsia Chemical-Pharmaceutical Manufacturing Association
  74. Slavutych Food Manufacturing Association
  75. Silk Plant
  76. Asbestos-Cement Manufacturing Complex
  77. Relay and Automation Plant
  78. Silk Plant
  79. Chervonyi Humovyk Manufacturing Association of the Petroleum-Refining and Petrochemical Industry
  80. Polihrafknyha Manufacturing Association of Book Printing Enterprises and the Radianska Ukraina Printing Complex
  81. Khimvolokno Manufacturing Association (chemical fibers)
  82. Knitted-Fabric Manufacturing Association
  83. Confectionery Factory
  84. Footwear Factory
  85. Elektroprylad Plant (electric instruments)
  86. Meat-Packing Complex
  87. Clothing Factory
  88. Vulkan Artificial Leather Plant
  89. Metallic Products Plant
  90. Leather Manufacturing Association
  91. Furniture Factory
  92. Medicinal Preparations Plant
  93. Medaparatura Manufacturing Association (medical apparatuses)
  94. Trade and Industry Palace of the Ukrainian SSR
  95. Contract Building (19th century)
  96. Red Cross Society of the Ukrainian SSR
  97. Kiev Passenger Railway Station
  98. Kiev-Moscow Railway Station
  99. Darnytsia Railway Station
  100. Zhuliany Airport
  101. Nyvky Airport
  102. Dnieper River Port
  103. Funicular
  104. Little Southwestern Railway (children's railway)
  105. Avtovokzal (main bus depot)
  106. Central Committee of the CPU
  107. Supreme Soviet of the Ukrainian SSR
  108. Council of Ministers of the Ukrainian SSR
  109. Radio and Telegraph Agency of Ukraine (RATAU)
  110. Telegraph Central
  111. Telephone Central
  112. Main Post Office
  113. Presidium of the AN USSR
  114. AN USSR Institute for Nuclear Research
  115. Publishing House of the Ukrainian Soviet Encyclopedia
  116. Central Department Store
  117. October Department Store
  118. Central Indoor Market and Central Collective-Farm Market
  119. Children's Department Store
  120. House of the Book
  121. Sports Palace
  122. Dynamo Stadium
  123. Spartak Stadium
  124. Baikove Cemetery
  125. Lypky; the locale of mass executions of Ukrainians during the 1919 Bolshevik occupation
  126. Babyn Yar; the locale of the mass murder of 150,000 Kievans, most of them Jews, by the Nazis in 1941-3
  127. The locales of the mass destruction of prisoners of war by the Nazis in 1941-3
  128. Lukianivka Cemetery
  129. Central Park of Culture and Recreation
  130. St Volodymyr's Hill Park
  131. Eternal Glory Park
  132. Shevchenko Park
  133. Central Republican Botanical Garden of the AN USSR
  134. Zoological Garden
  135. Dnieper Park
  136. Monument to St Volodymyr
  137. Askoldova Mohyla Park
- Abbreviations:* Akad. = Akademik (Academician); Bd. = Boulevard; Gen. = General; N. = Nova (New); Naber. = Naberezhna (Shore Road); Nyzh. = Nyzhnia (Lower); Prosp., Pros., Pr. = Prospekt (Avenue); St. = Street; Verkh. = Verkhnia (Upper)

Pushcha-Vodytsia

Troieshchyna

Kotsiubynske

Petropavlivska Borshchahivka

Sofiivska Borshchahivka

Vyshneve

Bortnychi

KYIV - KIEV

- +—+—+—+ Railway
- Subway

0 1 2 3 4 5 KM

This page intentionally left blank

Instrument Orchestra, and Lysenko String Quartet. The Kiev Circus has existed since the 1860s.

Kiev has been the center of Ukrainian film and mass media. In 1928 the Dovzhenko Kiev Artistic Film Studio was founded there. Also located in Kiev are the Kiev Studio of Chronicle and Documentary Films, the Kiev Studio of Popular Science Films, and the Ukrtelefilm studio (est 1966). In 1981 there were 136 cinemas in Kiev. Kiev has had radio stations since 1927. Republican tv programs are broadcast daily in Ukrainian and Russian on three television channels from a telecenter established in Kiev in 1951.

Publishing. Kiev has always been an important publishing center in Ukraine; since the 1930s it has been the pre-eminent one. In 1917–18, there were 20 publishing houses, over 40 newspapers and journals, and 15 bookstores in Kiev. Today there are 16 publishing houses: Polityvydav Ukrainy, Molod, Radianskyi Pysmennyk, Radianska Ukraina, Dnipro, Derzhavne Vydavnytstvo Ukrainy, Naukova Dumka, Vyshcha Shkola, Radianska Shkola, Mystetstvo, Tekhnika, Budivelnyk, Znannia, Muzychna Ukraina, Urozhai, and the publishing house of the Ukrainian Soviet Encyclopedia. Kiev is the major printing center in Ukraine. The association Polihrafknyha, consisting of six printing enterprises in Kiev and six elsewhere, prints and binds 95 percent of all the books published in Ukraine. Many newspapers and periodicals are based in Kiev: 14 republican newspapers (including the dailies Radians'ka Ukraina, Pravda Ukrainy, Robitnycha hazeta / Rabochaia gazeta, Sils'ki visti, Molod' Ukrainy, and Komsomol'skoe znamia, the semiweekly Radians'ka osvita, and the weeklies Kul'tura i zhyttia, Literaturna Ukraina, and Druh chytacha), the city dailies Kyiv/Vechernii Kiev and Prapor komunizmu, the oblast dailies Kyivs'ka pravda and Moloda hvardiia, 55 republican periodicals (including the popular weekly Ukraina, the biweeklies Perets' and Pid praporom leninizmu, and the monthlies Komunist Ukrainy, Vitchyzna, Dnipro, Vsesvit, Kyiv, Raduga, Nauka i suspilstvo, Novyny kinoekranu, and Radians'ka zhinka), and 40 AN URSR periodicals. The Radio and Telegraph Agency of Ukraine has been based in Kiev since 1934.

Kiev: view of Podil

Religious life. In 1914 there were 7 men's and 3 women's monasteries, 4 cathedrals, 36 parish churches, and 40 other Orthodox churches in Kiev. The pillaging of churches by Bolshevik zealots in the 1920s and the wanton destruction and suppression of organized religion by the authorities left only a few small churches next to cemeteries and one church on the Trukhaniv Island open by the mid-1930s. After the Second World War, the authorities allowed a few more churches and monasteries to reopen. Currently functioning are two women's monasteries (the Holy Protectress and St Flor-Ascension monasteries) and five churches in addition to the ones at the monasteries (St Volodymyr's Cathedral, St Elijah's Church, ss Constantine and Helen's Church, St Nicholas's Prytyska Church, and the Holy Trinity Church). They are all administered by the Russian Orthodox church, the Ukrainian Autocephalous Orthodox church having been banned. Pravoslavnyi visnyk, the official organ of the Russian Orthodox metropolitan of Kiev and Halych, has been published in Kiev since 1971. A Russian Orthodox Theological Seminary was allowed to operate in Kiev from 1947 to 1960. The former St Nicholas's Roman Catholic Church (built in 1899–1909) was restored in 1979–80; it now houses the Republican Building of Organ and Chamber Music. The former St Alexander's Roman Catholic Church (built in 1817–42) has housed the Kiev Planetarium since 1952.

KIEV, ADMINISTRATIVE DIVISIONS

Raions

- |                    |                 |
|--------------------|-----------------|
| 1. Podilskyi       | 7. Leninskyi    |
| 2. Leninskyi       | 8. Moskovskyi   |
| 3. Pecherskyi      | 9. Minskyi      |
| 4. Shevchenkivskyi | 10. Radianskyi  |
| 5. Zaliznychnyi    | 11. Dniprovskyi |
| 6. Zhovtnevyi      | 12. Darnytskyi  |

Kiev's city raions. Contemporary metropolitan Kiev is divided into 12 city raions (administrative districts).

Leninskyi raion (est 1921; 2.9 sq km) is Kiev's central district and is the administrative, cultural, commercial, and tourist hub of Kiev. Located there on Khreshchatyk, Kiev's main boulevard, are the buildings of the central post office, the Kiev City Soviet, and various ministries. Kiev's oldest architecture (eg, the Golden Gate) is found on Volodymyrska Street, the former center of the upper city during the reigns of princes Volodymyr the Great and Yaroslav the Wise. Also located in the raion are Kiev University; the AN URSR Central Scientific Library, Presidium, and five institutes; three other research institutes; the Conservatory; the Medical, Food Industry, and Party History institutes; the Fomin Botanical Garden and Shevchenko Park; the Litterateurs', Composers', Scholars', Teachers', and Architect's buildings; the Shevchenko, Tychna, Russian Art, Western and Eastern Art, and Sports Fame museums; the Ukrainian Drama, Opera and Ballet, Drama and Comedy, Russian Drama, Puppet, and Young People's theaters; St Volodymyr's Cathedral; the Sports Palace; four hotels; eight cinemas; the Central Department Store and hundreds of stores; and monuments to T. Shevchenko, M. Lysenko, and I. Franko.

Pecherskyi raion (est 1921; 26.2 sq km) consists of the historical sites Pecherske, Lyvky, Vydubychi, Klov, Zvirynets, and Telychka along the Dnieper. Many landmarks and cultural, educational, and government buildings, and 17 industrial enterprises, are found there, including the Kievan Cave Historical-Cultural Preserve (the Cave Monastery) and Kievan Cave Fortress; the Transfiguration Church in the Berestiv district; Vydubychi Monastery; the ruins of St Michael's Golden-Domed Monastery; Askoldova Mohyla; monuments to Lesia Ukrainka, Magdeburg law, St Volodymyr, and the Unknown Soldier; the Kiev Culture, Light Industry, and Automobile and Roads institutes; 12 AN URSR institutes; 36 other research and planning and design institutes; the Central Republican Botanical Garden; the History Library; the Young Spectator's Theater; the Philharmonic; the Planetarium; the Ukrainian Art, Historical Treasures, Book and Book Printing, Ukrainian Decorative Folk Art, Lenin, Kosyi Kaponir, Theater, Music, and Cinema Arts museums; the former buildings of the Ukrainian Central Rada and Pedagogical Museum; the 18th-century Marinskyi and Klov palaces; the Council of Ministers and the Supreme Soviet of the Ukrainian SSR; Dynamo Stadium; Volodymyrska Hirka and five other parks; the Arsenal and Budindustriia plants; and cinemas.

Shevchenkivskyi raion (est 1937; 28.1 sq km) consists of part of the old upper city and the locales Lukianivka, Syrets, Nyvky, Berkovets, Vynohradar, and Babyn Yar. Landmarks there include the St Sophia Cathedral, Square, and Museum; St Andrew's Church; the B. Khmelnytsky, I. Kotliarevsky, and Babyn Yar monuments; Lukianivka Cemetery; the Art Institute; the Historical Museum, built where the Church of the Tithes once stood; the Trade and Industry Palace; the University Observatory; and Syrets Park. Eighteen industrial enterprises and 25 research and planning and design institutes are located in the raion.

Kiev: Bohdan Khmelnytsky Square

Podilskyi raion (est 1921; 88.6 sq km) consists of historic Podil and the locales Kurenivka, Vitriani Hory, and parts of Priorka, Pushcha-Vodytsia, Rybalky, and Trukhaniv Island. Located there are 50 industrial enterprises and associations, the River Station, the large Podil covered market, Spartak Stadium, Frunze Culture Park, and 2 research institutes. Notable landmarks include the building of the former Mohyla Academy, Kiev's first pharmacy (1728) and seminary, St Nicholas's Nabe-rezhna Church, St Elijah's Church, the Kyrylivska settlement, the Svitlytsky Museum, Flor Monastery, St Cyril's Church, St Constantine and Helen's Church, and the ruins of the Pyrohoshcha Church of the Dormition.

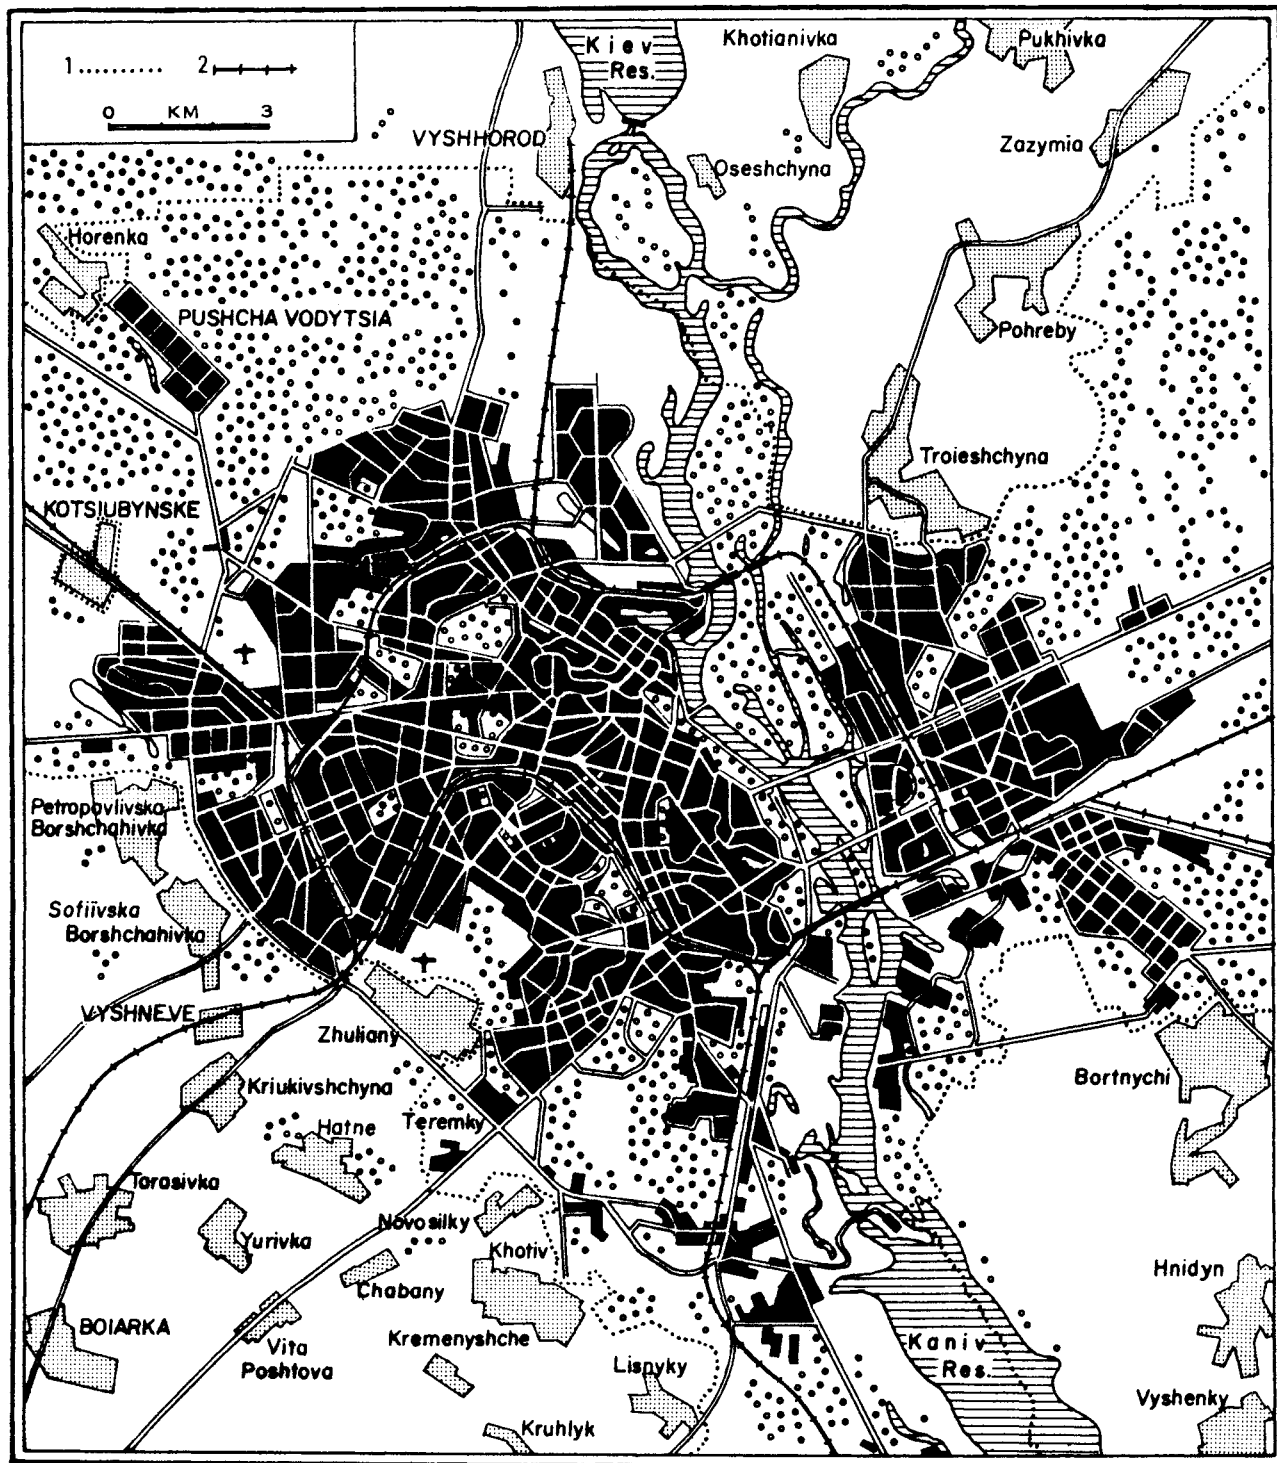

Minskyi raion (est 1975; 57.3 sq km), the newest and northernmost area of the city, consists of the locales of Obolon and Priorka. Located there are the Minskyi Masyv, Obolon, and Vynohradar apartment subdivisions; 40 industrial enterprises, including Europe's largest window-and-door-block manufacturing complex; the AN URSR Institute of Superhard Materials; and the Ukrainian Scientific-Research Institute of the Leather and Shoe Industry.

Radianskyi raion (est 1933; 13.7 sq km) is immediately west of the center. From 1965 to 1973 it was extended along Shevchenko Boulevard and Brest-Litovsk Avenue for 14 km to Nyvky. Located there are over 30 industrial enterprises, including the Polihrafknyha association and the Polihrafist and Radianska Ukraina printing complexes; 7 AN URSR institutes; the Kiev Medical, Theater Arts, National Economy, and Pedagogical institutes; 28 other research and planning and design institutes; the editorial offices of the Ukrainian Soviet Encyclopedia; the Kiev Artistic Film Studio; the Zoo; the Circus; Kiev's largest department store, Ukraina; the Republican Children's Library; the Historical Portrayal Theater; 3 stadiums; 2 sports complexes; a velodrome; and 3 parks.

Zhovtnevyi raion (est 1921; 12.1 sq km) is west and southwest of the center and consists of the locales Shuliavka, Galagany, Hrushky, and Karavaievi Dachi. Located there are the Nyvky and Vidradnyi apartment subdivisions, 30 industrial enterprises and associations, several research institutes, the Kiev Polytechnical and Civil-Aviation Engineers institutes, 2 stadiums, and 2 public swimming pools.

Leninhradskyi raion (est 1973; 111.7 sq km), the westernmost district, consists of the locales Bilychi, Katerynivka, Sviatoshyne, and Mykilska Borshchahivka. Located there are the Novobilychi, Mykilska Borshchahivka, and Akademmistechko apartment subdivisions; 30 industrial enterprises, including the Kiev Aviation Manufacturing Association; 8 AN URSR institutes; an institute of the USSR Ministry of Fisheries; 8 other research institutes; 2 stadiums; a sports complex; and a forest park.

Zaliznychnyi raion (est 1938; 23.7 sq km), to the southwest of the center, consists of the locales Solomianka,

KIEV SUBURBS, 1975

1. City limits

2. Railway lines

Chokolivka, Batyieva Hora, Oleksandrivska Slobidka, and Sovky. Located there are the Pershotravnevi, Solomianka, and Zaliznychnyi apartment subdivisions; 24 industrial enterprises, including railway-machine building and repair plants and a car plant; the Lysenko Museum;

31 research and planning institutes; the Kiev Civil-Engineering Institute; the Ministry of Health Protection institutes of Cardiology, Tuberculosis and Chest Surgery, and Epidemiology, Microbiology, and Parasitology; the Raduha Republican Mime Theater of the Ukrainian Society for the Deaf; 4 sports complexes; and 3 public swimming pools.

Kiev: a modern development in Rusanivka

Moskovskiyi raion (est 1921; 146 sq km), the southernmost district, consists of the locales Baikova Hora, Demiiivka, Saperna Slobidka, Holiisieve, Teremky, Korchuvate, Mysholovka, Kytaieve, Pyrohiv, Teofaniia, and Zhovtneve. Located there are 53 industrial enterprises; 38 planning institutes; a campus of Kiev University; the Kiev Institute of Physical Culture and Pedagogical Institute of Foreign Languages; the Ukrainian Agricultural Academy; the AN URSR Main Astronomical Observatory; 12 AN URSR institutes; a new building of the Central Scientific Library; the Republican Technical Library; the Studio of Chronicle and Documentary Films; the Operetta Theater; the Ukraina Palace of Culture; the Museum of Folk Architecture and Folkways; the Rylsky Museum; the Building of Chamber and Organ Music; the Exhibition of Economic Achievements of the Ukrainian SSR; Holiisieve Forest and Park; the historic Baikove Cemetery; the Kiev Hippodrome; a racetrack; the Avtovokzal bus station; the Republican Stadium (with a seating capacity of 100,000); and the first ice stadium in the USSR.

Darnytskyi raion (est 1935; 133.6 sq km), on the left bank, consists of Stara Darnytsia, Nova Darnytsia, Pizniaky, Chervonyi Khutir, Osokirky, and Lisky. Located there are the Berezniaky, Livoberezhnyi, and Rusanivka apartment subdivisions; 23 industrial enterprises; 8 research and planning institutes; 2 parks of culture and recreation; and the Ukrtefilm studio.

Dniprovskiyi raion (est 1969; 143.4 sq km), north of Darnytskyi raion on the left bank, consists of the locales Kylykove Pole, Bykivnia, Rybne, Voskresenska Slobidka, and Mykil'ska Slobidka. Located there are the apartment subdivisions Voskresenskyi, Lisovyi, Kom-somolskyi, Livoberezhnyi, and Sotsmistechko; enterprises of the light, chemical, energy, building-materials, and printing industries; the Kiev Studio of Popular Science Films; two central thermoelectric stations (TETs-4 and TETs-6); 14 research and planning institutes; the AN URSR Institute of Organic Chemistry; the Kiev Trade and Economics Institute; the Republican Sports School; 4 large parks; and forested areas.

Many monuments have been erected in Kiev's squares, parks, and other public places. The oldest are the monuments to Magdeburg law on the right bank of the Dnieper (by A. Melensky, 1802–8), St Volodymyr in Volodymyrska Hirka park (by P. Klodt and V. Demut-Malynovsky, 1853), and B. Khmelnytsky in St Sophia Square (by M. Mikeshein, 1888). Most have been erected in the Soviet period, particularly after the Second World War, to honor Ukrainian cultural and scholarly figures, Soviet political figures, and the heroes and victims of the Second World War. They include monuments to T. Shevchenko near Kiev University (1939), I. Franko near the Ukrainian Drama Theater (1956), O. Dovzhenko (1964), M. Lysenko (1965), Lesia Ukrainka (1965, 1973), M. Rylsky (1968), M. Zankovetska (1974), I. Kotliarevsky (1975), H. Skovoroda (1976), and the Founders of Kiev (1982). There are also commemorative plates on hundreds of buildings where prominent individuals lived.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Berlinskii, M. Kratkoe opisanie Kieva (St Petersburg 1820)
 Zakrevskii, N. Opisanie Kieva, 2 vols (Moscow 1868)
 Zakharchenko, M. Kiev teper i prezhde (Kiev 1888)
 Petrov, N. Istoriko-topograficheskie ocherki drevniago Kieva (Kiev 1897)
 Ikonnikov, V. Kiev v 1654–1855 godakh (Kiev 1904)
 Sherotskii, K. Kiev: Putevoditel' (Kiev 1917)
 Hrushevs'kyi, M. (ed). Kyiv ta ioho okolytsia v istorii i pam'iatkakh (Kiev 1926)
Novi studii z istorii Kyivva Volodymyra Ivanovycha Shcherbyny (Kiev 1926)
 Ernst, F. (ed). Kyiv: Providnyk (Kiev 1930)
 Hrushevs'kyi, M. (ed). Kyiv's'ki zbirnyky istorii i arkhelohii, pobutu i mystetstva, 1 (Kiev 1930)
 Voblyi, K. Kyiv: Sertse Ukrainy (Kiev 1944)
 Mikorskii, B. Razrushenie kul'turno-istoricheskikh pamiatnikov v Kieve v 1934–1936 godakh (Munich 1951)
 Forostiv's'kyi, L. Kyiv pid vorozhymy okupatsiiamy (Buenos Aires 1952)
 Povstenko, O. Zolotoverkhyi Kyiv (Washington 1954–62)
 Havryliuk, V.; Rechmedin, I. Pryroda Kyieva ta ioho okolyts' (Kiev 1957)
 Karger, M. Drevnii Kiev, 2 vols (Moscow-Leningrad 1958, 1961)
 Shul'kevych, M. Kyiv: Arkhitekturno-istorychnyi narys (Kiev 1958)
 Kasymenko, O. (ed). Istoriia Kyieva, 2 vols (Kiev 1960–1; Russian edn 1963–4)
 Braichevs'kyi, M. Koly i iak vynyk Kyiv (Kiev 1963)
 Shmorhun, P.; Korol'ov, B.; Kravchuk, M. Kyiv u tr'okh revoliutsiakh (Kiev 1963)
 Logvin, G. Kiev: Kniga-sputnik po gorodu Kievu, 2nd rev edn (Moscow 1967)
Istoria mist i sil Ukrain's'koi RSR: Kyiv (Kiev 1968; Russian edn 1979)
 Asieiev, Iu. Mystetstvo starodavn'oho Kyieva (Kiev 1969)
 Tolochko, P. Istorychna topohrafiia starodavn'oho Kyieva (Kiev 1970)
 Tolochko, P. (ed). Starodavnii Kyiv (Kiev 1975)
 – Arkheolohichni doslidzhennia starodavn'oho Kyieva (Kiev 1976)
 Belichko, Iu. Izobrazitel'noe iskusstvo Kieva (Moscow 1977)
Kyiv u tsyfrakh. Statystychnyi zbirnyk (Kiev 1977)
 Tolochko, P. (ed). Arkheolohiia Kyieva: Doslidzhennia i materialy (Kiev 1979)
Vulytsi Kyieva: Dovidnyk (Kiev 1979)
 Asieiev, Iu. Dzherela: Mystetstvo Kyiv's'koi Rusi (Kiev 1980)
 Khinkulov, L. Literaturni zustrichi: Rozpovidi pro pys'mennykiu u Kyievi (Kiev 1980)
 Tolochko, P. Kiev i Kievskaiia zemlia v epokhu feodal'noi razdroblennosti XII–XIII vekov (Kiev 1980)
 Borov's'kyi, Ia. Pokhodzhennia Kyieva: Istoriohrafiichnyi narys (Kiev 1981)
 Kudryts'kyi, A. (ed). Kyiv: Entsyklopedychnyi dovidnyk (Kiev 1981; Russian edn 1982)

- Tolochko, P. (ed). Novoe v arkhologii Kieva (Kiev 1981)
- Alferova, G.; Kharlamov, V. Kiev vo vtoroi polovine xvii veka: Istoriko-arkhitekturnyi ocherk (Kiev 1982)
- Aseev, Iu. Arkhitektura drevnego Kieva (Kiev 1982)
- Gupalov, K. Podol v drevnem Kieve (Kiev 1982)
- Hewryk, T. The Lost Architecture of Kiev (New York 1982)
- Ivakin, G. Kiev v XIII–xv vekakh (Kiev 1982)
- Kondufor, Iu. (ed). Istoriia Kyieva, 3 vols in 4 bks (Kiev 1982–6)
- Kudryts'kyi, A. (ed). Kyiv: Istorychnyi ohliad (karty, iliustratsii, dokumenty) (Kiev 1982)
- Logvin, G. Kiev, 3rd edn (Leningrad 1982)
- Shul'kevich, M.; Dmitrenko, T. Kiev: Arkhitekturno-istoricheskii ocherk, 6th edn (Kiev 1982)
- Aseev, Iu. (ed) Pamiatniki gradostroitel'stva i arkhitektury Ukrainskoi SSR, 1: Kyiv, Kievskaiia oblast' (Kiev 1983)
- Tolochko, P. Drevnii Kiev (Kiev 1983)
- Kovalevskii, B. (ed). Kiev v fondakh Tsentral'noi nauchnoi biblioteki AN USSR: Sbornik statei (Kiev 1984)
- Krashenninikov, S. Kyiv Shevchenkovykh chasiv (New York–Paris–Sydney–Toronto 1984)
- Tolochko, P. (ed). Drevnerusskii gorod (Materialy Vsesoiuznoi arkhologicheskoi konferentsii, posviashchennoi 1500-letiiu goroda Kieva) (Kiev 1984)
- Veremeeva, I. et al. Museums of Kiev: A Guide (Moscow 1984)
- Etnohrafiia Kyieva i Kyivshchyny: Tradytzii i suchasnist'* (Kiev 1986)
- Hamm, M.F. 'Continuity and Change in Late Imperial Kiev,' in The City in Late Imperial Russia, ed M.F. Hamm (Bloomington 1986)
- Kiev: Architectural Landmarks and Art Museums: An Illustrated Guide* (Leningrad 1987)
- V. Kubijovych, V. Pavlovsky, A. Zhukovsky

Kiev Academy. See Kievan Mohyla Academy.

Kiev Archeographic Commission (Vremennaia komissiiia dlia razbora drevnikh aktov). A government institution affiliated with the governor-general's office in Kiev. It was established in 1843 at the initiative of M. *Maksymovych and existed until 1917. The task of the commission was to collect, research, and publish documents found in government archives, monasteries, and private collections in Ukraine and elsewhere. It concentrated on materials pertaining to the history of Right-Bank Ukraine (the Kiev region, Volhynia, and Podilia). The government's intention was to demonstrate that this territory had been Russian since ancient times and to justify the policy of *Russification implemented there after the Polish uprising of 1830–1. But Ukrainian cultural figures such as M. Maksymovych, M. Ivanyshchyn, P. Kulish, T. Shevchenko, M. Sudiienko, and N. Rigelman, who were associated with the commission, made important contributions to Ukrainian studies, especially regarding historical and archeological research. Eventually, some outstanding scholars became associated with it, among them V. Antonovych, M. Vladimirsky-Budanov, S. Golubev, M. Hrushevsky, M. Dovnar-Zapolsky, I. Kamanin, V. Kordt, O. Levytsky, N. Molchanovsky, A. and M. Storozhenko, S. Ternovsky, and V. Shcherbyna. The commission published collections of documents in Ukrainian history, archeology, paleography, and cartography, including Drevnosti Iugo-Zapadnogo Kraia (Antiquities of the Southwestern Krai, 3 fascicles, 1846), Pamiatniki izdannye Kievskoi komissiei dlia razbora drevnikh aktov (Memoirs Published by the Kiev Commission for the Study of Ancient Documents, 4 vols, 1845, 1846, 1852, 1859), Arkhiv Iugo-Zapadnoi Rossii (Archives of Southwestern Russia, 45 vols in 8 series, 1859–1914), S. Velychko's (4 vols, 1848, 1851, 1855, 1864) and H. Hrabianka's (1853) chronicles, Materialy po istorii russkoi kartografii (Materials on the History of Russian Cartography, 2 vols, 1899, 1910), Paleograficheskii izbornik (A Paleographic Collection, 1899), Sbornik materialov dlia istoricheskoi topografii g. Kieva (A Collection of Materials for the Historical Topography of the City of Kiev, 1874), and Sbornik materialov po istorii Iugo-Zapadnoi Rossii (A Collection of Materials on the History of Southwestern Russia, 2 vols, 1914, 1916). In 1921 the commission was merged with the Archeographic Commission of the Ukrainian Academy of Sciences. See also *Archeographic commissions and *Archeography.

A. Zhukovsky

Kiev Archeological Institute (Kyivskiyi arkhelohichnyi instytut). An institution of higher learning founded in 1918 by a group of Kiev University professors headed by M. Dovnar-Zapolsky. At first the institute had two departments – archeology-history and archeography – and was one of the few institutions in Ukraine offering instruction in these disciplines. Reorganized several times beginning in 1920, in 1922 it was officially subordinated to the Ukrainian Academy of Sciences and F. Schmidt was appointed director. Other prominent scholars associated with the institute included S. Maslov, D. Shcherbakivsky, H. Pavlutsky, and N. Polonska-Vasylenko. The institute was abolished in 1925.

Kiev Army Group (Kyivska hrupa, aka Tsentralna armiiska hrupa). Formed in August 1919 under the command of Brig Gen A. Kravs, it consisted of the First and Third Corps of the Ukrainian Galician Army, the Zaporozhian Corps of the UNR Army, the insurgent units of otamans Sokolovsky and Mordalevych, and three artillery regiments. It was one of the three groups that were assigned the task of capturing Kiev. This task was accomplished on 30 August 1919.

Kiev Art School (Kyivske khudozhnie uchylshche). A secondary art school that operated in Kiev from 1900 to 1920. During its first year it offered temporary classes in painting, drawing, and sketching. In 1901 the classes were reorganized into a regular program and the school was placed under the control of the St Petersburg Academy of Arts. It attracted students from the *Kiev Drawing School, reaching an enrollment of over 500 by 1902. It had a department of painting and of architecture. The school was organized by V. Menk, V. Nikolaev (director to 1911), V. Orlovsky, M. Pymonenko, Kh. Platonov, and I. Seleznev. Its faculty included F. Balavensky, M. Boichuk, H. Diadchenko, M. Kozyk, F. Krasysky, F. Krychevsky, and O. Murashko. Among its graduates were A. Archipenko, I. Kavaleridze, L. Lozovsky, I. Padalka, A. Petrytsky, and V. Sedliar.

Kiev Artistic Film Studio (Kyivska kinostudiia khudozhnikh filmiv im. O. Dovzhenka). The chief motion-picture studio in Ukraine, established in 1928 as the Kiev Film Factory of the All-Ukrainian Photo-Cinema Administration (vufku). In 1930 it was renamed Ukrainfilm and in 1939 the Kiev Film Studio. The studio has a special department for television films, a museum (est 1957) for preserving the legacy of O. *Dovzhenko and other filmmakers, a permanent museum exhibition opened in 1962, and a film acting theater (est 1978). It conducts scientific research to improve the technology of filming and production. The studio is best known for its silent films, including D. Vertov's Liudyna z kinoaparatom (Man with a Movie Camera, 1929), a masterpiece of documentary filmmaking; and O. Dovzhenko's Zemlia (The Earth, 1930), the first film of the poetic cinema genre. The first sound films made at the studio were D. Vertov's Symfoniia Donbasu (Symphony of the Donbas, 1930) and O. Dovzhenko's Ivan (1932). The first Ukrainian color film was shot there – M. Ekk's Sorochyns'kyi iarmarok (The Sorochyntsi Fair, 1939). Many distinguished Ukrainian film directors worked at the studio: O. Dovzhenko, D. Vertov, I. Kavalieridze, I. Savchenko, H. Chukhrai, Yu. Illienko, and L. Osyka. Well-known cameramen such as D. Demutsky, M. Kauffman, Yu. Yekelchik, and Yu. Illienko were associated with the studio. Stage and film actors such as A. Buchma, S. Bondarchuk, Yu. Shumsky, I. Zamyckovsky, M. Nademsky, D. Kapka, I. Mykolaichuk, O. Hai, S. Shahaida, S. Shkurat, and N. Uzhvii starred in its productions. A number of films produced by the studio won international film awards: S. Paradzhanov's Tini zabutykh predkiv (Shadows of Forgotten Ancestors) at Mar del Plata, Argentina, and Rome in 1965, and Yu. Illienko's Bilyi ptakh z chornoiu oznakoiu (White Bird with a Black Mark) at Moscow in 1971. In 1958 O. Dovzhenko's Zemlia was named one of the 12 best films of all times by a panel of international film critics at the World Fair in Brussels. A large part of the studio's production consists of Russian and so-called counterpropaganda films. Seldom do its latest Ukrainian releases approach in quality Yu. Illienko's Lehenda pro kniahyniu Ol'hu (The Legend about Princess Olha, 1983).

V. Revutsky

Kiev Astronomical Observatory (Kyivska astronomichna observatoriia). A research institution of Kiev University founded in 1845. It consists of two separate facilities: one at Lisnyky and the other at Pylypovychi in Kiev oblast. The observatory is equipped with advanced astronomical instruments, including a meridian circle, astrograph, horizontal solar telescope, photospheric-chromospheric telescope, and meteor cameras. Besides mapping celestial bodies and tracking artificial earth satellites, the observatory conducts research on solar activity and solar forecasting. Noted astronomers such as V. Fedorov, R. Fogel, A. Shydlovsky, M. Khandrykov, S. Vsekhsviatsky, and O. Bohorodsky have worked there.

Kiev Automobile and Roads Institute (Kyivskyi avtomobilno-dorozhnyi instytut). A technical institution of higher education under the jurisdiction of the Ministry of Higher and Specialized Secondary Education of the Ukrainian SSR. Formed in 1944, it consists of the following departments: road building, automobile technology, mechanical engineering, engineering and economics, general technology, and qualifications upgrading. It has a graduate program. In 1980 its enrollment was 5,000.

Kiev Aviation Manufacturing Association (Kyivske aviatsiine vyrobnyche ob'iednannia im. 50-richchia zhovtnia). An airplane construction plant established in 1920 as the Rembovitria-6 plant; it assumed its present name in 1974. Originally the plant concentrated on repair work and the production of spare parts. Plane and glider construction began in 1923 under the direction of K. Kalinin. The first Soviet-designed plane, the K-1, was built here in 1925, as well as the first helicopter (1946) and the first airplane designed by O. Antonov, the AN-2 (1948). The conglomerate is one of the largest such plants in Ukraine, specializing in the construction of AN-24, AN-26, and AN-30 airplanes, many of which are exported abroad.

Kiev Branch of the Central V.I. Lenin Museum (Kyivskyi filial Tsentralnoho muzeiu V.I. Lenina). A museum dedicated to V. Lenin, established in 1938 by the Central Committee of the CPU. Until 1982 it was located in the former Pedagogical Museum, which also served as the *Central Rada's headquarters in 1917–18. Of the museum's total holdings of over 40,000 exponents, 8,000 items are on permanent display. These include works by and about Lenin, copies of his letters and telegrams, various documents on the activities of Ukrainian Bolsheviks and the CPU, and other memorabilia.

Kiev Brotherhood. See Kiev Epiphany Brotherhood.

Kiev Central Archive of Old Documents (Kyivskyi Tsentralnyi arkhiv davnikh aktiv). An archive founded in 1852 as the Central Archive of Old Record Books at Kiev University by the Temporary Commission for the Analysis of Old Documents (later the *Kiev Archeographic Commission) to collect and preserve 15th- to 18th-century documents and archives from Right-Bank Ukraine. By 1890 the archive contained 5,883 court record books and some 500,000 other documents. The material in the archive was used by the commission in the compilation and publication of **Arkhiv Iugo-zapadnoi Rossii* and its other publications. From 1921 to 1923 it was under the jurisdiction of the VUAN and after that, the state archival system. In the interwar years the archive assumed its present name and was enriched with other valuable documents and several family archives. During the Second World War, many of the documents were destroyed and part of the archive was taken by the Germans to the West. Most of the evacuated materials were recovered and returned to Kiev, where they are now housed in the *Central State Historical Archive of the Ukrainian SSR in Kiev.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Romanovs'kyi, V. (ed). Tsentral'nyi arkhiv starodavnikh aktiv u Kyievi. Zbirnyk stattiiv (Kiev, 1929)

Kiev Choreography School (Kyivske khoreorafichne uchylshche). Specialized secondary school under the Ministry of Culture of the Ukrainian SSR formed in 1938 out of the Ballet Studio of the Kiev Theater of Opera and Ballet (est 1934) and the Kiev Choreography Tekhnikum (est 1933). Since 1972 it has had two departments: classical ballet and folk dance. The school offers an eight-year program. Most of its principals – L. Zhukov (1938–41), A. Berezova (1945–66), and A. Vasylieva (1966–72) – were graduates of the Leningrad Choreography School, and passed on to their students the Russian tradition of classical ballet. The faculty included such teachers as P. Virsky, O. Potapova, B. Tairov, and A. Yarygina. Among its graduates are such well-known dancers as R. Khyloko,

A. Havrylenko, L. Herasymchuk, V. Kalynovska, V. Kovtun, S. Kolyvanova, V. Kotliar, O. Kovalov, and A. Lahoda.

Kiev Chronicle (Kyivs'kyi litopys). One of the *chronicles, an important historical and literary monument of Kievan Rus'. Together with Nestor's **Povist' vremennykh lit* (Tale of Bygone Years) and the *Galician-Volhynian Chronicle it composes the *Hypatian Chronicle. The Kiev Chronicle covers the period from 1118 to 1200. It was compiled in the Vydubychi Monastery in Kiev using princely, monastery, and family chronicles and stories and accounts by various authors collected in Kiev, Chernihiv, Pereiaslav, Galicia, and Volhynia. Some sections were copied from the lost Chernihiv Chronicle and lost parts of the Galician Chronicle. Later, sections of the Kiev Chronicle were included in the Novgorod Chronicles.

The Kiev Chronicle is not a homogenous work, although there is a certain stylistic unity. In addition to short chronological entries, it contains accounts of the fate of Prince Iziaslav Mstyslavych, the killing of Prince Ihor Olhovych (1147), the death of Prince Rostyslav Mstyslavych (1168), the killing of Prince Andrei Bogoliubskii (1175), and the campaign of Prince Ihor Sviatoslavych (1185). The chronicle ends with a eulogy to Prince Riuryk Rostyslavych by Moses, the hegumen of Vydubychi Monastery. The entries for 1188 and 1190 are devoted to the crusades led by Frederick I Barbarossa. An account of the death of the Pereiaslav prince Volodymyr Hlibovych (ca 1187) contains the first use of the word Ukraina (Ukraine) to refer to the southern territories of Rus'.

Stylistically, the Kiev Chronicle resembles the embellished style of the **Slovo o polku Ihorevi*. One of the outstanding features of the chronicle is the frequent use of dialogue to recount events. The tone of the chronicle is secular, although most of its authors were clerics. Military themes are very common, especially in the descriptions of the internecine struggles between the princes of Rus' for control over Kiev. Chivalry, glory, and honor are seen to influence the princes' conduct as much as material interests, and they are often portrayed as 'Christian knights' who appeal for God's help in the conviction that victory will come to those who fight for a just cause. At the same time, they exhibit a certain Rus' patriotism, even when this is combined with more narrow and local political goals.

The Kiev Chronicle was studied by M. Hrushevsky, M. Priselkov, D. Likhachev, B. Rybakov, A. Shakhmatov, and D. Chyzhevsky. Its relationship to Ukrainian historiography was examined by D. Bahalii and P. Klepatsky. It was published several times as part of the Hypatian Chronicle and a Ukrainian translation appeared in the journal Kyiv, 1984, nos 6-8. An English translation by L. Heinrich was published in 1978.

The so-called Short Kiev Chronicle is a 16th-century chronicle compiled mainly from Novgorod sources. It describes events in late 15th-century Ukraine and includes a panegyric to Prince K. Ostrozsky on the occasion of his victory over a Muscovite army in Orsha in 1515.

D. Chyzhevsky, A. Zhukovsky

Kiev Circus. The first wooden circus buildings were erected in Kiev in the 1860s. In the early 1870s a brick amphitheater was built for the circus. The horse trainer

P. Krutikov built an amphitheater with 200 seats in 1890 and the Hippo Palace with 2,000 seats in 1903. Because of its excellent acoustics, this palace, the first two-story circus in Europe, served also as a concert and opera hall. It was destroyed during the Second World War. In the 1950s, circus performances were staged only in the summer. In 1960 a new building with 2,000 seats, one of the largest in the Soviet Union, was designed for the Kiev Circus by V. Zhukov. It contains not only an amphitheater but also a circus museum.

Kiev Civil-Engineering Institute (Kyivskyi inzhenerno-budivelnyi instytut). A technical institution of higher education under the Ministry of Higher and Specialized Secondary Education of the Ukrainian SSR. Formed in 1930 out of two departments of the Kiev Polytechnical Institute and the architecture department of the Kiev State Art Institute, it consists of departments such as civil engineering, architecture, construction, automatization and mechanization, urban planning, building technology, and sanitary engineering. It has a special preparatory department for foreign students, a graduate program, and a professional development program for teachers of specialized secondary and higher schools. In 1980 its enrollment was over 10,000.

Kiev Club of Russian Nationalists (Russian: Klub russkikh natsionalistov). A political and cultural organization established in 1908 to promote Russian national consciousness in the western borderlands and to defend Russian interests against 'Polish pressure and Ukrainophilism.' Headed by such noted Ukrainophobes as A. Savenko, Professor T. *Florinsky, V. Shulgin, I. Rakovich, and D. Pikhno, the publisher of the Russian nationalist daily **Kievlianin* and a member of the State Council, the club became one of the most powerful pressure groups in the Russian Empire owing to the unusually energetic political activity of its leadership and the social prominence of its members.

At its height, it numbered some 700 members, largely drawn from the Russian and Russified elite of Kiev. The club also cultivated a wide range of contacts with other conservative organizations and leaders throughout the empire, such as M. Menshikov, the influential columnist for the St Petersburg Novoe vremia and founder of the All-Russian National Union; Count A. Bobrinsky, president of the Congress of United Nobility; and Count V. Bobrinsky, head of the St Petersburg-based Galician-Russian Society.

From its inception, the Kiev Club of Russian Nationalists devoted considerable attention to Duma and local politics and was regarded as a relatively moderate element within the spectrum of Russian nationalist organizations because of its willingness to work within the new constitutional framework. The Nationalist party, founded in 1909 and a leading force in the Third and Fourth Dumas, was dominated by club members and their concerns. In 1909-12 the club lobbied to increase the political and economic positions of Russians in Right-Bank Ukraine and Belorussia and actively campaigned to restrict, by law, Jewish participation in trade and local politics.

The Kiev Club stood at the forefront of the struggle against the Ukrainian national movement before 1917. One of its first actions was a motion condemning the 1908 Duma bill to introduce Ukrainian as a language of instruction in elementary schools. Club leaders like Savenko and Florinsky always drew a sharp distinction, however, between the 'Mazepists,' ie, the Ukrainian intelligentsia, and the Ukrainian masses, considering the latter to be essentially loyal constituents of the all-Russian nation. Through its publications and lecture program, as well as newspaper articles in Kievlianin and Novoe vremia, the club attempted to raise public awareness concerning the dangers of the Ukrainian movement, which it viewed as a Polish-Austrian-German-Jewish intrigue. Kiev Club members also worked behind the scenes, with some success, to pressure the administration to close down Ukrainian organizations (the Kiev Ukrainian Club, 1912) and periodicals (Rada, 1914), and to prevent any public commemoration of the 50th anniversary of T. Shevchenko's death (1911) or the 100th anniversary of the poet's birth (1914). The government decision to shut down all Ukrainian institutions in January 1915 was the culmination of this campaign.

From 1909 to 1914 the club published five volumes of Sbornik kluba russkikh natsionalistov (Collection of the Club of Russian Nationalists). During the First World War, it gradually lapsed into inactivity, though formally the club continued to exist until 1917.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Storozhenko, A. Proiskhozhdenie i sushchnost' Ukrainofil'stva (Kiev 1912)
 Chykalenko, Ie. Shchodennyk, 1907-1917 (Lviv 1931)
 Edelman, R. Gentry Politics on the Eve of the Russian Revolution: The Nationalist Party, 1907-1977 (New Brunswick, NJ 1980)
 O. Andriewsky

Kiev Commercial Institute (Kyivskiy komertsiiyny instytut). A higher school of commerce and economics in Kiev founded in 1906 by M. Dovnar-Zapolsky as the Higher Commercial Courses and converted into an institute in 1908. Its charter was approved by the government in 1912. The institute consisted of two departments - commerce and technology, and economics - and a number of subdepartments such as railroads, insurance, banking, and pedagogy. It had laboratories, a museum, and library. Its director was M. Dovnar-Zapolsky, and many of its faculty were professors of Kiev University or Kiev Polytechnical Institute. It published its own scientific proceedings. In 1914 the enrollment was 4,000. Each year about 30 students were sent abroad for practical research. In 1920 the institute was reorganized into the Kiev Institute of the National Economy.

Kiev Commune. A group of Kievan populists (see *Populism) that existed from September 1873 until the end of 1874 when it had to stop its activity as a result of mass arrests. Ideologically, it was mainly influenced by M. Bakunin. The commune recruited its members (they numbered approx 30) from among the intelligentsia and the students of Kiev University; they included V. Debohorii-Mokriievych and Ya. Stefanovych. The members propagated populist and socialist ideas among the workers and peasants of the Kiev, Poltava, and Podilia regions, and the group maintained ties with populist circles in Kharkiv, Odessa, St Petersburg, and elsewhere.

Kiev Conservatory (Kyivska konservatoriia im. P. Chaikovskoho). A higher music school under the Ministry of Culture of the Ukrainian SSR. It was formed in 1913 out of the Kiev School of Music, which had existed from 1868 under the Kiev Branch of the Russian Music Society. The first principals were V. Pukhalsky (1913) and R. Glière (1914-20). In 1925 the conservatory was turned into a music tekhnikum, and it was restored in 1934. Today it is the largest music school and research center in Ukraine. It has six faculties: piano, vocal music, orchestra, conducting, composition, and history and theory, and an enrollment of 900 students (1980). Such distinguished Ukrainian musicologists and composers as L. Revutsky, B. Liatoshynsky, A. Shtoharenko, I. Patorzhynsky, and K. Dankevych have served on its faculty. Many of its graduates have distinguished themselves as musicians and composers; eg, H. and P. Maiboroda, D. Hnatiuk, Ye. Miroshnychenko, M. Kondratiuk, A. Filipenko, O. Bilash, and V. Kyreiko.

Kiev Conservatory

Kiev Construction- and Road-Machine-Building Plant. See Chervonyi Ekskavator.

Kiev Contract Fair in Podil (second building, 1817)

Kiev Contract Fair (Kyivskiy kontraktovyi yarmarok). An annual *contract fair held in Kiev from 1798 to 1927. It was transferred from Dubno in 1797 by Tsar Paul I to enliven the economic life of Kiev. The fair was first combined with the existing Vodokhreshchenskiy (Blessing of Water) Fair held during the Feast of the Epiphany (from 15 January to 1 February). From the middle of the 19th century, when the fair was held from 5 to 25 February, during the Feast of Christ's presentation at the Temple, it was also called the Stritenskiy (Candlemas) Fair. After a fire in 1811 destroyed the first hall built for the fair in 1801, in 1817 it moved to a two-story building designed by V. Heste and located in the center of Podil, the main trade sector in Kiev. The fair was an important commercial institution attended by merchants from throughout the Russian Empire and abroad and by burghers and estate owners, especially from Right-Bank Ukraine. The main objects of trade were wheat, manufactured goods, and, from 1840, sugar. In 1862 sales totaled 915,000 rubles. In addition, various financial matters were settled: loans and credit were secured, agreements for the future delivery of goods were concluded, and land was sold or leased. The importance of the fair fluctuated because of competition from fairs in Kharkiv and elsewhere; at the end of the 19th century 5–6 million rubles' worth of goods were traded at the Kiev fair. By that time it had lost most of its importance as a contract fair and had become a regular wholesale fair. Under Soviet rule the significance of the fair continued to decline steadily until it was finally closed in 1927.

B. Krawchenko

Kiev Cossacks (Kyivska kozachchyna). Term given to a peasant revolt that began in Vasylykiv county in February 1855 and spread throughout the Kiev and Chernihiv regions. It lasted until the summer of 1855 and affected more than 500 villages. It began when Tsar Nicholas I issued a manifesto appealing to the population to join the army to fight in the Crimean War. Many peasants did not understand the vague wording of the manifesto, and rumors began to circulate that the tsar wished them to organize Cossack regiments and that he would restore to them the privileges of the Cossack estate. The peasants refused to do corvée and to follow the orders of local authorities; some village hromady even seized control of the estates. In several areas the peasants beat the local priests, whom they accused of hiding the true manifesto granting their freedom. The revolt was eventually brutally suppressed by the army, and many of the leaders were beaten or deported to Siberia. According to official data, 39 people died, but the death toll was probably much higher. Although the Kiev Cossack movement was primarily a reaction against the inhuman conditions of serfdom, it nevertheless revealed the strength of Cossack traditions and consciousness among the Ukrainian peasantry in the 19th century.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Tomashivs'kyi, S. Kyivs'ka kozachchyna 1855 r. (Lviv 1902)
 Shamrai, S. Kyivs'ka kozachchyna 1855 roku (Do istorii selians'kykh rukhiv na Kyivshchyni) (Kiev 1928)
 Hurzhii, I. Borot'ba selian i robitnykiv Ukraïny proty feodal'no-kryposnyts'koho hnytu (z 80-ky rokiv xviii st. do 1861 r.) (Kiev 1958)

A. Zhukovsky

Kiev Division (Kyivska dyvizia). Formed in the summer of 1919 under the command of Otaman Yu. Tiutiunyk, it was eventually designated as the Fourth Kiev Rifle Division of the UNR Army. It participated in the First Winter Campaign of 1919–20 and fought Bolshevik forces until the end of 1920.

Kiev Drawing School (Kyivska rysuvalna shkola). An art school that for one generation (1875–1901) played an important role in the development of art in Russian-ruled Ukraine. Founded and directed by M. Murashko, it was first a private and then a city school. Most of its financial support came from I. Tereshchenko. Its faculty included M. Murashko, M. Pymonenko, Kh. Platonov, and I. Seleznov. Its more distinguished students were S. Kostenko, O. Murashko, I. Izhakevych, H. Diadchenko, H. Svitlytsky, M. Zhuk, and F. Krasysky. The school received support from non-Ukrainian artists such as N. Ge, I. Repin, M. Vrubel, and J. Stanislawski. Its teachers and pupils took part in the restoration of the frescoes of the Church of St Cyril's Monastery and in the painting of St Volodymyr's Cathedral in Kiev. Exhibitions of Ukrainian and Russian artists were held at the school.

Kiev Druzhba Theater (Kyivskyi teatr Druzhba). Founded in October 1979 by the Ukrainian Theatrical Society to present in Kiev the better plays of the USSR satellite countries and to promote Ukrainian plays outside Soviet Ukraine. So far, however, most of its imports have been productions by Russian (music and drama) theaters from Moscow and Leningrad. Guest performances have been given also by the Georgian Rustaveli Theater, the Estonian Vanemuine Theater, the Lithuanian Panevėžys Theater, and the Latvian Rainis Theater. No tours of the Druzhba Theater have been mentioned in the press. The director of the theater is M. Ravytsky.

Kiev eparchy. An eparchy of the Ukrainian church created after the Christianization of Ukraine in 988. Its bishop was also the Kievan metropolitan (see *Kiev metropolity) and head of the entire Ukrainian church province. The eparchy was one of the largest in Kievan Rus', its territory corresponding to the territory of *Kiev principality, centered primarily on the Right Bank. With the partition of Ukraine between Muscovy and Poland in the mid-17th century, most of the territory of the eparchy remained under Polish control, although the see was in the Russian-dominated Hetmanate. In the early 18th century the Kiev metropolity was abolished and the eparchy was placed directly under the Russian Holy Synod until 1743, when the metropolity was restored. After the incorporation of Right-Bank Ukraine into the Russian Empire, the eparchy's territory corresponded to the territory of *Kiev gubernia, created in 1797. Vicariates of the eparchy were established in Chyhyryn (1799), Uman (1874), and Kaniv (1884). From 1861 the eparchy published the journal Kievskie eparkhial'nye vedomosti, which contained much information on the history of the church and the Kiev region in general.

As the central eparchy in Ukraine and the metropolitan's see, Kiev eparchy contained many of the most important church institutions in Ukraine. Its 21 men's and 6 women's monasteries (1914) included the Kievan Cave, St Nicholas's, St Michael's Golden-Domed, Kiev Epiphany Brotherhood, St Flor's, Vydubychi, and Mezhyhiria Transfiguration monasteries. The Kievan Mohyla Academy (later the Kiev Theological Academy) and the Kiev Theological Seminary were also located there, and in 1913 there were six other higher schools administered by the eparchy. The eparchy's 1,710 churches (in 1913) were served by 1,435 priests.

In the 1920s there was a Kiev 'regional church' or eparchy of the *Ukrainian Autocephalous Orthodox church under Metropolitan V. Lypkivsky; it was liquidated along with the entire church in the 1930s. Since 1944 the eparchy has been under the Russian Orthodox church, and since 1966 the bishop has been F. Denysenko.

B. Balan

Kiev Epiphany Brotherhood (Kyivske Bohoiavlenske bratstvo). A church *brotherhood established ca 1615 at the *Kiev Epiphany Brotherhood Monastery in the Podil district by wealthy burghers, nobles, clerics, and Cossacks to defend the Orthodox faith from the onslaught of Polish rule and Catholicism. Hetman P. Sahaidachny gave it a great deal of support and joined it 'with the entire Zaporozhian Host' in 1620. That same year the Orthodox Kiev metropolity was restored and the brotherhood acquired stauropigion status and the right to establish a 'brotherhood for young men' from the visiting patriarch of Jerusalem, Theophanes. The Polish king Sigismund III granted the brotherhood a royal charter in 1629. The brotherhood became a cultural and educational center in Kiev. Many of Ukraine's leading figures were affiliated with it. To promote education, it founded the *Kiev Epiphany Brotherhood School in 1615. Granted a charter by Theophanes in 1620 to teach 'Helleno-Slavonic and Latin-Polish letters,' in 1631 the school was merged with the Kievan Cave Monastery School to form a college, which later became the *Kievan Mohyla Academy. Clerical involvement in the brotherhood forced its lay members – the burghers – into a secondary role. The brotherhood's 'elder brother,' Metropolitan P. *Mohyla, subordinated the brotherhood to the clergy in 1633, and the Epiphany Monastery gradually took over its functions.

Kiev Epiphany Brotherhood Monastery in the 1880s; the church and belfry were demolished by the Soviet authorities in 1935

Kiev Epiphany Brotherhood Monastery (Kyievo-Bratskyi or Bohoiavlenskyi manastyr). An Orthodox monastery established in 1616 in Kiev's Podil district after the noblewoman Ye. (H.) *Hulevychivna donated a lot and orchard for this purpose (15 October 1615). The *Kiev Epiphany Brotherhood, which was affiliated with the monastery, had built the original *Kiev Epiphany Brotherhood School on an adjacent lot in 1615. The Epiphany Church of the monastery was built in 1693. The monastery owned extensive property donated to it by Kievan metropolitans (P. Mohyla and R. Zaborovsky) and by Cossack hetmans (B. Khmelnytsky and I. Mazepa). The rector of the brotherhood school (later the *Kievan Mohyla Academy) was also the hegumen (from 1731, archimandrite) of the monastery; T. Prokopovych was its most famous hegumen. The monastery declined after its property was secularized in 1786. Its buildings on Alexander Square were destroyed several times during wars and by fire (1651, 1655, 1811). Hetman P. Sahaidachny and V. Hryhorovych-Barsky were buried at the monastery.

Kiev Epiphany Brotherhood School (Kyivska bratska shkola). One of the most important Orthodox *brotherhood schools in Ukraine. It was founded in 1615–16 by the *Kiev Epiphany Brotherhood, shortly after the brotherhood itself was organized. Modeled on the *Lviv Dormition Brotherhood School, its purpose was to diminish the enrollment of Orthodox children in Catholic schools. The school was open to boys from all estates. Its liberal arts program emphasized Church Slavonic and Greek. Its instructors came from Western Ukraine; they were graduates of the Ostrih Academy, the Lviv Dormition Brotherhood School, and various Polish and German institutions of higher learning. The school's rectors were prominent Orthodox churchmen and scholars: Y. Boretsky (1615–18), M. Smotrytsky (1618–20), K. Sakovych (1620–4), and T. Yevlevych (1628–32). Among its graduates were a number of prominent scholars and cultural figures of the 17th century. The school greatly benefited from Hetman P. Sahaidachny's protection and the financial support of the Epiphany Brotherhood. Patriarch Theophanes of Jerusalem, who visited Kiev in 1620, granted stauropigion to the Epiphany Brotherhood and praised its educational work. In 1632 the school was merged with the Kievan Cave Monastery School, which had been founded shortly before then by Archimandrite P. Mohyla, to form the Kievan Mohyla College (later the *Kievan Mohyla Academy).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Kharlampovich, K. Zapadnorusskie pravoslavnyie shkoly xvi i nachala xvii veka (Kazan 1898)
Isaievych, Ia. Bratstva ta ikh rol' v rozvytku ukrains'koi kul'tury xvi-xvii st. (Kiev 1966)

N. Pylypiuk

Kiev Graphic Arts and Printing School (Kyivska shkola hrafiky i drukarskoi spravy). A vocational art school founded in 1903 and directed by V. Kulzhenko, a graduate of the Leipzig Polygraphic Academy. Artists such as F. Krasysky, O. Sudomora, and H. Zolotov served on its faculty. Fine art publications were printed in the school's workshop. It closed in 1918.

Kiev gubernia. An administrative-territorial unit in Russian-ruled Ukraine. From 1708, it existed alongside the regimental system of the Hetmanate in Left-Bank Ukraine and in the non-Ukrainian territories of the Kursk, Briansk, and Orel regions. From 1719 the gubernia consisted of Kiev, Belgorod, Sevsk, and Orel provinces. The governor-general resided in Kiev. The Russian palatines and garrisons in Kiev, Pereiaslav, Nizhen, and Chernihiv were under his authority, but the administrative bodies of the Hetmanate were not. In 1781 the gubernia was replaced by Kiev vicegerency, which was abolished in 1796 after the second partition of Poland (1793) and replaced by a new gubernia, this time in Right-Bank Ukraine, on the territory of the former counties of Kiev vicegerency and one county of Volhynia vicegerency. From 1800 the gubernia's territory (50,957 sq km) was divided among 12 counties: Kiev, Vasylkiv, Zvenyhorodka, Radomyshl, Skvyra, Kaniv, Lypovets, Berdychiv, Cherkasy, Chyhyryn, Tarashcha, and Uman. Under Soviet rule, in 1925 the gubernia was abolished and replaced by Bila Tserkva, Berdychiv, Cherkasy, Kiev, and Uman okruhas.

The gubernias's population grew from 1,066,200 in 1811 to 1,459,800 in 1838, 1,635,800 in 1851, 2,012,100 in 1863, 2,847,600 in 1885, 3,559,200 in 1897, and 4,792,600 in 1914. It declined during the First World War and the revolutionary period. It was 4,258,800 in 1920 and 4,635,700 in 1924. In 1914 the population consisted of Ukrainians (78 percent), Jews (12 percent), Russians (7 percent), Poles (2 percent), and Germans (0.4 percent). The gubernia had the second-largest percentage of urban dwellers among the Ukrainian gubernias in 1914 – 18 percent, which rose to 25.4 percent in 1924. Ukrainians composed 51 percent of the urban population in 1923; Jews, 28.5 percent; and Russians, 16.5 percent. A large part of the urban population (48.3 percent in 1897) was born outside the gubernia.

The gubernia was primarily an agricultural region. In 1905 peasants (78 percent of the population) owned only 45.6 percent of the land; 45 percent was still owned by the gentry. Land hunger and poverty forced the peasants to seek seasonal work in Southern Ukraine and in the mines of the Donbas (200,000 annually) or to resettle in Siberia and the Far East (over 148,000 peasants resettled there in 1896–1912). Industry, with the exception of beet-sugar processing (in which the gubernia placed first in the empire), distilling, and flour milling, was poorly developed. There were only 75,700 industrial workers in the gubernia in 1912.

R. Senkus, A. Zhukovsky

Kiev Hills (Kyivski hory). Forming the eastern edge of the Dnieper Upland, the Kiev Hills near Kiev reach an elevation of 200 m and descend steeply to the Dnieper River (at 100 m). They are built of Tertiary and Quaternary strata (marls, clays, and sands) that are overlain with loess and dissected by rivers and ravines.

Kiev Historical Museum. See Historical Museum of the Ukrainian SSR.

Kiev hoards (Kyivski skarby). Treasures from the time of Kievan Rus' found in Kiev at various times since the 19th century. Over 50 hoards have been discovered, 48 of which were concealed during the Mongol siege of Kiev in 1240. The largest hoard was found in 1842 near the Church of the Tithes. Most of the hoards were found within the medieval inner city (ditynets), where the prince and boyars lived. The hoards consisted of Arab dirhems, silver **hryvnia*, and gold and silver bracelets, rings, necklaces, collars, earrings, and diadems. Some contained hundreds and even thousands of such articles. Most of these artifacts are preserved at the Museum of Historical Treasures in Kiev.

Kiev Hromada. See Hromada of Kiev.

Kiev Hydroelectric Station (Kyivska hidroelektrostantsiia im. Leninskoho komsomolu). Part of the *Dnieper Cascade of Hydroelectric Stations, the station was constructed between 1960 and 1968 on the Dnieper River near the city of Vyshhorod. With 20 generators, the Kiev HES has a capacity of 361,200 kW and an average annual output of 767 million kWh. Besides the station building, the Kiev HES includes 75 km of dams, which hold back the waters of the Kiev Reservoir, and a one-chamber lock.

The Kiev HES has a history of worker resistance to the Soviet regime's economic and nationality policies. In 1968 former workers of the station – Nazarenko, Kondriukov, and Karpenko – were arrested by the KGB for distributing leaflets at Kiev University and the Kiev Agricultural Academy calling for resistance to forced Russification. In May 1969 a major strike, led by I. Hryshchuk, occurred at the station. In 1969 a petition to the CC CPSU signed by over 600 workers of the Kiev HES and residents of Vyshhorod demanded I. Hryshchuk's release and an end to management and government violations of workers' rights. One of the most famous Ukrainian dissidents, V. Chornovil, served as secretary of the Komsomol Committee of the Kiev HES and as a journalist at the construction site; he was active in the struggle for better working and living conditions. In the early 1960s the labor force at the site consisted of 70–75 percent Ukrainians, 20 percent Russians, and 2 percent Belorussians. Yet, almost all of the top jobs (construction chiefs and engineers, sectional and divisional managers, etc) were held by Russians. Almost all the 127 Russian managers at the main installation came from Russia. Only 11 of them were born in Ukraine.

L. Szuch

Kiev Institute for the Upgrading of Physicians (Kyivskiy instytut udoskonalennia likariv). An institution of higher learning under the jurisdiction of the Ministry of Health Protection of the USSR. It was established in 1918 as a clinical institute of the Kiev Medical Society and was reorganized in 1930. The institute has 4 faculties (therapeutics, surgery, hygiene, and pharmacology), 60 chairs, a graduate program, a central research laboratory, and a library with about 180,000 volumes. Tens of thousands of physicians and pharmacists have attended the institute. Prominent medical specialists who have taught there include M. Amosov, O. Avilova, F. Bohdanov, O. Kolomiichenko, O. Lazarev, A. Nikolaiev, H. Pysemsky, A. Shalimov, T. Syvachenko, L. Tymoshenko, A. Vasiutynsky, and V. Vasylenko. It publishes in Russian textbooks, monographs, and serial collections of articles on surgery and human morphology.

Kiev Institute of Civil Aviation Engineers (Kyivskiy instytut inzheneriv tsyvilnoi aviatsii). A technical institution of higher education under the USSR Ministry of Civil Aviation. Formed in 1933 out of a department at the Kiev Polytechnical Institute, until 1947 it was known as the Kiev Aviation Institute, then as the Kiev Institute of the Civil Air Fleet, and since 1964 by its present name. It consists of 11 departments, including aviaional radioelectronics, aviaional equipment, automation and computing, mechanics, and airport technology. It has a graduate program, a correspondence school, a professional development program for specialists, and a preparatory department for foreign students. The institute has branches in Irkutsk, Tashkent, and Rostov-na-Donu. In 1980 its enrollment was over 13,000.

Kiev Institute of Culture (Kyivskiy instytut kultury im. O. Korniiuchuka). An institution of higher education under the Ministry of Culture of the Ukrainian SSR. Formed in 1968 out of the Kiev branch of the Kharkiv Institute of Culture, it has two departments: library science, and culture and education. Its enrollment in 1980 was 6,000. The institute has a branch in Mykolaiv, a correspondence school, and a graduate program.

Kiev Institute of People's Education (Kyivskiy instytut narodnoi osvity or KINO). A post-secondary educational institution formed in 1920 out of the historical-philological and physical-mathematical-scientific faculties of *Kiev University. It was also known as the Kiev Higher Institute of People's Education. Consisting at first of three faculties, the institute was reorganized in 1921–2 into two faculties: social education and professional education. The former had a three-year program emphasizing practical pedagogy to prepare teachers for the higher grades of the unified labor schools, preschool institutions, and the Communist children's movement. The latter had a more academic four-year program to prepare teachers for vocational schools and tekhnikums. In 1922, 691 students were enrolled in a preparatory course, 191 in the social education faculty, and 835 in the professional education faculty of the institute. As a result of the *Ukrainization campaign, the proportion of courses taught in Ukrainian rose from 20 percent in 1922 to 40 percent in 1926. In 1927, 62 percent of the institute's 1,035 students were Ukrainians, 27 percent Jews, and 9 percent Russians. In 1930 KINO was reorganized into three separate institutes: the social education faculty became the Kiev Institute of Social Education (later the Kiev Pedagogical Institute), and the professional educational faculty was split into the Kiev Institute of Professional Education and the Kiev Physical-Chemical-Mathematical Institute. The first two institutes continued to train teachers; the last trained researchers for scientific institutions. Three years later the Kiev Institute of Professional Education and the Kiev Physical-Chemical-Mathematical Institute were merged to form Kiev University.

B. Krawchenko

Kiev Institute of Physical Culture (Kyivskiy instytut fizychnoi kultury). An institute of higher education under the Committee of Physical Culture and Sport of the Council of Ministers of the Ukrainian SSR. It was founded in 1930 as a section of the Kharkiv Institute of People's Education and reopened after the war (1944) on the basis of the Kiev Tekhnikum of Physical Culture. Since its establishment the institute has been the main center for the preparation of the best athletes, instructors, and coaches in Ukraine. It has five faculties (of sport, pedagogy, a correspondence program, and two for upgrading qualifications), 22 chairs, and a school for trainers. It also offers a graduate program. Research on training methods for athletes, the influence of exercise on children, nutrition, and physiotherapy is conducted there. Many Ukrainian, World, Olympic, and European champions and record holders have trained at the institute. Among the more prominent are V. Borzov, Ye. Bulan-chuk, V. Holubnychy, V. Krepkina, L. Lysenko, N. Otalenko, Yu. Siedykhn in track and field; P. Astakhova, N. Bocharova, L. Latynina, Yu. Tytov, B. Shakhlin in gymnastics; H. Hamarnyk and P. Pinihin in wrestling; and O. Sydorenko and S. Fesenko in swimming. M. Bunchuk, the institute's long-time director, favored the independent participation of Ukraine in the Olympic Games.

O. Zinkevych

Kiev Institute of the National Economy (Kyivskiy instytut narodnoho hospodarstva im. D. Korotchenka or KINH). An institution of higher learning under the Ministry for Higher and Specialized Secondary Education of the Ukrainian SSR. Formed in 1920 out of the Kiev Commercial Institute (est 1908), it had four faculties: industry, law, economics, and communications, all with a three-year program. In 1925 its enrollment was 1,400 and its teaching staff numbered 125. Before the institute was Ukrainized in 1923, its language of instruction had been Russian. In 1930 the KINH was reorganized into a number of higher educational institutions. One of them, the Kiev Financial and Economic Institute, was transferred to Kharkiv in 1934 and merged with the Kharkiv Financial and Economic Institute. In 1944 it was returned to Kiev, and in 1960 renamed the KINH. Today the institute consists of six faculties, including the faculty of economic planning. It is the only higher educational institution in Ukraine to prepare specialists for Ukraine's state planning agencies. In 1965, 78 percent of the students were Ukrainian, and 90 percent of the graduates obtained positions in Ukraine. However, only 18 (5 percent) of the 335 faculty members lectured in Ukrainian. Its enrollment in 1978–9 was 11,600. It publishes a collection of scientific papers (in Russian), Mashinnaia obrabotka informatsii. Noted scientists such as K. *Vobly, M. *Ptukha, and D. *Grave have worked at the institute.

B. Krawchenko

Kiev Institute of Theater Arts (Kyivskiy instytut teatralnoho mystetstva im. I. Karpenka-Karoho). A higher-educational institution within the theater and film system of the Ministry of Culture of the Ukrainian SSR. It was formed in 1934 out of the drama faculty of the Lyсенko Music and Drama Institute, which was abolished. In 1934–41 the institute had two acting departments: a Ukrainian and a Jewish one. It did not operate in 1941–4 and its functions were assumed in 1941–2 by the Music and Drama Conservatory under the direction of O. Lyсенko. When the institute was reopened in 1945, the Jewish department was replaced by a Russian one. The institute had three faculties – acting, stage directing, and theater studies – and from 1961 two departments – Ukrainian and Russian cinema. In 1968 six faculties were set up: acting, stage directing, theater studies, film directing, cinema studies, and cinematography. Correspondence courses in cinema and theater studies were available. The regular program required five years, with another year for specialization. In 1979–80 the institute was organized into two faculties: theater arts, which includes stage and film acting, stage directing, and theater studies; and cinema arts, which includes film and television directing, film and television-camera work, and film studies. There is also a correspondence school, a graduate program, and an apprenticeship program. Practical training is provided by the institute's teaching film studio (est 1961) and teaching theater (est 1965). The institute has been directed by S. Tkachenko (1947-60), I. Chabanenko (1961-5), and V. Kudyn (since 1965).

V. Revutsky

Kiev Juridical Society (Kievskoe yuridicheskoe obshchestvo). Association of lecturers of the Kiev University Faculty of Law and of other law scholars, established in 1877. In 1880 a department of customary law was set up within the society. The society's publications consisted of the *Code of Laws of 1743, university textbooks, and monographs. Its presidents included V. Demchenko, O. Huliaiev, O. Kistiakovsky, K. Mytiukov, Z. Synaisky, and V. Udintsev. The society's members were liberal in orientation. Its activities ceased in 1916.

Kiev Literacy Society (Kyivske tovarystvo hramotnosti). Society established in 1882 to promote literacy in Kiev, Podilia, and Volhynia gubernias. The society had branches in Uman, Smila, and other provincial centers. It operated libraries and reading rooms at parish schools, organized evening and Sunday courses for adults, provided financial assistance to primary-school teachers and students, sponsored literary and musical evenings, provided textbooks for schools, and published popular literature, including the works of T. Shevchenko. In 1902 the society built the Trinity People's Building in Kiev. The head of the society was V. Naumenko and its members included I. Luchytsky, the composer M. Lysenko, and the socialist activist O. Shlikhter. In 1904 it was one of the first organizations to advocate publicly the repeal of the Ems Ukase prohibiting the use of Ukrainian in the Russian Empire. This brought it the enmity of conservative Russian circles in Kiev, and the society was finally closed in 1908 by the Kiev governor-general.

Kiev Literary-Artistic Society (Kyivske literaturno-artistychnye tovarystvo). An organization of artists, musicians, and writers established in Kiev in 1895. It arranged literary evenings, concerts, art exhibits, and anniversary celebrations. Among its members were such prominent figures as Lesia Ukrainka, O. Pchilka, I. Nechui-Levytsky, M. Lysenko, M. Starytsky, M. Sadovsky, P. Saksahansky, M. Murashko, and M. Zankovetska. The society was dissolved by imperial decree in 1905.

Kiev Manufacturing Association of Polymer-Products Machine Building (Kyivske vyrobnyche obiednannia polimernoho mashynobuduvannia or Kyivpolimermash). An industrial association created in 1975 from the merger of the Bilshovyk Machine-Building Plant with several experimental machine-building plants and research and design institutions. The Bilshovyk plant originated in Kiev in 1890, when the merchants Greter and Krivanek formed a joint-stock company and built a plant that produced machinery and parts for sugar refineries, breweries, distilleries, lumber and flour mills, and brick factories. Because of the long record of revolutionary activity engaged in by the plant's workers, it was given the name Bilshovyk in 1922. During the First Five-Year Plan, the plant was expanded and began producing parts and machinery for the chemical industry. During the Second World War the plant was dismantled and evacuated to the Urals, where it was reassembled to form the Uralkhimmash plant. In 1946 the plant was rebuilt in Kiev and subsequently expanded and modernized. Kyivpolimermash continues to produce numerous products for the chemical-plastics industry, many of which are exported to the Comecon countries.

Kiev Medical Institute (Kyivskyi medychnyi instytut im. akademika O.O. Bohomoltsia). An institution of higher learning under the jurisdiction of the Ministry of Health Protection of the Ukrainian SSR. It was founded in 1841 as the Medical Faculty of Kiev University, which was merged with the Kiev Woman's Medical Institute (from 1907 to 1916 the Medical Faculty of the Kiev Higher Courses for Women) to form the Kiev Medical Academy (re-named an institute in 1921). The institute has a teaching staff of over 500 in 5 faculties (therapeutics, pediatrics, hygiene, stomatology, and the upgrading of medical teachers), 67 chairs, a preparation department, a graduate program, courses for the upgrading of public health workers, a central research laboratory, 4 learning museums, and a library with over 620,000 volumes. So far it has granted about 50,000 degrees; in 1980 it had 6,300 students. The Museum of the History of Medicine of the Ukrainian SSR is run by the institute. Since 1937 it has published the newspaper Meditynskie kadry. Many prominent medical specialists have taught at the institute (see *Medicine and *Medical education).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Pliushch, V. Narysy z istorii ukrains'koï medychnoi nauky ta osvity, 2 (Munich 1983)

Kiev Medical Society (Kyivske tovarystvo likariv). The first society of physicians in Ukraine, established in 1840 to promote medical research and health care in Kiev. Research papers were read and discussed at its meetings. Its members organized public vaccinations, lectures, and educational campaigns to fight infectious diseases, and founded hospitals, medical laboratories, night shelters, and a health-statistics office in Kiev. In 1881 the society was the first in the Russian Empire to promote emergency house-call services at night. It published educational pamphlets and a serial collection of research by its members and records of its meetings. The society ceased functioning during the First World War. Among its presidents were V. Karavaiv, C. Hübbenet, N. Khrzhonshchevsky, Yu. Matson, P. Peremezhko, G. Minkh, V. Vysokovych, M. Volkovych, and K. Tritshel.

Kiev metro (Kyivskyi metropolitan im. V. Lenina). An urban railway for passenger transport. Construction of the Kiev metro began in 1949 and the first section (5.2 km) was opened in 1960. The first line is now almost 20 km long, with 15 stations. It runs from the west (Sviatoshyne station) through the center of the city (Khreshchatyk station) to the east (Pionerska station). From Sviatoshyne to the Dnipro station the line is underground, and from there to the end it proceeds on the 700-m reinforced-concrete Metro Bridge over the Dnieper River and Rusaniv Channel. This line links the two banks of the Dnieper, the large residential areas, the industrial zones, and the main railway stations. In 1976 the first three stations of the Kurenivka-Chervonoarmiiske line were opened. When completed, this line will be about 20 km long and will cross the city from the Obolon apartment subdivision in the north to the Teremky subdivision in the south. At present there are 12 stations on this line. Two further lines are planned: the Syrets–Pecherska (approx 28 km long), which will link the northwestern subdivision of Vynohradar to the Kharkiv Highway in the southeast of the city, and a line approx 26 km long, which will run in a north-south direction along the left bank of the Dnieper.

Kiev Metro: Polytechnical Institute Station

The metro transports about 20 percent of Kiev's urban commuters. With 800,000 passengers per day it is the third busiest metro in the USSR. The ornate stations are decorated with displays rich in historical and propagandistic motifs, many of which relate to local events.

A. Zhukovsky

Kiev metropolity. The central and original church organization on Ukrainian territory. It was established after the *Christianization of Ukraine in 988 and the organization of church hierarchy. From the 11th century, the metropolity was under the jurisdiction of the Patriarch of Constantinople.

The exact date of the establishment of the metropolity and the identity of its first hierarchs are unknown. Church tradition has it that the first metropolitan was a Greek named Michael who arrived in Kiev in 988 and died in 994. Some scholars, however, believe that the first metropolitan was the Greek Leontius or Theopemptos, who was sent to Kiev by the ecumenical patriarch in 1037.

The metropolitans of Kiev were, according to the 'law of the 34 apostles,' provincial metropolitans, or first hierarchs of an ecclesiastical province composed of a number of eparchies (see *Eparchy). They were also the titular bishops of *Kiev eparchy. At the time of the Mongol invasion (1240), there were 16 eparchies in the metropolity, of which 10 were on Ukrainian territory. The authority of the Patriarch of Constantinople included the power to (1) appoint and consecrate the metropolitan; (2) change the location of the metropolitan see or subdivide the metropolity; (3) try the metropolitan; (4) arbitrate in the case of disputes over theology or rite and issue patriarchal missives; (5) grant stauropogion; (6) make visitations; and (7) appoint exarchs to the metropolity.

In fact, the metropolity was really only subject to the canonical and spiritual authority of Constantinople. In its internal life and administration it enjoyed considerable autonomy. Yet only 2 of the first 24 metropolitans were of local origin (*Ilarion and *Klym Smoliatych). Their consecrations resulted from the desire of the Rus' princes and clergy to establish a native hierarchy. This circumstance has enabled many historians (eg, D. Doroshenko and N. Polonska-Vasylenko) to claim that Kiev metropolity actually constituted an autocephalous ecclesiastical body.

This independence of Constantinople enabled the church to spread Christianity among the people and serve as an important unifying factor in Kievan Rus', which was soon divided into various principalities. As Kiev declined in political significance in the 12th and early 13th centuries, a struggle for control over the metropolity ensued between the competing principalities. After the destruction of Kiev by the Mongols, the new metropolitan, *Cyril II (1243–81), moved to Vladimir on the Kliazma, which had not been conquered by the Mongols. His successor, the Greek Maximos (1283–1305), formally transferred the metropolitan's residence there in 1299. This led the Galician-Volhynian princes to establish a separate *Halych metropolity, which existed, with various interruptions, from 1303 until the end of the 14th century.

In the mid-14th century a third metropolity arose that claimed territories under Kievan jurisdiction, the *Lithuanian metropolity. In 1356 the Holy Synod in Constantinople granted the 'Metropolitan of Lithuania and Volhynia' jurisdiction over the eparchies of Polatsk and Turiv, Volodymyr, Lutske, Kholm, Halych, and Pere-myshl, while Aleksei, the metropolitan of Kiev and all Rus', with his see in Moscow, retained control over the remaining eparchies of Rus'. By the end of the 14th century Metropolitan *Cyprian was able to reunite all of the eparchies formerly under the Halych or Lithuanian metropolitan. This unity, however, was shortlived. In 1415 a synod of the bishops of Polatsk, Smolensk, Lutske, Chernihiv, Volodymyr, Turiv, Pere-myshl, and Kholm refused to recognize Cyprian's successor in Moscow as metropolitan and instead elected Hryhorii Tsamblak metropolitan. Although he was excommunicated by the patriarch he enjoyed the support of the hierarchs and the Lithuanian Grand Duke Vytautas until his death in 1419. At the time, the Kievan metropolitan in Moscow, Photius, was again able to reassert control over the Ukrainian and Belorussian eparchies in Lithuania.

The final split in the metropolity occurred in 1448 when Prince Vasili of Moscow appointed Bishop Iona of Riazan metropolitan of Moscow with jurisdiction over several eparchies formerly under Kiev. Because this was done without consent of the Patriarch in Constantinople, under the terms of the Church Union of *Florence this act was considered schismatic. The Moscow church subsequently declared its autocephaly, which was recognized by Constantinople only in 1589. In the Polish-Lithuanian Commonwealth, Kiev metropolity was left with eight Ukrainian eparchies (Kiev, Chernihiv, Turiv-Pynske, Lutske, Volodymyr, Kholm, Pere-myshl, and Lviv-Halych) and two Belorussian eparchies. Lviv-Halych eparchy, however, did not have a bishop from the beginning of the 15th century to 1539, because it had been given by the Polish king to the Roman Catholic archbishop of Lviv.

The first metropolitan of Kiev after the secession of Moscow metropolity was H. *Bolharyn, who arrived from Rome in 1458. In 1470 he was confirmed metropolitan by Patriarch Dionisios of Constantinople. His successors – Mysail *Pstruch (1475–80), Symeon (1481–8), Iona Hlezna (1489–94), and *Makarii I (1495–7) – were all elected by sobors of the Rus' bishops. The appointment of the bishop of Smolensk, Y. *Bolharynovych, as metropolitan by the Lithuanian grand duke Alexander in 1498 ushered in a period of secular control over the metropoly and a period of decline for the Ukrainian Orthodox church. Some hierarchs were even raised to episcopal rank by the Polish king without any ecclesiastical vocation. Spiritual control over church life was progressively assumed by *brotherhoods and monasteries, many of which were granted *stauropogion by the patriarch. The growing rift between the clergy and faithful and the hierarchy led many bishops to adopt a pro-Roman Catholic orientation, which eventually culminated in their acceptance of the Church Union of *Berestia in 1596. Among the bishops who joined the new Uniate church was the Kievan metropolitan, M. Rahoza; the Polish king, Sigismund III, handed over the rights and privileges of the formerly Orthodox metropoly to the Uniate church.

The Orthodox forces in the metropoly, however, did not cease their activities, and the Patriarch of Constantinople continued to appoint exarchs to the metropoly. Under the leadership of the Cossack hetman P. Sahaidachny, the Orthodox hierarchy of Kiev metropoly was restored in 1620 by Patriarch Theophanes of Jerusalem. The new metropolitan was Y. *Boretsky, and bishops were consecrated for Polatsk (M. *Smotrytsky), Pere-myshl (I. *Kopynsky), Volodymyr (Yo. Kurtsevych), Lutske (I. Boryskovych), and Kholm (P. Ipolytovych). The Polish government did not recognize the restored Orthodox metropoly and its hierarchy, but they continued to function under the protection of the Cossacks. After the death of Sigismund, King Władysław IV Vasa issued the 'Points of reconciliation with the Ruthenian people of Greek faith of 1632' legalizing the Kiev Orthodox metropoly and hierarchy headed by P. *Mohyla (1633–47). Under Mohyla and his successors in the 17th century – S. *Kosiv (1647–57), D. *Balaban (1657–63), Y. *Neliubovych-Tukalsky (1663–75), and A. *Vynnytsky – church life throughout the metropoly underwent a spiritual and institutional renaissance, supported by the Cossacks and burghers. An important issue in the uprising led by B. Khmelnytsky was the status of the church and Kiev metropoly. Under the terms of the Treaty of Zboriv (1649) between the Cossacks and the Poles, the Kievan metropolitan was to be guaranteed a seat in the Polish Sejm.

A major turning point in the history of the metropoly occurred in 1685–6. The bishop of Lutske, H. *Sviatopolk-Chetvertynsky, who had been elected metropolitan in 1679, at that time severed his ties with Constantinople, and placed himself under the jurisdiction of the Patriarch of Moscow. The formal subjugation of Kiev metropoly to Moscow Patriarchate was ratified in an agreement between the Muscovite tsar and Patriarch Dionisius IV of Constantinople (1686). This was supported by Hetman I. Samoilovych, and accompanied the growing political domination of the Hetman state by Muscovy following the Treaty of *Pereiaslav and of *Andrusovo, which formalized Russian rule over Left-Bank Ukraine. In 1924 Patriarch Gregory VII of Constantinople stated in a Tomos that this transfer of Kiev metropoly to the Moscow Patriarchate had not been canonical.

During the reign of Tsar Peter I, Kiev metropoly was abolished. It lost its status as an autonomous church province and became a mere local eparchy of the Russian church under the ultimate jurisdiction (from 1721) of the Holy Synod and headed by an archbishop. The title 'metropolitan of Kiev, Halych, and Little Russia' was restored in 1743, as a result of the efforts of R. *Zaborovsky, but under Empress Catherine II the words 'Little Russia' were dropped from the official title (1770). In the 18th century several Ukrainian-born clerics served as metropolitans, but most of them, eg, H. *Kremianetsky and S. *Myslavsky, did nothing to oppose the Russifying policies of the Holy Synod. Throughout the 19th century Russians occupied the post; some of these metropolitans proved to be capable defenders of the church; eg, E. Bolkhovitinov (1822–37), a noted historian of the church in Ukraine, F. Amfiteatrov (1837–57), and A. Moskvyn (1860–76). Kievan metropolitans were permanent members of the Holy Synod throughout this period.

After the 1917 Revolution and the re-establishment of the Ukrainian Orthodox church as the *Ukrainian Autocephalous Orthodox church (UAOC), the head of the UAOC hierarchy had the title 'metropolitan of Kiev and all Ukraine.' This position was held by two metropolitans: V. *Lypkivsky (1921–7) and M. *Boretsky (1927–30). The liquidation of the UAOC in the early 1930s ended the short revival of Kiev metropoly. During the Second World War the UAOC was once again revived by the Synod of Bishops of the UAOC in Kiev on 9–17 May 1942, at which N. *Abramovych was elected archbishop of Kiev and Chyhyryn. The conference of delegates of the UAOC and the Ukrainian Autonomous Church, held on 8 October 1942 in Pochaiv, confirmed Metropolitan D. *Valedynsky as the provisional head of Kiev metropoly. After the war, however, the metropoly again became an integral part of the Russian Orthodox church, functioning as an exarchate of the Moscow Patriarchate.

The statute of the Russian Orthodox church of 1945 makes no mention of the autonomous status of the church in Ukraine, and assigns to the Kievan metropolitan ex officio membership in the Patriarchal Synod. The metropolitans of Kiev and Halych and the exarchs of Ukraine have been I. Sokolov (1944–64), Y. Leliukhin (1964–6), and F. *Denysenko (1966–), the last being the first metropolitan of Ukrainian origin in many years. Organizationally, and administratively, the Ukrainian exarchate, which includes 18 eparchies (of which 4 are unoccupied), has jurisdiction over the Kiev metropoly.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Bolkhovitinov, E. Opisanie Kievoo-Sofiiskogo sobora i Kievskoi ierarkhii (Kiev 1825)
Arkhiv lugo-Zapadnoi Rossii, series 1, vols 1–12 (Kiev 1859–1904)
 [Bulgakov], Makarii. Istoriia Russkoi Tserkvi, 12 vols (St Petersburg 1864–86)
 Stroev, P. Spiski ierarkhov i nastoiatelei monastyrei Rossiiskoi Tserkvi (St Petersburg 1877)
 Chistovich, I. Ocherk istorii zapadno-russkoi Tserkvi, 2 vols (St Petersburg 1882, 1884)
Spiski arkhieriev ierarkhii Vserossiiskoi i arkhierieiskikh kafedr ... (1721–1895) (St Petersburg 1896)
 Hrushevs'kyi, M. Istoriia Ukraïny-Rusy, 10 vols (Lviv-Kiev 1898–1937)
 Golubinskii, E. Istoriia Russkoi Tserkvi, 2 vols in 4 bks (Moscow 1901–17)
 Titov, T. Russkaia Pravoslavnaiia Tserkov v pol'sko-litovskom gosudarstve v XVII–XVIII vekakh, 3 vols (Kiev 1905–16)

- Bednov, V. Pravoslavnaia Tserkov v Pol'shche i Litve (Katerynoslav 1908)
- Chodynicki, K. Kościół Prawosławny a Rzeczpospolita Polska: Zarys historyczny (1370–1632) (Warsaw 1934)
- Doroshenko, D. Pravoslavna Tserkva v mynulomu i suchasnomu zhytti ukrains'koho narodu (Berlin 1940)
- Hayer, F. Die Orthodoxe Kirche in der Ukraine von 1917 bis 1945 (Köln-Braunsfeld 1953)
- Vlasovs'kyi, I. Narys istorii Ukrains'koi Pravoslavnoi Tserkvy, 4 vols (Bound Brook, NJ 1953–66)
- Lypkivs'kyi, V. Istoriia Ukrains'koi Pravoslavnoi Tserkvy (Winnipeg 1961)
- Polons'ka-Vasylenko, N. Istorychni pidvalyny UAPTs (Munich 1964)
- Makarii. Pravoslav'ia na Ukraini (Kiev 1980)
- I. Vlasovsky, A. Zhukovsky

Kiev Missal (Kyivski lystky). One of the oldest Slavic literary monuments, written in the *Glagolitic alphabet, consisting of seven parchment sheets of undetermined origin. In 1872 it was deposited in the library of the Kiev Theological Academy (hence its name). The missal was published by I. Sreznevsky in 1874. Its language has been studied by such scholars as M. Hrunsky and G.Y. Shevelov. Today the document is preserved in the Central Scientific Library of the Academy of Sciences of the Ukrainian SSR.

Kiev Museum of Church Antiquities (Kyivskiy tserkovno-arkheolohichnyi muzei Dukhovnoi akademii). A collection of 20,000 church monuments, manuscripts, incunabula, and documents (icons, portraits, coins) established in 1878 by N. Petrov of the Kiev Society of Church History and Archeology (est 1872) at the Kiev Theological Academy. In 1923 it became part of the Lavra Museum of Cults and Way of Life (see *Kievan Cave Monastery). Eventually, the collection was dispersed among various museums.

Kiev Museum of Russian Art (Kyivskiy muzei rosiiskoho mystetstva). One of the largest art museums in Ukraine. It was set up in 1922 out of the nationalized private collections of the Tereshchenko family, dating back to the 1870s. Until 1934 it was known as the Kiev Picture Gallery. In the 1930s it acquired from the All-Ukrainian Historical Museum the works of V. Borovykovsky, D. Levytsky, I. Repin, and M. Yaroshenko and collections of N. Ge's and M. Vrubel's works. From the VUAN and the Art Cabinet of Kiev University, it obtained collections of old Rus' art. The collection is housed in a building built for M. Tereshchenko in 1880 by A. Hun and V. Nikolaev, and extended in 1882 by V. Shreter and V. Nikolaev. Its interior decorations were done by F. Melner. The museum is divided into three sections: old Rus' art, Russian art from the 18th to the early 20th centuries, and Soviet art. The exhibits consist of icons dating back to the 13th century, paintings, sculptures, prints, porcelain, china, and artistic glass from the 18th and 19th centuries. The museum holds frequent exhibitions to popularize Russian art. Its jubilee exhibitions include the better works of Ukrainian artists who had worked mostly in Russia. It publishes special art catalogs for students.

S. Yaniv

Kiev Museum of Theater, Music, and Cinema Arts (Kyivskiy muzei teatralnoho, muzychnoho ta kinomystetstva USSR). The largest collection of materials on the history of Ukrainian theater, music, and film in Ukraine. It was formed in 1926 as a theater museum out of the *Berezil theater's collection (est 1924), which in 1926 became part of the VUAN. In 1934 the museum was brought under the jurisdiction of the Committee for Artistic Affairs. In 1965 a cinema and a music department were added, and the museum was given its present name. By 1985 it possessed approximately 190,000 exhibits, including an 18th-century *vertep with a set of puppets, folk-music instruments of the 18th and 19th centuries, manuscripts of plays and letters by M. Kropyvnytsky, I. Karpenko-Kary, M. Sadovsky, M. Zankovetska, and P. Saksahansky, the original music manuscripts of M. Lysenko, M. Arkas, B. Liatoshynsky, and L. Revytsky, costumes, stage decorations, posters, programs, personal collections such as V. Vasylko's with 5,000 items, and music publications from the mid-18th century. It has a photo, phono, film, and special-books library. The museum is situated on the grounds of the Kievan Cave Monastery. In 1960 the Zankovetska Museum and in 1980 the Lysenko Museum, branches of the Kiev Museum, were opened in M. Lysenko's former (1898–1912) residence.

V. Revytsky

Kiev Museum of Ukrainian Art

Kiev Museum of Ukrainian Art (Kyivskiy derzhavnyi muzei ukrainskoho obrazotvorchoho mystetstva, or ДМУОМ). The central art museum of Ukraine. It was founded in 1936 when the holdings of the All-Ukrainian Historical Museum were divided into a historical and an artistic collection. The former became the basis of the Kiev Historical Museum (see *Historical Museum of the Ukrainian SSR), the latter of the Kiev State Museum of Ukrainian Art, which received its present name in 1953. From 1954 to 1964 a collection of Ukrainian folk art, which became the Kiev Museum of Ukrainian Decorative Folk Art, constituted a branch of the Kiev Museum of Ukrainian Art. The museum is divided into three sections: old art, 19th- and early-20th-century art, and Soviet art. The first encompasses artistic works from the 12th to the 18th centuries: rare icons such as Volhynian Mother of God (14th century), St George the Dragon-Slayer (early 15th century), and The Holy Protectress (13th century); 17th- and 18th-century portraits, including the portraits of M. Mykloshchevsky, the colonel of Starodub (18th century), of D. Yefremov, the otaman of the Don Cossack Host (1752), of V. Hamaliia (mid-18th century), of P. Sulyma (mid-18th century), and The Crucifixion with a Portrait of L. Svichka (late 17th century); folk paintings titled The Cossack Mamai; and fine prints and samples of the earliest Ukrainian sculptures. The second section, devoted to the 19th and early 20th centuries, contains some valuable works of the portraitists D. Levytsky and V. Borovykovsky (most of their works are preserved at the Kiev Museum of Russian Art); the works of T. Shevchenko and his followers I. Sokolov, L. Zhemchuzhnikov, and K. Trutovsky; the paintings of P. Martynovych, N. Kuznetsov, M. Pymonenko, K. Kostandi, S. Svitoslavsky, P. Nilus, and P. Levchenko; the paintings and portraits of O. Murashko; the landscapes of S. Vasylykivsky; and the works of I. Trush, F. Krasysky, H. Svitlytsky, M. Samokysha, and F. Krychevsky. The largest section is the one devoted to Soviet art. It contains posters of the revolutionary period; the works done in the 1920s and 1930s by prerevolutionary masters such as I. Izhakevych, M. Samokysha, F. Krychevsky, H. Svitlytsky, V. Kasiian, A. Petrytsky, O. Shovkunenko, K. Trokhymenko, M. Burachek, and I. Kavaleridze; works done after the war by S. Hryhoriev, M. Derehus, V. Kasiian, V. Kostetsky, O. Maksymenko, Yu. Melikhov, V. Lytvynenko, O. Kovalov, V. Myronenko, O. Pashchenko, and T. Yablonska; Transcarpathian and Galician art by Y. Bokshai, A. Kashshai, A. Kotska, F. Manailo, O. Kulchytska, and various socialist-realist artists; and contemporary works by M. Bozhii, V. Borodai, V. Borysenko, S. Huietsky, V. Znoba, V. Klovov, H. Kalchenko, O. Lopukhov, H. Tomenko, O. Fishchenko, V. Chekaniuk, V. Shatalin, and H. Yakutovych. In the exhibits preference is given to works on Leninist themes. The museum holds about 17,000 items. The museum building, which was erected in the Neoclassical style in 1897–1900 by V. Horodetsky and G. Boitsov and decorated by E. Sal, was enlarged in 1972 so that the exhibition area doubled.

S. Yaniv

Kiev Museum of Ukrainian Decorative Folk Art (Kyivskiy derzhavnyi muzei ukrainskoho narodnoho dekoratyvnoho mystetstva URSR). A museum located on the grounds of the Kievan Cave Historical-Cultural Preserve, in the former residence of the Kievan metropolitan. Many of its artifacts were originally in the Kiev Municipal Museum of Antiquities and Art, which was founded in 1899 and became the First State Museum in 1919, the All-Ukrainian Museum of History in 1924, and the *Kiev Museum of Ukrainian Art in 1936. A branch of the last museum from 1954, it became an independent institution in 1964. The museum has extensive collections of Ukrainian artistic folk kilims, printed and woven textiles, embroidery, needlework, dress, wood carvings, ceramics, pottery, glass, and decorative painting dating from the 15th century to the present. The paintings of K. *Bilokur are accorded an entire room in the museum.

Kiev Museum of Western and Eastern Art (Kyivskiy muzei zakhidnoho ta skhidnoho mystetstva). A state collection of art works from Western Europe and the Orient. It was founded in 1919 on the basis of B. and V. Khanenko's private collection, which originated in 1870 and was donated in 1919 to the VUAN by V. Khanenko. Its holdings grew in 1925–6 as other collections, particularly V. Shchavinsky's collection of about 200 paintings (mostly by Flemish masters), were donated, and in 1928–40 as collections from other Kiev and Leningrad museums were transferred to this depository. By the 1930s its collection, which at first numbered 1,200 exhibits, reached 6,500 art works and 33,000 prints. The museum has three sections: ancient, West European, and Eastern art. The exhibits include ancient Greek, Roman, and Byzantine art; paintings and sculptures by Italian masters such as P. Perugini, G. Bellini, A. Magnasco, F. Guardi, and J. Donatello; and the works of Spanish artists such as D. Velásquez, J. Zurbarán, and F. Goya; of Flemish masters such as P. Brueghel the Elder, F. Hals, P. Rubens, and J. Jordaens; and of French painters such as J. David, J. Greuze, and F. Boucher. The Eastern collection contains sculptures and drawings from ancient Egypt, Syria, Iran, Turkey, Central Asia, Caucasia, India, Nepal, Tibet, Mongolia, Thailand, Japan, China, and Indonesia. The museum is housed in a building built for the *Khanenko family by R. Meltser in the 1880s.

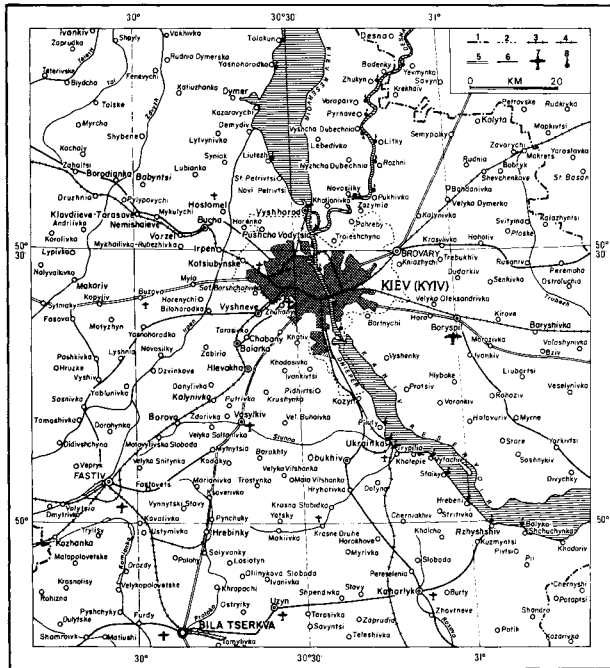

S. Yaniv

Kiev Music School (Kyivska muzychna shkola). The first professional music school in Kiev. It was founded in 1768 by the Kiev City Council to prepare musicians for the city orchestra. Besides music, students were taught mathematics, history, geography, and languages. In 1831 the school and orchestra were joined to form the Kiev City Kapelle, which gave concerts, accompanied theatrical performances, and played at official receptions. The kapelle and school were closed in 1852.

Kiev oblast. An administrative region in north-central Ukraine on both banks of the Dnieper River, formed on 27 February 1932. Its area is 28,900 sq km; in 1986 its population was 1,937,800 without Kiev, which was divided among 25 raions, 559 rural soviets, 23 cities, and 30 towns (smt). The oblast and national capital is Kiev.

Physical geography. The oblast is located on the rolling plain of the middle Dnieper Basin. Its northern part is located in the Polisia Lowland; it has coniferous and mixed forests, marshes, and soddy-podzolized, gley, meadow, and marshy soils. Its central part has podzolized chernozems, and solonets, solonchak, and gray forest soils; east of the Dnieper it lies in the Dnieper Lowland. Its highest (up to 273 m) southwestern part lies in the Dnieper Upland; the soils there are deep low-humus chernozems. The vegetation of the oblast's central and southern parts is of the forest-steppe variety. Forests cover 516,000 ha of the oblast's area. The climate is temperate-continental, with an average temperature of  $-6^{\circ}\text{C}$  in January and  $19.5^{\circ}\text{C}$  in July. The annual precipitation is 500–600 mm. The average growing season is 198–204 days. The oblast has 177 rivers with lengths over 10 km; the principal ones are the Dnieper and its tributaries the Prypiat, Teteriv, Irpin, Stuhna, Desna, Trubizh, Ros, and Supii. The large Kiev and Kaniv reservoirs have been created on the Dnieper; there are 11 other reservoirs, 2,000 ponds, and 750 small floodplain lakes in the oblast.

History. The oblast's territory has been populated since late Paleolithic times. From the 9th to the 14th centuries it constituted parts of *Kiev and *Pereiaslav principalities of Kievan Rus'. From ca 1362 to 1569 it was ruled by Lithuania, from 1471 as part of *Kiev voivodeship. Under Polish rule from 1569, rebellions of *Cossacks took place

KIEV REGION

1. Boundary of Kiev oblast
2. Boundary of Kiev-Sviatoshynskiy raion
3. Multiple-track railway
4. Single-track railway
5. Main highway
6. Other highways
7. Airfields and airports
8. River ports

there in the late 16th and early 17th centuries. From 1648 to 1667 it was part of *Kiev regiment in the Hetman state. With the Treaty of *Andrusovo the Right Bank (except Kiev) remained under Poland, while the Left Bank and Kiev came under Muscovite rule. S. *Pali's rebellion (1702-4) and *Haidamaka uprisings occurred on the Right Bank in the 18th century. The Cossack Kiev regiment existed on the Left Bank until 1781. During the partitions of Poland in the late 18th century, all of the Right Bank was annexed by the Russian Empire, and the oblast's territory there made up a large part of *Kiev gubernia (1797-1925).

Under Soviet rule, Kiev gubernia was abolished in 1925, and its territory became part of Kiev, Cherkasy, Bila Tserkva, Berdychiv, Zhytomyr, and Korosten okruhas. Kiev oblast replaced the okruhas in February 1932; at that time the oblast incorporated a large part of Right-Bank Ukraine, including Soviet-ruled Volhynia (now Zhytomyr oblast). In October its northern raions became part of the new Chernihiv oblast. Other raions became part of the new Zhytomyr and Poltava oblasts in 1937, Vinnytsia and Kirovohrad oblasts in 1939, and Cherkasy oblast in 1954.

Population. In 1939 the population of the oblast within its present-day borders was 1,715,900 without Kiev and 2,562,600 with Kiev. Because of high mortality (including the destruction of many thousands of Jews in the Nazi Holocaust) during the Second World War, the population living outside Kiev had grown little by 1959, to 1,719,000. In 1970 it was 1,836,000. The city of *Kiev, however, has constantly attracted people from other parts of the oblast and elsewhere, and its population has grown substantially. By 1984 the population density of the oblast outside Kiev had increased, from 12.4 percent of the total population in 1939 to 26 percent in 1959, 36 percent in 1970, 45 percent in 1979, and 51 percent in 1984. Ukrainians constituted 93.2 percent of the population outside Kiev in 1959 and 90.5 percent in 1979; Russians, 4.8 percent in 1959 and 8.4 percent in 1979; Jews, 0.9 percent in 1959; and Poles, 0.4 percent in 1959. In 1984, the oblast's largest cities (with populations over 50,000) were Kiev, Bila Tserkva, Brovary, and Khvastiv.

Industry. In 1940 there were 797 large industrial enterprises in the oblast (including Kiev), which employed 210,000 workers and produced 12 percent of Soviet Ukraine's industrial output. Since the Second World War industry has been reconstructed and expanded. Much of it is concentrated in *Kiev. In 1984 the major branches were machine building and metalworking (22 percent of the oblast's total industrial output), food production (21.1 percent), energy production (13.9 percent), light industry (12.3 percent), and chemicals and petrochemicals manufacturing (10.5 percent).

Outside Kiev the food industry consists of sugar-beet processing (16 plants in Bila Tserkva, Hrebinky, Yahotyn, and elsewhere), dairy-products manufacturing (23 plants), distilling (in Stadnytsia, Chervona Sloboda, Tkhoriivka, and Trylisy), and meat packing and vegetable and fruit canning (in Bila Tserkva). There are 21 animal-feed plants in the oblast. The main machine-building and metalworking industries are located in Brovary (mobile cranes, food-industry and lighting equipment), Bila Tserkva (electrotechnical equipment, agricultural machines), Khvastiv (electrotechnical and chemical-industry equipment), Irpin (peat-extraction machinery), Hrebinky (food-industry equipment), Borodianka (excavators), Vasylykiv (refrigerators, electric irons, and other appliances), and Rzhyschchiv (sanitation-technology equipment). A large powder-metallurgy plant is located in Brovary.

The oblast's light industry consists mainly of the manufacturing of clothing and textiles (in Bila Tserkva, Skvyra, Khvastiv, Poliske, Pereiaslav-Khmelnytskyi, Brovary, Bohuslav, and Berezan), leather goods and footwear (in Vasylykiv, Bila Tserkva, and Baryshivka), linen (in Ivaniv, Poliske, and Makariv), and wood products and furniture (in Khvastiv, Brovary, Bila Tserkva, Irpin, Komarivka, Motovylyivka, and Klavdiieve). The main center of the chemical and petrochemical industries is Brovary (tires, rubber and asbestos products, plastics). Pharmaceuticals and biochemical preparations are made in Nemishaieve. Building materials produced include reinforced-concrete products (in Bila Tserkva, Vyshhorod, and elsewhere), bricks (in Staiky, Bila Tserkva, and Bucha), granite products (in Bucha), and glass (in Babyntsi, Bucha, Piskivka, and Hostomel). Granite is quarried near Bohuslav and Bila Tserkva.

Kiev oblast's industries are powered by the Kiev Thermal Central Station, Hydroelectric Station, and Water-Accumulating Electric Station. The Chornobyl Atomic Electric Station also provides energy despite the nuclear disaster there in April 1986. Sources of fuel include natural gas piped in from Dashava and Shebelynka and coal from the Donbas and local mines.

Agriculture. In 1985 there were 283 collective farms and 164 state farms in the oblast. They had at their disposal 2,057,000 ha, of which 1,771,000 ha were used directly in agriculture; of the latter, 84.1 percent was tilled, 7.1 percent was hayfield, and 6.7 percent was pasture. Irrigated land amounted to 113,600 ha and drained land, to 161,900 ha. The main crops cultivated are high-quality grains (particularly winter wheat) and sugar beets in the forest-steppe raions, potatoes and dovhunets flax in the Polisian raions, vegetables, berries, and fruits.

In 1978 wheat took up 22.3 percent and barley 9.4 percent of the oblast's tilled land; other grains grown were pulses (14 percent in 1971), corn (7.2 percent in 1971), buckwheat, and millet. Fodder crops occupied 33.2 percent of the tilled land; vegetables, gourds, and potatoes, 10.3 percent; and industrial crops, 9.5 percent (in 1971, 82.1 percent of the latter consisted of sugar beets and 9 percent of flax). In 1978 berry crops and fruit orchards occupied 51,600 ha of land, of which 37,800 ha were productive.

Animal husbandry is also highly developed. It accounted for 54 percent of the total value of agricultural output in 1983. It consists of cattle farming in the Polisian raions, hog, cattle, and poultry farming (including 21 large poultry factories) in the forest-steppe raions, beekeeping, and rabbit and fish farming.

Transportation. In 1983 there were 880 km of railroad in the oblast. The main lines crossing the oblast are Moscow-Kiev-Odessa, Moscow-Kiev-Lviv, Kiev-Brest, Kharkiv-Kiev, and Kiev-Dnipropetrovske-Donetske. The main junctions are Kiev, Khvastiv, and Myronivka. There are 7,677 km of motor roads, of which 7,345 are paved. The main highways are Leningrad-Kiev-Odessa, Kiev-Kharkiv, Kiev-Dnipropetrovske, Kiev-Brest, and Kiev-Lviv. River transportation on the Dnieper, Desna, Prypiat, and part of the Teteriv is well developed. Airports are located in Boryspil, Zhuliany, Borodianka, Bila Tserkva, Hostomel, and Vasylkiv.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Starovoitenko, I. Kyïvs'ka oblast' (Kiev 1967)
 Rudych, F.; et al (eds). Istoriia mist i sil Ukraïns'koï RSR: Kyïvs'ka oblast' (Kiev 1971)
Pryroda Kyïvs'koï oblasti (Kiev 1972)
 Kharchenko, A. (ed). Atlas Kievskoi oblasti (Moscow 1985)
 I. Myhul, R. Senkus

Kiev Operetta Theater (Kyivskyi teatr operety). Founded in 1934 as the Kiev Theater of Musical Comedy, it was renamed in 1967. Its repertoire consists of Soviet operettas and classical operettas of J. Strauss, I. Kálmán, F. Lehár, and J. Offenbach. Its first stage director was S. Karhalsky; he was followed by V. Skliarenko, V. Kharchenko, B. Balaban, and V. Behma (1976-).

Kiev Pedagogical Institute (Kyivskyi pedahohichnyi instytut im. M. Gorkoho). An institution of higher education under the Ministry of Education of the Ukrainian SSR and one of the largest pedagogical institutes in Ukraine. It was organized in 1934 out of the Kiev Institute of Social Education (est 1920). In 1982 the institute consisted of nine faculties: physics and mathematics, general and technical studies, philology, history, natural science and geography, pedagogy, music teaching, and pedagogical training for teachers of Russian language and for teachers of the handicapped. Except for the music teaching faculty, all the faculties have a five-year program. There is also a correspondence and a graduate school. The total enrollment in 1980 was 8,500 and the faculty numbered 450.

Kiev Physics and Chemistry Society (Kyivske fizyko-khimichne tovarystvo). Society at Kiev University organized in 1910 on the basis of the chemistry section of the *Kiev Society of Naturalists. The society promoted the study of chemistry and organized public lectures. It published the journal Protokoly fiziko-khimicheskogo obshchestva (1911-15). In 1915 its activity was suspended because of the war, and in 1920 it resumed operation again as the chemistry section of the Society of Naturalists. It ceased operation in 1932, although it served as the basis for the newly formed Kiev chapter of the All-Union Chemistry Society. The society's president throughout its existence was S. Reformatsky; other prominent members were A. Dumansky, V. Izbekov, V. Plotnykov, and V. Shaposhnikov.

Kiev Physics and Mathematics Society (Kyivske fizyko-matematychne tovarystvo). A scholarly society at Kiev University organized in 1890 out of the mathematics section of the *Kiev Society of Naturalists. The society strove to popularize the study of mathematics and physics and to improve the teaching of these subjects in schools and universities. It held regular meetings throughout its existence (1890-1917), where more than 1,000 presentations were made on mathematics, physics, astronomy, and pedagogy. It published the journal Otchety i protokoly fiziko-matematicheskogo obshchestva. The society's founder and head until 1904 was the physicist N. Shiller. It had approx 350 members, including M. Avenarius, B. Bukreev, M. Khandrykov, V. Yermakov, and M. Vashchenko-Zakharchenko.

Kiev Polytechnical Institute

Kiev Polytechnical Institute (Kyivskyi politekhnichnyi instytut im. 50-richchia Velykoi Zhovtnevoi sotsialistychnoi revoliutsii). An institution of higher education under the Ministry of Higher and Specialized Secondary Education of the Ukrainian SSR. It was founded in 1898 and its first director was V. Kirpichov. In 1909 the Kiev Society of Aerial Navigation was organized at the institute. In 1923-33 a number of specialized institutes were organized out of its departments. Its workshops formed the basis of several industrial concerns. Many famous scientists and engineers, such as N. Zhukovsky, D. Mendeleev, S. Korolov, A. Liulka, I. Sikorsky, K. Zvorykin, Ye. Paton, and L. Pysarzhevsky, either taught or studied at the institute. The institute consists of 19 faculties, including mechanics and machine building, chemical machine building, electrotechnology, electric power, thermal power, welding, electromechanics and automatization, electrical-equipment building and computing technology, and radiotechnology. It has two evening schools, a correspondence school, and a graduate school. Its branches in Zhytomyr and Chernihiv offer full-time, evening, and correspondence programs, while its Cherkasy branch offers only evening and correspondence programs. In 1980 the enrollment was over 30,000. The institute publishes several periodicals, all in Russian: Izvestiia vysshikh uchebnykh zavedenii MV i SSO SSSR, Radioelektronika, and Vestnik Kievskogo politekhnicheskogo instituta.

L. Onyshkevych

KIEV PRINCIPALITY, CA 1240

- 1. Borders
- 2. Capitals
- 3. Other towns
- 4. Trade routes

Kiev principality. The central principality in Kievan Rus'. It was formed in the mid-9th century and existed as an independent entity until the mid-12th century, when it became an appanage principality. Its basic territory consisted of the area of Right-Bank Ukraine inhabited by the *Polianians and *Derevlians. The Prypiat River usually formed the northern boundary, the Dnieper River the eastern, and the Sluch and Horyn rivers the western. The southern boundary was the most dynamic; at times it was as far south as the southern Boh and Ros rivers, while at other times (end of the 11th century) it stopped at the Stuhna River. Kiev, the capital of the principality, lay on the crossroads of the trade routes from north to south and east to west that joined Asia to Europe. This favorable location fostered the development of trade and the prosperity of the principality. The oldest cities were Kiev, Vyshhorod, Ovruch, and Bilhorod.

Kiev principality in the 10th–12th centuries was the political center of *Kievan Rus'. At first, the senior member of the *Riurykide dynasty inhabited its throne with the title *grand prince. Beginning in the mid-11th century, however, a combination of factors initiated a long period of decline. The *Cumans, who settled on the steppes south of Kiev at this time, disrupted the flow of trade to the south and east and began a series of devastating attacks on Kiev that lasted for over a century and a half. Moreover, the shift in international economic patterns, which accompanied the decline of Constantinople and the Byzantine Empire, saw new trade routes opened that bypassed Kiev entirely. Finally, the long period of internecine war for control over Kiev between the various branches of the Riurykide dynasty who had established themselves in the other principalities of Rus' destroyed the political stability in Kiev and precipitated further economic decline. Kiev principality lost its leading position and the political center of Kievan Rus' moved west to the Principality of *Galicia-Volhynia. The Mongol invasion in 1240 caused enormous destruction throughout Kiev principality, but it continued to exist. In 1362 it fell under the rule of Lithuania and became an appanage principality in the *Lithuanian-Ruthenian state, ruled by princes of the *Gediminas family. In 1394 Lithuania abolished the principality and transformed it into a vicegerency. In 1440, Kiev principality was restored, but in 1471 it was finally transformed into *Kiev voivodeship.

At first, Kiev principality was ruled by the direct descendants of the Riurykide dynasty: Oleh (882–912), Ihor (912–45), Olha (945–62), Sviatoslav I (962–72), Yaropolk I Sviatoslavych (972–80), and Volodymyr I the Great (980–1015). Volodymyr's death began the struggle between the various brothers and cousins that characterized the rest of the history of the principality. Although Yaroslav the Wise's reign as the undisputed prince of Kiev (1036–54) briefly stopped these conflicts, his plan to divide political power between his sons and to re-establish the rotational system of rule, where the senior heir of the entire dynasty would rule in Kiev, greatly fostered political instability. The *Liubech Congress in 1097 formally recognized the independent patrimonies of the branches of the family, specifying, however, that each would recognize the primacy of Kiev. Unfortunately, this proved to be unenforceable, and the struggle for control over Kiev continued. Without a secure ruling family of its own, Kiev's throne changed hands numerous times and the principality declined both economically and politically.

Under Volodymyr Monomakh (1113–25) some stability in Kiev was re-established, but after his death the *Romanovychi of Galicia-Volhynia, the *Olhovychi of Chernihiv, the Vsevolodovychi in Rostov-Suzdal, and others resumed their destructive wars for control of Kiev. The city was sacked numerous times by the competing armies, and a succession of princes held sway in the principality, often intermittently: Vsevolod III Olhovych (1139–46), Ihor Olhovych (1146–7), Iziaslav II Mstyslavych (1146–54), Viacheslav Volodymyrovych (co-ruler with Iziaslav), Yurii Dolgorukii (1154–7), Iziaslav Davydovych (1157–62), Rostyslav Mstyslavych (1159–67), Mstyslav II Iziaslavych (1167–9), Hlib Yuriievych (1169–71), Roman Rostyslavych (1172–6), Sviatoslavych III Vsevolodovych (1176–94), Riuryk Rostyslavych (1194–1202), Roman Mstyslavych (1202–6), Vsevolod Sviatoslav Cherny (1206, 1210–12), and Mykhail Vsevolodovych (1238–9, 1241–6). (For bibliography, see *Kievan Rus'.)

A. Zhukovsky

Kiev Psalter. A monument of Old Ukrainian script and illumination. The work was commissioned by Bishop Mykhail and composed in 1397 by the Kiev archdeacon Spirydonii. Consisting of 228 large parchment sheets, its 293 rich miniatures belong to the highest achievements of 14th-century Ukrainian art and continue the artistic tradition of Kievan Rus'. The psalter, preserved in the Saltykov-Shchedrin Library in Leningrad, was reproduced photomechanically and published in Moscow in 1978.

Kiev Puppet Theater (Kyivskiy derzhavnyi teatr lialok). Founded in 1927 as a branch of the Kiev Young Spectator's Theater, it was turned into an independent theater in 1929. Its repertoire has included A. Shyian's Ivasyk-Telesyk, H. Usachov's Kotyhoroshok (Pea-roller), Yu. Chepovetsky's Mysheniatio Mytsyk (Mytsyk the Mouse) and Dobryi Khorton (The Good Khorton), B. Chaly's Barvinok za synim morem (The Periwinkle beyond the Blue Sea), S. Mikhalkov's Tri porosenka i seryi volk (The Three Little Pigs and the Gray Wolf, in Russian), V. Lopukhin's and V. Novatsky's Pryhody dopytyvoho charivnyka (The Adventures of the Inquisitive Wizard, an adaptation of K. Čapek's story), D. Kardash's Pryhody bilcheniatka Mishii (The Adventures of the Little Squirrel Misha), V. Azov's and V. Tykhvynsky's Lial'ka spadkoiemtsia Tutti (The Doll of Crown Prince Tutti, an adaptation of Yu. Olesha's story), and Mavgli (based on R. Kipling's story in The Jungle Book). The repertoire for adults has included Yosyp Shveik proty Frants Iosyfa (Joseph Schweik against Francis Joseph, an adaptation of J. Hašek's The Good Soldier Schweik) and V. Maiakovsky's Klop (The Bedbug). In 1972 and 1976 the theater toured Poland. Since 1978 S. Yefremov has been its stage director.

Kiev regiment. Administrative-territorial and military unit in central Ukraine, created in 1648. At first its territory was mostly in Left-Bank Ukraine. In 1649 the regiment consisted of 17 companies (with 1,790 registered Cossacks), 4 of which were centered in the capital city of Kiev; the others were Bilohorodka, Vorsivka, Hostomel, Vasylykiv, Brovary, Makariv, Motovylyvka, Obukhiv, Khodosivka, Trypillia, Ovrukh, Perevarka, and Yasnohorodka. The first colonels were M. Krychevsky (1649) and A. Zhdanovych (1649–53). By 1654 it had acquired additional territory on the left bank and comprised 22 companies. When the right-bank territories were given to Poland under the terms of the Treaty of Andrusovo (1667), parts of the Pereiaslav and Nizhen regiments were attached to the remaining left-bank territories. From 1687 to 1744 the regiment consisted of 8 companies: Kiev, Oster, Hoholiv, Kozelets, Bobrovytsia, Nosivka, Kobyzhcha, and Morozovsk. From the beginning of the 18th century its capital was Kozelets. In 1721 it had 6,910 male inhabitants, including 2,626 Cossacks. By 1764 it contained 3 cities, 14 towns, and 448 villages and farmsteads with a male population of 79,000, including 23,800 Cossacks. Kiev regiment took part in the Russian-Turkish wars of the 18th century. When it was abolished in 1781, its territory was incorporated into Kiev vicegerency and its Cossacks were reorganized into a carabineer regiment. Among the colonels who enjoyed longer tenures in the regiment were V. Dvoretzky (1659–60, 1663–8), K. Solonyna (1669–82, 1687–90), K. Mokiievsky (1691–1708), A. Tansky (1712–31), M. Tansky (1734–47), E. Daragan (1751–62), and L. Lukashevych (1779– 83). O. Bezborodko, who later became a chancellor of the Russian Empire and a prince, was colonel in 1774–5.

B. Balan, A. Zhukovsky

KIEV RESERVOIR

A. Levee B. Roads

Kiev Reservoir. The uppermost reservoir of the *Dnieper Cascade of Hydroelectric Stations. Created north of Kiev in 1960–6 after the dam of the *Kiev Hydroelectric Station was built, it is 110 km long and up to 12 km wide (average width 8.4 km). It has a surface area of 922 sq km, a volume of 3.7 cu km, and a usable volume of 1.2 cu km. Together with the *Kakhivka, *Kaniv, and *Kremenchuk reservoirs, it has facilitated long-term regulation of the Dnieper and created a deep-water route on the river, although it has also contributed to ecological problems (diminished flow velocity reduces water oxygenation, which has a deleterious effect on the balance of aquatic life forms). Its water is used for hydroelectricity generation, industrial and public consumption, and irrigation.

Kiev Russian Drama Theater (Kyivskiy rosiiskiy dramatychnyi teatr im. Lesi Ukrainky). Formed in 1926 out of the Second State Theater of the Ukrainian Soviet Republic, which had been organized in 1919 out of the Solovtsev Theater. In 1966 it was promoted to the status of an academic theater. Of all Kiev theaters it is most favored by the Party. The theater uses the stage to propagate Russian culture. Its repertoire consists of Russian classics and contemporary Soviet plays, including Ukrainian plays such as L. Dmyterko's Naviky razom (Together Forever), V. Sobko's Zhyttia pochynaiet'sia znovu (Life Begins Again), Yu. Yanovsky's Dochka prokurora (The Public Prosecutor's Daughter), O. Korniiuk's Zahybel' eskadry (The Destruction of the Squadron) and Platon Krechet, Ya. Halan's Pid zolotym orlom (Under the Golden Eagle), I. Mykytenko's Solo na fleiti (Flute Solo), and Yu. Shcherbak's Spodivatys'! (To Hope!). Of Ukrainian classics, Lesia Ukrainka's Kaminnyi Hospodar (The Stone Host) was staged in 1939 by K. Khokhlov (sets by A. Petrytsky), and her U pushchi (In the Wilderness) was staged in 1958 by M. Romanov. The repertoire contains a modest selection of world drama: W. Shakespeare's Othello and Comedy of Errors, B. Shaw's Pygmalion, and F. Schiller's Don Carlos. Quite a few Ukrainians work in the theater: eg, V. Dukler, V. Dobrovolsky, D. Franko, and A. Reshetchenko.

V. Revutsky

Kiev Shevchenko Museum (Kyivskiy muzei T.H. Shevchenka). A museum dedicated to T. Shevchenko administered by the Ministry of Culture of the Ukrainian SSR. Opened on 24 April 1949, it consists of the holdings of the former Central Shevchenko Museum (est 1941) and the Shevchenko collections at the Kharkiv Art Gallery and other museums. Over 4,000 objects are on display in the museum's 24 rooms. Over 800 items are linked directly with Shevchenko's life: his artworks, manuscripts, first editions, photographs, and personal belongings. A third of the 36,000 volumes in the museum library deal with Shevchenko. The museum's associates conduct bibliographic, literary, and art research on Shevchenko and organize conferences and commemorative events.

Kiev Silk Manufacturing Complex (Kyivskiy shovkovyi kombinat). A textile plant in Kiev established in 1946. It has spinning, weaving, drying, and decorating shops and specializes in raw silk, crepe, and chiffon textiles. In 1978 total production equaled 2.3 million sq m.

Kiev Society for the Advancement of Elementary Education (Kyivske tovarystvo spriannia pochatkovii osviti). Society organized in 1882 by a group of Kiev University professors and local teachers to spread enlightenment among the population of Kiev and vicinity. Until 1902 it was called the Commission of Popular Readings. The society organized public readings (by 1900 over 700 had been held), literary evenings, and musical concerts, particularly by students from M. Lysenko's music school. In 1895 it built the People's Auditorium to house its events. From 1888 the society published 23 popular educational pamphlets with a total pressrun of over 130,000 copies. Many prominent Ukrainian activists and academics belonged to the society, including O. Andriievsky, V. Shcherbyna, and P. Tutkovsky. The society ceased to exist in 1918. In 1913 it published a book summarizing its first 30 years' work.

Kiev Society for the Preservation of Ancient and Artistic Monuments (Kyivske tovarystvo okhorony pamiatok starovyny i mystetstva). An association of historians, archeologists, and art scholars formed for the purpose of finding, preserving, studying, and recording the monuments of Ukrainian antiquity and art in 1910 in Kiev on the initiative of M. Biliashivsky and V. Khvoika.

Its members were active in Kiev, Podilia, Volhynia, Chernihiv, Poltava, Katerynoslav, and Hrodna gubernias and Bessarabia province. Such prominent scholars as M. Dovnar-Zapolsky, M. Petrov, V. Ikonnikov, V. Shcherbyna, and V. Zavitnevych belonged to the society. In 1913 a branch was founded in Uman. The society was dissolved in 1919 upon the creation of the All-Ukrainian Committee for the Preservation of Ancient and Artistic Monuments.

Kiev Society of Aerial Navigation (Kyivske tovarystvo povitrianoi plavby). An amateur society for the advancement of flight and aviation, formed in 1909 out of a circle interested in flying at the Kiev Polytechnical Institute. The society was active until 1916, designing and testing flying machines, training pilots, and organizing competitions and exhibits. Its members included I. Sikorsky, P. Nesterov, A. Kudashev, and P. Skoropadsky. Some planes designed by its members were later built successfully.

Kiev Society of Naturalists (Kyivske tovarystvo doslidnykiv pryrody). An organization that promoted the study of natural sciences and the natural resources of Ukraine. It was established in 1869 at Kiev University on the initiative of P. Alekseev, K. Kessler, and A. Kovalevsky. Its first president was the botanist I. Borschov. The society organized scientific research trips to various parts of Ukraine, the Caucasus, and abroad, and maintained a large library. Two sections of the society were separated from it to form the *Kiev Physics and Mathematics Society (1890) and the *Kiev Physics and Chemistry Society (1910). The society published Zapiski Kievskogo obshchestva estestvoispytatelei (Proceedings of the Kiev Society of Naturalists, 1870-1917 in Russian and 1926-8 in Ukrainian as Zapysky Kyivs'koho tovarystva pryrodoznavtsiv), Sbornik nauchnykh robot Kievskogo obshchestva estestvoispytatelei (Collection of Scientific Works of the Kiev Society of Naturalists, 1921-8), bibliographies, and geological maps. Its presidents included K. Feofilaktov (1877-98), S. Navashin, and M. Andrusiv. In 1897 it had 177 members; among the more active ones were the zoologists V. Sovynsky, A. Severtsov, and I. Shmalhauzen; the botanists O. Rohovych and M. Kholodny; the geologists P. Tutkovsky and V. Tarasenko; and the chemists N. Bunge and S. Reformatsky. The society was closed by the authorities in 1932.

Kiev State Art Institute (Kyivskiy derzhavnyi khudozhnii instytut). A higher educational institution under the Ministry of Culture of the Ukrainian SSR. It was formed in 1924 out of the Kiev Institute of Plastic Arts, which in 1922 replaced the Ukrainian State Academy of Arts, and the Kiev Architecture Institute (est 1918). It has five faculties: painting with its studios of easel painting, monumental painting, and set design, and the department of painting technique and restoration; sculpture with its studios of ordinary and monumental sculpture; graphic arts with its studios of printmaking, book graphics, and poster design; architecture with its studios of civic building, urban building, and residential building; and art studios. Since 1922 the faculty has included such artists and scholars as P. Alosyn, O. Verbytsky, M. Boichuk, V. and F. Krychevsky, V. Kasiian, O. Shovkunenko, S. Hryhoriev, A. Petrytsky, M. Lysenko, H. Svitlytsky, I.

Pleshchynsky, T. Yablonska, Yu. Asieiev, and P. Biletsky. The institute's rector since 1973 has been O. Lopukhov. The institute is housed in the building of the former Kiev Theological Seminary, which was built in 1898 by S. Yermakov.

Kiev Studio of Popular Science Films (Kyivska kino-studiia naukovo-populiarnykh filmiv or Kyivnaukfilm). Motion-picture studio specializing in popular science, educational, technical, and propaganda films. It was organized in 1941 out of the technical films department of the Kiev Film Factory. During the war the studio was located in Tashkent, where it produced propaganda films for the Red Army. In 1966 it moved into a new building complex equipped with filming and sound studios, post-production facilities, and laboratories. The studio produces over 400 films annually. Over 300 of its films have won prizes at USSR or international film competitions.

Kiev Technological Institute of Light Industry (Kyivskiyi tekhnolohichnyi instytut lehkoi promyslovosti). A technical higher educational institution under the jurisdiction of the Ministry of Higher and Specialized Secondary Education of the Ukrainian SSR. Formed in 1930 out of certain departments of several technical institutes, it consists of eight departments, including sewing technology, leather technology, knitting technology, chemical engineering, and mechanical engineering. It has an evening and a correspondence school, a preparatory department, and a graduate program. In 1980 its enrollment was over 8,000.

Kiev Technological Institute of the Food Industry (Kyivskiyi tekhnolohichnyi instytut kharchovoi promyslovosti). A technical higher educational institution under the jurisdiction of the Ministry of Higher and Specialized Secondary Education of the Ukrainian SSR. Formed in 1930 out of the department of sugar refining of the Kiev Polytechnical Institute, it consists of eight departments, including food machinery, baking technology, sugar technology, meat processing and dairy technology, and electric power. It has a graduate program and an experimental factory. In 1980 its enrollment was 8,500.

Kiev Theater of Musical Comedy. See Kiev Operetta Theater.

Kiev Theater of Opera and Ballet (Kyivskiyi derzhavnyi akademichnyi teatr opery i baletu im. T.H. Shevchenka). The leading musical theater of Ukraine. Founded originally in 1856 as the Kiev City Theater, which in 1867 acquired a resident company and became known as the Kiev Russian Opera, it was nationalized in 1919 under the name of the Opera of the Ukrainian Soviet Republic, and in 1926 was Ukrainized and renamed the Kiev Ukrainian Opera. It acquired its present name in 1934. Thanks to its qualified staff and unusually talented performers, the theater has mounted many highly successful productions of classical and new Ukrainian operas. Its current opera repertoire includes M. Lysenko's Natalka from Poltava, Christmas Night, Taras Bulba, and Aeneid; S. Hulak-Artemovsky's Zaporozhian Cossack beyond the Danube; M. Arkas's Kateryna; B. Yanovsky's Black Sea Duma; V. Kostenko's Karmeliuk; B. Liatoshynsky's Shchors and The Golden Ring; M. Verykivsky's Naimychka (The Servant Girl); Yu.

Kiev Theater of Opera and Ballet

Meitus's The Young Guard; K. Dankevych's Bohdan Khmelnytsky; and H. Maiboroda's Mylana. The ballet repertoire includes M. Skorulsky's The Forest Song, K. Dankevych's Lily, M. Verykivsky's The Nobleman Kanovsky, H. Zhukovsky's Rostyslava, and A. Sviechnykov's Marusia Bohuslavka. Among the conductors who worked at the theater in the Soviet period were A. Margulian, V. Yorysh, V. Piradov, V. Dranishnikov, A. Rudnytsky, A. Pazovsky, B. Chystiakov, and O. Klymov. The choreographers were V. Lytvynenko, V. Verkhovynets, L. Zhukov, P. Virsky, and V. Vronsky. The stage directors included such names as V. Manzii, M. Smolych, M. Stefanovych, and V. Skliarenko; the stage designers, S. Evenbakh, O. Khvostenko-Khvostov, I. Kurochka-Armashevsky, A. Petrytsky, and F. Nirod. In the last few decades many outstanding singers have appeared at the Kiev theater: eg. M. Lytvynenko-Volhemut, O. Petrusenko, Z. Haidai, N. Zakharchenko, Ye. Chavdar, M. Skybytska, O. Ropska, L. Rudenko, Yu. Kyporenko-Domansky, V. Didkovsky, O. Kolodub, V. Kozeratsky, P. Bilynnyk, M. Zubarev, M. Hryshko, A. Ivanov, M. Donets, I. Patorzhynsky, M. Romensky, M. Chastii, and B. Hmyria. Russian and Western European guest soloists also appear on its stage.

In the early 1980s the company included such opera singers as Ye. Miroshnychenko, Ye. Kolesnyk, Z. Khrystych, H. Tsyppola, K. Radchenko, M. Stefiuk, H. Tuftina, A. Solovianenko, V. Tretiak, V. Tymokhin, D. Hnatiuk, A. Mokrenko, and A. Kocherha, and such ballet soloists as V. Kovtun, V. Kalynovska, O. Potapova, A. Havrylenko, L. Smorhachova, and A. Lahoda. Its conductors were O. Riabov, I. Hamalko, A. Vlasenko, and R. Dorozhyvsky, and its choreographers were R. Kliavin and A. Shykero. The head conductor is S. Turchak, the head stage director D. Smolych, and the chief stage designer F. Nirod.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Stefanovych, M. Kyivs'kyi derzhavnyi ordena Lenina akademichnyi teatr opery ta baletu URSR im. T.H. Shevchenka: Istorychnyi narys (Kiev 1968)
- Stanishevs'kyi, Iu. Ukrains'kyi radians'kyi muzychnyi teatr (1917–1947): Narysy istorii (Kiev 1970)

V. Revutsky

Kiev Theological Academy (Kyivska Dukhovna Akademiia). A higher theological school founded in 1819 at the Kiev Epiphany Brotherhood Monastery as the successor to the *Kievan Mohyla Academy. The academy developed religious scholarship, trained teachers for theological seminaries, and supervised eight seminaries. It was an important instrument in the Russification of the Orthodox church and rite in Ukraine. At first, it was organized according to the religious education statutes of 1808. It was headed by a rector (from 1874 the rectors were granted the title of bishop and made vicars of Kiev eparchy) and professors' council, and was supervised by the Commission of Theological Schools (to 1839) and then by the Holy Synod. In 1869 the rights of the professors' council were broadened and the qualifications for professors were raised. The new educational statutes of 1884 abolished secret elections to the professors' council and transferred supervision over the academy to the Kievan metropolitan. The provisional regulations of 1906 withdrew this supervision and returned the power to grant academic degrees to the professors' council (for some time this had been the prerogative of the Holy Synod).

Kiev Theological Academy

The course of study lasted four years. From 1869 it covered three fields: theology, church history, and church rite. The students were graduates of theological seminaries, most of them sons of priests. Their number averaged approx 200 (in 1897 there were 175, and in 1913, 199). Students lived in a residence attached to the academy. Upon graduation many went on to work in the bureaucracy or in private careers. In 1913 there were 39 professors at the academy. Among the more distinguished faculty members were I. Borisov (rector 1830–6), M. Bulgakov, I. Malyshevsky, P. Ternovsky, Volodymyr Zavitnevych, M. Petrov, S. Golubev, F. Titov, O. Novytsky, P. Yurkevych, and P. Linytsky. Many important Ukrainian scholars and church and civic leaders graduated from the academy; eg, I. Nechui-Levytsky, P. Kozysky, O. Koshyts, K. Voblyi, and P. Sikorsky. As a student there in the 1890s O. Lototsky organized an underground Ukrainian group that fostered the development of Ukrainian national consciousness among the students.

From 1837 the academy published the popular weekly journal Voskresnoe Chtenie and from 1860 the scholarly monthly **Trudy Kievskoi Dukhovnoi Akademii*. The academy's invaluable library, begun by P. Mohyla, had large collections of manuscripts, old documents, and early printed books; it is now part of the AN URSR Central Scientific Library. In 1872 the *Church-Archeological Society and an associated museum were established at the academy. The museum's long-time director was M. Petrov. Documents from the history of the academy were published in 10 volumes by M. Petrov (1904–8) and F. Titov (1910–15). Throughout its existence the Kiev Theological Academy was the only Orthodox higher school of theology in Ukraine. It was abolished by the Soviet authorities in 1920.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Malyshevskii, I. Istoricheskaia zapiska o sostoianii Akademii v minuvshee piatidesiatiletie (Kiev 1869)
Piatydesiatiletnyi iubilii Kievskoi Dukhovnoi Akademii (Kiev 1869)
 Titov, Kh. Stara vyshcha osvita v Kyivskii Ukraini kintsia xvi-pochatku xix st. (Kiev 1924)

I. Korovytsky, A. Zhukovsky

Kiev Trade and Economics Institute (Kyivskiy torhovelno-ekonomichnyi instytut). A higher educational institution under the Ministry of Trade of the Ukrainian SSR, formed in 1966 out of the Kiev branch of the Donetsk Institute of Soviet Commerce. It has two faculties – economics and commerce – as well as a correspondence school, with branches in Vinnytsia and Chernivtsi, and a graduate program. In 1978–9 its total enrollment was close to 10,000. The institute publishes two collections: Ekonomika torhivoli and Suchasni pytannia tovaroznavstva.

Kiev Ukrainian Drama Theater (1898)

Kiev Ukrainian Drama Theater (Kyivskiy derzhavnyi ordena Lenina akademichnyi ukrainskyi dramatychnyi teatr im. I. Franka). One of the leading drama theaters in Ukraine. It arose in January 1920 in Vinnytsia out of the union of the New Lviv Theater with a Molodyi Teatr group led by H. Yura. After touring Ukraine (Cherkasy, Kamianets-Podilskiy, and the Donets Basin) for three years, it performed in Kharkiv until 1926, then moved to Kiev. In this early period, it usually repeated plays from the *Molodyi Teatr repertoire. Although the company experimented with symbolism and expressionism, it adhered, generally, to realism, and in the early 1930s without much resistance adopted socialist realism. Hence it was spared political persecution, and after the suppression of the *Berezil theater, enjoyed official favor and attained the status of a national theater representing Ukraine. In the 1920s its Ukrainian repertoire included not only I. Karpenko-Kary's and M. Starytsky's but also V. Vynnychenko's plays, and some of M. Kulish's work: eg. 97, Komuna v stepakh (Commune in the Steppes), and Myna Mazailo. One of its most successful productions of a drama classic was that of W. Shakespeare's A Midsummer Night's Dream. The theater produced over 20 modern plays by famous playwrights ranging from H. Ibsen to B. Shaw. One of the best productions among them was that of an adaptation of J. Hašek's The Good Soldier Schweik. In the 1929–41 period its repertoire consisted mostly of socialist-realist plays such as I. Mykytenko's Dyktatura (Dictatorship), Kadry (Cadres), Divchata nashoi krainy (Girls of Our Country), and Solo na fleiti (Flute Solo); O. Kornichuk's Zahybel' eskadry (The Destruction of the Squadron), Platon Krechet, Pravda (Truth), Bohdan Khmel'nyts'kyi, and V stepakh Ukraïny (In the Steppes of Ukraine); L. Pervomaisky's Nevidomi soldaty (Unknown Soldiers) and Mistechko Ladeniu (The Town of Ladeniu); I. Kocherha's Maistry chasu (Masters of Time); V. Sukhodolsky's Ustym Karmeliuk; and M. Irchan's Pliatsdarm (The Battle Zone). The number of Ukrainian and Russian classics and of contemporary Russian dramas in its repertoire increased. Of the world classics only F. Schiller's Don Carlos and W. Shakespeare's Much Ado about Nothing were staged. During the war the company was evacuated to Semipalatinsk, Kazakhstan, where it played for military and collective-farm audiences. In 1944 it returned to Kiev and continued its standard repertoire. It staged 10 plays by O. Kornichuk as well as plays by Ya. Bash and V. Mynko. Since 1956 the most often produced plays have been M. Zarudny's Veselka (The Rainbow), Maryna (an adaptation of T. Shevchenko's poem), Na s'omomu nebi (In Seventh Heaven), and Za Sybirom sontse skhodyt' (The Sun Rises beyond Siberia) and O. Kolomiets's Faraony (The Pharaohs), Planeta Speranta (The Planet Speranta), Dykyi Anhel (The Wild Angel), and Kamin' rusyna (A Ruthenian's Stone). The most important plays in the company's repertoire are I. Kocherha's Iaroslav Mudryi (Yaroslav the Wise) and Svichchynne vesillia (Svichka's Wedding), Ya. Bash's Profesor Buiko (Professor Buiko), V. Sobko's Za druhym frontom (Beyond the Second Front), Yu. Yanovskiy's Duma pro Brytanku (Duma about Brytanka), L. Dmyterko's Divocha dolia (Girls' Fate), V. Mynko's Ne nazyvaiuchy pryzvyshch (Without Naming Names), S. Holovanivsky's Istyna dorozhche (Truth Is Dearer), and M. Rudenko's Na dni mors'komu (On the Sea Bed). Its repertoire includes Ukrainian classics such as Lesia Ukrainka's U pushchi (In the Wilderness) and Kassandra (Cassandra), and world classics such as Sophocles' Antigone and W. Shakespeare's King Lear and Macbeth. The Kiev company has produced contemporary plays such as J. Priestley's They Came to a City, J. Gow and A. d'Usséau's Deep Are the Roots, and F. Dürrenmatt's Der Besuch der alten Dame. It toured Poland in 1950.

The theater's artistic director was H. *Yura (1920–54). Its stage directors have been B. Glagolin, K. Koshevsky, B. Nord, M. Krushelnytsky (1954–61), V. Ohloblyn, V. Lyzohub, and S. Danchenko (from 1978). The sets have been designed by F. Nirod, A. Petrytsky, V. Meller, B. Erdman, M. Drak, M. Umansky, H. Tsapok, and D. Lider. Among its music directors have been H. and P. Maiboroda, I. Shamo, and N. Pruslin. Its distinguished actors have included A. Buchma, Yu. Shumsky, T. Yura, O. Yursky, D. Miliutenko, V. Dobrovolsky, O. Vatulia, O. Rubchak, T. Barvinska, N. Uzhvii, O. Kusenka, A.

Hashynsky, Ye. Ponomarenko, V. Dalsky, N. Koperzhynska, S. Oleksenko, and B. Stupka. The theater building was designed by G. Shleifer and E. Bratman and completed in 1898. A third story was added by V. Kolchynsky in 1959–60. Today the theater seats 1,100 people.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Ryl's'kyi, M. (ed). Ukraïns'kyi dramatychnyi teatr, vol 2 (Kiev 1959)

Boboshko, Iu. Kyïvs'kyi derzhavnyi ordena Lenina akademichnyi ukraïns'kyi teatr im. Ivana Franka (Kiev 1970)

V. Revutsky

Kiev University

Kiev University (Kyivskyi derzhavnyi universytet im. T.H. Shevchenka). Higher educational institution under the jurisdiction of the Ministry of Higher and Specialized Secondary Education of the Ukrainian SSR, and one of the oldest and most important scholarly and cultural centers in Ukraine.

Opened in 1834, it was the second university (after Kharkiv) to be established in Russian-ruled Ukraine. Several requests from the local nobility for a university in Kiev, dating back to 1765, were turned down by the imperial government, which until 1831 accepted the dominance of Polish culture in Right-Bank Ukraine and in 1803 even had established a Polish school system under the supervision of Vilnius University. The Polish Rebellion of 1830–1 convinced Nicholas I that the Right Bank had to be Russified, and to accomplish this the existing school system had to be replaced with a Russian one supervised from Kiev. Thus, Kiev University was established to oversee the new educational system. It inherited the library, collections, and faculty of the *Kremianets Lyceum, a higher Polish school that was abolished as a result of the rebellion. The university was named after St Vladimir and consisted, initially, of only one faculty – the philosophy faculty – which was subdivided into two departments – history and philology, and physics and mathematics. The following year the law faculty was added. The four-year program was designed to give a general, not a specialized, education. The university's autonomy was restricted: professors and faculty deans elected by the Professorial Council had to be approved by the minister of education, the elected rector had to be approved by the tsar, and the appointed curator of the school district kept a close watch over university affairs. Through a special school committee the university supervised all the schools in its school district until 1835. The first rector was a Ukrainian scholar, M. *Maksymovych, but most of the professors were Poles. Of the 62 original students, 34 were Catholics, mostly Poles and some Uniates. Until the 1860s Poles from the Right Bank formed a majority of the student body, followed by Ukrainians from the Left Bank.

Although the university was intended to be an instrument of Russification, it became a center of revolutionary activity and national awakening. In 1838 a clandestine student society, a branch of the Union of the Polish People, was uncovered in Kiev. Many professors and students were expelled and the university was closed for half a year. New faculty were recruited among the German graduates of Dorpat University and the reduced student body was placed under stricter surveillance. In 1841 a medical faculty, formed out of the abolished Vilnius Medico-Surgical Academy, was added. In the following year enrollment rose to its 1838 level (ca 260). At the end of 1845 M. *Kostomarov, the professor of Russian history at Kiev University, founded the clandestine *Cyril and Methodius Brotherhood. The Russian government reacted to the revolutionary unrest in Central and Western Europe in 1848 by imposing new restrictions on the university: the rector and deans were appointed by the minister of education and approved by the tsar; lectures had to conform to a prescribed program and were monitored by the rector; the philosophy faculty was abolished; foreign scholars were denied teaching positions and Russian scholars were barred from studying abroad; and the enrollment of self-supporting students (excluding medical students) was restricted to 300. Student fees were doubled, while faculty salaries were cut. These measures had a disastrous effect on the quality of research and teaching at the university. Many chairs remained vacant, and many professors turned to outside work to supplement their income. The situation began to improve only at the end of the 1850s when the new tsar assumed a more liberal policy.

As restrictions on the freedom of association were lifted, students and faculty became involved in social issues. In 1859 a group of Kiev students, including M. *Drahomanov, organized *Sunday schools for workers and peasants, in which Ukrainian was used for the first time as the language of instruction. Two years later a number of students with a populist outlook, including V. *Antonovych, joined the group and formed the first clandestine *hromada of Kiev. The university reform of 1863 was intended to avoid the kind of student unrest that broke out in 1861. Universities were granted greater control of their curricula, research, and administration. Rectors, deans, and professors were again elected by the professorial councils. For the first time Kiev University was included under the general statute governing universities. In the next two decades the university expanded slowly but steadily. New chairs were established and the faculty expanded from 49 in 1863 to 66 in 1884. The number of works published by faculty members increased dramatically. The school's official monthly Universitetskie izvestiia began to appear (1861–1919). In spite of its social liberalism, the new regime disapproved of the fledgling Ukrainian movement: in 1862 the Sunday schools were suppressed and in the following year the student hromada was disbanded. The Polish insurrection of 1863–4 led to the expulsion of many Polish students from the university. Increasing political activity among university students aroused grave concern in government circles. New repressions against Ukrainians in the mid-1870s included M. Drahomanov's dismissal from his teaching position.

Following the assassination of Tsar Alexander II, a new statute adopted in 1884 sharply reduced the autonomy of universities. The minister of education assumed the right to appoint rectors, deans, and professors. State funds for universities were reduced, while student fees were raised. Student organizations and meetings were banned. In Kiev the new law provoked demonstrations, which led to the closing of the university for half a year. The general student strike in 1899 was supported by Kiev students. In 1900, 183 students of Kiev University were conscripted into the army as punishment for their participation in demonstrations. By 1905 the authorities realized that the 1884 university statute had to be replaced by a more liberal one. A number of drafts were prepared by successive education ministers, but none were signed into law. Although enrollment jumped from 2,313 in 1895 to 5,107 in 1910, the faculty grew only from 118 (in 1894) to 166 (in 1913) and the number of chairs did not change. Part of the faculty, particularly T. *Florinsky, was hostile to the Ukrainian movement. During the Revolution of 1905 Ukrainian students demanded four chairs with Ukrainian as the language of instruction, and a year later the university itself requested two such chairs, but nothing came of these efforts. In 1907 A. *Loboda and V. *Peretts decided to give their lectures in Ukrainian, but were forbidden to continue. It was only in September 1917 that limited use of Ukrainian at Kiev University was permitted. The Provisional Government approved its use as the language of instruction by four new chairs in Ukrainian studies: the chairs of literature, language, history, and the history of Western Ruthenian law. Under the changing regimes in 1917–20, the normal activities of the university were hampered by political interference and inadequate funding. According to Hetman P. Skoropadsky's Ukrainization policy, Kiev (or St Vladimir's) University was preserved as a Russian institution and a separate Ukrainian State University was established. In 1919 the Bolshevik authorities merged a number of institutes, higher schools for women, and the new Ukrainian university with the old university, which they renamed Kiev State University.

By the 20th century, Kiev University had established itself as one of the leading universities within the Russian Empire. It ran over 50 auxiliary facilities: 2 libraries, an astronomical and meteorological observatory, a botanical garden, various laboratories, cabinets, and 9 clinics. Its faculty included many prominent scholars, such as the historians M. Kostomarov, M. Drahomanov, V. Antonovych, M. Dovnar-Zapolsky, and I. Luchytsky; the literary scholar M. Dashkevych; the philologist V. Peretts; the jurist O. Kistiakovsky; the economist N. Bunge; the chemist S. Reformatsky; the physicists M. Avenarius and Y. Kosonohov; the mathematicians B. Bukreev and D. Grave; the zoologists A. Kovalevsky and A. Severtsov; the biologist S. Navashin; the anatomist V. Bets; and the pathologists G. Minkh and V. Pidvysotsky. Some of these professors were graduates of Kiev University. A number of learned societies were affiliated with the university: the Kiev Society of Naturalists (est 1869), the Historical Society of Nestor the Chronicler (est 1873), the Kiev Juridical Society (est 1877), the Kiev Midwifery and Gynecology Society (est 1885), the Kiev Physics and Mathematics Society (est 1890), the Kiev Physico-Medical Society (est 1896), and the Kiev Physics and Chemistry Society (est 1910).

In 1920 the Soviet regime began a radical restructuring of Ukraine's educational system. The universities were replaced by institutes of people's education and Kiev University was reorganized into the *Kiev Institute of People's Education and the Kiev Institute of Health Care (later the Kiev Medical Institute). These institutes were Ukrainized rapidly. In 1933 Kiev University was restored by merging the Kiev Institute of Professional Education and the Kiev Physical-Chemical-Mathematical Institute. The university consisted of six faculties: physics and mathematics, chemistry, biology, geology and geography, history, and literature and language. In 1937 two new faculties were opened: law and Western languages and literatures. The university was named after T. Shevchenko in 1939. In the following year the physics and mathematics faculty was split into the mechanics and mathematics, and the physics faculties. Enrollment rose rapidly in the 1930s from 1,650 (1933) to 3,700 (1939). In spite of increasing funding and improved facilities, academic achievement was low because of countless political meetings, frequent revisions of the curriculum, and widespread purges. During the Second World War the university was evacuated to Kzyl-Orda in Kazakhstan, where it was amalgamated with Kharkiv University to form the Unified Ukrainian University (1941–3). When it was reopened in Kiev in 1945, the university consisted of 13 faculties and had an enrollment of 2,560. A strong emphasis was placed on making the university more responsive to the demands of industrial development.

Today Kiev University is the most prestigious higher educational institution in Ukraine. In 1979–80 the enrollment reached 21,000 and the faculty numbered 1,695. In 1982 it encompassed 16 faculties – philosophy, economics, history, (Slavic) philology, Romance-Germanic philology, journalism, law, international relations and law, mechanics and mathematics, cybernetics, physics, radio-physics, geology, geography, chemistry, and biology – as well as a graduate school, an evening school, and correspondence courses. It has published the journals Naukovi zapysky (1935–49) and Visnyk Kyïvs'koho universytetu (in seven series since 1957) and the newspaper Za radians'ki kadry.

During the Soviet period the faculty of Kiev University included many noted scholars, such as the linguists L. Bulakhovsky, M. Hrunsky, and P. Pliushch; the literary scholar O. Biletsky; the pedagogue M. Hryshchenko; the psychologist H. Kostiuk; the economist K. Vobly; the biologists D. Protsenko, D. Zerov, and O. Markevych; the physicists V. Lashkarov and S. Vsekhsviatsky; the geologists B. Chernyshov and V. Luchytsky; and the mathematician V. Hlushkov.

The main building of the university complex was built in 1837–42 by V. Beretti. Along with other buildings, it was heavily damaged during the Second World War, and was restored afterwards. In 1954 construction began on a new complex of buildings designed by V. Ladny, V. Kolomiiets, and V. Drizo.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Vladimirkii-Budanov, M. Istoriia Imperatorskogo universitetu sv. Vladimira (Kiev 1884)

Zhmuds'kyi, O. (ed). Istoriia Kyïvs'koho universytetu (Kiev 1959)

Kyïvs'kyi universytet za 50 rokov radians'koï vlady (Kiev 1967)
Belyi, M., et al (eds). Kievskii universitet. Dokumenty i materialy, 1834–1984 (Kiev 1984)

B. Struminsky, T. Zakydalsky

Kiev Uprising of 1068–9. A popular uprising that took place in Kiev after the defeat of the forces of Grand Prince *Iziaslav Yaroslavych of Kiev and his brothers Sviatoslav of Chernihiv and Vsevolod of Pereiaslav by the *Cumans at the Alta River in September 1068. When Kiev's commoners asked Iziaslav to give them horses and arms to repel the Cumans, he refused, fearing the consequences of arming the population. The incensed populace turned against Kiev's patricians, freed the inmates of Kiev's prisons, including Prince Vseslav Briacheslavych of Polatsk, whom Iziaslav had imprisoned in 1067, and elected Vseslav as their ruler. Iziaslav's palace was plundered and he was forced to flee to Poland. In April 1069 he returned with the forces of his nephew Prince Boleslaw II the Bold of Cracow. Vseslav fled to Polatsk, and Iziaslav and his son Mstyslav brutally suppressed their opponents.

Kiev Uprising of 1113. An uprising of the commoners of Kiev, and possibly of the rural populace of the Kiev region, which erupted upon the death of *Sviatopolk II Iziaslavych as a response to the corruption and injustices of his rule. The insurgents attacked and plundered Sviatopolk's officials and the local merchants and usurers, many of them Jews. Afraid that the unrest would grow and that the monasteries and they themselves would be the next victims, the intimidated boyars of Kiev offered the throne to the popular Prince *Volodymyr Monomakh of Pereiaslav, who quelled the uprising by granting legal concessions to the people (see *Volodymyr Monomakh's Statute).

Kiev voivodeship. Administrative-territorial unit in central Ukraine under the Lithuanian Grand Duchy (1471–1569) and then the Polish Kingdom (1569–1793). It was established after the abolition of *Kiev principality. The first voivode was M. Gasztołd, a Polonized Lithuanian magnate. Although a charter issued in 1507 assured local nobles the right to occupy administrative posts, in reality most of these posts were taken by Lithuanians. Under the terms of the Union of *Lublin (1569), the voivodeship was transferred to the Polish Kingdom. It was divided into *counties (Kiev, Zhytomyr, and Ovruch) and *starostvos (Bila Tserkva, Kaniv, Korsun, Romanivka, Cherkasy, and Chyhyryn). Part of Left-Bank Ukraine was also included in the voivodeship.

In the late 16th and 17th centuries, Kiev voivodeship was the scene of the social-national uprisings led by K. Kosynsky, S. Nalyvaiko, H. Loboda, I. Sulyma, D. Hunia, and Ya. Ostrianyn, and the major area of conflict in the *Cossack-Polish War, when the voivode was A. *Kysil. According to the Treaty of *Zboriv (1649), the Cossacks under B. Khmelnytsky acquired the voivodeship, which was divided among 12 *regiments, although Polish rule in the Right-Bank was restored in 1660. Under the terms of the Treaty of *Andrusovo (1667), the territory on the Left-Bank and the city of Kiev were acquired by the Muscovite-dominated Hetman state, and the capital of the restored voivodeship under Poland became Zhytomyr.

Peasant unrest continued in the 17th and 18th centuries; eg, the *Haidamaka uprisings and the *Palii and *Koliivshchyna rebellions. In 1793 Kiev voivodeship passed entirely under Russian rule and was divided between Kiev and Volhynia vicegerencies.

A. Zhukovsky

Kiev Young Spectator's Theater (Kyivskyi teatr yu-noho hliadacha im. Leninskoho komsomolu). A leading theater for children and young people in Ukraine, founded in October 1924 as the Franko State Theater for Children. Its repertoire, consisting of folk tales, stage games, and adventure plays, is adapted to youth of different age groups. Beginning in 1928, besides European plays such as M. Maeterlinck's L'Oiseau bleu and J. Molière's Les fourberies de Scapin, Soviet plays such as O. Kornichuk's Na hrani (At the Limit), Fioletova shchuka (The Violet Pike), and Shturm (The Assault), Ya. Mamontov's Kho, and Yu. Mokriev's Reid (Raid) and Skrypka hutsula (The Hutsul's Violin) were produced. In 1947 the theater was turned into a republican theater, and an emphasis was placed on war and political plays, mostly by Russian playwrights. The Ukrainian plays in its repertoire included I. Mykytenko's Dvi iunosty (Twice Youth), I. Kocherha's Chorny val's (The Black Waltz), and P. Voronko's Kazka pro Chuhaistra (A Story about Chuhaister). Classical Ukrainian plays such as Lesia Ukrainka's Lisova pisnia (The Forest Song), I. Karpenko-Kary's Sto tysiach (One Hundred Thousand) and Beztalanna (The Hapless Girl), or dramatic adaptations of I. Franko's Koval' Basim (Basim the Blacksmith) and Abukasymovi kaptsi (Abu Kasim's Slippers) were rarely produced. In the 1970s and early 1980s the theater's repertoire included contemporary Ukrainian dramas such as O. Kolomiets's Planeta Speranta (Planet Speranta) and Sribna pavutyna (The Silver Cobweb), and an adaptation of O. Honchar's Bryhantyna (The Brigantine); Russian classics by D. Fonvizin, A. Tolstoi, and M. Lermontov; and plays by M. Bulgakov and current Russian dramatists. O. Solomarsky (1924–31 and 1953–61), I. Deieva, and V. Nelli (1925–34), K. Koshevsky (1939–41), V. Dovbyshchenko (1947–52), and M. Merzlykin (from 1978) have directed the theater's productions. The theater is used to some extent as an instrument of Russification.

V. Revutsky

Kievian Cave Fortress (Kyievo-Pecherska fortetsia). A series of defensive fortifications surrounding the *Kievan Cave Monastery. The monastery was first fortified at the end of the 12th century, when a 2-m-wide, 5–6-m-high stone wall was erected. This wall was destroyed during the Tatar invasion and excavated in 1951. For the next four centuries the monastery was defended by a wooden wall. In 1679 Hetman I. Samoilovych had a moat and new ramparts constructed around the upper monastery. Under Hetman I. Mazepa, a thick stone wall with four towers was added. In 1706 Tsar Peter I ordered the construction of the so-called Old Cave Fortress. The first plans were prepared by an engineer named Gellert. Completed in 1723, this fortress consisted of a semicircular citadel with a 6-m-high earthen rampart, eight bulwarks, and other fortifications. Of its three original gates, two have survived (the Vasylykivska and Moskovska gates). The fortress was rebuilt several times in the 18th and 19th centuries. The Old Cave Fortress housed the administrative and military institutions of tsarist rule in Kiev.

Between 1831 and 1863 the so-called New Cave Fortress was built, under the direction of an engineer named Opperman. New ramparts (up to 15 m high, 1,039 m in length), barracks, and fortifications were added to the existing citadel, and the enclosed area of the lower monastery was greatly expanded. The main fortresses were the Vasylykivska, erected next to the Vasylykivska gates, and the Hospitalna, which also contained a military hospital and now houses the Kosyi Kaponir Museum. With the development of modern artillery, the fortress lost its defensive significance, and it was eventually turned into a military depot and then a garrison prison. The other surviving buildings of the New Fortress are the Mykilska gate and the Kruhla and Prozoriv towers.

Kievan Cave Fortress (plan of 1783)

Kievan Cave Historical-Cultural Preserve

Kievan Cave Historical-Cultural Preserve (Kyievo-Pecherskyi istoryko-kulturnyi zapovidnyk). An important historical preserve in Kiev, consisting of the entire complex of the former *Kievan Cave Monastery. The state-run preserve was organized in 1926, when the monastery was closed down by the Soviet authorities. On its 28-ha grounds there are over 80 cultural and public structures, 37 of them architectural and historical monuments from the 11th to 18th centuries. The most important are the Great Bell Tower (1731-44), the *Transfiguration Church in the Berestove district (early 12th century), the Trinity Church above the Main Gates (1108, restoration paid for by Hetman I. Mazepa in the early 18th century), and the *Dormition Cathedral of the Kievan Cave Monastery (1078, destroyed by a Soviet mine in 1941). The museums of the preserve contain many rare and valuable items from the 16th to 18th century: manuscripts, incunabula, and old books (many of them printed by the *Kievan Cave Monastery Press), and embroidery, precious metallic objects, engravings, printing blocks, and art works. During the civil war and the Second World War, many treasures were removed, destroyed, or stolen. During the Second World War over 30 monuments and buildings were destroyed; with the major exception of the Dormition Cathedral, almost all of them have been restored. Located at the preserve are the *Museum of the Book and Book Printing of the Ukrainian SSR, the *Museum of Historical Treasures of the Ukrainian SSR, the *Kiev Museum of Ukrainian Decorative Folk Arts, the *Kiev Museum of Theater, Music, and Cinema Arts, and the *History Library of the Ukrainian SSR.

Kievan Cave Monastery (Kyievo-Pecherska Lavra). An Orthodox monastery in Kiev. It was founded by *St Anthony of the Caves in the mid-11th century near the village of Berestove in a cave that the future metropolitan of Kiev, Ilarion, had excavated and lived in until 1051. The first monks excavated more caves and built a church above them. The monastery's first hegumen was Varlaam (to 1057). He was succeeded by *St Theodosius of the Caves (ca 1062-74), who introduced the strict Studite rule.

The Kievan princes and boyars generously supported the monastery, donating money, valuables, and land, and building fortifications and churches; some even became monks. Many of the monks were from the educated, upper strata, and the monastery soon became the largest religious and cultural center in Kievan Rus'. Twenty of its monks became bishops in the 12th and 13th centuries. St Theodosius's 'Teachings,' *Nestor the Chronicler's 'Story about Borys and Hlib,' 'Life of Theodosius of the Caves,' Povist' vremennykh lit (Tale of Bygone Years), and the *Kievan Cave Patericon were written there. Foreign works were translated, and books were transcribed and illuminated. Architecture and religious art (icons, mosaics, frescoes) – the works of Alimpiii, Hryhorii, and others – developed there. Many folktales and legends eventually arose about its saintly figures and the miraculous construction of its main church. Early research on the monastery was done in the 17th century by S. Kosiv and A. Kalnofoisky.

Kievan Cave Monastery: old engraving

The monastery was sacked several times, particularly in 1096 by the Cumans, in 1169 by Prince Andrei Bogoliubskii of Vladimir-Suzdal, in 1203 by Prince Riuryk Rostyslavych and the Chernihiv princes, and in 1240 by the Mongol Batu Khan. Each time it was rebuilt, new churches were erected, and the underground tunnels of caves and catacombs expanded. After a period of non-activity it was rebuilt in 1470 by Prince Semen Olelkovich, but in 1482 the Tatars burned it down. It was eventually again rebuilt, and in the late 16th century it received stauropegion status from the Patriarch of Constantinople, freeing it from the control of the local metropolitan. By that time consisting of six cloisters, the monastic complex was designated a lavra.

Kievan Cave Monastery: plan of buildings (1826)

For a few years after the 1596 Church Union of Berestia the Uniate Catholics fought the Orthodox for control of the monastery, but the Orthodox retained control. In 1615 Archimandrite Ye. Pletenetsky established the first printing press in Kiev at the Kievan Cave Monastery Press, which became an important center of publishing in Ukraine. Archimandrite (later Metropolitan) P. Mohyla restored and embellished the monastery. In 1631 he opened the Kievan Cave Monastery School and introduced a 'western' curriculum; in 1632 it was merged with the Kiev Epiphany Brotherhood School to form a college (later called the Kievan Mohyla Academy). In 1688 the lavra became directly subordinate to the Moscow patriarch, retaining its stauropegion status.

Kievan Cave Monastery: plan of the Far Caves (1638)

In 1718 a fire damaged most of its buildings, including the main (Dormition) church and the printing house, and destroyed the library and archive. Restorations lasted over 10 years. The monastery's cultural influence was later severely undercut by the Russian government's 1720 prohibition on the printing of new books and the imposition of synodal censorship on all publications. By the 18th century the monastery had acquired a great deal of wealth. It owned 3 cities, 7 towns, 200 villages and hamlets, 70,000 serfs, 11 brickyards, 6 foundries, over 150 distilleries, over 150 flour mills, and almost 200 taverns. In 1786 the Russian government secularized its property and made it a dependent of the state. At the same time the custom of electing the council elders, its governing body, was abolished. They were thereafter appointed by the Kiev metropolitan, who also became the archimandrite and had his residence within the monastery's precincts. Russification of the monastery began towards the end of the 18th century and increased with time.

Prior to the 1917 Revolution there were over 1,200 monks and novices at the monastery. It was one of the most famous centers of religious life in the Orthodox world and attracted hundreds of thousands of pilgrims. Its best-known sacred objects were the relics of its saintly monks who had been canonized by Metropolitan Mohyla in 1643. The caves (some of them dating from the Neolithic period) in which they lived and were buried, and from which the monastery's name is derived, form two underground labyrinths of tunnels, cells, and catacombs excavated in soft sandstone and loess. The labyrinths (the Far and Near Caves) are 1.5 m wide, up to 2 m high, and 400 m apart. Burial niches in their walls are 0.5 m deep, 2 m long, and 1 m high; many still contain the mummified remains of monks and saints.

Kievan Cave Monastery: passage in the Far Caves

In 1921–2 the Soviet authorities confiscated many of the relics and precious historical and artistic objects belonging to the monastery and converted a number of buildings to commercial and other use. Many of the monastery's monuments and collections became part of the Lavra Museum of Religious Cults and Way of Life, which also contained the collections of several Kiev museums (eg, the Kiev Museum of Church Antiquities, the Kiev University Museum, and the All-Ukrainian History Museum). In 1926 the Soviet Ukrainian government closed down the monastery completely and turned its grounds (22 ha) into a state museum-preserve – the All-Ukrainian Museum Quarter (Horodok), which contained several museums (particularly of antireligious propaganda), archives, libraries, and workshops. In 1934 the museum quarter was abolished, and many of its collections were gradually transferred to new museums in Kiev. In 1941 Soviet forces retreating from the German advance mined the main church of the monastery, the *Dormition Cathedral, which once housed the legendary miracle-working icon of the Dormition; the mines exploded on 3 November 1941 after the Germans had occupied Kiev.

After the war the lavra preserve was restored and renamed the *Kievan Cave Historical-Cultural Preserve. Located there are several museums and institutions. Also on the preserve's grounds are the History Library of the Ukrainian SSR and the Ukrainian Society for the Protection of Historical and Cultural Monuments. From the Second World War to 1961 a Russian Orthodox monastery was allowed to function at the lavra; it had over 100 monks.

Herbinus's book on the Kievan Caves (1675)

The Cave Monastery is rich in architectural monuments. Thirty-seven of them were built before the 20th century. Some, like the Dormition Cathedral built in 1073–8 and the Main gate with the Trinity Church (1106–8) above it, have been rebuilt several times. After the 1718 fire these buildings were painted and ornamented in the baroque style; their frescoes depicted hetmans, princes, and metropolitans. Prior to its demolition in 1941 (it has not been rebuilt), the Dormition Cathedral contained the tombs of P. Berynda, Ye. Pletenetsky, K. Ostrozky, P. Mohyla, and other prominent nobles and personalities. Construction of the monastery's other churches was funded in the 17th and 18th centuries by Cossack hetmans and officers: the Church of the Elevation of the Cross, overlooking the Near Caves (1700); the All-Saints Church above the Economic Gate, funded by Hetman I. Mazepa (1696–8); the Tower-Church of St John the Calybite (Kushchnyk), Maliarna Tower, Onufriivska Tower, Hodynnykova Tower, and the fortified stone walls around the monastery; the Church of the Conception of St Anne (1679) and the Church of the Nativity of the Holy Mother of God (1696), both by the Far Caves; and the Resurrection Church (1698). In the 1720s cells for the council elders, a new printing house, a bakery, and other facilities were built. Many of the churches and buildings were altered by later restorations. The monastery's Great Bell Tower (96.5 m high), designed by the architect J.-G. Schädel, was built in 1731–44 in the classical style. Square bell towers near the Far (1754–61) and Near Caves (1759–63) were erected by the monastery's master builder S. Kovnir. All bells were removed by the Soviet authorities in 1931–2. In the 19th and 20th centuries many ancient buildings were torn down or rebuilt in the official Russian synodal style. Several new churches (eg, the Refectory Church, 1893–5) were built in this style.

Dormition Cathedral of the Kievan Cave Monastery (1073–8; destroyed by Soviet mines in 1941)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Bolkhovitinov, E. Opisanie Kievo-Pecherskoi Lavry (Kiev 1831)
 'Kievo-Pecherskaia lavra v eia proshedshem i nynishnem sostoianii,' ks, 1886, nos 5–11
- Goetz, L. Das Kiever Höhlenkloster als Kulturzentrum des vormongolischen Russlands (Passau 1904)
- Titov, F. Putevoditel' pri obozrenii Kievo-Pecherskoi lavry (Kiev 1910)
- Ripets'kyi, M; Popovych, D. Kyïvo-Pechers'kyi monastyri i ioho podvyzhyzhyky (Mundare 1954)
- Kyïvs'kyi derzhavnyi zapovidnyk-muzei 'Kyïveo-Pechers'ka Lavra': Korotkyi putivnyk* (Kiev 1957)
- Logvin, G. Kievo-Pecherskaia Lavra (Moscow 1958)
- Kyïveo-Pechers'kyi derzhavnyi istoriko-kul'turnyi zapovidnyk* (Kiev 1971)
- Kileso, S. Kievo-Pecherskaia lavra (Moscow 1975)
- Krykotun, V. Za muramy lavry (Pro rol' Kyïveo-Pechers'koi lavry u suspil'no-politychnomu zhytti Rosii i Ukraïny u druhii polovyni xviii–pochatku xx st.) (Kiev 1979)
- Petrenko, M. Kyïveo-Pechers'kyi derzhavnyi istoriko-kul'turnyi zapovidnyk: Putivnyk (Kiev 1979)

V. Pavlovsky

Kievan Cave Monastery Gospel (Kyievo-Pecherskoi lavry yevanheliie). A Church Slavonic gospel transcribed before 1370 from a South-Slavic source. The manuscript consists of 181 sheets and is preserved in the museum of the Academy of Sciences in Kiev. Its language has a number of Ukrainian phonetic, morphological, and lexical features. Excerpts from it were printed in O. Shakhmatov and A. Krymsky's Narysy z istorii ukrains'koi movy ta khrestomatiia z pam'iatnykiv pys'mens'koi staro-Ukrainshchyny XI–XVIII vv. (An Outline of the History of the Ukrainian Language and a Chrestomathy of the Texts of Old Ukrainian Writing of the 11th–18th Centuries, 1924).

Kievan Cave Monastery Icon Painting Studio (Lavrska ikonopysna maisternia). Main centre of Ukrainian icon painting for many centuries. Its founding at the end of the 11th century was connected with the painting of the Dormition Cathedral (1083–9) by Greek masters and the Kievan artists Olimpii and Hryhorii. The studio developed a distinctive style that is evident in its frescoes, icons, and book illuminations. From the late 16th century, collections of prints by western and local artists and of student drawings were kept for educational purposes. In the 18th century the studio was supervised by master Ivan (1724–30), T. Pavlovsky (1730–44), A. Halyk (1744–55), and B. Frederice (1760–?). Its finest masterpieces of the 18th century are the mural paintings of the Dormition Cathedral (1724–31) and the Trinity Church (1734–44) above the main gate of the Kievan Cave Monastery, which were done by I. Maksymovych, T. Pavlovsky, Z. Holubovsky, and A. Halyk. Many noted icon painters and engravers were trained at the studio. Towards the end of the 18th century the studio gradually lost its importance in the development of Ukrainian art. At the turn of the 19th century I. Izhakevych attempted to raise the artistic standard of the studio.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Zholtovs'kyi, P. Maliunky Kyïveo-Lavrs'koi ikonopysnoi maisterni (Kiev 1982)

Kievan Cave Monastery Press (Kyievo-Pecherska drukarnia). The first imprimery in Kiev and the most important center of printing and engraving in Ukraine in the 17th and 18th centuries. It was founded ca 1606–15 at the *Kievan Cave Monastery by the archimandrite Ye. *Pletenetsky, who purchased the equipment of the former press of H. *Balaban in Striatyn, Galicia. Later it was headed by, among others, Z. Kopystensky, P. Mohyla, I. Gizel (for over 30 years), V. Yasynsky, and Y. Krovovsky. Other prominent Ukrainian cultural figures – the writers Y. Boretsky, P. Berynda, L. Zyzanii, and I. Galiatovsky; the master printers S. Berynda, T. Zemka, and T. Verbytsky; and the engravers I. Shchyrsky, O. and L. Tarasevych, I. Myhura, N. Zubrytsky, Prokopii, Illia, A. Kozachkovsky, and H. Levytsky – also worked there. The oldest extant book printed by the imprimery is the Chasoslov (Horologion) of 1616. Other noteworthy books include **Antolohion* (1619), P. *Berynda's Slavonic-Ruthenian lexicon (1627), the *Kievan Cave Patericon (1661), I. Gizel's **Sinopsis* (Synopsis, 1674), and **Ifika ieropolitika* (1712). The imprimery issued several hundred titles on various subjects, both original works and translations, in Ukrainian, Church Slavonic, Polish, Russian, Latin, and Greek. The books printed included many ecclesiastical and liturgical texts, and also primers, hagiographic studies, Orthodox polemical treatises, didactic works, and literary works (panegyrics, emblems, epigrams) by such authors as S. Kosiv, P. Mohyla, L. Baranovych, I. Galiatovsky, I. Gizel, D. Tuptalo, A. Radvylovsky, and T. Prokopovych. Beautifully engraved and ornamented, they were distributed throughout the Slavic countries, as well as Austria, Greece, and Moldavia. In the 16th and 17th centuries the imprimery played an important role in raising the level of education and culture in Ukraine and in aiding the Orthodox Ukrainians to defend themselves against the inroads of Polonization and Catholicism. The tsarist ukase of 1720 limited it to printing only religious works, which it continued to do until 1918. Its history, by F. Titov, was published in Kiev in 1916.

Kievan Cave Monastery Press; copper etching (1758)

Kievan Cave Patericon (Kyievo-Pechers'kyi pateryk). A collection of tales about the monks of the Kievan Cave Monastery. There exist two extant redactions: the Tver or Arsenian redaction of 1406, and the Kiev or Cassianian redaction of 1462. The original version arose after 1215 but not later than 1230 out of the correspondence of two monks of the monastery – Simon (by then the bishop of Suzdal and Vladimir) and Polikarp, who used the epistolary form as a literary device. The letters contain 20 tales about righteous or sinful monks of the monastery based on oral legends and several written sources, such as the Life of St Anthony and the Kievan Cave and Rostov chronicles, which have not survived. The later redactions, it seems, did not change the original text significantly, but supplemented it with the Life of St Theodosius and the eulogy of him, the tale about St Isaac (from a chronicle), and stories from the monastery's history. The Kiev redaction contains information about the later influence of Byzantine Hesychasm. In 1635 the patericon was printed in Polish, and in 1661 in Ukrainian Church Slavonic. Several later editions were considerably corrupted by editorial changes.

Kievan Cave Patericon

Most of the original text deals with events of the 11th century. It varies from brief accounts of particular facts (Poemen and Kuksha) to novella-like or novel-like narratives ('Moses the Hungarian' and 'Theodore and Basil'). Most of the tales tend to be antiseccular in tone and favor a strict, ascetic life. Nevertheless, some do testify to the decline of monastic life (some monks, for example, own property). Besides chronological data about the monastery, the text contains a wealth of historical and cultural information about monastic and secular life: such subjects as St Alimpij's icon painting, Armenian and Syrian physicians in Kiev, the cultural role of the Varangians, the fate of Kiev residents captured by King Bolesław I in his war with Grand Prince Yaroslav the Wise, bread made from pigweed during a famine, the princes' salt monopoly, the court system, private libraries, and the books read by monks. Only sporadically do the themes of wandering monks (a saint's encounter with devils and the magic treasure) occur, and demonology is mostly absent. Because of its relatively simple style, particularly in Simon, and its rich vocabulary, as well as its masterly characterization of individuals by means of dialogue, prayer, and 'internal monologue,' the patericon is one of the outstanding works of Old Ukrainian literature. It marked an important advance in the literary art of the period. A scholarly edition of the patericon was prepared by D. Abramovych and published in 1931.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Shakhmatov, A. Kievopecherskii paterik i Pecherskaia letopis' (St Petersburg 1897)

Abramovich, D. Izsledovanie o Kievo-Pecherskom paterike kak istoriko-literaturnom pamiatnike (St Petersburg 1902)
Pechers'kyi Pateryk abo pravedni staroi Ukraïny: Davnie dzhherelo staroukraïns'koi dukhovnosti, trans A. Velykyi (Rome 1973)
 D. Chyzhevsky

Kievan chant (Kyivskiy naspiv or Kyivskiy rozspiv). A repertoire of melodies used in the liturgy in Kievan Rus'. It developed out of the earlier Byzantine and Bulgarian chants, and by the 11th century was characterized by a distinctive style. The Kievan chant was a homophonic diatonic melody based, like the Byzantine chant, on eight main modes, but its modes differed in structure from the Byzantine ones. The melodic motif could be employed in more than one mode, but some modes could be used only at the beginning, middle, or end of a chant. The Kievan chant was cultivated at the Kievan Cave Monastery and from there spread to other parts of Ukraine. The names of some of its adepts – the monks Stepan in Kiev, Dmytro in Peremyshl, and Luka in Volodymyr-Volynskiy – have been preserved in the historical record. Transmitted at first orally, the chant was written down, eventually, in neumatic notation, which conveyed only the general melody, leaving the pitch and length of sounds undetermined. The Kievan repertoire was subdivided into three distinct categories: the great chant (velykyi rozspiv), which was the original form and was used only on the most solemn feasts; the abbreviated chant (skorochenyi rozspiv), which was used on minor holidays; and the little chant (malyi rozspiv), which was used on Sundays. In the 15th and 16th centuries, the Kievan chant gave rise to several variations such as the Kievan Cave Monastery chant, the Volhynian (Pochaiv) chant, the Galician (Peremyshl and Lviv) chant, and the Subcarpathian (Basilian) chant. Minor variations in the Kievan chant led to the development of the Kharkiv, Poltava, and Horodyshe chants. The most developed variation was the Kievan Cave Monastery chant, which absorbed elements of western-European music and attained its full and final form in the 16th century. By this time the melody had evolved into a chromatic one. The leading voice was the second tenor, supported by the first tenor, alto, and two bass voices. Lacking a soprano voice, this choir produced music of a distinctive quality. The Kievan chant and the chants that evolved from it had a significant influence on the development of Ukrainian music.

M. Stech

Kievan Mohyla Academy (Kyievo-Mohylianska akademiiia). The leading center of higher education in 17th- and 18th-century Ukraine, which exerted a significant intellectual influence over the entire Orthodox world at the time. Established in 1632 by the merging of the Kiev Epiphany Brotherhood School (est 1615–16) with the Kievan Cave Monastery School (est 1631 by P. *Mohyla), the new school was conceived by its founder, P. Mohyla, as an academy, ie, an institution of higher learning offering philosophy and theology courses and supervising a network of secondary schools. Completing the Orthodox school system, it was to compete on an equal footing with Polish academies run by the Jesuits. Fearing such competition, King Władysław IV granted the school the status of a mere college or secondary school, and prohibited it from teaching philosophy and theology. It was only in 1694 that the Kievan Mohyla College (Collegium Kijoviense Mohileanum) was granted the full privileges of an academy, and only in 1701 that it was recognized officially as an academy by Peter I.

Kievan Mohyla Academy; engraving by I. Shchyrsky (1698)

In founding the school, Mohyla's purpose was to master the intellectual skills and learning of contemporary Europe and to apply them to the defense of the Orthodox faith. Taking his most dangerous adversary as the model, he adopted the organizational structure, the teaching methods, and the curriculum of the Jesuit schools. Unlike other Orthodox schools, which emphasized Church Slavonic and Greek, Mohyla's college gave primacy to Latin and Polish. This change was a victory for the more progressive churchmen, who appreciated the political and intellectual importance of these languages.

Slavonic, the sacral language, and Ruthenian, the literary language of Ukrainians and Belorussians closest to the vernacular, continued to be taught, while Greek was relegated to a secondary place. The undergraduate program, based on the liberal arts, was designed to develop the basic skills of public speaking rather than to pass on a body of knowledge, and was organized into five grades. The three lower grades were essentially grammarian. They were preceded by an introductory grade, analog or fara, devoted to reading and writing and elementary Latin, Polish, and Slavonic. The first grade, infima, provided an introduction to Latin grammar based on E. Alvarez's De Institutione Grammatica Libri Tres, the standard textbook adopted by the Jesuits. In the next grade, grammatica, Alvarez continued to be used for Latin syntax, readings from Cicero and Ovid were analyzed, and Greek grammar was introduced. In the syntaxis grade Alvarez was completed and Greek continued to be studied. Besides Ovid and Cicero, some works by Catullus, Virgil, Tibullus, and Aesop were read. Each grade required a year to complete and included some instruction in catechism, arithmetic, music, and painting.

The intermediate level consisted of two grades, in which students began to compose Latin prose and verse. The first, poetica, took one year and provided a grounding in the theory and practice of literature, and a close study of the writings of Caesar, Sallust, Livy, Curtius, Martial, Virgil, and Horace. Polish Renaissance and baroque poetry (J. Kochanowski, S. Twardowski) and, later in the century, some Ukrainian poetry (I. Velychkovsky) were also read. The two-year rhetorica grade completed the secondary-school program. Cicero and Aristotle's Poetics were studied in the course of mastering the rules of elegant composition. In both grades students absorbed much prose and verse information on secular and biblical history, mythology, and classical geography for the purpose of rhetoric, not of knowledge.

Kievan instructors, like the instructors of Polish and other European schools, prepared their own Latin manuals of poetics and rhetoric. Approximately 120 17th- and 18th-century manuals have survived, including T. *Prokopovych's De Arte Poetica Libri III (1705) and De Arte Rhetorica Libri X (1706). The remarkable efflorescence of Ukrainian *baroque literature was closely connected with the school's philological program.

Kievan Mohyla Academy: official seal

Higher education consisted of a three-year philosophy program that paved the way to four years of theology. In spite of the king's prohibition, some course in philosophy was usually taught, and in 1642–6 a theology course was offered. In the mid-1680s a full philosophy and theology program was given a permanent place in the curriculum. Logic, physics, and metaphysics were the main parts of the philosophy program. The philosophy manuals prepared by the school's professors, of which about 80 have survived, show that there was no uniform system of thought, but that each course reflected the preferences and abilities of the instructor. The basically Aristotelian philosophy taught in the school was derived not from Aristotle himself but from his medieval interpreters and was supplemented with doctrines from St Augustine, Thomas Aquinas, Duns Scotus, and William of Ockham, humanists such as L. Valla, L. Vives, and D. Erasmus and the Protestant scholar P. Melancthon, and the Jesuits F. Suárez, P. Fonseca, and E. Molina. At the beginning of the 18th century T. Prokopovych showed an interest in R. Descartes and F. Bacon. From the middle of the 18th century on orders from the Holy Synod the academy adopted C. Wolff's philosophy. The theological courses at the academy consisted of commentaries on Catholic theologians such as R. Bellarmine, F. Suárez, T. González, and the Polish Jesuit T. Młodzianowski. In method, if not in content, they were very Thomistic. The only attempt to work out an independent theological system was P. Mohyla's Pravoslavnoe ispovedanie ... (Orthodox Confession ..., 1640).

From its beginnings, the academy had close ties with the Cossack starshyna, which provided it with moral and material support. Hetman I. Petrazhytsky-Kulaha approved P. Mohyla's plans for the new school in 1632 and granted it a charter. The school, in turn, educated the succeeding generation of the service elite. In the 1640s, when the Orthodox hierarchy sided with the Polish Crown against the rebellious Cossacks, Cossack sons continued to attend the college. Among them were the future hetmans I. Vyhovsky, I. Samoilovych, P. Teteria, I. Mazepa, and P. Polubotok. B. Khmelnytsky established the tradition of hetman grants in money, lands, and privileges to the college. The Kiev clergy's opposition to the Treaty of Pereiaslav (1654) severely strained their relation with the Cossacks. During the *Cossack-Polish wars (1648–57) and the Ruin period (1657–87), the activities of the college were severely disrupted. Its buildings and property were looted and destroyed several times by Muscovite and Polish armies. The strong Hetman state that emerged in Left-Bank Ukraine after the Ruin period provided favorable conditions for the college's growth. Supported generously by Hetman I. Samoilovych (1672–87), the school began to flourish towards the end of his rule, and during I. Mazepa's reign (1687–1709), enjoyed its golden age. The enrollment at the time exceeded 2,000. Some of the students, including S. Maksymovych, O. Turansky, and A. Runovsky, later gained prominence as Cossack officers.

Many of the most accomplished Ukrainian authors and churchmen of the time served on the school's faculty: L. Baranovych, Ioan Maksymovych, D. Tuptalo, S. Yavorsky, and T. Prokopovych. Some of them played instrumental roles in Peter I's educational reforms in Russia. The Moscow academy was patterned after the Kievian one and numerous Russian schools were organized by bishops who were graduates of the Kiev academy. Open to young men from all social strata, the academy attracted students from various regions of the Orthodox world. Some of its graduates, Ukrainian or foreign, continued their studies in Polish or European academies and universities, and returned home to weave Kievian and European thought patterns into their native tradition.

At the same time, Moscow's expanding political power and increasing interference in Ukrainian affairs threatened the academy's freedom and well-being. Gaining control of Kiev metropolity in 1686, the Patriarch of Moscow attempted to end the intellectual influence of Kiev on Muscovite society by placing almost all Kiev publications on an index of heretical books. It was forbidden to print books in Ruthenian. Although in 1693 Patriarch Adrian eased the linguistic restrictions, Ukrainian books were denied entry into Muscovy. The academy's golden age came to an abrupt end with Mazepa's defeat at Poltava in 1709. The school's properties were plundered by Russian troops. Students from Right-Bank Ukraine, which was under Polish rule, were no longer admitted. By 1711 the enrollment fell to 161. Graduates of the academy were encouraged to seek positions in Moscow or St Petersburg. Peter I's ban on Ruthenian publications and religious texts in the Ukrainian recension of Church Slavonic was a heavy blow to the academy.

After Peter's death, Mazepa's endowments were returned to the academy. Thanks to the support of Hetman D. Apostol and the administrative talents of Metropolitan R. Zaborovsky (1731–42), the school revived. New courses in modern languages, history and mathematics, medicine, and geography were added to its curriculum. The enrollment rose steadily from 490 in 1738–9 to 1,110 in 1744–5. Graduates were encouraged to complete their education in European universities and many sons of wealthy Cossack families studied abroad. The academy continued to educate the civil and ecclesiastical elite of the Hetman state and the Russian Empire. Catherine II's abolition of the Hetmanate in 1764 and secularization of the monasteries in 1786 deprived the academy of its chief sources of financial support. The school became a ward of the Russian imperial government and its importance declined rapidly. By the end of the century it was reduced to an eparchial seminary. In 1811, 1,069 of its 1,198 students were candidates for the priesthood. In 1817 the academy was closed down, and two years later a theological academy was opened in its place.

The academy's adaptation of European education was largely conditioned by the social and religious demands of early 17th-century Ukrainian society. Hardly touched by the Renaissance and Reformation movements, it placed little value on the Ukrainian vernacular and felt no need for a secular culture. It defined itself mostly in religious terms and, therefore, made the preservation of the Orthodox faith its primary concern. By arming the Ukrainian members of the leading estates in the Polish Commonwealth with the languages and intellectual tools of the dominant culture, the academy fulfilled the demands placed on it by society. Accustomed to a defensive, conservative posture, the intellectual elite nurtured by the academy failed to capitalize on the new opportunities offered by the Hetman state. In the 18th century the academy adjusted itself as best it could to the increasing restrictions placed on it by an alien church hierarchy and imperial power. Its literary and scholarly achievement had a decisive impact on the development of Ukrainian culture and provided a firm foundation for later accomplishments.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Golubev, S. Istoriia Kievskoi akademii, 1 (Kiev 1866)
 Jablonowski, A. Akademia Kijowsko-Mohylańska: Zarys historyczny na tle rozwoju ogólnego cywilizacji zachodniej na Rusi (Cracow 1900)
 Titov, Kh. Stara vyshcha osvita v Kyjiv'skii Ukraini xvi–poch. xix v. (Kiev 1924)
 Khyzhniak, Z. Kyievo-Mohylians'ka akademiia, 2 edns (Kiev 1970 and 1981)

- Joukovsky, A. 'Contributions à l'histoire de l'Académie de Kiev (1615–1817): Centre culturel et d'enseignement en Europe orientale,' PH D diss., Sorbonne University 1975
- Sydorenko, A. The Kievan Academy in the Seventeenth Century (Ottawa 1977)
- Belodid, I. Kievo-Mohylianska akademiia v istorii skhidno-slav'ianskykh literaturnykh mov (Kiev 1979)
- Stratii, Ia.; Litvinov, V.; Andrushko, V. Opisanie kursov filosofii i ritoriki professorov Kievo-Mogilianskoi akademii (Kiev 1982)
- The Kiev Mohyla Academy*. Special issue of Harvard Ukrainian Studies, 8, no. 1/2 (June 1984)

N. Pylypiuk

Kievan Rus'. The first state to arise among the Eastern Slavs. It took its name from the city of Kiev, the seat of the grand prince from about 880 until the beginning of the 13th century. At its zenith, it covered a territory stretching from the Carpathian Mountains to the Volga River, and from the Black Sea to the Baltic Sea. The state's rapid rise and development was based on its advantageous location at the intersection of major north-south and east-west land and water trade routes with access to two major seas, and favorable local conditions for the development of agriculture. In the end, however, the state's great size led to the development of centrifugal tendencies and local interests that limited its political and social cohesion. This, and its proximity to the Asian steppes, which left it vulnerable to invasions of nomadic hordes, eventually contributed to the decline of Kievan Rus'.

In the 8th century, the territory of Kievan Rus' was inhabited by a number of tribes who shared a common proto-Slavic language, pagan beliefs, and life-style. The ancestors of the Ukrainians included the *Polianians, *Siverianians, *Derevlians, *Dulibians, *White Croats, *Ulychians, and *Tivertsians. The proto-Russian *Krivichians, *Viaticians, and *Radimichians and the proto-Belorussian *Drehovichians also lived on the lands that eventually constituted Kievan Rus'. The Polianians were the largest and most developed of the tribes; according to the Rus' Primary Chronicle, their prince *Kyi founded the city of Kiev in the 6th century. None of the tribes, however, was able to create a viable state, and in the 9th century the *Varangians from Scandinavia conquered the tribes and laid the groundwork for the Kievan Rus' state.

History. According to some sources, the first Varangian rulers of Rus' were *Askold and Dyr. In 882 they were killed by Prince *Oleh, the son of *Riuryk. From that time, descendants of the *Riurykide dynasty ruled Kievan Rus' and other east-European territories until 1596.

Oleh was soon able to consolidate his rule in Kiev and defeated the *Khazars, who had been threatening the individual tribes from the east. In 907 he led a campaign against Constantinople and four years later concluded an important trade agreement that laid the basis for a permanent relationship between Rus' and the *Byzantine Empire. Oleh's son *Ihor (912–45) expanded the territory under his control to include the northern Pontic littoral. His attempts to extend his rule over all of the tribes in the region, however, were resisted and he was eventually killed by the Derevlians, who refused to pay him tribute. His widow *Olha (945–62) ruled as regent until their son came of age. She was the first Rus' ruler to convert to Christianity and to establish direct ties with central and western-European rulers. The reign of *Sviatoslav I (962–72) was marked by almost uninterrupted warfare. Known as 'the Conqueror,' Sviatoslav attempted to expand his territory to the Danube River, defeating the Bulgarians and establishing Pereiaslavets on the Danube.

If the first period of Kievan Rus' history can be characterized as the era of expansion, which saw Kiev extend its authority over all of the east-Slavic tribes and witnessed the attempts of the rulers to expand their realm to the Danube and Volga basins, then the second period, beginning with the reign of *Yaropolk I Sviatoslavych (972–80), may best be described as the era of internal consolidation. However, it was under Yaropolk's brother *Volodymyr I the Great, who seized power with the help of Varangian mercenaries and killed his brother in 980, that Kievan Rus' became one of the pre-eminent states of Europe. The most important achievement of Volodymyr's rule was the adoption of Christianity in 988 as the official religion of Rus' (see *Christianization of Ukraine), which facilitated the spread of Byzantine culture throughout the state (see *Byzantine art, *Byzantine law) and served to reinforce the political unity and cultural cohesion of Rus'.

After Volodymyr's death in 1015, his son *Sviatopolk I seized power, but he was opposed in a bitter internecine war. Sviatopolk was initially helped by the Polish prince *Bolesław I the Brave, who took the opportunity to capture the *Cherven towns from Rus'; however, when he abandoned this alliance, his brother *Yaroslav the Wise, aided by an army of Varangians, captured Kiev. A second series of wars ensued between Yaroslav and his brother *Mstyslav, who had developed an important power base as prince of Tmutorokan. The two brothers ruled jointly until Mstyslav died in 1036 without an heir, leaving Yaroslav as grand prince of a reunited Rus'. Yaroslav's reign as unchallenged grand prince (1036–54) was one of the highest points in the history of Rus'. The process of internal consolidation begun earlier was greatly furthered by Yaroslav's codification of the law in **Ruskaia Pravda*. Culture flourished: the magnificent St Sophia Cathedral was built in Kiev, the Kievan Cave Monastery was founded, a library was established, and learning and education were encouraged. Yaroslav also appointed the first local hierarch as Kievan metropolitan (see *Ilarion), thus asserting Kiev's independence of Constantinople. Yaroslav's death initiated another round of civil war and internecine struggle, although he had tried to prevent this effect by preparing a plan for dividing up political power between his sons and re-establishing the seniority-rotation system devised by Volodymyr the Great. By this time, the interests of the individual princes were too disparate to be easily reconciled and none respected the others' domains or the ultimate authority of the Kievan prince. The situation was further complicated by the presence of the *Cumans, who in the middle of the 11th century had replaced the *Pechenegs on the southern border of Rus'. For the next century and a half they waged continuous war against Rus' and became involved in the internecine wars, serving as allies of one branch of the dynasty or another. The princes attempted to solve their differences in a series of conferences, especially the *Liubech congress in 1097, which altered the patrimonial system of decreeing that sons could rightfully inherit their father's lands, although they would all

KIEVAN RUS'

- |   |   |
|---|---|
| <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>1. Borders of Kiev Principality</li> <li>2. Borders of the expanded Kiev Principality (1054)</li> <li>3. Borders of other states</li> <li>4. Campaigns of Sviatoslav I</li> <li>5. Campaigns of Volodymyr the Great</li> <li>6. Campaigns of Yaroslav the Wise</li> <li>7. Western territories annexed by Volodymyr the Great (980 to 1015)</li> </ul> | <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>8. Northwestern territories annexed by Yaroslav the Wise (1019 to 1054)</li> <li>9. The southern border of Kievan Rus' under Sviatoslav I</li> <li>10. Fortification walls</li> <li>11. Varangian trade route from Scandinavia to Constantinople</li> <li>12. Pecheneg and Polovtsian raids</li> <li>13. Pecheneg and Polovtsian migrations</li> </ul> | respect the authority of the Kievan prince. All of these solutions were short-lived, however, and the civil wars continued.
|---|---|

A brief respite occurred during the reign of *Volodymyr Monomakh. Under Monomakh (1113–25) Kiev once again flourished and the internecine wars abated. Ruskaia Pravda was amended (see *Statute of Volodymyr Monomakh), and several valuable works of literature, *hagiography, and *historiography were composed, including the important *Kievan Cave Patericon. Monomakh himself wrote his famous testament **Pouchennia ditiam*, in which he told his sons how to be just and powerful rulers. His son *Mstyslav I Volodymyrovych (1125–32) inherited the principal lands of Rus', while the remaining territories were distributed among his brothers. Neither Mstyslav nor his brother and successor in Kiev, Yaropolk Volodymyrovych (1132–9), was able to prevent the dynastic rivalry for the title of 'grand prince of Kiev and all Rus'.' The Kievan Rus' federation continued to disintegrate and Kiev itself lost its primacy: the city was sacked several times by feuding princes, most notably in 1169 by Andrei Bogoliubskii of Vladimir, Rostov, and Suzdal. The principalities of *Kiev, *Polatsk, *Turiv-Pynske, Volodymyr-Volynskyi (see *Volhynia), Halych (see *Galicia), *Chernihiv, and *Pereiaslav emerged as independent and separate entities, with their own political and economic peculiarities, as did *Novgorod, Suzdal, Vladimir, and others that later constituted Muscovy and then *Russia. The quarreling between the princes left Rus' vulnerable to foreign attacks, and the invasion of the *Mongols in 1236–40 finally destroyed the state. The principalities never organized a common defense, and in turn each was conquered and pillaged. Kiev was thoroughly sacked in 1240 and reduced to a shadow of its former self.

Origins. The question of the origins of Kievan Rus' still produces controversy among historians. The oldest, or *Normanist, theory rests mainly on a literal interpretation of the Primary Chronicle and stresses the role of the Varangians as the first leaders and organizers of the state. Ukrainian historians, beginning with M. Maksymovych and followed by M. Kostomarov, V. Antonovych, M. Hrushevsky, D. Bahalii, D. Doroshenko, M. Chubaty, and others, have generally downplayed the Varangian influence on the formation of Rus'. Contemporary Soviet historiography categorically rejects the Normanist theory, considering it bourgeois. However, it remains, with certain modifications, the basis of Western historiography of Russia and Ukraine.

The issue of the nationality of the inhabitants of the Kievan state is also a matter of continuing controversy. The discussion was initiated by the Russian historian M. Pogodin, who claimed that the original inhabitants of contemporary Ukraine fled north under pressure from the Mongols, and that they later became the modern Russian nation. The Ukrainians, meanwhile, arrived much later from somewhere in the Carpathian Mountains. Pogodin's views were expanded on by the philologist O. Sobolevsky. This theory was disputed by Ukrainian historians such as M. Maksymovych, M. Dashkevych, P. Zhytetsky, and A. Krymsky. M. Hrushevsky sought to demonstrate that Ukrainians were autochthonous in their territories, and that the Principality of Galicia-Volhynia was the successor to the Kievan state. Hrushevsky's theories were for the most part adopted by Ukrainian historians and by some others. Because these theories do not correspond to the political objectives of the Soviet leadership, a panel of historians was commissioned in the 1930s by the Communist Party to draw up a new historical schema of Eastern Europe; its basic premise was that Kievan Rus' had been founded by a single old Rus' nationality, out of which Ukrainians, Russians, and Belorussians developed in the 14th and 15th centuries. This theory was given official approbation with the publication of Tezy pro 300-richchia vozz'iednannia Ukrainy z Rosiieiu, 1654–1954 (Theses about the 300th Anniversary of the Reunification of Ukraine with Russia, 1954). Contemporary émigré Ukrainian scholarship bases itself on Hrushevsky's approach, and continues to expand its corollaries along historical (M. Chubaty, N. Polonska-Vasylenko, M. Zhdan, O. Pritsak), archeological (Ya. Pasternak), and linguistic (S. Smal-Stotsky, G.Y. Shevelov) lines.

The political and social institutions of Kievan Rus'. From the 10th to the 12th century the Kievan state underwent significant sociopolitical changes. Its original component tribes had no political tradition, and its first rulers viewed their domain simply as an object of exploitation, at best as a clan possession. Volodymyr the Great was the first ruler to give Rus' political unity, by way of organized religion. The church provided him with the concepts of territorial and hierarchical organization; Byzantine notions of autocracy were adopted by him and his successors to give them the equivalent of imperial authority. The political traditions introduced by Volodymyr were based on the principles of territorial indivisibility and dynastic sovereignty. The seniority system of rule – ascension from elder brother to younger and from the youngest uncle to the eldest nephew – provided the Riuryk dynasty with a rotating system of advancement of its members, gave them political experience in lands they could someday expect to rule from Kiev, and assured control, by way of traditional sanctions, of key points of the realm. This system served well until the reign of Monomakh, but did not survive Kiev's decline.

The power of the grand prince was maintained by his military strength, particularly that of his **druzhyna*, or retinue. Ideologically, his power was upheld by the church, whose teachings gave him the attributes and responsibilities of a national leader, judge, and first Christian of the realm. The grand prince ruled and dispensed justice with the help of viceroys appointed by him, who were often the sons of the grand prince, of other princes, of governors, or of military commanders. These representatives of the grand prince's central power were aided by local administrators – the **desiatski*. The grand prince consulted on important state matters with the *Boyar Council, which consisted of his senior retainers and the local aristocracy of power and wealth.

The **voiche* (assembly), an important organ already within the tribal network, resolved all matters on behalf of the population. The city viche, composed of freemen, decided mainly on questions of war and peace and on the invitation, recognition, or expulsion of a prince. It became particularly important in the 12th century during the internecine wars of the princes for the throne of Kiev.

In the Princely era, Ukrainian society had its own peculiarities. Its privileged elite (the **boyars* and the 'better people'), which enjoyed full protection of the law, was not a closed estate; based, as it was, on merit, which the prince rewarded with grants of land, its membership was dependent on the will of the prince. Thus even priests' sons and commoners could become boyars. The townsfolk consisted of *burghers – mostly merchants and craftspeople – and paupers. There was little difference in status between the wealthy *merchants and the landed boyars. Most freemen were yeomen called *smerds, who lived on their own land or on the land of the prince, paid taxes, and performed certain duties, such as building fortifications, bridges, and roads and serving in the *levy en masse in times of war; gradually the smerds became dependent on their lords, and some became tenants or hired laborers on the land. A smaller category of peasants consisted of zakups – impoverished smerds who had become indentured and half-free. The lowest social stratum in Rus' consisted of slaves (see *Slavery). Male slaves were called *kholopy; usually prisoners of war or the offspring of slaves, they had no rights as persons and were considered the legal, movable property of their masters. Certain churchmen and princes, eg, Monomakh in his statute, tried to improve the lot and legal status of the slaves.

The economy of Kievan Rus'. Relatively little is known about the economy of Kiev, although there is no doubt that *agriculture was the main activity of the inhabitants. Farming techniques and implements were naturally primitive and the peasants lived mostly at a subsistence level. Some animal husbandry was practiced, as was extensive grain cultivation. Land, particularly after the 11th century, was privately owned. Most peasants supplemented their agricultural activities with fishing, trapping, and hunting, especially in the northern forest and forest-steppe regions. The forests also supplied wood, the major source of fuel. The peasants generally lived in small, scattered villages.

The second major component of Kiev's economy was foreign trade. Not only were local goods, particularly furs, traded for important items, but much profit was made from the simple transshipment of goods along the great trade routes linking first east and west and later north and south. In the end, it was the breakdown of the trade route from 'the Varangians to Byzantium' that partially initiated Kiev's decline, and it was the emergence of specialized routes linking the northern principalities to the Hanseatic League of states that furthered the disintegration of the state.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Hrushevs'kyi, M. Istoriia Ukraïny-Rusy, vols 1–3 (Lviv 1898–9)
 Grekov, B. Kievskaia Rus' (Moscow 1949; English trans Kiev Rus [Moscow 1959])
 Paszkiewicz, H. The Origin of Russia (London 1954)
 Vernadsky, G. The Origins of Russia (New Haven 1959)
 Rybakov, B. Drevnaia Rus' (Moscow 1963)
 Shekera, I. Mizhnarodni zv'iazky Kyïvs'koï Rusi (Kiev 1963)
 Chubatyi, M. 'Kniazha Rus'-Ukraïna ta vynykennia tr'okh skhidn'o-slovians'kykh natsii,' in ZNTSh, vol 178 (New York-Paris 1964)
 Polons'ka-Vasylenko, N. Dvi kontseptsii istorii Ukraïny i Rosii (Munich 1964; English trans Two Conceptions of the History of Ukraine and Russia [London 1968])
 Braichevs'kyi, M. Pokhodzhennia Rusi (Kiev 1968)
 Pashuto, V. Vneshniaia politika Drevnei Rusi (Moscow 1968)
 Froianov, I. Kievskaia Rus': Ocherki sotsial'no-politicheskoi istorii (Leningrad 1980)
 Tolochko, P. Kiev i Kievskaia zemlia v epokhu feodal'noi razdroblennosti XII–XIII vekov (Kiev 1980)

- Pritsak, O. The Origin of Rus', vol 1 (Cambridge, Mass 1981)
 Rybakov, B. Kievskaia Rus' i russkie kniazhestva XII–XIII vekov (Moscow 1982)
 Rybakov, B.; Selov, V. Vostochnye slaviany v VI–XIII vv. (Moscow 1982)

M. Zhdan

Kievlianin: title page (1840–50)

Kievlianin (The Kievan). An almanac published and edited by M. *Maksymovych. Only three volumes appeared: the first in 1840, the next in 1841 (both in Kiev), and the last in 1850 (in Moscow). They contained many articles on the history of Kiev (some of them by Maksymovych himself), Pereiaslav, Volhynia, and Transcarpathia. In his articles on literature, Maksymovych stressed the distinctiveness of the Ukrainian language and its great literary potential, and strongly condemned the attacks of the Russian chauvinist press on Ukrainian. The almanac published historical documents and charters, and the literary works of Ye. Hrebinka, H. Kvitka-Osnovianenko, P. Kulish, and some Russian poets.

Kievlianin (The Kievan). A conservative Russian newspaper published thrice weekly (1864–79) and then daily (to 1919) in Kiev (interrupted from February 1917 to August 1919). Subsidized by the tsarist government, it advocated a rigid anti-Ukrainian and anti-Polish policy. It attacked any expression of Ukrainophilism as Ukrainian separatism. Its founder and first editor was V. Shulgin (1864–78), who was succeeded by D. Pikhno (1878–1911) and then by his son V. Shulgin (1911–19). In 1869–72 it published A. Svydnytsky's stories about everyday life in Ukraine.

Kievskaia mysl' (Kievan Thought). A liberal Russian daily published in Kiev from 12 January 1907 to December 1918. Representing the democratic intelligentsia, it advocated a moderate anti-Ukrainian policy. It had the largest circulation of any Russian newspaper in Ukraine. Besides political news, it published literary works. In 1906–15 it had an illustrated weekly supplement. In 1917–18 a morning and an evening edition were published.

Kievskaia starina (Kiev Antiquity). A learned monthly for Ukrainian studies printed in Russian and published in Kiev from 1882 to 1906. In 1907 it was renamed Ukraïna and appeared in Ukrainian. The journal was founded by T. Lebedyntsev, V. Antonovych, O. Lazarevsky, and P. Zhytetsky, and was financed mostly by V. Symyrenko. As the unofficial organ of the *Hromada of Kiev, which in 1893 became its real owner, it was published and edited by T. Lebedyntsev (1882–7), O. Lashkevych (1888–9), Ye. Kyvlytsky (1889–92), and V. Naumenko (1893–1907). For over 25 years Kievskaiia starina was the only printed medium of Ukrainian scholarship in Russian-ruled Ukraine. It published a wealth of research and documentary materials in history, archeology (particularly its supplement Arkheologicheskaiia letopis' iuzhnoi Rossii, 1899–1901), ethnography, philology, and bibliography. In 1890 it began to publish belles-lettres, which from 1897 appeared in Ukrainian, and literary criticism. The leading Ukrainian scientific minds and cultural figures of the time were grouped around the journal, forming something like a learned society. At the turn of the century Kievskaiia starina became a sort of encyclopedia of Ukrainian studies. Among its contributors were the following scholars: M. Kostomarov, V. Antonovych, M. Drahomanov (whose articles appeared under the nom de plume of P. Kuzmychevsky as well as others), P. and O. Yefymenko, O. Lazarevsky, M. and A. Storozhenko, M. Dashkevych, P. Zhytetsky, K. Mykhalchuk, O. Rusov, I. Manzhura, A. Vostokov, Ya. Shulhin, N. Molchanovsky, V. Horlenko, V. Naumenko, I. Luchytsky, M. Petrov, S. Golubev, V. Ikonnikov, D. Bahalii, M. Sumtsov, I. Franko, A. Skalkovsky, V. Shcherbyna, I. Novytsky, O. Levytsky, M. Vasylenko, M. Hrushevsky, A. Krymsky, M. Biliashivsky, and V. Hnatiuk.

Kievskaiia starina: cover in 1882

The journal published such historical materials as the diaries of M. Khanenko (1884–6), Ya. Markovych (1893–7), S. Oświęcim (1882), K. Chojecki (1883), I. Ostrozhsky-Lokhvytsky (1886), and P. Seletsky (1884); memoirs of M. Tyshkevych (1889) and M. Chalyi (1890–6); and correspondence of several prominent Ukrainians in the nineteenth century, including the letters of P. Kulish and the Myloradovych Liubetskyi archives (1897). It made an enormous contribution to the development of Ukrainian learning and culture. A systematic index to the journal was published in 1911.

O. Ohloblyn

Kievskie gubernskie vedomosti (Kiev Gubernia News). An official government newspaper published in Kiev from 1838 to 1917, thrice weekly from 1866. In its official section it published administrative decrees and notices, and in its non-official section local news; articles on archeology, ethnography, history, geography, economics, and politics in Kiev gubernia and its neighbors; and world news. Some Ukrainian scholars, such as O. Lazarevsky, D. Bahalii, and P. Yefymenko, contributed articles to the paper. In 1917 it began to be published in both Russian and Ukrainian.

Kievskii telegraf (Kiev Telegraph). Kiev's first newspaper, a political, scientific, and literary semiweekly published from August 1859 to July 1876. It was founded by A. Yunk, who was its first publisher and editor. Printed in Russian, from 1864 it began to appear thrice weekly. In 1860–3 it published a literary supplement. It lacked any clear editorial policy, but showed a pro-Ukrainian attitude. In 1874 the paper was purchased by Ye. Hohotska, the wife of S. Hohotsky, who relied on Yu. Tsvitkovsky and his Ukrainophile friends to edit the paper. Kievskii telegraf became the unofficial paper of the *Hromada of Kiev. Its new policy was worked out by M. *Drahomanov. Ukrainian scholars such as V. Antonovych, V. Berenshtam, F. Vovk, M. Drahomanov, M. Ziber, V. Navrotsky, S. Podolynsky, O. Rusov, P. Zhytetsky, P. Chubynsky, and Ya. Shulhin became its main contributors. It covered political developments in the Russian Empire and in other Slavic countries, the Ukrainian literary movement, the theater in Kiev and the gubernia, and the evolution of Ukrainian culture and language. Constant denunciations by influential Russian reactionaries prompted the authorities to apply the provisions of the *Ems Ukase and to close down the paper on 5 July 1876.

Kiik-Koba (also Kiikkoba). A Lower Paleolithic settlement located in caves on the right bank of the Zuiia River, 25 km east of Symferopil in the Crimea. Kiik-Koba was discovered by G. Bonch-Osmolovsky and excavated by him in 1924–6. The lower cultural layer was dated to the late Acheulean–early Mousterian period and contained flint tools of indeterminate form and animal bones (giant deer, wild ass, saiga). The upper cultural layer belonged to the middle Mousterian period and contained flint points and scrapers as well as bones of giant deer, woolly rhinoceros, saiga, cave bear, mammoth, and other animals. There were also remnants of walls, which had been constructed in the Mousterian period to block drafts. Graves dug in the stone floor contained the remains of a Neanderthal adult male and a year-old infant. These were the first remains of early man discovered in Ukraine.

Kikot, Andrii [Kikot', Andrii], b 27 November 1929 in Kamianka, Poltava oblast, d 13 October 1975 in Kiev. Operatic bass. A student of I. *Patorzhynsky and a graduate of the Kiev Conservatory (1959), he joined the Kiev Theater of Opera and Ballet. His repertoire included Sarastro in A. Mozart's Magic Flute, Mephistopheles in C. Gounod's Faust, Karas in S. Hulak-Artemovskyy's Zaporozhian Cossack beyond the Danube, Taras in M. Lysenko's Taras Bulba, the General in H. Maiboroda's Arsenal, Kryvonis in K. Dankevych's Bohdan Khmelnytsky, and Godunov in M. Mussorgskyy's Boris Godunov. He won several silver and gold medals at international competitions.

1

2

3

4

5

6

7

8

9

10

11

KILIMS 1) 17th-century fragment, from Kiev (Lviv Museum of Ukrainian Art). 2) 18th-century fragment, from the Kiev region (Lviv Museum of Ukrainian Art). 3) 18th century, from the Poltava region (Kiev Museum of Ukrainian Art). 4) Late 18th century, from the Poltava region (Poltava Art Museum). 5) 18th century, from the Poltava region (Kiev Museum of Ukrainian Art). 6) 18th century, from the Hutsul region (Lviv Museum of Ukrainian Art). 7) Late 18th century, from Podilia (Ukrainian Museum, New York City). 8) 19th century, from the Kiev region (Museum of the Ethnography of the Peoples of the USSR, Leningrad). 9) Late 19th century, from Podilia (Kamianets-Podilskyi Museum). 10) 19th century, from the Poltava region (Poltava Art Museum). 11) 19th century, from Volhynia (Lviv Museum of Ukrainian Art).

This page intentionally left blank

Mykola Kilchevsky

Kilchevsky, Mykola [Kil'čevs'kyj], b 15 June 1909 in Kamianets-Podilskyi, Podilia gubernia, d 14 June 1979 in Kiev. Specialist in mechanics and mathematics; full member of the AN URSR from 1969. A graduate of the Kiev Physical-Chemical-Mathematical Institute, he taught at various institutes in Kiev and Tashkent. In 1945 he was appointed professor at Kiev University and in 1958 chairman of a department of the Institute of Structural Mechanics. His main publications deal with general mechanics, the theory of membranes, the theory of elasticity, and the analysis of solid body collisions.

Kiliia [Kilija]. VIII-10. City (1969 pop 24,500), fluvial port, and raion center in Odessa oblast situated on the left bank of the Kiliia Channel of the Danube Delta 40 km from the Black Sea. It was first mentioned in the late 7th century BC as the Greek polis of Licostomo. Kiliia belonged to Kievan Rus' from the 10th century AD and the Principality of Galicia-Volhynia from the early 13th century. Because of its commercial importance and strategic location on the delta it was an object of conquest, and from the 14th century on it was besieged and changed hands numerous times. It was ruled by Hungary (1353-9, 1448-65), Wallachia (1404-27), and Moldavia (1359-1403, 1427-48, 1465-84) before falling to Turkey (1484-1812). Its citadel (built in 1479) controlled traffic on the delta. As a Turkish port, Kiliia was plundered by Cosacks led by H. Loboda and S. Nalyvaiko (1594-5), I. Sulyma (1635), and S. Palii (1693). During the Russo-Turkish wars it was held by Russian forces in 1770-74, 1790-1, and 1806-12. Formally ceded to the Russian Empire in 1812, it was restored to Turkey after the Crimean War (in 1856), but was again ceded to Russia in 1878. In 1897 its population of 11,600 consisted of 4,500 Ukrainians, 2,500 Moldavians, 2,200 Russians, and 2,150 Jews. One of the largest trading cities on the Danube, after the First World War Kiliia was ceded to Rumania. From June 1940 to July 1941 it was occupied by Soviet troops, and since August 1944 it has remained a Soviet city. It is one of the major shipping and fishing centers on the Danube. Ship-repair yards are located in its harbor, and its industries manufacture bricks, asphalt, flax fiber, essential oils, and food products. A monument to B. Khmelnytsky, remains of the citadel, a 16th-century Greek church, St Nicholas's Church (1648), and the Holy Protectress Cathedral (1836) are found there.

Kilim weaving. The term 'kilim' (Ukrainian: kylym) is of Turkic origin and denotes an ornamented woven fabric used to cover floors or to adorn walls. The earliest references to kilims date back to the chronicles of Kievan Rus' and link them to burial rites. The princes used kilims also as chair covers. References to kilims are found in bylyny and historical songs. Kilims are depicted in the frescoes of St Cyril's Church in Kiev and in portraits of the late 17th and early 18th centuries.

Nothing definite can be said about kilim weaving in Ukraine before the 16th century. The earlier kilims belonging to the ruling class most likely had been imported. The earliest references to kilim imports from eastern countries occur in 15th-century sources. Kilim production in Volhynia in the 16th century is well documented; eg, a 1578 document listing M. Holshanska's dowry mentions two serf weavers, Yurko and Fedir. There are many 17th-century references to both locally produced and imported kilims. By the 18th century, kilim weaving was widespread: in Right-Bank Ukraine the mills owned by the Czartoryski and Potocki families, and in Left-Bank Ukraine Col P. Polubotok's mill, were well known. Although kilim weaving may have been taken up by peasants much earlier, in the 18th century it became widespread among them. Monks and town craftsmen also engaged in weaving. The industry grew rapidly at the end of the 18th century and in the first half of the 19th century. New mills were opened by landowners on their estates, especially in Left-Bank Ukraine, and in the towns. By the mid-19th century, Kharkiv's yearly production of kilims and woolen caparisons amounted to 25,000 pieces.

During the second half of the 19th century the kilim industry in Ukraine suffered an abrupt decline. Kharkiv's annual output, for example, fell to 4,000 kilims. Some measures were taken by individual manufacturers and zemstvos to counteract this trend. The Poltava zemstvo opened a kilim-weaving school, promoted kilim sales, and set up a collection of traditional kilims. In 1905 V. Khanenko organized a cottage weaving industry in Helenivka village, Vasylykiv county, Kiev gubernia. His craftsmen served a two-year apprenticeship. V. Fedorovych started a kilim-weaving school and workshop in the late 1880s in Vikno village, Ternopil region. At the beginning of the 20th century the main kilim-weaving districts in Left-Bank Ukraine were Myrhorod, Zinkiv, Romne, Poltava, and Pryluka counties. Thanks to the efforts of the artist O. Prybylska, a cottage weaving industry sprang up in 1913 in Skoptsi village, Kiev gubernia. Kilim weaving prospered also in the Katerynoslav region, Podilia, and the Ternopil region (Zbarazh, Zalozhtsi, Tovste, and Vikno).

In the late 19th and the beginning of the 20th century, new kilim-weaving centers sprang up in Galicia under the influence of the developing kilim industry in western Podilia. The Weaving Society, founded in 1886, began to produce kilims in 1890. In 1894 the society opened a weaving school, which in the 1920s was transformed into a kilim factory. A number of short-lived kilim mills were set up in the vicinity of Kosiv, Ternopil, Chortkiv, Zbarazh, Zhydachiv, and Lviv. A kilim industry existed in Transcarpathia in the 19th century, although information about it is sparse. In 1905 a co-operative kilim mill was organized in Hanychi village, Tiachiv county. Another mill appeared in Ardanove village, Irshava county. Bukovyna had a well-developed kilim industry in the 19th century. In the 1920s a kilim weaving school was opened in Ataky, Bessarabia.

At the beginning of the Soviet period the kilim industry in Ukraine experienced some serious difficulties: there was a shortage of equipment and raw materials, and private mills had closed down. With much effort the new authorities restored kilim weaving in its traditional centers. Workshops and art schools were set up in the Poltava, Chernihiv, and Kiev regions and in eastern Podolia to train qualified workers for the kilim industry. The industry was organized into handicraft (or the so-called artcraft) artels and was encouraged to produce kilims for export. Between 1928 and 1930 its output increased from 40,000 to 100,000 rubles' worth. In the 1930s the artels were turned into large state enterprises and were brought under the Ukrainian Handicraft Association (est 1936). Their production was regulated by the five-year plans. Today the more important kilim enterprises are located in Reshetylivka, Dihtiari, Hlyniany, Kolomyia, Khotyn, and Kosiv. Since the Second World War kilim production at these centers has grown steadily, with geometric kilims outweighing floral ones. Hlyniany's output increased from 15,000 sq m in 1945 to 49,000 sq m in 1960 and 82,000 sq m in 1970; Kosiv's from 95,000 sq m in 1955 to 120,000 sq m in 1965; and Khotyn's from 10,600 sq m in 1950 to 17,000 sq m in 1960 and 46,000 sq m in 1970.

Kilim making is a complex and labor-intensive process that includes yarn spinning, dyeing, and weaving. Traditionally, the necessary skills were passed on from generation to generation. Originally, the basic material was sheep's wool. Later on cotton and flax yarns were introduced, and in recent times synthetic fibres that are resistant to rot, mold, and moths have been adopted. Until the second half of the 19th century only natural dyes, mostly from local plants, were used. Yellow and green dyes were obtained from onion husks and blackthorn berries, red dyes from cochineal insects, black and gray dyes from oak gall, brown dyes from young alder bark, and blue dyes from indigo shrubs. These natural dyes produced pleasant soft colors that were very fast. Today, synthetic dyes have replaced the traditional natural dyes. Two basic types of looms – vertical and horizontal – have been used in kilim weaving. Flat-woven as well as knotted kilims were prepared on vertical looms. Patterns were produced by the interlocked tapestry weave: the wefts were woven back and forth into the warp by hand until the desired color area was defined. Then the background was woven in mechanically. Horizontal looms, which are mainly for geometric patterns, were introduced later. Today kilims are produced in the traditional way and on the somewhat more modern Axminster and Jacquard machines.

The oldest record about the ornamentation of Ukrainian kilims dates back to the 16th century. It describes kilims 'with various flowers,' two of them with a light blue, two with a white, one with a yellow, and five with a black background. Three 17th-century kilims have been preserved. One of them, a piled kilim with a floral ornament, was produced in 1698 at S. Koniecpolski's mill, which was built in Brody in the mid-17th century.

The ornamentation of 18th-century kilims consisted mostly of plant designs, which display much originality and local variations. The plants depicted on Right-Bank kilims tend to be slenderer and more stylized than those on Left-Bank kilims. Geometrical ornaments were more widespread than floral ones. As the market for the geometrically ornamented kilims grew, the floral ornamentation evolved towards a more geometric, stylized pattern. The geometrically ornamented kilim was and continues to be the basic type of kilim produced in Galicia, Bukovyna, Polisia, Podolia, and the Hutsul region of the Carpathian Mountains. Many motifs on these kilims symbolize natural phenomena as they appeared to a primitive mind. For centuries the magical symbols revered by the common people were depicted in folk art. In time they lost their original meaning and became simply decorative elements. In addition to geometrical and floral designs, Ukrainian kilims in the past also depicted coats of arms, emblems, scenes from gentry life, and religious images. In the Soviet period such themes have been replaced by portraits of Soviet leaders and scenes from Soviet life.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Zhuk, A. Ukrains'ki narodni kylymy (xvii-poch. xx st.)

(Kiev 1966)

Zapasko, Ia. Ukrains'ke narodne kylymarstvo (Kiev 1973)

Zhuk, A. Ukrains'kyi radians'kyi kylym (Kiev 1973)

B. Medwidsky

Kimmerikon (Kimmeryk). An ancient Greek colony from the 6th century BC to the 3rd century AD on the Kerch Peninsula in the Crimea, and the southwestern outpost and harbor of the *Bosporan Kingdom. Remains from the colony's fort have been found on Mt Opuk. Older remains dating from the late Bronze Age were discovered on the east ridge of Mt Opuk and suggest that the settlement may have been founded by the *Cimmerians, the people who lived in the area before the Greeks. Excavations began in the late 19th century and since 1927 have proceeded systematically. In the 1st century AD Kimmerikon reached its zenith as a commercial and agricultural center. The town is mentioned by such classical writers as Strabo, Ptolemy, and Pliny.

Kinakh, Hlib [Kinax], b 5 October 1888 in Zbarazh, Galicia, d 29 January 1980 in Rome. Basilian priest; church historian. From 1920 he was active in Transcarpathia. In 1939 he was transferred to Prešov to oversee the eparchial library and to edit the eparchy's publications. From 1946 he lived in Rome, where he held various offices on the executive of the Basilian order, including archimandrite. He contributed to Naukovyi zbirnyk Tovarystva Prosvita, in which his materials on Transcarpathian church history appeared, and to Analecta Ordinis S Basilii Magni, in which his most important work, 'Zapysnyk' (Notebook), on early Basilian reform in Transcarpathia, appeared posthumously (1985).

Kinburn. A fortress that was located on Kinburn Spit in the mouth of the Dnieper River opposite Ochakiv, now in Mykolaiv oblast. Kinburn was built by the Turks in the 15th century. Later, it denied the Zaporozhian Cossacks access to the Black Sea from the Dnieper Estuary. In 1774 it was captured by a Russian army that included a large detachment of Zaporozhian Cossacks. Russia acquired the entire region under the terms of the Treaty of *Küçük Kaynarca, although the Turks attempted unsuccessfully to regain the fortress in 1787. Kinburn was attacked by the French during the Crimean War, and fell into disuse after the war.

Kinburn Spit. VII-12. A sand spit, 40 km long and 8–10 km wide, lying between the Dnieper-Boh Estuary and Yahorlytskyi Liman. The spit is dotted by 400 small, shallow fresh- and salt-water lakes. Its sand dunes are covered with steppe vegetation, while its marshy depressions are forested, partly with northern species. A part of the spit belongs to the *Black Sea Nature Reserve.

Kindrat, Peter, b 15 November 1892 in Chemeryntsi, Peremyshliany county, Galicia, d 22 June 1972 in Winnipeg. Religious leader and author. Immigrating to Canada in 1910, Kindrat studied at McMaster University and, after meeting I. Kolesnykiv, joined a group of Baptists in Toronto. After 1921 he served as a pastor in Montreal, Ottawa, Dauphin, Swan River, Prince Albert, and Winnipeg. A founder of the Ukrainian Baptist press in Canada, he was coeditor of Khrystyians'kyi visnyk (1942–52), secretary-general and president of the Ukrainian Evangelical Baptist Convention of Canada, and president of the All-Ukrainian Evangelical Baptist Fellowship (1949–59). Kindrat wrote Ukrains'kyi Baptysts'kyi Rukh u Kanadi (Ukrainian Baptist Movement in Canada, 1972).

Kino (Cinema). A monthly magazine published in 1925 and in 1932–3 in Kharkiv and in 1926–32 in Kiev, first by the All-Ukrainian Photo-Cinema Administration (vUFKU) and then by Ukrainfilm. In 1927, 1929, 1930, and 1932 it came out twice a month. The magazine published articles on the history and theory of cinema, but devoted more space to film actors, film reviews, and the problems of filmmaking in Ukraine and abroad. Its editorial board was chaired by D. Falkivsky, and its main contributors included M. Bazhan, O. Vlyzko, O. Dovzhenko, H. Epik, M. Irchan, V. Krychevsky, O. Kopylenko, V. Polishchuk, H. Tasin, M. Trublaini, N. Ushakov, and Yu. Yanovsky. Altogether 135 issues appeared. In 1935–8 Kino was replaced by the magazine Radians'ke kino.

Kino (Cinema). A semimonthly magazine published in Lviv from 1930 to 1936 by D. Krenzhalsky. It published reports and reviews of films playing at home and abroad.

Kino-hazeta (Cinema Newspaper). A periodical published semimonthly in Kiev from 1928 to 1931, and every 10 days in Kharkiv in 1931–2. It published news about the film industry in the Soviet Union, reviews of new films, and discussions of techniques for filming towns and villages. Its predecessor was the weekly Kinotyzhden' (1927–8).

Kinship. System of human relationships derived from procreation (consanguinity) and marriage (affinity). It plays a major role in all societies by regulating individual behavior and affecting social, economic, and political organization. Although in the past Ukrainians lived in extended or joint families, today their principal kinship ties are restricted to the nuclear family consisting of a married couple and their children. Marriage between two individuals is restricted within kinship groups by incest rules and is the way in which new kinship units based on affinity are formed.

Historically, Ukrainians lived in extended domestic units or joint families called rody (singular: rid). There are various theories about the extension and the legal status of this family unit. Strictly speaking, it consists of several families under the authority of an elder, and is unified by the right to blood vengeance. According to Ukraine's first code of law, **Ruskaia Pravda*, the right to blood vengeance seems to have extended over the whole rid. Thus the father, sons, brothers, and cousins of the wronged party had the right to vengeance. The feeling of family solidarity, however, extended beyond mentioned relatives. Various economic and juridical relations such as the shared homestead and property, as well as the authority of the family head, made the extended family in Ukraine a very tightly knit and culturally cohesive entity. The family's historical persistence testifies to the strength of the internal ties among its members. Federations of families with common property and a single head (generally, an elder), known as dvoryshcha (singular: dvoryshche), existed in Ukraine as late as the 14th–16th centuries. Some dvoryshcha survived into the 18th century, and remnants of this social entity were observed in the Boiko region in the 19th century.

Expressions of kinship mores have been preserved to this day in many Ukrainian folk songs, particularly traditional wedding songs, which stress the idea of family honor. The solitary, kinless individual is utterly wretched and defenseless according to such songs: 'Oi tym zhe ia pohybaiu bo rodu na maiu' (Oh I Am Perishing because I Have No Kin) and 'Duma pro buriu na Chornomu mori' (Duma about the Storm on the Black Sea). To reject one's kinship bonds is the ultimate wrong, as these proverbs claim: 'There is no greater sin or shame than to disown one's kin' and 'If I renounced my father and mother, then God would renounce me.' Unmarried and childless members were disapproved of by their kinsmen. According to some folk songs such individuals were not admitted to heaven because they had no offspring to pray for them. Traditionally, birth control was condemned.

The scope of the Ukrainian kinship network is reflected in the language. Current dictionaries provide distinct terms for the following lineal relationships in ascending order: bat'ko (father), maty (mother), did (grandfather), baba (grandmother), pradiid (great-grandfather), prababa (great-grandmother), prapradiid (great-great-grandfather), and praprababa (great-great-grandmother). More remote lineal antecedents are simply described as ancestors. In descending order the following terms are used: syn (son), dochka (daughter), unuk (grandson), unuka (granddaughter), pravnik (great-grandson), pravnuka (great-granddaughter), prapravnik (great-great-grandson), and prapravnuka (great-great-granddaughter). Their successors are described simply as descendants. In the lateral direction the common terms are brat (brother), sestra (sister), diad'ko (uncle), and titka (aunt), although in the dialects there are special terms for the father's brother (stryiko), the father's sister (stryina), the mother's brother (vuiko), and the mother's sister (vuina). In the literary language there is but one masculine and one feminine term for cousins (masculine: dvoiridni braty, and feminine: dvoiridni sestry) and nephews (masculine: pleminnyky, and feminine: pleminnytsi), but in the dialects there is a much richer vocabulary for these relations. Other collateral relations are identified by descriptive phrases such as 'grandmother's brother's son.'

There are a great number of affinal terms in Ukrainian. The central ones are cholovik (husband) and zhinka (wife). Parents of newlyweds (in-laws) laterally recognize each other as svaty (masculine sing: svat, and feminine sing: svakha). There are special terms for the father and mother of the groom (test' and teshcha) and the father and mother of the bride (svekor and svekrukha). Ukrainian also has a distinct term for the son-in-law (zlat') and the daughter-in-law (nevistka), the husband's brother and sister (diver and zovytsia), and the wife's brother (shvager), but the term for the wife's sister (svist') is archaic. Although Ukrainian dialects contain specific terms for other affinal relations, in the literary language such terms have been replaced by the general svoiak (masculine relative) and svoiachka (feminine relative) or by descriptive phrases such as 'wife of wife's brother.'

Traditionally, the most prevalent form of fictive kinship in Ukrainian society has been the institution of godparents (kumy). The godparents are also fictive relatives to the parents of the godchild. Because of this quasi-kinship, marriage between a godparent and a godchild was prohibited, and sexual intimacy between a parent and a godparent was considered a cardinal sin. Sexual relations between godparents, however, were treated as a less serious transgression and were mentioned often in folk songs and proverbs.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Buriachok, A. Nazvy sporidnenosti i svoiatstva v ukrains'kii movi (Kiev 1961)

B. Medwidsky

Vadym Kipa

Andrii Kiprianov

Kipa, Vadym (Kippa), b 13 May 1912 in Kuchmisterska Slobodka, a suburb of Kiev, d 31 August 1968 in New York. Pianist, composer, and educator. A graduate of the Kiev Conservatory (1937), he joined its teaching staff and in 1941 completed its graduate program. He was one of 10 finalists at the First All-Soviet Piano Competition in Moscow (1937). Deported to Germany in 1943, he was appointed accompanist at the opera studio of the Klindworth-Scharwenka Conservatory in Berlin and then professor of music. In 1951 he immigrated to the United States and established his own piano studio in New York. In his recitals and solo appearances he impressed critics with his perfect technique and unique emotional power. Kipa's compositions, dating back to 1939, consist mostly of works for piano (including an album for young pianists and Variations Phantastique) and for voice and piano (art songs). His style evolved from Neoromanticism to Impressionism and Neoclassicism with tonal and rhythmic autonomy.

Kipchaks. See Cumans.

Kiprianov, Andrii, b 16 July 1896 in Ruski Tyshky, Kharkiv county, Kharkiv gubernia, d 29 September 1972 in Kiev. Organic chemist; full member of the AN USSR from 1945 and vice-president from 1946 to 1948. He graduated from Kharkiv University in 1919 and worked there until 1941. From 1945 to 1960 he was the director of the AN USSR Institute of Organic Chemistry and a professor at Kiev University. Kiprianov published some 200 papers. Most of his research dealt with organic dyes. He resolved a number of problems in color theory, establishing, for example, that changing the electronic symmetry in a dye displaces the absorption maximum towards shorter wavelengths. He also explained the solvatochromic behavior of dyes, and discovered and elucidated the phenomenon of interaction between conjugated chromophores. A number of new dyes that he discovered found industrial use.

Kirgizia or Kirgiz SSR. A Soviet republic in Central Asia with an indigenous Turkic population. It is bounded by Kazakhstan to the north, Uzbekistan to the southwest, Tadzhikistan to the south, and China to the southeast. It has an area of 198,500 sq km divided into three oblasts. In 1986 its population was estimated at 4,051,000. Urban dwellers (39.7 percent of the total population) live in 21 cities and 20 towns. The average density in 1981 was 20.4 inhabitants per sq km. The capital and largest city is Frunze (1986 pop 617,000). In 1979 about 1.7 million Kirgiz lived in the republic; about 219,000 others lived elsewhere in the USSR (the RSFSR; the Uzbek, Tadzhik, and Kazakh republics; and Ukraine [2,370]). About 80,000 live in China, 25,000 in Afghanistan, and 1,000 in Turkey. In 1970, 85.5 percent of the republic's Kirgiz were rural dwellers; in contrast, 66 percent of the republic's Russians and 51 percent of its Ukrainians were urban dwellers. In 1979, 98 percent of the Kirgiz claimed Kirgiz as their native language.

Kirgizia is a rugged, mountainous country lying in the center of the Tian Shen mountain system. Some of the highest mountains in the USSR are found there (7,439 m). Lowlands occupy only 15 percent of the total area. The main ones are the Chui and Talas valleys in the north, the Fergana Valley in the southwest, and the Issyk-Kul Depression in the south. Kirgizia is landlocked and much higher than the central-Asian plains and deserts to its northwest and southeast. The climate is relatively harsh and dry and varies with altitude. In the lowland areas of Ukrainian settlement, the average temperature is  $-6$  to  $-8^{\circ}\text{C}$  in January and  $+20$ – $25^{\circ}\text{C}$  in July; the total annual precipitation is 300–400 mm, and the soil consists of sierozems.

The nomadic Kirgiz were vassals of the Khanate of Kokand when it became a Russian protectorate in 1868 and was integrated into the Russian Empire in 1876 as part of Semerechenskaia and Fergana provinces of *Turkestan general gubernia. During the 1917 Revolution a Kirgiz independence movement arose, but it was suppressed by the Bolsheviks in 1920–3. Kirgizia became part

The ethnic composition of Kirgizia, 1926–79 (percentages in parentheses)

	1926		1959		1970		1979
Kirghiz	661,000	(66.6)	837,000	(40.5)	1,285,000	(43.8)	1,687,000	(47.9)
Russians	116,000	(11.7)	624,000	(30.2)	856,000	(29.2)	912,000	(25.9)
Ukrainians	64,000	(6.4)	137,000	(6.6)	120,000	(4.1)	109,000	(3.1)
Uzbeks	110,000	(11.1)	219,000	(10.6)	333,000	(11.4)	426,000	(12.1)
Others	42,000	(4.2)	249,000	(12.1)	339,000	(11.5)	389,000	(11.0)*
Total	993,000	(100)	2,066,000	(100)	2,933,000	(100)	3,523,000	(100)

*101,000 Germans, 72,000 Tatars, 30,000 Uigurs, 27,000 Kazakhs, 27,000 Dungans, 23,000 Tadzhiks

of the Kara-Kirgiz autonomous oblast in 1924; it became the Kirgiz ASSR in 1926 and the Kirgiz SSR in 1936. In the Soviet period Kirgizia's population has quadrupled; it grew from 1 million in 1926 to 1.5 million in 1939, 2 million in 1959, and 3.5 million in 1979.

Until the Soviet period virtually all Kirgiz lived by nomadic herding. Since the 1920s the republic's economy has been extensively transformed. Agriculture is collectivized and mechanized. The main branches are pasture-based livestock raising (beef cattle and sheep for wool) and the cultivation of food grains, cotton, sugar beets, tobacco, and opium poppies, much of it on land that is irrigated. In 1978, industry produced 57.4 percent of the total value of the republic's output; the main branches are coal mining, metalworking, machine building, food processing, and textile and clothing manufacturing.

Beginning in the late 19th century many Russian and Ukrainian peasants began settling in Kirgizia, particularly in the cities and arable lowlands. Their influx increased in the Soviet period. Consequently, the Kirgiz have become a minority in their own republic even though their number has almost tripled (see table).

Cumulative immigration estimates indicate that the number of Ukrainians in Kirgizia is much greater than official statistics show: about 250,000 to 300,000. They live mainly in the north in the Chui and Talas valleys (two-thirds of all Ukrainians in Kirgizia were living there in 1926), but also in the south in the Issyk-Kul Depression and the Fergana Valley, and in the larger cities. Most of the Ukrainians have become Russified and identify themselves as Russian. In the 1979 census only 38 percent of them claimed Ukrainian as their native language; 62 percent claimed Russian. In 1970 Ukrainians constituted 5.6 percent of the total urban population.

Kirgiz-Ukrainian relations have been primarily literary. T. Shevchenko's Kobzar was published in Kirgiz in 1939, another collection of his poems appeared in 1959, and Kirgiz scholars have written about Shevchenko. The works of Lesia Ukrainka, I. Franko, P. Hrabovsky, P. Tychna, and N. Rybak have been translated into Kirgiz. Works by the Kirgiz writers Ch. Aitmatov, T. Sidibekov, T. Satylganov, A. Usebaiev, Dzh. Bokonbaiev, and A. Tokombaiev have been translated into Ukrainian. I. Le's Roman mizhhir'ia (A Novel of the Mountain Valley, 1929–30) is set in Soviet Kirgizia.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Korbut, S. Siryi Klyn i ukrains'ka kolonizatsiina sprava (Lviv 1937)

Marunchak, M. Ukrainci v sssr poza kordonamy URSR (Winnipeg 1974)

V. Kubijovyč, R. Senkus, A. Zhukovsky

Illia Kiriak

Watson Kirkconnell

Kiriak, Illia [Kyrijak, Illja], b 29 May 1888 in Zavallia, Sniatyn county, Galicia, d 28 December 1955 in Edmonton. Teacher and novelist. Kiriak immigrated to Canada in 1907 and settled in Alberta. Until 1936 he taught school in rural Ukrainian districts. He was secretary of the Ukrainian Self-Reliance League (1936–42) and rector of the Hrushevsky Institute (now St John's Institute) in Edmonton (1940–2). His three-volume epic novel Syny zemli (1939–45), which appeared also in an abridged translation titled Sons of the Soil (1959), is a valuable sociological document about Ukrainians in Alberta during the half-century before the Second World War.

Kirichenko, Aleksei. See Kyrychenko, Oleksii.

Kirkconnell, Watson, b 16 May 1895 in Port Hope, Ontario, d 26 February 1977 in Wolfville, Nova Scotia. Literary scholar, writer, and translator. Educated at Queen's University and Lincoln College, Oxford, Kirkconnell taught English literature and classics at Wesley College, Winnipeg, McMaster University, and Acadia University. Living in Winnipeg (1922–40), he became interested in the languages and literatures of the city's ethnic groups. In 1935 he edited Canadian Overtones, the first anthology of 'New Canadian' writings in English translation. Between 1937 and 1965 he contributed an annual review 'Publications in Other Languages' to the University of Toronto Quarterly. During the Second World War he helped organize the Department of National War Services and served on advisory committees of its Nationalities Branch. He played an important role in the founding of the Ukrainian Canadian Committee (ucc). In pamphlets such as Our Ukrainian Loyalists (1943) he emphasized the dedication of the ucc and non-communist Ukrainian Canadians to the Allied war effort and criticized the pro-Communist Association of United Ukrainian Canadians. Kirkconnell collaborated with C.H. Andrusyshen to produce two volumes of Ukrainian poetry in translation: The Ukrainian Poets 1189-1962 (1963) and The Poetical Works of Taras Shevchenko (1964).

Kirkor, Adam, b 21 January 1818 in Slyvyn, now in Mohyliou oblast, Belorussian SSR, d 23 November 1886 in Cracow. Polish scholar, specializing in the history, archeology, ethnography, literature, and language of Lithuania, Belorussia, and Ukraine. Kirkor excavated *kurhans in western Podilia and Pokutia, and made important archeological findings in Vasylykivtsi and Kotsiubyntsi, in the Ternopil region. He explored the artificial caves (Dovbush's Caves) near Stryi in the Lviv region. He is the author of Litva i Rus' pod wzgledem historycznym, geograficznym, statystycznym i archeologicznym (Lithuania and Rus' from a Historical, Geographical, Statistical, and Archeological Viewpoint, 1875) and of an outline of Ukrainian literature, O literaturze pobratymczych narodów słowiańskich (Concerning the Literature of the Fraternal Slavic Peoples, 1874).

Kirove. v-18, DB III-3. Town smt (1979 pop 11,100) in Donetsk oblast, under the jurisdiction of the Dzerzhynske city soviet. Founded in the 18th century, its main industry is anthracite mining.

Kirovohrad: model of the original St Elizabeth Fortress

Kirovohrad. v-13. City and oblast capital (1986 pop 266,000) in the southeastern Dnieper Upland on the Inhul River. It is divided into two city raions.

The city was founded in 1754 on Zaporozhian Cossack territory as the St Elizabeth Fortress, which was built to protect the Russian Empire's southern frontier and the Balkan colonists of *New Serbia from raids of Turks and Crimean Tatars. During the Russo-Turkish War of 1768-74 the fortress was the operational base of the Russian army. In 1775 the town that grew up around the fortress was named Yelysavethrad; it had a population of 4,750 in 1787 and 9,300 in 1823. The town became a county center in New Russia gubernia (1764-83, 1797-1801), Katerynoslav and Voznesensk vicegerencies (1784-97), and Kherson gubernia (1802-28, 1865-1925). Until the First World War it was an important center of trade in grain, wool, lard, flour, timber, cattle, and horses, much of which was exported via Odessa and Mykolaiv.

From 1828 to 1860 Yelysavethrad was a major garrison city under strict martial law and the center of *military settlements in Southern Ukraine. During that time it declined economically. It experienced growth only after a railway link was established with Odessa, Mykolaiv, Kremenchuk, and Khvastiv in the late 1860s and the British-owned Ellworthy agricultural-machinery plant was founded in 1874. By the 1890s there were eight such plants; they employed 58 percent of the city's workers. Many flour mills and distilleries were located in the city, and each year it was visited by thousands of migrant laborers seeking work during the harvest in Southern Ukraine. Its population grew from 15,000 in 1850 to 23,700 in 1861 and 61,500 in 1897 despite recurrent fires, river floods, and epidemics. Until the late 19th century public utilities were sorely lacking. There were few elementary schools (only 12 in the 1890s); consequently there was a high illiteracy rate. A waterworks was built only in 1892, an electric tramway in 1897, and a power station in 1908. The first newspaper in the city, Elisavetgradskii gorodskoi listok, was published in 1874-6. Others followed: Elisavetgradskii vestnik (1876-mid-1890s), Vedomosti Elisavetgradskogo gorodskogo upravleniia (1892-1917), Golos iuga (1905-14), and several short-lived papers. There were few physicians and public health care was poor; between 1902 and 1912 the mortality rate from infectious diseases was 21-29 percent of the population in general and 51 percent of the non-adult population.

From the 1870s the city was a regional center of cultural and revolutionary activity. Ukrainian theatrical productions were performed on an ongoing basis; such prominent figures as I. Karpenko-Kary, M. Sadovsky, P. Saksahansky, M. Kropyvnytsky, M. Zankovetska, and P. Nishchynsky were instrumental in their mounting. Populist and, later, Marxist cells sprang up; their members were instrumental in educating and politicizing the local population. From the late 19th century, workers' unrest was a recurring phenomenon. In 1913 the city had 64 factories employing 4,300 workers; 2,300 of them worked at the Ellworthy plant, which produced a 10th of the empire's agricultural machines.

The turmoil of the 1917 Revolution and subsequent strife did not bypass the city. It was occupied by units of the Free Cossacks in 1917 and by the Ukrainian Sich Riflemen in 1918. Prolonged fighting took place there between the insurgent forces of Otaman N. Hryhoriiv and the Red Guards in spring 1919. After Soviet rule was established the population declined from 77,100 in 1920 to 50,300 in 1923; it then grew to 66,500 by 1926, of which 44.5 percent was Ukrainian, 27.6 percent was Jewish, and 25 percent was Russian. By 1925 the city and its industries had been rebuilt. It was renamed Zinovivske in 1924, Kirove in 1934, and Kirovohrad in 1939. It was an okruha center from 1923 and a raion center from 1930. Industrial growth intensified in the 1930s, and the population grew to 100,000 by 1939. In 1939 the city became the capital of a new oblast. From August 1941 to January 1944 it was occupied by the German army. Much of its population fled, but much of it was also killed, and the city's buildings and industries were largely destroyed. Postwar reconstruction ended in late 1948, after which industrial expansion occurred.

Kirovohrad: military training post of the Ukrainian Sich Riflemen, 1918

In the postwar period Kirovohrad has been an important industrial city. Its output consists of agricultural machines (40 percent of all Soviet seeders in the 1960s), tractor parts, radio components, typewriters, food products, pig iron, filtering kieselguhr, clothing, footwear, furniture, and building materials. Its population has grown steadily, reaching 132,000 in 1959 (75 percent Ukrainian, 19 percent Russian) and 189,000 in 1970. In 1979 there were 9 secondary-specialized schools, 11 vocational-technical schools, and 3 post-secondary schools – a pedagogical institute, an institute of agricultural machine building, and a civil-aviation pilots' school – in the city. Several institutes that plan and design agricultural machines and tractors, a Ukrainian music and drama theater, a puppet theater, an oblast philharmonic, and a regional museum are also located there. Buildings and walls of the fortress, a Greek church (1812), the Church of the Holy Protectress (1850s), and several 19th-century buildings have been preserved.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Pashutin, A. Istoričeskii ocherk g. Elisavetgrada (Yelysavethrad 1897)

Hvozdet's'kyi, V. Kirovohrad (Kiev 1964)

Syvolap, D.; et al (eds). Istoriia mist i sil Ukraïns'koï RSR: Kirovohrads'ka oblast' (Kiev 1972)

R. Senkus, A. Zhukovsky

Kirovohrad Agricultural Machines Plant (Kirovohradskyi zavod silskohospodarskykh mashyn Chervona zirka). Established in Yelysavethrad (now Kirovohrad) in 1874 by T. and R. Allworthy as an agricultural-machinery repair shop, it developed by the end of the century into an agricultural-implements plant. It played an important role in the mechanization of agriculture in the steppe region. It was nationalized in 1920, and in the 1930s underwent major reconstruction. Today it produces all the sugar-beet, corn, and vegetable seed sowers in the USSR as well as 25 percent of the grain sowers.

Kirovohrad Institute of Agricultural Machine Building (Kirovohradskyi instytut silskohospodarskoho mashynobuduvannia). Technical school of higher education under the Ministry of Higher and Specialized Secondary Education of the Ukrainian SSR. Formed in 1967 out of several sections of the Kharkiv Polytechnical Institute, it consists of five departments – agricultural machine building, mechanical engineering, road-construction machinery, road repair, and general technology – and an evening school. In 1979–80 the enrollment was 5,300.

At the Kirovohrad Agricultural Machines Plant

Kirovohrad oblast. An administrative region (1986 pop 1,228,700) in south-central Ukraine, formed on 10 January 1939. It has an area of 24,600 sq km, divided among 21 raions, 315 rural soviets, 12 cities, and 26 towns (smt). The capital and largest city is Kirovohrad.

Physical geography. The oblast is essentially a fertile elevated plain located in the steppe and forest-steppe of the southern Dnieper Upland between the Dnieper and Buh rivers; it is dissected by deep river valleys and ravines. In the north the soils are mostly deep and podzolized chernozems, with gray podzolized soils in the forest-steppe. In the south they are mostly medium- and low-humus chernozems. The *Dnieper Lignite Coal Basin and sizable nickel, iron-ore, marl, kaolin, amphibolite, chromite, graphite, peat, quartzite, granite, labradorite, marble, and oil-shale deposits are found in the oblast. Broad-leaved and pine forests cover 150,500 ha of the area; nature reserves cover 4,100 ha.

There are 207 rivers longer than 10 km in the oblast. The principal ones are the Dnieper and its tributaries, the Tiasmyn, Tsybulnyk, and Inhulets, and the Boh and its tributaries, the Inhul, Syniukha, and Synytsia. Fifty-four river reservoirs have been built; the largest are the Novoarkhanhelske, Chervonokhutiirske, Iskrivka, and Ternivka reservoirs. Parts of the Dnieper's Kremenchuk and Dniprodzerzhynske reservoirs lie on the oblast's eastern periphery. A large aqueduct runs from Svitlovodske on the Dnieper to Kirovohrad. The oblast's climate is temperate-continental. Winters are short and mild, and summers are hot, with dry winds and occasional droughts. The average temperature is  $-5^{\circ}\text{C}$  in January and  $+20^{\circ}\text{C}$  in July. The annual precipitation is 400–470 mm.

History. From the 9th to 14th centuries, the oblast's northern parts belonged to Kievan Rus'. Then the territory came under Lithuanian rule in 1362 and Polish rule in 1569. By and large it was wild, unpopulated steppe. From the late 16th to the mid-18th centuries it was part of the lands of the Zaporozhian Cossacks, and Ukrainian peasants began settling there. In 1648 the Cossack-Polish Battle of Zhovti Vody took place there. In 1739 Russia acquired nominal rule over the territory and in 1752 created a region called *New Serbia for Balkan military settlers. In 1754 the city of Yelysavethrad (Kirovohrad) was founded.

During the revolutionary years of 1918–20 various armed conflicts took place on the territory, involving, at various times, UNR and German troops, the Bolsheviks, N. Hryhoriiv's partisans, N. Makhno's partisans, and the Denikin army. Under Soviet rule, the territory was divided among Yelysavethrad, Oleksandriia, Pervomaiske, Kremenchuk, Uman, and Dnipropetrovske okruhas in 1925 and between Kiev and Odessa oblasts in 1932. In 1937 the raions in Odessa oblast were transferred to the restructured Dnipropetrovske oblast and the new Mykolaiv oblast. Kirovohrad oblast was created in 1939. From August 1941 to March 1944 the oblast was occupied by the German army.

Population. The oblast's population increased from 1,176,900 in 1940 to 1,241,000 in 1970 and 1,265,700 in 1974. Between 1974 and 1984 it decreased by 2.6 percent. The urban share of the population has increased significantly, from 14.7 percent in 1940 to 31 percent in 1959, 44 percent in 1970, and 56.6 percent in 1984. Ukrainians composed 88.7 percent of the population in 1959 and 86.8 percent in 1979; in 1979, 97 percent of them considered Ukrainian their native language. Russians composed 8.4 percent in 1959 and 10 percent in 1979. In 1959 Belorussians composed 0.8 percent; Jews, 0.8 percent; and Moldavians, 0.5 percent. Cities with populations over 50,000 are Kirovohrad, Oleksandriia, and Svitlovodske.

Industry. The main branches of industry are food production (31.8 percent of total output in 1983), machine building and metalworking (28 percent), non-ferrous metallurgy (7.3 percent), fuel production (6.8 percent), light industry, and building-materials production. Sugar, the oblast's most important food product, is made by plants in Ulianivka, Oleksandriia, Dolynske, Oleksandrivka, Mala Vyska, and Novoukrainka. Vegetable oils and animal fats are rendered in Kirovohrad. Distilleries are found in Kirovohrad, Mala Vyska, Oleksandriia, Znamianka, and Mezhyrichka. Flour mills and meat-packing plants are located mostly in Kirovohrad. The principal output of the machine-building and metalworking industries is the production of agricultural machines and equipment. The *Kirovohrad Agricultural Machines Plant is one of the largest in Ukraine. Other plants in Kirovohrad make parts for diesel engines and combines and equipment for the sugar industry and repair automobiles and farm machines. Large cranes, mining equipment, and machine parts are made in Oleksandriia. Steam engines are repaired in Haivoron.

Iron and nickel are smelted in Pobuzke. Semiconductors are produced in Svitlovodske. The oblast has the largest lignite reserves in Ukraine; several open pits and mines are found around Oleksandriia. Iron-ore quartzites are mined near Petrove. Coal briquettes are made in Semenivka-Holovkivka and Baidakove. Chemical products (mineral waxes and coal-derived reagents) are made in Oleksandriia. A huge graphite-mining and enrichment complex is located near Zavallia; it produced 60 percent of Soviet graphite in 1968. Using locally quarried granite, refractory clays, labradorite, and gravel, reinforced concrete and other building materials are made in Kirovohrad, Svitlovodske, Znamianka, Vlasivka, and elsewhere. The oblast's light industry produces clothing, cord and twine, and leather goods. Wood products and furniture are made in Znamianka, Kirovohrad, Oleksandriia, and Svitlovodske. The oblast's industries are powered by the Kremenchuk, Novoarkhanhelske, Haivoron, Chervonokhutirska, and Ternivka hydroelectric stations and Kirovohrad and Oleksandriia thermal stations.

Agriculture. In 1983 there were 315 collective farms and 47 state farms in the oblast. They had at their disposal 2,225,600 ha of land, of which 2,057,000 ha were farmed; of the latter, 90 percent were cultivated, 7.6 percent were pastures, and 0.7 percent were hayfields. The entire seeded area was 1,752,000 ha.

Of the entire seeded area in 1971 (1,732,000 ha), 50.2 percent was sown with grains, 28 percent with fodder crops, and 17 percent with industrial crops. Winter wheat was the main grain crop (482,200 ha), followed by corn (182,300 ha), spring barley (130,900 ha), pulses, millet, and buckwheat. The main industrial crops in 1971 were sugar beets (122,700 ha) and sunflowers (142,900 ha); coriander and soybeans are grown in the oblast's southeast. Fruits grown (on 39,000 ha in 1978) include apples, pears, cherries, plums, and various berries.

In 1983 animal husbandry accounted for 54.7 percent of the total value of agricultural production. It consisted mostly of beef and dairy cattle, sheep, and goat farming and some fish and rabbit farming, beekeeping, and sericulture.

Transportation. In 1983 there were 869 km of railroad in the oblast. The main lines crossing it are Kiev–Dnipropetrovske, Moscow–Odessa, Kiev–Kherson, Kharkiv–Odessa, and Znamianka–Mykolaiv. The main junctions are Znamianka, Pomichna, Korystivka, Dolynska, and Haivoron. In 1983 there were 5,400 km of motor roads, of which 4,500 were paved. The main highways are Kiev–Odessa, Kirovohrad–Mykolaiv, Kiev–Dnipropetrovske, Kharkiv–Odessa, and Poltava–Kishinev. River transport on the Dnieper is well developed; the main port is Svitlovodske. Airports located in Kirovohrad oblast are Kamatovo near Kirovohrad and smaller ones in Mala Vyska, Chervona Kaminka, and Dolynska.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Rozvytok ekonomiky i kul'tury Kirovohradshchyny za 40 rokiv (1917–1957)* (Kirovohrad 1957)
 Mishchenko, H. Kirovohrads'ka oblast' (Kiev 1961)
 Syvolap, D.; et al (eds). Istoriia mist i sil Ukraïns'koï RSR: Kirovohrads'ka oblast' (Kiev 1972)

I. Myhul, R. Senkus

Kirovohrad Pedagogical Institute (Kirovohradskyyi pedahohichnyi instytut im. O.S. Pushkina). An institution of higher learning under the jurisdiction of the Ministry of Education of the Ukrainian SSR. At first a pedagogical tekhnikum (established 1923), it was reorganized into an institute of social education in 1930 before assuming its present form in 1933. The institute has seven faculties – history, philology, English language, physics and mathematics, pedagogy, music, and physical education – and an extension department offering preparatory and correspondence courses. Its enrollment was 3,800 (1978–9). The institute's library holdings number over 415,000.

Kirovohrad Regional Museum

Kirovohrad Regional Museum (Kirovohradskiy kraieznavchyi muzei). Founded in 1883, the museum has departments for the natural history of the region, pre-revolutionary Ukrainian history, and Soviet history; a picture gallery; and a branch, the Karpenko-Kary Museum and Nature Reserve. It also maintains a special collection relating to Yu. *Yanovsky. By 1979 the museum had over 50,000 exponents, many relating to the history of the Ukrainian theater, including materials on I. Karpenko-Kary, M. Kropyvnytsky, and I. Mykytenko. The art collection includes works by I. Aivazovsky, V. Makovsky, and K. Trutovsky.

Kirovohrad Ukrainian Music and Drama Theater (Kirovohradskiy ukrainskyi muzychno-dramatychniy teatr im. M. Kropyvnytskoho). Founded in 1938 as an oblast collective farmers' theater in Oleksandriia, it was evacuated during the war and then relocated to Kirovohrad. Its repertoire includes Ukrainian and world classics such as M. Kropyvnytsky's Dai sertsiu voliu, zavede v nevoliu (Give the Heart Freedom and It Will Lead to Slavery) and Zamuleni dzherela (The Silted Springs), M. Starytsky's Talan (Talent), Lope de Vega's Fuente ovejuna, and W. Shakespeare's King Lear, as well as contemporary plays such as Yu. Yanovsky's Duma pro Brytanku (Duma about Brytanka) and O. Kolomiets's Dykyi anhel (The Wild Angel). Its stage directors have included H. Volovyk, I. Kaznadii, and M. Hiliarovsky (1976–8).

Kirovske [Kirovs'ke]. v-19, DB II-5. City (1976 pop 60,500) under the jurisdiction of Voroshylovhrad oblast, situated on the Luhanka River. Founded in 1764 as Holubivka, until 1944 it was called Holubivskiy Rudnyk. It has eight anthracite mines, a winery, a clothing factory, a manufacturing complex, and a mining-transport tekhnikum.

Kirovske [Kirovs'ke]. v-15. Town smt (1979 pop 7,900) on the Dnieper River's left bank in Dnipropetrovske raion. Founded in the 18th century, until 1938 this river port was called Obukhivka.

Kirovske [Kirovs'ke]. VIII-16. Town smt (1979 pop 6,700) and raion center in the eastern Crimea. It was first mentioned in 1783 as Islam-Terek. A German colony was founded there in the 1840s. The town was renamed in 1945.

Kirsanov, Oleksander, b 2 November 1902 in Moscow. Organic chemist; since 1961 full member of the AN URSR. After completing his studies he worked at scientific institutes in Moscow (1924–32), Sverdlovsk (1932–44), and Dnipropetrovske (1944–56). In 1956 he was appointed department chairman, and in 1960 director, at the AN URSR Institute of Organic Chemistry. Most of his 400 papers deal with the chemistry of organophosphorus and organosulfur compounds. He discovered a number of methods to synthesize new classes and types of compounds. The phosphazo-reaction, a method of synthesizing compounds with a nitrogen-phosphorus double bond, and the direct amidation of carboxylic acids were named after him. His synthesis of phosphorus isocyanates led to the production of new insecticides.

Kish [kiš] (from the Turkic koš or goš, meaning camp, group of yurts, stable stall, or troop). A Cossack encampment or settlement of Zaporozhian Cossacks. The title given to the leader of the Zaporozhian Sich – *Kish otaman – is derived from the word.

Kish of Ukrainian Sich Riflemen. See Ukrainian Sich Riflemen.

Kish otaman (koshovyi otaman). The elective leader of the *Zaporozhian Sich and chief executive officer in the 16th–18th centuries. Until the end of the 17th century he was also called hetman. The Kish otaman was elected for a one-year term by the *Sich Council from among the more respected and influential Cossacks. He could be dismissed before the end of his mandate or re-elected; eg, the last Kish otaman, P. Kalnyshevsky, retained his post almost without interruption from 1765 to 1775. The Kish otaman, aided by the starshyna, wielded ultimate military and political power and was responsible for maintaining external diplomatic relations. He was the chief magistrate and had the power of final decision during wartime. In peacetime, his decisions could be appealed to the Sich Council. His symbol of authority was the **bulava*. The office of Kish otaman was retained by the Black Sea Cossacks until 1797.

Kishinev [Kišinev] (Rumanian: Chişinău). vi-9. Capital (1985 pop 624,000) of the Moldavian SSR since 1940. In 1970, 14.2 percent (50,500) of its population was Ukrainian. The town is first mentioned in historical documents in 1420, when it belonged to the Moldavian principality. In 1812, with the rest of Bessarabia, it was annexed by Russia and in 1818 it became the capital of Bessarabia oblast. From 1918 to 1940 Kishinev was part of Rumania. I. *Nechui-Levytsky taught at the gymnasium in Kishinev (1873–84) and in the 1890s M. *Kotsiubynsky stayed there. In the 1930s there was a community of Ukrainian political émigrés in Kishinev.

Kishka, Samiilo [Kiška, Samijlo] (Koshka, Kushka, Koshych), ?–1602. A Ukrainian nobleman and Cossack leader from the Bratslav region. During a Zaporozhian Cossacks sea campaign in the 1570s, he was captured and spent about 25 years in Turkish captivity. In 1599 he led a rebellion of Cossack slaves (immortalized in a *duma named after him) on a Turkish galley near Gezlev (now Yevpatoriia in the Crimea). He escaped back to Ukraine and became the leader of the *Registered Cossacks. In return for their participation in Poland's wars, he secured the abolition of the Polish proclamation of the Cossacks as outlaws and the restoration of their former rights and privileges. In 1600 he led the Cossack troops during the Polish campaign against the Turks in Moldavia. In 1601–2 he commanded the 2,000 Cossacks who took part in the Polish-Swedish War in Livonia. He died in the Battle of Fellin.

Bohdan Kistiakovsky

Kistiakovsky, Bohdan [Kistjakovs'kyj], b 4 November 1868 in Kiev, d 16 April 1920 in Katerynodar (today Krasnodar) or Novorosiiske in the Kuban. Influential jurist, sociologist, and philosopher of law; the son of O. *Kistiakovsky, father of G. *Kistiakowsky, and nephew of V. Antonovych. He studied at the universities of Kiev (1888–90), Kharkiv (1890), and Dorpat (Tartu, 1890–2). He received his PH D from Strasbourg University in 1899. By 1902 he had abandoned Marxism and philosophical materialism, becoming an avowed neo-Kantian, and developed a profound interest in the epistemological and methodological foundations of the social sciences and social theory.

Kistiakovsky had close contacts with the Galician Radicals (including I. Franko and M. Pavlyk) and the Russian liberal émigrés grouped around P. Struve; he helped Struve to edit the well-known journal Osvobozhdenie (1902–5). He also developed a mutually beneficial association with the social philosopher M. Weber.

Kistiakovsky taught at the Moscow Commercial Institute (1906–11), Moscow University (1909–10), and the Demidov Juridical Lyceum in Yaroslavl (1911–17). In 1912 he became the editor of the influential law journal Iuridicheskii vestnik (Moscow 1913–17). A lifelong supporter of the Ukrainian movement, he returned to Kiev in 1917 and became a professor at Kiev University. In 1918 he was appointed to the State Senate and the General Administrative Court of the Hetman government and served on the commissions for drafting the law on Ukrainian citizenship and the statute of the newly founded Ukrainian Academy of Sciences (UAN). In 1919 he was elected a full member of the UAN; he sat on its Legal Terminology Commission and the Commission for the Study of Social Movements and held the chairs of state, administrative, and international law and of sociology.

Kistiakovsky contributed many articles (some under the pseudonym Ukrainets) to Russian scholarly, popular, and political periodicals. He edited Russian translations of Western scholarship and the bibliographic journal Kriticheskoe obozrenie (Moscow 1907–10). His chief works include his well-received dissertation Gesellschaft und Einzelwesen: Eine methodologische Untersuchung (1899), Stranitsy proshlogo: K istorii konstitutsionnogo dvizhenia v Rossii (Pages from the Past: Towards a History of the Constitutional Movement in Russia, 1909), and Sotsial'nye nauki i pravo (The Social Sciences and Law, 1916), an important compendium of his sociological articles that earned him another PH D (from Kharkiv University). He also contributed articles (under the pseudonym Khatchenko) to the Moscow Ukrainophile journal Ukrainskaia zhizn' (1912–17) and edited and wrote long introductory essays to the political works of M. *Drahomanov, who influenced his views.

Kistiakovsky is regarded as having been an original and leading proponent of neo-Kantianism and formal sociology in Western Europe and in the Russian Empire. A. Vucinich has devoted a chapter to his life and ideas in his Social Thought in Tsarist Russia: The Quest for a General Science of Society, 1861–1917 (1976).

R. Senkus

Kistiakovsky, Ihor [Kistjakovs'kyj], b 1876 in Kiev, d 1941 in Paris. Lawyer, educator, and political figure; the son of O. *Kistiakovsky. A graduate of Kiev University, he studied Roman and civil law in Germany and taught briefly at Kiev University. In 1903 he moved to Moscow to practice law and taught at the university (1903–10) and commercial institute (1910–17) there. From May 1918 he was state secretary in P. Skoropadsky's Hetman government and deputy head of the Ukrainian Peace Delegation that negotiated a truce with Soviet Russia; in July he was appointed minister of internal affairs. He was one of a group of ministers (with V. Liubynsky, D. Doroshenko, B. Butenko, and O. Rohoza) that advocated an independent course and opposed federation with a non-Bolshevik Russia. In 1919 he fled to Istanbul, where he worked as a lawyer and assisted refugees. Later he immigrated to Paris, where he was active in the Russian White émigré community. Kistiakovsky wrote several Russian-language works in the field of law, including studies on heirs' responsibilities for debts in Roman law (1900) and on the concept of the legal subject (1903).

Kistiakovsky, Oleksander [Kistjakovs'kyj], b 26 March 1833 in Horodyshche, Sosnytsia county, Chernihiv gubernia, d 25 January 1885 in Kiev. Noted jurist and historian of law. He graduated from Kiev University and taught there from 1864. In 1869 he was appointed professor of criminal law and procedure. He cofounded and for a time presided over the *Kiev Juridical Society. He was an assistant editor of the journal Osnova and active in the old *Hromada. In his research he focused on the history of law and the court system of the Hetman state, on *Magdeburg law, and on common law. The *Code of Laws of 1743 was published by him with a scholarly commentary in 1879. His other legal works include Isledovanie o smertnoi kazni (Research on the Death Penalty, 1867), Elementarnyi uchebnik obshchogo ugolovnogo prava (Elementary Textbook of Common Criminal Law, 1875), and over 70 articles in such journals as Kievskaiia starina and Kievskie Universitetskie izvestiia.

Oleksander Kistiakovsky

Volodymyr Kistiakovsky

George Bohdan Kistiakowsky

Kistiakovsky, Volodymyr [Kistjakovs'kyj], b 12 October 1865 in Kiev, d 19 October 1952 in Moscow. Physical chemist; full member of the AN URSR from 1919 and of the USSR Academy of Sciences from 1929; the son of O. *Kistiakovsky. A graduate of St Petersburg University (1889), he was a professor at the Leningrad Polytechnical Institute (1903–34) and then director of the USSR Academy of Sciences' Colloid-Electrochemical Institute (from 1945 the Institute of Physical Chemistry). He developed the surface-film theory of metal corrosion, and his work found practical applications in the passivation of metals through electrolytic plating. He published numerous papers, mostly in the areas of electrochemistry, colloid chemistry, metal corrosion, and the theory of liquids.

Kistiakowsky, George Bohdan [Kistjakovs'kyj, Jurij], b 18 November 1900 in Kiev, d 7 December 1982 in Cambridge, Massachusetts. Physical chemist; member of the National Academy of Sciences of the United States (vice-president, 1965–71) and full member of the Shevchenko Scientific Society; son of B. *Kistiakovsky. He fled from Ukraine after the Bolshevik takeover and obtained a PH D from the University of Berlin (1925). He immigrated to the United States and taught at Princeton University (1926–30) and at Harvard University, where he became professor of chemistry in 1938, chairman of the Chemistry Department (1947–50), and professor emeritus in 1971. Kistiakowsky was the chief of the explosives division of the National Defense Research Committee during the development of the atomic bomb (1944–6), for which he developed the detonator. In addition to his academic work, much of it related to explosives, he often advised the federal government, serving as science adviser to President D. Eisenhower (1959–61) and as a member of the United States Arms Control and Disarmament Agency (1961–9), where he devoted all of his efforts to the prevention of nuclear war through arms control. He received numerous awards and honorary degrees, and published over 150 articles, mainly in the areas of chemical kinetics, thermodynamics of organic molecules, molecular spectroscopy, and shock and detonation waves.

Kistiakowsky, Vera, b 7 September 1928 in Princeton, New Jersey. Experimental physicist; daughter of G.B. *Kistiakowsky. A graduate of Mount Holyoke College and the University of California at Berkeley (PH D 1952), she did research at Columbia (1954–9) and Brandeis universities before joining the faculty of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. Her research has focused on experimental elementary particle physics and on neutrino form factors (at the Fermi National Accelerator Laboratory). She also participated in the design of the second-generation detector at the Stanford Linear Collider.

Kitsman [Kicman']. v-6. Town (1969 pop ca 7,500), and raion center in Chernivtsi oblast, situated on the Sovytsia River in Bukovyna. First mentioned in 1413, it was a part of Moldavia from the 14th to the mid-16th century, and then until 1774 it belonged to Turkey. Under Austria (1774–1918) it was a Ukrainian cultural and educational center. In November 1918 it was briefly the seat of the Ukrainian-Bukovynian government, then it was annexed by Rumania and, in June 1940, by the USSR, when it ceased being an important Ukrainian cultural center in northern Bukovyna. It has a state-farm tekhnikum (formerly a Ukrainian agricultural school).

Kivertsii or Kyvertsii [Kiverci]. III-6. City (1969 pop 11,400) and raion center in Volhynia oblast. First mentioned in 1583, it became a railroad junction in the 1870s on the Kobel–Zhytomyr line. Wood products, lumber, and consumer products are made there.

Klebanov, Dmytro, b 25 July 1907 in Kharkiv. Composer, violinist, conductor, and educator. A student of S. Bohatyrov and graduate of the Kharkiv Music and Drama Institute (1926), he was appointed lecturer (1934) and professor (1960) at the Kharkiv Conservatory and then at the Kharkiv Institute of Arts (1963–73). His compositions include the operas Communist (1967) and Red

Cossacks (1972), two ballets, five symphonies, suites for symphony and chamber orchestras, concertos for violin, cello, flute, and harp, and vocal music.

Klebanov, Vladimir, b 14 June 1932 in Belorussia. Soviet workers' rights activist. A foreman at the Blazhanova coal mine in the Donets Basin, in 1960 he tried to organize an independent trade union at his mine but was stopped by the authorities. For protesting against unsafe working conditions he was dismissed from his job and then confined in a psychiatric hospital from 1968 to 1973. Upon his release he organized a workers' group to protest the abuses and persecution suffered by workers. In January 1978 the group formed the Association of Free Trade Unions in Moscow and claimed to represent about 200 workers. Its leaders were detained immediately by the police, and Klebanov was taken to a psychiatric hospital in Donetsk.

Kleinwächter, Friedrich, b 25 February 1838 in Prague, d 12 December 1927 in Chernivtsi. Political economist. A graduate of Charles University (JD 1871), he taught in Prague and Riga before becoming the first professor of political economy at Chernivtsi University (1875–1909). He was also involved in various imperial Austrian government and civic bodies. A specialist in industrial organization and comparative economic systems, he wrote many books and articles.

Klembivka. v-9. Village (1972 pop 5,100) on the Rusava River in Yampil raion, Vinnytsia oblast, and a center of traditional gold-and-silver silk embroidery and *kilim making. It was first mentioned in the early 17th century. The Zhinocha Pratsia kilim factory was established there in 1870; it manufactures custom-made as well as mass-produced items. The factory's kilims were awarded the gold medal at the Leipzig International Fair in 1968. O. Khomenko and M. Seniuk are the village's most original weavers.

Yurii Klen

Klen, Yurii (pseud of Oswald Burghardt), b 4 October 1891 in Serbynivtsi, Podilia gubernia, d 30 October 1947 in Augsburg, West Germany. Writer, poet, literary scholar, and translator. After graduating from Kiev University, he published in Russian a study on the latest analyses of poetic style (1915). Because he was the son of German colonists, he was exiled during the First World War to a village in the Arkhangelsk region of northern Russia. Returning to Ukraine after the 1917 Revolution, he worked as a teacher in Baryshivka. There he renewed his friendship with the scholar and poet M. *Zerov and began writing poetry in Ukrainian. Klen became one of the unofficial five-member group called the *Neoclassicists. Although his poems began to appear in the periodical press beginning in 1924, his major contributions were his translations of German, French, and English poetry; a separate collection of translated German poetry, Zalizni sonety (Iron Sonnets), appeared in 1926. In 1931 Klen managed to emigrate to Germany and taught Slavic literatures at the universities of Münster, Innsbruck, and Prague. His literary output in both German and Ukrainian (as Yu. Klen) increased in the 1930s. In Ukrainian journals in Prague and Lviv, he revealed himself as an erudite, technically masterful writer of short stories, epic poems, and lyrics marked by precision of language, plastic imagery, and thematic heterogeneity. Although neoclassicist in their mastery of form, his poems are permeated with a neoromantic drive reflecting the turbulent epoch of the Second World War. His long poem Prokliati roky (The Accursed Years, 1937; 2nd edn, 1943) was followed by his sole collection of lyrics, Karavely (Caravels, 1943). Before his untimely death he managed to complete four parts of his monumental epic poem, Popil imperii (The Ashes of Empires, 1946), as well as the invaluable first-hand account Spohady pro neoklasykyv (Memoirs about the Neoclassicists, 1947).

Klen's literary parodies, written together with L. *Mosenz under the joint pseudonym of Porfyrii Horotak, were published in 1947 as Dyabolichni paraboly (Diabolic Parables). His Ukrainian translations of W. Shakespeare's Hamlet and Tempest appeared together with most of his other Ukrainian works in the posthumously published Tvory (Works, vols 2–4, 1957–60); vol 1, which was to include his lyrical poetry, has not been published. A German-language study of his life and works by his sister, J. Burghardt, Oswald Burghardt: Leben und Werke, appeared in 1962.

D.H. Struk

Kleopov, Yurii, b 9 August 1902 in Horodyshche, Cherkasy county, Kiev gubernia, d 1943 in Smila, Cherkasy oblast. Botanist. Kleopov studied under O. Fomin at Kiev University before becoming a professor at Kharkiv University. From 1931 he directed the department of geobotany of the AN URSR Institute of Botany. A specialist in floristics, taxonomy, and geobotany, he dealt in his research both with the contemporary flora of Ukraine (especially Southern Ukraine) and with the flora of the Tertiary and Quaternary periods. Kleopov described six new types of plants and developed the theory of coenoelements in botany. He published many articles and studies, mostly in the journals Visnyk Kyivs'koho botanichnoho sadu and Ukrains'kyi botanichnyi zhurnal.

Klepatsky, Pavlo [Klepac'kyj], b 12 January 1885 in Puhachivka, Tarashcha county, Kiev gubernia, d ? Historian. He was a professor at the Kamianets-Podilskyy Ukrainian State University and then at the Poltava Institute of People's Education. His main works include Ocherki po istorii Kievskoi zemli: Litovs'kii period (Essays on the History of the Kiev Region: The Lithuanian Period, 1912), Ohliad dzherel do istorii Ukrainy (A Survey of Sources on the History of Ukraine, 1920), and articles on the historian M. Maksymovych, on economic and social history of the first half of the 19th century, and on the plan to create a Cossack army during the Napoleonic Wars in the journal Ukraïna and elsewhere. He was arrested in the Stalinist terror of the 1930s and disappeared without a trace.

Kletsy, Lev [Klec'kyj], b 18 March 1903 in Oleksandrivka, Perekop county, Tavriia gubernia. Agricultural economist. A graduate of the Kharkiv Agro-economic Institute (1928), he worked in it until he became department chairman at the Kharkiv Agricultural Institute (1933–59). From 1963 to 1979 he was academic secretary of the sector of agricultural economy and organization and member of the Presidium of the Ukrainian Academy of Agricultural Sciences. He has published over 100 works on productivity, profitability, and accountancy in Soviet agriculture.

Klevan [Klevan']. III-6. Town smt (1979 pop 8,400) in Rivne raion, Rivne oblast, situated in western Volhynia on the Stuhla River. It was first mentioned in 1458. It has a woodworking and a food-processing industry. Ruins of a castle (built in the 15th century and reconstructed in the 17th century) owned by the Czartoryski family and a stone Roman Catholic church built in 1630 are located there.

Kleven River [Kleven']. A right-bank tributary of the Seim River, the Kleven flows for 143 km through the East-European Central Upland and drains a basin of 2,660 sq km. The waters of this gently sloping river supply the local population and industry and are used for irrigation.

Kliachkivsky, Dmytro. See Savur, Klym.

Klintsy [Klincy]. I-13. City (1984 pop 71,000) under oblast jurisdiction and a raion center in Briansk oblast, Russian SFSR. It was founded in the early 18th century on mixed Ukrainian-Russian territory, and under the Hetman state (1663–1781) it was on the territory of the Starodub regiment. From 1802 to 1917 it was a major manufacturing center in Chernihiv gubernia, producing woolens, linen, sheepskin, boots, cast iron, and bricks.

Kliuchevsky, Vasilii [Ključevskij, Vasilij], b 28 January 1841 in Voskresenskoe, Penza gubernia, Russia, d 25 May 1911 in Moscow. Prominent Russian historian; full member of the St Petersburg Academy of Sciences from 1900. A professor at Moscow University, Kliuchevsky was one of the most important figures in the development of Russian historiography. In his broad syntheses (eg, Kurs russkoi istorii [A Course in Russian History], 5 vols, 1904–21) he traced the history of the Russian nation back to Kievan Rus' and developed a systematic presentation stressing the continuity of Russian history to the modern period. In this 'imperialistic' approach he paid no attention to the experiences of the other nations in the Russian Empire, including Ukrainians. However, his works on social and economic history contain much important information relating to Ukraine: eg, Proiskhodzhenie krepostnogo prava v Rossii (The Origins of Serf Law in Russia, 1885), Podushnaia podat' i otmena kholopstva v Rossii (The Poll-tax and the Abolishment of Serfdom in Russia, 1885), and Istoriia soslovii v Rossii (A History of Social Classes in Russia, 1913).

Klochkovsky, Viacheslav [Kločkovs'kyj, Vjačeslav], 1873–1931. Rear admiral of the Ukrainian navy. In 1917–18 he was port commander of Sevastopol and in charge of the submarine division. On 12 November 1918 he was appointed commander of the Black Sea Fleet under the Hetman government.

Stepan Klochurak

Klochurak, Stepan [Kločurak], b 27 February 1895 in Yasinia, Máramaros county, Transcarpathia, d 1980 in Prague. Political activist and journalist. In 1918–19 he organized local Ukrainian national councils and a Hutsul army, with which he defended the short-lived Hutsul Republic (see *Hutsuls) from the Hungarians. After the war he helped found the Subcarpathian Social Democratic party, and edited its newspapers Narod (1920–1) and Vpered (1922–34). Joining the Ukrainian branch of the pro-government Czechoslovak Agrarian party in 1934, he edited its organ Zemlia i volia (1934–8). He sat on the presidium of the Prosvita society and organized rural branches of the society. In the autonomous Carpatho-Ukrainian state within Czechoslovakia, Klochurak served as secretary to the prime minister and delegate to the *Vienna Arbitration. In the independent republic of Carpatho-Ukraine, he briefly held the office of defense minister (15 March 1939). In 1945 he was arrested by Soviet authorities in Prague; he returned there after serving 11 years in prison. His memoirs Do voli (To Freedom, 1978) were published in the West.

Klokov, Mykhailo. See Dolengo, Mykhailo.

Klokov, Viacheslav, b 19 February 1928 in Kharkiv. Sculptor; son of M. Klokov. A graduate of the Kiev Art Institute (1953), he works in monumental and easel sculpture. His works include Before the Start, By the Stream, Yaroslavna (1979), and the reliefs of the Myr Hotel in Kharkiv and Scythians of the Pektoral restaurant in Kiev. An album of his work was published in 1980.

Klokov, Vsevolod, b 25 June 1917 in Ust-Katav (now in Cheliabinska oblast), Russia. Historian; corresponding member of the AN URSR since 1978. A veteran of the Soviet partisans during the Second World War, in 1945–9 Klokov directed a department of the AN URSR Commission for the History of the 'Great Fatherland' War. He has been an associate of the AN URSR Institute of History since 1950 and director of a department there since 1962. Since 1965 he has also been a professor of the history of the CP(U) at the Kiev Institute of Civil-Aviation Engineers. Klovok is the author of several propagandistic monographs on the partisans in Ukraine during the Second World War. His memoirs of the war, Kovel'skii uzul (The Kovel Junction), were published in 1981.

Klovovsky, Oleksander [Klovovs'kyj], b 1846 in Zhytomyr, Volhynia gubernia, d 13 April 1917 in Petrograd. Meteorologist and geophysicist; corresponding member of the Russian Imperial Academy of Sciences from 1910. Klovovsky graduated from Kiev (1868) and Odessa (PH D 1884) universities and was professor at Odessa (1880–1907) and St Petersburg (1909–17). In 1886 he began the organization of the Meteorological Network in the southwestern part of the Russian Empire, which by 1896 had over 1,000 weather stations throughout Russian-ruled Ukraine. Research conducted at these stations was published in a regular serial. In 1892 Klovovsky founded a magneto-meteorological observatory in Odessa. In his work he combined theoretical and experimental approaches to the study of the earth's atmosphere. His publications include general works on meteorology as well as studies on the climate of Kiev (published in Zapiski Iugo-Zapadnogo otdela Russkogo geograficheskogo obshchestva, 1874 and 1898) and Odessa (1893).

Klym, Ivan, 1909–44. OUN and UPA figure. A political prisoner in Poland before the Second World War, Klym was active in the Ukrainian Relief Committee in Pere-myshl (1939–41). In 1941 he went to the Donbas to organize Ukrainian workers for the OUN. Later he organized UPA radio broadcasts in the Carpathian Mountains. He was arrested by the Gestapo and executed.

Klym (Klymentii) Smoliatych [Klym Smoljatyč]. A Kiev metropolitan (1147–54) and church figure from the Smolensk region (from which his surname is derived), Belorussia. A monk of the Zarub Monastery, Klym was elected metropolitan by a synod of the hierarchy of the Rus' church under pressure from Prince Iziaslav Mstyslavych. However, his election was never confirmed by the Patriarch of Constantinople. Klym was also opposed by Prince Yurii Dolgorukii, Iziaslav's rival, and the bishop of Novgorod, Niphont. After Iziaslav's death he was forced to abdicate as metropolitan and became bishop of Volodymyr-Volynskyi. Klym was an erudite sermonizer and philosopher. His best-known work is 'Poslaniie do presvitera Khomy' (Letter to Presbyter Khoma), which has survived in two manuscript forms. It contains a symbolic explanation of the Holy Scriptures, and demonstrates his knowledge of Homer, Plato, and Aristotle. Other works are also attributed to him. The most extensive biography and bibliography of Klym is N. Nikolsky's O literaturnykh trudakh mitropolita Klimenta Smoliaticha, pisatelja XII veka (The Literary Works of Metropolitan Klyment Smoliatych, a Writer of the 12th Century, 1892). His election as metropolitan is described in a monograph by T. Kostruba.

A. Zhukovsky

Klymasz, Robert [Klymaš, Bohdan], b 14 May 1936 in Toronto. Folklorist. Educated at the universities of Toronto, Manitoba, Harvard, and Indiana (PH D 1971), Klymasz is a specialist on Ukrainian-Canadian folklore and the author of An Introduction to the Ukrainian-Canadian Immigrant Folksong Cycle (1970) and Ukrainian Folklore in Canada (1980). He was executive director of the Ukrainian Cultural and Educational Centre in Winnipeg (1976–8). Currently, he is curator for the East European Programme at the Canadian Centre for Folk Culture Studies in Ottawa.

Klymchenko, Kostiantyn [Klymčenko, Kostjantyn], b 1816, d 29 August 1849 in Moscow. Sculptor. A graduate of the St Petersburg Academy of Arts (1839), he settled in Rome in 1842 and did most of his work there. His sculptures, done in a classicist style, include Paris with Apple, Narcissus Gazing into the Water (1842–5), The Bacchante (1846), Girl with Mirror (1840s), Abraham's Sacrifice, and a portrait of Catherine II. His early work was influenced by I. Martos.

Klymenko, Pylyp, b 5 July 1887 in Kozelets, Chernihiv gubernia, d 8 July 1955. Historian. He graduated from the St Petersburg Polytechnical and Kiev University, where he studied under M. Dovnar-Zapolsky. After teaching for a short time at the Kamianets-Podilskyi Ukrainian State University, he worked at the VUAN Archeographic Commission and lectured at the Kiev Archeological Institute. From 1925 he was associated with several institutes of VUAN, including the Institute of History. A prolific writer, in his research Klymenko focused on the economic and social history of 17th–19th-century Ukraine. His most important works include Tsekhny na Ukraïni (Guilds in Ukraine, 1929), 'Misto i terytorija na Ukraïni za Het'manshchyny, 1654–1764' (The City and Territory in Ukraine during the Hetmanate, 1654–1764, Zapysky Istorychno-Filolohichnoho Viddivu VUAN, 1926, and separately), 'Komputy ta revizii XVIII st.' (Registers and Revisions of the 18th Century, Ukrains'kyi Arkheohrafichnyi Zbirnyk, 1930), and works on the history of Nizhen, Dubno, and trade and industry in Podilia gubernia in Visnyk tsukrovoi promyslovosti and elsewhere. Klymenko also published several important historical documents with his own annotations and a number of articles on the history of Ukrainian culture. Arrested in 1936, he was exiled to a labor camp, where he died. An attempt was made to 'rehabilitate' him in 1967.

B. Balan

Klymentii, Zynovii's son [Klymentij Zynovijiv syn], b mid-17th century, d after 1712. Monk, poet, and ethnographer. He traveled throughout Ukraine and visited Russia and Poland while collecting donations for his monastery. Between 1700 and 1709 he wrote about 400 poems (published in their entirety by V. Peretts, 1912) depicting the life of Cossacks, artisans, and migrant workers and satirizing the behavior of the clergy, merchants, and functionaries. His poetry is rich in social and ethnographic detail. About 2,000 proverbs collected by Klymentii were published in 1971. A study of him by V. Kolosova appeared in 1964.

Klymiv, Ivan (pseud: Legenda), b 1909 in Silets, Sokal county, Galicia, d December 1942. Leader of the OUN (Bandera faction). He was arrested by the Polish authorities in 1935 and sentenced to 10 years in the Bereza Kartuzka concentration camp. Freed after the collapse of the Polish state, in the first half of 1941 he headed the OUN territorial executive in Western Ukraine and participated in the OUN anti-Nazi underground. He was arrested by the Gestapo in December 1942 and tortured to death.

Klymko, Nykyfor, b 22 February 1904 in Landari, Poltava county, Poltava gubernia, d 29 June 1979 in Kiev. Economist. A senior researcher at the International Agricultural Institute of the Executive Committee of the Comintern (1930–9), he chaired (from 1944) the department of political economy at the Kiev Technological Institute of the Food Production Industry, and directed (1963–70) the Ukrainian section of the Institute of the Economy of the World Socialist System of the USSR Academy of Sciences. He has published over 60 works dealing with economic problems of socialist countries.

Klymko, Oleksander, b 1906 in Galicia, d 27 November 1970 in Elizabeth, New Jersey. Painter, caricaturist, and stage designer. Having studied art in Lviv and Vienna, he worked in Lviv as an illustrator of the humor magazines Zyz and Komar. After the Second World War he emigrated to Argentina, where he illustrated the satirical almanac Mitla and designed sets for the National Theater in Buenos Aires. Having immigrated to the United States in 1956, he designed sets for the National Ballet Company in Washington, DC, and the New York Metropolitan Opera. As a painter he specialized in landscapes and battle scenes.

Klymkovyč, Ksenofont [Klymkovyč], b 17 January 1835 in Khotymyr, Tovmach circle, Galicia, d 19 October 1881. Populist poet, journalist, and translator. He edited and published the Lviv periodicals Meta (1863–5) and Osnova (1872) and the Ruska Chytalnia literature series (1865). He popularized and published T. Shevchenko's poetry, including the first edition of Son (The Dream, 1865). His Romantic poetry appeared from 1855 in Pravda and other Galician periodicals. He also translated works by N. Gogol, Lord Byron, A. Mickiewicz, and others into Ukrainian, as well as some works by Shevchenko and Marko Vovchok into German.

Klymov, Oleksander, b 12 September 1898 in Kustanai, Turgai oblast, Russia, d 22 June 1974 in Leningrad. Conductor and educator. A graduate of the Lysenko Music and Drama Institute (1928), where he studied under V. Berdiaiev, he worked as a conductor in Donetsk, Saratov, Kharkiv, and Odessa. During the Second World War he was the principal conductor of the State Symphony Orchestra of the Ukrainian SSR (1942–5), then of the Symphony Orchestra of the Odessa Philharmonic (1945–8), and of the Kiev (1954–61) and Leningrad (1961–7) theaters of opera and ballet. At the same time he taught at the Lysenko Music and Drama Institute (1928–31), the Odessa Conservatory (1945–8), and the Kiev Conservatory (1948–54).

Klymovsky, Semen [Klymovs'kyj] (Klymov), b and d ? Poet. A Cossack in the Kharkiv regiment, in 1724 he dedicated two didactic poems to Peter I: 'O pravosudii nachal'stvuiuchykh' (On the Justice of the Rulers) and 'O smirenii vysochaishikh' (On the Humility of the Powerful). Prince A. Shakhovskiy's Kazak-stikhovorets (The Cossack Versifier, 1812), a comic opera about Klymovsky, had an influence on I. Kotliarevsky's dramatic works.

It is believed that Klymovsky was the author of a number of folk songs, such as 'Īkhav kozak za Dunai' (The Cossack Was Traveling beyond the Danube).

Klymovych, Petro [Klymovyč], b 1855, d 1920 in Odessa. Lawyer and political leader. He joined the Odessa Hromada in the 1870s as a university student and took an active part in Ukrainian community life in Odessa. Under the Central Rada he served as deputy finance minister in V. Holubovych's cabinet. He was executed by the Bolsheviks.

Klymyshyn, Mykola [Klymyšyn], b 25 February 1909 in Mostyshche, Kalush county, Galicia. Community and OUN activist. He studied at Cracow University and the Ukrainian Free University in Munich. In 1934 he was implicated in the assassination of the Polish minister B. *Pieracki, and was tried in Warsaw and sentenced to death. The sentence was commuted to life imprisonment, and until 1939 he was held in various Polish prisons. In 1940 he became one of the leaders of the OUN (Bandera faction), and in 1941–2 he commanded its northern task force. He was arrested by the Germans in Zhytomyr and sent to the Auschwitz concentration camp. From 1945 to 1962 he was a member of the Leadership of the Bandera faction abroad while living in Munich and, since 1949, the United States. He has worked as a Ukrainian émigré journalist and has been the vice-president of the Association of Activists of Ukrainian Culture. His memoirs, V pokhodi do voli (The March to Freedom), appeared in 1975.

Klynovy, Yurii. See Stefanyk, Yurii.

Kmet [kmet'; Polish: kmieć]. A historical term used by various Slavic groups, its meaning differing with time and place. In the Pouchennia ditiam of Volodymyr Monomakh and in such works as Slovo o polku Ihorevi, kmet meant a cavalryman, a member of a prince's **druzhyina*. In the western Ukrainian and Belorussian lands under Poland in the 14th–16th centuries the word indicated a free peasant, who paid only a state tax. By the early 17th century, when the peasantry had become enserfed, kmet meant a serf attached to the land. The obligations of a kmet consisted of the payment of a quit-rent for the land, payment-in-kind, and compulsory labor for the lord. The right of the kmet to become independent of the lord was limited, and a kmet was subject to the lord's private court (see **Domianial jurisdiction*). Kmet, signifying serf, gradually fell into disuse and was replaced with the word **kholop*. The term kmet and a remnant of this institution were preserved in customary law in Transcarpathia into the 20th century. The word denoted a poor peasant who lived in another's house and was obligated to work the land.

Kmeta, Arkhyp, b 3 March 1891 in Ichnia, Borzna county, Chernihiv gubernia, d 3 June 1978 in New York. Military officer. After graduating from the Alexandrian Military School in Moscow in 1913, Kmeta served in the Russian army during the First World War. In November 1917 he joined the newly created Army of the UNR, rising quickly through the ranks until he became in 1919 the commander-in-chief of the 4th Regiment of the Sich Riflemen. After crossing with the army into Poland, he headed the department of statutes and regulations of the General Staff (1920–2), then occupied other posts in the military organs of the UNR Government-in-exile and helped found the Brotherhood of Ukrainian Statists. From 1935 Kmeta worked as a contract officer for the Polish army. After the Second World War he immigrated to the United States.

Kmeta-Ichniansky, Ivan. See Ichniansky, Myroslav.

Mykhailo Kmit: Self-Portrait (1946)

Kmit, Mykhailo, b 25 July 1910 in Stryi, Galicia, d 22 May 1981 in Sydney, Australia. Modernist painter. After completing O. *Novakivsky's school in Lviv (1932), he studied under F. Pautsch at the Cracow Academy of Arts (1933–9) and did art research in Italy, Germany, and Czechoslovakia. During the Second World War he taught at an elementary school in Biała Podlaska and at the Art and Trade School in Lviv. Emigrating to Australia in 1949, he quickly gained recognition for his work. He won a number of prizes, and his paintings were acquired by public galleries in Sydney and Melbourne and by the National Gallery in Canberra. An attempt to establish himself as a painter in the United States (1958–65) did not succeed, and he returned to Australia. Almost all of Kmit's paintings deal with the human, mostly female, figure. Some of his works have a religious theme: his Amen was reproduced on a postcard published by UNESCO. Kmit's style is expressionistic, complicated sometimes with cubist or neo-Byzantine traits. His forte was color.

Kmit, Yurii, b 1872 in Koblo-Stare, Sambir county, Galicia, d 25 June 1946 in Kulchytsi, Sambir raion, Lviv oblast. Writer, literary scholar, ethnographer, priest. His ethnographic research focused on the culture and lifestyle of the *Boikos about whom he wrote such literary works as Z hir (From the Mountains), V zatinku i na sontsi (In the Shade and in the Sun, 1910), a collection of short stories, and Tremtinnia dushi (The Trembling of the Soul, 1922). Some of these works were written in the *Boiko dialect. He also wrote articles popularizing the work of various Ukrainian and European writers.

Kmitsykevych, Volodymyr [Kmiczykevych], b 28 August 1863, d 29 July 1942 in Chernivtsi. A gymnasium teacher in Galicia and Chernivtsi, he compiled a German-Ukrainian dictionary (1912) and Greek-Ukrainian dictionary (1922–3), contributed articles on cultural and educational issues to the Bukovynian Ukrainian press, and translated F. Schiller's William Tell (1887) and Plato's Apology (1898) into Ukrainian.

Kniahynysky, Yov [Knjahynyc'kyj, Jov] (secular name: Ivan), b ca 1550 in Tysmenytsia, near Stanyslaviv (present-day Ivano-Frankivske), d 1621. Hegumen and churchman. He probably studied at the Ostrih Academy before becoming a monk on Mount Athos. Returning to Ukraine in the early 17th century, he played an important role in the Orthodox struggle against the Church Union of *Berestia. As a monk in the Uhornyk Monastery (near present-day Ivano-Frankivske) and the Maniava Hermitage he became famous for reviving Orthodox monasticism. He worked with I. Vyshensky, Z. Kopystensky, and other church leaders and was considered an authority on the purity of the faith and asceticism. In 1619 Kniahynysky wrote an important critique of K. Stavrovetsky-Trankvilion's Zertsalo bohosloviia (The Mirror of Theology, 1618) from an Orthodox perspective.

Kniaz. See Prince.

Kniazha Hora: Encolpion with St John the Evangelist

Kniazha Hora [Knjaža Hora]. A landmark near Kaniv, Cherkasy oblast, and the site of the fortified Rus' city of Roden (Rodnia), which is mentioned in the chronicles under the year 980. Excavations carried out in 1870–1900 and 1958–65 uncovered the remains of wooden and earthen dwellings, various workshops, other buildings, many farm and artisans' implements, domestic utensils, weapons, and 12 hoards of gold and silver ornaments. Roden's inhabitants were artisans and traders. The city was destroyed during the Mongol invasion of 1240. A monograph about Roden by H. Mezentseva was published in Kiev in 1968.

Kniazhdvir. See Verkhnie.

Kniazhevych, Dmytro [Knjaževyč], b 6 May 1788 in St Petersburg, d 13 October 1844 in Velyka Buromka, Zolotonosha county, Poltava gubernia. Prominent figure in educational and cultural affairs. From 1802 he held various government positions at home and abroad, and in 1837 he became a trustee of the Odessa school district, assisting in the reorganization and expansion of the Richeliu Lyceum. He founded (1839) and headed the Odessa Society of History and Antiquities and was editor of its Zapiski. In addition to writing many works on philology, literature, agriculture, education, and history, he headed archeological explorations on the Black Sea coast.

Kniazhynsky, Antin [Knjažyns'kyj], b 11 February 1893 in Tysovytsia, Turka county, Galicia, d 12 February 1960 in Philadelphia. Educator. A graduate of Lviv University, he taught at several Galician gymnasiums. During the Second World War he organized cultural and educational work in Kolomyia county. In 1944 he fled to Vienna, but was apprehended by the NKVD and from 1945 to 1955 he was incarcerated in Soviet prison camps. He subsequently emigrated to the United States. Kniazhynsky wrote several works, including Na dni sssr (On the Bottom of the USSR, 1959) and Dukh natsii: Sotsiologichno-ethnopsykholohichna studiiia (The Spirit of a Nation: A Sociological-Ethnopsychological Study, 1959).

Knitwear industry. A branch of the textile industry that produces cotton, wool, linen, and synthetic knitted clothing and other knitted goods. Until the First World War, large-scale knitwear production did not exist in Ukraine; only small quantities were produced by cottage enterprises, while most knitwear was imported from textile centers in central Russia. In 1915, knitwear factories were established in Poltava and Kharkiv on the basis of plants evacuated from Russian-ruled Poland.

By 1925, 11 factories existed; in 1928 they produced about 14 percent of Soviet hose, underwear, and other clothing. Large plants were built during the First and Second Five-Year plans in Kharkiv, Kiev, and Poltava; in the late 1930s they produced over 80 percent of Soviet Ukraine's knitwear. While other branches of Ukraine's textile production remained underdeveloped, the knitwear industry received relatively large investments (37.7 million rubles during the First and Second Five-Year plans), and its output increased significantly. By 1940 it was producing 16.4–24.4 percent of all Soviet assorted knitwear. Because other textile branches were underdeveloped, much of the thread used in production had to be imported from Russia. The Poltava Cotton-Spinning Factory supplied only 50 percent of Ukraine's needs.

The industry was devastated during the Second World War, and only 9 percent of prewar output was attained in 1945. Although it was one of the most quickly reconstructed branches of Ukraine's light industry, it only gradually attained its prewar level of output. In the early 1970s there were 60 knitwear plants in Ukraine. Their share in total Soviet output has stabilized at 16 percent (50 million items in 1968 and 75 million in 1982), 19 percent of underwear (162 and 219 million items), and 21 percent of hose and socks (307 and 369 million pairs). The largest factories are in Kiev, Donetske, Voroshylovhrad, Odessa, and Mykolaiv; the largest hose factories are in Kharkiv, Zhytomyr, Chernivtsi, Lviv, and Chervonohrad.

B. Somchynsky

Knyhar (Bookseller). A monthly literary magazine of criticism and bibliography published by the Chas publishing house in Kiev from September 1917 to March 1920 and edited by V. Koroliv-Stary and M. Zerov. Thirty-one issues appeared. Besides a large section devoted to book reviews and bibliography, it contained articles on various aspects of book production: eg, V. Modzalevsky's study of the history of the book trade in Ukraine, V. Miiakovsky's review of the history of Russian censorship of Ukrainian books, S. Kondra's analysis of Ukrainian journalistic bibliography, H. Hasenko's assessment of Ukraine's image in the European press, and A. Yarynovych's survey of the Ukrainian press in North America. Besides these contributors, many other critics and literary historians contributed to the journal: S. Yefremov, M. Zerov, A. Nikovsky, M. Shapoval, D. Doroshenko, S. Cherkasenko, M. Sadovsky, P. Zaitsev, L. Starytska-Cherniakhivska, Mykola Levytsky, Orest Levytsky, S. Rusova, Yu. Tyshchenko, O. Mytsiuk, and O. Koshyts.

Knyholiub (Bibliophile). An irregular journal of the Ukrainian Society of Bibliophiles in Prague published from 1927 to 1932. Its editor was S. Siropolko. Devoted to the history of Ukrainian book publishing, the journal printed mostly the lectures presented to the society by its members: V. Simovych's bibliography of O. Kobylanska's works, D. Chyzhevsky's survey of Ukrainian philosophical literature in 1920–6, V. Bidnov's review of religious publications in Ukraine, S. Narizhnyi's survey of Slavica including Ucrainica, D. Antonovych's study on the cult of Narbut and modern Ukrainian book design, V. Sichynsky's survey of literature on Ukrainian fine art, and S. Siropolko's study of bibliography in Soviet Ukraine. The journal contained special sections devoted to library affairs, publishing news, Ucrainica, and new Ukrainian publications in Czechoslovakia. Altogether 15 issues of Knyholiub appeared.

Knyhospilka (aka Ukrainian Co-operative Publishing Union [Ukrainska kooperatyvna vydavnycha spilka]). The largest book publishing and distributing firm in Soviet Ukraine in the 1920s. Organized in Kiev in 1918 under the direction of M. Stasiuk, it published literary works, scientific books, and school textbooks. It was closed in 1920 when the Bolsheviks occupied Ukraine, and was reopened in November 1922 with the head office in Kharkiv and branch offices in Kiev and Odessa. Its chief managers were M. Ahuf, S. Pylypenko, and V. Tselarius. By the end of 1924 branches were established also in Vinnytsia, Uman, Sumy, and Zhytomyr. The main publications in this period were Literaturna biblioteka (Literary Library), a series of Ukrainian literary classics; Svitova literatura (World Literature), a translation series including the works of H. de Balzac, A. France, and G. de Maupassant; an academic edition of Lesia Ukrainka's and M. Kotsiubynsky's works; school textbooks; practical manuals for farmers; booklets on co-operation; and a music library edited by L. Revutsky. The firm also published book magazines such as Knyha and Kooperatyvnyi knyhar. Its book output rose rapidly from 26 titles (229,000 copies) in 1923 to 534 titles (5,350,000 copies) in 1926–7. Ninety to 95 percent of the books were published in Ukrainian. In 1931 Knyhospilka was abolished by the authorities as part of the campaign to suppress Ukrainian culture.

S. Yaniv

Knyhospilka (Book Union). A publishing house founded in New York in 1952 by A. Bilous, O. Balytsky, and I.

Krylov. It reprinted by offset M. Hrushevsky's Istoriia ukrains'koi literatury (The History of Ukrainian Literature, 5 vols, 1959–60) and Istoriia Ukrainy-Rusy (The History of Ukraine-Rus', 10 vols, 1954–8) and H. Holoskevych's Pravopysnyi slovnyk (Orthographic Dictionary, 1952), and published I. Franko's works in 20 volumes (1956–62), M. Kotsiubynsky's works in two volumes (1955), and some children's literature.

Knyhy byt'ia ukrains'koho narodu (The Books of Genesis of the Ukrainian People). The main ideological and programmatic statement of the *Cyril and Methodius Brotherhood, written by M. *Kostomarov in 1846 and called the Zakon Bozhyi (Divine Law) in the official police investigation of the brotherhood. The Knyhy was the political culmination of the Ukrainian national renaissance of the early 19th century. It was greatly influenced by the ideas of Western European romanticism, Slavophilism, the *Decembrist movement and the *Society of United Slavs, the historical concepts of **Istoriia Rusov* (The History of the Rus' People), and the revolutionary ideas of T. Shevchenko. The title of the work and its literary style, especially in the first half, are reminiscent of A. Mickiewicz's Księgi narodu polskiego i pielgrzymstwa polskiego (Books of the Polish People and of the Polish Pilgrimage).

In the context of a broad 'Christian' interpretation of world history, the Knyhy chronicles how each nation in turn fell from grace by succumbing to despotic monarchs or foreign domination. In the end, only the Ukrainians founded a democratic Christian society, the Cossack Host, the idealization of which is a prominent theme of the book. In a biblical style equating democracy with Christianity, the Knyhy stresses the mystical mission of the Slavs and the messianic role of the Ukrainians in particular. It calls for an end to the national oppression of Ukraine and advocates the establishment of a union of autonomous Slavic states under the leadership of a 'resurrected' Ukrainian nation.

Besides its message of Ukrainian nationalism, the Knyhy advocates a radical social program, calling for the emancipation of the serfs and an end to monarchism and privileges for the nobility.

Two versions of the Knyhy were uncovered during the police investigation of the Cyril and Methodius Brotherhood, one consisting of 104 paragraphs and the other of 109 paragraphs in Russian translation. The manuscripts were kept in the secret-police archives in St Petersburg until the 1917 Revolution and have been preserved in the Central State Historical Archive in Moscow since then. The first unabridged edition of the Knyhy was published, with notes by P. Zaitsev, in the Kiev journal Nashe mynule, 1 (1918). Later editions were published by M. Vozniak in Lviv (1921) and by I. Borschchak in Paris (1946). A French translation by G. Luciani was published in 1956, and an English one by B. Yankivsky in 1954.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Semevskii, V. Kirillo-Mefodievskoe obshchestvo 1846–47 gg. (Moscow 1918)
 Luciani, G. Le Livre de la Genèse du peuple ukrainien (Paris 1956)
 Zaionchkovskii, P. Kirillo-Mefodievskoe obshchestvo (Moscow 1959)
 Kostiv, K. Knyhy buttia ukrains'koho narodu (Toronto 1980)
 A. Zhukovskyy

Knysh, Irena [Knyš] (née Shkvarok), b 20 April 1909 in Lviv. Feminist and author. Since immigrating to Canada in 1950, she has worked as a journalist and has written extensively on the Ukrainian women's movement. Her major works include Ivan Franko ta rivnopravnist' zhinky (Ivan Franko and Equal Rights for Women, 1956); Smoloskyp u temriavi (A Torch in the Darkness, 1957), a study of N. Kobrynska and the origins of the Ukrainian women's movement; and Try rovesnytsi: 1860–1960 (Three [Ukrainian] Contemporaries: 1860–1960, nd), a collection of biographical studies of U. Kravchenko, M. Bashkirtseva, and M. Zankovetska. She edited a collection of reminiscences, Nezabutnia Ol'ha Basarab: Vybrane (The Unforgettable Olha Basarab: Selections, 1976), and has published two collections of her journalistic articles.

Zynovii Knysh

Knysh, Zynovii [Knyš, Zynovij], b 16 June 1906 in Kolomyia, Galicia. Political and community activist, author, and publisher (pen name: B. Mykhailiuk). A graduate of Lviv University (PH D 1930), in the late 1920s he was a leading member of the Ukrainian Military Organization (UVO). In 1930 he was put in charge of OUN 'combat' activities but was soon arrested and imprisoned by the Polish authorities until 1936. He then worked as a secretary of the Tsentrosoiuz co-operative union in Lviv (1936–9), director of the office of the Ukrainian Central Committee in Cracow (1940–1), secretary of the Narodna Torhovia consumer co-operative in Lviv (1941–2), the mayor of Kalush (1942), and director of the Zolochiv circle administration (1943–4). From 1940 to 1978 he was a member of the Leadership of the OUN (Melnyk faction). A refugee in Austria in 1944–6, he was secretary of the Greek Catholic Mission for Ukrainians in Western Europe in Paris (1946–8) before immigrating to Canada. In 1949–52 he was secretary of the National Executive of the Ukrainian National Federation in Winnipeg. He is the author of over 60 brochures, books, and memoirs, mostly about the UVO and OUN, including Bunt Bandery (Bandera's Revolt, 1950), Dukh, shcho tilo rve do boiu (The Spirit That Spurs the Body on to Battle, 1951), Dryzhyt' pidzemnyi huk (The Underground Din Resounds, 1953), Pered pokhodom na Skhid (Before the March to the East, 2 vols, 1959), Sribna surma (The Silver Bugle, 5 vols, 1962–7), and Na povni vitryla! (At Full Sail! 1970). Among his publicistic works are Istoriia ukrains'koi politychnoi dumky do kintsia XVIII st. (A History of Ukrainian Political Thought to the End of the 18th Century, 1952), U trystarichchia

Pereiaslavs'koho dohovoru (On the Occasion of the Tricentennial of the Pereiaslav Treaty, 1954), and Pip Hapon (The Priest Gapon, 1977).

R. Senkus, A. Zhukovsky

Knyszka (Book). A monthly journal of literary criticism and bibliography published from 1921 to 1923 by the Bystrytsia publishing house in Stanyslaviv. It was edited by I. Chepyha. Its supplement Vseukraïns'ka bibliohrafiia was edited by I. Kalynovych. Besides bibliographies, it published news about Ukrainian publishers at home and abroad, articles about books, and reviews of new publications. Its contributors included V. Doroshenko, O. Zalesky, S. Siropolko, V. Koroliv-Stary, Z. Kuzelia, and L. Bachynsky.

Knyszochky myssiiny (Missionary Booklets). Popular educational and religious booklets published monthly by the Rev L. Dzhulynsky from 1890 to 1911 in Berezhany, Lviv, Peremyshl, and Ternopil. They contained short articles in verse or prose written mostly by priests, such as S. Lepky, Ye. Lutsyk, Yu. Nasalsky, D. Tretiak, Ya. Zrobek, I. Byrchak, I. Ozarkevych, V. Chernetsky, and E. Tsurkovsky.

Kobelev, Aleksandr [Kobeljev], b 1860 in Tsarskoe Selo, St Petersburg gubernia, d 1942 in Kiev. Architect. A graduate of the St Petersburg Civil-Engineering Institute (1887), he worked as an engineer for the Administration of Southern Railways in Kiev. From 1899 he taught architectural design at the Kiev Polytechnical Institute. He built the railway stations in Bendery, Koziatyn, and Sarny and a number of buildings in Kiev, including the State Bank (1902–5, with O. Verbytsky), the Central Telegraph (1903), the Commercial Institute (1906, with V. Obremsky), and the building of the Higher Courses for Women (1911–13). His book on general civil architecture was published in 1907.

Kobeliaky [Kobeljaky]. IV-15. Town (1970 pop 10,800) and raion center in Poltava oblast, situated on the Vorskla River, in the Dnieper Lowland. Known since the early 17th century, from 1648 to 1764 it was a Cossack company town in the Poltava regiment, and from 1802 to 1917 a county town in Poltava gubernia. It has a clothing factory, a large sugar refinery, a brickyard, and food-processing and light industries.

Kobersky, Karlo [Kobers'kyj] (pseud: K. Pushkar), b 5 October 1890 in Zalesie, Rzeszów county, Galicia, d

Karlo Kobersky

1940. Civic and political leader, theoretician of co-operation, and publicist. A graduate of Lviv University, he was docent at the Ukrainian Husbandry Academy at Poděbrady (from 1926) and a full member of the Shevchenko Scientific Society (from 1935). He edited the journal Kooperatyvna respublika (1928–39) as well as other publications of the Audit Union of Ukrainian Co-operatives in Lviv. A member of the Supreme Secretariat of the Ukrainian Radical party, Kobersky wrote many articles on political and economic issues, and such larger works as Ukraïns'ke narodnytstvo po obokh bokakh Zbrucha (Ukrainian Populism on Both Sides of the Zbruch River, 1924), Ukraïna v svitovomu hospodarstvi (Ukraine in the World Economy, 1933), and Kooperatyvnyi bukvar (A Co-operative Alphabet, 1928, 2nd edn, 1939). He was killed by the NKVD.

Kobersky, Ostap [Kobers'kyj], b 1895 in Sianik, Galicia, d 19 November 1944 in Trnava, Czechoslovakia. Political leader; brother of K. *Kobersky. He was one of the organizers of the Galician youth movement before the First World War, and was particularly active in the Sich sports association. During the war he rose from the ranks to become a lieutenant in the Ukrainian Sich Rifle-men and was twice wounded in battle. A founding member of the Ukrainian Military Organization, he was implicated in S. Fedak's attempt on the life of the Polish president J. Piłsudski. After studying in Prague (1922–5), he worked in a co-operative in Sambir and served on the executive of the Ukrainian Social Radical party.

Kobets, Oleksii [Kobec', Oleksij] (pseud: Oleksa Varavva), b 1889, d 5 September 1967 in Buffalo, New York. Writer and journalist. During the First World War Kobets carried on cultural and educational work with Ukrainian rows at Freistadt on behalf of the Union for the Liberation of Ukraine. In the 1920s and 1930s he worked for various publishers, particularly in the co-operative press. After the Second World War he immigrated to the United States. Kobets is the author of several poetry collections, movie scripts, and the autobiographical prose work Zapysky polonenooho (Memoirs of a Prisoner, 1931), which won him critical acclaim at home and abroad.

Kobiak [Kobjak]. Khan of the *Cumans. Kobiak, together with Khan Konchak, led a number of raids on Kievan Rus' in the 1170s and took part in the internecine struggle among the Rus' princes in 1180–1. During a major assault on Rus' in 1184 Konchak and Kobiak were defeated by the princes and the latter was taken prisoner.

Kobryn, Vasyl, b 1938 in Tuchne, Peremyshl county, Galicia. Religious dissident. A graduate of a tekhnikum in Lviv, he headed the Initiative Group for Defending the Rights of Believers and the Church in Ukraine (1983–4) and wrote several articles and declarations protesting Soviet religious policy. He collaborated with the samydav journal Khronika Katolyts'koï tserkvy na Ukraïni. In March 1985, he was sentenced to three years' imprisonment for his defense of religious rights.

Kobrynska, Nataliia [Kobryns'ka, Natalija] (née Ozarkevych), b 8 June 1851 in Beleluia, Sniatyn circle, d 22 January 1920 in Bolekhiv, Dolyna county, Galicia. Writer and pioneer of the Ukrainian *women's movement in

Nataliia Kobrynska

Galicia. In 1884 she organized the Society of Ruthenian Women in Stansylaviv. Three years later she edited and published, with O. Pchilka, the first feminist almanac, **Pershyi vinok* (The First Garland). In 1891 she convened in Stryi the first public feminist meeting, at which she raised the issue of day-care centers. In 1893 she published a second almanac, Nasha dolia (Our Fate, further issues in 1895 and 1896), and in 1907 a third almanac, Zhinocha dolia (Women's Fate). Kobrynska's short stories deal with women's and social issues, psychological themes, folk beliefs, and the First World War. They were also published in several collections – Zadlia kusnyka khliba (For the Sake of a Piece of Bread, 1884), Dukh chasu (The Spirit of the Times, 1889), Vyborets' (The Elector, 1904), Kazky (Fairy Tales, 1904), ladzia i Katrusia ta inshi opovidannia (Yadzia and Katrusia and Other Stories, 1904) – and in editions of collected or selected works (1930, 1954, 1958). A commemorative biography – Smoloskyp u temriavi: Nataliia Kobryns'ka i ukrains'kyi zhinochyi rukh (A Torch in the Darkness: Nataliia Kobrynska and the Ukrainian Women's Movement, 1957) by I. Knysn – appeared in Canada. A bibliography of her works by P. Babiak was published in 1967.

D.H. Struk

Kobrynsky, Illia [Kobryns'kyj, Illja], b 23 December 1904 in Shyroke, Kryvyi Rih county, Kherson gubernia, d 4 November 1979 in Dnipropetrovske. Stage director and actor. Upon graduating from the Moscow Institute of Theater Art (1935), he began to direct plays in such theaters as the Dnipropetrovske Ukrainian Music and Drama Theater (1935–41, 1950–5, and 1961) and the Dnipropetrovske Russian Drama Theater (1944–50, 1955–60), where in 1962 he was appointed principal stage director. He produced such plays as O. Korniiuchuk's Pravda (Truth) and L. Dmyterko's Na viky razom (Forever Together) and many Russian classics. From 1935 to 1956 he lectured at the Dnipropetrovske Theater School.

Kobrynsky, Volodymyr [Kobryns'kyj], b 16 October 1873 in Bilozirka, Zbarazh county, Galicia, d 17 October 1958 in Kolomyia, Ivano-Frankivske oblast. Civic and cultural figure; ethnographer. Under the Western Ukrainian National Republic he was active in Kolomyia's local government. He founded a branch of the Lviv **Silskyi* Hospodar society in the Hutsul region and was a member of the National Committee of the Ukrainian National Democratic Alliance. In 1926 Kobrynsky founded the Hutsulshchyna Museum in Kolomyia (today the Kolomyia Museum of Hutsul Folk Art), which he directed for many years. He collected Hutsul folklore and folk art and wrote a book on Hutsul brass handicrafts.

Kobrynsky, Yosafat [Kobryns'kyj, Josafat], b 15 September 1818 in Kolomyia, Galicia, d 14 March 1901 in Myshyn, Kolomyia county. Greek Catholic priest, pedagogue, and community leader. After studying theology in Vienna (1837–9), he served as a priest in the Kolomyia region and promoted popular education. He founded the first reading room and the People's Home in Kolomyia, donating to it a considerable sum of money. In 1842 he published a primer designed for home use and a handbook on speed-reading. He was first to introduce the **Hrazhdanka* alphabet and a progressive method for teaching literacy. In 1848 he took part in the Congress of Ruthenian Scholars. He contributed articles on pedagogy and economics to Slovo and Catholic newspapers.

Kobyletsky, Yurii (Ivan) [Kobylec'kyj, Jurij], b 11 August 1906 in Zvenyhorodka, Kiev gubernia. Literary scholar. A graduate of Kiev University (1934), he taught there from 1935 and at the Kiev Pedagogical Institute from 1958. He is the author of books about O. Kobylianska (1944), I. Franko (1946, 1951, 1956, 1964), A. Malysheko (1947), O. Korniiuchuk (1965), and the history of Ukrainian literature of the first (1965) and second (1966) halves of the 19th century, and numerous articles.

Olha Kobyljanska

Kobyljanska, Olha [Kobyljans'ka, Ol'ha], b 27 November 1863 in Gura Humorului, Bukovyna, d 21 March 1942 in Chernivtsi. A pioneering Ukrainian modernist writer. A self-educated and well-read woman, her first novellen were written in German, beginning in 1880. From 1891 she lived in Chernivtsi. Her travels and acquaintance with Lesia Ukrainka, N. Kobrynska, O. Makovei, I. Franko, V. Stefanyk, and M. Kotsiubynsky changed her cultural and political outlook, and she became involved in the Ukrainian women's movement in Bukovyna and began writing in Ukrainian. Many of her works – including the novels Liudyna (A Person, 1891) and Tsarivna (The Princess, 1895) – have as their protagonists cultured, emancipated women oppressed in a philistine, provincial society; semiautobiographical elements and the influence of the writings of George Sand and F. Nietzsche are evident. A neoromantic symbolist, she depicted the struggle between good and evil and the mystical force of nature (eg, the short story 'Bytva' [Battle]), predestination, magic, and the irrational in many of her stories of peasant life and in her most famous novels, Zemlia (Land, 1902) and V nedilii rano zillia kopala (On Sunday Morn She Gathered Herbs, 1909). Her works are known for their impressionistic, lyrical descriptions of nature and subtle psychological portrayals.

Kobylianska's works have been published in many editions and selections. The fullest collections were published in 1927–9 (9 vols) and 1962–3 (5 vols). In 1944 a literary-memorial museum dedicated to her was opened in Chernivtsi.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Kohut, L. (ed). Ol'ha Kobylianska'ka: Al'manakh u pam'iatku ii soroklitn'oi pys'mennyts'koi diial'nosty (1887–1927) (Chernivtsi 1928)
Ol'ha Kobylianska'ka: Statti i materialy (Chernivtsi 1958)
 Kushch, O. Ol'ha Kobylianska'ka: Bibliografichnyi pokazhchyk (Kiev 1960)
 Babyshkin, O. Ol'ha Kobylianska'ka (Lviv 1963)
Ol'ha Kobylianska'ka v krytytsi ta spohadakh (Kiev 1963)
 Tomashuk, N. Ol'ha Kobylianska'ka (Kiev 1969)
 Kopach, O. Movostyl' Ol'hy Kobylianska'koi (Toronto 1972)

R. Senkus

Kobylianska Museum (Muzei O.Yu. Kobylianskoi). Museum founded in 1944 in Chernivtsi to honor the writer O. *Kobylianska. The museum occupies a building where she resided from 1928 to 1942. The exhibits include editions of her works, photographs, documentary materials, and personal belongings. A second memorial museum dedicated to Kobylianska has been established in the village of Dymka, Chernivtsi oblast, where she resided for a long period of time.

Kobyliansky, Antin [Kobyljans'kyj], b 29 January 1837 in Pererisl, Nadvirna county, Galicia, d 8 February 1910 in Lviv. A civic figure, physician, and inventor. In 1861 in his article 'Slovo na Slovo do Redaktora Slova' (A Word on the Word to the Editor of Slovo) and brochure Holos na holos dlia Halychyny (A Voice on the Voice for Galicia, 1861) he protested against B. Didytsky's Russification of the Ukrainian language. Kobyliansky also urged Yu. *Fedkovich to write in Ukrainian instead of German.

Kobyliansky, Bronyslav [Kobyljans'kyj], b 1896. Linguist. A specialist in Hutsul dialects, he was a docent at the Lviv Pedagogical Institute. He published a general description of the Hutsul and Pokutian dialects in Ukrains'kyi diialektolohichnyi zbirnyk, no. 1 (1928), and then attempted to explain their origin in Dialekt i literaturna mova (Dialect and Literary Language, 1960). He also wrote etymological studies and popular articles.

Kobyliansky, Liutsii [Kobyljans'kyj, Ljucij], b 1855 in Zolotonosha, Poltava gubernia, d 15 March 1941 in Prague. A physician and cultural figure. During his medical studies in Kiev (1871–7) he sang in M. Lysenko's choir and belonged to the Kiev Hromada. Working as a gubernial medical inspector in Caucasia, he organized Sunday schools, a choir, and a Prosvita society in Baku. In 1917 he was elected deputy from the Ukrainian Party of Socialist Revolutionaries to the Central Rada. In 1918–19 he served as adviser to the Ukrainian consulates in Istanbul and Budapest. Immigrating to Czechoslovakia after the war, he worked in a sanatorium and belonged to the Ukrainian Physicians' Association in Czechoslovakia. Kobyliansky's publications include articles on music and medicine and a monograph on M. Lysenko (1930).

Volodymyr Kobyliansky

Lukian Kobylytsia

Kobyliansky, Volodymyr [Kobyljans'kyj], b 27 August 1895 in Iasi, Moldavia, d 10 September 1919 in Kiev. Symbolist poet, translator, and critic. His first poems appeared in 1913 in the Chernivtsi paper Nova Bukovyna while he was a Bukovynian village teacher. From 1913 he lived in Kiev and contributed to journals there. He translated into Ukrainian much of H. Heine's Buch der Lieder and individual works by F. Schiller. In the last months of his life he belonged to the writers' group *Muzahet. Collections of his works, Mii dar (My Gift, 1920) and Tvory (Works, 1930), were published after his death from typhus.

Kobyliansky, Yuliiian [Kobyljans'kyj, Julijan], b 26 December 1859 in Gurahumora, Bukovyna, d 11 November 1922 in Chernivtsi. Classical philologist and educator; brother of O. *Kobylianska. A graduate of Chernivtsi University (1883), he taught classical languages at the Chernivtsi Ukrainian Gymnasium. One of the first scholars to work on Latin-Ukrainian lexicography, he is the author of several high-school Latin textbooks, a Ukrainian-Latin dictionary (1907), and a Latin-Ukrainian dictionary (1912).

Kobylytsia, Lukian [Kobyl'ycja, Lukjan], b ca 1803 (1812 according to some sources) in Storonet-Putyliiv, Vyzhnytsia region, Bukovyna, d 24 October 1851 in Solca (Gura-Humorolui according to other sources), Bukovyna. Peasant revolutionary and political leader in the Hutsul region of Bukovyna. In the 1840s Kobylytsia led several popular rebellions against the landowners in the Hutsul (Vyzhnytsia, Putylyiv, and Caimpulung) region, for which he was twice imprisoned (1842–4, 1847). In 1848 he was elected to the Austrian Parliament. There he campaigned for the political autonomy of Bukovyna and its attachment to Galicia, and for the distribution of land to the peasants without compensation for the landlords. During the Revolutions of 1848–9, he struggled against Rumanian leaders in Bukovyna and organized 'Hutsul councils,' institutions of local administration. He traveled throughout the Hutsul region with groups of armed Hutsuls, presenting himself as the official envoy of the Austrian emperor and fomenting revolution against the local nobles. By the end of 1848, the uprising had embraced all of Bukovyna and spread to Galicia. According to some historians, Kobylitsia was even allied with the leader of the Hungarian revolution, L. Kossuth. In spring 1849 the uprising was finally quelled by the Austrian army and in April 1850 Kobylitsia was arrested in Zhabie. Released in 1851, he was not permitted to return to the Hutsul region, but forced to remain under police surveillance in Solca. Kobylitsia became a folk hero, immortalized in folk songs and legends and in a popular poem by O. Fedkovych.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Franko, I. 'Lukian Kobylitsia: epizod z istorii Hutsul'shchyny v pershii polovyni XIX st.,' ZNTSh, 49 (1902)
 Revakovich, T. 'Luk'ian Kobylitsia.' ZNTSh, 126-7 (1918)
 Balan, T. Luchian Cobilița (Chernivtsi 1926)
Seliants'kyi rukh na Bukovyni v 40-kh rokakh XIX st.: Zbirnyk dokumentiv (Kiev 1949)
 Shevchenko, F. Luk'ian Kobylitsia (Kiev 1958)
Narod pro Kobylitsiu (Kiev 1968)

A. Zhukovsky

Kobza

Kobza. An ancient string instrument of the lute family. Of eastern origin, it was known in Ukraine as early as the 11th century, but became popular only in the 16th century, when it was used to accompany the recitation of *dumas. Eventually, it was supplanted by the *bandura, which has a larger body, longer neck, and more strings. Today 'kobza' and 'bandura' are often used synonymously.

Kobzar (literally the 'kobza player' or 'minstrel'). Originally the title of the first collection of poems by T. *Shevchenko, consisting of eight poems, mainly Romantic ballads, published by P. Martos in St Petersburg in 1840 (the most recent offset facsimile in 1976). The title has, with time, been applied to Shevchenko's poetic works in general. It has acquired a meaning symbolic of the Ukrainian literary and national rebirth because of the national spirit of Shevchenko's poetry and of the fact that two other editions of his works incorporating the title 'Kobzar' but including newer works appeared during his lifetime: Chyhyrynskii Kobzar i Haidamaky (The Chyhyryn Kobzar and Haidamaky, St Petersburg, 1844) and Kobzar Tarasa Shevchenka (The Kobzar of Taras Shevchenko, St Petersburg, 1860; an offset facsimile appeared in 1981). Shevchenko's exile, when he was forbidden to write, and the strict censorship of his poetry made it impossible for a complete edition of his works to appear until after his death. Subsequently many editions of Kobzar were published, each of which included previously unpublished poems. The most notable are the Osnova (1861-2) and D. Kozhanchikov (1867) editions. The *Ems Ukase (1876), which prohibited publications in Ukrainian, brought about the first editions outside Ukraine - O. Rusov's (Prague, 1876) and the Shevchenko Scientific Society's (Lviv, 1893). However it was not until 1907 that a relatively complete edition appeared, in St Petersburg under the editorship of V. Domanytsky (2nd edn, 1908; 3rd edn, 1910).

Title page of the first edition of T. Shevchenko's Kobzar (1840)Title page of the 1860 Kobzar

Attempts at publishing a complete and definitive version resulted in the five-volume Kiev-Leipzig edition (1918-21); the first Soviet 'canonic' edition (edited by I. Aizenshtok and M. Plevako, 1925); the first academic edition (edited by S. Yefremov and M. Novytsky, vols 1-2, 1927; vol 3, 1929); and the first 'full' edition in 14 vols (vols 2-15), edited by P. Zaitsev and published by the Ukrainian Scientific Institute in Warsaw (1934-7, rev edn: in 14 vols published by M. Denysiuk Publishers, Chicago, 1959-61). In Soviet Ukraine there appeared a censored jubilee edition (edited by V. Zatonsky, A. Khvyliya, and Ye. Shabliovsky, 2 vols, 1935, 1937) and an equally 'selected' academic edition (edited by O. Kornichuk, P. Tychyna, M. Rylsky, et al, 5 vols, 1939). During the Second World War a jubilee edition under L. Biletsky's editorship had been prepared, but only one volume appeared, in 1942 in Prague; the remaining volumes were issued as a revised edition in Winnipeg (4 vols, 1952-4). A full but censored Soviet 10-volume academic edition was published under the editorship of O. Biletsky (1949-53). It was not until the six-volume collected works of Shevchenko were published in Kiev in 1964 that the first full, uncensored edition of Shevchenko's poetry appeared in Soviet Ukraine. Thus, censorship of Kobzar has taken various forms, from outright prohibition in Ukraine under tsarist Russia to selective cuts or the use of more suitable variants and tendentious explanatory notes under the Soviet regime.

Kobzar has been translated into all of the world's major languages. The most comprehensive English version appeared in Canada as The Poetical Works of Taras Shevchenko: The Kobzar (translated by C. Andrusyshen and W. Kirkconnell, Toronto 1964).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Bohats'kyi, P. 'Kobzar' T. Shevchenka za sto rokov: 1840–1940 (Lviv-Cracow 1942)
- Doroshenko, V. Zhenev's'ki vydannia Shevchenkovykh poezii (Lviv-Cracow 1942)
- Žukovsky, A. Catalogue des éditions concernant Taras Ševčenko dans les bibliothèques de Paris (Paris 1961)
- Bachyns'kyi, L. Shevchenkiiana v SShA i Kanadi v rr. 1960 i 1961 (Cleveland 1962)
- Vydannia tvoriv T. Shevchenka v S. Sh. A. Bibliografichni materialy do 1960 roku vključno (Cleveland 1962)
- Rudnyčyj, J.B. Shevchenkiiana Helvetica (Winnipeg 1962)
- Velinská, E; Zilynskyj, O. Taras Ševčenko v české kultuře. Bibliografie (Prague 1962)
- Hres'ko, M. T.H. Shevchenko frantsuz'koju movoiu 1847–1967. Bibliografichni pokazhčyk (Lviv 1967)
- T.H. Shevchenko italiis'koju, ispan's'koju, portuhal's'koju ta esperanto movamy. Bibliografichni pokazhčyk (Lviv 1968)
- Hres'ko, M.; et al. T.H. Shevchenko v nimets'kykh perekładakh ta krytytsi (1843–1917). Bibliografichni pokazhčyk (Lviv 1968)
- Shevchenkivs'kyi slovnyk*, vol 1 (Kiev 1976)

D.H. Struk

Kobzar brotherhoods. County organizations of *kobzars and *lirnyks that were widespread in the mid-19th century. Modeled on artisans' guilds, they protected their members' interests. Some ran kobza schools. Every brotherhood had its own secret traditions and regulations. Its members collectively chose as their center a church, for which they bought icons, candles, and oil. They met at the church on certain holy days to attend requiem services for deceased members and to settle urgent matters. In the spring they secretly gathered elsewhere (usually in the forests near Brovary outside Kiev) to elect their officers, to define the territory on which individual kobzars could operate, and to initiate new members according to a prescribed ritual. If necessary, the elected leader (pan otets) would call additional meetings. To become a member one had to have a physical handicap, to study kobza playing with a master (usually for at least two years) and obtain permission (vyzvilka) to perform independently, to know the kobzars' lebiiskyi jargon, and to pay dues regularly.

Only kobzars with good reputations were accepted into a brotherhood. A member who violated a brotherhood's moral code was tried by a brotherhood court. The severest punishment was ostracism. Lesser transgressors were whipped or fined. Civil judges in rural counties did not try kobzars, but handed them over to the brotherhood courts. A member who chose to marry received a dowry from the brotherhood's treasury and was thereafter addressed in the polite second person plural by other members. If members caught a kobzar performing who had not received a vyzvilka, they destroyed his bandura, and he was fined and even beaten. The brotherhoods propagated the idea that kobzars were not beggars but professional artists, and instilled a sense of pride among their members; eg, in asking or waiting for a reward, a member was forbidden to fall to his knees.

M. Hnatiukivsky

Kobzars (kobzari). Wandering folk bards who performed a large repertoire of epic-historical, religious, and folk songs while playing a *kobza or *bandura. Kobzars first emerged in Kievan Rus' and were popular by the 15th century. Some (eg, Churylo and Tarashko) performed at Polish royal courts. They lived at the Zaporozhian Sich and were esteemed by the Cossacks, whom they frequently accompanied on various campaigns against the Turks, Tatars, and Poles. The epic songs they performed (see *Duma) served to raise the morale of the Cossack army in times of war, and some (eg, P. Skriaha, V. Varchenko, and Mykhailo, 'Sokovy's son-in-law') were even beheaded by the Poles for performing dumas that incited popular revolts.

As the Hetman state declined, so did the fortunes of the kobzars, and they gradually joined the ranks of mendicants, playing and begging for alms at rural marketplaces. In the late 18th century the occupation of kobzar became the almost exclusive province of the blind and crippled, who organized *kobzar brotherhoods to protect their corporate interests. A few performed at the Russian courts of Peter I, Elizabeth I, and Catherine II (eg, H. Liubystok and O. Rozumovsky). In the 19th and 20th centuries, particularly from the 1870s, the kobzars, including the virtuosos O. *Veresai and H. *Honcharenko, were persecuted by the tsarist regime as the propagators of Ukrainophile sentiments and historical memory. (Kobzars are immortalized in the poetry and drawings of T. Shevchenko and he titled his poetic works **Kobzar*.) The few hundred remaining kobzars in Poltava, Kharkiv, and Chernihiv gubernias and their artistry aroused the interest of various ethnographers, composers, and painters, including M. Lysenko, O. Rusov, O. Slastion, Lesia Ukrainka, K. Kvitka, M. Sumtsov, V. Horlenko, V. Borzhkovsky, O. Borodai, F. Kolessa, and D. Revutsky. At the 12th Russian Archeological Congress in Kharkiv in 1902, the kobzars T. Parkhomenko, H. Honcharenko, M. Kravchenko, I. Kucherenko-Kuchuhura, P. Hashchenko, P. Drevchenko, and I. Netesa, accompanied by H. *Khotkevych, the 'first seeing kobzar' (he composed 69 works for the bandura) and the leading authority on kobzar artistry, performed to great acclaim, and the congress participants passed a resolution concerning the great value of the kobzars' art. Government attitudes toward the kobzars softened, and thereafter kobzar concerts became frequent events in many Ukrainian and Russian cities. Bandura schools were established, and in 1907 Khotkevych published the first history and manual of bandura playing; V. Shevchenko's and V. Ovchynnykov's manuals followed in 1914.

After the Revolution of 1905 the kobzars again flourished. From 1908 bandura playing was taught at the Lysenko Music and Drama School in Kiev. The kobzar artistry spread into the Kuban, where it had not existed before. The Kuban kobzars A. Chorny, V. Liashchenko, and D. Darnopykh became famous, and the bandura was introduced into the military orchestras of the Kuban Cossacks. During the 1917 Revolution and subsequent Ukrainian-Russian War, kobzars composed and performed songs promoting the Ukrainian national cause and smuggled political literature; many paid for this with their lives. From July 1918 to 1919 the first Ukrainian banduryst ensemble existed briefly in Kiev.

Under Soviet rule, the *State Banduryst Kapelle of the Ukrainian SSR was established in Kiev in 1927. The VUAN

Kobzar Hnat Honcharenko; woodcut by O. Danchenko (1961)

Ethnographic Commission and Cabinet of Musical Ethnography, particularly the members K. Kvitka, M. Hrinchenko, and K. Hrushevskya, conducted important studies of the kobzars in the 1920s. In 1929 H. Ėpik published the novel Zustrich (The Rendezvous) depicting the persecution of the kobzars. In the 1930s, with forced collectivization, the man-made famine of 1932–3, and the Stalinist suppression of Ukrainian culture, the kobzars were again repressed. Party directives to create a new socialist folklore and 'Soviet' kobzars resulted in the AN URSR Institute of Folklore-Sponsored First Republican Conference of Kobzars and Lirnyks in April 1939. Thirty-seven kobzars, including P. Huz, F. Kushneryk, Ye. Movchan, P. Nosach, O. Markevych, Ye. Adamtsevych, S. Avramenko, and V. Perepeliuk, were brought together to discuss 'the first examples of Soviet dumas and heroic songs and the task of creating a Soviet epos.' A number of such examples (eg, 'Duma about the Communist Party,' 'Duma about Lenin') were composed with the institute's workers and members of Ukraine's writers' and composers' unions and performed at the conference's closing concert. The 'creators' were immediately inducted into the writers' union, and a Section of Folk Arts was formed in the union to 'organize systematic creative and methodological assistance for kobzars and *lirnyks.' Yet, as composer D. Shostakovich testifies in his memoirs (Testimony, 1979), several hundred kobzars and lirnyks were brought to the congress from all parts of Ukraine and after the congress ended almost all of them were shot.

To hide this tragedy, the Institute of Folklore and the Kiev Philharmonic jointly set up a State Ethnographic Kobzar Ensemble in early 1941, consisting of Ye. Movchan, P. Nosach, P. Huz, O. Markevych, V. Perepeliuk, and I. Ivanchenko; M. Hrinchenko was appointed artistic director. During its brief existence, the ensemble performed throughout Ukraine and in Moscow until the German invasion of the Soviet Union in June 1941.

During the Second World War, kobzars fought in the Red Army and various Soviet partisan units (eg, O. Churyna, S. Vlasko, D. Vovk, A. Bilotsky) and composed military-patriot songs. Since the war, many professional *bandurysts (eg, F. Zharko, V. Perepeliuk, and A. Hryshyn) have supplemented the folk kobzars. Bandura playing has been widely taught, and many amateur and professional ensembles have been created. In 1969 a large kobzar concert took place in Kiev and the Alliance of Folk Bards-Kobzars was formed under the auspices of the Music Society of the Ukrainian SSR. In 1974 the alliance was transformed into a Section of Kobzars and Bandurysts, with professional and amateur members. In 1975 an artistic council of bandurysts was formed from among its members.

Kobzar artistry has been cultivated among Ukrainians in the West, thanks to the efforts of V. Yemets, J. and H. *Kytasty, P. Honcharenko, V. Kachurak, Z. Shtokalko, V. Levytsky, V. Lutsiv, V. Mishalov, and other masters. Various banduryst ensembles exist in many countries in Europe and North America. In New York, Detroit, Chicago, and Toronto, there are bandura schools. Since 1982 the school in New York has published the journal Bandura. In Poland, kobzar artistry has successfully been propagated among Ukrainians through the efforts of A. Khraniuk. In Slovakia, there has been a group of female bandurysts within the Duklia Ukrainian Folk Ensemble in Prešov.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Speranskii, M. Iuzhnorusskaia pesnia i sovremennye ee nositeli (po povodu bandurista T.M. Parkhomenko) (Kiev 1904)
 Yemets', V. Kobza ta kobzari (Berlin 1922)
 Kyrdan, B.; Omel'chenko, A. Narodni spivotsi-muzykanty na Ukraïni (Kiev 1980)
 Lavrov, F. Kobzari: Narysy z istorii kobzarstva Ukraïny (Kiev 1980)
 M. Hnatiukivsky

Kobzei, Toma [Kobzej], b 30 June 1895 in Kniazhe, Sniatyn county, Galicia, d 17 August 1972 in Winnipeg.

Toma Kobzei

Community leader and writer. Immigrating to Canada in 1911, Kobzei joined the Ukrainian Social Democratic Party of Canada. During the 1920s he was secretary-general of the Ukrainian Labour-Farmer Temple Association and a member of the Politburo of the Communist Party of Canada. In 1935 he and a group of Ukrainians left the Communist movement, protesting against the man-made famine and terror in Soviet Ukraine. He helped found the League of Ukrainian Organizations (renamed the Ukrainian Workers' League in 1940), and was a contributing editor of its papers Pravda (1936–8) and Vpered (1938–40). A founding member of the Ukrainian Canadian Committee, he sat on its central executive and headed its Workers' Commission. Kobzei wrote a monograph on V. Stefanyk, Velykyi riz'bar ukrains'kykh selians'kykh dush (The Great Sculptor of Ukrainian Peasant Souls, 1966), and his memoirs Na ternystrykh ta khreshchatykh dorohakh (On the Thorny Way and Crossroads, 2 vols, 1972–3).

Koch, Erich, b 19 June 1896 in Prussia, d 12 November 1986 in Barczewo, Poland. German Nazi leader and war criminal. Koch joined the Nazi movement in the early 1920s and from 1933 served as party leader and Gauleiter (governor) of East Prussia. In 1941 he was appointed Reich commissioner of the Reichskommissariat Ukraine. Until the end of 1944 he ruled most of German-occupied Ukraine with an iron fist, and then served again as Gauleiter in East Prussia (1944–5). Koch was responsible for the death of 4 million people in Ukraine by starvation or execution, including almost the entire Ukrainian Jewish population. Several villages in Ukraine were destroyed in reprisals against Ukrainian nationalist and Soviet guerrilla activities. Under his rule, another 2.5 million Ukrainians were deported to Germany to work as slave laborers. Koch viewed Ukrainians as an inferior race to be used solely as a source of manpower in agriculture and industry for the German war effort.

After Germany's capitulation, Koch lived incognito in the British occupation zone of Germany until 1949, when he was discovered and extradited to Poland for trial. In 1959 he was convicted for war crimes he committed as Gauleiter of East Prussia and sentenced to death, but the sentence was never carried out, allegedly because of his poor health. Koch was allowed to spend the rest of his life in prison in relatively comfortable surroundings. Inexplicably, the Soviet authorities never requested his extradition to stand trial for the heinous crimes he committed as Reich commissioner of Ukraine, and they never openly pressured the Polish government to carry out his death sentence.

V. Markus

Koch, Hans, b 7 July 1894 in Lviv, d 9 April 1959 in Munich. German historian; full member of the Shevchenko Scientific Society from 1949. A graduate of the University of Vienna (PhD 1924), he was a professor of East European history at Königsberg, Breslau, Vienna, and Munich universities and director of the East European institutes in Breslau (1937–40) and Munich (from 1952). Koch took part in the Ukrainian independence struggle of 1918–20 as a captain in the Ukrainian Galician Army. During the Second World War he was an officer in the German army involved in Ukrainian affairs; in

Hans Koch

Ivan Kocherha

1939–40, as a member of the German repatriation commission, he helped many Ukrainians escape the Soviet occupation of Western Ukraine. In 1952–4 he was a founder and chairman of the Herder German-Ukrainian Society. A specialist on the history of the church in Ukraine, he published articles on the Ukrainian Autocephalous Orthodox church (1928), the early relationship between Byzantium, Ochrid, and the church in Kiev (1938), and the theory of 'Moscow as the Third Rome' (1953), and the monograph Ukraine und Protestantismus (1954). Koch also published German translations of Ukrainian literature (1955). His memoirs focusing on the struggle for Ukrainian independence, Dohovor z Denikinom (The Agreement with Denikin), were published in 1931. His biography and complete bibliography are found in Jahrbücher für Geschichte Osteuropas, 7 (1959), no. 2.

A. Zhukovsky

Kochan, Volodymyr. See Kokhan, Volodymyr.

Kocherha, Ivan [Kočerha], b 6 October 1881 in Nosivka, Chernihiv gubernia, d 29 December 1952 in Kiev. Playwright and theater critic. He studied law at Kiev University and then lived in Chernihiv (1903–14), Zhytomyr (1914–34), and Kiev (1934–41, 1945–52). His first theater reviews appeared in 1904 in Chernigovskie gubernskie vedomosti. His first play, Pesnia v bokale (Song in a Wineglass, 1910), was first staged in 1926, in his own Ukrainian translation. Because of his unique style and experimental form, his plays were ignored until his Maistry chasu (Masters of Time) won third prize in an All-Union competition in 1933. Kocherha wrote over 30 comedies, satires, and historical plays, including Feia hirkoho myhdaliu (The Fairy of the Bitter Almond, 1926), Almazne zhorno (The Diamond Millstone, 1927), Marko v pekli (Marko in Hell, 1928), Svichchynne vesillia (Svichka's Wedding, 1930), Pidesh-ne verneshsia (If You Go You Won't Return, 1935), and Yaroslav Mudryi (Yaroslav the Wise, 1944). The most complete edition of his works (25 plays) appeared in three volumes in 1956. Because of the unique style, form, and philosophical symbolism of his plays, official Soviet critics have tended to undervalue them vis-à-vis the plays of someone like the less talented but more politically engaged O. Korniihuk. Monographs on his works have been written by Ye. Starynkevych (1947), N. Andrianova (1963), and N. Kuziakina (1968).

I. Koshelivets

Kochevsky, Viktor [Kočevs'kyj], b 15 November 1923 in Rizunenkove, Valky county, Kharkiv gubernia. Poet. A graduate of Kiev University (1956). First published in 1948, he has authored several collections of poetry, including Hospodari vesny (Masters of Spring, 1951), Zemliaky (Countrymen, 1957), Kolosky i suzir'ia (Grain Ears and Constellations, 1964), Mii Dyvokrai (My Wonderland, 1973), and Na krutoskhylyakh lit (On the Steep Slopes of Time, 1973). He has also translated a number of classics of Armenian literature into Ukrainian.

Kochubei [Kočubej]. A family of Cossack officers descended from the Tatar Kuchukbei, who became a Christian and took the name Andrii. Andrii's grandson, Vasyl *Kochubei, was the general chancellor (1687–99) and general judge (1699–1708) under Hetman I. Mazepa. Vasyl's son, also Vasyl (ca 1680–1743), was the colonel of Poltava regiment from 1729 to 1743. His grandson, Semen (1725–79), was the colonel of Nizhen regiment (1746–51), the last general quartermaster (1756–79) and the actual head of the government under Hetman K. Rozumovsky, and, from 1764, a member of the *Little Russian Collegium. Semen's grandson, also named Semen (ca 1778–1835), was the marshal of the nobility in Poltava gubernia and a member of the Love of Truth masonic lodge in Poltava. A relative, Viktor Kochubei (1768–1834), became a Russian count in 1799 and a prince in 1831 and was a prominent Russian statesman and diplomat. He was appointed imperial vice-chancellor in 1798 and senator in 1801, and served as the minister of internal affairs (1802–12, 1819–25) and chairman of the State Council and the Committee of Ministers (1827–34). Viktor's son, Vasili, was a famous numismatist. The noble family owned estates in Poltava, Chernihiv, and St Petersburg gubernias.

Kochubei, Motria [Kočubej, Motrja], b ca 1688, d ? The daughter of General Judge V. *Kochubei. Her godfather, Hetman I. *Mazepa, wanted to marry her in 1704 but failed to win her parents' consent. Nevertheless, Motria went to live with Mazepa. In 1707 she married General Judge V. Chuikevych. After Mazepa's defeat in 1708, she and her husband were exiled to Siberia. Upon returning to Ukraine, she entered a monastery. Mazepa's interesting, poetic letters to her have been preserved, and their love affair is portrayed in B. Lepky's trilogy Mazepa, A. Pushkin's poem Poltava, P. Tchaikovsky's opera Mazepa, and I. Repin's painting Motrona Kochubei.

Kochubei, Vasyl [Kočubej, Vasyl'], b ca 1640, d 25 July 1708. Statesman. Under Hetman P. Doroshenko he carried out diplomatic assignments such as the mission to Adrianople in 1675. Under Hetman I. Samoilovych he was the supervisor of the general chancellery and in 1685 his envoy in Moscow. He helped Hetman I. *Mazepa to come to power. Under Mazepa he was general chancellor (1687–99) and general judge (1699–1708), and on occasion he served as acting hetman. Kochubei led the Poltava Cossack officers' opposition to Ukraine's participation in the anti-Turkish coalition at the end of the 17th century, which culminated in P. *Petryk's rebellion against Mazepa and Peter I. This affected his hitherto friendly relations with Mazepa. Mazepa's love affair with Kochubei's daughter, Motria, further strained relations between the two men in 1704. Upon learning of Mazepa's secret negotiations with King Stanislaus I Leszczyński of Poland,

Vasyl Kochubei

Kochubei and the colonel of Poltava, I. *Iskra, denounced Mazepa's political plans to Peter, possibly in the hope of winning the hetman's office. Peter initiated an investigation, which found nothing to prove Kochubei's accusations. Trusting Mazepa, Peter had Kochubei and Iskra arrested and taken to Vitebsk where, under torture, they were forced to recant. Peter had them returned to Ukraine and beheaded. They were buried at the Kievan Cave Monastery.

O. Ohloblyn

Kochubinsky, Aleksandr [Kočubinskij], b 3 November 1845 in Kishinev, d 28 May 1907 in Odessa. Russian Slavist. A graduate of Warsaw and Kiev universities, in 1871 he was appointed docent at Odessa (New Russia) University. His works, written in a pre-Neogrammarian spirit, dealt with the history of eastern Slavic languages and with toponymy (the historical boundaries of Baltic and Slavic tribes in the Dnieper Basin and the Slavic colonization of Transylvania). His theory of the development of Ukrainian was set forth in his doctoral dissertation, K voprosu o vzaimnykh otnosheniakh slavianskikh narechii (On the Question of Mutual Relations among Slavic Dialects, 1877), and in his extensive review of P. Zhytetsky's Ocherk literaturnoi istorii malorusskogo narechiiia v xvii v. (Outline of the Literary History of the Little Russian Dialect in the 17th century, 1889) in Otchet o ... prisuzhdenii nagrad grafa Uvarova, 32 (1892). In his Otchet o zaniatiiakh ... (Report on the Activities ..., 1876) he summarized his studies on Galician dialects and described several manuscript collections in Lviv. A bibliography of his publications can be found in Sbornik v pamiat' A.A. Kochubinskogo (A Collection in Memory of A.A. Kochubinsky, 1909).

Kochur, Hryhorii [Kočur, Hryhorij], b 17 November 1908 in Feskivka, Chernihiv gubernia. Pedagogue and translator. A graduate of Kiev University (1932), he taught foreign languages at the Tyraspil and Vinnytsia pedagogical institutes, translated ancient Greek, Czech, Slovak, Polish, and French literature and W. Shakespeare's Hamlet (1964) into Ukrainian, and wrote literary criticism. In 1968 he signed an open letter from 139 Ukrainians protesting the arrests and secret trials of Ukrainian intellectuals in 1965–7. Subsequently he was persecuted by the KGB. In 1973 he was expelled from the Writers' Union for offering to serve I. *Dziuba's sentence.

Kočura (aka Kucura). Village (1986 pop over 5,000) in the *Bačka region, Yugoslavia. With 75 percent of its inhabitants being Rusyn-Ukrainians, it is after Ruski Krstur the second largest Rusyn-Ukrainian cultural and educational center in Bačka. Rusyn-Ukrainians from northern Hungary began to settle here in 1762. At the beginning of the 19th century a large Greek Catholic church and a primary school were built in Kočura. The local dialect was the language of instruction in the school. In 1933 the Cultural-National Union of Yugoslav Rusyns, a Rusophile organization, was founded in the village. It published the newspaper Zoria (1934-7).

Kodak, Yurii (pseud of Panasenko), b 10 March 1916 in Myrhorod, Poltava gubernia. Architect. A graduate of the Kiev State Art Institute (1940), he established his own architectural firm in Germany in 1946 and then in Canada in 1949. He designed and built a number of Ukrainian Orthodox churches such as the Church of the Descent of the Holy Ghost in Regina, Saskatchewan, St Andrew's Memorial Church in South Bound Brook, New Jersey, and St Demetrius's Church in Long Branch, Ontario. He also designed the iconostases of Orthodox churches in Grimsby (Ontario), Toronto, Boston, Hamilton, Winnipeg, and Montreal. In his buildings he blends the traditional forms of Ukrainian architecture, especially the baroque, with modern forms and techniques.

Kodak (Kudak). A fortress located on the right bank of the Dnieper River near the Kodak rapids, 10 km south of present-day Dnipropetrovske. It was completed in July 1635 by the Polish government on the design of G. de Beauplan to secure the southern frontier of the Commonwealth and the route to the Don River and the Black Sea, and to prevent escaping serfs from joining the Cossacks in Zaporizhia. Razed in August 1635 by Cossacks under Hetman I. Sulyma, it was rebuilt in 1639 to control the growing Cossack unrest. The garrison of some 600 soldiers included many German mercenaries. In 1648, after a four-month siege, the fortress was seized by a Cossack army commanded by Col M. Nesterenko. In the latter half of the 17th century, Kodak had a garrison of Cossacks. River pilots who guided boats through the *Dnieper rapids also lived there. Under the terms of the 1711 Prut Treaty between Russia and the Ottoman Empire, the fortress was destroyed.

KoDUS. See Ukrainian Students' Aid Commission.

Kodyma. v-10. Town smt (1979 pop 10,900) in southeastern Podilia and a raion center in Odessa oblast. It was founded in 1754. In 1919 the UNR Army, Bolshevik forces, and A. Denikin's Volunteer Army fought each other there. From 1930 to 1940 it was a raion center in the Moldavian ASSR.

Kodyma River. A right-bank tributary of the Boh River, 149 km in length, flowing through the Podolian Upland and the Black Sea Lowland and draining a basin of 2,470 sq km. From the 16th to the 18th centuries the Kodyma marked the border between the Lithuanian-Polish state and Turkey; later it separated Podilia and Kherson gubernias. In 1693 Ukrainian-Cossack forces, consisting of Right-Bank regiments led by S. Palii and Left-Bank regiments, crushed an invading Tatar army there. In 1738 a decisive battle between Russian-Ukrainian and Turkish-Tatar forces took place there.

Kohl, Johann Georg, b 28 April 1808 in Bremen, d 28 October 1878 in Bremen. German geographer and traveler, who visited Ukraine in 1838. His Reisen in Südrussland (2 vols, 1841) and Reisen im Innern von Russland und Polen (pts 2-3, 1841) provide valuable descriptions of Ukraine and its people in the first half of the 19th century.

Kohuska, Natalia [Kohus'ka, Natalja] (née Levenets), b September 1905 in Lozy, Kremianets county, Volhynia gubernia. Journalist. A member of the Ukrainian Greek Orthodox church and president of the Ukrainian Women's Association of Canada (СУК) (1942-8), she has edited a number of jubilee books on СУК and the Canadian Ukrainian Youth Association. She has written some fictional works and a literary study, Vydatni postati ukraïns'koi literatury (Selected Luminaries of Ukrainian Literature, 1984). Since 1960 she has edited Promin', a monthly magazine published by СУК.

Lev Kohut

Osyp Kohut

Kohut, Lev, b 7 February 1878 in Monastyrська, Bukovyna, d 26 October 1947 in Graz, Austria. Lawyer; political and co-operative leader; journalist and publisher. In 1902-3 he edited publications of the Revolutionary Ukrainian party in Chernivtsi: the monthlies Haslo and Selianyn, and various brochures. In 1903 he became the first director of the Selianska Kasa association of Ukrainian Raiffeisen co-operatives for farmers in Bukovyna, which he had founded with S. Smal-Stotsky. At the same time he edited a number of books in its book series. A founding member of the Ukrainian People's Organization of Bukovyna (1922-7), he edited its newspaper Ridnyi kraj (1926-30). Then he served as vice-president of the Ukrainian National party (1927-38) and editor of the daily Chas (1932-40). Sentenced to death by the Soviets in 1940, he was released eventually and emigrated to Austria, where he lectured at the Slavic Institute of Graz University. Kohut wrote numerous articles on economic and cultural topics and planned a four-volume study, Ukraina i moskovs'kyi imperiializm (Ukraine and Muscovite Imperialism), of which he published only the first volume in 1916.

Kohut, Osyp, b 2 February 1891 in Buchach, Galicia, d ca 15 October 1941 in a Soviet labor camp. Lawyer; political and civic leader. As a young man, he was an organizer of radical students. Later he helped organize the Ukrainian Sich Riflemen. In the 1920s he practiced law in Bohorodchany, Stanyslaviv county, and sat on the supreme executive council of the Ukrainian Social Radical party (USRP). From 1928 to 1930 he was a USRP deputy to the Polish Sejm. He was imprisoned by the Polish authorities during the *Pacification campaign in 1930. In the mid-1930s Kohut broke with the USRP and published an antiradical newspaper, Bohorodchans'kyi tsip. In 1939, when Galicia became part of the USSR, he was imprisoned in a labor camp by the Soviets.

Kohutiak, Ivan [Kohutjak], b 4 April 1893 in Knihynyn, Stanyslaviv county, Galicia, d 29 November 1968 in Ivano-Frankivske. Stage producer and actor. He was director of the Ukrainian Touring Drama Theater of Stanyslaviv (est 1920), which in the interwar period toured Galicia and Volhynia presenting mostly populist-realist plays. In 1939–44 he was director of the resident theater in Kolomyia, which had a varied musical and dramatic repertoire.

Kohyl'nyk River [Kohyl'nyk] (also known as the Kunduk River). A river flowing for 243 km through the Besarabian Upland and the Black Sea Lowland and draining a basin of 3,910 sq km. It empties into Sasyk Lake.

Koialovich, Mikhail [Kojalovič, Mixail], b 2 October 1828 in Kuznitsa, Sokolka county, Hrodna gubernia, d 4 September 1891 in St Petersburg. Russian historian. He was a graduate, then professor (from 1862), of the St Petersburg Theological Academy. Koialovich's works, mainly devoted to the history of the Ukrainian-Belorusian church, were written from the viewpoint of Russian imperialism and Slavophilism. His works include Litovskaia Tserkovnaia Uniiia (The Lithuanian Church Union, 2 vols, 1859, 1862), 'Istoriia Basilianskogo ordena' (The History of the Basilian Order, Khristianskoe Chtenie, 1864), his PhD dissertation Istoriia vossoedineniia zapadnorusskikh Uniatov starykh vremen (The History of the Reunification of the Western Russian Uniates of Ancient Times, 1873), and Istoriia russkogo samosoznaniia po istoricheskim pamiatnikam i nauchnym sochineniiam (The History of Russian Consciousness on the Basis of Historical Sources and Scholarly Studies, 1884). His essays on the history of Right-Bank Ukraine and on the church brotherhoods there appeared in the Slavophile journal Den (1862–4) and elsewhere. Koialovich also compiled and edited Dokumenty, obiasniatushchie istoriiu Zapadnoi Rossii i eia otnosheniia k Vostochnoi Rossii i k Pol'she (Documents Explaining the History of Western Russia and Its Relationship to Eastern Russia and Poland, 1865) and Dnevnik Liublinskogo seima 1569 g. (The Minutes of the Lublin Sejm of 1569, 1869).

A. Zhukovsky

Kokel, Oleksa [Kokel'], b 13 March 1880 in the Chuvash region, Russia, d 4 February 1956 in Kharkiv. Painter. A graduate of the St Petersburg Academy of Arts (1912), he settled in Kharkiv in 1916 and lectured at the Kharkiv Art School (later the Kharkiv Art Institute). He was a founding member of the Association of Artists of Red Ukraine. Kokel's style evolved from an impressionistic to a realist one. His works include landscapes such as Izium: A View of Kremianets Hill (1936), still lifes, portraits, and depictions of Soviet life such as The Collective-Farm Market (1930).

Kokhan, Hryhorii [Koxan, Hryhorij], b 23 June 1931 in Bortkiv, Zolochiv county, Galicia. Filmmaker. A graduate of the Lviv Polygraphic Institute (1955) and the All-Union Institute of Cinematography (1964) in Moscow, he worked at the Kiev Studio of Popular Science Films (1964–9) and then at the Kiev Artistic Film Studio. He directed such films as Khlib i sil' (Bread and Salt, 1970), Narodzheni revoliutsiieiu (Born of the Revolution, 1973–7), and Iaroslav Mudryi (Yaroslav the Wise, 1981).

Volodymyr Kokhan

Kokhan, Volodymyr [Koxan] (Kochan), b 4 December 1898 in Tudorkovychi, Sokal county, Galicia, d 13 June 1966 in Winnipeg. Politician and community leader. During the First World War he served in the Austrian and the Ukrainian Galician armies. After the war he was director of the Ukrainian Bank in Sokal and an active organizer of the Ukrainian co-operative movement in Galicia. A member of the *Ukrainian National Democratic Alliance (UNDO), in 1928 he was elected to the Polish Sejm. His political speeches led to his arrest and imprisonment. In 1930 he was re-elected but resigned from the Sejm and the UNDO in protest against the new policy of 'normalization' of Ukrainian-Polish relations. With other UNDO dissidents he participated in founding the *Front of National Unity and in 1936 was elected to its central executive. During the Second World War Kokhan was active in the co-operative movement. After the war he served as general secretary of the Ukrainian Coordinating Committee in Bavaria and edited the journal Na chuzhyni. Immigrating to Canada in 1948, he served as executive director of the *Ukrainian Canadian Committee (1948–66) and director of the Ukrainian Canadian Relief Fund as well as the Ukrainian Canadian Foundation of Taras Shevchenko. He was one of the founders of the World Congress of Free Ukrainians.

Kokhanenko, Yevhen [Koxanenko, Jevhen] (real name: Kokhan), b 10 February 1886 in Vyniatyntsi, Zalishchyky county, Galicia, d 16 October 1955 in Poltava. Stage director and character actor. From 1905 to 1918 he worked, intermittently, with the Ruska Besida theater in Lviv (1905–18), then with the Sadovsky Theater (1919) and, finally, with the Kiev Ukrainian Drama Theater (1922–48). For the latter in 1922 he directed J. Gordin's Got, Mensch und Teivel, Molière's Tartuffe, Lesia Ukrainka's Lisova pisnia (The Forest Song), and H. Sudermann's Johannisfeuer. Later he directed C. Goldoni's La Locandiera and Ya. Mamontov's Kniazhna Viktoriia (Princess Victoria). His acting repertoire included Khlopov in N. Gogol's Revizor (The Inspector General), Antonio in P. Beaumarchais's Le Mariage de Figaro, Piven in I. Mykytenko's Dyktatura (Dictatorship), Lundyshhev in I. Kocerha's Maistry chasu (The Masters of Time), and Antonio in W. Shakespeare's Much Ado about Nothing.

Kokhanovska, Avhusta [Koxanovs'ka], b 6 July 1863 in Cimpulung, Rumania, d 7 December 1927 in Toruń, Poland. Painter. A graduate of the Vienna Academy of Arts (1899), she lived in Chernivtsi, where she became friends with O. *Kobylianska. Many of her works deal with the everyday life of the Hutsuls: eg, Hutsuls Returning from the Market (1906), The Blessing of Paskas in the Hutsul Region (1907), The Old Hutsul (1910), and Easter (1911). She was also a portraitist (eg, a self-portrait [1896] and a portrait of O. Kobylianska [1926]) and a book illustrator (eg, illustrations to O. Kobylianska's stories [1901] and to I. Franko's Petrii i Dovbushchuky [1913]). She wrote some articles on peasant life in Bukovyna.

Kokhanovych, Hryhorii Onufrii [Koxanovyč, Hryhorij Onufrij], b before 1750 in Belorussia, d 1814 in Zhydychyn, Lutske county, Volhynia gubernia. Uniate Catholic metropolitan. He probably studied theology in Vilnius before being ordained and posted to Polatsk eparchy, where he soon became the delegate of Kievan metropolitan I. Lisovsky. In 1807 he was appointed bishop of Lutske. Before his death Metropolitan Lisovsky named Kokhanovych as his successor, and he was granted the title 'metropolitan of the Uniate churches in Russia' by Tsar Alexander I in 1809. However, because of the Napoleonic wars and the transfer of Pope Pius VII to France, Kokhanovych was unable to correspond with the pope and his nomination as Kievan metropolitan was not officially recognized by the Vatican. Throughout his tenure as metropolitan he waged a campaign to limit the powers of the Basilian monastic order and to stop the acceptance of Roman Catholic nobles into the order.

Kokhovsky, Vsevolod [Koxovs'kyj] (pseud: Danylo Medovyk, Pohonets), b 14 March 1835 in Starodubivka, Slaviansoserbsk county, Katerynoslav gubernia, d 14 May 1891 in St Petersburg. Writer and pedagogue. A graduate of St Petersburg Military Academy, he founded and headed a cadet pedagogical museum in St Petersburg. An early organizer of popular reading rooms, he wrote a number of articles on education. His earliest literary works, consisting of stories and sketches, appeared in the journal Osnova. Narodoliubets' (Lover of the People, 1870), a novel, is his most notable literary work.

Kokorudz, Illia, b 1857 in Yavoriv, Galicia, d 1933. Educator, philologist, and specialist in Ukrainian language and literature. Kokorudz was the director of the *Academic Gymnasium of Lviv (1911–27), where he taught from 1896. He was also head of the Ridna Shkola society and one of its benefactors. During the First World War he organized courses for Ukrainian students in Vienna, and after the war he headed the Ukrainian Besida Theater. He wrote several articles on Classical culture, pedagogy, and the history of Ukrainian literature (in particular, on T. Shevchenko, M. Shashkevych, O. Ohonovsky, and Old-Ukrainian legal texts).

Illia Kokorudz

Kolas, Yakub (pseud of Kanstants Mitskevich), b 3 November 1882 on Akinchytys khutir in Minsk county, Belorussia, d 13 August 1956 in Minsk. Belorussian poet, writer, playwright, and cultural figure; one of the founders of modern Belorussian language and literature. His prerevolutionary writings are imbued with the ideas of Belorussia's social and national liberation and national renaissance. From the 1930s on he wrote in the officially approved Soviet style. His poetry appeared in several collections. A popularizer of Ukrainian literature, he wrote T. Shevchenko i bilorus'ka literatura (T. Shevchenko and Belorussian Literature, 1939). Kolas's works have been popular among Ukrainian readers; Ukrainian translations include Vybrani tvory (Selected Works, 1951) and Na rozstaniakh (At Partings, 1970).

Kolasky, John [Koljaska, Ivan], b 5 October 1915 in Cobalt, Ontario. Educator and author. Educated at the universities of Saskatchewan, Toronto (MA 1950), and Manitoba, he taught high school and was active in the Association of United Ukrainian Canadians (AUUC) and the Communist Party of Canada (CPC). In 1963–5 he attended the Higher Party School of the Central Committee of the Communist Party of Ukraine in Kiev, where he observed the Russification of Ukrainian institutions. For unmasking Soviet nationality policy in his Education in Soviet Ukraine (1968), he was expelled from the AUUC and the CPC. He also wrote Two Years in Soviet Ukraine (1970) and The Shattered Illusion (1979), and translated V. Moroz's Report from the Beria Reserve (1974).

Kolberg, Oskar, b 22 February 1814 in Przysucha, Poland, d 3 June 1890 in Cracow. Prominent Polish ethnographer; folk musicologist and minor composer. For 50 years (until 1885) he conducted fieldwork as an independent scholar and as a member of the Anthropological Commission of the Polish Academy of Sciences throughout Poland, Western Ukraine, Belorussia, and Lithuania and amassed a huge amount of ethnographic data on these regions. Much of it was published as Lud: Jego zwyczajy, sposób życia, mowa, podania, przysłowia, obrzędy, gusła, zabawy, pieśni, muzyka i tańce (The Folk: Its Customs, Way of Life, Language, Legends, Proverbs, Rituals, Magic, Games, Songs, Music, and Dances, 23 vols, 1867–90) and Obrazy etnograficzne (Ethnographic Images, 10 vols, 1882–90); of the latter, five volumes were devoted to regions of Ukraine. When Kolberg died, more than half of his research remained in manuscript and unedited form.

In 1961 the Polish Folklore Society and Academy of Sciences began publishing Kolberg's complete works, including previously published volumes and all unedited manuscripts, notes, and correspondence. By 1986, 67 volumes had appeared. The volumes on Ukrainian regions are Pokucie (Pokutia, vols 29–32, 1962–3), Chełmskie (The Kholm Region, vols 33–4, 1964), Przemyskie (The Peremyshl Region, vol 35, 1964), Wołyń (Volhynia, vol 36, 1964), and the previously unpublished Sanockie-Krośnieńskie (The Sianik-Krosno Region, vols 49–51, 1972), Białoruś-Polesie (Belorussia-Polisla, vol 52, 1968), Ruś Karpacka (Carpathian Ruthenia, vols 54–5, 1970–1, on the Hutsul region), and Ruś Czerwona (Red Ruthenia, vols 56–7 [3 bks], 1976–9, on central Ukrainian Galicia).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Górski, R. Oskar Kolberg: Zarys życia i działalności (Warsaw 1974)

Bolotarovich, Z. Ukraina v doslidzhenniakh pol's'kykh etnografiv XIX st. (Kiev 1976)

Millerowa, E.; Skrukwa, A. 'Oskar Kolberg (1814–1890),' in Dzieje folklorystyki Polskiej 1864–1918, ed H. Kapelusz and J. Krzyżanowski (Warsaw 1982)

M. Hnatiukivsky

Kolchak, Aleksandr [Kolčak], b 4 November 1873 in St Petersburg, d 7 February 1920 in Irkutsk. Russian admiral and political leader. In 1916–17 Kolchak commanded the Black Sea Fleet. With British backing he overthrew the Omsk Directorate and in November 1918 installed himself as dictator and supreme ruler of the White forces in Siberia. His goal was to restore the Russian Empire. When the Allies recognized him in 1919 as the chief anti-Bolshevik leader in Russia, the action provoked protests from the Ukrainian and other national governments. The ineptness and brutality of Kolchak's regime alienated the population, and by the end of 1919 he was pushed out of western Siberia by the Red Army. The Czechoslovak Legion turned Kolchak over to the Bolsheviks, who executed him.

Kolchynsky, Oleksander [Kol'čyns'kyj], b 20 February 1955 in Kiev. Wrestler. A graduate of the Kiev Institute of Physical Culture (1978), Kolchynsky was the gold medalist in Greco-Roman wrestling at the 1976 and 1980 Olympic Games. He was World champion in 1978 and Ukrainian and USSR champion several times between 1974 and 1980.

Kolenska, Liubov [Kolens'ka, Ljubov], b 17 April 1923 in Stanyslaviv (now Ivano-Frankivske), Galicia. Writer. A graduate of the Faculty of Philosophy, Innsbruck University (1949), she has written three collections of short stories since immigrating to the United States in 1949: Samotnist' (Solitude, 1966), Pavliv triiumf (Pavlo's Triumph, 1971), and Dzerkala (Mirrors, 1981). Her works, which convey fragmentary impressions and moods, are fine examples of the neo-impressionistic style. Since 1971 she has been a member of the editorial staff of the newspaper Svoboda.

Kolesar, Julian, b 15 July 1927 in Djurdjevo, Bačka, Yugoslavia. Artist. A graduate of the Novi Sad Art School (1953), he immigrated to the United States in 1968 and later moved to Montreal. Besides painting, Kolesar designed advertisements for RCA, Wanamaker's, and the Philadelphia Opera. In 1970 he had his first one-man show in Philadelphia and another at the Ukrainian Institute of America in New York. His surrealistic paintings, such as Girl-Like White Peacocks, Firebird, Poet and Moon, Imaginary Figures, Man Crucified, and Blooming Reverie, combine motifs drawn from folk art with expressionistic, deformed forms.

Julian Kolesar: On the Wings of Poetry

Kolesnychenko, Trokhym [Kolesnyčenko, Troxym], b 1876 in Yelysavethrad, Kherson gubernia, d 1941 in Kiev. Stage actor, director, producer, and playwright.

After acting in O. Suslov's (1898), M. Ponomarenko's (1902), V. Zakharenko's (1904), and D. Haidamaka's (1905) troupes, he directed various provincial troupes. From 1925 to 1941 he worked with the Zankovetska Ukrainian Drama Theater. Kolesnychenko's repertoire included heroic roles such as Sava Chalyi in I. Tobilevych's Sava Chalyi and Sirko in S. Cherkasenko's Pro shcho tyrsa shelestila (What the Steppe Grass Murmured About). He directed such plays as H. Ibsen's Gengangere (Ghosts), N. Gogol's Revizor (The Inspector General), and M. Gorky's Na dne (The Lower Depths), and wrote several plays, including Za voliu i pravdu (For Freedom and Truth, 1907), Novyi zakon (The New Law, 1917), Perepolokh (The Scare, 1917), and Chad (Fumes, 1918). In spite of prohibitions, Kolesnychenko gave a free Sunday performance each year to honor T. Shevchenko.

Kolesnyk, Hanna, b 3 June 1935 in Styla, Starobesheve raion, Staline oblast. Opera and concert mezzo-soprano. A graduate of the Kiev Conservatory (1963), where she studied under Z. Haidai, she joined the Kiev Theater of Opera and Ballet as a soloist. She sang the leading lady in such operas as G. Verdi's Il Trovatore and Aida, P. Mascagni's Cavalleria Rusticana, P. Tchaikovsky's Queen of Spades and Evgenii Onegin, S. Hulak-Artemovsky's Zaporozhian Cossack beyond the Danube, and M. Lysenko's Taras Bulba. After defecting from the USSR in 1972 with her husband, conductor V. *Kolesnyk, she made a concert tour of the United States and Canada, and appeared as Halia in A. Vakhnianyn's Kupalo (1979) and as Odarka in Zaporozhian Cossack beyond the Danube (1981).

Kolesnyk, Petro, b 28 January 1905 in Baryshivka, Poltava gubernia, d 8 August 1987 in Kiev. Writer and literary scholar. A graduate of the Kiev Institute of People's Education (1928), he was an associate of the Shevchenko Institute of Literature and belonged to the *Molodniak writers' group and the All-Ukrainian Association of Proletarian Writers. He helped annotate the 1935 edition of T. Shevchenko's complete works. In 1937 he was accused of belonging to a fictional National Fascist Organization and was imprisoned in a Soviet concentration camp. He was rehabilitated in 1956 and became an associate of the AN USSR Institute of Literature. He is the author of books about V. Pidmohyl'ny (1931), I. Franko (1956, 1957, 1964, 1966), T. Shevchenko (1961), M. Kotsiubynsky (two in 1964), and S. Rudansky (1971), and of the novels Borot'ba (Struggle, 1932), Na fronti stalysia zminy (Changes Occurred on the Front, 1935), Teren na shliakhu (Blackthorns on the Road, 1959), and Poet pid chas oblohy (The Poet during the Siege, 1980).

Kolesnyk, Volodymyr, b 7 September 1928 in Dnipropetrovske. Choirmaster and conductor. A graduate of the Kiev Conservatory (DMA 1954), where he had studied under H. Verovka, Kolesnyk lectured at the conservatory and conducted the chorus of the Kiev Theater of Opera and Ballet. In 1969 he was appointed the theater's director. Defecting in 1972, he spent three years in Australia and then settled in Canada. He has appeared as guest conductor with the Australian Opera Company, the Symphony Orchestra of the Australian Broadcasting Corporation, the Edmonton Symphony Orchestra, the Hamilton Philharmonic Orchestra, and the CBC Vancouver Orchestra. As conductor of the Canadian Ukrainian

Volodymyr Kolesnyk

Yevdokiia Kolesnyk

Opera Chorus, which he helped found, he directed highly successful productions of Kupalo, Natalka from Poltava, and Zaporozhian Cossack beyond the Danube. He also conducts the Ukrainian Bandurist Chorus of Detroit and the Millennium Choir organized in Canada to celebrate the millennium of Christianity in Ukraine. Kolesnyk has compiled a three-volume anthology of operatic choral compositions, and has recorded a number of Ukrainian operas.

Kolesnyk, Yevdokiia, b 1 May 1942 in Pustelnykove, Oleksandriia raion, Kirovohrad oblast. Dramatic soprano. Upon graduating from the Kiev Conservatory (1968), she became a soloist of the Kiev Theater of Opera and Ballet. Her repertoire includes Oksana in S. Hulak-Artemovsky's Zaporozhian Cossack beyond the Danube, Mylana in H. Maiboroda's Mylana, Katerina in D. Shostakovich's Katerina Izmailova, Liza in P. Tchaikovsky's The Queen of Spades, and Leonora in G. Verdi's Il trovatore. She has won international competitions and performed outside the USSR.

Kolesnykov, Arkadii, b 5 December 1907 in Jurbarkas, Lithuania, d 4 March 1978 in Sevastopol. Geophysicist; full member of the AN USSR from 1967. A graduate of the Moscow Higher Technical School (1930), Kolesnykov was an associate of the USSR Academy of Sciences' Institute of Theoretical Geophysics (1938–42), then director of its Laboratory of Marine Geophysics (1942–54) and a professor at Moscow University (1947–62). From 1963 to 1975 he was director of the AN USSR Marine Hydrophysical Institute in Sevastopol. Kolesnykov published over 100 scientific works on the mechanics of thermal exchange in oceans, seas, and water reservoirs, and on the radioactive contamination of the oceans and nuclear-waste management. He also developed a theory of the crystallization of ice in turbulent water.

Kolesnykov, Stepan, b 11 July 1879 in Adrianopil, Bakhmut county, Katerynoslav gubernia, d May 1955 in Belgrade. Realist painter. A graduate of the Odessa Art School (1903) and the St Petersburg Academy of Arts (1909), he lived in Odessa and participated in the exhibitions of the Society of South Russian Artists. In 1920 he emigrated and settled in Belgrade. Kolesnykov did landscapes, genre paintings, and decorative murals. His works include Spring (1909), By a House (1912), Caroling (1915), Oxen Plowing (1915), and Windmills (1917). He painted 17 panels for the Palace Hotel and the ceiling of the opera theater in Belgrade.

Filaret Kolessa

Liubka Kolessa

Kolessa, Filaret, b 17 July 1871 in Tatarske, Stryj county, Galicia, d 3 March 1947 in Lviv. Musicologist, folklorist, and composer; from 1909 full member of the Shevchenko Scientific Society and from 1929 of the VUAN; brother of O. *Kolessa. A graduate of the universities of Lviv (1896) and Vienna (PH D 1918), he taught at several gymnasias in Galicia before being appointed in 1939 professor at Lviv University. In the following year he became director of the Lviv Branch of the Institute of Fine Arts, Folklore, and Ethnography of the AN URSR and of the Ukrainian State Museum of Ethnography and Crafts. His publications deal mainly with the origin and development of Ukrainian folklore, particularly of Ukrainian *dumas. Kolessa defended the view that dumas are of folk origin. His works on Ukrainian folk songs and dumas include Ohliad ukrains'ko-rus'koï narodnoi poezii (A Survey of Ukrainian-Rus' Folk Poetry, 1905), Rytmika ukrains'kykh narodnykh pisen' (The Rhythmics of Ukrainian Folk Songs, 1906-7), Melodii ukrains'kykh narodnykh dum (Melodies of Ukrainian Folk Dumas, 2 vols, 1910, 1913), 'Variianty melodii ukrains'kykh narodnykh dum, ikh kharakterystyka i hrupuvannia' (Variants of the Melodies of Ukrainian Folk Dumas, Their Characterization and Grouping, ZNTSh, nos. 116-17 [1913]), 'Pro henezu ukrains'kykh narodnykh dum' (On the Genesis of Ukrainian Folk Dumas, ZNTSh, nos. 130-2 [1920-2]), 'Narodni pisni z halyts'koï Lemkivshchyny' (Folk Songs from the Galician Lemko Region, Etnolohichnyi zbirnyk NTS, nos. 39-40 [1929]), and Ukrains'ka usna slovestnist' (The Ukrainian Oral Literature, 1938; repr, 1983). His studies on Subcarpathian, Polisian, and Lemko folk songs were pioneering works on Ukrainian musical dialects. His own compositions include choral works and arrangements of folk melodies. Some of his studies have been collected and republished posthumously in three volumes: Muzykoznavchi pratsi (Musicological Works, 1970), Fol'klorystychni pratsi (Folkloristic Works, 1970), and Muzychni tvory (Musical Compositions, 1972).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Hrytsa, S. Filaret Mykhailovych Kolessa (Kiev 1962)

W. Wytwycky

Kolessa, Khrystia, b 15 October 1915 in Vienna, d 22 July 1978 in Ottawa. Cellist and educator; daughter of O. *Kolessa. A student of H. Bekker, she began to give concerts in 1926, first in Europe and then in North America. After the Second World War she immigrated to Canada. Her repertoire included works by Ukrainian composers, particularly by V. Barvinsky, M. Fomenko, and A. Rudnytsky. Some of her recitals were recorded by the German firm Electrola.

Kolessa, Liubka, b 19 May 1904 in Lviv. Pianist and educator; daughter of O. *Kolessa. Upon graduating from the Vienna Academy of Music (1920) where she studied under L. Thern and E. von Sauer, she made the first of several European concert tours. She performed frequently in Lviv, and in 1929 she toured Soviet Ukraine. She was the first Ukrainian pianist to be recorded by European firms; in 1938 His Masters' Voice and Electrola recorded her recitals of works of L. Beethoven, G. Hummel, F. Chopin, and W. Mozart. In 1940 Kolessa immigrated to Canada. She taught at the Toronto Conservatory of Music, and continued to perform on stage until 1950. Her repertoire consisted mostly of classical and romantic music, and included the works of Ukrainian composers such as V. Barvinsky and N. Nyzhankivsky. She was noted for her fluent technique and subtle tone modulation.

Mykola Kolessa

Kolessa, Mykola, b 6 December 1903 in Sambir, Galicia. Composer, conductor, and educator; son of F. *Kolessa. A graduate of the Prague Conservatory (1928) and its School of Master Artists (1931), where he studied under V. Novák. Kolessa taught at the Lysenko Higher Institute of Music (1931-9) and then at the Lviv Conservatory, where he also served as rector (1953-65). Among his students were S. Turchak and Yu. Lutsiv. At the same time he conducted the Lviv Symphony Orchestra (1940-53), the orchestra of the Lviv Theater of Opera and Ballet (1944-7), and Boian, Banduryst, and Trembita choirs. As a composer, Kolessa used Lemko and Hutsul folklore material, to which he applied modern technique. His compositions include two symphonies, The Ukrainian Suite (1928), Symphonic Variations (1931), a suite for string orchestra In the Mountains (1935), a piano quartet, a piano suite Portraits of the Hutsul Region (1934), Fantastic Prelude (1938), Autumn Prelude (1969), and other piano pieces, arrangements of folk songs, and The Lemko Wedding for a mixed choir and a string quartet. He wrote Osnovy tekhniky dyryhuwannia (The Foundation of Conducting Technique, 1960; repr, 1973).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Volyns'kyi, I. Kompozytor Mykola Kolessa (Lviv 1954)
W. Wytwycky

Kolessa, Oleksander, b 24 April 1867 in Khodovychi, Stryi county, Galicia, d 23 May 1945 in Prague. Linguist, literary historian, ethnographer, and civic leader; brother of F. *Kolessa. In 1895 he was appointed lecturer and in 1898 professor at Lviv University. In 1899 he was elected a full member of the Shevchenko Scientific Society. As a member of the Austrian Parliament in 1907 and from 1911 to 1918, he defended the educational rights of Ukrainians, including the right to have a Ukrainian university. He was one of the founders in 1915 and the vice-president of the *Ukrainian Cultural Council in Vienna, which organized Ukrainian émigré schools. From 1921 he headed the Western Ukrainian National Republic's diplomatic mission to Rome. He was a central figure in émigré scholarly life in Prague: organizer, professor, and rector (1921–2, 1925–8, 1935–7) of the *Ukrainian Free University; a founder and vice-president (1923–32) of the *Ukrainian Historical-Philological Society; and first president (1924) of the *Ukrainian Academic Committee. From 1926 to 1939 he was also a professor at Prague University, and from 1929 a member of the Slavic Institute in Prague.

Kolessa belonged to F. Miklosiĉ's linguistic school. He investigated old Ukrainian paleography, historical phonology, and morphology particularly in the Horodyshche manuscripts, the Uzhhorod Poluustav, and the life of St Sava. From the study of the last (1896) he drew some important generalizations about the distinctive characteristics of old Ukrainian texts in relation to old Russian texts. In his Pohliad na istoriiu ukrains'koi movy (A View of the History of the Ukrainian Language, 1924) he gave a general survey of the history of the Ukrainian language.

As a literary scholar he studied Ukrainian-Polish literary relations (he wrote articles on Ukrainian folk songs in the poetry of B. Zaleski and on A. Mickiewicz's influence on T. Shevchenko). He is the author of studies of Yu. Fedkovych (1893). He also wrote about the genesis of the modern Ukrainian novella (1924). His Pohliad na suchasnyi stan istorychnykh rozslidiv ukrains'ko-rus'koi literatury, Naidavnishyi peryod: Kil'ka problem i deziderativ (A View on the Present State of Historical Research on Ukrainian-Ruthenian Literature; The Earliest Period: Several Problems and Desiderata, 1901) summarizes his general views. In the field of folklore studies he contributed Holovni napriamy i metody v rozslidakh ukrains'koho fol'kl'oru (The Main Directions and Methods in the Study of Ukrainian Folklore, 1927) and articles on apocrypha and solar and lunar motifs in Ukrainian Christmas carols.

Oleksander Kolessa

V. Kubijovyč, G.Y. Shevelov

Kolhosp. See Collective farm.

Kolhospne Selo. See Sil's'ki visti.

Kolhospnyk Ukraïny (Collective Farmer of Ukraine). Popular agricultural monthly published in Kiev from 1 April 1939 to August 1949, first by the People's Commissariat of Agriculture of the Ukrainian SSR and from 1944 by Ukraine's Ministry of Agriculture. In 1949 it was renamed Kolhospne selo.

Kolhospnytsia Ukraïny (Collective-Farm Woman of Ukraine). A semimonthly organ of the CC CP(B)U, which was separated from the journal Komunarka Ukraïny and was published in Kiev from 1924 to 1941. Until 1931 it was called Selianka Ukraïny.

Koliada, Hryhorii [Koljada, Hryhorij], b 26 November 1896 in Chornukhy, Lohvytsia county, Poltava gubernia, d 20 February 1977 in Tashkent. Bibliologist. A graduate of Moscow University (1917) and the Kiev Institute of the National Economy (1926), he lectured at Kiev Pedagogical Institute and then at Tadzhih (1949–54) and Tashkent universities. His publications deal with the history of book printing in Ukraine, particularly with the contributions of I. Fedorovych and P. Berynda to the development of printing.

Koliada, Hryhorii (Heo) [Koljada, Hryhorij], b 21 January 1904 in Valky, Kharkiv gubernia, d ? Futurist poet. In 1921–3 he taught in Kharkiv and ran the Petrovsky Children's Commune and the VUTsVK Children's Town. Then he studied at the Academy of Communist Education (1923–6) and the Institute of Transport (1926–30) in Moscow. He was a member of the literary organizations *Pluh and *Hart and while in Moscow joined the group Selo i Misto. Koliada debuted as a poet in 1922. In 1923 he coauthored a poetry collection, Shturma (The Storm), with O. Kopylenko and I. Senchenko in Kharkiv. In Moscow six collections of his poetry were published by K. *Burevii's Ukrainian publishing concern Selo i Misto: Olenka (1925), Shturm i natysk (Assault and Pressure, 1926), Prekrasnyi den' (A Beautiful Day, 1926), Zoloti kucheri (Golden Curls, 1926), Futur-extra (1927), and Arsenal syl: Roman novoi konstruktsii (Arsenal of Forces: A Novel of New Construction, 1929). Nothing he wrote was published during the Stalinist terror of the 1930s. Koliada disappeared without trace after joining the Soviet levy en masse during the German invasion of the USSR.

Koliada, Mykola [Koljada], b 4 April 1907 in Berezivka, Pyriatyn county, Poltava gubernia, d 30 July 1935 in Kharkiv. Composer. A graduate of the Kharkiv Music and Drama Institute (1931), where he studied under S. Bohatyrov, Koliada worked as a composer in the Kharkiv Theater of Working Youth. He was a founding member of the Association of Proletarian Musicians of Ukraine. His works include a symphonic suite on Ukrainian themes (1927), a vocal-symphonic poem Tractor Attack (1932), a piano quintet, a sonata, variations and pieces for violin and piano, arrangements of folk songs, and stage and film scores. O. Arnavtov wrote a monograph on Koliada in 1936.

Mykola Koliada

Koliada. The name of a cycle of Ukrainian winter rituals stemming from ancient Greek kalandai and the Roman calendae. In Christian times it has been performed between Christmas Eve (6 January) and Epiphany (19 January). The koliada incorporated certain fall harvest rituals (such as the laying out of harvested produce and the bringing in of the last grain sheaf to the house), livestock-fertility rituals (the feeding of bread, garlic, and rose hips to livestock, feeding chickens in a chain, bringing a lamb into the house), and spring rituals (the sowing of grain, the plowing of furrows, and visiting with the **koza*). It was believed to be a personification capable of influencing the future harvest. Thus arose the customs of 'calling koliada to partake in the Christmas **kutia*' and the 'shooing away of koliada.' The koliada cycle was a time of general merriment, during which generous helpings of food (9 or 12 dishes) were consumed. Even the poorest of families tried to maintain the eating ritual. The visiting of each other's homes and gift giving, particularly among family members but also among neighbors, were customary.

Since koliada rituals were originally pagan, the church tried to supplant them with Christian ones. Many rituals of koliada were incorporated in the celebration of **Christmas* and persist until today.

M. Hnatiukivsky

Koliadky. See Carols.

Koliankivsky, Mykola [Koljankivs'kyj], b 19 June 1912 in Panivtsi, Borshchiv county, Galicia, d 28 October 1985 in Niagara Falls, Ontario. Journalist, publisher, and art collector and dealer. A graduate of the Greek Catholic Theological Academy in Lviv (1936), he worked on the newspaper Krakiivs'ki visti. After the war he edited and published the paper Chas and the journal My i svit in Germany. Immigrating to Canada in 1955, he edited the newspaper Nasha meta (1955–8) and then opened an art gallery in Toronto, while continuing to publish My i svit. In 1970 he founded the Niagara Falls Arts Gallery and Museum, and in 1975 he published W. Kurelek's The Passion of Christ. Two collections of his satire on Ukrainian-Canadian life – Ambasadoriy (The Ambassadors, 1968) and Tovpa (The Crowd, 1979) – appeared under the pseudonym M. Tochylo.

Kolienda, Havryil [Koljenda, Havryjil], 1606–74. Kievan Uniate metropolitan. Kolienda was probably born in Belorussia. After joining the Basilian order, he studied philosophy and theology in Braunsberg, Prussia (1627–30), Vienna (1633–6), and at the Greek College in Rome (1636–9). He served as coadjutor (1652–5), then bishop (1655–74) of Polatsk eparchy, although he was not able to assume his post because of the incessant wars between the Cossacks, Poland, and Muscovy. After the death of A. Seliava, he administered the Kiev metropolity (1656–65), as Polish King Jan II Casimir Vasa had promised the Cossacks not to appoint a new Uniate metropolitan; it was only in 1665 that the Vatican appointed him metropolitan; in 1667, after the Treaty of **Andrusovo*, this appointment was confirmed by the Polish government. At the same time, he was protoarchimandrite of the Basilian order. Kolienda's correspondence with the Vatican was published by A. Velyky in two volumes in 1956.

Koliivshchyna rebellion. A major **haidamaka* rebellion that broke out in Right-Bank Ukraine in May 1768 against social and national-religious oppression by the Polish administration and nobility. The word Koliivshchyna is probably derived from kil (pike or lance), the weapon used by the rebels (called koliiv).

The underlying causes of the rebellion were the social unrest created by the difficult conditions of serfdom in Right-Bank Ukraine and the religious oppression of the Orthodox peasants and Cossacks by the Polish Roman Catholic church and nobles (see **Haidamaka* uprisings). The rebellion was provoked by the Confederation of **Bar* and the antipeasant and anti-Orthodox positions taken by the Polish nobles there. The center of the rebellion was **Kholodnyi Yar* and its leader was M. **Zalizniak*, a Zaporozhian Cossack from Medvedivka, near Chyhyryn. The haidamakas soon captured the towns of Zhabotyn, Smila, Cherkasy, Korsun, Kaniv, Bohuslav, Moshyn, and Lysianka. Following these first successes, the number of haidamakas increased at the beginning of June, and separate groups dispersed in various directions, seizing centers in the Kiev and Bratslav regions and then in Podilia and Volhynia. An important factor in the spread of the rebellion was the anti-Catholic propaganda that emanated from the Orthodox monasteries of the area. The hegumen of the Motronynskyi Monastery near Chyhyryn, M. **Znachko-Yavorsky*, played a particularly influential role in fomenting the rebellion, and many rebels hid from the authorities in the monasteries.

A major achievement of the uprising was the capture of the fortified town of Uman (20–21 June 1768), an important trading center in Right-Bank Ukraine. The captain of the Uman militia under the local magnate F. Potocki, I. **Gonta*, joined the insurgency with the Cossacks under his command. A major demand of the insurgents was the restoration of the Cossack political and social order established under B. Khmelnytsky, but which persisted only in Left-Bank Ukraine (the **Hetman* state) and in Zaporizhia. Among the more renowned leaders of haidamaka detachments were S. Nezhyvy, M. Shvachka, A. Zhurba, I. Bondarenko, and M. Moskal. The haidamakas inflicted great losses, killing hundreds of Polish nobles, Catholic clerics, and Jewish stewards and moneylenders, and burning scores of estates.

The Koliivshchyna rebellion provoked grave concern in the Ottoman Empire, Poland's neighbor, which feared the spread of peasant unrest and was particularly angered when haidamaka detachments entered Turkish frontier towns in pursuit of their enemies. Russian policy toward the haidamakas was more ambiguous. Although Empress Catherine II clearly supported the Orthodox cause and the haidamakas believed a fictitious proclamation of her support and call to arms that circulated widely in Right-Bank Ukraine (see *Golden Charter), eventually she ordered Gen M. Krechetnikov to put an end to the uprising. Russian troops began to advance against the haidamaka detachments in late June 1768 and quickly routed them. During a meeting with the Russian high command, M. Zalizniak, I. Gonta, and S. Nezhyyv were arrested and their detachments were disarmed. The Russian army was helped by the Polish army, which brutally tortured, then killed, the captured insurgents (eg, in Kodna, near Zhytomyr). Even many peasants who had not taken part in the uprising were severely repressed. I. Gonta was tortured to death in the village of Serby near Mohyliv-Podilskyi and M. Zalizniak was exiled to Siberia.

The Koliivshchyna insurgents were idealized and immortalized in folk songs and legends, and especially in the poetry of T. Shevchenko, whose famous poem 'Haidamaky' is devoted to the rebellion. The rebellion was also a popular subject in Polish literature, although most Polish writers (eg, S. Goszczyński, M. Czajkowski, J. Słowacki) berated the haidamakas and Cossacks as bandits and religious fanatics under the influence of the Russians. Populist Ukrainian historians (eg, V. Antonych) generally idealized the haidamakas.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Shul'gin, Ia. Ocherk Koliivshchiny po neizdannym i izdannym dokumentam 1768 i blizhaishikh godov (Kiev 1890)
 Huslysty, K. Koliivshchyna (Kiev 1947)
 Serczyk, W. Koliszczyzna (Warsaw 1968)
Koliivshchyna 1768: Materialy iuvileinoi naukovoï sesii, pryvoïchenoi 200-richchii povstannia (Kiev 1970)
 Mirchuk, P. Koliivshchyna: Haidamats'ke povstannia 1768 r. (New York 1973)

A. Zhukovsky

Kolisnyk, Peter, b 30 November 1934 in Toronto. Artist and educator. His modernistic sculptures and paintings have been widely exhibited in North America at such institutions as the Montreal Museum of Fine Art, the Museum of Contemporary Art in Chicago, the Art Gallery of Ontario, the Royal Canadian Academy, and the Ukrainian Institute of Modern Art in Chicago. He has received several awards for his watercolors and sculptures and has served as curator of the Cobourg Art Gallery (1964–9) and trustee of the Art Gallery of Ontario (1982). Kolisnyk has taught art at York University since 1975 and has lectured at many Ontario colleges. Besides doing paintings and sculptures, he has designed stage sets.

Kolisnyk, William, b 1887 in Demyche, Sniatyn county, Galicia, d 4 November 1967 in Vancouver. Political activist. He came to Canada with his parents in 1898 and settled in rural Manitoba. A few years later he moved to Winnipeg, joined the Shevchenko Educational Association, and became active in the Ukrainian socialist movement. He was a member of the Ukrainian Social Democratic Party of Canada, its successor the Ukrainian Labour-Farmer Temple Association, and the Communist Party of Canada (CPC). As alderman for Winnipeg's Ward 3 (1926–30), he was the first Communist to be elected to public office in North America. From 1940 to 1942 he was interned as a CPC activist.

Koliukh, Dmytro [Koljux], b ca 1882 in Rossosh, Ostrogzhsk county, Voronezh gubernia, d ca 1937. Civic and co-operative leader. An organizer of Ukrainian consumer co-operatives, he took part in the Second All-Russian Co-operative Congress in Kiev (1913), where he made the proposal to set up a central Ukrainian co-operative union. In summer 1917 he served in the municipal government of Kiev. From 1917 to 1920 Koliukh was the executive president of Dniprosoiuz, and at the same time minister of food supplies in V. Holubovych's cabinet (1918). In 1920 he was appointed vice-president of Vukopopilka (All-Ukrainian Co-operative Union). In about 1930 he was arrested and deported to Central Asia, where he died.

Kolky. II-6. Town smt (1979 pop 4,000) on the Styr River in Manevychi raion, Volhynia oblast. In 1915 fierce battles between Russian and Austrian-German forces took place there. In 1943–5 it was the center of the Northern group of the UPA, and had several field hospitals.

Kollard, Yurii, b 2 January 1875 in Morachiv, Poltava gubernia, d 3 January 1951 in Augsburg, Germany. Civil engineer; civic and political leader. He was a founding member of the *Revolutionary Ukrainian party. In 1917–19 he belonged to the Ukrainian Party of Socialist Independentists. Under the Central Rada he served as commissar of railways in Polisia, under the Hetman government as senior inspector of railways, and under the Directory as deputy minister of transport. After the First World War he lived in Czechoslovakia, Poland, and Germany. His memoirs, 'Spohady iunats'kykh dni' (Recollections of Days of Youth), were serialized in Literaturno-naukovyi vistnyk (1928–31) and were reprinted in book form in 1972.

Koloda. See Weights and measures.

Kolodiazhyn [Kolodjažyn]. A fortified town and castle in 12th–13th century Kievan Rus', located on the Sluch River near the present-day village of Kolodiazhne, Zhytomyr oblast. Kolodiazhyn was part of the system of city-fortresses that protected Rus' from the nomads, and an economic and administrative center. The main occupations of its inhabitants were agriculture and animal husbandry. The town was sacked by the Mongols in 1241. Remnants of the fortifications, covering an area of 1.5 ha, still remain. In 1948–53 the Institute of Archeology of the AN URSR investigated the site. The town was fortified with earthworks and a ditch. Uncovered were the remains of 22 burnt wooden dwellings, craftsmen's workshops, and buildings with defense or commercial purposes; 16 semi-pit dwellings; charred supplies of cereal and industrial crops (rye, wheat, barley, oats, millet, peas); and assorted tools, weapons, ornaments, religious articles, and the like. It is thought that in the town below the castle lived the retinue and guards of the city's ruler, who was probably an appanage prince.

Kolodka. A ritual folk game. On the Monday of the last week before Lent (the so-called Kolodii festival), married women would tie a small log (kolodka) to the legs of young men and women who had not married before Carnival Sunday. Those thus 'punished' had to buy their 'freedom' through gifts or money. In the Poltava region, logs were also tied to the legs of parents for not having arranged marriages for their unmarried children. In more recent times, the log was replaced by symbolic ribbons, kerchiefs, or bundles of flowers. Because shepherds tied small logs to the feet of their herd animals to prevent them from jumping over fences and straying, certain ethnographers have hypothesized by analogy that the custom was applied to feisty young bachelors during the days of greatest festivity as a moral restraint against promiscuity. Others have argued that the game is a remnant of the ancient punishment of pillorying for non-performance of duties.

Kolodub, Lev, b 1 May 1930 in Kiev. Composer and teacher. After graduating from the Kharkiv Conservatory (1954), where he studied under M. Tits, Kolodub worked as sound director in the Kiev Recording Studio (1955–6). Then he taught musical theory at the Kiev Institute of Theater Arts (1958–60), and since 1966 he has been teaching composition and instrumentation at the Kiev Conservatory. He has served on the executive of the Union of Composers of Ukraine since 1962. His works include an operetta, City of Lovers (1969); a cantata for soloists, chorus, and orchestra, Glory to the Fatherland (1951); a poem for orchestra, The Great Stonemason (1953–5), dedicated to I. Franko; a symphony (1958); The Ukrainian Carpathian Rhapsody (1960); a symphony-duma, Shevchenko Pictures (1964); a suite, Hutsul Images (1966); a concerto for french horn and orchestra (1972); chamber works; choral pieces; arrangements of folk songs; art songs; and radio and film music.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Zahaikevych, M. Levko Kolodub (Kiev 1973)

Kolodub, Zhanna, b 1 January 1930 in Vinnytsia. Composer. A graduate of the Kiev Music School (violin and piano) and the Kiev Conservatory (1954), she has taught piano at the conservatory since 1952. Her works (some in collaboration with L. *Kolodub) include a ballet for children, Thumbelina (1969), based on H. Andersen's story; a musical comedy Merry Girls (1968); a musical, Adventure on the Mississippi, based on Mark Twain's Huckleberry Finn (1971); a suite for symphony orchestra, Kiev Lyrical Portraits (1976); two dance suites (1961, 1965); Nocturne for flute and harp (1965); Poem for flute and piano (1966); and children's songs and folk-song arrangements.

Kolody, Helena [Kolodij, Olena], b 12 October 1912 in Cruz Machado, Paraná, Brazil. Brazilian poet. The daughter of Ukrainian immigrants, she was a teacher in Rio Negro, Ponta Grossa, and Curitiba. She made her debut as a poet in the 1930s; between 1941 and 1986 she published 14 collections of crafted philosophical and mystical verse of which the first was Paisagem Interior and the latest, Poesia Minima. She has translated Ukrainian poetry into Portuguese for the anthologies Antologia da Literatura Ucrainiana (1959), Girassol (1966), and Viburno Rubro (1977).

Mykhailo Kolodzinsky

Kolodzinsky, Mykhailo [Kolodzins'kyj, Myxajlo] (pseud: Kum, Huzar), b 26 July 1902 in Potochyska, Horodenka county, Galicia, d 18 March 1939 in Bushytyna, near Khust in Carpatho-Ukraine. Prominent OUN military leader. He was a member of the Ukrainian Military Organization from 1922 and a key leader of the OUN in Galicia from 1929. In 1932–3 he served on the OUN Executive for Galicia as chief of military training. In 1938–9 he helped organize the Carpathian Sich and became its chief of staff with the rank of colonel. He was killed in combat with the Hungarian army. Kolodzinsky wrote a number of works on military strategy.

Kolokoltsov, Vasilii [Kolokol'cov, Vasilij], b and d ? Political figure, agronomist. A landowner in Kharkiv gubernia, he was zemstvo president of the Vovchanske county zemstvo. Under the Hetman government he served as minister of land affairs in F. Lyzohub's cabinet and introduced the law on land sales (1918). In October 1918 he signed the so-called Note of the Nine rejecting the idea of Ukrainian autonomy and arguing for the restoration of the Russian Empire.

Kolomak. IV-16. Town smt (1979 pop 5,400), in Valky raion, Kharkiv oblast, situated on the Kolomak River. The town was founded in the mid-17th century on the site of the Kolomak fortified settlement (first mentioned in 1571). A sugar refinery and a brick plant are located there.

Kolomak Articles (Kolomatski statti). Ukrainian-Russian treaty concluded on 4 August 1687 at the Cossack general council held on the Kolomak River, which formed the boundary of the Hetman state. The council, attended by a limited number of Cossacks, was surrounded by Muscovite troops under the command of Prince V. Golitsyn. Under Russian pressure the council deposed and arrested Hetman I. Samoilovych, elected I. Mazepa hetman, and accepted a previously prepared agreement.

The treaty consisted of 22 articles and was based on the *Hlukhiv Articles of 1669, supplemented with articles accepted during Samoilovych's rule. Although the treaty reasserted Ukrainian rights and privileges and preserved the 30,000-man Cossack register, it also required that the hetman obtain the tsar's approval for any changes in high offices, thus defending the interests of the starshyna. Furthermore, it entrenched Muscovy's military and political supremacy over Ukraine: the hetman could not establish diplomatic relations with other countries; he had to maintain an 'eternal peace and alliance' with Poland, thus recognizing in effect Poland's right to Right-Bank Ukraine; he had to provide troops for campaigns against the Crimean Tatars and Turkey; and Muscovite soldiers were to be stationed in Baturyn, capital of the Hetman state. By this treaty the Hetman state was obliged for the first time 'to unite by every method and means the Little-Russian people with the Great-Russian people and to lead them by intermarriage and other measures to an indestructible and firm harmony.' These articles marked another step in the erosion of Ukraine's independence to the advantage of Muscovy.

O. Ohloblyn

Kolomak Petitions (Kolomatski cholobytni). Two petitions sent by senior Cossack officers to Tsar Peter I. They were drafted on the initiative of the Myrhorod colonel D. *Apostol during the Persian campaign on the Kolomak River in summer 1723. The petitions demanded the restoration of Cossack rights, permission to elect a new hetman, and the abolition of requisitions from estates as practiced by the *Little Russian Collegium. The Russian government responded to these and other similar petitions by arresting the acting hetman P. *Polubotok, D. Apostol, and several senior officers (Ya. Lyzohub, V. Zhurakovsky, M. Khanenko, H. Hrabianka, etc). Most of the officers were released in 1725, but Polubotok died in prison.

Kolomak River. A left tributary of the Vorskla River in Kharkiv and Poltava oblasts, 102 km long and with a basin area of 1,650 sq km.

Kolomiichenko, Oleksii [Kolomijčenko, Oleksij], b 30 March 1898 in Shpola, Zvenyhorodka county, Kiev gubernia, d 17 September 1974 in Kiev. Otolaryngologist; corresponding member of the AN URSR from 1967. A graduate of the Kiev Medical Institute (1924), he worked at the Shepetivka hospital (1924–8), the Kiev Institute for the Upgrading of Physicians (1928–35), and various hospitals in Kiev (1936–44, 1952–60). He also held the chairs of otorhinolaryngology at the Kiev Medical Institute (1943–44) and the Kiev Institute for the Upgrading of Physicians (1944–74) and founded and directed the Kiev Scientific Research Institute of Otorhinolaryngology (1960–74). His scientific works deal with otosclerosis; ear, throat, and nose tumors; and the restoration of hearing. He was the first in the USSR to perform a successful microsurgical operation on the inner ear to restore hearing.

Kolomiets, Inna [Kolomijec'], b 8 March 1921 at Alekskaia stanitsa, Altai krai. Sculptor. A graduate of the Kiev State Art Institute (1951), she works in monumental, easel, and decorative sculpture. Her major works include The Only Son (1964), The Victors (1971), ceramic bas-reliefs on themes from I. Kotliarevsky's Eneida (1961), and several series such as Around Italy (1962–4), Around Japan (1966–7), and Vechornytsi (1965).

Kolomiets, Oleksii [Kolomijec', Oleksij], b 17 March 1919 in Kharkivtsi, Poltava gubernia. A leading Soviet Ukrainian playwright. His plays include Faraony (The Pharaohs, 1961), De zh tvoie sontse? (Where Is Your Sun? 1963), Planeta Speranta (Planet Speranta, 1966), Spasybi

tobi, moie kokhannia (Thank You, My Love, 1967), Horlytsia (The Turtle Dove, 1969), Pershyi hrikh (The First Sin, 1971), Odiseia v sim dniv (An Odyssey in Seven Days, 1974), Holubi oleni (Azure Stags, 1973), Sribna pavutyna (The Silver Cobweb, 1977), Dykyi anhel (The Wild Angel, 1978), and Ublyi leva (Kill the Lion, 1985).

Kolomiets, Volodymyr [Kolomijec'], b 2 November 1935 in Vovchiv, Kiev oblast. Poet. From 1979 to 1984 he was the editor in chief of the literary journal Dnipro. His first collection, Do sertsia liuds'koho (To the Human Heart), appeared in 1959. In 1981 the best poetry from his previous 13 collections was reprinted as the large collection Vid obriiu do obriiu (From Horizon to Horizon). Between 1981 and 1987 he published five more collections, including Vybrane (Selected Works, 1985). He has also written several collections of poetry for children.

Kolomiets, Yurii [Kolomijec', Jurij], b 25 October 1925 in Khrystynivka, Cherkasy oblast. Soviet Ukrainian Party and government figure. An agronomist by profession, he was a CPU raion committee secretary before becoming secretary of the Cherkasy Oblast Committee in 1965, deputy minister of agriculture of the Ukrainian SSR in 1970, minister of state farms in 1977, first deputy chairman of the State Planning Committee in 1979, and first deputy chairman of the Council of Ministers in 1980. He was elected a candidate member of the CC CPU in 1976 and a full member of its Politburo in 1980.

Kolomyia [Kolomyja]. v-6. City (1985 pop 60,000) on the Prut River in southeastern Galicia and a raion center under oblast jurisdiction in Ivano-Frankivske oblast. The principal city of *Pokutia, it is an important transport junction. First mentioned in the Hypatian Chronicle under the year 1240, it was granted the rights of Magdeburg law in 1405. Salt was mined in the vicinity from the Middle Ages, and Kolomyia became an important salt-trading center (with special privileges granted by the Polish king Casimir IV Jagiellończyk). Because of its proximity to the Moldavian border, the town suffered frequent attacks by the Moldavians, Tatars, and Turks. Under Austrian rule (1772–1918) it was a circle and county center (1815–1918). Owing to its importance as a commercial and administrative center it grew rapidly, reaching a population of 23,100 in 1880, 34,200 in 1900, and 42,700 in 1910, of which Jews constituted a large part. After the First World War its commercial importance diminished. Consequently, by 1931 its population had fallen to 33,400, of which Ukrainians constituted 18.6 percent; Jews, 42.3; Poles and Roman Catholic Ukrainians, 33.7; and Germans, 5.1. In 1943, after the Nazis had exterminated the Jewish population, only 18,500 inhabitants remained in the city.

Until 1914 (and to a lesser extent even until 1939), Kolomyia was a major center of Ukrainian culture in Galicia. Until the early 20th century its role in publishing in Galicia was second only to Lviv's. Yu. Nasalsky published the brochure series *Biblioteka dlia Ruskoj Molodezhy there (1894–1913). The major publishing houses up to 1914 were M. Bilous's press, Ya. Orenshtain's Halyska Nakladnia, and the Zhinocha Biblioteka press. In the 1920s and 1930s the major publishing houses were Zahalna Knyhozbiurnia, Ukrainaska Zahalna Entsyklopediia, OKA, and Rekord. In 1875, 17 individual Ukrainian publications came out in Kolomyia (compared to 42 in Lviv), but in 1913 only 28 publications appeared (compared to 238 in Lviv). Of all of Galicia's provincial cities Kolomyia had the most (over 30) newspapers and journals. Among them were Holos narodnyi (1865–8), the humor magazine Kropylo (1869), the Russophile monthly **Nauka* (1871–6) and biweekly Rusaskaia rada (1871–1912), the Radical biweeklies **Khliborob* (1891–3) and Narod (1892–4), the popular biweeklies Vesna (1878–80) and Khlops'ka pravda (1903, 1909), the educational weekly **Postup* (1903–5), and the women's biweekly **Zhinocha dolia* (1925–39). The first Ukrainian drama society in Galicia was established there in 1848 by I. Ozarkevych. The third-oldest Ukrainian gymnasium in Galicia (est 1894 after Lviv's and Peremyshl's) and a branch of the Lysenko Music Institute were located in Kolomyia. The city was also an important center of the *Ukrainian Radical party and the *Sich movement, which were organized by K. *Trylovsky.

Kolomyia: city hall

Under the Soviet regime Kolomyia's population has grown: by 1959 it was 31,300, and by 1970, 41,000. Its national composition changed radically because of the Second World War and its aftermath; in 1959 Ukrainians composed approximately 72 percent of its inhabitants; Russians, 20; Poles, 4; and Jews, 2. Today Kolomyia is a regional industrial and cultural center. Its population is employed in light industries. Kolomyia has long been famous for its Hutsul crafts (wood carving, weaving, kilim making, embroidery, and ceramics). The city has a mechanized-woodworking tekhnikum and four vocational-technical schools (medical, pharmaceutical, technical, and pedagogical). The Kolomyia Museum of Hutsul Folk Art was founded there in 1926 by V. Kobrynsky. The wooden Church of the Annunciation and its belfry (built in 1587) are the city's oldest architectural monuments.

V. Kubijovyč

Kolomyia Brigade of the Ukrainian Galician Army (Kolomyiska 2-ha brygada UHA). Formed in January 1919 out of the Stare Selo Group, the brigade consisted of three infantry regiments and an artillery regiment, and was part of the Second Corps of the UHA. Its commanders were Majs F. Tinkel (to June 1919) and R. Dudynsky, Col A. Vymetal, and Capt O. Revniuk. The brigade distinguished itself in combat against the Poles near Lviv, and later during the Chortkiv offensive. It took part in the Kiev offensive against the Bolsheviks and entered Kiev on 30 August 1919. Subsequently, it fought against Denikin's army. When the UHA allied itself with the Red Army, the brigade was reorganized in the spring of 1920 into the Second Infantry Regiment of the Third Brigade of the Red UHA. In April 1920 the regiment along with the rest of the Third Brigade turned against the Bolsheviks, but was captured by the Poles and interned by them near Proskuriv.

Kolomyia Museum of Hutsul Folk Art

Kolomyia Museum of Hutsul Folk Art (Kolomyiskyi muzei narodnoho mystetstva Hutsulshchyny). A museum originally established in 1926 by its first director V. *Kobrynsky, who collected its original artifacts. It was opened to the public in 1935; initially it consisted of one room in the Kolomyia People's Home. Until 1944 the museum was run by volunteers and opened only on Sunday. Today the museum has 18 halls and exhibits over 18,000 items of Hutsul folk art and handicrafts. It is visited by over 70,000 people annually. The museum's scholarly associates conduct research on the ethnography of the Hutsul region, which is published in article and book form, and organize conferences, special events, and touring exhibits. A branch of the museum was founded in Kosiv in 1971. A guide to the museum was published in Uzhhorod in 1970.

Anatole Kolomayets: Apostle (oil)

Kolomyiets, Anatol [Kolomyjec', Anatol'] (aka Kolomayets, Anatole), b 12 February 1927 in the Poltava region. Painter. From 1948 to 1953 he studied painting at St Luke's Institute and at the Royal Academy of Fine Arts in Liège, Belgium. In 1954 he came to the United States and settled in Chicago, where he has worked as a commercial artist for the Chicago Sun-Times and the Chicago Tribune. He was a founder of the Monolith group of Ukrainian artists. Specializing in oils and watercolors, he has held over 20 one-man exhibits in North America and has participated in many group shows. His paintings, such as Mother of Sorrows and Hutsul, are expressionistic, but retain a strong grasp of the object. He has done some icon painting and has designed a number of iconostases.

Kolomyiets, Anatolii [Kolomyjec', Anatolij], b 4 October 1918 in Savyntsi, Myrhorod county, Poltava gubernia. Composer. Studying composition under L. Revutsky, he graduated from the Tashkent Conservatory (1943) and the Kiev Conservatory (PH D 1951). Since then he has taught at the Kiev Conservatory, obtaining the rank of full professor by 1971. His compositions include

Variations on a Ukrainian Theme (1956) for orchestra, a ballet Ulianka (1959), a cantata In Memory of I. Kotliarevsky (in collaboration with V. Kyreiko, text by M. Rylsky, 1969), a piano sonata (1941) and various other piano pieces, The Ukrainian Sonata (1968) for bandura and piano, several bandura pieces, compositions for mixed choir, and music to various verses by Ukrainian poets.

Avenir Kolomyiets

Kolomyiets, Avenir [Kolomyjec'], b 19 February 1906 in Horodets, Volhynia, d 22 July 1946 in Salzburg, Austria. Journalist and poet. After graduating from Warsaw University in 1930, he contributed literary criticism and poetry to Novi shliakhy and other pro-Soviet periodicals in Lviv until he broke with the Sovietophiles in 1933. He studied directing at the Warsaw Institute of Theater Arts for three years and traveled abroad. From 1936 he worked in education and theater in Volhynia, promoted Esperanto, and contributed poetry and articles to Western Ukrainian journals. His varied legacy consists of the poem 'Deviaty val' (The Ninth Wave, 1930), the poetry collection Provisni kadry (Prophetic Cadres, 1932), unpublished novellas, Ieretyk (The Heretic, 1936) and other plays, stories and plays for children, a libretto, school textbooks, and the essay collection Shevchenkova era (Shevchenko's Era, 1942).

Kolomyiets, Yurii [Kolomyjec', Jurij], b 1930 in Kobeliaky, Poltava oblast. Poet. A postwar refugee, he lived in Germany until 1947 and in Belgium until 1952, when he immigrated to the United States. He lives in Chicago and has published two collections of modern poetry: Hranchaste sontse (The Faceted Sun, 1965) and Bili temy (White Themes, 1983).

Kolomyika [kolomyjka]. The most popular form of Ukrainian folk ditty. It consists usually of two rhyming lines with a set rhythmic pattern: a 14-syllable line with feminine ending and a caesura after the eighth syllable (4 + 4 + 6). Kolomyiky are widespread throughout Ukraine. The Carpathian Hutsul region, however, is considered their epicenter, and the name is believed to be derived from the Hutsul city of Kolomyia.

Tens of thousands kolomyiky have been transcribed and published. The oldest transcriptions are in 16th-century compilations of songs for the lute. The oldest written text – 'Chy ia tobi ne movyla, ne bery voloshky' ('Didn't I Tell You, Don't Take a Wallachian Girl') – is found in a 1659 Polish letter from M. Zamoyska to King Jan III

Sobieski. Thousands of kolomyiky were written down and studied in the 19th century by Ukrainian and Polish ethnographers (Z. Dołęga-Chodakowski, P. Lukashkevych, P. Chubynsky, Ya. Holovatsky, V. Shukhevych, and others). The largest number (8,622) is in V. *Hnatiuk's Kolomyiky (3 vols, 1905–7). N. Shumada and Z. Vasylenko's Kolomyiky (1969) contains 4,814 texts and 452 melodies.

Kolomyiky treat literally every facet of everyday folk life, both familial and social, in a humorous fashion. Kolomyiky are one of the few folk-song genres still being improvised in Soviet Ukraine. Contemporary versions, however, while also heavily propagandistic, are often similar to the Russian chastushka and are now studied in the Soviet Union with the latter as one genre, downplaying the uniquely Ukrainian character of the kolomyiky.

Kolomyika is also the name of a mimetic circular Hutsul dance in 2/4 time, of which there are many variants.

M. Hnatiukivsky

Kolomyishchyna [Kolomyjščyna]. A landmark near Khalepia, Obukhiv raion, Kiev oblast. Excavations in 1934–9 revealed two settlements: one, designated Kolomyishchyna I, from the late stage of the Neolithic *Trypilian culture, and the second, Kolomyishchyna II, from the middle stage of the Trypilian culture. The first consisted of 39 ground dwellings arranged in two concentric circles around communal buildings at the center. Each dwelling contained several rooms and stoves. The second consisted of similar dwellings arranged in a circle.

Joanne Kolomyjec

Kolomyjec, Joanne [Kolomyjec', Ivanka], b 23 April 1955 in Sudbury, Ontario. Operatic soprano. A graduate of the University of Toronto (BM 1976) and of its Opera Division (1980), she won the Metropolitan Opera Auditions in New York in 1983. She has performed as a soloist with the Canadian, Vancouver, Edmonton, and Santa Fe opera companies, the Toronto Symphony Orchestra, and the Canadian National Ballet. Her repertoire includes Mimi in G. Puccini's La Bohème, Violetta in G. Verdi's La Traviata, Anna Glawari in F. Lehár's Merry Widow, Fiordiligi in W. Mozart's Così fan tutte, and the Countess in his Marriage of Figaro.

Kolubovsky, Yakiv [Kolubovs'kyj, Jakiv], b 1863 in Hlukhiv, Chernihiv gubernia, d 1930. Bibliographer and historian of Ukrainian and Russian philosophy. A graduate of St Petersburg University (1866), he studied philosophy and pedagogy in Leipzig before becoming an assistant to the editor of Voprosy filosofii i psikhologii (1891) and a lecturer in the history of pedagogy (1892) and logic (1894) at the St Petersburg Pedagogical Courses. During the Revolution of 1917 he was director of the Galagan College in Kiev and then professor at the Nizhen Institute of People's Education. His bibliographic surveys of Russian publications in philosophy appeared in Voprosy filosofii i psikhologii. Later he contributed articles to Knyzhnyi vistnyk in Kiev (1919).

Kolyma region. The area along the Kolyma River in the eastern part of the Yakut ASSR and the southern part of Magadan oblast, RSFSR. Because of its severe climate (temperatures in January reach  $-70^{\circ}\text{C}$ ), the region was completely uninhabited until the Soviet government decided to develop it by means of forced labor. The northern group of concentration camps belonging to the Dalstroi system began to be built along the Kolyma River in the early 1930s. By the 1950s these camps held up to 3 million prisoners, a large percentage of them Ukrainians. The inmates are employed mostly in gold mines. The Kolyma concentration camps are the cruelest and deadliest camps in the USSR: millions of people have perished there.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Conquest, R. Kolyma: The Arctic Death Camps (London 1978)

Kolyvanova, Svitlana, b 26 September 1940 in Kiev. Ballet dancer. A graduate of the Kiev Choreography School (1959), she danced briefly with the Kiev Theater of Opera and Ballet, and then at the Uzbek Opera and Ballet Theater in Tashkent. Since 1964 she has worked at the Kharkiv Theater of Opera and Ballet. Her repertoire includes such roles as Odette and Aurora in P. Tchaikovsky's Swan Lake and The Sleeping Beauty, Mavka in M. Skorulsky's The Forest Song, Donna Anna in V. Hubarenko's The Stone Master, and Cinderella, Juliet, and the Mistress of Copper Mountain in S. Prokofiev's Cinderella, Romeo and Juliet, and Stone Flower. In 1966 she won first prize at an international dance competition in Varna, Bulgaria.

Kolyvo. A traditional funeral dish made of boiled wheat kernels and honey (nowadays, rice, raisins, plums, apples, and nuts are used) that is placed next to the coffin of the deceased. After the interment, those attending the funeral each ritually eat a spoonful of the kolyvo, which symbolizes resurrection. The practice was originally a pagan one adopted from the ancient Greeks, who brought boiled wheat as an offering to Apollo. In certain parts of Ukraine bread was used instead of kolyvo. Sometimes the dish was eaten on Pentecost.

Komar, Anatolii, b 25 December 1909 in Kiev, d 26 October 1959 in Kiev. Civil engineer; from 1956 a full member and president (1956–9) of the Academy of Construction and Architecture of the Ukrainian SSR, and from 1957 member of the Academy of Construction and Architecture of the USSR. He helped design the blast furnaces of the Zaporizhstal metallurgical plant and similar plants in the Urals and directed construction of hydraulic projects, roads, and public buildings in Ukraine. His publications deal with the organization and mechanization of construction.

Komar, Antin, b 30 January 1904 in Berezna, Skyvra county, Kiev gubernia. Physicist; full member of the AN USSR from 1948. A graduate of the Kiev Polytechnical Institute (1930), he worked at the USSR Academy of Sciences' Physico-Technical Institute in Sverdlovsk (1936–47) before joining the academy's Physico-Technical Institute in Leningrad in 1950. He was director of the institute (1950–7) and also served on the faculty of Leningrad Polytechnical Institute (1950–69). Komar made significant contributions to the physics of metals and ferrites, nuclear-accelerator technology, instrumentation, and nuclear-structure research.

Komar, Ted, b 6 June 1929 in Winnipeg. Accordionist, arranger, teacher. From 1947 to 1958 he performed as an accordion soloist on the CBC radio's Prairie Schooner. In 1952 he formed the Ted Komar Orchestra, which has appeared widely in Canada and the United States featuring old-time music. In 1975 it recorded Happiness Is Resi and Reflections. Komar has conducted a number of studio orchestras on CBC radio and TV. In 1975 he performed his own arrangement of Three Ukrainian Dances with the Winnipeg Symphony Orchestra. Komar has published accordion instruction books and founded two music schools in Winnipeg.

Komar (Mosquito). An illustrated semimonthly of humor and satire published in Lviv from 22 January 1900 to 1906. The publisher and editor was I. Kuntsevych, the illustrator Ya. Pstrak, and the caricaturist Ya. Strukhmanchuk.

Komar (Mosquito). A weekly paper of humor and satire, published from 1933 to 1939 in Lviv by Ukrainska Presa publishers. The editor and chief caricaturist was E. *Kozak. Its principal contributors were M. Holynsky, I. Hirny, I. Kernytsky, L. Senyshyn, M. Levytsky, and T. Kurpita.

Komaretsky, Serhii [Komarec'kyj, Serhij], b 1881 in Poltava gubernia, d 1 August 1952 in Haar, Germany. Chemist. In 1922 he was appointed lecturer, and in 1927 professor, at the Ukrainian Husbandry Academy in Poděbrady, Czechoslovakia. From 1942 to 1945 he served as director of the Ukrainian Technical and Husbandry Institute. His publications include chemistry textbooks and papers on inorganic chemistry; eg, on obtaining iodine from Black Sea seaweed.

Komarevych, Vasyl [Komarevyč, Vasyl'], 1891–1927. Community and church leader in Volhynia. A lawyer by profession, in 1918 he served as an officer in the UNR Army. He founded and headed the Prosvita society in Volodymyr-Volynskyi in 1918, and was elected to the Polish Sejm in 1922.

Komariv culture. An archeological culture of the middle and late Bronze Age (17th–12th centuries BC), named after a settlement and a burial site excavated in 1886 and 1934–6 near Komariv, Stanyslaviv county, Galicia (present-day Ivano-Frankivske oblast). The culture existed throughout Subcarpathia, Podilia, Volhynia, and part of the middle Dnieper region. Its people lived in patriarchal clans and practiced crop cultivation and herding. They rarely interred their dead; instead corpses were covered with mounds of earth, frequently after a cremation ritual. Their houses were built of wood and earth on a stone and oak foundation. Flint, stone, and bronze weapons and tools, corded earthenware, and bronze ornaments were discovered during excavations. Scholars believe that the people were the ancestors of either the Thracians or the proto-Slavs.

Komarne. IV-4. Town (1970 pop 3,300) in Horodok raion, Lviv oblast. It arose in the 12th–13th century. In 1473 the town was granted the rights of Magdeburg law and a castle was built. An Orthodox brotherhood was established there in 1592. In the 19th century it was an important crafts (particularly weaving) and trading center in Galicia. From 1939 to 1959 it was a raion center. Komarne's main industries are natural-gas extraction and processing, food processing, tree farming, woodworking, and fish farming. Its oldest architectural monuments are a Roman Catholic church (built in 1473 and reconstructed in 1657) and the wooden St Michael's Church (built in 1754 and decorated with frescoes).

Komarnytsky, Yosyf [Komarnyc'kyj, Josyf], b 17 August 1852 in Roliv, Sambir circle, Galicia, d 1920. Uniate priest and professor. He attended the Central Seminary in Vienna and studied canon law at Vienna University (PH D 1883). From 1891 he was a professor of biblical studies at Lviv University, serving as rector in 1896–8. He wrote a treatise on the Gospel according to St Matthew and a number of scholarly and popular studies and articles for the journals Dushpastyr (which he edited) and Ruskii Sion. Komarnytsky also edited the newspaper Myr (1885–7).

Mykhailo Komarov

Komarov, Mykhailo, b 23 January 1844 in Dmytrivka, Pavlohrad county, Katerynoslav gubernia, d 19 August 1913 in Odessa. Bibliographer, ethnographer, critic, and historian. He studied at Kharkiv University. A public notary, he lived in Kiev, Uman, and (from 1880) Odessa where he was a central figure in community life. He used his legal training to fight tsarist censorship. He wrote valuable bibliographic guides, including bibliographies of Ukrainian literature (1798–1883) in the almanac Rada (1883); of Ukrainian drama and theater from 1815 (1906, revised 1912); and of such figures as I. Kotliarevsky (1904), T. Shevchenko (1903), I. Nechui-Levytsky, M. Lysenko (1904), and S. Rudansky (1895). He also compiled Nova zbirka malorus'kykh prykazok, prysliv'iv, pomovok, zahadok i zamovlian' (A New Collection of Little-Russian Proverbs, Maxims, Sayings, Riddles, and Incantations, 1890) and Rusko-ukrainskii slovar' (Russian-Ukrainian Dictionary, 4 vols), which was published in Lviv in 1893–8 under the pseudonym M. Umanets; contributed literary criticism to the newspapers Zoria and Dilo; wrote historical studies on A. Holovaty (1891), B. Khmelnytsky (1901), Zaporozhian liberties (1907), and censorship in Ukraine; and published popular literature.

Komarynsky, Volodymyr [Komaryns'kyj], b 4 June 1906 in Sokal, Lviv county, Galicia, d 4 November 1981 in Albany, New York. Lawyer; community activist. He studied law in Prague, and in 1935 opened a legal practice in Mukachiv, where he served as defense counsel for Ukrainians in various political trials. In 1938–9 he was the press secretary for the autonomous government of Carpatho-Ukraine and a member of its parliament. After the Second World War he lived in Germany and served as a legal adviser to the International Refugee Organization. He later immigrated to the United States, where he became president of the *Carpathian Alliance.

Kombinat. See Manufacturing complex.

Kominternivske. VII-11. Town smt (1979 pop 4,700) and raion center in Odessa oblast. Founded in 1802, until 1933 it was called Antonove-Kodyntseve. Food products are manufactured there.

Komisarenko, Vasyl, b 14 January 1907 in Cherniakhiv, Kiev county, Kiev gubernia. Endocrinologist; from 1951 full member of the AN URSR. A graduate of the Kharkiv Medical Institute (1932), he was director of the Institute of Endocrinology in Kharkiv (1937–40). From 1945 to 1965 Komisarenko headed the endocrinology laboratory of the Institute of Experimental Biology and Pathology of the republic's Ministry of Public Health (from 1953, the AN URSR Institute of Physiology). He also served as a department chairman at the Kiev Medical Institute (1950–4). He was the first director of the Kiev Scientific Research Institute of Endocrinology and Metabolism (est 1965) of the Ministry of Public Health. His research dealt with the mechanisms of hormonal action and the effect of insulin on the nervous system.

Komitat (from the Latin comitatus). An administrative-territorial unit in the kingdom of Hungary. The concept was derived from the South-Slavic župa (župa), an early medieval alliance of clans that later designated a group of peasant communities. The komitat (Hungarian: vár-megyék) was introduced in Hungary in the 13th century. Its head was a royal official (Hungarian: ispán; Slavic: zhupan) who represented the king's authority, administered the population, and collected taxes with the aid of various underlings and an armed force of free men. In Transcarpathia and the Prešov region, the Ukrainians under Hungarian rule lived in Szepes, Sáros, Zemplén, Ung, Bereg, Ugocsa, and Máramoros komitats; their capitals were Levoča, Prešov, Nové Mesto, Užhorod, Berehove, Sevlush, and Syhit. In the last four komitats Ukrainians constituted the majority of the population. The komitats were retained in the interwar Czechoslovak Republic under the name of župa until 1928. The Slovak names of the Ukrainian-populated komitats were Spiš, Šariš, Zemplin, Už, Berehovo, and Marmaroš.

Komnezam. See Committee of Poor Peasants.

Komoromyk. A category of dependent people in the Grand Duchy of Lithuania and later in the Polish-Lithuanian Commonwealth who did not own land or a house. They performed pedestrian corvée or paid taxes in cash or in kind to landlords, who provided them with accommodation in their houses or outbuildings (hence the term komornyk, from komora, meaning barn or storehouse). In the 15th and 16th centuries the term was also applied to the urban poor – beggars, workmen engaged in handicrafts or as day laborers, and even poor people engaged in petty commerce. Kormornyky ceased being regarded as such if they acquired a plot of land with a house or if they were able to rent such property.

Kompan, Olena, b 19 March 1916 in Yenakiieve, Katernoslav gubernia. Historian. Since 1950 she has worked as a research associate of the AN URSR Institute of History. Most of her works deal with Ukraine up to the 18th century, particularly with the history of cities and the working class. One of her more important works is Mista Ukraïny v druhii polovyni xvii st. (The Cities of Ukraine in the Second Half of the 17th Century, 1963).

Kompaniitsi. See Mercenary regiments.

Kompaniivka [Kompanijivka]. V-13. Town smt (1979 pop 5,000), raion center in Kirovohrad oblast. It was founded in the mid-18th century. It has a mixed-feed plant, a poultry hatchery, a forest-reclamation station, and a veterinary tekhnikum.

Komput (from the Latin computo: to calculate, reckon). A register of names that defined the social position of an individual within Cossack society. Komputy were introduced while Ukraine was under Polish rule. After 1648 the register also contained information regarding a Cossack's military service and his property. Compiled by regimental clerks, the komput had judicial authority and was the basis for deciding who had official Cossack status. It was abolished in Slobidska Ukraine in 1765 and in Left-Bank Ukraine in the 1780s, when Ukrainian autonomy was eliminated by the tsarist state. The register constitutes an important historical source for the social and economic history of Ukraine of the 17th and 18th centuries. (See also *Registered Cossacks.)

Komsomol. See Communist Youth League of Ukraine.

Komsomolets' Ukraïny. See Molod' Ukraïny.

Komsomolske [Komsomol's'ke]. IV-17. Town smt (1980 pop 14,100) in Hotvald raion, Kharkiv oblast, situated near Lyman Lake. The town was founded in 1956. The Zmiiv Regional Electric Station is located there.

Komsomolske [Komsomol's'ke]. VI-19, DB IV-4. Town (1970 pop 15,800) in Starobesheve raion, Donetsk oblast, situated on the Kalmiuis River. It was founded as a mining settlement called Karakubbud in 1933. Its main industry is the quarrying of limestone and broken stone. An industrial tekhnikum is located there.

Komunarske [Komunars'ke]. V-19, DB III-5. City (1986 pop 125,000) under oblast jurisdiction in Voroshylovhrad oblast. It was established in 1895 as a workers' settlement of the Donetsko-Yurievsk Metallurgical Company. Called Alchevske until 1931, from 1931 to 1961 it was called Voroshylovske. It became one of the largest metallurgical centers in the Donbas. Building systems and materials, coke-chemical products, clothing, and food products are also manufactured there, and a mining and metallurgical institute and museums of history, the history of metallurgy, and geology and mineralogy are located in the city. The city has grown substantially in the Soviet period. In 1923 it had a population of only 9,300.

Komunarske Metallurgical Plant (Komunarskyi metalurhiinyi zavod). A large ferrous metallurgy plant located in Komunarske, Voroshylovhrad oblast. It was founded in 1895 by the Donetsko-Yurievskoe Metallurgical Society. Now its basic production consists of cast iron, steel, and rolled steel. In 1979 the plant included a large agglomerating workshop, five blast furnaces (the largest with a capacity of 3,000 cu m), nine open-hearth ovens using the Martin process to make steel from pig iron, a continuous steel-pouring aggregate, Blooming mills, and a variety of other furnaces.

Komunarske Mining and Metallurgical Institute (Komunarskyi hirnycho-metalurhiinyi instytut). A technical school of higher education under the jurisdiction of the Ministry of Higher and Specialized Secondary Education of the Ukrainian SSR, established in 1957. It has eight departments (including departments of mining, metallurgy, civil engineering, and automation), an evening school, preparatory courses, and a branch in Stakhanov. The institute's enrollment is over 12,000 (1980) and over 20,000 engineers have graduated from it since its establishment.

Komunist. See Radians'ka Ukraïna.

Komunist Ukraïny (Communist of Ukraine). The theoretical and political monthly journal of the CC CPU. First published in 1925 as Bilshovyk, it was renamed Bilshovyk Ukraïny in 1926 and acquired its present title in 1952. It did not appear from 1941 to 1945. It has been published in Ukrainian and in Russian since 1950.

Komunistychna osvita. See Radians'ka shkola.

Komyshany [Komyšany]. VII-13. Town smt (1983 pop 9,500) in Kherson oblast, situated 4 km from Kherson and under the jurisdiction of the Komsomolskyi raion soviet of the city of Kherson. First mentioned in 1795, its earliest inhabitants were settlers from the Balkans. Until 1946 this agricultural town was called Arnautka.

Komysh-Buruny Iron-ore Complex (Komysh-Burunskyi zalizorudnyi kombinat im. S. Ordzhonikidze). Industrial concern specializing in ferrous metallurgy, located in the Kerch Iron-ore Basin. Built in 1931 and rebuilt in 1951, the complex consists of mines, limestone quarries, and sorting and enrichment plants. Its main products are iron, cinder, and niello.

Kon, Felix, b 30 May 1864 in Warsaw, d 28 July 1941 in Moscow. A Bolshevik figure of Polish-Jewish origin. A member of the Polish Proletariat party from 1882, he was imprisoned in a labor camp in Siberia in 1886. He belonged to the Polish Socialist party from 1904 and was a member of the CC Left Faction from 1906. During the Revolution of 1905, he was active in Odessa and Mykolaiv and then lived in Switzerland, where he had close ties with émigré Mensheviks. In late 1917 and 1918 he was the Bolshevik commissar for Polish Affairs in Khar'kiv gubernia. In 1919 he edited the Polish-language Bolshevik newspaper in Kiev and became a member of the Collegium of the People's Commissariat of External Affairs of the Ukrainian SSR. During the Polish-Soviet War of 1920, he was a member of the Provisional Polish Revolutionary Committee in Białystok and then the head of the Galician Organizing Committee of the CP(B)U and one of the organizers of the Foreign Section of the CP(B)U Central Executive Committee (CEC). He was also a CEC candidate member in 1920-1, a member of the CP(B)U Organizational Bureau and Kiev Gubernial Committee in 1920, a CP(B)U secretary in charge of agitation and propaganda in 1921, and chief of the Ukrainian Political Administration of the Red Army in 1922. In 1922 Kon was the last plenipotentiary representative of the Soviet Ukrainian government in Moscow; thereafter he held various Party, government, Comintern, and editorial posts there.

V. Markus

Konash-Konashevych, Vasyl [Konaš-Konaševyč, Vasyl'] (Konarz-Konarzewski, Stanisław), b 22 January 1914 in Warsaw. Painter, graphic artist, miniaturist, and muralist. Having graduated from the Cracow Academy of Fine Arts (1936), he studied art in Munich and Paris (1936–8) and then taught drawing at the Lviv Institute of Applied Art (1942–4). Having moved to Warsaw in 1945, he was turned over to the Soviets in 1947 and sentenced to 10 years in a labor camp. Released in 1956, he emigrated in 1973 and lived in Paris and Munich before settling in Montreal (1984). His works include a number of series: on the history of Jews in Poland, on biblical themes, on Polish customs and rites, on the Warsaw Uprising, on *Anna Yaroslavna the Queen of France, and on the millennium of Ukraine's Christianization. Most of his paintings take the form of large illuminations. His works have appeared in many exhibitions in Europe and North America, and have received wide acclaim.

Vasyl Konash-Konashevych: illustration for Petrarch's Sonnets

Konashevych-Sahaidachny, Petro. See Sahaidachny, Petro.

Konchak [Končak]. Khan of the *Cumans. In the latter half of the 12th century Konchak united the tribes of the eastern Cumans, and in the 1170s and 1180s carried out a number of attacks on settlements in the regions of Pereiaslav, Kiev, and Chernihiv. The raids were particularly destructive along the Sula River. In 1171 and 1180–1 he aided the princes of Novhorod-Siverskyi in their internecine struggle for power with other Rus' princes. In 1184 he and the Cuman khan *Kobiak were routed on the Khorol River during an assault on Rus', but in 1185, at the Kaiala River, he defeated the forces of Prince *Ihor Sviatoslavych, who was taken prisoner. Konchak proceeded to ravage the Kiev and Chernihiv regions, and to lay seige to Pereiaslav. The struggle of Ihor Sviatoslavych and the princes of Rus' to repel Konchak is immortalized in the epic **Slovo o polku Ihorevi*.

Kondra, Peter, b 30 July 1911 in Mikado, Saskatchewan. Poultry scientist and community leader. Educated at the universities of Manitoba and Minnesota (PH D 1953), Kondra joined the faculty of the University of Manitoba in 1946 as a specialist in poultry genetics. He has published numerous articles on poultry breeding, incubation, and housing. An active member of the Ukrainian Greek Orthodox church, the Ukrainian Self-Reliance League, and the Ukrainian Canadian Professional and Business Federation, he served as president of the Ukrainian Canadian Committee (1971–4) and at the same time sat on the executive of the World Congress of Free Ukrainians.

Kondratenko, Hennadii, b 14 September 1920 in Mariupil (now Zhdanov). Physician and microbiologist. A graduate of the Donetsk Medical Institute (1941), he has taught there since 1946; he became its rector in 1964. His research is devoted to salmonellae and staphylococcal infections.

Kondratiev [Kondrat'jev]. Family of Cossack officers in Slobidska Ukraine. Herasym, the otaman of Stavyskh on the Right Bank, settled in Slobidska Ukraine in 1655. He founded the town of Sumy and became the first colonel of Sumy regiment (1658–1701). His son, Andrii, who was killed by K. Bulavin's Don Cossacks, and his grandson, Ivan (d 1726/7), were both colonels of Sumy regiment. The family was closely tied to the Cossack starshyna of the Hetman state. They also enjoyed the favor of several Russian tsars, whose generous grants of estates allowed them to become one of the wealthiest families in Slobidska Ukraine; in 1785 members of the family owned over 130,000 ha in Kharkiv gubernia alone.

Kondratiuk, Mykola [Kondratjuk], b 5 May 1931 in Starokostiantyniv, Starokostiantyniv raion. Baritone singer; educator. A soloist of the Ukrainian People's Choir from 1957, he graduated from the Kiev Conservatory in 1958 and joined the Kiev Theater of Opera and Ballet in 1959. Since 1966 he has been a soloist with the Ukrkontsert company and the Kiev Philharmonic, and since 1968 he has taught at the Kiev Conservatory, where he was rector in 1974. His repertoire includes Prince Igor in A. Borodin's Prince Igor, Ostap in M. Lysenko's Taras Bulba, Maksym in H. Maiboroda's Arsenal, and Figaro in G. Rossini's The Barber of Seville. In 1963–4 he performed at La Scala in Milan.

Yurii Kondratiuk

Kondratiuk, Yurii [Kondratjuk, Jurij], b 21 June 1897 in Poltava, d 1941 or 1942 in Kozelsk raion, Kaluga oblast, RSFSR. Scientist and inventor; pioneer in rocketry and space technology. After studying at the St Petersburg Polytechnical Institute, he worked at various plants in Ukraine, Russia, Northern Caucasia, and Siberia. From 1933 he headed a task force at the Ukrainian Scientific Research Institute of Industrial Power Engineering in Kharkiv designing the largest wind-powered electric station in the world. In 1919 he published Tem, kto budet chitat', chtoby stroit' (To Those Who Will Read in Order to Build), which was expanded into Zavoievannia mezhplanetnykh prostranstv (The Conquest of Interplanetary Space, 1929). In this work Kondratiuk developed the basic equations for rocket motion, calculated optimal flight trajectories, explained the theory of multistage rockets, and advocated the use of new rocket fuels, including the boron fuels used today. He proposed that orbiting supply bases be used to supply spacecraft, that atmospheric drag be used for braking descending spacecraft, that small excursion vehicles be used to land men on planets and return them to spaceships, and that the gravitational fields of celestial bodies be used for accelerating and braking spaceships. Kondratiuk's ideas and equations are used widely today by both Soviet and American engineers. The National Aeronautic and Space Administration has translated his work into English and has used many of his concepts in the Apollo moon flights. One of the craters on the far side of the moon is named after him. During the Second World War he reportedly was drafted into the army and died under undisclosed circumstances.

L.S. Onyshkevych

Kondratovych, Irynei [Kondratovyč, Irynej] (Kontratovych), b 1878 in Dubrynych, Transcarpathia, d 1957. Greek Catholic priest and historian. A graduate of the Uzhhorod Theological Seminary, he served as a parish priest in several Transcarpathian villages. During the Hungarian occupation of Transcarpathia, Kondratovych was the vice-president of the Subcarpathian Academy of Sciences. He wrote the popular textbook Istoriia Podkarpats'koi Rusy (The History of Subcarpathian [Transcarpathian] Rus', 3rd edn 1930), K istorii starodavniago Uzhgoroda i Podkarpatskoi Rusy do XIV vieka (To the History of Ancient Uzhhorod and Subcarpathian [Transcarpathian] Rus' to the 14th Century, 1928), and numerous articles. In 1949 he converted to Orthodoxy and led the campaign to 'reunite' the Uniate Church of Transcarpathia with the Russian Orthodox church, serving as provisional administrator of the Orthodox Mukachiv eparchy.

Kondratowicz, Ludwik. See Syrokomla, Władysław.

Kondufor, Yurii, b 30 January 1922 in Zubani, Hlobyne raion, Poltava oblast; full member of the AN URSR since 1985. Historian and Party functionary. A lecturer at Kharkiv University after 1952, from 1958 to 1968 he directed the Department of Science and Culture of the CC CPU. Since 1960 he has been a candidate member of the CC CPU. In 1968 he was appointed professor and director of the Chair of Soviet Social History at Kiev University. In 1978 he became the director of the AN URSR Institute of History. His books and articles deal mainly with the history of the CPU and the working class and are propagandist in nature.

Kondzelevych, Yov [Kondzelevyč, Jov], b 1667 in Zhovkva, Galicia, d ca 1740 in Lutske, Volhynia. Noted icon painter and elder of the Bilostok Monastery in Volhynia. After his training at the Zhovkva Icon Painting Studio, he probably studied painting at the Kiev Cave Monastery Icon Painting Studio and abroad. Some of his numerous works have survived, including a fragment of the Bilostok Monastery iconostasis with depictions of six apostles and of the Dormition; the tabernacle of the Zahoriv Monastery (1695) with paintings of Joachim and Anna, the Trinity, the Baptism, St Barbara the Martyr, and Archdeacon Steven; and the famous iconostasis of the Maniava Hermitage, painted in 1698–1705 and transferred in 1785 to the church in Bohorodchany upon the dissolution of the hermitage. In 1923 the iconostasis was deposited in the National Museum in Lviv under the name the Bohorodchany iconostasis. The Dormition, The Assumption, The Last Supper, The Crucifixion, Christ and the Samaritan Woman, Christ and Nicodemus, and the archangels Michael and Gabriel on the Deacon Doors are those parts of the iconostasis painted by Kondzelevych himself; the rest of the icons were done by his subordinates. In 1722 Kondzelevych took part in painting the iconostasis of the Zahoriv Monastery. He did the Deacon Doors,

Yov Kondzelevych: detail of city life from the icon of the Dormition (1690; at the Bilostok Monastery in Volhynia)

Christ's Presentation at the Temple, and the Vernicle. His last work was The Crucifixion (1737) for the Lutske Monastery. Kondzelevych broadened the traditional scheme of the icon significantly: he devoted much attention to the surroundings, particularly to the landscape, which he filled with distinctive architectural ensembles.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Batih, M. Iov Kondzelevych i Bohorodchans'kyi ikonostas (Lviv 1957)

S. Hordynsky

Konieczpolski, Stanisław, b ca 1590, d 12 March 1646 in Brody. Polish magnate and military figure. One of the largest landowners in Bratslav voivodeship, he was the Polish Field Hetman (1619–32), then Grand Hetman (from 1632). From 1625 he also headed the commission for the regulation of Cossack affairs. He negotiated the *Kuru-kove Treaty in 1625 that ended the Cossack uprising led by Zhmailo. Although the Poles had been defeated in the Battle of Borovytsia, Konieczpolski was able to limit the number of *registered Cossacks allowed under the terms of the treaty to 6,000. He was again defeated by the Cossacks under T. Fedorovych at Pereiaslav and concluded the *Pereiaslav Treaty of 1630, which increased the number of registered Cossacks to 8,000. He initiated the construction of the *Kodak fortress in 1635 and managed to quell the Cossack uprisings led by Ya. Ostrianyn and P. Pavliuk (1637–8).

Königsek, Friedrich von, ?–1708. Military engineer from Saxony, an *osaul of the general artillery and an aid to Hetman I. Mazepa during the war of 1708 with Russia. He helped improve the artillery of the Hetman state and was one of the leaders of the defense of Baturyn in October 1708. He died of his wounds on the way to Hlukhiv, where he was being taken by the Russians for execution.

Konka River (also known as the Kinska River and Kinski Vody). A left-bank tributary of the Dnieper River, which it once joined in the Velykyi Luh floodplain (now the Kakhivka Reservoir). The Konka is 150 km long (240 km previously) and drains a basin of 2,600 sq km. In its upper stretch the river flows through a narrow valley in the Azov Upland; it then broadens out and divides into channels. Its waters are used for irrigation.

Kononenko, Hryhorii, b 13 March 1938 in Zolota Nyva, Velyka Novosilka raion, Donetske oblast. Theater director. Graduating from the Kharkiv Institute of Arts (1965), he joined the Kharkiv Ukrainian Drama Theater as a director. In 1969 he was appointed principal director at the Dnipropetrovske Young Spectator's Theater, and then in 1985 at the Kiev Russian Drama Theater. He has staged such plays as Taras Bul'ba, an adaptation of N. Gogol's novel, N. Zabyla's Koly misiats' ziide (When the Moon Rises), P. Zahrebelny's Khto za, khto proty (Who's For, Who's Against), and Skarby Flinty (Flint's Treasure, an adaptation of R. Stevenson's Treasure Island).

Kononenko, Kharytia, b 18 October 1900 in Mykolaivka, Poltava gubernia, d 15 October 1943 in Rivne, Volhynia. Civic leader. An agronomist by profession, she was active in the Ukrainian women's movement in Czechoslovakia and Galicia. In the 1930s she organized the Farm Women's Section of the Silskyi Hospodar society in Lviv. In 1941 she was the head of the Ukrainian Red Cross and the Ukrainian Relief Committee in Rivne. She was executed by the German police.

Kononenko, Konstantyn, b 3 June 1889 in Rylsk, Slobidska Ukraine, d 28 August 1964 in Boonton, New Jersey. Economist; civic and political figure. A member of the Russian Social Democratic Workers' party (Menshevik), he was a member of the Central Rada. In 1919–20 he headed the Kharkiv Association of Agriculture, and from 1921 to 1924 the finance department of the People's Commissariat of Land Affairs of the Ukrainian SSR. Until 1930 he served as director of the All-Ukrainian Agricultural Bank and as a research consultant to the State Planning Committee. Kononenko was arrested in 1930 and sentenced to eight years of forced labor. He immigrated to Germany in 1944 and to the United States in 1951. As an émigré he was involved in the OUN (Bandera faction). Among his numerous articles and studies are Agrarna polityka bol'shevykiv (The Agrarian Policy of the Bolsheviks, published under the pseud. N. Olezhko, 1948) and Ukraine and Russia: A History of the Economic Relations between Ukraine and Russia, 1654–1917 (1958); a second volume, covering economic relations between 1917 and 1960, was published in Ukrainian as Ukraina i Rosiia (Ukraine and Russia, 1965). Kononenko also coauthored and edited Orhanizatsiia sil's'koho hospodarstva v Lisostepu i Polissi Ukrainy (The Organization of Agriculture in Ukraine's Forest-Steppe and Polisia, 1924).

Konstantyn Kononenko

Viktor Kononenko

Kononenko, Musii (pseud: Shkolychenko), b 21 August 1864 in Turkivka, Pryluka county, Poltava gubernia, d 14 June 1922. Poet and writer. He contributed populist verses to Western Ukrainian periodicals, beginning in 1883 with the poem 'Neshchaslyve kokhannia' (Unhappy Love). His poetry collections include Lira (Lyre, 1885), Struna (String, 1908), and Khvyli (Waves, 3 vols, 1917–18). He also wrote several short stories.

Kononenko, Mytrofan, b 17 June 1900 in Kaharlyk, Kiev county, Kiev gubernia, d 1 January 1965 in Kharkiv. Stage actor specializing in heroic roles. Graduating from the Lysenko Music and Drama Institute (1923), he worked in the Berezil theater and then in the Kharkiv Ukrainian Drama Theater. His principal roles were Hapon in L. Kurbas's and S. Bondarchuk's Proloh (Prologue), Satan in I. Dniprovsky's Iablunevyi polon (Apple-Blossomativity), the professor in A. Sullivan's Mikado (text by M. Khvylovy, M. Yohansen, and O. Vyshnia), Velzevul in Allo na khvyli 477 (Hello on Frequency 477; by the same authors), Gianettino in F. Schiller's Die Verschwörung des Fiesko zu Genua, and Tur in O. Korniiuchuk's Bohdan Khmel'nyts'kyi.

Kononenko, Viktor, b 11 September 1918 in Korocho, Kursk gubernia, d 29 July 1975 in Kiev. Mechanical engineer; from 1964 full member of the AN URSS. After graduating from the Kharkiv Institute of Railway-Transport Engineers he worked at various institutes in Moscow and Kiev. From 1965 to 1975 he served as director of the AN URSS Institute of Mechanics and taught at Kiev University. His publications deal with the theory of non-linear oscillations, particularly the theory of auto-oscillation, and parametric oscillations, and the theory of interaction of oscillating systems with energy sources.

Kononovych, Oleksander [Kononovych], b 31 January 1850 in Tahanrih, d 5 May 1910 in Odessa. Astronomer.

A graduate of New Russia (Odessa) University (1871), from 1886 he was a professor at that university. From 1881 he also headed the Odessa Astronomical Observatory, which, under his leadership, became an important scientific research facility. A pioneer of astronomy in the Russian Empire, Kononovych contributed mainly in the areas of solar-system studies and studies of binary star systems.

Kononovych-Horbatsky, Yosyf [Kononovyč-Horbac'kyj, Josyf], b ?, d ca 1653. Orthodox bishop and educator. A graduate of the Zamość Academy, he was one of the first scholars from Western Ukraine to be invited by P. Mohyla to teach in Kiev. He lectured on rhetoric (1635–6) and philosophy (1639–42), and served as rector (1642–6) of the Kievan Mohyla College. In 1642 he headed the Ukrainian delegation to the Council of Iași, where he defended the use of Jesuit pedagogical methods and of Latin in Orthodox education. After serving as hegumen of the St Michael's Golden-Domed Monastery in Kiev, he was consecrated bishop of Vitsebsk, Orsha, Mstislau, and Mahiliou in 1650.

Kononovych-Horbatsky's course manuals Orator Mohileanus Marci Tullii Ciceronis apparatusisimis partitionibus ex cultus (1635–6), In dialecticarum institutionum disputationes prooemium (1635–6), and Subsidium logicae (1639–40) are the earliest records of courses taught at the college. The logic course, which is the first part of a three-year philosophy course, is based on Aristotle's Organon and shows a nominalist tendency. Excerpts from the three courses have been translated into Ukrainian and published in Filosofs'ka dumka, nos 1–3 (1972).

N. Pylypiuk

Konotip or Konotop. II-14. City (1982 pop 86,000) and raion center in Sumy oblast under oblast jurisdiction, situated on the Yezuch River. Konotip was founded in 1634. From 1654 to 1781 it was a fortified company town in Nizhen regiment. In the summer of 1659 during the Ukrainian-Muscovite War, it was besieged for three months by Prince A. Trubetskoi's army and defended by Col H. Huliianytsky. On 8 July 1659 Hetman I. Vyhovsky, who came to the town's aid, scored his first great victory, killing or scattering 30,000 Russians and capturing 5,000. In 1664 Konotip was destroyed by the Poles. From 1782 to the early 1920s it was a county town, from 1802 in Chernihiv gubernia. From 1923 to 1932 it was an okruha center, and from 1932 to 1939 a raion center, in Chernihiv oblast. Its development began only after it became a junction on the Kiev–Voronezh railway: in 1859 its population was 9,000; in 1897, 18,440; in 1926, 33,600; in 1959, 54,100; and in 1970, 68,400. Its major industries are machine building and metalworking. The electro-mechanical plant Chervonyi Metalist (est 1916) produces automated mining equipment. The city also has a repair plant for locomotive and railroad cars, firms servicing railway transport, a food industry, a piston plant, a clothing factory, and a construction-materials industry. Several educational institutions are located there; among them the Avtomatvuhlerudprom design-and-construction institute, a general technical faculty of the Sumy branch of the Kharkiv Polytechnical Institute. Its regional museum was founded in 1900.

V. Kubijovč

Konotip Articles (Konotopski statti). An agreement between the Cossacks and Muscovy, concluded in Kozatska Dibrova, between Konotip and Putyvl, on the occasion of the election of Hetman I. Samoilovych (June 1672). Although the articles, consisting of 10 points, formally ratified the *Hlukhiv Articles, in practice they further limited Ukraine's rights, particularly in foreign affairs, by prohibiting the hetman from having direct diplomatic relations with neighboring states. They also strengthened the interference of Muscovy in Ukrainian internal affairs by limiting the hetman's judicial powers and limiting the number and autonomy of the kompaniitsi (*Mercenary regiments). The Konotip Articles were published in Akty otnosiashchiesia k istorii Iuzhnoi i Zapadnoi Rossii, vol 9, and by A. Yakovliv in Ukrains'ko-Moskovs'ki dohovory v xvii–xviii vikakh (Ukrainian-Muskovite Agreements in the 17th–18th Centuries, 1934).

Konovalets, Myron [Konovalec'] (pseud: Zashkivsky), b 22 July 1894 in Zashkiv, Lviv county, Galicia, d 14 October 1980 in Munich. Journalist and civic figure; a lawyer by profession; brother of Ye. *Konovalets. In 1918–20 he served as a lieutenant in the Ukrainian Galician Army. In the interwar period he was a coeditor (1926–39) of the Lviv daily Novyi chas and secretary (1927–39) of the Supreme Executive of the Ridna Shkola society in Lviv. In 1940–5 he worked with the Ukrainian Central Committee as its office manager, legal adviser, and editor of Visnyk. After the Second World War he edited (1954–65) the weekly **Khrystyjans'kyi holos* in Munich, and presided (1950–5) over the Ukrainian Journalists' Association Abroad. He wrote numerous articles and pamphlets on current affairs.

Konovalets, Yevhen [Konovalec', Jevhen], b 14 June 1891 in Zashkiv, Lviv county, Galicia, d 23 May 1938 in Rotterdam. Military commander with the rank of colonel in the UNR Army, and political leader of the nationalist movement. Studying law at Lviv University, he was active in the Prosvita society and in the campaign for a Ukrainian university. He became active in politics as a student representative on the executive committee of the National Democratic party.

Serving as a second lieutenant in the Austrian army during the First World War, he was captured in 1915 by the Russians and interned in a POW camp near Tsaritsyn. There he joined a group of Galician officers (A. Melnyk, R. Sushko, V. Kuchabsky, I. Chmola, and F. Chernyk), escaped with them to Kiev, and organized the Galician-Bukovynian Battalion of Sich Riflemen in November 1917. Two months later Konovalets assumed command of the battalion, which was reorganized and renamed the First Battalion of Sich Riflemen. Committed to the idea of an independent and unified Ukraine, this force distinguished itself in suppressing the Bolshevik uprising in Kiev, in resisting M. Muravev's offensive, and in liberating Kiev by March 1918. Because they refused to recognize the new *Hetman government, the Sich Riflemen were disarmed and disbanded by the hetman's German allies. Prompted by the Ukrainian National Union, Konovalets obtained the hetman's permission to re-establish his unit and formed the Separate Detachment of Sich Riflemen in Bila Tserkva. In November 1918 this force played a key role in overthrowing P. Skoropadsky and restoring the UNR. Later Konovalets expanded the detachment into a division, corps, and finally, a group. In December 1919 the force was demobilized, and its commander was interned in a Polish POW camp in Lutske. With S. *Petliura's blessing he went to Prague in spring 1920 to win Galician support for a brigade formed of Ukrainian soldiers held in Czechoslovak internment camps and Italian POW camps. Ye. *Petrushevych's strong opposition put an end to this plan.

Yevhen Konoval

With the cessation of war, Konoval decided to continue the struggle for independence by underground means. In summer 1921 he returned to Lviv to take charge of the *Ukrainian Military Organization (UVO) and to build up its organizational network. Emigrating in December 1922, he lived with his family (wife Olha and son Yurii) in Berlin (1922–9), Geneva (1929–36), and Rome. He maintained control of the UVO and established contacts with foreign, particularly German and Lithuanian, intelligence and military circles. To win political support from Western governments and public sympathy for the cause of Ukrainian independence, he promoted the setting up of foreign-language press bureaus and publishing houses abroad. Recognizing the various groups of young nationalists at home as his natural allies in the struggle for independence, he unified them into one organization, the *Organization of Ukrainian Nationalists (OUN est 1929), and as the head of the Leadership of Ukrainian Nationalists (PUN), channeled their activities to politically motivated goals.

During a visit to the United States and Canada, Konoval encouraged his followers to establish Ukrainian veterans' associations, which became the nuclei of nationalist community organizations: the *Organization for the Rebirth of Ukraine in the United States and the *Ukrainian National Federation in Canada.

In the 10 years in which he led the OUN, Konoval consolidated its position in Ukraine and abroad, promoted the development of all-Ukrainian community organizations in France, Germany, and Austria, and tried to bring the Ukrainian national question to the attention of the League of Nations. His persistent efforts to revive the nationalist underground in Soviet Ukraine led to his assassination by a Bolshevik agent.

Konoval was one of the most prominent figures in 20th-century Ukrainian history. As a military officer he was noted for his organizational abilities and loyalty to the UNR. As a political leader he was able to unite high principles with operational flexibility and to combine creative thinking with intricate organization and effective action. He enjoyed enormous personal authority among OUN cadres, and the respect of even his political adversaries.

Konoval set down his recollections about the war period in Prychynky do istorii ukrains'koi revoliutsii (Materials for the History of the Ukrainian Revolution, 1928; 2nd edn, 1948). A special foundation, set up on the 20th anniversary of his death, published a collection of materials on his life and work, Ye. Konoval's ta ioho doba (Ye. Konoval and His Era, 1974), edited by Yu. Boiko and M. Borys.

V. Yaniv

Konowal, Filip [Konoval, Fylyp], b 15 September 1888 in Kudkiv, Podilia gubernia, d 3 June 1959 in Ottawa. War hero. Konowal immigrated to Canada in 1913 and joined the Canadian infantry in 1915. In August 1917, near Lens, France, he single-handedly destroyed two German machine-gun nests and killed 16 German soldiers before being severely wounded. For his bravery he was promoted from corporal to sergeant and awarded the Victoria Cross. He was patron of Ukrainian Branch No. 360 of the Royal Canadian Legion in Toronto.

Konrad, Mykola, b 16 May 1876 in Strusiv, Terebovlia county, Galicia, d 27 June 1941 in Stradch, Horodok county, Galicia. Ukrainian Catholic priest, pedagogue, and scholar. A graduate of the De Propaganda Fide College in Rome (PH D 1895 and D TH 1899), he taught catechism in Terebovlia and Ternopil. In 1930 he was invited to teach sociology and ancient and modern philosophy at the Greek Catholic Theological Academy in Lviv, and by 1937 he had attained the rank of full professor. At the same time he served as rector of the philosophy faculty and spiritual adviser to the Obnova Society of Ukrainian Catholic Students. His main publications are Narys istorii starodavn'oi filosofii (Survey of the History of Ancient Philosophy, 1934–5; repr, 1974) and Osnovni napriamky novit'oi sotsiologii (The Basic Trends in Modern Sociology, 1936). He was shot by agents of the Soviet secret police.

Konstankevych, Ivan [Konstankevych], b 10 October 1859 in the Lemko region, d 19 April 1918 near Shamokin, Pennsylvania. Greek Catholic priest; church and community leader among Ukrainian immigrants in the United States. A member of the *American circle, he came to the United States in 1893 and served the predominantly Galician parish of Shamokin. He was a founding member and the first secretary of the Ruthenian National Association (est 1894), and edited its newspaper Svoboda (1895–6). Konstankevych sharply attacked the Russophile and Magyarophile tendencies among the Galician and Transcarpathian immigrants, particularly the orientation of the *Greek Catholic Union. In 1901–7 he presided over the Sacerdotal Council, which demanded a separate Ukrainian episcopate from Rome. In 1910 he became Bishop S. Ortynsky's vicar-general. He established in Shamokin one of the first Ukrainian parish schools in the United States.

Konstantyn I, d 1159. The metropolitan of Kiev and All Rus'; by origin a Greek. In 1155 he was appointed metropolitan by the Patriarch of Constantinople in place of *Klym Smoliatych. When this led to popular dissatisfaction in Kiev, he willingly abdicated and moved to Chernihiv, where he died.

Konstantynohrad. See Krasnohrad.

Konstantynovych, Yaroslav [Konstantynovyč, Jaroslav], b 13 March 1893 in Torky, Peremyshl county, Galicia, d 1972 in Żelechów, Warsaw voivodeship, Poland. Art historian, critic, and educator. Completing his higher education in Munich, Vienna, and Lviv, he studied church art in Galicia, Austria, Yugoslavia, and Italy. His works include Wychowanie estetyczne w nowoczesnej szkole (Esthetic Education in the Modern School, 1936), Ikonoostasys: Studien und Forschungen (1939), and 'Prychynky do studii ukrains'koï ikony xiv–xvi st.' (Materials for the Study of Ukrainian Icons of the 14th–16th Centuries, Bohosloviia, vol 42 [1978]). He left unpublished manuscripts on Ukrainian iconostases of the 14th–16th centuries in Poland and 17th-century iconostases in Lviv, Peremyshl, Belz, and Kholm eparchies. He also photographed and described the abandoned churches in the Lemko region.

Archbishop Heorhii Konysky    Oleksander Konysky

Konysky, Heorhii [Konys'kyj, Heorhij] (secular name: Hryhorii; aka Yurii), b 20 November 1717 in Nizhen, d 13 February 1795 in Mahiliou, Belorussia. Orthodox bishop and church figure of noble descent. Konysky graduated from the Kiev Mohyla Academy in 1743, then served there as a professor of poetics, rhetoric, philosophy, and theology (1745–55) and as rector (1752–5). He was consecrated bishop of Mahiliou and Belorussia in 1775 and elevated to archbishop in 1783. In these posts he tried to return Uniates to the Orthodox church. In 1757 he founded a theological seminary in Mahiliou. A prolific writer, Konysky wrote many baroque poems; the play Voskresenie mertvykh (Resurrection of the Dead, published in Letopisy russkoi literatury, 1860); a philosophical textbook Philosophia peripatetica quadripartita (1747–51), which remained unpublished; and historical works such as Prawa i wolności obywatelów Korony Polskiej i Wielkiego Księstwa Litewskiego (The Rights and Freedoms of the Citizens of the Polish Kingdom and the Grand Duchy of Lithuania, 1767), Istoricheskoe izvestie o Belorusskoi eparkhii (Historical Information about the Belorussian Eparchy, 1776), Zapyska ... o tom, chto v Rossii do kontsa xvi veka ne bylo nikakoi unii s Rimskoi Tserkoviu (A Note ... about the Fact That until the End of the 16th Century There Was No Union with the Roman Church in Russia, published in 1847). Konysky was also considered by some scholars to have been the author of **Istoriia Rusov*. His collected works, in two volumes, were published in 1835 (2nd edn 1861) and his sermons in 1892.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Kashuba, M. Georgii Konisskii (Moscow 1979)

A. Zhukovsky

Konysky, Oleksander [Konys'kyj], b 18 August 1836 at Perekhodivtsi khutir, Nizhen county, Chernihiv gubernia, d 11 December 1900 in Kiev. Populist writer, lawyer, scholar, and community leader. From 1856 he worked in Poltava for the gubernial administration and as a lawyer. A leading member of the secret Poltava Hromada, he helped organize Sunday schools, prepared textbooks for them, initiated the creation of the Poltava Literary Society, and wrote articles on church affairs. Much of his time was also devoted to Ukrainian-language publishing, both in Russian-ruled Ukraine and in Galicia. During the suppression of Ukrainian culture in 1863 (see P. *Valuev), Konysky was arrested and exiled without a trial to Vologda in northern Russia. In 1865 he was allowed to move to Voronezh and then to go abroad. He stayed for several months in Galicia and Bukovyna and developed close ties with leading cultural figures there. He lived from 1866 in Katerynoslav and from 1872 until his death in Kiev, maintaining close ties with Galicia. He was active in the Kiev *Hromada. As a member of the Kiev city council, he tried to get Ukrainian introduced into the city's schools. One of the patrons of the literary Shevchenko Society in Lviv from 1873, he initiated its transformation into the *Shevchenko Scientific Society in 1893 and bequeathed 10,000 rubles to it.

As a writer, Konysky used over 100 pseudonyms (eg, Vernyvolia, O. Horovenko, F. Perebendia, O. Khutoryny). His writing first appeared in Chernigovskie gubernskie vedomosti in 1858. In his day his poetry (he was an epigone of T. Shevchenko) was very popular (eg, 'Ia ne boiis' tiurny i kata' [I'm Not Afraid of Prisons or Torturers] and 'Na pokhoron T. Shevchenka' [On the Occasion of T. Shevchenko's Funeral]). His more than 50 short stories and novelettes had more lasting value. They dealt primarily with peasant life and tribulations (eg, 'Khvora dusha' [A Sick Soul], 'Startsi' [Oldsters], and 'Za kryhoiu' [After the Ice]), and the social and national oppression of Ukraine (eg, 'Pivniv praznyk' [The Cock's Holiday], 'Mlyn' [The Mill], and 'Spokuslyva nyva'

[The Seductive Field]). In the novelettes Semen Zhuk i ioho rodychi (Semen Zhuk and His Relatives, 1875) and Iurii Horovenko (1885) he depicted the problems encountered by the Ukrainophile intelligentsia. In 1881 he published the literary almanac Luna, the first Ukrainian publication after the *Ems Ukase in Russian-ruled Ukraine.

Konysky also wrote many literary articles and studies. The best known are 'Vidchyty z istorii rus'ko-ukraïns'koho pys'menstva XIX v.' (Lectures on the History of Ruthenian-Ukrainian Literature of the 19th Century,' S'vit, 1881, nos 1–2, 8–10) and a fundamental biography of T. Shevchenko, Taras Shevchenko-Hrushivskyi: Khronika ioho zhyttia (Taras Shevchenko-Hrushivsky: A Chronicle of His Life, 2 vols, 1898, 1901). Most of the latter was published in the Lviv periodicals Slovo, Halychanyn, Pravda, Zoria, S'vit, Zapysky NTSh, and Literaturno-naukovyi vistnyk. He also translated Russian works by and about Shevchenko into Ukrainian. His collected belletristic works were published as Opovidannia (Stories, 4 vols, 1899–1903), Opovidannia ta virshi (Stories and Poems, 4 vols, 1918–19), and Vybrani tvory (Selected Works, 2 vols, 1927). In Soviet scholarship Konysky has been denigrated as a nationalist, and apart from a few small excerpts, his works were not published from the late 1920s until 1986, when an edition of his selected works appeared in Kiev. V. Domanytsky's bibliography of his writings appeared in Kievskaiia starina, 1901, no. 1.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Franko, I. Pro zhyttie i diial'nist' Oleksandra Konys'koho (Lviv 1901)
 Hrushevs'kyi, M. 'Pamiaty Oleksandra Konys'koho,' ZNTSh, 39 (1901)
 Iefremov, S. Introduction to O. Konys'kyi, Vybrani tvory, 1 (Kiev 1927)

I. Koshelivets

Kooperatyvna respublika (Co-operative Republic). Monthly journal published from 1928 to 1939 by the Audit Union of Ukrainian Co-operatives in Lviv. Edited by K. *Kobersky, the journal was devoted to theoretical problems of co-operation and to general economic questions. It ceased publication when Western Ukraine was occupied by Soviet troops.

Kooperatyvna rodyna (Co-operative Family). A popular co-operative educational monthly published from 1934 to 1939 by the *Audit Union of Ukrainian Co-operatives in Lviv. Aimed at members of Ukrainian co-operative unions, it had a circulation of 50,000. Its editors were O. Lutsky and R. Kupchynsky. A special section of the paper, Dlia nashoi khaty, was edited by the Ukrainske Narodne Mystetstvo co-operative.

Kooperatyvna zoria (Co-operative Star). A semi-monthly magazine for Ukrainian consumer co-operatives, published by the *Dniprosouiz union in Kiev. Fifty-six issues were published from 1918 to 1920. The contributors included Kh. Baranovsky, A. Serbynenko, I. Chopivsky, P. Vysochansky, D. Koliukh, and A. Kharchenko.

Kooperatyvne budivnytstvo (Co-operative Construction). The official journal of the *All-Ukrainian Association of Consumer Co-operative Organizations, published from 1923 to 1935, mostly in Kharkiv and in the final year in Kiev. First it came out monthly in Russian under the name Kooperativnyi biuletien' (Co-operative Bulletin, 1923–6). At the beginning of 1927 it was renamed and converted into a Ukrainian semimonthly. In 1931–3 it came out every 10 days, and starting with the ninth issue in 1933 once a month. Kooperatyvne budivnytstvo included the supplements Kooperatyvno-osvitnia robota (Co-operative Educational Work, 27 issues from 1927 to 1929) and Informatsiynyi biuletien' Vukoopspilky (Information Bulletin of the Vukoopspilka, 31 issues from 1930 to 1931).

Kooperatyvne molocharstvo (Co-operative Dairying). A popular monthly for members of dairy co-operatives published from 1926 to 1939 by the *Maslosouiz dairy union in Lviv. At first it was a supplement to **Hospodars'ko-kooperativnyi chasopys*. Its editors were A. Mudryk, A. Pali, and M. Khronoviat.

Kooperatyvne zhyttia (Co-operative Life). The leading newspaper for activists in all branches of the co-operative movement, published in Kharkiv semiweekly (1926–7) and then three times a week (1928) by Knyhospilka. Its circulation was 10,000. In 1929 it was reduced to a one-page section of Visti VUTsVK.

Kopa court. See Community court.

Kopach, Ivan [Kopač], b 4 March 1870 in Hrozova, Turka county, Galicia, d 7 October 1952 in Lviv. Classical philologist, philosopher, educator, and civic leader. Kopach received a PH D from the University of Vienna (1901), then taught at the Academic Gymnasium of Lviv before becoming the regional inspector of Ukrainian gymnasia in Galicia (1908–29). He was the president of the Boian music society and the Ukrainska Besida club. After the Soviet occupation of Western Ukraine he was appointed professor of philosophy at Lviv University. Kopach wrote a number of articles on Greek philosophy, Latin philology, and pedagogical and philosophical issues, and coauthored a secondary-school Latin grammar and a Ukrainian reader.

Kopaihorod [Kopajhorod]. v-8. Town smt (1979 pop 2,000) in Bar raion, Vinnytsia oblast, situated on the Nemiiia River in eastern Podilia. First mentioned in the early 17th century as Novhorod, in 1624 it received the rights of Magdeburg law and was renamed. It was the site of several battles: in July 1919 Otaman Yu. Tiutiunyk's units, and in November 1919 the Sich Riflemen, fought the Bolsheviks; and in 1920 the UNR forces defeated the Bolsheviks there.

Kopelev, Lev, b 9 April 1912 in Kiev. Writer and political dissident of Jewish descent. Kopelev was active in the Jewish sections of the CP(B) in the 1920s and as a Party agitator during the collectivization of agriculture in Ukraine. During the Second World War he was imprisoned for trying to prevent his detachment in Germany from committing acts of rape and pillage. In the 1950s he became active in the dissident movement and began writing novels. In 1980 he emigrated to West Germany. Kopelev's three volumes of memoirs – translated into English as To be Preserved Forever (1977), The Education of a True Believer (1980), and Ease My Sorrows (1983) – contain much information on life in Soviet Ukraine in the 1920s, particularly on the forced collectivization of agriculture that precipitated the man-made *famine of 1932–3.

Kopernicki, Izydor, b 17 April 1825 in Chyzhivka, Zvenyhorodka county, Kiev gubernia, d 17 April 1891 in Cracow. Polish physician, anthropologist, and ethnographer. A graduate of Kiev University (1849), he was a military doctor in Ukraine and became a teacher of anatomy at Kiev University in 1857. He took part in the Polish Insurrection of 1863–4 as a commissioner in Lviv, was imprisoned, and then lived as a refugee in Paris, Belgrade, and Bucharest, where he founded and directed the Anatomy Museum. From 1871 he worked as a physician in Cracow. He also studied (PH D 1876) and taught anthropology at Cracow University, from 1886 as a professor. In 1875 he became the secretary of the Anthropological Commission of the Polish Academy of Learning. He edited many ethnographic publications and the journal Zbiór Wiadomości do Antropologii Krajowej (1877–91), to which he contributed valuable studies on the anthropology and ethnography of Ukraine, particularly of the inhabitants of the Carpathians, where he spent much of his time. In 1889 he published O góralach ruskich w Galicyi: Zarys etnograficzny (On the Ruthenian Mountaineers in Galicia: An Ethnographic Sketch). He is the author of over 120 works; most of his research on Ukraine remains unpublished. In 1891 Kopernicki published O. *Kolberg's books on the Kholm and Peremyshl regions. He had cordial relations with I. Franko, F. Vovk, and other Ukrainian scholars.

M. Hnatiukivsky

Koperzhynska, Nonna [Koperzhyn's'ka], b 1 May 1920 in Kiev. Character actress; daughter of K. *Koperzhynsky. A graduate of the Kiev Institute of Theater Arts (1941), since 1946 she has worked in the Kiev Ukrainian Drama Theater. Her main roles include Vustia Shurai in M. Starytsky's Oi ne khody, Hrytsiu, ta i na vechornytsi (Don't Go to the Party, Hryts) and Stepanyda in his Ne sudylos' (It Was Not Fated), Hanna in I. Tobilevych's Beztalanna (The Hapless Woman), Nastia in M. Kulish's Patetychna Sonata (Sonata Pathétique), Varvara in O. Korniiuchuk's Kryla (Wings), and Claire Zachanassian in F. Dürrenmatt's Der Besuch der alten Dame. She has appeared also in films; eg, in Dolia Maryny (Maryna's Fate, an adaptation of T. Shevchenko's poem), Ukradene shchastia (Stolen Happiness, an adaptation of I. Franko's play), and Za dvoma zaitsiamy (Chasing Two Hares, an adaptation of M. Starytsky's play).

Koperzhynsky, Kostiantyn [Koperzhyn's'kyj, Kostjantyn], b 4 November 1894 in Hlibiv, Nova Ushytsia county, Podilia gubernia, d 18 March 1953 in Leningrad. Folklorist, literary and theater scholar, and bibliographer. A student of V. Peretts, he graduated from Petrograd University in 1918 and taught at Leningrad (1923–5) and Odessa (1925–8) universities. From 1928 to 1934 he was a member of the VUAN Ethnographic Commission and an associate of the Commission for Old Ukrainian Literature. In 1934 he was imprisoned in a Stalinist concentration camp. After his release he taught at Irkutsk (1937–45) and Leningrad (1945–53) universities, but no longer wrote in Ukrainian or on Ukrainian subjects. From the mid-1920s to the early 1930s his articles and reviews appeared in several VUAN periodicals and collections. They include articles on late-18th/early-19th-century theater life in Podilia and the Chernihiv region; M. Kotsiubynsky; the 16th-century writer V. Surazky; ancient Slavic harvest and new-year rituals and the concept of time; M. Komarov; Ukrainian magic, acrobatic, and pantomime performances in the late 18th and early 19th centuries; and M. Drahomanov's political tactics. He wrote several survey articles on contemporary Ukrainian literary and theater scholarship. Some of his articles also appeared as offprints. He is the author of Obzhynky: Obriady zboru vrozhaiu u slov'ians'kykh narodiv u naidavnishu dobu rozvytku (Obzhynky: Harvest Rituals among the Slavic Peoples during the Earliest Period of Development, 1926).

M. Hnatiukivsky

Kopniaiev, Pavlo [Kopnjajev], b 27 February 1867 in Uralsk, d 3 June 1932 in Kharkiv. Electrical engineer. He taught at the Kharkiv Technological Institute, where in 1898 he introduced a specialization in electrical engineering and in 1921 a separate faculty of electrical engineering. His publications deal with the theory of electric machinery, particularly trolley motors. He wrote the first textbooks in electrical engineering in the Russian Empire.

Kopnin, Pavel, b 27 January 1922 in Gzhel, Moscow gubernia, d 27 June 1971 in Moscow. Soviet philosopher; from 1967 full member of the AN URSR. A graduate of Moscow University (1944), he held the Chair of Philosophy at Tomsk University and at the USSR Academy of Sciences before coming to Ukraine in 1958 to head the philosophy department at the Kiev Polytechnical Institute and at Kiev University. In 1962 he was appointed director of the Institute of Philosophy of the AN URSR, and in 1968 director of the Institute of Philosophy of the USSR Academy of Sciences in Moscow. His main contributions are in the philosophy of science, dialectical materialism, and the history of philosophy. Besides numerous articles, Kopnin wrote Dialektika kak logika (Dialectics as Logic, 1961), Gipoteza i poznanie deistvitel'nosti (Hypothesis and Knowledge of Reality, 1962), and Ideia kak forma myshleniia (Idea as a Form of Thought, 1963).

Köppen, Peter (Keppen, Petr), b 2 March 1793 in Kharkiv, d 4 June 1864 in Karabah in the Crimea. Statistician, bibliographer, geographer, and ethnographer; full member of the Russian Academy of Sciences. From 1829 to 1834 he worked in the Crimea and traveled annually through southern Ukraine, where he collected a great deal of information on its geography and natural history. Among his numerous works are an ethnographic map of Russia (1851), pioneering population studies of Russia, studies of Tavriia gubernia, and Materiialy dlia istorii prosveshcheniia v Rosii (Materials for the History of Education in Russia, 3 vols, 1819, 1825, 1827). His research served as the model for the 69-volume register of Russia's towns and villages.

Koptilov, Viktor, b 3 July 1930 in Kiev. Literary critic, linguist, and translator. A doctor of philological sciences, he teaches at Kiev University. He is the author of three books on literary translation and stylistics (1971, 1972, 1982) and has translated the works of E. Whitman, F. Sagan, and several Polish writers.

Kopychyntsi [Kopyčynci]. iv-6. Town (1973 pop 7,500) in Husiatyn raion, Ternopil oblast, situated on the Nichlava River in western Podilia. It was first mentioned in the early 14th century. It has a toy factory, a canning plant, and an agricultural tekhnikum.

Oleksander Kopylenko

Kopylenko, Oleksander, b 1 August 1900 in Kostiantynohrad (now Krasnohrad), Poltava gubernia, d 1 December 1958 in Kiev. Writer. In the 1920s he belonged to the writers' groups *Pluh, *Hart, *Vaplite, and *Prolitfront. His prose works of the 1920s – including the story collections Kara-Krucha (1923) and Imenem ukrains'koho narodu (In the Name of the Ukrainian People, 1924), the novel Buinyi khmil' (Wild Hops, 1925), the story collection Tverdyyi materiiial (Hard Material, 1928), and the novel Vyzvolennia (Liberation, 1930) – depict the revolutionary and early Soviet years in Ukraine in the expressionistic manner of M. *Khvylovy. The last two publications were subjected to severe Party criticism for their 'pessimistic' and 'individualistic' approach.

Kopylenko was one of the first members of Vaplite to accept the Party's dictates on literature, and he managed to survive the Stalinist terror as one of the organizers of the Writers' Union of Ukraine. His novel Narodzhuiet'sia misto (The City Is Born, 1932) was an early socialist-realist work about industrialization. His novels for adolescents – Duzhe dobre (Very Good, 1935) and Desiatyklasnyky (The Tenth Graders, 1938) – are considered his best works. His postwar novel Leitenanty (Lieutenants, 1947) is a typical hackneyed Soviet work about postwar reconstruction. His last novel, Zemlia velyka (The Great Earth, 1957), is an attempt at a more serious treatment of the life of the rural intelligentsia, careerism, and bureaucratization. In addition to many stories for adults and children, Kopylenko wrote several plays, including Khurtovyna (The Tempest, 1943) and Chomu ne hasnut' zori (Why the Stars Don't Go Out, 1944). His expurgated works in four volumes were published posthumously in 1961–2.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Svider, P. Oleksandr Kopylenko: Zhyttia i tvorchist' (Kiev 1960)
– Oleksandr Kopylenko (1900–1958) (Kiev 1962)
Kopylenko, Ts. and L. (eds). Pro Oleksandra Kopylenka: Spohady (Kiev 1971)

I. Koshelivets

Kopynsky, Isaia [Kopyns'kyj, Isaija], b ? in Galicia, d 5 October 1640. Orthodox church figure and Kievan metropolitan. He studied at the Lviv Brotherhood School and entered a monastery as a youth. Eventually he became the hegumen of the Kiev Epiphany Brotherhood and Mezhyhiria Transfiguration monasteries and one of the founders of the Kievan Epiphany Brotherhood School. In 1620, when the Orthodox hierarchy was renewed by Patriarch Theophanes of Jerusalem, Kopynsky was consecrated bishop of Peremyshl and Sambir; however, he was not permitted to assume his post by the Polish king, and he was instead named bishop of Chernihiv and Smolensk. He was well known as an organizer of monasteries; through his efforts the Uhar Transfiguration, Hustynia Trinity, and other monasteries were founded. In 1631 he succeeded Metropolitan Y. Boretsky as Kievan metropolitan.

Kopynsky was a conservative and a decided foe of Catholicism and the Uniate church. He was also pro-Muscovite and favored conciliation with the tsar and the Moscow metropolitan. After the legalization of the Orthodox hierarchy by Poland in 1632 and the election of P. *Mohyla as metropolitan of Kiev, Kopynsky was forced by the latter to relinquish his post. He became the supervisor of the Kiev Saint Michael's Golden-Domed Monastery in 1633, and lobbied unsuccessfully to regain his title from Mohyla, supported by many monasteries and Cossacks. In 1635 he moved to Polisia, and in 1638 back to Kiev, where he probably died.

Kopystensky, Mykhail [Kopystens'kyj, Myxajil] (secular name: Matei), ?–1610. Orthodox bishop. A member of the Peremyshl aristocracy, he became the bishop of Peremyshl eparchy in 1591. In 1596 he refused to support the Church Union of *Berestia and remained Orthodox. He continued consecrating priests for other Orthodox eparchies and defending Orthodox interests. In 1606 he addressed a letter to a congress of Orthodox nobles in Lublin who opposed the Church Union, in which he described the persecution of Orthodox faithful. After his death, the Ukrainian Orthodox church was left with only one bishop.

Archimandrite Zakhariia
Kopystensky

Teofil Kopystynsky

Kopystensky, Zakhariia [Kopystens'kyj, Zaxarija], b ? in Peremyshl, d 21 March 1627 in Kiev. Outstanding Orthodox theologian, writer, and churchman; nephew of M. *Kopystensky. He probably studied at the Lviv Dormition Brotherhood School before traveling throughout the Balkans and moving to Kiev in 1616, where he joined the Kiev Epiphany Brotherhood. Fluent in Greek and Latin, in Kiev he engaged in publishing and writing, especially *polemical literature. On 20 November 1624, he became the archimandrite of the Kievan Cave Monastery. He published several translations of Greek religious books, including **Chasoslov* (1617), Nomokanon ... (Nomokanon ..., 1625), and the works of St John Chrysostom. His major work is **Palinodiia, ili kniga oborony ... vskhodnei tserkvy ...* (A Palinode, or a Book in Defense ... of the Eastern Church ..., 1621). Although this work was only published in 1876, it was widely read in Orthodox circles in manuscript. Palinodiia is a comprehensive exposition of the Orthodox theology of the Kiev school, written in response to Obrona jedności cerkiewnej (A Defense of Church Unity) by the Uniate hegumen of Vilnius monastery, L. Krevza. This work not only showed his skill as a polemicist, but also demonstrated his great erudition and knowledge of church history and theology. His sermons on the grave of Ye. Pletenetsky, his predecessor as archimandrite of the Kievan Cave Monastery, were published in 1625, and Kniga o vere iedynoi ... (A Book on the True Faith ..., ca 1620) has been attributed to him.

A. Zhukovsky

Kopystiansky, Adriian [Kopystjans'kyj, Adrijan], b 1871 in Lisko county, Galicia, d 1934 in Lviv. Historian. Kopystiansky taught in the gymnasium in Stanyslaviv (now Ivano-Frankivske) and at the Academic Gymnasium of Lviv. A Russophile, he headed the *Kachkovsky Society in Lviv and published popular histories of Galicia in Russian, including the three-volume Istoriia Rusi (A History of Ruthenia, 1931–3). He also published a collection of documents on the Lviv Stauropegial Brotherhood and Istoriia Volyns'koi Tserkvy (A History of the Volhynian Church, 1929).

Kopystynsky, Teofil [Kopystyns'kyj], b 15 April 1844 in Peremyshl, Galicia, d 5 July 1916 in Lviv. Monumentalist painter and portraitist. A graduate of the Cracow School of Fine Arts (1871) and the Vienna Academy of Art (1872), he spent his life painting churches, iconostases, and icons in Lviv and the surrounding villages. His more important works have been preserved: the murals of the wooden church in Batiatychi, the altar icon of the Transfiguration in the Church of the Transfiguration in Lviv, The Crucifixion (1902) in ss Cyril and Methodius's Church in Sokolia near Buzk, the murals (1911–12) of St Michael's Church in Rudnyky, and the iconostases in the churches in Zhovtantsi, Batiatychi, Zhydachiv, Myklashiv (1908), and Synevidsko Vyzhnie. He was also recognized as a restorer and conservator of old art. From 1878 to 1899 Kopystynsky restored a number of religious masterpieces: the Byzantine altar icon of the Annunciation in Zahiria; two 17th-century paintings under the arcades of the Dormition Church in Lviv, Jerusalem and the Holy Land and Atons'ka Hora (Mount Athos); the frescoes in St Martin's Church and the altar of the Church of Our Lady of the Snows (both Roman Catholic churches in Lviv); the frescoes of the Wawel Cathedral in Cracow; the murals of the Lubomirski chapel at the Dominican Church and the 17th-century sacristy of St Mary's Church in Cracow. In 1888 he cleaned and restored 150 old Ukrainian icons at the Stauropegion Museum in Lviv. Kopystynsky established a reputation as a master portraitist with such works as the portraits of I. and L. Kovshevych (1867), A. Yanovsky, Bishop I. Stupnytsky, and a Dalmatian lady (1872). From 1872 to 1895 he painted 17 portraits of prominent Ukrainian social and cultural figures of the 19th century, as well as Hetman P. Sahaidachny and Metropolitan P. Mohyla.

Kopystynsky was a leading illustrator in Western Ukraine. He illustrated the religious semimonthly Poslannyk (1889–1911), the children's magazine Dzvinok (Bell, 1890–1914), the Prosvita calendar, and I. Franko's Lys Mykyta (Mykyta the Fox) and Pryhody Don Kikhota (The Adventures of Don Quixote). He painted numerous canvases, including Hutsul from Lypovytsia, Grandfather, Blind Man with Guide, In a Peasant Cottage, and Kolomyiky. Kopystynsky taught drawing in secondary schools in Lviv and participated in the exhibitions of the Society of Friends of the Fine Arts. His works have been preserved in the Lviv Museum of Ukrainian Art and in private collections.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Tkachenko, M. Teofil Kopystyns'kyi (Kiev 1972)

S. Hordynsky

Kopytov, Viktor, b 21 November 1906 in Kurgan, Tobolsk gubernia. Specialist in metallurgy, thermal engineering, and industrial furnaces; since 1967 full member of the AN URSR. A graduate of the Ural Polytechnical Institute, in 1950 he joined the AN URSR Institute of Gas, and in 1952 became its director. His publications deal with coal gasification, heat transfer in furnaces, new industrial uses of gases, and air pollution.

Kopytsia, Davyd [Kopycja], b 7 July 1906 in Sloboda, Lityn county, Podilia gubernia, d 15 December 1965 in Kiev. Writer and literary critic. After graduating from the Kharkiv Institute of People's Education (1929), he worked as an editor in Kharkiv and belonged to the writers' group **Molodniak*. He also worked as a scenarist and was the deputy director and director of the Odessa Artistic Film Studio (1932–4), a docent and dean of the Kiev Film Institute (1934–6), and head of the screenplay department at the Kiev Artistic Film Studio (1936). In 1938 he became a senior research fellow and deputy director of the AN URSR Institute of Literature. He was the head of propaganda for the CC CP(B)U (1946–8), the Ukrainian deputy minister of culture (1948–57), a candidate member of the CC CPU from 1952, and the director of the Kiev Artistic Film Studio from 1957.

Kopytsia debuted as a literary critic of the vulgar Marxist variety in the early 1930s. He wrote several stories and many articles on 19th-century and Soviet Ukrainian writers. He also coedited the editions of the works of T. Shevchenko (10 vols, 1939–44) and I. Franko (20 vols, 1950–6) that were prepared by the Institute of Literature. A selection of his criticism was published posthumously in 1968.

I. Koshelivets

Korablov, Ipolit [Korabl'ov], b 9 February 1871 in Gorodok, Dukhovshchina county, Smolensk gubernia, d 7 July 1951 in Uman, Cherkasy oblast. Apiarist. After graduating from the Petrovskoe Agricultural Academy in Moscow (1902), he conducted research on beekeeping and silkworm breeding in Poltava, Chernihiv, and Kharkiv gubernias. He lectured for many years at the Uman School of Orcharding and in 1921 was appointed professor at the Uman Agricultural Institute. He directed an experimental apiary and wrote numerous works on beekeeping.

Korba, Yosyp, b 13 May 1921 in Chmelova, Bardějov county, Slovakia. Character actor. Since 1946 he has worked in the Ukrainian National Theater in Prešov. His repertoire includes Uncle Lev in Lesia Ukrainka's Lisova pisnia (The Forest Song), Ivonika in Zemlia (Earth, an adaptation of O. Kobylanska's novel), Zadorozhnyi in I. Franko's Ukradene shchastia (Stolen Happiness), Chasnyk in O. Korniiuchuk's V stepakh Ukraïny (In the Steppes of Ukraine), Lear in W. Shakespeare's King Lear, and Dr Galen in K. Čapek's Bílá nemoc (The White Plague).

Korbutiak, Vasyl [Korbutjak, Vasyl'], b 27 November 1883 in Balyntsi, Kolomyia county, Galicia, d 1937? in Soviet Ukraine. Communist activist. From 1912 to 1920 he lived in Canada and the United States, joining the Ukrainian Federation of the Socialist Party of America in 1916. In 1920 he returned to Galicia, joined the underground Communist Party of Eastern Galicia (renamed the *Communist Party of Western Ukraine), and organized its cells in the Kolomyia region. He was elected to the party's CC in 1924. In 1930 he moved to Soviet Ukraine. Arrested during the Stalinist terror ca 1933, he died in a concentration camp or was shot.

Korchak burial site. An early Slavic burial ground of the middle of the first millennium AD situated on the Teteriv River near Korchak in Zhytomyr raion. The kurbans at the site were excavated in 1921. The dead had been cremated. A settlement contemporary with the burial ground was discovered adjacent to it. Similar burial sites and settlements were excavated in 1925, 1946–7, and 1956 in Volhynian Polisia. They are believed to be associated with the *Derevlians, one of the East Slavic tribes, and form part of the *Korchak culture.

Korchak culture. An archeological culture of the late 5th to 7th centuries AD, discovered in 1921 by S. Hamchenko near the village of Korchak in Zhytomyr county (see *Korchak burial site). It was a variation of the Prague culture (of the middle of the 1st millennium AD) and spread to Ukraine from the territories of Poland and Czechoslovakia. The Korchak culture was widespread in eastern Volhynia. Monuments of the culture were excavated in the 1950s and 1960s by I. Rusanova and described by her in a series of articles. The population of the Korchak culture lived in pit dwellings with stone ovens in predominantly unfortified settlements. Only one hill fort, near Zymne, Volodymyr-Volynskyi county, is known. The dead were cremated and buried in small kurbans and in moundless burial grounds. A pagan sanctuary on the Hnylopiad River near Zhytomyr was uncovered in 1964. The tribes of the Korchak culture practiced agriculture and animal husbandry. Crafts were well developed, especially at the Zymne hill fort, which was a center of blacksmithing and jewelry production. The Korchak culture is the earliest archeological culture discovered in Eastern Europe that scholarly consensus positively identifies with the ancient Slavs. Its features are visible in the subsequent cultures of the early medieval Slavs and Kievan Rus'.

V. Mezentsev

Ovksentii Korchak-Chepurkivsky

Korchak-Chepurkivsky, Ovksentii [Korčak-Čepurkivs'kyj, Ovksentij], b 28 February 1857 in Kostiantynohrad, Poltava gubernia, d 27 November 1947 in Kiev. Hygienist and epidemiologist; from 1921 full member of the AN URSR. After graduating from Kharkiv University (1883) and working as a sanitation and public-health physician in several gubernias, from 1903 he was a lecturer and then professor of hygiene at Kiev University. During the Hetman government he headed the sanitation department of the Ministry of Health and served as chairman of the medical faculty of Kiev University; while under the Directory he served as minister of national health. He held the Chair of Public Health (renamed the Chair of Hygiene and Sanitation) at the AN URSR (1921–34) and chaired a department of the academy's Institute of Demography and Sanitation Statistics (1934–8). He also served as the academy's permanent secretary (1928–34). His numerous publications deal with diphtheria epidemics, the antagonistic relationship between diphtheria and other infectious childhood diseases, sanitation, and the history of zemstvo medicine. In 1927 he proposed the first systematic Ukrainian nomenclature of diseases.

Korchak-Chepurkivsky, Yurii [Korčak-Čepurkivs'kyj, Jurij], b 15 December 1896 in Kishinev, Bessarabia, d 20 August 1967 in Kiev. Demographer; the son of O. *Korchak-Chepurkivsky. A graduate of the Kiev Institute of the National Economy (1922), while still a student he began working for the VUAN Demographic Institute (see *Demography). In 1925–8, he worked at the demographic department of the Central Statistical Administration of Ukraine. He became a scholarly associate of the VUAN Chair of Hygiene and Sanitation and institutes of Maternity Care and of Socialist Health Protection in 1928 and a senior associate of the AN URSR Institute of Demography and Sanitation Statistics in 1934. In 1938 the institute was closed down and its staff, including Korchak-Chepurkivsky, were arrested and imprisoned.

After the Second World War Korchak-Chepurkivsky was allowed to set up and direct a methodological bureau of health statistics in Samarkand, Uzbekistan, and then to move to Moscow, where he worked in the statistical department of the Rusakov Children's Hospital. He was permitted to retire in Kiev in 1957. There he continued his research and published his invaluable theoretical and applied population studies. Korchak-Chepurkivsky's studies on mortality among various age and occupational groups in Ukraine are particularly significant. He devised original research methods and determined the reliability of the statistical materials he used. His last work, which he did not manage to complete, was devoted to analyzing the losses in Ukraine's population during the man-made *famine of 1932–3 and the Stalinist terror of the 1930s. A volume of his Izbrannyye demograficheskie issledovaniia (Selected Demographic Studies) was published posthumously in 1970. His other major works are Materiialy sanitarnoi statystyky Ukraïny 1876–1914 rr. (Materials on the Sanitation Statistics of Ukraine in 1876–1914, 1926), Tablytsi dozhyvannia i spodiavanoho zhyttia liudnosti USRR 1925–1926 (Tables of Life Spans and Life Expectancies of the Population of the Ukrainian SSR for 1925–1926, 1929), and Pryrodnyi rukh naseleñnia Ukraïny v 1926 rotsi (Natural Population Changes in Ukraine in 1926, 1929).

S. Maksudov

Korchev (also K'rchev, Kr'chev). The old Slavic name for a 10th–12th-century city in Tmutorokan principality, now the city of Kerch. It was an important trade center linking Kievan Rus' with the Crimea, the Caucasus, and the Mediterranean Sea. Earlier, the city was known as *Panticapaeum.

Korchuvate burial site. An early Slavic burial ground of the *Zarubyntsi culture (2nd century BC to 1st century AD), discovered in Korchuvate near Kiev in 1937 and excavated in 1940–1. Over 100 moundless burials, most of them with cremated remains, earthenware, iron knives, bronze ornaments, beads, ceramics similar to those of the Scythians, and animal bones, were found.

Korchynsky, Michael [Korčyns'kyj, Myxajlo], b 11 April 1918 in Kiev. Metallurgist. Korchynsky completed his engineering studies at the Lviv Polytechnical Institute in 1942 and remained as an associate there until 1944. Employed as an engineer by the US Army in Regensburg (1945–50), he immigrated to the United States in 1950 and began a long career as a researcher and alloy developer with Union Carbide. The holder of several US and international patents and a recipient of the prestigious Eisenman Award of the American Society of Metallurgists (1986), Korchynsky has done research on materials for high-temperature service, nuclear fuels, and particularly the technology and application of high-strength, low-alloy steel.

Korchynsky, Mykhailo [Korčyns'kyj, Myxajlo], b 27 March 1885 in Zaluchia, Kamianets-Podilskyi county, Podilia gubernia, d 7 October 1937 in Lviv. Political and civic leader. A lawyer by profession, from 1908 to 1917 he was active in the Ukrainian community in St Petersburg, serving as chairman of the local young hromada, of the Society of Ukrainian Progressives, and of the Ukrainian Civic Club. Under the Provisional Government he was appointed deputy to the gubernial commissar of Bukovyna. Korchynsky sat in the Central Rada as a deputy from the Ukrainian Party of Socialists-Federalists. Under the Directory he served as state secretary in V. Chekhivsky's and S. Ostapenko's cabinets. He was one of the advocates and then a member of the Council of the Republic, which convened in Tarnów in 1921. After the First World War Korchynsky worked in Ukrainian institutions in Galicia: he headed the legal department of the Audit Union of Ukrainian Co-operatives in Lviv from 1922, served on the Supreme Executive of the Prosvita society (1932–7), sat on the legal commission of the Shevchenko Scientific Society, and belonged to the Ukrainian Society of Aid to Emigrants from Eastern Ukraine. His articles appeared in the co-operative and general Ukrainian press.

Mykhailo Korchynsky

Kordiuk, Bohdan [Kordjuk], b 17 January 1908 in Lviv. Geologist; political figure and publicist. He studied at Lviv and Berlin universities. An active member of the *Ukrainian Military Organization and the OUN, he headed the latter's Home Executive in 1932–3 before being imprisoned by the Polish police. For most of 1941–5 he was imprisoned in German concentration camps. Since the Second World War he has lived in Munich, where he headed the Political Council of the OUN Abroad faction (1958–79), was the chief editor of the monthly Ukraïns'kyi samostiinyk (1958–75), and was a professor at the Ukrainian Technical and Husbandry Institute and the Ukrainian Free University from the 1960s. In 1976 he was one of the founders of the *Ukrainian Democratic Alliance. He is the author of many publicistic articles, mainly on Ukrainian-Jewish relations and the need for mutual dialogue.

Kordium, Arnold [Kordjum, Arnol'd], b 13 July 1890 in Stanyslaviv (now Ivano-Frankivske), d 29 August 1969 in Kiev. Film director and screenwriter. From 1924 to 1935 he worked as a filmmaker in Yalta, Odessa, and Kiev, and in Tashkent from 1936 to 1939. After the war he worked at the Kiev Studio of Popular Science Films (1947–57). He directed such films as Za lisom (Beyond the Forest, 1926), Sprava ch. 128 (Case No. 128, 1927), Ostanniï lotsman (The Last Pilot, 1930), Askaniia Nova (1947), and Soniashnyk (The Sunflower, 1949). Kordium usually wrote the screenplays of films he directed.

Kordt, Veniamyn, b 19 February 1860 in Tartu, Estonia, d 24 December 1934. Historian, cartographer, and bibliographer, of German descent. A graduate of Yurev (Tartu) University (1888), from 1894 he lectured at Kiev University and was the director of the university's library. Kordt was a member of the *Kiev Archeographic Commission and the vUAN Archeographic Commission, and one of the organizers in 1918 of the National Library of the Ukrainian State (later the *Central Scientific Library of the AN URSR), where he headed the cartography department. Kordt's main works deal with the history of Ukrainian cartography: Materialy po istorii russkoi kartografii (Materials on the History of Russian Cartography, 2 vols, 1899, 1910) and Materialy do istorii kartografii Ukraïny (Materials for the History of Ukrainian Cartography, 1931). He also wrote Chuzhozemni podorozhi po Skhidnii levropi do 1700 r. (Foreign Travels in Eastern Europe up to 1700, 1926), articles on Swedish sources to Ukrainian history in Zapysky Istorychno-filohichnoho viddilu vUAN and Ukrains'kyi arkhеоhrafichnyi zbirnyk, and several bibliographic studies.

Korduba, Feliks, b 28 May 1908 in Ternopil, d 21 January 1987 in Munich. OUN activist, editor, journalist, civic leader. In 1930 Korduba was arrested by the Polish authorities for his involvement in the OUN in Galicia and was imprisoned until 1939. In 1943 he joined the *Division Galizien. A postwar refugee in Austria and Bavaria, from 1951 he worked for the Logos Ukrainian publishing house in Munich, of which he became director in 1977. For many years he was the secretary of the Ukrainian Journalists' Association Abroad. From 1961 to 1968 he was the president of the Supreme Council of the *Central Representation of the Ukrainian Emigration in Germany. He was the author of numerous articles dealing with historical and sociopolitical issues.

Myron Korduba

Korduba, Myron, b 7 March 1876 in Ostriv near Ternopil, d 2 May 1947 in Lviv. Historian. He studied at the universities of Lviv (1893–5, under M. Hrushevsky) and Vienna (1895–8). He worked as a gymnasium teacher in Chernivtsi (1900–18), Lviv, and Kholm and was a professor at Warsaw (1929–39) and Lviv (1944–7) universities. In 1903 he was elected full member of the Shevchenko Scientific Society, and in 1923 he became director of its historical-philosophical section. After the Second World War he was a research associate of the Lviv Branch of the Institute of History of the AN URSR. He wrote works on the history and historical geography of medieval Ukraine: they include, in ZNTSh, 'Persha derzhava slov'ians'ka' (The First Slavic State, vol 13 [1896]), 'Suspil'ni verstvy ta politychni partii v Halyts'kim kniazivstvi do polovyny XIII st.' (Social Strata and Political Parties in Halych Principality to the Mid-13th Century, vols 31–2 [1899]), and 'Zakhidne pohranychchia Halyts'koi derzhavy mizh Karpatamy ta dolishnym Sianom v XIII st.' (The Western Frontier of the Galician State between the Carpathians and the Lower Sian River in the 13th Century, vols 138–40 [1925]). He wrote a number of important studies of the Khmelnytsky period: 'Venetsiis'ke posol'stvo do Khmel'nyts'koho (1650)' (The Venetian Legation to Khmelnytsky [1650], ZNTSh, vol 78 [1907]), 'Proba avstriis'koho poserednytstva mizh Khmel'nyts'kym i Pol'shcheiu' (The Austrian Attempt at Mediation between Khmelnytsky and Poland, ZNTSh, vol 84 [1908]), 'Borot'ba za pol's'kyi prestol po smerti Volodyslava IV' (The Struggle for the Polish Throne after the Death of Władysław IV, Zherela do istorii Ukraïny-Rusy, vol 12 [1912]), 'Mizh Zamostiam ta Zborovym (storinka znosyn Semyhorodu z Ukraïnoi i Pol'shcheiu)' (Between Zamostia and Zboriv [On Transylvania's Relations with Ukraine and Poland], ZNTSh, vol 133 [1922]), and Bohdan Khmel'nyts'kyi u Belzchyni i Kholmshchyni (Bohdan Khmelnytsky in the Belz and Kholm Regions, 1941). He also authored many works on Ukrainian historiography and several on geography, toponymy, and statistics. They include La littérature historique ukrainienne en Pologne et dans l'émigration ukrainienne (1929), La littérature historique soviétique ukrainienne: Compte-rendu 1917–1931 (1938; repr, 1972), and Terytoriia i naseleattia Ukraïny (The Territory and Population of Ukraine, 1917). Besides these and many other scholarly works (including articles on M. Maksymovych, P. Kulish, V. Antonovych, and M. Hrushevsky), he wrote a number of popular histories, such as Istoriia Kholmshchyni i Pidliashshia (A History of the Kholm Region and Podlachia, 1941), Pionichno-zakhidna Ukraïna (Northwestern Ukraine, 1917), and Iliustrovana istoriia Bukovyny (An Illustrated History of Bukovyna, 1906), and was a coauthor of The Cambridge History of Poland, vol 1 (1950).

A. Zhukovsky

Kordysh, Leon [Kordyš], b 22 July 1878 in Kiev, d 11 July 1932 in Kiev. Theoretical physicist. He graduated from Kiev University in 1900, then conducted research in Berlin with M. Planck (1904), in Paris with H. Poincaré (1911–12), and in Munich with A. Sommerfeld (1913). In 1918 Kordysh helped organize the Physics Department at Kiev University's Crimean Branch, where he taught until 1921. In 1922 he was appointed professor of theoretical electrical engineering at the Kiev Polytechnical Institute. His research dealt with Bremsstrahlung components of X-ray spectra, superconductivity, the Zeeman effect, and early applications of special relativity and quantum theory. Kordysh wrote several advanced textbooks in Ukrainian that were widely used in Soviet Ukraine in the 1930s, including Elektrotehnika: Osnovy teoretychni (Theoretical Foundations of Electrical Engineering, 1927) and Elektrotehnika vysokoi chastyty: Zahal'ni teoretychni osnovy (General Theoretical Foundations of High-frequency Electrical Engineering, 1934).

Koreiz [Korejiz]. ix-15. Town smt (1979 pop 6,300) on the southeastern shore of the Crimea at the foot of Mt Ai-Petri. Founded in the late 17th century, it is a health-resort center administered by the Yalta city soviet. About 50,000 people stay there each year.

Denys Korenets

Volodymyr Koretsky

Korenets, Denys [Korenc', b 3 April 1875 in Rozvadiv, Zhydachiv county, Galicia, d 6 March 1946 in Munich. Pedagogue, leader in the co-operative movement. Korenets was an early advocate of Ukrainian commercial and vocational education. After graduating from Lviv University (1897), he taught at various gymnasiums, including the Ukrainian gymnasium in Peremyshl (1904–13) and the Academic Gymnasium of Lviv. He was the director (1917–34) of the Commercial School of the Prosvita (and later Ridna Shkola) society in Lviv, and an organizer of the Husbandry and Trade Association (later *Tsentrosoiuz) in Peremyshl and Lviv. With the Soviet occupation of Western Ukraine in 1944, Korenets fled to Germany. He is the author of economic and educational articles in various Galician periodicals. Korenets is the subject of a biography by A. Kachor (Winnipeg, 1955).

Korenytsky, Porfyrii [Korenc'kyj, Porfyrij], b ca 1815 in the Kharkiv region, d January 1854 in Kharkiv. Writer. He composed poetry and fables in which he used folkloric material and depicted the life of the common people. In such poems as 'Vechornytsi: Satyrychna poema' (Evening Parties: A Satirical Poem, Snip, 1841) he imitated the burlesque style of I. Kotliarevsky's Eneida (The Aeneid). Except for 'Vechornytsi' and 'Pan'ko ta verstva' (Panko and the Mile Pole, Lastivka, 1841), his poems were all published posthumously. His collected works, with an introduction by M. Sumtsov, appeared in Kharkiv in 1919.

Korets [Korec']. III-8. Town (1970 pop 7,100) and raion center in Rivne oblast, situated on the Korchyk River in Volhynia. It was first mentioned as Korchesk in the Hypatian Chronicle under the year 1150. In 1494 a Tatar army was defeated there. The town was the seat of the Volhynian Koretsky princes. In the late 18th and early 19th centuries the town's large porcelain factory was famous for its fine wares. In March and April 1919 the Northern Group of the UNR Army fought the Bolsheviks there. The city has a plastics plant and a sugar refinery. Among its architectural monuments are the ruins of a 16th-century castle, 16th–19th-century convent buildings, a 17th-century Roman Catholic church, and several 18th-century churches.

Koretsky, Volodymyr [Korec'kyj], b 18 February 1890 in Katerynoslav (now Dnipropetrovske), d 25 July 1984 in Kiev. Soviet specialist in international law; full member of the AN URSR from 1948. A graduate of the Law Faculty of Kharkiv University, he taught law at several institutes in Kharkiv from 1919 to 1949. In 1949 he became director of the AN URSR Sector (later Institute) of State and Law. He sat on many international commissions, such as the Permanent Chamber of the Arbitration Court at the Hague (1957–69) and the UN International Court (1961–70). Koretsky wrote over 50 studies on international public and private law, and on the history of law and the concept of state, including Ocherki mezhdunarodnogo khoziaistvennogo prava (Outlines of International Economic Law, 1928), Obshchie printsipy prava v mezhdunarodnom prave (Universal Principles of International Law, 1957), and Deklaratsiia prav i obiazannosti gosudarstv (Declaration of the Rights and Obligations of States, 1962).

Koretsky, Yurii [Korec'kyj, Jurij], b 24 May 1911 in Katerynoslav (now Dnipropetrovske), d 19 September 1941 in Kiev. Poet, translator; son of V. *Koretsky. He was the author of My shche povernemos' (We Shall Yet Return, 1934), a collection of stories in verse, and of Plem'ia vidvazhnykh (The Tribe of the Brave, 1935), a collection of children's poetry. His translations into Ukrainian include works by Byron, Shakespeare, and Schiller. Koretsky was killed during the Second World War. His selected works were published in Kharkiv in 1967.

Koretsky-Satanovsky, Arsenii [Korec'kyj-Satanovs'kyj, Arsenij], b ? in Sataniv, Podilia, d after 1653. Lexicographer. Of noble origin and a monk at the Kiev Epiphany Brotherhood Monastery, he taught at the monastery's school until 1649, when he and Hieromonach Ye. *Slavynetsky were summoned to Moscow. There he helped Slavynetsky to prepare a Russian version of the latter's Latin-Slavonic dictionary (compiled ca 1642 in Kiev). At the same time both men worked on a Slavonic-Latin dictionary (1650), six known manuscript copies of which are preserved in Paris, Uppsala, Leningrad, and Moscow (three copies). It has been published by O. Horbach (Rome 1968) and V. Nimchuk (Kiev 1973). The dictionary's Slavonic part relies heavily on P. *Berynda's lexis, while its Latin part is based on Thesaurus Polono-Latino-Graecus by G. Cnapius (Knapski). It is a valuable source on the vocabulary of mid-17th-century literary Ukrainian. Koretsky also translated from the Latin. In 1653 he was exiled to a monastery in northern Russia, and his fate is unknown.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Nimchuk, V. Staroukraïns'ka leksykohrafiia v ii zo'iazkakh z rosiis'koiu ta bilorus'koiu (Kiev 1980)

G.Y. Shevelov

Korf, Nikolai, b 14 July 1834 in Kharkiv, d 25 November 1883 in Kharkiv. Zemstvo leader and prominent proponent of universal education. A Russian baron of German origin, he organized zemstvo schools and Sunday schools, and invented the three-year village school. He conducted numerous teachers' courses and congresses in the Kher-son, Mariupol, and Berdianske regions. Although he did not accept the equality of Ukrainian with Russian, he proposed to begin elementary education for Ukrainian children in the Ukrainian language. At the time, this was a significant departure from official policy. He wrote a number of textbooks for teachers and students, and numerous articles on educational matters.

Koriak, Volodymyr [Korjak] (pseud of V. Blumstein), b 14 January 1889 in Slovianske, Kharkiv gubernia, d 12 April 1939? Jewish-Ukrainian literary critic and publicist. Koriak was exiled to Kazakhstan in 1915 for belonging to the outlawed Ukrainian Party of Socialist Revolutionaries. He returned to Ukraine after the February Revolution of 1917 and joined the Ukrainian Party of Socialist Revolutionaries-Borotbists. In 1920 he joined the CP(B)U and became a leading exponent of the Party line on literature. A founding member of the writers' organizations *Hart (1923) and the All-Ukrainian Association of Proletarian Writers (1927), he worked for the People's Commissariat of Education (1919–25) and taught at the Kharkiv Institute of People's Education (1925–33) and Kharkiv University (1933–6). During the *Literary Discussion in Ukraine (1925–7) he was a major opponent of M. *Khvylovy, and in 1932 he was one of the organizers of the Writers' Union of Ukraine. Koriak was the author of Marxist literary criticism, polemical articles, and literature textbooks; the latter (eg, his two-volume history of Ukrainian literature, 1925, 1929), though lacking in scholarly value, were widely used in the 1920s and 1930s. In 1937 he was accused of being a Trotskyist, fascist, and 'nationalist deviationist' and arrested. He was most likely shot by the NKVD.

I. Koshelivets

Prince Fedir Koriatovych

Koriatovych, Fedir [Korijatovyč], ?–ca 1417. The nephew of Grand Duke *Algirdas of Lithuania, in the 1380s Koriatovych became a voivode of Podilia. In 1393 he was attacked by Grand Duke Vytautas and fled to Hungary. There he was granted the city of Mukachiv by the Hungarian king and became the ruler of Berehove, Zemplyn, and Máramaros zhupy (counties) in Transcarpathia. Koriatovych founded Saint Nicholas's Monastery in Mukachiv. According to ancient chronicles, thousands of Ukrainians accompanied Koriatovych to Transcarpathia from Podilia, thus giving rise to the theory of the Ukrainian colonization of the Hungarian foothills of the Carpathian Mountains.

Koriukivka [Korjukivka]. II-13. Town (1972 pop 9,800) and raion center in Chernihiv oblast, situated on the Breh River. It was founded in 1657. Up to the Second World War it had one of the best sugar refineries in the USSR. A paper mill is located there.

Kormchaia kniga. In Church Slavonic a term, which means literally 'a pilot's book,' referring to a Church Slavonic redaction of the Greek Nomocanon. This was a digest of church canons, consisting of apostolic, conciliar, and episcopal instructions for conducting administrative and judicial affairs in the church. The earliest Slavic translation is believed to have been done by St Methodius in the second half of the 9th century. The chief recensions of the Kormchaia kniga known in Kievan Rus' were the Serbian (a 13th-century translation by Archbishop Sava of the Nomocanon of Fourteen Titles), the Vladimir or the Russian (containing the resolutions of the sobor in Vladimir-on-Kliazma, held in 1274), the Novgorod (ca 1280), the Volodymyr-Volynskyi (common in Ukraine, written in 1286 on the basis of the Vladimir recension), and the Lukashevych (written in the 14th century on the basis of the Vladimir recension and preserved in transcriptions from the 16th century). Some redactions contain particular laws from Ruskaia Pravda and elements of customary law. Such digests were important sources of law for the southern and eastern Slavs after their Christianization (see *Canon law).

Kormosh, Teofil [Kormoš, Teofil'], b 26 January 1861 in Galicia, d 26 November 1927 in Peremyshl. Civic and political leader. A lawyer by profession, he was an active organizer of Ukrainian economic institutions. In Peremyshl he founded the Vira savings society (1894) and the Ruska Shchadnytsia bank (1907). In Lviv he helped organize the Dnister co-operative bank (1895), the Tsentrobank (1899), and the Land Mortgage Bank (1910). In 1913 he was elected to the Galician Diet. He was active in the Ukrainian National Democratic party, and later in the Ukrainian National Democratic Alliance. Furthermore, he was involved in the work of the Prosvita society and the Ridna Shkola pedagogical society.

Konstantyn Korniakt

Korniakt, Konstantyn [Kornjakt, Konstjantyn], 1517–1603. Merchant and philanthropist. A Greek by origin, in the mid-16th century he worked at the court of the Moldavian hospodar A. Lăpușeanu. In the 1560s he moved to Lviv, where he became one of the city's wealthiest merchants. He conducted extensive trade with the territories under Ottoman rule and with Germany, and eventually owned over 40 villages in the Lviv and Pere-myshl areas. In 1589 he became a member of the *Lviv Dormition Brotherhood, although he later supported Bishop H. *Balaban in his struggle with the brotherhood. He personally financed the construction of the belfry of the Lviv Dormition Church (1572–8). The belfry and his house, the famous *Korniakt Building, are among the finest examples of Ukrainian Renaissance architecture.

Korniakt Building: 1) main facade; 2) detail of frieze on the roof; 3) courtyard in the Italian style

Korniakt building. One of the finest monuments of Renaissance architecture in Ukraine. It was built for K. Korniakt in 1580 at no. 6 Rynok Square in Lviv by the architect P. di Barbone. In 1623 the building was acquired by the Carmelite monastic order, and in 1640 by voivode J. Sobieski. The Eternal Peace of 1686 was ratified there by Poland and Russia. In 1908 the building was bought by the city and after extensive renovation became the King Jan III Sobieski Museum. Since 1940 it has housed the Lviv Historical Museum. The structure consists of three stories and an attic. The lowest stage of the facade has three windows and an impressive portal framed by two Corinthian columns, surmounted by mascarons, and topped by a lion's mask flanked by two garlands. This entrance was added in 1678 and is the work of local sculptors. The second and third stories have six windows each. The attic, added to the building in 1678, is adorned with seven caryatids and atlantes supporting an architrave and Ionic frieze with consoles, and is topped with statues of a king and six fully armed knights, which are tied together by volutes of stylized dolphins. The rear facade, facing Fedorov Street, has an inscription of the construction date and a simpler portal consisting of two pairs of columns and a cornice with a cartouche, volutes, and the family coat of arms. The first floor of the interior consists of a vestibule with a Renaissance ceiling, two large Renaissance halls on the right, and a Gothic hall, dating back to the 16th century, on the left. The staircase on the left was built in the late classical style of the 18th century and the iron balustrade was made by Lviv craftsmen. The halls on the second story are more elaborate and were designed in the 18th century. The Italian Renaissance courtyard is enclosed in a graceful three-tier loggia with Tuscan columns. The Korniakt building is often compared to Palazzo Avignonensi in Montepulciano, Italy.

S. Hordynsky

Korniev, Kostiantyn [Kornjev, Kostjantyn], b 28 May 1908 in Sosnytsia, Chernihiv gubernia, d 8 October 1974 in Sosnytsia. Organic chemist; from 1961 corresponding member of the AN USSR. After graduating from the Kiev Pharmaceutical Institute in 1930, he worked at the Institute of Chemistry for nine years and then at the AN USSR Institute of Organic Chemistry and Technology. In 1958 he was appointed director of the academy's Institute of Macromolecular Chemistry, and in 1965 chairman of its department for synthesizing thermally stable polymers. His publications deal with various aspects of specialized organic syntheses. He studied anticancer agents and synthesized new chloralkylamines, ethyleneimines, and thermally stable polymeric resins. He was the discoverer of the Korniev reaction.

Oleksander Korniiichuk

Korniichuk, Oleksander [Kornijčuk], b 25 May 1905 in Khrystynivka, Kiev gubernia, d 14 May 1972 in Kiev. Dramatist and prominent Soviet Ukrainian political figure. He worked as a scenarist at the Kiev (1929–31), Kharkiv (1931–2), and Odessa (1932–4) artistic film studios. In 1934 he became a member of the executive of the newly created Writers' Union of Ukraine (WU). A protégé of J. Stalin, he was promoted to numerous positions: deputy to the supreme soviets of the USSR (from 1937) and Ukrainian SSR (from 1938); head of the WU (1938–41, 1946–53); full member of the AN USSR (from 1939) and USSR Academy of Sciences (from 1943); USSR deputy people's commissar of foreign affairs (1943); Ukrainian SSR people's commissar of foreign affairs (1944); president of the Ukrainian SSR Supreme Soviet (1947–55, 1959–72); member of the CC CPU (from 1949) and CC CPSU (from 1952); member of the World Peace Council bureau (from 1950) and presidium (from 1959); and first deputy chairman of the Ukrainian SSR Council of Ministers and member of the CC CPU Presidium (1953–4). After Stalin's death he supported de-Stalinization and the cultural thaw.

Korniichuk's first plays, Na hrani (On the Edge, 1928), Kam'iany ostriv (The Stone Island, 1929), and Shturma (The Storm, 1930), attracted little attention. He garnered fame with his play about the Civil War, Zahybel' eskadry

(The Destruction of the Squadron, 1933), which was staged throughout the USSR. His subsequent plays were formulaic and written in conformity with the Party's political imperatives and propagandistic needs: Pravda (Truth, 1937), in which Kornichuk was one of the first to write about the Russian people's 'fraternal assistance' to Ukraine; V stepakh Ukraïny (On the Steppes of Ukraine, 1941); the anti-American Misiia mistera Perkinsa v kraïnu bil'shovykiv (The Mission of Mr Perkins in the Land of the Bolsheviks, 1944); Pryzdit' u Dzvinkove (Come to Dzvinkove, 1947); Makar Dibrova (1948); Kalynovyi hai (The Viburnum Grove, 1950); Kryla (Wings, 1954); Pam'iat' sertsia (Memory of the Heart, 1969); and others. His only epic historical play, Bohdan Khmel'nyts'kyi (1939), is an apologia for the 'unification' of Ukraine and Russia; it served as the basis for a feature film (1939) and for K. Dankevych's opera of the same name (1951). The popularity of Kornichuk's plays was heightened by their seemingly pointed criticisms of the flaws in the Soviet system (particularly in Kryla); these criticisms, however, never exceeded the bounds set by the Party censors.

Kornichuk's plays have been staged many times, have been published in many editions (the fullest being in five volumes in 1985–7), and have been the subject of a large body of Soviet literary commentary.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Kobylets'kyi, Iu. Dramaturh i chas: Tvorchist' Oleksandra Kornichuka (Kiev 1965)
 – Kryla Krecheta (Kiev 1975)
 Vakulenko, D. Oleksandr Kornichuk: Narys zhyttia i tvorchosti (Kiev 1980)

I. Koshelivets

Korniienko, Vasyl [Kornijenko, Vasyl'], b 22 April 1867 in Manuilivka, Verkhnodniprovske county, Katerynoslav gubernia, d 24 December 1904 in Odessa. Painter, graphic artist, and children's writer. A graduate of the St Petersburg Academy of Arts (1896), he settled and worked in Odessa. His artistic works include illustrations to I. Kotliarevsky's Eneïda (Aeneid, 1904); historical paintings such as B. Khmelnytsky's Entry into Kiev (1904) and Holota the Cossack and the Tatar; genre paintings such as By a Tavern (1902) and Charms; paintings on duma themes, reproduced on postcards; and a portrait of T. Shevchenko (end of the 19th century). He wrote stories for children: eg, 'Zaporoz'kyi klad' (The Zaporozhian Treasure).

Korniets, Leonid [Kornijec'], b 21 August 1901 in Bobrynets, Kherson gubernia, d 29 May 1969 in Moscow. Soviet political figure: member of the Politburo of the CC CP(B)U (1938–53), president of the Presidium of the Supreme Soviet (1938–9), president (1939–44) and first vice-president (1944–6) of the Council of People's Commissioners, and first vice-president of the Council of Ministers of the Ukrainian SSR (1946–53). He was also the minister of procurement (1953–6) and of grain products (1956–8) for the USSR, the chairman (1958–61) of the State Committee for Grain Products of the USSR Council of Ministers, and first vice-chairman (1961–3) and chairman (1963–) of the latter council's State Committee for Grain Procurement.

Kornoukhov, Mykola [Kornouhov], b 23 October 1903 in Nizhen, Chernihiv gubernia, d 2 June 1958 in Kiev.

Mykola Kornoukhov

Civil engineer; from 1951 full member of the AN USSR. After graduating from the Kiev Polytechnical Institute, he lectured at the Kiev Institute of Civil Engineering and worked at the AN USSR Institute of Mechanics, where he served as director from 1940 to 1944. He developed a composite method of determining the strength and stability of truss systems and precise methods for measuring the stability of frames, columns, and other structural members.

Kornyliak, Platon [Kornyljak], b 6 September 1920 in Stebni, Vyzhnytsia county, Bukovyna. Ukrainian Catholic bishop. He studied at the Urban and Gregorian universities in Rome, obtaining his D TH in 1946 and PH D in 1948. Ordained in 1945, he immigrated to the United States in 1948, where he became the chancellor of Philadelphia eparchy in 1952. In 1959 he was consecrated bishop and appointed apostolic exarch for Ukrainian Catholics in Germany. This exarchate's jurisdiction was extended to include the Scandinavian countries in 1982. Kornyliak participated in the Second Vatican Council and was a member of the Theological Preparatory Commission for the council from 1960. He commissioned the building of the St Andrew's Cathedral in Munich as well as numerous other churches throughout Germany, and has published a number of theological studies, including La dialettica esistenziale del divino e dell'umano secondo Nicola Berdiaeff (1948) and Sancti Augustini de efficacitate sacramentorum doctrina contra Donatistas (1953).

Korobchansky, Ivan [Korobčans'kyj], b 16 January 1895 in Kelyne, Sumy county, Kharkiv gubernia, d 1 April 1956 in Donetsk. Specialist in fuel technology; from 1951 corresponding member of the AN USSR. After graduating from the Kharkiv Technological Institute, he worked in various industrial plants in Kharkiv and in the Donbas region. From 1935 to 1956 he chaired a department of the Donetsk Industrial Institute. He did research on coking technology, coal enrichment, and the underground gasification of coal.

Korobka, Fedir, b and d ? Cossack leader and diplomat. He was the acting colonel of Chyhyryn regiment (1649–50) and general quartermaster of the Hetmanate (1650–4, 1669). He made important diplomatic missions for hetmans B. and Yu. Khmelnytsky and I. Vyhovsky to Moscow (1657), Sweden (1657–8), Turkey (1657), and Moldavia (1657), and served on the staff of Hetman P. Doroshenko.

Korobka, Fedir, b and d ? Kiev goldsmith of the early 19th century. He was president of the silversmith's guild a number of times, and a municipal councilman. Many of his works were done for the Kievan Cave Monastery: eg, the copper iconostases of St Barlaam's Church (1819) and the Church of the Presentation; silver casings for the icons of St Anthony (1818–19), St Barbara (1822), and the Council of Holy Fathers (1822); five silver lamps; and an engraving of the plan and facade of the Main Bell Tower (1817). Some of these works have been preserved in the Historical Museum of the Ukrainian SSR in Kiev. Korobka's house, built in the classicist style (1830–1), has been preserved.

Korobka, Mykola, b 6 May 1872 in Kremianets, Volhynia gubernia, d 1921. Folklorist and literary scholar. He studied at Kiev University and graduated from St Petersburg University (1894). He collected and studied the folklore of Volhynia and Podilia, publishing it as Pesni Kamenetskogo uezda, Podol'skoi gubernii (Songs of Kamianets County, Podilia Gubernia, 1895), Vostochnaia Volyn' (Eastern Volhynia, 1895), Koliadki i shchedrovki, zapisannye v Volyn'skom Poles'e (Christmas and Epiphany Carols Recorded in Volhynian Polisia, 1901), and K izucheniiu malorusskikh koliadok (Toward a Study of Little Russian Christmas Carols, 1902). A contributor to the journals Zhivaia starina, Izvestiia otdeleniia russkogo iazyka i slovesnosti, and Russkoe bogatstvo, he also wrote a survey of the history of Russian literature (3 vols, 1907–14) and monographs on N. Gogol (1902), A. Pushkin and M. Lermontov (1903), and M. Gorky (1901), and edited an uncompleted nine-volume edition of Gogol's works (1912–14).

Koroed, Aleksei [Korojed, Aleksej], b 10 July 1911 in Sliudianka, Irkutsk county, Irkutsk gubernia. Economist and Party administrator; since 1961 corresponding member of the AN URSS. A graduate of Kharkiv University (1933), he served as deputy director of the AN URSS Institute of Economics (1955–65) and head of the Section of Social Sciences (1957–63), and then as rector (1965–72) and department head (1972–9) at the Kiev Institute of the National Economy. His works deal with problems of technological progress, the development of Ukraine's productive potential, and the political economy of socialism.

Korol, Mykhailo [Korol', Myxajlo], b 15 September 1856 in Neslykhiv, Kamianka-Buzka county, Galicia, d 15 July 1925 in Zhovkva. Political and civic leader. A graduate of Lviv University, he opened a law practice in Zhovkva in 1888 and in the following year was elected to the Galician Diet. Although he sided with the Old Ruthenians, he was opposed to Russophilism. In 1907 he won a seat in the Austrian Parliament, where he joined the Ruthenian caucus. Elected to the Galician Diet as an independent candidate in 1913, he voted with the Ukrainian National Democratic party. In 1918–19 he served as commissioner of Zhovkva county, and after the war he was active in several Ukrainian cultural and financial institutions.

Korol, Mykhailo [Korol', Myxajlo], b 25 October 1911 in Zarubyntsi, Lypovets county, Kiev gubernia. Pro-

Communist community leader in Canada. Arriving in Canada in 1924, he helped organize the youth section of the Ukrainian Labour-Farmer Temple Association. In 1928 he joined the Young Communist League of Canada (YCLC) and set up branches of the league in Montreal and Sudbury. After being admitted to the Communist Party of Canada (1931), he edited the YCLC newspaper Young Worker in Toronto. In 1946 he became a member of the National Executive Committee of the Association of United Ukrainian Canadians. From 1956 to 1965 he served as the manager of the newspaper Ukrains'ke zhyttia and afterwards of Zhyttia i slovo.

Oleksander Korolchuk

Vladimir Korolenko

Korolchuk, Oleksander [Korol'čuk], b 12 October 1883 in Volhynia, d 3 March 1925 in Zaporizhia. Actor specializing in heroic and character roles and play director of the Mykola Sadovsky school. He began to act in 1905 in I. Sahatovsky's company, and then joined the *Sadovsky Theater (1907–17). In the UNR period he worked in the State Drama Theater (1918–19) and was an instructor of theater arts. In 1920 with I. *Kavaleridze he founded a Ukrainian drama company in Roman. In the following year he worked with P. *Saksahansky in the State People's Theater, and in 1922 became one of the founders of the *Zankovetska Ukrainian Drama Theater. He directed such plays as Chorna rada (The Black Council, an adaptation of P. Kulish's novel), S. Cherkasenko's Zemlia (The Earth), Lesia Ukrainka's U pushchi (In the Wilderness), V. Vynnychenko's Memento, Ya. Mamontov's Ave Maria, J. Slowacki's Mazepa, J. Synge's The Playboy of the Western World, and N. Gogol's Revizor (The Inspector General). His actor's repertoire included the title roles in I. Tobilevych's Sava Chalyi and M. Starytsky's Bohdan Khmel'nyts'kyi, Franz Moor in F. Schiller's Die Räuber, and Pastor Manders in H. Ibsen's Gengangere (Ghosts). Korolchuk was also a coeditor of the literary and artistic magazine Siaivo (1913–14).

V. Revutsky

Korolenko, Vladimir, b 27 July 1853 in Zhytomyr, d 25 December 1921 in Poltava. Russian Populist writer and publicist of Ukrainian-Polish parentage. As a student in St Petersburg and Moscow (1871–9) he became an avowed opponent of tsarism. He was imprisoned for his beliefs in Viatka (1879–80) and exiled to Yakutia in eastern Siberia (1881–4). From 1900 to the end of his life he lived in Poltava, where he wrote his greatest work, the autobiography Istoriia moego sovremmenika (The History of My Contemporary, 1922; English trans, 1972), and served as the chief editor of Russkoe bogatstvo (1904–18). He was renowned as a champion of the oppressed and a democrat. He did not support the Bolshevik regime.

From 1878 Korolenko published over 100 stories and short novels and 600 articles and sketches. His realistic prose is characterized by its lyricism, moral outlook, delicate humor, and humane portrayals of the common folk and the oppressed, mostly in Siberia and Ukraine. Twenty of his stories (some of them his best) deal with Ukrainian subjects: eg, 'V durnom obshchestve' (In Bad Company, 1885), about the persecuted Uniate Catholics in Volhynia; 'Slepoi muzykant' (The Blind Musician, 1886; English trans, 1925), about Populists in Ukraine 'going to the people'; 'Les shumit' (The Murmuring Forest, 1886), about Polish peasants avenging themselves on a Polish landlord; and 'Bez iazyka' (Without the Language, 1895; English trans: In a Strange Land, 1925 and 1975), about the trials and tribulations of a Volhynian peasant immigrant in America.

Almost 250 of Korolenko's articles deal with Ukraine. He spoke out against the persecution of the Uniates in Volhynia and the Kholm region, the repression of Ukrainian peasant rebels in Sorochyntsi and elsewhere in 1906, the oppression of the Ukrainians and the imprisonment of Metropolitan A. Sheptytsky during the Russian occupation of Galicia in the First World War, and injustice in general.

Although Korolenko was involved in community affairs in Poltava, had a great love for Ukraine, its peasantry, and their folklore, and counted many Ukrainian intellectuals and writers among his friends, because of his mixed background and philosophical outlook he was indifferent to the Ukrainian national movement. His works have appeared in many editions in Russian. The major editions in Ukrainian were published in three volumes in 1923 (ed S. Yefremov) and in four volumes in 1953–4.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Boiko, I. Korolenko i Ukraïna: Bibliografichnyi pokazhchyk (Kiev 1957)
 Malyi, P. V. H. Korolenko i Ukraïna (Lviv 1958)
 – Ukraïna v publitsyysty V.H. Korolenka (Kiev 1958)
 Donskoi, Ia. V. G. Korolenko: Ocherk poltavskogo perioda zhizni i deiatel'nosti pisatel'ia, 1900–1921 (Kharkiv 1963)
 Mukhyn, I. Za viru bat'kiv (Uniaty v khudozhnikh tvorakh V.H. Korolenka) (Chicago 1976)

R. Senkus

Korolenko museums (Muzei V.H. Korolenka). There are two memorial museums in Ukraine dedicated to the Russian writer of Ukrainian origin V. *Korolenko. The museum in Poltava was established in 1928 in a building occupied by Korolenko from 1903 to 1921. Its holdings consist of over 8,000 items – manuscripts, paintings, books, photographs, letters from M. Kotsiubynsky, and personal belongings. Two sections of its exhibition are 'Korolenko in Ukraine' and 'Korolenko and Ukrainian Literature.' The museum in Zhytomyr was opened in 1973 in the building where Korolenko was born. It houses over 550 exponents, including letters, photographs, and first editions of the author's works.

Koroleva, Natalena (née Dunin-Borkowska), b 3 March 1888 in San Pedro-de-Cordena near Burgos, Spain, d 1

Natalena Koroleva

July 1966 in Mělník, Czechoslovakia. Writer. She grew up in Spain, France, and Italy; studied archeology and history in Paris, Rome, and St Petersburg; and took part in archeological digs in Pompei, Alexandria, Armenia, and Iran. In 1919 she immigrated to Czechoslovakia and married V. Koroliv-Stary. Her first works were written in French and appeared in 1904. In 1919 her first story in Ukrainian was published in the Vienna weekly Volia. Some of her writings are based on her historical and archeological studies. Her works consist of autobiographic stories, recollections, legends, and exotic stories set in biblical or medieval times in such places as Caucasia or Persia. Among them are the collection Vo dni ony (Once upon a Time, 1935), the novella 1913 (1935), the autobiographic novella Bez korinnia (Without Roots, 1936; 3rd rev edn, 1968), the collection Legendy starokyiv-s'ki (Ancient Kievan Legends, 2 vols, 1942–3), and the historical novella Quid est veritas? (1961). Many of her stories appeared in Western Ukrainian and émigré periodicals, particularly in the journal Dzvony. She also translated works into Ukrainian, including Thomas à Kempis's Imitation of Christ (1923).

Koroleve. v-4. Town smt (1979 pop 6,800) and railway depot in Vynohradiv raion, Transcarpathia oblast, on the Tysa River. It was first mentioned in 1262. A Hungarian castle was built there in the 13th century. Its inhabitants manufacture clothing, artistic wares, and bread products. The oldest Paleolithic site in Ukraine, with 11 strata of the Acheulean and Mousterian cultures, has been under excavation nearby since 1974.

Korolevskij, Cyrille (real name: Jean Francois Joseph Charon), b 16 December 1878 in Caen, France, d 19 April 1959 in Rome. French priest and historian of the Eastern Catholic churches. He studied Eastern theology and rite at the Patriarchal College in Beirut, Lebanon, and was admitted to the Melchite order in 1902. After writing several works on the history of the Melchites, he turned his attention to the Ukrainian Catholic church. During his extensive travels in Ukraine and Eastern Europe he met Metropolitan A. Sheptytsky, who commissioned him to collect documents in Rome about Metropolitan V. Rutsky and the history of the Ukrainian church. He compiled a catalogue to the documents of the Basilian order, published in Zapysky chyna sv. Vasylia Velykoho (1926–8, 1949), began the compilation of Monumenta Ucrainae His- torica, and wrote Métropolitte André Szeptyckyj, 1865–1944 (1964). Korolevskij also worked with the Congregation for Eastern Churches as a member of the commissions on eastern law and on the revision of eastern liturgical books, and coauthored the rules of the Studite order (1943–4). In his studies of the eastern rite, Korolevskij opposed the concept of Uniatism and the Latinization of the eastern churches.

Koroliuk, Volodymyr [Koroljuk], b 19 August 1925 in Kiev. Mathematician; full member of the AN URSR since 1976. A graduate of Kiev University (1950), in 1954 he joined the staff of the AN URSR Institute of Mathematics, serving as the head of the section of probability and mathematical statistics since 1960 and as assistant director since 1966. He has also been a professor at Kiev University since 1965. Koroliuk has published over 200 articles and 10 monographs, some of which have been translated into other languages. His main publications deal with various problems in the theory of probability, mathematical statistics, computational mathematics, and mathematical programming. He is particularly known for his contributions to the development of analytic and asymptotic methods for solving boundary-value problems for homogeneous processes with independent increases, and for his work on phase methods in the study of Markov and semi-Markov processes.

Koroliv, Fedir, b 1886, d 14 February 1935 in Berlin. Political figure. A member of the Ukrainian Party of Socialist Revolutionaries in Russian-ruled Ukraine, he emigrated to Galicia in 1906 and then lived in Chernivtsi and, from 1914, Vienna. Returning to Ukraine after the February Revolution of 1917, in 1918 he became a department director in the UNR Ministry of the National Economy in Kiev and was a member of the Economic Commission in the Hetman government that negotiated with the Central Powers. In 1919 he headed the UNR trade commission in Switzerland and then lived in Berlin, where he headed the Relief Committee for Emigrants from Ukraine. He was a cofounder of the *Ukrainian National Alliance in Germany and its head in 1933–5.

Vasyl Koroliv-Stary

Koroliv-Stary, Vasyl [Koroliv-Staryj, Vasyl'], b 17 February 1879 in Dykanka, Poltava county, Poltava gubernia, d 11 December 1941 in Mělník, Czechoslovakia. Writer, publisher, and civic figure. A graduate of the Kharkiv Veterinary Institute (1904), he helped found and direct the Chas publishing house in Kiev. In 1917–19 he edited the monthly Knyhar. Sent to Czechoslovakia in 1919 as a member of the UNR diplomatic mission, he remained there after the war and became a lecturer at the Ukrainian Husbandry Academy. He wrote textbooks on zoology and animal physiology; children's stories and plays; a children's novelette, Chmelyk (The Bumblebee, 1923); and a book of memoirs, Zhadky pro moiu smert' (Memories about My Death, 1942; repr, 1961). He also translated Czech writers.

Korolivsky, Stepan [Korolivs'kyj], b 16 August 1904 in Katerynivka, Pavlohrad county, Katerynoslav gubernia, d 1 November 1976 in Kharkiv. Historian. After completing his studies in 1927, he lectured at higher educational institutions in Kharkiv (from 1933 to 1940 at Kharkiv University). In 1945 he was appointed to the Chair of Soviet History at Kharkiv University. Most of his published works deal with the 1917 Revolution in a propagandist way. He is the author of books on the First Congress of Soviets in Ukraine (1947) and the First All-Ukrainian Peasant Conference (1958).

Korolko, Mykola [Korol'ko], b 25 November 1905 in Juriw, Tomaszów county, Lublin gubernia, d 20 March 1986 in Lublin. Political and community leader. A regional organizer of the Communist Party of Western Ukraine, he was arrested in 1926 by the Polish police and sentenced to seven years in prison for his political activities. Upon his release he went underground. Korolko spent the Second World War in German prisons and concentration camps. After the war he worked in the county Party organization, and in 1956 helped found the Ukrainian Social and Cultural Society (USKR). From 1957 to 1960 he was a special ministerial assistant for Ukrainian affairs. In 1967 Korolko was elected president of the USKR. During his term in office, which lasted for over 10 years, the society made some important advances in the fields of Ukrainian education and culture.

Serhii Korolov

Korolov, Serhii [Korol'ov, Serhij], b 12 January 1907 in Zhytomyr, Volhynia gubernia, d 14 January 1966 in Moscow. Aeronautical engineer, designer of the first Soviet guided missiles and spacecraft; from 1958 full member of the AN URSR. After studying engineering in Odessa, Kiev, and Moscow, he began to design gliders and airplanes at the Central Aerodynamics Institute. His interest in rocketry led him to organize, with F. Tsander, the Group for the Study of Jet Propulsion, which in 1933 launched the first Soviet liquid-fueled rocket, the GIRD-

09. In late 1933 he was appointed deputy scientific director of the Jet Scientific Research Institute. He was arrested in 1937 or 1938, and sent first to a concentration camp and then to a special work camp for scientists. There he worked on rocket boosters for airplanes. After the war he tested and improved the German v-2 missile. During the Khrushchev era Korolov headed many research and design teams developing ballistic missiles, launch vehicles, and spacecraft. He was in charge of designing, constructing, and launching the Vostok and Voskhod manned spacecraft, and the Electron, Kosmos, and Molniia earth satellites, as well as the first space stations. Rockets developed by him launched the first artificial earth satellite (Sputnik), the first astronauts in earth orbit, the first probes to the moon, Mars, and Venus, and the first unmanned soft landing on the moon. During his lifetime his name was kept secret and he was referred to only as the Chief Designer. After his death his name became widely known and honored: a museum in Zhytomyr and a monument in Moscow were dedicated to him, and a large crater on the far side of the moon was named after him.

L.S. Onyshkevych

Korolyk, Volodymyr, b 17 December 1907 in Boryslav, Drohobych county, Galicia, d 27 January 1987 in New York. Character actor. He began his stage career in 1929 in Stadnyk's touring theater. Then he performed with the Tobilevych Ukrainian People's Theater, the Zahrava Young Ukrainian Theater, V. Blavatsky's Ensemble of Ukrainian Actors in Germany, and the Novyi Teatr group in New York. His main roles were Ovid in Kamo hriadeshy (an adaptation of H. Sienkiewicz's Quo Vadis), Mokii in M. Kulish's Myna Mazailo, Major Kharin-Geroiev in Yu. Kosach's Orden (The Medal), and Voinarovsky in Motria (an adaptation of B. Lepky's novel).

Korop. II-13. Town smt (1983 pop 5,300) and raion center in Chernihiv oblast, situated in the Desna River valley. First mentioned in the Hypatian Chronicle under the year 1153 as Khorobor, Korop was a company town in Nizhen regiment and the seat of the Hetman state's artillery from 1659 to the mid-18th century; its company was commanded directly by the hetman. It had the only fortified church in Left-Bank Ukraine. The town was granted the rights of Magdeburg law in the early 18th century. From 1782 to 1797 it was a county town in Novhorod-Siverskyi vicegerency. Korop has a food industry and a flax mill.

Koropchevsky, Pavlo [Koropčevs'kyj], b 1741, d 16 March 1808 in Banychi, Hlukhiv county, Chernihiv gubernia. Cossack officer. He studied at the Kievna Mohyla Academy before becoming chancellor of Myrhorod regiment and then general chancellor (1761–8). In 1768 he was arrested for his involvement in the rebellion of the *Pikeman regiments, but was soon released. From 1769 to 1774 Koropchevsky was registrar of the *Little Russian Collegium. In the 1780s and 1790s he was a prominent official in *Novhorod-Siverskyi vicegerency and then vicegovernor of Little Russia gubernia (1797–9). Koropchevsky was also a member of the *Novhorod-Siverskyi patriotic circle.

Koropec'kyj, Iwan [Koropec'kyj, Iwan], b 24 June 1921 in Strupkiv, Tovmach county, Galicia. Economist. He began his studies after the Second World War in Germany and, following immigration to the United States, completed them with a Ph.D. in economics from Columbia University in 1964. At present, he is a professor of economics at Temple University and a member of the Ukrainian Academy of Arts and Sciences. He is the author of Location Problems in Soviet Industry before WW II (1971) and editor of Selected Contributions of Ukrainian Scholars to Economics (1984), Selected Works of Vsevolod Holubnychy – Soviet Regional Economics (1982), and The Ukraine within the USSR: An Economic Balance Sheet (1977).

Koropets River [Koropec']. A left-bank tributary of the Dniester River, flowing for 78 km through Podilia and draining a basin of 511 sq km. Its waters are used for irrigation and to supply industry.

Koropetsky, Iwan. See Koropec'kyj, Iwan.

Korosno. See Krosno.

Korosten [Korosten']. III-9. Industrial city (1982 pop 67,000) and raion center in Zhytomyr oblast on the Uzh River. It was first mentioned in 945 as Iskorosten, the capital of the *Derevlians destroyed by Princess Olha. Since the late 19th century it has been an important railway and highway junction, and its population grew from 2,600 in 1897 to 12,000 in 1926 and 34,000 in 1956. Because of its strategic importance, the UNR and Red armies fought for its control in 1918, in February and the summer of 1919, and during the Second Winter Campaign in November 1921. Its plants manufacture road-construction and chemical-industry machinery, reinforced-concrete railway ties, porcelain products, silos, household chemicals, lumber, granite, clothing, cotton thread, meat and dairy products, and wine. Four Rus' settlements have been excavated there.

Korostovets, Ivan [Korostovec'], b 1862 in the Chernihiv region, d 1932. Career diplomat. He headed the Russian diplomatic chancellery in Port Arthur (1899–1902), was Count S. Witte's secretary at the Portsmouth Conference (1905), and was the Russian ambassador in Peking (1907–12) and Tehran (1913–17). As a plenipotentiary of the *Hetman government, he met with representatives of the Entente Powers in Iași in November 1918. His diary of the Portsmouth Conference was published in English in 1920. He also wrote a book on Russia in the Far East (in Russian, 1922) and a history of Mongolia (in German, 1926).

Korostovets, Volodymyr [Korostovec'], b 16 July 1888 in Peresazh, Chernihiv county, Chernihiv gubernia, d 29 September 1953 in London. Journalist and political figure. He completed his higher education at Kiev and St Petersburg universities with a doctorate in political science and international law. From 1912 to 1917 he served in the diplomatic corps of the Russian Ministry of Foreign Affairs. When the Bolsheviks came to power, he emigrated to Poland and then (1925) to Germany, where he was active in the Hetmanite movement and served as curator of the Ukrainian Scientific Institute in Berlin. Moving to London in 1932, he published The Investigator (1932–4), in which he argued that an independent Ukraine was necessary for the achievement of peace in Eastern Europe. From 1949 he sat on the presidium of the Association of Ukrainians in Great Britain. Besides articles in the British and American periodical press, his publications include The Re-birth of Poland (1928), Quo Vadis Polonia? (1929), Graf Witte, der Steuermann in der Not (1929), and Europe in the Melting Pot (1938).

Korostyshiv [Korostyshiv]. III-10. City (1972 pop 22,200) and raion center in Zhytomyr oblast, situated on the Teteriv River in eastern Volhynia. It was first mentioned in the 13th century. In 1649 it became a company town in Bila Tserkva regiment. It was granted the rights of Magdeburg law in 1779. In the 19th century it was a popular health resort. In the summer of 1919 the UNR troops defended the town from invading Bolshevik forces. A cotton mill, the Elektroprylad plant, and granite quarrying play an important role in its economy.

Korotchenko, Demian [Korotchenko, Demjan], b 10 November 1894 in Pohribky (today Korotchenkove), Hlukhiv county, Chernihiv gubernia, d 7 April 1969 in Kiev. Soviet state and party official. He worked as a party functionary in Ukraine (1924-8) and Russia (1931-7) before becoming chairman of the Council of People's Commissars (1938-9), secretary of the CC CP(B)U (1939-47), chairman of the Council of Ministers (1947-54), and president of the Supreme Soviet of the Ukrainian SSR (1954-69). He was also a member of the Presidium and Politburo of the CC CP(B)U from 1938, vice-president of the Supreme Soviet of the USSR from 1954, and member (1952-3) and candidate member (1957-61) of the Presidium of the CC CPSU.

Korotych, Vitalii [Korotyč, Vitalij], b 26 May 1936 in Kiev. Physician, poet, publicist, and Soviet media personality. The poetry in his first collections, Zoloti ruky (Golden Hands, 1961), Zapakh neba (The Scent of the Sky, 1962), and Vulytsia voloshok (The Street of Cornflowers, 1963), was similar in spirit to that of the *Shestydesiatnyky. Since 1965, however, his dozen or so subsequent 'engagé' collections have been produced in conformity with the Party line on literature. In the latter half of the 1960s Korotych also began writing propagandistic biographical and travel essays (reprinted in several collections) and prose. His first novella, Taka lykha pamiat' (Such a Bad Memory), appeared in 1970, and his first novel, Desiate travnia (The Tenth of May), appeared in 1979. The 'publicistic novel' Lytse nenavysti (The Face of Hatred, 1984) and novella Trava bilia poroha (The Grass near the Threshold, 1985) most strongly reflect current Party attitudes toward the West. A two-volume selection of his Tvory (Works) appeared in 1986.

As the chief editor of the journal Vsesvit from 1979 to 1986, Korotych did much to promote foreign literature in Ukraine. The editor of the popular biweekly Moscow magazine Ogoněk since 1986, he is now a prominent spokesman for cultural liberalization in the USSR. The Ukrainian equivalent of Ye. Yevtushenko, since the 1960s Korotych has traveled widely in the West as an official representative of the USSR. He is the deputy head of the Ukrainian Committee for the Preservation of Peace and, since 1983, vice-president of the international Artists for Nuclear Disarmament. A book about him by V. Zdoroveha appeared in 1986.

I. Koshelivets, R. Senkus

Korotych [Korotyč]. IV-17. Town smt (1979 pop 5,900) in Kharkiv raion, Kharkiv oblast. It was founded in the second half of the 17th century. Most of its inhabitants work in nearby Kharkiv. The Komunar experimental base of the Ukrainian Scientific Research Institute of Soil Science and Agrochemistry is located there.

Korovai Being Decorated; pencil drawing by I. Batechko (1968)

Korovai. A traditional braided wedding bread baked from wheat flour embellished with little dough flags and figurines (sun, moon, birds, animals, etc). Its origin is ancient, and it is a relic of the pagan belief in the magical properties of grain. Women prepared it while singing traditional songs at the new home of the couple about to be married. The bride and groom were blessed with it before their marriage ceremony. At the wedding the korovai was kept in a prominent place, and the bride was greeted with it when she arrived at her new home. After the nuptials, the best man served it to all the guests; some scholars consider this ritual a manifestation of collective communion.

Korovytsky, Ivan [Korovyc'kyj], b 4 June 1907 in Volhynia. Writer, scholar, and bibliographer. After receiving an MA in theology from Warsaw University, he taught Old Church Slavonic and the history of the Ukrainian Orthodox church there and ran the Orthodox Metropolitan's Museum in Warsaw. A postwar refugee, he taught at the Theological Academy of the Ukrainian Autocephalous Orthodox church in Munich (1946-8). After immigrating to the United States in the late 1940s, he taught at the St Sophia Seminary in South Bound Brook, New Jersey. He is the author of a poetry collection (1936), stories for children, and a work on the destruction of churches in the Kholm region (under the pseudonym Zhukiv, 1940). In the United States he has edited several Ukrainian monographs and written many articles on Ukrainian church history and literature, many of them for the émigré Entsyklopediia ukraïnoznavstva. A full member of the Ukrainian Academy of Arts and Sciences in the United States and an associate of the Lypynsky East European Research Institute in Philadelphia, he heads the Ukrainian Orthodox Church in America Library in South Bound Brook.

Korovytsky, Leonid [Korovyč'kyj], b 4 February 1890 in Zhytomyr, d 8 December 1976 in Odessa. Physician and medical scientist. A graduate of Odessa University (1913), he was in charge of the chair of propaedeutic therapy at Odessa University from 1934 and then the director of the Infectious Disease Clinic at the Odessa Medical Institute. His works deal with the diagnosis and cure of infectious, parasitic, and tropical diseases, particularly malaria, brucellosis, and toxoplasmosis.

Carved wooden bottle and tumbler by Yu. Korpaniuk

Carved and inlaid wooden plate by S. Korpaniuk

Korpaniuk [Korpanjuk]. The family name of Hutsul master wood-carvers living in Yavoriv (now in Kosiv raion, Ivano-Frankivske oblast): Yu. *Shkribliak's grandsons, the brothers Yurii (12 September 1892–19 April 1977), Semen (14 September 1894–20 November 1970), Petro (1897–12 February 1961); and Semen's son Vasyi

(b 18 May 1922). Their finely engraved and encrusted wooden plates, boxes, chests, barrels, and walking sticks have been widely exhibited since the 1920s in Ukraine and abroad and are preserved in ethnographic museums in Kolomyia, Lviv, Kiev, and elsewhere and in private collections. Yurii and Semen were awarded the title Merited Master of Folk Creativity of the Ukrainian SSR.

Korsak, Rafail (secular name: Mykola), b ca 1600, d 1640 in Rome. Uniate Catholic church leader of Belorussian noble descent. As a young man he converted to Catholicism. He studied at the Jesuit Zamostia Academy and at Catholic colleges in Braunsberg and Prague before joining the Basilian monastic order and continuing his studies at the Greek Collegium in Rome (1621–4). Korsak became the protoarchimandrite of the Basilian order in 1625, and the next year the Kievan metropolitan Y. Rutsky named him bishop of Halych, although his appointment was delayed by the Polish king. In 1631–7 he was bishop of Turiv-Pynske eparchy and coadjutor to Metropolitan Rutsky. When Rutsky died in 1637, Korsak became metropolitan of Kiev. As metropolitan, he defended the rights of Uniates in Poland and attempted to extend the Church Union. He translated the works of M. Smotrytsky into Latin, and wrote a biography of Metropolitan Rutsky. He was buried in the Church of ss Sergius and Bacchus in Rome. His correspondence with the Vatican has been published in Epistolae Metropolitanorum Kioviensium Catholicorum R. Korsak, A. Sielawa, G. Kolenda (1637–1674) (1956).

Fedor Korsh

Korsh, Fedor [Korš], b 4 May 1843 in Moscow, d 1 March 1915 in Moscow. Noted Russian Classical philologist, Slavist, and Orientalist; full member of the Russian Imperial Academy of Sciences from 1900 and of the Shevchenko Scientific Society. A graduate of Moscow University (Ph D 1877), he was a professor at Moscow (1877) and Odessa (1890–2) universities and at the Lazarev Institute of Oriental Languages in St Petersburg. In addition to works on Roman metrics and literature, he wrote important studies of Slavic song metrics, O russkom narodnom stikhoslozhenii (On Russian Folk Versification, 1896, 1901) and Vvedenie v nauku o slavianskom stikhoslozhenii (Introduction to the Study of Slavic Versification, 1906), and a monograph on historical-comparative syntax, Sposoby otноситel' nogo podchineniia (Types of Relative Subordination, 1877). As a supporter of the Ukrainian cultural movement and a defender of Ukrainian linguistic rights, he coauthored the memorandum of the Imperial Academy of Sciences urging the repeal of the *Ems Ukase, which prohibited the use of Ukrainian in publications (1905). He also wrote articles on the history of the Ukrainian language and literature; eg, on the genesis of Ukrainian, on Turkic elements in Slovo o polku Ihorevi (The Tale of Ihor's Campaign), and on T. Shevchenko. He also attempted writing poetry in Ukrainian under the pseudonym Khvedir Korzh.

G.Y. Shevelov

Korshykov, Oleksander [Koršykov], b 28 October 1889 in Sumy, Kharkiv gubernia, d 1942. Botanist. A graduate of Kharkiv University (1915), Korshykov became a professor at that university in 1926 and director of its Scientific Research Institute of Biology in 1930. A specialist in the algology of Ukraine, he focused his research on the morphology and taxonomy of freshwater plants. He described 60 new species and 300 subspecies of water plants. His publications include a guide to the Volvocaceae of Ukraine (1938) in the 12-volume Vyznachnykh prysnovodnykh vodorostei URSR (Guide to Freshwater Plants of the Ukrainian SSR, 1953). He was killed by the Nazis.

Korsun. See Chersonese Taurica.

Korsun. See Korsun-Shevchenkivskiyi.

Korsun, Oleksander, b 8 June 1818 in Bogdanovska Antypovka, Rostov county, Don Cossack province, d 6 November 1891 in Bogdanovska Antypovka. Poet and publisher. A graduate of Kharkiv University (1842), he wrote Ukrainskie pover'ia (Ukrainian Mythology, 1839), a collection of popular works of mythology set to verse. In the early 1840s he composed nostalgic poetry of a Romantic nature, some examples of which appeared in the almanac Snip, which he edited and published in 1841. His recollections about M. Kostomarov were published in Russkii arkhiv in 1890.

Korsun, Battle of 1648. One of the major battles of the *Cossack-Polish War of 1648–57, which took place near the town of Korsun (now Korsun-Shevchenkivskiyi, in Cherkasy oblast). The battle followed the defeat of the Poles at *Zhovti Vody on 16 May 1648. The Polish hetmans M. Potocki and M. Kalinowski led an army of 20,000 men against 15,000 Cossacks led by Hetman B. *Khmelnysky and 4,000 Tatars under the Crimean khan Tuhai-Bey. On 26 May the Polish forces were routed and more than 8,700 prisoners were taken, including Potocki and Kalinowski. The Cossack victory at Korsun helped launch a national uprising against Polish domination.

Korsun Council (1657). A council of the Cossack starshyna that took place in October 1657 after the death of Hetman B. *Khmelnysky. It confirmed the election of general chancellor I. *Vyhovsky as the new hetman of Ukraine, and confirmed the relationship with the tsar in accordance with the Pereiaslav treaty.

Korsun-Shevchenkivskiyi [Korsun'-Ševčenkivs'kyj]. IV-12. City (1972 pop 17,300) and raion center in Cherkasy oblast, situated on the Ros River. Founded as a fortress by Grand Prince Yaroslav the Wise in 1032, until 1944 it was called Korsun. It was destroyed by the Mongols in 1240. A Polish fortress was built there in 1584, and the town received the right of Magdeburg law. In 1630 Cossack rebels led by T. Fedorovych attacked the town and destroyed its Polish garrison. The town was razed by the Polish forces during the 1637 Cossack rebellion led by P. Pavliuk. During the Cossack-Polish War the Battle of *Korsun took place there in 1648, and the town was the center of Korsun regiment from 1648 to 1712. In 1702–4 the Korsun colonel Z. Iskra was one of the leaders of a popular rebellion. In 1768, during the Koliivshchyna rebellion, the Polish garrison was destroyed by the forces of M. Zalizniak. The town came under tsarist rule in 1793. In 1903 one of the largest paint factories in the Russian Empire was built there. In January–February 1944 a 80,000-man German force was encircled and destroyed by the Red Army during the Battle of Korsun-Shevchenkivskiyi.

The city's plants produce automobile and tractor machine tools, machine parts, bricks, building materials, canned fruit and vegetables, dairy products, feed, clothing, and furniture; and repair automobiles and tractors. A hydroelectric station and the Museum of the History of the Korsun-Shevchenkivskiyi Battle (in a palace built by S. Poniatowski in 1785–9) are located in the city, and a late-18th-century park, the remains of old settlements and fortifications, and Scythian and Cossack burial mounds are preserved there.

Oleksander Korsunsky

Korsunsky, Oleksander [Korsuns'kyj], b 18 October 1893 in Pishchane, Poltava county, Poltava gubernia, d 25 October 1984 in Minneapolis. Microbiologist and bacteriologist. Korsunsky was a professor at the Kiev Veterinary Zootechnical Institute (1922–30), the Kamianets-Podilskiyi (1930–3) and Bila Tserkva (1934–41) agricultural institutes, and the Ukrainian Technical and Husbandry Institute in Regensburg (1945–9). He immigrated to the United States in 1952. Korsunsky published over 20 works dealing mostly with the problem of immunization of birds and fish. Korsunsky was also a member of the Ukrainian National Council in Kiev in 1941 and a founder and head of the Relief Committee in Munich after the Second World War.

Korunka. A family of Lviv craftsmen and painters in the second half of the 16th and the first half of the 17th centuries. Semen (aka Senko), a cobbler, was active in printing and book selling, and became a close associate of I. *Fedorovych. Semen's son Ivan (d 1657) was a painter; his name began to appear in historical documents in 1624. Semen's second son, Oleksander (d 1648), was also a painter. Ivan's son Ivan (1594–1665), also a painter, was a prominent member of the Lviv Dormition Brotherhood. Semen's brother, Sevastian (d 1668), painted churches and served as an officer of the painters' guild (1662–6); he drew eight illustrations for the triodion (Lviv 1664), which were engraved in wood by V. Ushakevych.

Korytnyk, Walter [Korytnyk, Vsevolod], b 21 April 1929 in Časlav, Czechoslovakia, d 31 October 1985 in Buffalo, New York. Medical chemist and biochemist; full member of the Shevchenko Scientific Society. A graduate of the University of Adelaide (PH D 1957), he emigrated to the United States in 1958 and two years later was appointed senior cancer research scientist at the Roswell Park Memorial Institute. In 1981 he became director of graduate studies in medical chemistry at the State University of New York at Buffalo. Korytnyk published over 83 papers and chapters in the field of carbohydrate chemistry and biochemistry, plasma membrane modifiers and inhibitors, vitamin B-6 and anti-cancer agents, and the application of nuclear magnetic resonance to chemistry and pharmacology.

Korzeniowski, Józef, b 19 March 1797 near Brody, Galicia, d 17 September 1863 in Dresden, Germany. Polish playwright and pedagogue. He taught Polish literature at the Kremianets Lyceum (1823–32) and philology at Kiev University (1833–8) before becoming the director of a gymnasium in Kharkiv (1838–46). Ukrainian subject-matter and themes are prevalent in many of his works, most particularly in his drama Karpaccy górane (Carpathian Highlanders, 1843). This work underwent several translations and adaptations into Ukrainian. The first was M. Ustyianovych's 'Verkhovyntsi Beskydiv' (The Highlanders of the Beskyds, 1848); the song from the play, 'Hei, brattia opryshky' (Hey, Fellow Opryshoks), became extremely popular in Western Ukraine. Other translations followed: K. Klymkovych's 'Verkhovyntsi' (staged in 1864); V. Derzhyruka's, under the same title (1909); and an anonymous translation (1924, republished in 1927). In Russian-ruled Ukraine the play was translated by S. Tobilevych as 'Hutsuly' (Hutsuls, 1890) and by H. Khotkevych as 'Antin Revizorchuk' (1910).

Korz, Kuzma [Korž, Kuz'ma], b ? in the Katerynoslav region, d 1919 in Kiev. Community and political activist. A member of the cc of the Ukrainian Party of Socialist Revolutionaries, he was elected to the Ukrainian Central Rada in 1917 and was the secretary of its Information Bureau. He was shot by the Bolsheviks during their occupation of Kiev in summer 1919.

Korz, Oleksii [Korž, Oleksij], b 23 April 1924 in Obolon, Poltava gubernia. Medical scientist; corresponding member of the USSR Academy of Medical Sciences since 1967. Upon graduating from the Kharkiv Medical Institute in 1951, he began working at the Kharkiv Institute of Orthopedics and Traumatology, becoming its director in 1965. Since 1966 he has also been a professor of orthopedics and traumatology at the Ukrainian Institute for the Upgrading of Physicians. He has written on the surgical treatment of traumatic swelling, bone and joint tuberculosis, and regeneration.

Kos, Andrii, 1864–1918. Political and civic leader. He practiced law in Lviv (1893–6) and Kalush (1896–1918). Together with I. Kurovets, he organized Ukrainian institutions in Kalush county. Serving as a deputy in the Austrian Parliament (1900–7), he attacked the enormous influence of Polish landowners in Galician politics. During the Russian occupation of Galicia Kos was arrested and exiled to Siberia for two years. Released in 1917, he returned to Kalush.

Kos, Mykhailo, b 1863 in Komarno, Rudky county, Galicia, d 12 February 1930 in Peremyshl. Ophthalmologist and civic leader; from 1911 full member of the Shevchenko Scientific Society. Upon completing his medical studies, he served as a physician in the Austrian army. He promoted medical care and first-aid services for the people, and for 30 years played a prominent role in the Ukrainian community in Peremyshl. Kos wrote a number of scientific and popular articles on ophthalmology. He was a frequent contributor to various Galician newspapers.

Anatol Kos-Anatolsky

Yurii Kosach

Kos-Anatolsky, Anatol [Kos-Anatol's'kyj, Anatol'] (real surname: Kos), b 1 December 1909 in Kolomyia, Galicia, d 30 November 1983 in Lviv. Composer and educator. A graduate of the law faculty of Lviv University (1931) and Lviv Conservatory (1934), he taught at the Stryi Branch of the Lysenko Higher Institute of Music (1934–7) and later at the Lviv Conservatory (1952–83). His works include the opera To Meet the Sun (1957, revised as The Fiery Sky, 1959); the ballets Doobush's Kerchief (1951), The Jay's Wing (1956), and Orysia (1964); the operetta Spring Storms (1960); the cantatas It Passed a Long Time Ago (1961) and The Immortal Testament (1963); the oratorio From the Niagara to the Dnieper (1969); two piano concertos and two violin concertos; chamber music; piano pieces; and choral works.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Volyns'kyi, I. Anatolii losypovych Kos-Anatol's'kyi (Kiev 1965)
Kolodii, Ia.; Polek, V. Kompozytor Anatolii Kos-Anatol's'kyi: Materialy do notohrafii ta bibliohrafii, 1947–1972 rr. (Lviv 1974)

Kosach, Mykhailo [Kosač, Myxajlo] (pseud: Obachny), b 30 July 1869 in Kolodiazhne, Kovel county, Volhynia gubernia, d 16 October 1903 in Kharkiv. Writer and mathematician; brother of Lesia *Ukrainka. A graduate of Yuriev (Tartu) University (1894), he lectured on physics and meteorology at Kharkiv University. His contribution to Ukrainian literature consists of short stories such as Rizdvo pid Khrestom Poludnevym (Christmas under the Southern Cross), Khmary (Clouds), and Hist' (The Guest), published in Zoria, and Ukrainian translations of V. Korolenko, N. Gogol, and other Russian writers.

Kosach, Oleksandra. See Hryhorenko, Hrytsko.

Kosach, Olha. See Pchilka, Olena.

Kosach, Yurii [Košáč, Jurij] (Kossatch; pseud.: Ya. Kosarych, H. Roslavets, A. Zhorianychn), b 5 December 1909 in Kiev. Poet, writer, and dramatist; nephew of Lesia Ukrainka. Kosach studied at Warsaw University and in Paris. After the war he lived in displaced persons camps in Germany and was an active member of the writers' organization *MUR. In 1949 he immigrated to the United States. While in New York he began publishing a pro-Soviet journal, Za synim obriem, which was notable primarily for its strident anti-émigré attacks. A prolific author excelling in the genre of the historical novel, he is also the author of several collections of rather average poetry, often marked by his interest in history and mythology. His dramatic works consist of Obloha (The Siege, 1943) – a dramatic poem – and the tragedy Diistvo pro Iuriiia Peremozhtsia (Play about Yurii, the Conqueror, 1947).

By far the largest and most interesting body of work is Kosach's prose, written prior to his emigration to the United States. Dynamic and with a great emphasis on plot, it consists of several collections of historical novellas and short stories – Chorna pani (The Black Lady, 1932), Charivna Ukraïna (Enchanting Ukraine, 1937), 13-ta chota (The Settlement of the 13th Platoon, 1937), Klubok Ariadny (Ariadne's Thread, 1937), Hlukhivs'ka pani (The Lady of Hlukhiv, 1938), and others; as well as novelettes and novels – Sontse skhodyt' v Chyhyryni (The Sun Rises in the Eyes, 1934), Dyvymos' v ochi smerti (We Look Death in the Eyes, 1936), Chad (The Fumes, 1937), Rubikon Khmel'nyts'koho (Khmelnitsky's Rubicon, 1941), Enei i zhyttia inshykh (Aeneas and the Lives of Others, 1947), Den' hniou (The Day of Wrath, 1947), and others. His work weakened in the United States; as his political views changed, he began to write in the style of socialist realism, and was published in Soviet Ukraine. His latest novel, Suziria Lebedia (The Constellation Cygnus, 1983) – a family chronicle published in the West – is Chekhovian in atmosphere and reflects the ambivalent political stance of the author.

D.H. Struk

Kosach-Kryvyniuk, Olha [Košáč-Kryvynjuk, Ol'ha], b 26 May 1877 in Zviahel (now Novohrad-Volynskiy), Volhynia gubernia, d 11 November 1945 in Augsburg, West Germany. Physician, community figure, ethnographer, and writer; the daughter of Olena *Pchilka and sister of Lesia *Ukrainka. She taught in Sunday schools in Kiev. While studying at the St Petersburg Women's Medical Institute (1899–1903), she was active in the St Petersburg Ukrainian Student Hromada and was imprisoned for her involvement. From 1910 to 1922 she was a zemstvo physician in Lotsmanska Kamianka near Katerynoslav, directed an orphanage there, published several of her sister's works, and translated Russian and French literature (by V. Hugo, George Sand, and others) into Ukrainian (under the pseudonym Olena Zirka). She amassed a large collection of Ukrainian embroidery, which served as the basis for her collection Ukrains'ki narodni vzory z Kyivshchyny, Poltavshchyny, i Katerynoslavshchyny (Ukrainian Folk [Embroidery] Patterns from the Kiev, Poltava, and Katerynoslav Regions). The last years of her life were devoted to collecting and studying materials about her sister. Her monumental Lesia Ukraïna: Khronolohiia zhyttia i tvorchosti (Lesia Ukrainka: A Chronology of Her Life and Work) was published posthumously in 1970 in New York.

M. Stech

Kosach-Kvitka, Larysa. See Ukrainka, Lesia.

Kosarenko-Kosarevych, Vasyl [Kosarenko-Kosarevyč, Vasył'], b 23 March 1891 in Lany, Kaminka-Strumyl'ova county, Galicia, d 30 September 1964 in New York. Publicist and political figure. In 1918 he served in the UNR Ministry of Foreign Affairs as a member of the delegation to Brest-Litovsk, then as the chargé d'affaires in Berlin, and, finally, as the secretary of the mission in Stockholm. Under the Directory he was entrusted with special assignments by the ministries of highways, foreign affairs, and finances. After the war he completed his studies in engineering and political science in Berlin, established a successful business, and devoted himself to philosophical and historical research. He was arrested in 1943 by the Gestapo for his sharp criticism of Hitler's eastern policy and spent two years in concentration camps. In 1952 he immigrated to the United States. Besides articles in the Ukrainian and German press, he wrote Die Moskauer Sphinx: Mythos und Macht in den Vorstellungen über Osteuropa (1955), which was revised and published also in Ukrainian (1957) and English (1961).

Kosariiev, Borys [Kosarijev], b 4 August 1897 in Kharkiv. Stage designer and pedagogue. Upon graduating from the Kharkiv Art School (1918), he worked with various theater groups in Odessa. In 1920 he returned to Kharkiv and worked in the Chervonyi Fakel theater, the children's theater, the Kharkiv Chervonozavodskiy Ukrainian Drama Theater, the Kharkiv Young Spectator's Theater, and the Kharkiv Ukrainian Drama Theater. From 1931 he taught at the Kharkiv Art Institute. His most successful sets were designed for M. Starytsky's Za dvoma zaitsiamy (After Two Hares), I. Kocherha's Iaroslav Mudryi and Marko v pekli (Marko in Hell), and J. Molière's L'Avare.

Kosaryk, Dmytro (pen name of Dmytro Kovalenko), b 31 October 1904 in Fydrivka in the Poltava region. Prose writer and literary critic. A member of the *Pluh writers' group, his first collection, Chervona kupil' (The Red Bath, 1925), was followed by the collection Mii azymut (My Azimuth, 1931) and five short novels (1932, 1961, 1962, 1964, 1971). He has also produced popular propagandistic-literary works, including Literaturna tvorchist' voïnio hromadians'koi viiny (The Literary Creativity of the Soldiers of the Civil War, 1936) and books on A. Pushkin, T. Shevchenko, and M. Gorky.

Kosenko, Ilarion, b 19 October 1888 in Zinkiv, Poltava gubernia, d 10 October 1950 in Paris. Political and civic figure. A member of the Ukrainian Party of Socialist Revolutionaries, he was elected to the Labor Congress, convened by the Directory in January 1919. Then he was in charge of the Kiev postal and telegraph district. In 1920 he served briefly as minister of postal and telegraph services in V. Prokopovych's cabinet. Emigrating in 1920, he settled in Paris and was active in the Ukrainian community. He was the business manager of the weekly Tryzub (1925–40) and chairman of the Board of Directors of the *Petliura Ukrainian Library (1942–50).

Viktor Kosenko

Ivan Koshelivets

Kosenko, Viktor, b 23 November 1896 in St Petersburg, d 3 October 1938 in Kiev. Pianist, composer, and educator. A student of A. Michałowski and a graduate of the Petrograd Conservatory (1918), where he studied under I. Myklashevsky, Kosenko began to lecture at the Zhytomyr Music Tekhnikum in 1918, at the Lysenko Music and Drama Institute in 1929, and at the Kiev Conservatory in 1934. At the same time he gave piano concerts in different cities of Ukraine. His works include a sonata for cello and piano (1923), Classical Trio for piano, violin, and cello (1927), a sonata for violin and piano (1927), Heroic Overture (1932), Moldavian Poem (1937), a piano concerto, three piano sonatas, a trio, a violin concerto, about 100 piano pieces, including 24 pieces for children (1936), and many songs.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Kosenko, A. (ed). V.S. Kosenko u spohadakh suchasnykiv (Kiev 1967)

Stetsiuk, R. Viktor Kosenko (Kiev 1974)

Olinyk, O. Fortepianna tvorchist' V.S. Kosenka (Kiev 1977)

Koshelivets, Ivan [Košelivec'] (Koszeliwec, Iwan), b 10 November 1907 in the Chernihiv region. A leading émigré literary scholar and critic; full member of the Shevchenko Scientific Society and the Ukrainian Academy of Arts and Sciences. A graduate of the Nizhen Institute of People's Education (1930), he worked as a teacher in Kremenchuk and Nizhen in the 1930s and was a graduate student at the AN URSR Institute of Literature in 1940–1. As a postwar refugee, he has lived in Munich since 1947. He was the editor in chief of the monthlies Ukrains'ka literaturna hazeta (1955–60) and Suchasnist' (1961–

6, 1976–7, 1983–4) and, with a few breaks, a member of the latter's editorial board. Since the late 1950s he has also been a member of the editorial board of Entsyklopediia ukraïnoznavstva (Encyclopedia of Ukraine). Koshelivets has written many articles on literature and the arts. He compiled and edited the anthology Panorama nainovishoi literatury v URSR (Panorama of the Newest Literature of the Ukrainian SSR, 1963; rev edn, 1974); wrote the monographs Suchasna literatura v URSR (Contemporary Literature in the Ukrainian SSR, 1964), Mykola Skrypnyk (1972), and Oleksander Dovzhenko (1980); edited a Polish collection of Soviet Ukrainian dissident documents, Ukraina 1956–1968 (Ukraine, 1956–1968, 1969); and has translated into Ukrainian literary works from Russian, Belorussian, German (F. Kafka's short prose), and French (including D. Diderot's Jacques Fataliste et son Maître). His memoirs, Rozmovy v dorozhi do sebe (Conversations on the Way to Myself), appeared in 1985.

Koshevsky, Kost [Koševs'kyj, Kost'] (real name: Shkliar), b 30 September 1895 in Shulhivka, Novomoskvske county, Katerynoslav gubernia, d 14 March 1945 in Kiev. Actor, dramatist, and stage director. From 1914 to 1918 he acted with various amateur groups, and then joined the Molodyi Teatr company. After working briefly at the Shevchenko Kiev Ukrainian Drama Theater (1920–1), he stayed with the Kiev Ukrainian Drama Theater (1922–39), except for short periods with the Odessa Theater of the Revolution (1930–1) and the Dnipropetrovske Ukrainian Music and Drama Theater (1932–3). He was appointed artistic director of the Kiev Young Spectator's Theater in 1939, but was dismissed in 1941 for criticizing contemporary Soviet drama. His more successful productions were O. Korniiuchuk's Platon Krechet and J. Molière's Les Fourberies de Scapin. His actor's repertoire included Perelesnyk in Lesia Ukrainka's Lisova pisnia (The Forest Song), Mokii in M. Kulish's Myna Mazailo, the title role in K. Gutzkow's Uriel Acosta, Creon in Sophocles' Oedipus Rex, and Möbius in W. Hasenclever's Ein besserer Herr. He also wrote several plays: Kooperatory (Co-operative Managers), Budni (Everyday Life), and Bludni vohni (Wayward Fires), an adaptation of M. Kotsiubynsky's Fata morgana.

Oleksander Koshyts

Koshyts, Oleksander [Košyc'] (Koshetz, Alexander), b 14 September 1875 in Romashky, Kaniv county, Kiev gubernia, d 21 September 1944 in Winnipeg. Composer, choirmaster, and ethnographer. A graduate of the Kiev Theological Academy (1901), he studied composition with H. Liubomyrsky at the Lysenko Music and Drama School (1908–10) and served as assistant choirmaster at the school. During that period he conducted the Boian choir, organized two student choirs (one consisting of students of Kiev University, the other of students of the Higher Courses for Women), taught choral music at the Kiev Conservatory, conducted the orchestra of the Sadovsky Theater (1912–16), and served as conductor and choirmaster of the Kiev Opera (1916–17). He collected Ukrainian folk songs in the Kiev region (1893–1900) and in the Kuban (summers of 1903, 1904, and 1905). In 1918 Koshyts cofounded the *Ukrainian Republican Kapelle (reorganized in 1920 into the Ukrainian National Choir), which for seven years toured Europe and North and South America to win public support for the Ukrainian National Republic. In 1926 he settled in New York, where he taught choir conducting, and in 1941 moved to Winnipeg. A leading popularizer of Ukrainian folk songs and liturgical music, Koshyts composed five liturgies, arranged numerous folk songs, and published a number of collections and musical studies. His memoirs were published in 1947–8 in two volumes.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Koshyts', O. Z pisneiu cherez svit, 3 vols (Winnipeg 1952–74)
Antonovych, M. O.A. Koshyts', kompozytor tserkovnoi muzyky i dyrygent (Winnipeg 1975)

W. Wytwycky

Koshyts, Tetiana [Košyc', Tetjana] (Koshetz, Tatiana; née Heorhiievskia), b 25 January 1892 in Vinnytsia, Podilia gubernia, d 26 March 1966 in Winnipeg. Voice teacher and museum curator; wife of O. *Koshyts. In 1918 she joined the Ukrainian Republican Kapelle and toured Western Europe and North America. From 1926 she taught voice in New York. As director of the *Ukrainian Cultural and Educational Centre (Oseredok) in Winnipeg (1943–66), she offered courses on Ukrainian folk arts and collected valuable artifacts and archives for the museum.

Kosiachenko, Hryhorii [Kosjačenko, Hryhorij], b 29 September 1903 in Cherniakhivka, Poltava gubernia, d 19 October 1936 in Yahotyn, Kiev oblast. Poet and journalist. A member of the writers' groups *Hart and the All-Ukrainian Association of Proletarian Writers in Kiev in the 1920s, he wrote the poetry collections Vikholy (Snowstorms, 1927), Zalizna krov (Iron Blood, 1927), Malji Kobzar (Small Kobzar, 1928), Skhid sontsia (Sunrise, 1928), Shtorm (The Assault, 1929), Polustanok (The Railway Stop, 1930), Doroħa (The Road, 1931), and Bornia i dni (The Struggle and the Days, 1932). He disappeared during the Stalinist terror in 1932.

Košice (Ukrainian: Koshytsi). A city (1987 pop 222,000) on the Hornád River; the capital of the Eastern Slovak Region of Czechoslovakia. It is inhabited mostly by Slovaks, some Hungarians, and about 3,000 Ukrainians and Slovakized Ukrainians. In the 1850s Transcarpathia belonged briefly to the Košice administrative district. From 1929 to 1939 the city served as the seat of the Czechoslovak Higher Court for Transcarpathia. In 1968 the Greek Catholic parish in Košice was restored, and a local branch of the Cultural Association of Ukrainian Workers was set up.

Kosior, Stanislav, b 18 November 1889 in Węgrów, Poland, d 26 February 1939. Soviet state and Party official. A Donbas worker who was active in the Bolshevik underground in Ukraine before the 1917 Revolution, he became a member of the Petrograd Military Revolutionary Committee in 1917. From 1918 he held several important state, party, and military posts in Ukraine, including membership in the CP(B)U Politburo. After a stint in the Siberian party organization and in Moscow (1922–8), he returned to Ukraine and was general secretary (1928–34) and first secretary (1934–8) of the CP(B)U. Under Kosior's administration, during which the second secretary P. *Postyshev had a great influence, Ukraine suffered a shift in policy from *Ukrainization to Russification, forced *collectivization of the peasantry, the man-made *famine of 1933, the Stalinist *terror, and the physical destruction of the Ukrainian intelligentsia. Transferred in 1938 to Moscow, Kosior was himself arrested and shot in 1939. He was rehabilitated posthumously in the 1960s.

Kosiv, Sylvestr, b ? in the Vitsebsk region, Belorussia, d 13 April 1657. Prominent Orthodox church leader, metropolitan, and writer. He studied at the Vilnius Brotherhood School and at the Catholic academies in Lublin and Zamostia, then taught at the Lviv Dormition Brotherhood School. In 1631 Metropolitan P. Mohyla invited him to become a lecturer at the Kievan Cave Monastery School, which in 1632 became a college (later called the *Kievan Mohyla Academy). He soon became the prefect of the college and a close collaborator of Mohyla's. In 1635 he was appointed bishop of Mstislau, Orsha, and Mahiliou and began implementing sweeping reforms of church administration. In 1647 he became the metropolitan of Kiev. Kosiv's tenure as metropolitan, which coincided with the Khmelnytsky rebellion, was a greatly unsettled period in the history of the Ukrainian church. In politics Kosiv opposed a union with Moscow as well as an unconditional alliance with Poland; although he gave a lavish greeting to B. *Khmelnytsky upon the latter's arrival in Kiev in December 1648, he was also critical of Cossack policies. He favored an independent Ukrainian Orthodox church under the ultimate jurisdiction of the Patriarch of Constantinople and resisted pressures for the subjugation of Kiev metropolity to Moscow. He was the author of Exegesis ... (1635), an essay in defense of Orthodox schools, and Didaskaliia ... (1637), an essay about the seven sacraments. He also published a Polish translation of the Kievan Cave Patericon (1635).

A. Zhukovsky

Kosiv. v-6. Town (1970 pop 8,100) and raion center in Ivano-Frankivske oblast. It was first mentioned in 1424. From 1869 to 1939 it was a county town and the administrative and commercial center of the Hutsul region. In the past its main industry was salt extraction; today it is sawmilling, woodworking, and furniture making. Because of its mild climate, Kosiv is a popular health resort. The city has long been known for its artistic handicrafts. Before the Second World War its most important handicraft manufacturers were the Hutsulske Mystetstvo kilim mill and the Hutsulshchyna co-operative. Today the Hutsulshchyna artistic crafts association produces finely carved and inlaid wood, metal, and leather objects, kilims, other woven and embroidered articles, and ceramic wares. Artisans are trained at a tekhnikum of applied folk handicrafts. A branch of the Museum of Hutsul Folk Art and the M. Pavlyk Literary Museum are located in Kosiv.

Kosiv

Kosmatenko, Anatolii, b 3 October 1921 in Vremivka, Mariupol county, Katerynoslav gubernia, d 6 April 1975 in Kiev. Fabulist. A graduate of Kiev University (1953), he worked for the paper Literaturna Ukraina, the journal Dnipro, and the Radianskyi Pysmennyk publishing house. From 1947 his satirical and humorous fables appeared regularly in Soviet Ukrainian periodicals. Between 1953 and 1977, 11 of his fable collections were published. Kosmatenko's fables have been acclaimed for their originality, freshness, intellectual and linguistic sophistication, and structural innovativeness.

Kosonocky, Walter F. [Kosonots'kyj, Volodymyr], b 15 December 1931 in Sieradz, Poland. Ukrainian-American inventor in the fields of electronics and solid-state physics. A graduate of Columbia University (he received his doctorate in 1965), since 1955 he has worked at the RCA Laboratories in Princeton, New Jersey, becoming a Fellow of the Laboratories in 1975. In 1987 he was also appointed professor of optic electronics at the New Jersey Technological Institute. He is the author of over 75 technical papers and holds over 40 us patents. His main contributions are in the development of various solid-state devices and systems, including lasers, holographic memories, charge-coupled devices (an area in which he is considered a world expert), and Schottky-barrier image sensors.

Kosonohov, Yosyf, b 31 March 1866 in Stanytsia Kamenska (now Kamensk-Shakhtinskii), Don Cossack province, d 22 March 1922. Physicist and meteorologist; elected full member of the Ukrainian Academy of Sciences in 1922. He graduated in 1889 from Kiev University, where he studied under M. Avenarius, and remained there as a lecturer and then professor (1903–22) and holder of the Chair of Physical Geography and Meteorology. From 1895 he also directed the Kiev Meteorological Observatory. His publications include works on electric oscillation and optical resonance, as well as several textbooks and popular surveys.

Kosonotsky, Volodymyr [Kosonoc'kyj], b 21 September 1886 in Dub, Tomaszów county, Lublin gubernia, d 24 April 1942 in Kholm. Orthodox church and community leader. A graduate of the law faculty at Kiev University (1910), he served to 1914 as an examining judge in Uman. From 1922 to 1934 he was the secretary of the Ukrainian Parliamentary Representation in Warsaw and a member of the Ukrainian Church Committee. In 1939 he became active in the Orthodox church of the Kholm region, and played an important role in establishing a separate Kholm-Podlachia eparchy. He served as director of the eparchy's press department and edited Kholms'kyi pravoslavno-narodnii kalendar (1941–2) and other eparchial publications. To refute Polish claims to various churches and monasteries held by the Orthodox church he wrote Protses za pravoslavni tserkovy (Legal Action on Behalf of Orthodox Churches, 1930).

Hryhorii Kossak

Kossak, Hryhorii, b 7 March 1882 in Drohobych, Galicia, d 1931? in Kharkiv. Senior officer of the Ukrainian Galician Army (УГА) with the rank of colonel. As a reserve officer of the Austrian army, in 1914 he was put in charge of a field unit of the Ukrainian Sich Riflemen (uss). In 1915 he commanded the First Kurin and then the First Regiment of the uss, which fought in the Carpathians. In 1917–18 Kossak was responsible for recruit training in the uss. During the *November Uprising in 1918, he commanded (3–9 November) the Ukrainian forces in Lviv. Subsequently, he commanded the Third Corps of the УГА. In June 1919 he was appointed commander of the short-lived Fifth Corps and then commander of the army's rear guard. In November 1919 Kossak emigrated to Austria with the UNR government and then settled in Czechoslovakia. He returned to Ukraine in 1924 during the Ukrainization period and served as an instructor at the Red Officer School in Kharkiv. Arrested in 1931 and accused of belonging to the so-called Ukrainian National Center, he was executed by the Soviet secret police.

Kossak, Ivan, b 11 September 1876 in Drohobych, Galicia, d 15 January 1927 in Kiev. Military and civic leader; brother of H. *Kossak. He was a teacher at the Chortkiv Teacher's Seminary and was active in the Prosvita, Sil'skyi Hospodar, and Sokil societies. During the First World War he served as a captain in the Ukrainian Sich Riflemen and saw action in the Carpathians. In 1919, during the Ukrainian-Polish War, Kossak was the commander of the Zhovkva sector and was wounded in combat. In 1920 he served as a UNR military attaché in Rome. Then, in Vienna, he was active in the Western Ukrainian Association of the League of Nations. In 1925 he immigrated to the Ukrainian SSR, where he worked in co-operative banking.

Kossak, Juliusz, b 15 December 1824 in Vyzhnytsia, Bukovyna, d 3 February 1899 in Cracow. Polish painter of Ukrainian origin. He studied in Lviv, St Petersburg (1851), and Paris, then worked as an illustrator for the newspaper Tygodnik ilustrowany in Warsaw. He subsequently moved to Cracow. His works on Ukrainian themes include Cossacks in the Steppe (1884), The Meeting of Bohdan Khmelnytsky with Tuhai-Bei (1885), and various Volhynian and Podilian landscapes.

Kossak, Vasyl, b 12 February 1886 in Chortkiv, Galicia, d 23 May 1932 in Stryi, Galicia. Actor, singer (tenor), and stage director. Joining the Ruska Besida theater as an actor in 1904, he worked his way to director of the company (1915–18). In 1918–22 he worked with his own troupe in Kolomyia, and then with Y. Stadnyk's touring theater (1924–7) and with the Starytsky theater in Stryi (1928–32). His repertoire included such roles as Andrii in S. Hulak-Artemovsky's Zaporozhian Cossack beyond the Danube, Petro in M. Lysenko's Natalka from Poltava, Suleiman in D. Sichynsky's Roksoliana, Barinkey in J. Strauss's Zigeunerbaron, Antos in S. Moniuszko's Halka, the title role in C. Gounod's Faust, and Stepan in M. Kropyvnytsky's Nevol'nyk (The Captive).

Zenon Kossak

Volodymyr Kossar

Kossak, Zenon, b 1 April 1907 in Drohobych, d 19 March 1939 in Solotvyna, Transcarpathia. Nationalist activist. He studied law at Lviv University and was a member of the Ukrainian Military Organization in the late 1920s. He directed the 'combat,' then the organizational, activities of the OUN in 1929–32 as a member of its Home Executive. A Polish political prisoner in 1931–8, after his release he became an ideological instructor and later the deputy commander of the *Carpathian Sich National Defense Organization in Carpatho-Ukraine. He and Col M. Kolodzinsky were captured in battle and murdered in a salt mine by Hungarian troops.

Kossar, Volodymyr (Wolodymyr), b 23 November 1890 in Rusyliv, Kamiianka Strumyl'ova county, Galicia, d 11 May 1970 in St Catharines, Ontario. Community leader and agronomist. Kossar served in the Austrian and Ukrainian Galician armies during the First World War. In 1920 he emigrated to Czechoslovakia, where he studied agricultural engineering in Prague and lectured in Transcarpathia. A member of the *Ukrainian Military Organization, he came to Saskatoon in 1927, where he worked as a plant ecologist at the University of Saskatchewan (1935–42). He helped found the *Ukrainian War Veterans' Association (1928) and the *Ukrainian National Federation (1932), whose executive he headed (1937–53). Kossar helped form the *Ukrainian Canadian Committee in 1940 and served as its second vice-president for many years.

Kyriak Kostandi

Kostandi, Kyriak, b 3 October 1852 in Dofinivka, Odessa county, Kherson gubernia, d 31 October 1921 in Odessa. Realist painter and art scholar. After graduating from the Odessa Drawing School (1874) and the St Petersburg Academy of Arts (1882), he returned to Odessa, where he painted and taught at the drawing school. In 1897 he joined the *Peredvizhniki and began to take part in their exhibitions. Having helped found the Society of South Russian Artists, he served from 1902 to 1920 as its president. In 1907 he was elected full member of the St Petersburg Academy of Arts. From 1917 he served as director of the Odessa City Museum. Kostandi was opposed to every formalist trend. Adhering to a strictly realist style, he devoted himself to genre painting, but did some landscape and portrait painting as well. His works include At a Friend's Sickbed (1884), Geese (1888), Early Spring (1892), Little Bright Cloud (1906), and Little Blue Cloud (1908). V. Afanasiev wrote a critical biography of Kostandi in 1955.

Kostandi Society of Artists (Tovarystvo khudozhnykiv im. K. Kostandi). A society of realist painters and art lovers that was active in Odessa from 1922 to 1929. Some of its chief members formerly belonged to the Society of South Russian Artists. The society adhered to the artistic principles of the *Peredvizhniki, a group of realist painters with populist sympathies (est 1870). Its better-known members were artists such as D. Krainev, V. Zauze, Y. Bukovetsky, P. Vasilev, P. Volokydin, and O. Shovkunenko. Other members, such as the writer A. Kipen (the society's president) and the professors of medicine V. Filatov and V. Snezhkov, were devoted supporters of the arts. Owing to its realist style and ideological orientation, the Kostandi Society served as a precursor of socialist realism in art.

Myrna Kostash

Havryil Kostelnyk

Kostash, Myrna [Kostaš], b 2 September 1944 in Edmonton. Canadian writer of Ukrainian origin. Kostash has written short stories and many articles on Canadian feminism, regionalism, ethnicity, literature, and radical politics. Her All of Baba's Children (1977) – a subjective account of the Ukrainian immigrant experience in western Canada – was a Canadian best-seller. She is also the author of Long Way from Home: The Story of the Sixties Generation in Canada (1980), two story collections, several film scripts, including Teach Me to Dance (NFB, 1978), and a stage play.

Kostelnyk, Havryil [Kostel'nyk, Havryjil], b 1886 in Ruski Krstur, Bačka region, Serbia, d 20 September 1948 in Lviv. Priest, writer, journalist, philosopher, and theologian. He studied philosophy and theology at Zagreb, Lviv, and Freiburg (PH D 1913) universities. Ordained in 1913, after the First World War he moved to Lviv, where he was a professor of theology and philosophy at the Greek Catholic Theological Seminary (1920–8) and the Greek Catholic Theological Academy (1928–30). He also edited the religious journal Nyva (1922–32). In the late 1920s, Kostelnyk emerged as a critic of the Vatican's Uniate policy and the leading representative of the 'Eastern' (anti-Latinization) orientation among the Greek Catholic clergy. His position made him a target of NKVD pressure and blackmail during the 1939–41 Soviet occupation of Galicia, when the authorities tried unsuccessfully to have Kostelnyk organize an 'away from Rome' schism in the Ukrainian Catholic church. After the Soviets reoccupied Galicia in 1944 and arrested the entire Ukrainian Catholic episcopate, Kostelnyk was finally compelled by the authorities to assume chairmanship of the so-called Initiating Committee for the Reunification of the Greek Catholic Church with the Russian Orthodox Church. In this capacity, Kostelnyk presided over the Soviet-staged 'Reunion Sobor' in Lviv in March 1946, designed to supply the pseudo-canon, voluntary facade to the Soviet suppression of the Ukrainian Catholic church. He was killed under mysterious circumstances; while Soviet authorities have blamed his murder on the Vatican and Ukrainian nationalists, the evidence suggests that the assassination was masterminded by the Soviet police.

Kostelnyk's early poetry and prose were written in his native dialect, and he is considered the creator of the *Bačka literary language. His first literary work, Z moioho

valala (From My Village), appeared in 1904, and in 1923 he published Hramatyka bachvan'sko-ruskei besedy (Grammar of the Bačka Ruthenian Language), the first work of its kind. His collected works in the Bačka dialect were published in two volumes in Novi Sad (1970, 1975). Later he began to write prose and poetry in Ukrainian. His scholarly works include Try rozpravy pro piznannia (Three Tracts on Understanding, 1925), Spir pro epiklezu mizh Skhodom i Zakhodom (The Disagreement about Epiclesis between East and West, 1928), and articles in the journals Nyva and Bohosloviia.

B.R. Bociurkiw

Kostenko, Anatol, b 17 August 1908 in Balakliia, Poltava gubernia. Literary scholar. A graduate of the Poltava Institute of People's Education (1931), he began publishing literary criticism in 1932. An associate of the Shevchenko Institute, he was arrested in 1936/7 and most likely imprisoned in a Stalinist concentration camp. He was 'rehabilitated' in 1956. He is the author of numerous articles about T. Shevchenko and Lesia Ukrainka and of the books Shevchenko v memuarakh (Shevchenko in Memoirs, 1965), Spiwachka dosvitnikh vohniv (The Songstress of Twilight Fires, 1963), Lesia Ukrainka (1971, 1984), and Za moriamy, za horamy (Beyond Seas, beyond Mountains, 1984). He also edited, with introductions and notes, Shevchenko's diary (1936) and Spohady pro Shevchenka (Reminiscences about Shevchenko, 1958).

Lina Kostenko

Kostenko, Lina, b 19 March 1930 in Rzhyschiv, Kiev oblast. Poet; one of the earliest and most outstanding of the *Shestydesiatnyky, the Soviet Ukrainian writers of the post-Stalin thaw. She studied at the Kiev Pedagogical Institute and graduated from the Gorky Institute of Literature in Moscow in 1956. Her first poems were published in the early 1950s. She is the author of the collections Prominnia zemli (Rays of the Earth, 1957), Vitryla (Sails, 1958), and Mandrioky sertsia (Wanderings of the Heart, 1961). The collection 'Zoranyi integral' (The Stellar Integral) was ready for publication in 1962, but the censors judged it ideologically harmful and a departure from socialist realism and suppressed it. Twelve of the poems from the collection appeared in the anthology of Ukrainian samvydav Shyroke more Ukraïny (The Wide Sea of Ukraine, Paris-Baltimore 1972), and a volume encompassing her work to date was published in the West in 1969 as Poezii (Poems). In 1965 and 1968 Kostenko signed several open letters protesting the arrests and secret trials of Ukrainian intellectuals. Her poetry was not published in Ukraine again until 1977, when her collection Nad berehamy vichnoi riky (On the Banks of the Eternal River) appeared. A novel in verse, Marusia Churai (1979), and the collection Nepovtornist' (Uniqueness, 1980) followed.

Kostenko's poetry consists primarily of intimate, lyric poems and 'social' poems on the role and responsibility of a poet, particularly in a totalitarian society. Employing diverse rhythms, sophisticated language, a colloquial and aphoristic manner of writing, and a subtle emotivity, ranging from playful irony and humor to scathing satire, she is acknowledged as one of the better contemporary Ukrainian poets. Marusia Churai is a unique work in Ukrainian literature. In it Kostenko depicts the tragic fate of a semilegendary figure in Ukrainian history against the background of the Cossack-Polish War. Two new collections – 'Sad netanuchykh skul'ptur' (The Garden of Unmelting Sculptures) and, for children, 'Buzynovyi tsar' (The Lilac Emperor) – are scheduled to be published in 1987.

I. Koshelevets

Serhii Kostenko

Valentyn Kostenko

Kostenko, Serhii, b 1868 in Kiev, d 1900 in Paris. Realist painter. After graduating from the Kiev Drawing School in 1889, he taught there and took part in painting St Volodymyr's Cathedral in Kiev, where he did the murals Volodymyr's Baptism and Blessedness of Paradise. He also painted The Last Supper in the Askoldova Mohyla Church. His easel paintings Faust and Margaret, The Dnieper, and Self-portrait were displayed in 1889 at the exhibitions of the *Peredvizhniki in Kiev. In 1893 he went to Paris, where his works were exhibited in salons. He fell ill and died in a mental hospital.

Kostenko, Valentyn, b 28 July 1895 in Urazovo, Valuiki county, Voronezh gubernia, d 14 July 1960 in Kharkiv. Composer, musicologist, and educator. As a youth he sang in the court kapelle, and in 1921 he graduated from the St Petersburg Conservatory. From 1923 he taught at the Kharkiv Music and Drama Institute and served as musical director of Kharkiv Ukrainian Radio. In 1927–32 he headed the Association of Revolutionary Composers of Ukraine. His compositions, which were influenced by contemporary European music, include the operas Karmeliuk, Nazar Stodolia, and The Carpathians; the ballet Re- born Steppe; the symphony The Year 1917; a suite for symphony orchestra; violin, piano, and choral pieces; and six string quartets. His scholarly publications include studies of P. Senytsia (1922), the role of folk songs in Ukrainian music (1928), and the influence of German expressionism on Ukrainian music (1929). He also prepared a textbook on musical theory.

Ihor Kostetsky

Kostetsky, Ihor [Kostec'kyj] (Kostetzky, Eaghor; pen name of Ivan Merzliakov), b 14 May 1913 in Kiev, d 14 June 1983 in Schwaikheim, West Germany. Writer, translator, critic, and publisher. He grew up in Volhynia and Kiev. In the 1930s he studied stage directing in Leningrad and Moscow and spent two years as an actor in Siberia. A postwar refugee in West Germany, he was active in the writers' association *MUR. He and his wife, the German poet and translator E. *Kottmeier, established the Na Hori publishing house.

Kostetsky first published in 1941. He combined traditional and modernist (expressionist, surrealist, dadaist) forms of expression in his prose collections Opovidannia pro peremozhtsiv (Tales about the Victors, 1946) and Tam de pochatok chuda (There, Where the Miracle Begins, 1948) and in a collection of three plays, Teatr pered tvoim porohom (The Theater on Your Doorstep, 1963). He also wrote the study Sovetskaia teatral'naiia politika i sistema Stanislavskogo (Soviet Theater Policy and Stanislavsky's System, 1956). A great translator and promoter of literary classics, Kostetsky translated into Ukrainian and published W. Shakespeare's sonnets (1958) and King Lear (1969), T.S. Eliot's poetry (1960) and Murder in the Cathedral (1963), P. Verlaine's poems (1979), E. Pound's works (1960), F. Garcia Lorca's poems (1958), Québécois poetry (1972), and R.M. Rilke's poems (1971). He was a member of International PEN, the German Shakespeare Society, and the Teilhard de Chardin Society. A collection of works by and about him was published in Munich in 1964.

D.H. Struk

Kostetsky, Pliaton [Kostec'kyj, Pljaton], b 2 July 1832 in Viatskovychi, Sambir circle, Galicia, d 1 May 1908 in Lviv. Publicist and writer. Graduating from the law faculty of Lviv University (1853), he edited the first Ukrainian weekly Zoria halyts'ka (1855–6) and contributed to the periodicals Halychanyin (1868) and Rus'ka chytanka (1871). In the 1860s he became a proponent of the Polish cause and began to collaborate with various Polish newspapers. He edited the Polish daily Gazeta narodowa in Lviv (1869–1908). In Ukrainian he published the collection Poezii rus'ki (Ruthenian Poems, 1862) and several short stories about the Lemkos under the pseudonym Vasyl Suskii.

Kostetsky, Volodymyr [Kostec'kyj], b 10 September 1905 in Kholmy, Sosnytsia county, Chernihiv gubernia, d 26 May 1968 in Kiev. Realist painter. A graduate of the Kiev State Art Institute (1928) and a student of F. *Krychevsky, he depicted the life of Donbas miners in his earliest works. In the 1930s he converted to socialist realism and in this style produced such propagandistic works as Interrogation of the Enemy (1937), The Return (1947), The Scouts (1950), and Presentation of the Party Card (1959). From 1937 he lectured at the Kiev State Art Institute. H. Portnov published a monograph on Kostetsky in 1958.

Kostiamin, Nikolai [Kostjamin, Nikolaj], b 9 September 1868 in Velikii Ustiug, Vologda gubernia, Russia, d 26 February 1958 in Odessa. Russian hygienist. Kostiamin graduated from St Petersburg University (1890) and the Military Medical Academy there in 1896. In 1914 he became a professor at Odessa University. Later he taught at the Odessa Medical Institute. He wrote works on military, occupational, and nutritional hygiene and several textbooks.

Kostiantynivka [Kostjantynivka]. v-18, DB II-3. City (1984 pop 114,000) and raion center under oblast jurisdiction in Donetske oblast, situated on the Kryvyi Torets River. The city is an important transport junction and industrial center in the Donbas. Founded in 1859, Kostiantynivka had a population of 3,100 in 1897. Thereafter it grew rapidly, reaching a population of 25,400 in 1926, 96,000 in 1939, 89,000 in 1959, and 106,000 in 1970. From the late 1890s to the 1917 Revolution it was a center of working-class unrest. The city was destroyed during the Second World War; over a third of its population was killed. The city's main industries, which are based on local raw materials, are ferrous metallurgy (the Vtorchormet Plant), non-ferrous metallurgy (the Ukrtsynk Plant), chemicals production, window and industrial-glass manufacturing (the Avtosklo Plant and the Mechanized Glass Plant), and refractory- and other building-materials manufacturing (the Chervonyi Zhovten Plant). It also has a food industry, a leather-manufacturing complex, and railway-transport servicing shops. Institutions in the city include the Scientific Research Institute of Glass Products and the General-Technical Faculty of the Ukrainian Polytechnical Correspondence Institute.

Kostiantynivka Avtosklo Plant. A large glass factory located in Kostiantynivka, Donetske oblast. Opened in 1899 by a Belgian firm, it originally produced mirrors. Rebuilt after the Second World War, the plant produces over 200 glass products, including plate glass, windshields, portholes, and mirrors.

Kostiantynivka Ukrtsynk Plant. A metal-processing plant located in Kostiantynivka, Donetske oblast. Construction of the plant began in 1928, and the first zinc was produced in 1930. Since then it has been reconstructed several times, especially in 1943. Its highly diversified production includes zinc, stibrite lead, tin, cadmium, indium, and sulfuric acid.

Kostiuk, Hryhorii [Kostjuk, Hryhorij], b 5 December 1899 in Mohylne, Olviopil county, Podilia gubernia, d 25 January 1982 in Kiev. Psychologist; full member of the USSR Academy of Pedagogical Sciences from 1967. A graduate of Galagan College (1919) and the Kiev Institute of People's Education (1923), Kostiuk was a lecturer (1930–5) and professor (1935–45) at the Kiev Pedagogical Institute and a researcher at the Ukrainian Scientific Research Institute of Pedagogy. In 1945 he became director of the Ukrainian Scientific Research Institute of Psychology and of the Kiev laboratory of pedagogical psychology of the USSR Academy of Pedagogical Sciences. Kostiuk's principal works deal with the psychology of thought, the relationship between schooling and upbringing and the development of the child's personality and abilities, and the theory and history of psychology. He is the author of the textbook Psykhologhiia (Psychology, 5th edn, 1968) and Zdibnosti ta ikh rozvytok u ditei (Abilities and Their Development in Children, 1963), and editor of Narysy z istorii vitchyznianoï psykhologhii (Outlines of the History of Psychology in Our Homeland, 3 vols, 1952–5).

Hryhorii Kostiuk

Kostiuk, Hryhorii [Kostjuk, Hryhorij] (pseud: B. Podoliak), b 25 October 1902 in Boryshkivtsi, Podilia gubernia. Prominent émigré literary scholar and publicist; full member of the Ukrainian Academy of Sciences in the United States. He studied at the Kiev Institute of People's Education (1925–9) and was a graduate student at the Shevchenko Institute of Literature in Kharkiv in the early 1930s. From 1927 to 1931 his literary reviews and essays appeared in Zhyttia i revoliutsiia, Molodniak, Chervonyi shliakh, Krytyka, Prolitfront, and other journals. He taught Ukrainian literary history at Kharkiv University (1932–3) and the Luhanske Pedagogical Institute (1933–4). Arrested in Kiev during the Stalinist terror and accused of 'nationalism' and 'Khvylovyism,' he spent the years 1935–40 in a Soviet prison and concentration camps, mostly at Vorkuta. A postwar refugee in West Germany from 1944, he helped found the *MUR literary organization and was one of the founding members of the *Ukrainian Revolutionary Democratic party and its secretary in 1948. As a member of its left-wing faction, he cofounded the monthly *Vpered in 1949. Since 1952 he has lived in the United States. There he headed the *Slovo Association of Ukrainian Writers in Exile from 1955 to 1975. In the late 1950s he brought the archives of V. *Vyn-nynchenko from France and became their curator at Columbia University. He has edited several volumes of Vynnychenko's previously unpublished literary works and diaries.

Since the war Kostiuik has written extensively on Ukrainian literature and politics in interwar Soviet Ukraine and in the postwar West. Many of his essays, which appeared in several émigré periodicals, were republished in his collections Volodymyr Vynnychenko ta ioho doba (Volodymyr Vynnychenko and His Age, 1980), Na magistraliakh doby (On the Thoroughfares of an Age, 1983), and U sviti idei i obraziv (In the World of Ideas and Images, 1983). He has been instrumental in keeping alive the memory of Ukrainian writers who were victims of the Stalinist terror. He collected and was the editor in chief of the complete edition of M. *Khvylovy's works (5 vols, 1978–86), which have been banned in Soviet Ukraine since the early 1930s. He also edited new editions of V. Pidmohyl'ny's Misto (The City, 1954) and the works of M. Kulish (1955), M. Plevako (1961), P. Fylypovych (1971), and M. Drai-Khmara (1979). He is the author of the seminal Stalinist Rule in the Ukraine: A Study of the Decade of Mass Terror, 1929–39 (1960) and of Teoriia i diisnist': Do problemy vyvchennia teorii, praktyky i stratehii bil' shovyizmu v natsional'nomu pytanni (Theory and Reality: On the Problem of Studying the Theory, Practice, and Strategy of Bolshevism vis-à-vis the National Question, 1971). Memoirs of his imprisonment, Okaianni roky (The Accursed Years), appeared in 1978. His autobiography is forthcoming.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- 'Bibliohrafiia prats' H.O. Kostiuika (1927–1972),' Slovo: Zbirnyk, 5 (Edmonton 1973)
 Holubenko, P. 'Na poli boiu: Zhyttievyi i tvorchyi shliakh Hryhoriia Kostiuika (slovo z nahody 80-littia),' Novi dni, December 1982–January 1983
 Husar-Struk, D. 'Khto takyi Borys Podoliak?' Slovo: Zbirnyk, 10 (Edmonton 1983)
 'Hryhorij Kostiuik: A Bibliography (1972–85),' AUA, 16 (1984–5)
 I. Koshelivets, R. Senkus

Kostiuk, Platon [Kostjuk], b 20 August 1924 in Kiev. Neurophysiologist, son of the psychologist H. *Kostiuk; since 1969 full member of the AN URSR, and since 1974 full member of the USSR Academy of Sciences. A graduate of Kiev University (1946) and the Kiev Medical Institute (1949), he joined the staff of the university's Institute of Animal Physiology. In 1966 he was appointed director of the AN URSR Institute of Physiology, and in 1975 academic secretary of the physiology division of the USSR Academy of Sciences. Kostiuk has led Soviet research in the use of techniques of molecular biology and biophysics in the study of the nervous system and the brain. He was first in the USSR to use intracellular measurement of electrical potentials in brain studies and has published a book on the subject – Mikroelektrodnaia tekhnika (Microelectrode Technology, 1960). He has served as vice-president of the International Organization for Brain Research and the International Union of Theoretical and Applied Biophysics.

Kostiuk, Yurii [Kostjuk, Jurij], b 3 March 1912 in Drotyntsi, Transcarpathia. Folklorist, conductor, music teacher. A graduate of the Prague Conservatory (1938) and Charles University (1947), in 1958 he was appointed docent in the Pedagogical Faculty of Šafařík University in Prešov. He organized and conducted over 30 amateur choirs, and served as artistic director of two professional ensembles that he helped to establish: the Ukrainian Song and Dance Ensemble in Medzilaborce and the Duklia Ukrainian Folk Ensemble in Prešov. Kostiuk compiled several folklore collections: Narodni pisni pidkarpats'kykh rusyniv (Folk Songs of Transcarpathian Ruthenians, coauthor, 1944), Pisni dlia dytiachoho-zhinochoho khoru (Songs for a Children's and Women's Choir, 1952), and Ukrains'ki narodni pisni Priashiv's'koho kraiu (Ukrainian Folk Songs of the Prešov Region, 1958). He wrote a textbook (Muzychne vykhovannia [(Musical Education, 1959, 1966]), music-studies curricula, and dozens of articles. His compositions include several cantatas, instrumental pieces, arrangements of folk songs, and songs based on published poetry. V. Liubymov's monograph on Kostiuk was published in 1982.

M. Hnatiukivsky

Kostiukov, Oleksander [Kostjukov], b 10 September 1909 in Sevastopol, Tavriia gubernia, d 29 April 1976 in Odessa. Shipbuilding engineer. Professor (from 1958) and rector (1960–71) of the Odessa Institute of Naval Engineers. His publications deal with the theory of ship's waves and wave resistance of vessels.

Kostiv, Kostiantyn, b 1917 in Rivne, Volhynia. Sociologist, researcher of religious movements in Ukraine, and translator; full member of the Shevchenko Scientific Society and a lecturer at the Ukrainian Technical and Husbandry Institute. A postwar refugee, he studied at Erlangen University and the Ukrainian Free University and received doctorates in philosophy and law. He is the author of works about Metropolitan I. Ohienko as a translator of the Bible (1950), the Reformation (1956), and the constitutional acts of the UNR and the Hetman government (1964); a Ukrainian biblical reference book (1971); the religious-sociological study Knyhy buttia ukrains'koho narodu (Books of Existence of the Ukrainian People, 1980); and a Ukrainian dictionary of biblical figures, tribes, and peoples (1982).

Kostiv, Vasyl. See Verkhovynets, Vasyl.

Mykola Kostomarov

Kostomarov, Mykola (pseud: Iieremiia Halka, Ivan Bogucharov), b 16 May 1817 in Yurasivka, Ostrohozke county, in Voronezh gubernia, d 19 April 1885 in St Petersburg. Historian, publicist, and writer. He graduated from the Voronezh gymnasium and then in 1837 from Kharkiv University. From 1844 to 1845 Kostomarov taught history at the Rivne and at the First Kiev gymnasiums. In 1846 he was appointed assistant professor in the Department of Russian History at Kiev University. That year, along with V. Bilozersky, M. Hulak, P. Kulish, T. Shevchenko, and others, he formed the *Cyril and Methodius Brotherhood. In Knyhy bytiia ukrains'koho narodu (*Books of the Genesis of the Ukrainian People), Ustav Slov'ians'koho tovarystva sv Kyryla i Metodiia: Holovni idei (The Statute of the Slavic Society of ss Cyril and Methodius: Its Main Ideas), and two proclamations, Kostomarov formulated the society's program and basic ideas: Christian piety, democratic republicanism, a Ukrainian national renaissance, Ukrainian messianism, and pan-Slavic federalism. In 1847 he was arrested along with all the other members of the society and sentenced to one year's imprisonment in the ss Peter and Paul Fortress in St Petersburg, followed by exile.

Until 1856 he lived in exile in Saratov, serving as a chancellery clerk. Three years later he moved to St Petersburg, where he was appointed to the Chair of Russian History at the university. Because of his political involvements he had to resign his university position in 1862 and could not accept offers from other universities. From then on he devoted himself exclusively to research.

Kostomarov wrote a number of fundamental works on the history of Ukraine in the 16th–18th centuries. Among them were Bogdan Khmel'nitskii i vozrashchenie Iuzhnoi Rusi k Rossii (Bohdan Khmelnytsky and the Return of Southern Rus' to Russia, 1st edn in Otechestvennye zapiski, 1857, vols 110–13; 2nd edn in 2 vols, 1859; 3rd edn in 3 vols, 1876), Ruina, istoricheskaia monografiia iz zhizni Malorossii 1663–1687 gg. (The Ruin: A Historical Monograph on the Life of Little Russia from 1663 to 1687, 1st edn in Vestnik Evropy, nos 4–9 [1879] and nos 7–9 [1880]), and 'Mazepa i Mazepintsy' (Mazepa and the Mazepists, in Ruskaia mysl' [1882–4]). These works are based on extensive documentary material that, as a member of the St Petersburg Archeographic Commission, Kostomarov collected in St Petersburg and Moscow archives and partly published in Akty, otnosiashchiesia k istorii Iuzhnoi i Zapadnoi Rossii (Documents on the History of Southern and Western Russia, 10 vols, 1861–78). He also wrote a series of books on Russian history. His historical monographs and articles were published by the Literary Fund in St Petersburg. Its last edition of his works, in eight volumes, came out in 1903–6. He was the author of Ruskaia istoriia v zhizneopisaniakh eia vazhneishikh deiatelei (Rus' History in the Biographies of Its Important Figures, 1874–6), which was devoted mostly to Ukrainian historical figures. This work was translated into Ukrainian and published in Pravda and separately under the title Rus'ka istoriia v zhyttiepysakh ii naihoolnishykh diiateliv (1875–7), then republished as Ukrains'ka istoriia v zhyttiepysakh ii naiznamenynishykh diiachiv (1918).

Kostomarov was the founder of the populist trend in Ukrainian historiography. He believed that the purpose of the historical sciences was to describe the past of human communities. In his historicophilosophical studies, such as 'Mysli o federativnom nachale v drevnei Rusi' (Reflections on the Federative Principle in Ancient Rus'), 'Dve russkie narodnosti' (Two Rus' Peoples), and 'Cherty narodnoi iuzhnorusskoi istorii' (Characteristics of Popular South-Rus' History), which were all published in Osnova, nos 1–3 (1861), and in his journalistic articles, such as 'Pravda moskvicham o Rusi' (The Truth about Rus' for Muscovites), 'Pravda poliakam o Rusi' (The Truth about Rus' for Poles), and his letter to the editor of Kolokol in 1860, as well as in his historical monographs, Kostomarov argued for the national distinctiveness of the Ukrainian people and the uniqueness of their historical development, which, unlike for the Poles and Russians, was manifested in the Ukrainian freedom-loving, democratic, and individualistic spirit.

The same ideas formed the basis of his ethnographic research. He published a series of ethnographic studies, including 'Istoricheskoe znachenie iuzhnorusskogo narodnogo pesennogo tvorchestva' (The Historical Significance of the South-Rus' Folk Song Tradition, in Beseda, vols 4–12 [1872]) and 'Istoriia kozachestva v pamiatkakh iuzhnorusskogo narodnogo pesennogo tvorchestva' (The History of the Cossacks in the Monuments of the South-Rus' Folk Song Tradition, in Ruskaia mysl', nos 1–8 [1880], nos 7–8 [1883]), and he edited vols 3, 4, and 5 of the papers of P. *Chubynsky's ethnographic and statistical expedition to Right-Bank Ukraine. Some of Kostomarov's ethnographic works were republished by M. Hrushevsky in a separate collection, Etnografichni pysannia (Ethnographic Writings, 1930).

Kostomarov's numerous journalistic articles appeared in the 1860s–1880s in such journals as Osnova, Otechestvennye zapiski, Sovremennik, and Vestnik Evropy. Some of them were collected and republished by M. Hrushevsky as Naukovo-publitsychni i polemichni pysannia Kostomarova (Scholarly-Publicistic and Polemical Writings of Kostomarov, 1928).

As a writer, Kostomarov is classified as a member of the *Kharkiv Romantic School. His poetry collections, Ukrains'ki baliady (Ukrainian Ballads, 1839) and Vitka (The Branch, 1840, both published under the pseudonym Ieremiia Halka), contain historical poems about the Princely era and the Khmelnytsky period (eg, 'Did pasichnyk' [The Old Beekeeper]). The language of his poetry is marked on the one hand by an extensive use of the vocabulary and phraseology of folk songs, and on the other by a striving to elevate it to the level of a literary language. His historical dramas, Sava Chalyi (1838) and Pereiaslav'ska nich (The Pereiaslav Night, 1841), are attempts at 'high tragedy.' Lacking in dramatic qualities, however, Kostomarov's plays have left no noticeable mark on the subsequent development of the Ukrainian theater. His prose written in Russian (the novelette Kudeiar, 1875) or in Russian interspersed with dialogues in Ukrainian (Chernigovka, 1881) is even less significant than his dramas. His literary works were published in two volumes in 1967. A bibliography of his works appeared in Kostomarov N.I.: Literaturnoe nasledie (Kostomarov N.I.: The Literary Legacy, 1890).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Antonovich, V. 'Kostomarov, kak istorik,' KS, 5 (1885)
 Drahomanov, M. Mykola Ivanovych Kostomarov (Lviv 1901)
 Hrushevsky, M. 'Ukrains'ka istoriografii i Mykola Kostomarov,' LNV, 5 (1910)
 Krypiakievych, I. 'Arkheografichni pratsi Kostomarov,' ZNTSh, vols 126–7 (1918)
 Kostomarov, N. Avtobiografiia (Moscow 1922)
 Doroshenko, D. Mykola Ivanovych Kostomarov (Leipzig 1924)
 Hrushevsky, M. 'Kostomarov i novitnia Ukraina,' Ukraina, 3 (1925)

- Polukhin, L. Formuvannia istorychnykh pohliadiu M.I. Kostomarov (Kiev 1959)
- Papazian, D. 'N.I. Kostomarov: Russian Historian, Ukrainian Nationalist, Slavic Federalist,' PH D diss, University of Michigan (1966)
- Pinchuk, Iu. Istoricheskie vzgliady N.I. Kostomarov (Kiev 1984)
A. Zhukovsky

Kostopil [Kostopil']. III-7. City (1970 pop 17,500) and raion center in Rivne oblast, situated on the Zamchyske River in Volhynian Polisia. It was founded in the late 18th century. UNR and Bolshevik forces fought there in 1919, and Yu. Tiutiunnyk launched the Second Winter Campaign from there in October 1921. Its main industries are woodworking and lumbering. The city has a construction and a construction-materials complex. Basalt is quarried nearby in Berestovets.

Kostoprav, Heorhii (Georgii), b 9 November 1903 in Maloianysol (now Kuibysheve), Mariupil county, Katerynoslav gubernia, d 23 July 1944? Soviet poet and translator of Greek origin. His poetry was first published in the mid-1920s in Russian. From 1931 he wrote mostly in Greek. He translated poems by T. Shevchenko, P. Tychna, and M. Rylsky into Greek. He was arrested and disappeared during the Stalinist terror.

Kostromenko, Vadym, b 26 September 1934 in Artemivske, Staline oblast. Cameraman and film director. A graduate of the All-Union Institute of Cinematography (1957), he worked as a cameraman at the Odessa Artistic Film Studio shooting such films as Spovid' (Confession, 1962), Samotnist' (Solitude, 1964), and Virnist' (Fidelity, 1965). In 1971 he began to direct television films such as Vershnyky (The Horsemen) and feature films such as Sto pershyi (The Hundred and First, 1983). He is first secretary of the Odessa Branch of the Union of Cinematographers of Ukraine.

Kostruba, Petro, b 1902. Linguist; a docent at Lviv University. His annotated translation into modern Ukrainian of the epic poem Slovo o polku Ihorevi appeared in Lviv in 1928. After the Second World War his academic career was interrupted by arrest and imprisonment in the 1940s and 1950s. A specialist in Ukrainian phonemics and phonetics, he is the author of several articles, the monograph Fonetyka suchasnoi ukrains'koï literaturnoi movy (The Phonetics of Contemporary Literary Ukrainian, 1963), and the chapters on phonemics in the collective work Suchasna ukrains'ka literaturna mova: Vstup, Fonetyka (Contemporary Literary Ukrainian: Introduction, Phonetics, 1969), published by the AN URSR Institute of Linguistics. Because the editor of the latter work, I. Bilodid, distorted some of Kostruba's views in order to bring Ukrainian closer to Russian, Kostruba addressed a letter of protest to Ukrainian linguists abroad. Among his contributions are also works on modern Ukrainian syntax.

Kostruba, Teofil (monastic name: Teodosii), b 26 May 1907 in Yaholnytsia Stara, Chortkiv county, Galicia, d 3 March 1943 in Lviv. Basilian monk, historian, and journalist. Kostruba studied philosophy and theology at Lviv University (1935-9) and worked with the Commission on Ancient Ukrainian History of the Shevchenko Scientific Society. His major works focused on the early history of the church in Ukraine and the history of Galicia. His monographs included Narysy z tserkovnoi istorii Ukrainy x-xiii stolittia (Essays on the Church History of Ukraine from the 10th to 13th Centuries, 1939; 2nd edn 1955), Narys istorii Ukrainy (A Survey of the History of Ukraine, 1961), which provided an overview of Ukrainian history to the reign of Prince Danylo Romanovych, and Iak Moskva nyschchyla ukrains'ku tserkvu (How Moscow Destroyed the Ukrainian Church, 1961). His translation of the Galician-Volhynian Chronicle into contemporary Ukrainian was published in 1936. Kostruba's articles appeared in the journals Dzvony, Zapysky Naukovoho tovarystva im. Shevchenka, and Litopys Chervonoï Kalyny and the newspapers Khliborob's'kyi Shliakh, Nova Zoria, Novyi Chas, and others.

Teofil Kostruba

Hryhorii Kosynka

Kostyniuk, Ronald [Kostynjuk], b 8 July 1941 in Wakaw, Saskatchewan. Sculptor and educator. Educated at the universities of Saskatchewan, Alberta, and Wisconsin, since 1971 he has taught design and sculpture at the University of Calgary. He has had over 25 solo exhibitions in Canada. Most of Kostyniuk's sculptures are large relief structures built of plexiglass with multiple colored planes arranged in a complex geometric composition. They suggest that there is an affinity between pure science and abstract art. Kostyniuk is a member of the Royal Canadian Academy of Arts.

Kostyrko, Petro, b 14 February 1897 in Lavy, Sosnytsia county, Chernihiv gubernia, d 13 February 1982 in Kiev. Architect. Upon graduating from the Kiev State Art Institute (1930), where he had studied with V. *Krychevsky and P. Alosyn, he became a lecturer (later director) at the Kiev Civil-Engineering Institute, and in 1937 a lecturer at the Kiev State Art Institute. He reconstructed the City Soviet building in Kiev. He collaborated with V. Krychevsky in designing the first central thermoelectric station in Kiev (1931-6), the building of the Rolit writers' association, and the Kaniv Museum-Preserve (1936-8). In 1960-4 he supervised the reconstruction of the Poltava Regional Museum. Kostyrko did the architectural design for a number of monuments, such as the O. Verbytsky (1960) and Yu. Yanovsky (1961) monuments in Kiev and the P. Zaporozhets monument (1971) in Bila Tserkva.

Kosynka, Hryhorii (pseud of Hryhorii Strilets), b 29 November 1899 in Shcherbanivka, Kiev gubernia, d 17

December 1934 in Kiev. Writer. From 1920 he lived in Kiev and belonged to the writers' groups Lanka and *MARS. His first story, 'Na buriaky' (At Beet Harvest), appeared in 1919 in the paper Borot'ba. About 20 of his story collections appeared during his life, including Na zolotykh bohiv (Against the Golden Gods, 1922), Zakvoitchanyi son (The Florid Dream, 1923), Za vorit'my (Behind the Gates, 1925), Maty (Mother, 1925), V zhytakh (In the Wheat Fields, 1926), Polityka (Politics, 1927), Vybrani opovidannia (Selected Stories, 1928 and 1929), and Tsyrykul' (The Compass, 1930). Publication of the collection 'Sertse' (The Heart, 1933) was prevented by the censors. Party critics accused Kosynka of propagating 'kulak ideology,' 'counterrevolutionary tendencies,' and 'banditry' in his stories. Publishing his stories was forbidden in the early 1930s, and he was forced to work as a scenarist. Arrested during the Stalinist terror, he and 36 others were tried on fabricated charges of terrorist activity by a military tribunal, and he and 27 others were summarily shot.

Kosynka was one of the more outstanding Soviet Ukrainian story writers of the 1920s and early 1930s. His stories captured the prevalent attitudes, relations, and political shifts among the Ukrainian peasantry during the 1917–21 period of revolutionary upheaval and war. Although Soviet criticism today views him as merely an epigone of M. Kotsiubynsky, S. Vasylychenko, and V. Stefanyk, this view is belied by an analysis of his unique style, in which examples of expressionism and experimentation, not unlike those of his contemporary M. Khvylovy, abound. Kosynka was posthumously 'rehabilitated' after Stalin's death. Selected editions of his works appeared in New York in 1955, in Kiev in 1962, 1967, and 1972, in Lviv in 1971, and (in Russian) in Moscow in 1930 and 1966. A book of memoirs about him was published in Kiev in 1969.

I. Koshelivets

Kosynov, Oleksander, b 28 July 1936 in Stavropol, Stavropol krai, RSFSR. Film director. A graduate of the All-Union Institute of Cinematography (1964), he works at the Kiev Studio of Chronicle and Documentary Films and has directed such films as Muzhnist' (Manliness, 1967), Ukraina, zemlia i liudy (Ukraine, the Land and the People, 1968), Poema pro Donets'kyi krai (Poem about the Donets Land, 1974), Dorohoiu bat'kiv (Along the Parents' Road, 1978), and Ptakhly letiat' nado mnoiu (The Birds Fly above Me, 1983), a film about O. Dovzhenko.

Kryshtof Kosynsky; a medal by V. Masiutyn

Kosynsky, Kryshtof [Kosyns'kyj, Kryštof], ?–1593. Ukrainian nobleman from Podlachia, hetman of the Zaporozhian Cossacks (1586) and then of the *registered Cossacks in the early 1590s. Kosynsky was the leader of the first large-scale uprising of the Ukrainian peasantry and Cossacks against the Polish nobility, in 1591–3. He was killed in May 1593 during the siege of Cherkasy.

Kosynsky, Volodymyr [Kosyns'kyj], b 1866 in Hlukhiv county, Chernihiv gubernia, d ? Economist. A graduate of Moscow University (MA, 1901), he was a professor of economics at the Riga Polytechnical Institute, Odessa University (1905–9), the Kiev Polytechnical Institute, and the Kamianets-Podilskyi Ukrainian State University. A member of the Kiev Hromada, in 1917 he was elected to the Central Rada from the Russian Constitutional Democratic party. In November 1918 he became the third minister of labor in the Hetman government and a full member of the newly created Ukrainian Academy of Sciences and head of its Chair of Agriculture. A leading scholar of agrarian relations in the Russian Empire, his many works include O priemakh nauchnoi razrabotki statisticheskikh dannykh (On Methods for Processing Statistical Data, 1890), K agrarnomu voprosu (On the Agrarian Question, 1906), and O merakh k rozvittiu proizvoditel'nykh sil Rossii (On the Measures for Developing the Productive Forces of Russia, 1904). In 1913 he was attacked by V. Lenin for his criticism of the theory of rural 'proletarianization.'

Koszeliwec, Iwan. See Koshelivets, Ivan.

Kot, Stanisław, b 22 October 1885 in Ruda, near Ropczyce, Poland, d 26 December 1975 in London. Polish historian, politician, and diplomat. Kot was a professor at Cracow University from 1920, a member of the Polish Academy of Sciences from 1921, and a full member of the Shevchenko Scientific Society from 1952. During the Second World War he worked with the Polish government-in-exile in London and as its ambassador to the USSR. In 1947 he moved permanently to London. He was a specialist in the history of culture, education, and intellectual thought, particularly during the Reformation. His works, such as Z dziejów kultury humanizmu w Polsce (From the History of the Culture of Humanism in Poland, 1920), Historia wychowania (The History of Education, 2 vols, 1934), and especially Georges Niemirycz et la lutte contre l'intolérance au XVII siècle (1960), contain much material on Ukraine and Belorussia.

Kotarbiński, Wilhelm, b 30 November 1849 in Nieborów, Łowicz county, Warsaw gubernia, d 4 September 1921 in Kiev. Polish painter of Ukrainian origin; from 1905 full member of the St Petersburg Academy of Arts. A graduate of the Warsaw Art School (1871), St Luke's Academy in Rome (1875), and the St Petersburg Academy of Arts (1882), he worked many years in Kiev and was a founding member of the Society of Kiev Artists (1893). Collaborating with A. and P. Svedomsky, he painted St Volodymyr's Cathedral in Kiev (1885–96), including such murals as The Last Supper, The Entry into Jerusalem, Ascension, and Judgment of Pilate. He also painted the ceilings of M. Tereshchenko's and B. Khanenko's residences in Kiev. Many of his canvases deal with mythological themes and are highly symbolic; eg, Prometheus and Vulcan (1881), Roman Orgy, The Battle of the Centaurs and Amazons, and Sacrifice to Nilus. He also illustrated the Bible.

Kotelnia [Kotel'nja]. A fortified Rus' city and capital of an appanage principality in Kiev principality. It was first mentioned in the chronicles as Kotelnych under the year 1143; it was also called Kotelnytsia in that period. Until the 1930s Kotelnia was a small town. It is now the village of Stara Kotelnia in Andrushivka raion, Zhytomyr oblast. The ruins of medieval fortifications remain there.

Kotelnykov, Oleksander [Kotel'nykov], b 18 March 1877 in Nizhnii Novgorod (now Gorkii), Russia, d 23 January 1964 in Kiev. Electrical engineer; corresponding member of the AN URSR from 1939. Kotelnykov studied and taught (1913–31) at the Kiev Polytechnical Institute. Then he worked at the Odessa Institute of Communications Engineers and, starting in 1938, at various institutes in Kiev: the Institute of the Food Industry, the Institute of Power Engineering, and the Institute of Electrotechnology. His main publications deal with the technology of weak currents, electrodynamics, and the theory of long transmission lines.

Kotelva [Kotel'va]. III-15. Town smt (1979 pop 12,000) and raion center in Poltava oblast. It was founded in the late 16th century and was a company town in Poltava (1654–62), Zinkiv (1662–72), and Hadiache (1648–9, 1672–1724) regiments. In 1724 it became the only Cossack company town ever transferred from the jurisdiction of the Hetmanate to the government of Slobidska Ukraine (as a company town in Okhtyrka regiment). Until the early 1930s Kotelva was one of the largest villages (pop ca 20,000) in Ukraine and had a well-developed cottage industry (primarily weaving). The Holy Trinity Church (built in 1812) is its chief architectural monument.

Kotian (Sutoiovych), b and d ? Khan of the *Cumans, father-in-law and ally of *Mstyslav Mstyslavych. Kotian is mentioned in the chronicles under the years 1202, 1225, and 1228, when he participated in the internecine power struggles between the princes of Rus'. After the defeat of the Cumans by the Mongols in 1222, Kotian left the Dnieper region and sought the aid of the princes of Rus'. They were all defeated, however, by the Mongols at the Battle of *Kalka River in 1223. In 1238 Kotian was again defeated by Khan *Batu on the Astrakhan steppes. He settled with the remainder of the Cumans in Hungary, under the protection of the Hungarian king.

Kotko, Dmytro, b 17 January 1892 in Balky, Melitopol county, Tavriia gubernia, d 18 November 1982 in Lviv.

Dmytro Kotko

Choir conductor. Having studied conducting in Moscow, he emigrated to Galicia after the First World War and organized the Ukrainian Choir, a male choir consisting of former UNR Army soldiers. Reorganized in 1925 into a mixed choir, it toured Western Ukraine and the major cities of Poland and Germany a number of times. Everywhere it received enthusiastic reviews, and Kotko's conducting was praised highly. Some of the performances were recorded. Much of the music sung by the Ukrainian Choir was arranged by Kotko himself.

Kotko, Kost. See Liubchenko, Mykola.

Ivan Kotliarevsky

Kotliarevsky, Ivan [Kotljarev's'kyj], b 9 September 1769 in Poltava, d 10 November 1838 in Poltava. Poet and playwright; the 'founder' of modern Ukrainian literature. After studying at the Poltava Theological Seminary (1780–9), he worked as a tutor at rural gentry estates, where he became acquainted with folk life and the peasant vernacular, and then served in the Russian army (1796–1808). In 1810 he became the trustee of an institution for the education of children of impoverished nobles. In 1812 he organized a Cossack cavalry regiment to fight Napoleon and served in it as a major. He helped stage theatrical productions at the Poltava governor-general's residence and was the artistic director of the Poltava Theater (1812–21). From 1827 to 1835 he directed several philanthropic agencies.

Kotliarevsky's greatest literary work is his travesty of Virgil's Aeneid, Eneida, which he began writing in 1794. Publication of its first three parts in St Petersburg in 1798 was funded by M. Parpura. Part four appeared in 1809. Kotliarevsky finished parts five and six around 1820, but the first full edition of the work (with a glossary) was published only after his death, in Kharkiv in 1842. Eneida was written in the tradition of several existing parodies of Virgil's epic, including those by P. Scarron, A. Blumauer, and N. Osipov and A. Kotelnitsky. Although the Osipov-Kotelnitsky travesty served as a model for Kotliarevsky's mock-heroic poem, the latter is, unlike the former, a completely original work and much better from an artistic point of view. In addition to the innovation of writing it in the Ukrainian vernacular, Kotliarevsky used a new verse form – a 10-line strophe of four-foot iambs with regular rhymes – instead of the then-popular syllabic verse.

Title page of the first edition of Eneida

Eneida was written at a time when popular memory of the Cossack Hetmanate was still alive and the oppression of tsarist serfdom in Ukraine was at its height. Kotliarevsky's broad satire of the mores of the social estates during these two distinct ages, combined with the invogue use of ethnographic detail and with racy, colorful, colloquial Ukrainian, ensured his work's great popularity among his contemporaries. It spawned several imitations (by P. Hulak-Artemovsky, K. Dumytrashko, P. Biletsky-Nosenko, and others) and began the process by which the Ukrainian vernacular acquired the status of a literary language, thereby supplanting the use of older, bookish linguistic forms.

Kotliarevsky's operetta Natalka Poltavka (Natalka from Poltava) and vaudeville Moskal'-charivnyk (The Muscovite-Sorcerer) were landmarks in the development of Ukrainian theater. Written ca 1819, they were first published in vols 1 (1838) and 2 (1841) of the almanac Ukrainskii sbornik edited by I. Sreznevsky. Both were written for and performed at the Poltava Theater; both, particularly the first, were responses to the caricatures of Ukrainian life in Prince A. Shakhovskoi's comedy Kazak-stikhotvorets (The Cossack Poetaster), which was also staged at the Poltava Theater. As a playwright, Kotliarevsky combined the **intermede* tradition with his knowledge of Ukrainian folkways and folklore.

Kotliarevsky's influence is evident not only in the works of his immediate successors (H. Kvitka-Osnovianenko, T. Shevchenko, Ya. Kukharenko, K. Topolia, S. Pysarevsky, and others), but also in the ethnographic plays of the second half of the 19th century and in Russian (the works of the ethnic Ukrainians N. Gogol and V. Narezhny) and Belorussian (the anonymous Eneida navyvarat [The Aeneid Travestied]) literature. In his use of genres and poetics he was more a Baroque-influenced Classicist than an incipient Romantic. His view of the world was guided by moral rather than by sociopolitical criteria, and his sympathy for the socially and nationally oppressed Ukrainian peasantry was subordinated to his loyalty to tsarist autocracy. Full editions of his works appeared in Kiev in 1952–3 and 1969. The Kotliarevsky Literary-Memorial Museum was opened in Poltava in 1952.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Zhitetskii, P. 'Eneida' Kotliarevskogo i drevneishii spisok ee v sviazi s obzorom malorusskoi literatury xviii v. (Kiev 1900)

- Zerov, M. Nove ukrains'ke pys'menstvo (Kiev 1924; Munich 1960)
 Aizenshtok, Ia. I. Kotliarevs'kyi i ukrains'ka literatura (Kiev 1928)
 Zalashko, A. (ed). I.P. Kotliarevs'kyi u krytytsi ta dokumentakh (Kiev 1959)
Ivan Kotliarevs'kyi u dokumentakh, spohadakh, doslidzhenniakh (Kiev 1969)
 Kyryliuk, Ie. Zhyvi tradytsii: Ivan Kotliarevs'kyi ta ukrains'ka literatura (Kiev 1969)
 Moroz, M. Ivan Kotliarevs'kyi: Bibliografichnyi pokazhchyk (Kiev 1969)
 Čyževs'kyj, D. A History of Ukrainian Literature (From the 11th to the End of the 19th Century) (Littleton, Colo 1975)
 Sverstiuk, Ie. 'Ivan Kotliarevs'kyi Is Laughing,' in his Clandestine Essays, trans and ed G.S.N. Luckyj (Cambridge, Mass 1976)
 Iatsenko, M. Na rubezhi literaturnykh epokh: 'Eneida' Kotliarevs'koho i khudozhnii prohes v ukrains'kii literaturi (Kiev 1977)
 P. Petrenko

Kotliarevsky, Oleksander [Kotljarevs'kyj], b 1837 in Kriukiv (now part of Kremenchuk), Kremenchuk county, Poltava gubernia, d 11 October 1881 in Pisa, Italy. Philologist, archeologist, and ethnographer; corresponding member of the Imperial Academy of Sciences from 1875. A graduate of Moscow and St Petersburg (PH D 1874) universities, he was a professor at Dorpat (Tartu) University (1868–72) and at Kiev University (1875–81). He was a founding member and head of the Historical Society of Nestor the Chronicler at Kiev University. Kotliarevsky wrote over 100 scholarly bibliographies, articles, and monographs, including O pogrebal'nykh obychaiakh iazycheskykh Slavian (On the Burial Rites of Pagan Slavs, 1868). As a student he wrote Ukrainian literary criticism under the pseudonym Skubent Chupryna.

Kotliarevsky Museum (Muzei I.P. Kotliarevskoho). Literary memorial museum in Poltava dedicated to I. *Kotliarevsky. It was opened in 1952. The exhibits, which are arranged in six rooms, consist of manuscripts, books, photographs, paintings, and the writer's personal belongings. The exhibits that relate to his work Eneida (The Aeneid) are located in a separate room.

Kotliarevsky Theater. See Tobilevych Ukrainian People's Theater and Zahrava Young Ukrainian Theater.

Kotorovych, Bohodar [Kotorovyč], b 3 July 1941 in Hrubeshiv, Kholm region (now in Poland). Violinist. Upon graduating from the Moscow Conservatory in 1966, he was appointed concertmaster of the Symphony Orchestra of the Ukrainian SSR and soloist of the Kiev Philharmonic Orchestra. Since 1967 he has lectured at the Kiev Conservatory. He has won a number of international violin competitions; eg, in Bucharest (1967) and in Genoa (1971).

Kotov, Mykhailo, b 9 November 1895 in Zadonsk, Voronezh gubernia, d 25 August 1978 in Kiev. Botanist. A graduate of the Kharkiv Institute of People's Education (1922), he worked in various scientific institutions in Kharkiv before joining the staff of the AN URSR Institute of Botany in 1939. As a taxonomist specializing in Ukrainian flora, he described 36 new species and edited as well as coauthored vols 3, 4, and 8 of Flora URSR (Flora of the Ukrainian SSR, 12 vols, 1936–65). He was active in the conservation movement.

Kotovske [Kotovs'ke]. VI-10. City (1970 pop 37,100) and raion center under oblast jurisdiction in Odessa oblast. It was founded in the mid-18th century and until 1935 was called Birzula. The UNR Army fought several battles against Bolshevik forces there in 1919. On 2 September 1919 Ukrainian troops led by generals P. Yeroshevych and O. Udovychenko routed the Bolsheviks and captured 3,000 prisoners. In that period Otaman Zabolotny's Ukrainian partisans and G. Kotovsky's Bolshevik partisans also operated in the region. Kotovske is an important railroad and highway junction.

Kotovskiy, Hryhorii [Kotovs'kyj, Hryhorij], b 24 June 1881 in Hancheshti, Bessarabia gubernia, d 6 August 1925 in Chebanka near Odessa. Soviet military commander. In 1918–19, he commanded a partisan unit that fought in southern Ukraine against UNR and Denikin forces. Then, as commander of the Second Red Cavalry Brigade and of the Seventeenth Red Cavalry Division, he continually fought UNR troops and insurgents. From 17 November 1921 Kotovskiy commanded the Third Cavalry Brigade, which slaughtered near *Bazar the surviving participants of the Second Winter Campaign. In 1922 he took command of the Second Red Cavalry Corps. Kotovskiy was one of the leading founders of the Moldavian ASSR. He was murdered by a former subordinate.

Kotsak, Arsenii [Kocak, Arsenij], b 14 March 1737 in Bukovets, Prešov region, d 12 April 1800 in Mukachiv. Priest of the Basilian monastic order, writer, and pedagogue. After obtaining the degree of doctor of theology at Trnava University, he taught languages, history, and theology at monastery schools in Transcarpathia. He compiled a grammar of the Slavonic-Ruthenian language, Hrammatyka russkaia ... (1788), based on M. Smotrytsky's well-known grammar and the local dialect. Kotsak also composed poetry. His works were never printed, but have been preserved in manuscript form.

Kotsevalov, Andrii [Kochevalov, Andrij], b 22 October 1892 in Kharkiv, d 26 February 1960 in New York. Classical philologist. A graduate of Kharkiv University, he was a research associate at several academic institutions in Kharkiv and at the AN URSR Institute of Archeology (1935–41) and professor at Kharkiv University (1937–41). He emigrated from Ukraine in 1943 and, after teaching at the Ukrainian Free University in Munich, moved to New York in 1952. A specialist in the history of Greek grammar and in ancient Greek inscriptions on the Black Sea coast, he is the author of several works, most notably Syntaxis inscriptionum antiquarum coloniarum Graecarum orae septentrionalis Ponti Euxini (1935).

Kotsiuba, Hordii [Kocjuba, Hordij], b 14 January 1892 in Kostiv, Kharkiv gubernia, d 22 March 1939? Writer. A graduate in law from Petrograd University in 1917 and a member of the Borotbist party during the revolutionary period, he first published in 1919. In 1921 he cofounded and edited the journal Sliakhy mystetstva. In the 1920s he belonged to the writers' groups *Hart and *Vaplite. In 1934 he was elected to the executive of the new Writers' Union of Ukraine. Between 1924 and 1934, 18 of his story collections appeared, including Sviato na budniakh (A Celebration during Workdays, 1927), Zmova masok (Conspiracy of the Masks, 1929), Dniprovi sagy (Dnieper Sagas, 1931), Na terezakh (On the Scales, 1931), and Bronzovi liudy (Bronze People, 1931). He also wrote the novels Novi berehy (New Shores, 2 vols, 1932, 1937), Rodiuchist' (Fertility, 1934), and Pered hrozoiu (Before the Storm, 1938). He was arrested during the Yezhov terror and most likely shot. He was posthumously 'rehabilitated' in 1956, and his novels Pered hrozoiu (1958) and Novi berehy (1959) were reprinted.

Kotsiuba, Mykhailo [Kocjuba, Myxajlo], b 20 October 1855 in Verchany, Stryi county, Galicia, d 1 December 1931 in Lviv. Educator; organizer of agricultural schooling. After studying zoology at the University of Vienna and agronomy at the Farming Academy in Dubliany and the Higher School of Agriculture in Vienna, he received a PH D (1885) and an MD (1893) from Cracow University. While serving as a senior lecturer in agricultural studies at the state college for men teachers in Stanyslaviv (1893–1902), Kotsiuba was active in the cultural and economic life of the Ukrainian community: he presided over the Ukrainka Besida society and the local Prosvita branch (1895–1902) and founded the Narodnyi Dim credit association and a pork marketing union. He founded and directed (1903–9) in Lviv a teacher's college for women within the private system run by the Ukrainian Pedagogical Society. He served on the Board of Directors of the Silskyi Hospodar society and in the supreme executive of the Prosvita society for many years. In 1904 he edited the monthly Ekonomist. In 1910 the Provincial School Board appointed him inspector of agricultural studies in the public schools and teachers' colleges. After the war he was in charge of the board's hygienic and medical program in primary and secondary schools and served on the Auditing Council of the Provincial Union of Farming and Trading Associations (from 1924 Tsentrosoiuz).

Kotsiubynska, Nataliia [Kocjubyns'ka, Natalija], 1890–1939. Art historian and ethnographer. She wrote a number of studies in the history of Ukrainian art, including 'Pelikan v ukrains'komu mystetstvi' (The Pelican in Ukrainian Art, ZIFV, no. 9 [1926]) and 'Reshtky zamkovykh budov u Khmil'nyku na Podilli' (Remnants of Castle Structures in the Town of Khmilnyk in Podilia, Khronika arkeolohii ta mystetstva, no. 3 [1931]). She was arrested by the secret police in 1937 and died in a labor camp.

Kotsiubynsky, Florian [Kocjubyns'kyj], b 24 February 1921 in Kazan, RSFSR. Sculptor. A graduate of the Kiev State Art Institute (1952) and a student of M. Lysenko, he has specialized in portraits and monuments. He has done busts of V. Maiakovsky (1957), Yu. Kotsiubynsky (1963–5), T. Shevchenko (1964), and V. Poryk. His monuments include S. Kovpak's gravestone in Kiev (1968), Glory in Kalush (1970), and the bust of Yu. Kotsiubynsky in Chernihiv (in collaboration with K. Kuznetsov, 1970).

Kotsiubynsky, Mykhailo [Kocjubyns'kyj, Myxajlo] (pseud. Zakhhar Kozub), b 17 September 1864 in Vinnytsia, d 25 April 1913 in Kiev. One of the finest Ukrainian writers of the late 19th and early 20th centuries. As a child he lived in Vinnytsia, Bar, and elsewhere in Podilia. After graduating from the Sharhorod Religious Boarding School in 1880, he continued his studies at the Kamianets-Podilskyi Theological Seminary. Expelled from the school in 1882 for his Populist involvement, he remained under police surveillance for the rest of his life. After his father lost his government job and his mother went blind, he supported his family by working as a private tutor in and near Vinnytsia. A self-taught intellectual, as a young man he was influenced by the works of T. Shevchenko, Marko Vovchok, F. Dostoevsky, H. Heine, E. Zola, V. Hugo, and G. de Maupassant. His reading of the works of L. Feuerbach and C. Fourier contributed to his becoming an atheist and a socialist, and Ukrainian literature awakened in him a national consciousness and a desire to work for his people at an early age. In 1892–7 he was a member of the secret *Brotherhood of Taras. In 1888–90 he was a member of the Vinnytsia Municipal Duma. For large parts of the years 1892–7 he worked for a commission studying phylloxera in Bessarabia and the Crimea. In 1898 he moved to Chernihiv and worked there as a zemstvo statistician. He was active in the Chernihiv Gubernia Scholarly Archival Commission and headed the Chernihiv Prosvita society in 1906–8.

Mykhailo Kotsiubynsky

Kotsiubynsky first visited Galicia in 1890 and became acquainted with many Ukrainian cultural figures there, including I. Franko and V. Hnatiuk. He maintained contact with many Galician intellectuals and editors of journals, who published his stories beginning in 1890. In 1905 he traveled to Germany, Austria, Italy, Switzerland, and southern France. Suffering from heart disease, he rested on the Isle of Capri in the years 1909–11. He visited Greece in 1910 and stayed in the Carpathian village of Kryvorivnia in 1910 and 1912. His exhausting job and community involvement made it difficult for Kotsiubynsky to write and contributed to his early demise from heart disease. It was not until 1911 that the Ukrainian Society for the Support of Literature, Science, and Art granted Kotsiubynsky a pension enabling him to quit his job, but he was already in poor health and died two years later.

About two dozen books of his prose were published during his lifetime, ranging from individual stories to the large collections V putakh shaitana i inshi opovidannia (In Satan's Clutches and Other Stories, 1899), Po-liuds'komu: Opovidannia z bessarabs'koho zhyttia (In a Civilized Way: Stories from Bessarabian Life, 1900), Opovidannia (Stories, 1903), Poiedynok i inshi opovidannia (The Duel and Other Stories, 1903), U hrishnyi svit (Into the Sinful World, 1905), Z hlybyn (From the Depths, 1909), Debiut (Debut, 1911), and Tini zabutykh predkiv (Shadows of Forgotten Ancestors, 1913). A three-volume Russian edition of his works, translated by M. Mohyliansky, appeared in 1911–

14. Many of his stories were translated into several European languages during his lifetime.

Kotsiubynsky's early stories – 'Andrii Soloveiko' (1884), '21 hrudnia, na Vvedeniie' (The 21st of December on the Day of the Presentation at the Temple, 1885), 'Na viru' (A Common-Law Marriage, 1891), 'P'iatyztotnyk' (The Five Zloty Coin, 1892), 'Tsipov'iaz' (The Flail Maker, 1893), 'Kho' (1894), 'Dlia zahal'noho dobra' (For the Common Good, 1895), and others – are examples of ethnographic realism and show the influence of I. *Nechui-Levytsky and Populist ideas. In the late 1890s, however, his themes and subjects became more varied and his approach more sophisticated, and he evolved into one of the most talented Ukrainian modernist writers. Lyrical impressionism was already apparent in his V putakh shaitana, and his 'exotic études' 'Na kameni' (On the Rock, 1902) and 'Pid minaretamy' (Under the Minarets, 1904) are masterpieces of that style.

Kotsiubynsky's morally healthy estheticism and abiding interest in internal, spiritual states are reflected in 'Lialechka' (The Little Doll, 1901), an ironic depiction of an intellectual disillusioned with the passions of his youth; in 'Tsvit iabluni' (The Apple Blossom, 1902), a story about the divided psyche of a writer watching his young daughter die and recording his observations for use in a future work; and in 'Son' (The Dream, 1904), a story about a man's escape from the oppressiveness of everyday life into dreams. Subtle psychological realism is also characteristic of the works Kotsiubynsky wrote after the Revolution of 1905. These stories are his most original contributions on another recurring theme: tsarist national and social oppression in Ukraine. They include 'Vin ide!' (He Is Coming! 1906), 'Smikh' (Laughter, 1906), 'Persona grata' (1907), 'Podarunok na imenyiny' (The Name-Day Gift, 1912), and the artistically powerful unfinished novella Fata morgana (1903–10; English trans, 1976).

Kotsiubynsky's most artistic works are 'Intermezzo' (1908), in which he depicted, using a combination of naturalism and impressionism, the healing powers of nature for a neurasthenic author, reminding him of his duty to his people; and Tini zabutykh predkiv (1911; English trans, 1981), a psychological novella about Hutsul life that draws widely on pagan demonology and folk legends. His masterfully written, linguistically sophisticated works had a great influence on early-20th-century Ukrainian prose writers and poets (eg, P. *Tychyna). His works have been republished many times. The fullest editions appeared in 1929–30 (5 vols), 1961–2 (6 vols), and 1973–5 (7 vols). Since the 1930s Soviet criticism has promoted a simplistic interpretation of Kotsiubynsky as merely a 'realist' and a 'revolutionary democrat' and has emphasized his friendship with M. Gorky. Several Soviet films have been based on his works: Koni ne vynni (Horses Aren't to Blame, 1956), Kryvavyi svitanok (Bloody Dawn, 1956), Pe-kopt'or (1957), Dorohoiu tsinoiniu (At a High Price, 1957), and the acclaimed Tini zabutykh predkiv (1967). Literary-memorial museums were opened in Vinnytsia in 1927 in the building where Kotsiubynsky was born, and in Chernihiv in 1934 in the building he lived in.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Kotsiubynsky, M. Lysty do Volodymyra Hnatiuka, ed with an intro by V. Hnatiuk (Lviv 1914)

Fedun, F. (ed). Mykhailo Kotsiubynsky'kyi (do 75-richchia z dnia

- narodzhennia*): Zbirnyk materialiv, stattei, virshiv ta narysiv (Vinnytsia 1939)
- Kotsiubyns'kyi, Kh. (ed). Do 75-richchia z dnia narodzhennia M.M. Kotsiubyns'koho, 2 vols (Chernihiv 1940–1)
- Vozniak, M. Do zv'iazkiv M.M. Kotsiubyns'koho z Halychynoiu (Lviv 1941)
- Kotsiubyns'ka-Iefimenko, Z. Mykhailo Kotsiubyns'kyi: Zhyttia i tvorchist' (Kiev 1955)
- Moroz, M. Mykhailo Kotsiubyns'kyi: Bibliografichnyi pokazhchyk (Kiev 1964)
- Kup'ians'kyi, I. Litopys zhyttia i tvorchosti Mykhaila Kotsiubyns'koho (Kiev 1965)
- Kalenychenko, N. Velykyi sontsepoklonnyk: Zhyttia i tvorchist' Mykhaila Kotsiubyns'koho (Kiev 1967)
- Kostenko, M. Khudozhnia maisternist' Mykhaila Kotsiubyns'koho (Kiev 1969)
- Wiśniewska, E. O sztuce pisarskiej Mychajla Kociubynskiego (Wrocław 1973)
- Chernenko, O. Mykhailo Kotsiubyns'kyi – impresionist: Obraz liudyny v tvorchosti pys'mennyka ([Munich] 1977)
- Rubchak, B. 'The Music of Satan and the Bedeviled World: An Essay on Mykhailo Kotsiubynsky,' in M. Kotsiubynsky, Shadows of Forgotten Ancestors, trans M. Carynyk (Littleton, Colo 1981)

I. Koshelivets, R. Senkus

Yurii Kotsiubynsky

Kotsiubynsky, Yurii [Kocjubyns'kyj, Jurij], b 7 December 1896 in Vinnytsia, d 8 March 1937. Soviet political figure; the son of M. *Kotsiubynsky. He joined the Bolshevik party in 1914. In 1917 he was a member of the Petrograd Military Revolutionary Committee; he became secretary for military affairs in the first Soviet Ukrainian government (1917–18) and the commander of the Bolshevik army in Ukraine (1918). A diplomat from 1920, he represented Soviet Ukraine in Austria (1921–2) and was consul there and in Poland (1927–30). He was deputy chairman (1930–4) and chairman (1934–6) of the State Planning Commission, and a member of the All-Ukrainian Central Executive Committee. He was arrested in April 1936 and shot without trial for being a 'leader of a Ukrainian Trotskyist Center.' He was rehabilitated posthumously in the 1960s. Two biographies of him, by A. Yaroshenko (1977) and I. Tsiupa (1966), were published in Kiev.

Kotska, Andrii [Kocka, Andrij], b 23 May 1911 in Uzhhorod, Transcarpathia. Painter. Having studied with A. *Erdeli in Uzhhorod (1927–31) and with F. Ferrazzi at the Rome Academy of Fine Arts (1940–2), Kotska specializes in portraits and landscapes, and deals mostly with the Hutsuls and the Hutsul region: eg, Hutsul Girl

Andrii Kotska: Hutsuls (oil, 1972)

(1949), Highland Girl (1956), The Milkmaid Odotia Polianska (1966), Autumn (1954), Reservoir at the Foot of Hoverlia (1957), and Early Spring (1969). His style shows an inclination towards expressionism. An album of his work was published in Kiev in 1973.

Adam Kotsko

Kotsko, Adam [Kocko], b 24 December 1882 in Sholomyia, Bibrka county, Galicia, d 1 July 1910 in Lviv. Student activist. He was a member of the clandestine Committee of Ukrainian Youth (КУМ), which spearheaded the campaign for a Ukrainian university in Lviv. Killed in a clash with Polish students at the university, he is remembered as a martyr by generations of Ukrainian students.

Kotsylovsky, Yosafat [Kocylvovs'kyj, Josafat] (secular name: Yosyf), b 3 March 1876 in Pakoshivka, Sianik county, Galicia, d 17 November 1947. Uniate bishop. He studied at the Pontifical Urban University in Rome (PH D 1903, D TH 1907). After ordination (1907), he was a professor of theology and proctor of the seminary in Stanyslaviv

Bishop Yosafat Kotsylovsky

(Ivano-Frankivske). He entered the Basilian order (1911) and taught theology in the Lavriv monastery before serving as rector of the evacuated Ukrainian seminary in Moravia (1914–16). In 1917 Kotsylovsky was appointed bishop of Peremyshl. He established several eparchial clerical organizations and funded the weekly Ukrains'kyi Beskyd. In 1921 he revived the Peremyshl Seminary as a complete seminary (from 1845 it had only offered one year of study). In 1945 he was arrested by Polish authorities and handed over to the Soviets; released briefly, he was rearrested in 1946 and sent to a Siberian concentration camp, where he died.

Kottmeier, Elisabeth, b 31 July 1902, d 11 January 1983. German writer and translator; the wife of I. *Kostetsky. She was a coeditor of the irregular journal Ukraina i svit (Hannover, 1946–69) and translated Ukrainian literature into German: V. Barka's Troiandnyi roman (Trojanerroman, 1956), the poetry anthology Weinstock der Wiedergeburt: Moderne ukrainische Lyrik (1957), and a selection of Lesia Ukrainka's works, Auf dem Blutacker. She and her husband cotranslated an anthology of old Ukrainian literature (Aus dem Alten Russland, 1968) and O. Honchar's novel Sobor (The Cathedral, under the title Der Dom von Satschipljanka, 1970).

Kouzan, Marian [Kuzan, Marijan], b 29 September 1925 in Isai, Turka county, Galicia. Composer and conductor. Arriving in France at the age of two, he studied violin under O. Messiaen at the Paris Conservatory and then turned to conducting and composing. In 1966 he organized and conducted the Alpha-Omega Orchestra of Paris; later he became music director of the Compagnie Luxembourgeoise de Télédiffusion. He specializes in conducting medieval and Renaissance music. Kouzan's development as a composer was influenced by Ukrainian folk music and such masters as E. Varèse, A. Schoenberg, and B. Bartók. His compositions, which are written mostly in the modern idiom, include orchestral and other instrumental music, vocal music, and incidental music for films. In 1984 Kouzan's cantata L'amour de l'homme was performed in Chartres Cathedral.

Kovach, Fedir [Kovač], b 7 March 1931 in Humenský Rokytov in the Prešov region of eastern Slovakia. Literary scholar and community figure. A graduate of Kiev University (1958), he worked in the Ukrainian department of the Slovak Pedagogical Publishing House. He has taught Ukrainian literature at Prešov University since 1969 and headed the Cultural Association of Ukrainian Workers in Czechoslovakia since 1979. From 1972 to 1986 he was the editor in chief of the journal Duklia. He has also been a deputy in the Slovak National Council. He has written many articles on Ukrainian literature in the Prešov region, two books about the 19th-century Transcarpathian poet O. Pavlovych (1969 and [in Russian] 1970), and the collection of literary criticism Slovo pro poeziuu ta poetiv (A Word about Poetry and Poets, 1978). He has also translated Ukrainian works into Czech and Slovak and edited several books and anthologies.

Kovach, Mykhailo (Mihajlo) [Kovač, Myxajlo], b 2 October 1909 in Šid in the Srem region of Yugoslavia. Writer, ethnographer, and pedagogue. Since 1927 he has published in Srem-Bačka periodicals, including Ruski novini (1921–41), Nasha Zahradka (1937–41), Pionirska Zahradka (since 1947), and Šoetlošč (since 1952). He writes in the *Bačka dialect (Rusyn). Seven of his plays (1939–71), the poetry collection Moi shvet (My World, 1964), three collections of stories for children (1971–81), a collection of poetry for children (1979), the novel Hrits Bandurik (1972), and the novella Tshehliarnia (The Brickyard, 1982) have been published separately. He has also prepared school textbooks and collected folk songs and melodies.

Koval, Alla [Koval'], b ? Linguist. Associated with Kiev University, Koval specializes in prescriptive linguistics for the general reader. Since 1960 she has published several manuals of 'practical stylistics,' including Praktychna stylistyka suchasnoï ukrains'koï movy (Practical Stylistics of the Contemporary Ukrainian Language, 2nd edn, 1978). These large-edition works are slanted towards bringing Ukrainian as close to Russian as possible.

Koval, Volodymyr [Koval'], b 14 February 1885 in Kulchyny, Starokostiantyniv county, Volhynia gubernia, d 21 March 1927 in Prague. Co-operative leader and agronomist. He graduated from the Kiev Polytechnical Institute (1912) and then worked in St Petersburg and Kiev, where he served on the executive of the Society of Western Zemstvos, popularizing the use of agricultural machines and teaching modern farming techniques. During the struggle for Ukrainian independence he was a member of the Central Rada and president of the *Tsentral union of agricultural co-operatives. In 1920 he became a professor at the Kiev Polytechnical Institute and the Kiev Commercial Institute. In 1921 he immigrated to Germany, and in 1924 to Czechoslovakia. Koval was the author of over 30 works on agriculture.

Kovalenko, Anatolii, b 16 January 1905 in Kiev, d 19 September 1973 in Kiev. Specialist in mechanics; full member of the AN URSR from 1961. A graduate of the Kiev Polytechnical Institute, he taught there from 1935 to 1949 and then at Kiev University. From 1936 he also worked at the AN URSR Institute of Structural Mechanics (later the Institute of Mechanics), serving as director from 1959 to 1965. He founded a branch of thermomechanics, and published important works on the theory of thermoelasticity and thermal stress and the theoretical basis of turbine-blade design.

Kovalenko, Borys, b 25 November 1903 in Khotunychi, Chernihiv gubernia, d 24 August 1938? Literary critic. A member of the writers' groups *Pluh and *Hart in the early 1920s, in 1926 he was one of the founders of the Communist writers' group *Molodniak. From 1927 he was a leading spokesman of the *All-Ukrainian Association of Proletarian Writers. An orthodox Marxist, Kovalenko promoted 'proletarian realism' and was one of the fiercest critics of M. *Khvylovy and other writers, beginning with the *Literary Discussion in 1925. Many of his articles were reprinted in the collections V borot'bi za proletars'ku literaturu (In the Struggle for a Proletarian Literature, 1928), Pershyi pryzoiv (The First Call-up, 1928), Proletars'ki pys'mennyky (Proletarian Writers, 1931), and Za mahnetobuda literatury (For the 'Magnetostroi' of Literature, 1932). From 1931 he worked as a Stalinist publicist in Moscow. In 1934 he was elected to the executive of the new Writers' Union of Ukraine, and in 1935 he was sent to Kiev to head the Chair of Contemporary Ukrainian Literature at Kiev University and to teach at a Party institute. Although he played an important part in the Party witch-hunt to 'root out the remnants of Ukrainian nationalism,' in 1937 he himself was accused of being a Trotskyist, fascist, and a member of a fascist organization and arrested. He was most likely shot. In 1956 he was posthumously 'rehabilitated,' and a volume of his articles was published in 1962.

I. Koshelivets

Kovalenko, Hryhorii, b 24 January 1868 in Baryshivka, Poltava gubernia, d 28 October 1937? Writer, ethnographer, artist, and community figure. In the years 1896–1905 he lived in Chernihiv and helped B. *Hrinchenko publish educational literature for the masses. There he became a close friend of M. Kotsiubynsky and V. Samiilenko and a supporter of the Revolutionary Ukrainian party. He was also an active member of the Poltava Scholarly Archival Commission and published his research on the Ukrainian peasant home in its Trudy. He edited the journal Ridnyi kraj in 1906 and published the journal Zhyttia i znannia in 1913–14. In the 1920s he traveled through the local countryside and continued his research on the peasant home.

Kovalenko's articles, poems, stories, and illustrations appeared from 1891 in many periodicals. Published separately were his story collection Zharty zhyttia (Life's Jokes, 1911), plays for children, his and Hrinchenko's book on I. Kotliarevsky (1898), and many educational brochures on medicine and Ukrainian writers and history. After the February 1917 Revolution he published a book about Ye. Hrebinka (1918), his comedy Vorozhka (The Fortune-teller, 1918), and sketches of H. Skovoroda and I. Kotliarevsky (1919). In the 1920s he contributed to several popular journals and to the Kiev daily Proletars'ka pravda. Arrested during the Yezhov terror, he died in prison. Many of the works he wrote in the Soviet period – novellas, plays, and the historical novel 'Iurko Sokolenko' – remain unpublished. He left behind many paintings, sketches, and photos of Ukrainian folk architecture.

R. Senkus

Kovalenko, Ihor, b 16 March 1935 in Kiev. Mathematician and cyberneticist; full member of the AN URSR since 1978. A graduate of the University of Kiev (1957), he worked at the AN URSR Institute of Mathematics (1957–

Ihor Kovalenko

Liudmyla Kovalenko

61) and the Moscow Institute of Electronic Machine Building (1962–71). Since 1971 he has been the head of a department of the AN URSR Institute of Cybernetics and a professor at Kiev University. Most of his research deals with probability, queuing theory, and reliability.

Kovalenko, Leonid, b 12 March 1907 in Stupychne, Zvenynhorodka county, Kiev gubernia, d 22 June 1985 in Kamianets-Podilskyyi. Historian. He was a senior research associate at the AN URSR Institute of History from 1945 to 1947 and then taught at the Zhytomyr Pedagogical Institute (1947–56), Uzhhorod University (1956–61), and the Kamianets-Podilskyyi Pedagogical Institute (1961–85). He wrote over 100 works devoted to Ukrainian historiography and the history of Western Europe and Hungary, including a conspectus of lectures on 19th-century Ukrainian historiography (1964), a book on the French Revolution and political movements in Ukraine (1973), and a book on the historiography of Ukraine to the 1917 Revolution (1983).

Kovalenko, Liudmyla, b 1898 in the Azov region, d 13 June 1969 in Trenton, New Jersey. Writer, journalist, and community figure. Her short stories and translations of such French writers as E. Zola, H. de Balzac, Voltaire, and G. de Maupassant appeared from 1926 in the Soviet Ukrainian journals Nova hromada, Chervonyi shliakh, and Zhyttia i revoliutsiia. After her husband M. *Ivchenko was arrested in 1929, she did not publish prose again until she was in Lviv during the German occupation in 1943. She was an organizer of the Ukrainian Red Cross in Kiev in 1941. As a postwar refugee in Germany, she edited the women's journal Hromadianka (1946–9), was vice-president of the Ukrainian Women's Alliance, and belonged to the literary organization *MUR. In 1950 she immigrated to the United States, where she worked for the Voice of America, contributed to émigré periodicals, and headed the Ukrainian Orthodox Sisterhood. She was a member of the Ukrainian Academy of Arts and Sciences in the United States, the Association of Ukrainian Journalists in America, the Slovo Association of Ukrainian Writers in Exile, and International PEN. Her major works are the collection of six plays V chasi i prostori (In Time and Space, 1950); the science fiction novel Rik 2245 (The Year 2245, 1958); three story collections on religious themes – Vita nova (1957), Davni dni (Olden Days, 1961), and Dvi krasny (Two Beauties, 1965); and the historical trilogy Nasha ne svoia zemlia (Our Native Land That Is Not Ours), consisting of Stepovi obrii (Steppe Horizons, 1964), Pro-rist (Sprout, 1966), and Li okradenu zbuduly (Awakened in Flames, 1968).

D.H. Struk

Kovalenko, Mykhailo, ?–1919. Politically active landowner of Kostiantynohrad county, Poltava gubernia. In 1917 in the Poltava region he founded the *All-Ukrainian Union of Landowners, which opposed the confiscation of private property. On 20 October 1918 Kovalenko presented Hetman P. Skoropadsky with a memorandum from the small landholders' faction of the union demanding independence and sovereignty for Ukraine.

Kovalenko, Oleksa, b 1880 in Voronezh gubernia, d 1927. Poet. He lived in Kiev. From 1903 his poetry appeared in Ukrainian periodicals and in over 10 large pre-revolutionary anthologies of Ukrainian literature, three of which he edited: Rozvaha (Amusement, 2 vols, 1905–6), Ternovyi vinok (Crown of Thorns, 1908), and Ukrains'ka muza (The Ukrainian Muse, 1908). Published separately were his collections Zoloty zasiv (The Golden Sowing, 1910), Spiv solov'ia (The Nightingale's Singing, 1911), and Sribni rosy (Silver Dews). He also translated foreign and Russian works into Ukrainian, including N. Gogol's Revizor (Inspector General) and K. Ryleev's Voinarovskii. In 1906 he founded the Ranok publishing house in Kiev.

Kovalenko, Oleksander, b 10 August 1875 in Romen, Poltava gubernia, d 17 October 1963 in Geneva. Engineer and political activist. While studying at the Kharkiv Technological Institute, he helped found the *Revolutionary Ukrainian party (RUP). Upon graduating he worked as a mechanical engineer on the battleship Prince Potemkin, and in 1905 played an important part in its uprising. He escaped abroad and did not return to Ukraine until 1917. In early 1918 Kovalenko was one of the organizers of the UNR Naval Ministry. From 1919 to 1922 he served on the UNR missions in Geneva and Paris, and after that lectured in mathematics at the Ukrainian Husbandry Academy and the Ukrainian Technical and Husbandry Institute. At the end of the Second World War he moved to Geneva. Kovalenko's publications include textbooks in mechanics and mathematics, and personal recollections.

Prokhor Kovalenko

Kovalenko, Prokhor, b 23 February 1884 in Yaroslavs, Hlukhiv county, Chernihiv gubernia, d 16 October 1963 in Kiev. Character actor and educator. Upon graduating from the Lysenko Music and Drama School (1910), he joined the Sadovsky Theater in Kiev and worked there until 1917. After a brief period at the State People's Theater in Kiev, he played with various provincial companies before committing himself permanently to the Kiev Ukrainian Drama Theater (1926–48). At the same time he lectured at the Kiev Institute of Theater Arts (1934–60). His repertoire included such roles as Zolotnytsky in B. Hrinchenko's Stepovyi hist' (Steppe Guest), Kramariuk in I. Tobilevych's Zhyteis'ke more (The Sea of Life), Taryn in S. Vasylichenko's V kholodku (In the Shade), and Dobchinsky in N. Gogol's Revizor (Inspector General). He wrote two books of memoirs: Nezabutnie (The Unforgettable, 1962) and Shliakhy na stsenu (Paths to the Stage, 1964).

Kovalevska, Mariia [Kovalevs'ka, Marija] (née Vorontsova), b August 1849 in Katerynoslav gubernia, d 19 November 1889 in Kara, Transbaikal region. One of the most active revolutionary populists of the 1870s and wife of Mykola *Kovalevsky. From 1874 she was involved with revolutionary circles in Odessa and Kiev opposed to the tsarist government, especially the Kiev group of 'southern rebels,' who believed in encouraging peasant uprisings. In 1876 she was arrested in connection with a trial of populists, the so-called Trial of the 193, but released. In February 1879 she was rearrested in Kiev and sentenced to nearly 15 years of hard labor in Siberia, where she committed suicide.

Kovalevsky, Aleksandr [Kovalevskij], b 7 November 1840 in Shustianka, Dinabur county, Vitsebsk gubernia (now Latvia), d 9 November 1901 in St Petersburg. Russian zoologist; member of the Russian Imperial Academy of Sciences from 1890. Kovalevsky received his PH D from St Petersburg University in 1867 and was a professor at Kiev (1869–74), Odessa (1874–91), and St Petersburg (1891–4) universities. He also cofounded and directed the Sevastopol Biological Station (1892–1901), which is now named in his honor. An evolutionist, he was the founder of comparative embryology and experimental and evolutionary histology. Kovalevsky's work dealt with the embryonic growth and the physiology and anatomy of invertebrate and chordate animals. He first established the existence of a common pattern of development in all multicellular animals, providing important evidence of evolution. Kovalevsky's collected works, Izbrannye raboty, were published in 1951.

Kovalevsky, Ivan [Kovalevs'kyj], b 7 February 1882 in Monastyryshche, Lypovets county, Kiev gubernia, d 22 November 1955 in Ingolstadt, West Germany. Comic actor of the Sadovsky school. From 1906 to 1920 he worked as an actor and an administrator in the Sadovsky Theater in Kiev. Then he acted in the State People's Theater, the Shevchenko Kiev Ukrainian Drama Theater (1922–5), the Odessa Theater of the Revolution (1925–9), and the Zhytomyr Oblast Theater (1933–43). In 1945 he emigrated to West Germany. His repertoire included such roles as Tereshko in I. Karpenko-Kary's Suieta (Vanity), Omelko and Stopa in his Martyn Borulia, Shpak in H. Kvitka-Osnovianenko's Shel'menko-denshchuk (Shelmenko the Orderly), Andrii Karpovych in V. Vynnychenko's Brekhnia (The Lie), Shanarel in Lesia Ukrainka's Kamiany hospodar (The Stone Host), Pastor Moser in F. Schiller's Die Räuber, the Marquise of Forlipopoli in C. Goldoni's La locandiera, and the cantor Havrylo in O. Korniiuk's Bohdan Khmel'nyts'kyi.

Maksym Kovalevsky

Kovalevsky, Maksym [Kovalevs'kyj], b 8 September 1851 in Kharkiv, d 5 April 1916 in Petrograd. Renowned historian, sociologist, ethnographer, jurist, and politician. As a law student at Kharkiv University, he was greatly influenced by D. Kachenovsky's lectures on the history of international law and state institutions. In 1877 he became a docent in European state law at Moscow University. In 1880 he received his doctorate and became a full professor. Because he promoted constitutional government and socioeconomic change in his lectures, he was forced to resign his post by the tsarist government in 1887. He went abroad and gave university lectures in Stockholm, Oxford, Paris, Brussels, and Chicago. He was one of the founders of the International Institute of Sociology and was elected its vice-president in 1895 and president in 1907. In 1901 he founded and directed the Russian Higher School of Social Sciences in Paris; many prominent figures, including M. Hrushevsky, M. Tuhan-Baranovsky, F. Vovk, P. Struve, P. Miliukov, and V. Lenin, were guest lecturers there.

In 1905 Kovalevsky returned to Russia and was appointed a professor at the St Petersburg Polytechnical Institute. At the private Psychoneurological Institute he taught the first systematic course in sociology to be offered at a post-secondary school in the Russian Empire. In 1906 he cofounded the Party of Constitutional Monarchy and Democratic Reforms and was elected to the First Russian State Duma as a representative of Kharkiv gubernia. In 1907 he was chosen as the representative of the academic curia in the State Council. From 1909 he also edited the prestigious journal Vestnik Evropy. In 1914 he was elected a full member of the Imperial Academy of Sciences. Kovalevsky co-operated with the Ukrainian faction in the Duma. In 1907 he became the head of the Shevchenko Philanthropic Society, which aided Ukrainian students in St Petersburg. He also headed the editorial committee of the encyclopedic Ukrainskii narod v ego proshlom i nastoiashchem (The Ukrainian People in Its Past and Present, 2 vols, 1914, 1916) and prepared a study of the origin of land ownership in Slobidska Ukraine for the third volume, which was never published.

As a scholar, Kovalevsky was fundamentally a Comtian positivist. His studies in comparative history and evolutionary sociology were based largely on the ethnographic approach. He wrote many internationally acclaimed studies on a vast range of subjects. In his empirical and theoretical works and formulations of a universal law of development, he took into account many factors:

social and cultural forces, ethnocultural identity, language, psychology, and even biology. He generally believed in plural causation and firmly opposed K. Marx's economic determinism and views of the state.

Kovalevsky's numerous works were published in many Russian and Western journals. He wrote, in Russian, monographs on primitive law (2 vols, 1876), Russian peasant-commune land ownership (1879), the historical-comparative method in jurisprudence and means for studying the history of law (1880), law and custom in the Caucasus (2 vols, 1890), the origins of contemporary democracy (4 vols, 1895–7), economic growth in Europe to the appearance of capitalist economy (3 vols, 1898–1900; rev German edn, 7 vols, 1901–14), Russian political institutions (1902), family life in the past and present from the perspective of comparative ethnography and the history of law (2 vols, 1905), contemporary sociologists (1905), social evolution from direct to representational popular rule and from patriarchal monarchy to parliamentarism (3 vols, 1906), sociology (2 vols, 1910), and the origin of the family, clan, tribe, state, and religion (1914).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- M.M. Kovalevskii – uchenyi, gosudarstvennyi i obshchestvennyi deiatel' i grazhdanin: Sbornik statei (Petrograd 1917)
 Safronov, B. M.M. Kovalevskii kak sotsiolog (Moscow 1960)
 Vucinich, A. 'Comparative History and Sociology: M.M. Kovalevskii,' in his Social Thought in Tsarist Russia: The Quest for a General Science of Society, 1861–1917 (Chicago and London 1976)
 Kaloev, B. M.M. Kovalevskii i ego issledovaniia gorskikh narodov Kavkaza (Moscow 1979)

V. Markus, R. Senkus

Kovalevsky, Mykola [Kovalevs'kyj], b 1841 near Hadiache, Poltava gubernia, d 1897 in Kiev. Teacher and community leader. A graduate of Kiev University and the Higher Pedagogical Courses in St Petersburg, he taught in the Cadet School in Kiev before he was fired for political reasons and moved to Odessa, where he worked as a private tutor. A close friend of M. *Drahomanov, he taught in the *Sunday school movement (1859–60) and was a member of the Kiev and Odessa *hromadas. Kovalevsky was arrested in June 1879 and exiled to Siberia until 1882. There he became acquainted with the American G. Kennan and provided him with much information for his book The Siberian Exile System (2 vols, 1891). From 1882 Kovalevsky helped raise money to support Drahomanov's political and publicistic work in Geneva. He also wrote a popular history of Ukraine, published in Lviv under the pseudonym I. Markevych, and raised money for the Galician radicals. His memoirs were published in the journal Literaturno-naukovyi vistnyk (1901). He is buried in the Baikove cemetery in Kiev.

Kovalevsky, Mykola [Kovalevs'kyj], b 3 September 1892 in Krupe, Lublin gubernia, d 18 August 1957 in Innsbruck. Political leader, co-operative organizer, and publicist. As a student he headed the Ukrainian student hromada in Moscow (1912) and then in Kiev (1915). In 1917 he played a leading role in the Ukrainian Party of Socialist Revolutionaries and the Peasant Association, and edited the latter's daily Narodna volia. A member of the *Central Rada, he served in V. Vynnychenko's cabinet as minister of food supplies and in V. Holubovych's cabinet as minister of agrarian affairs. In 1919 under the *Directory he was minister of agrarian affairs in B. Martos's and I. Mazepa's cabinets. Emigrating in 1920, he moved from Warsaw to Bucharest, and then to Innsbruck. A prolific writer, particularly on Soviet policy, he contributed to many journals, including Literaturno-naukovyi vistnyk, Biuletyn Polsko-Ukraiński, and Sprawy Narodowościowe. In 1940–2 he was a coeditor of Nashe zhyttia in Bucharest, and from 1950 an editor of the Express-Pressdienst in Innsbruck. Besides newspaper and journal articles and entries for Entsyklopediia ukrainoznavstva (Encyclopedia of Ukraine), he wrote a number of monographs: Ukraina pid chervonym iarmom (Ukraine under the Red Yoke, 1936), Opozytsiini rukhy v Ukraini i natsional'na polityka sssr (1920–1954) (Opposition Movements in Ukraine and the Nationality Policy of the USSR [1920–1954], 1955), and a book of memoirs, Pry dzherelakh borot'by (At the Sources of Struggle, 1960).

Mykola Kovalevsky

A. Zhukovsky

Kovalevsky, Oleksander [Kovalevs'kyj], 1890–? Political and civic leader, co-operative organizer, and publicist. A founder and leading member of the Ukrainian People's Republican party (est 1918), he served as UNR minister of agriculture in 1920. After the war he was active in the co-operative movement in Volhynia and was director of the Ukrainbank in Lutske. In the 1930s he edited the progovernment paper Volyns'ke slovo. When Soviet troops occupied Volhynia in 1939, he was arrested and disappeared.

Kovalevsky, Pavlo [Kovalevs'kyj], b 1849 in Kharkiv, d 1923 in Petrograd. Psychiatrist and psychologist. After receiving his PhD in medicine from Kharkiv University, he taught there from 1877 to 1892 and founded the first chair of psychiatry and psychology laboratory in Ukraine. In 1883–98 he published the first journal of psychiatry in the Russian Empire, Arkhiv psikhiatrii, neirologii i sudobnoi psikhopatologii. He was also the rector of Warsaw University (1893–7) and a professor of psychiatry at Kazan (1903–6) and St Petersburg universities. He wrote a two-volume psychiatry textbook and many works in the field of psychiatry, most of them based on clinical research.

Kovalevsky, Volodymyr [Kovalevs'kyj], b 29 May 1905 in Sosnytsia, Chernihiv gubernia, d 10 November 1970 in Kiev. Literary scholar and journalist. He began publishing in 1924. His most important works are Rytmichni zasoby ukrains'koho literaturnoho virsha (The Rhythmic Devices of Ukrainian Literary Verse, 1960) and Ryma (Rhyme, 1965).

Kovalevsky, Yevhraf [Kovalevs'kyj, Jevhraf], b 21 December 1790 (1792 according to some sources) in Kharkiv, d 30 March 1867 in St Petersburg. Engineer and government official; honorary member of the St Petersburg Academy of Sciences from 1856. He graduated from the Cadet School in St Petersburg in 1810 and began to work in the Department of Mining in 1819. In 1826 he was sent to expand the Luhanske smelting refinery. He then conducted important studies on coal and salt reserves in the *Donets Basin, and compiled the first stratographic map of the basin. He occupied a number of positions in the mining department before becoming minister of education in 1858. As minister he carried out several significant reforms and drafted a new liberal law on censorship; eventually, opposition to him in reactionary circles forced him to retire as minister in 1861. In 1862 he was elected president of the Free Economic Society.

Kovalevych, Ivan Robert [Kovalevyč], b 4 March 1896 in Verkhnyi Stumyn, Stanyslaviv county, Galicia, d 7 January 1978 in Winnipeg. Religious leader and editor. Kovalevych immigrated to South America in 1911 and came to Canada during the First World War. In 1929 he was ordained in the United church. From its inception in 1922, he was active in the Ukrainian Evangelical Alliance of North America and served Ukrainian congregations in Saskatchewan, Toronto, and the Winnipeg region. He edited **Kanadiis'kyi ranok* (1947–58) and after 1961 helped edit its successor levanhels'kyi ranok. For 23 years he represented the Ukrainian Evangelical Alliance on the Presidium of the Ukrainian Canadian Committee.

Kovalinsky, Mykhailo [Kovalins'kyj, Myxajlo] (Kovalynsky), b 1757 in the Kharkiv region, d 1807. Writer and pedagogue. He studied with H. *Skovoroda and at Strasbourg University, and traveled throughout western Europe with O. Rozumovsky. Empress Catherine II appointed him vicegerent of Riazan and Tsar Paul named him curator of Moscow University (1801–4). Kovalinsky's writings are the main source of biographical data on Skovoroda. His biography of Skovoroda, Zhittie Grigoriia Skovorody, was written in 1796 but published only in 1886 in the journal Kievskaia starina; a second version, edited by the historian D. Bahalii, was published in Sbornik Kharkovskogo Istoriko-filologicheskogo obshchestva in 1894. His correspondence with Skovoroda was published in that same journal and in a two-volume edition of Skovoroda's complete works (1973). Kovalinsky also wrote two odes to Empress Catherine (1774).

Kovaliv, Levko, b ca 1890, d ? Revolutionary figure. In 1917–18 he was a member of the CC of the Ukrainian Party of Socialist Revolutionaries and of the Ukrainian Central Rada. In 1919, as a member of the CC of the *Borotbists, he and H. Hrynko negotiated unsuccessfully with the Comintern executive in Moscow in an effort to obtain admission of the Borotbist party into the Comintern, and in December of that year he signed the compact between the Borotbists and the CP(B)U. After the dissolution of the Borotbist party in 1920, he did not join the CP(B)U. Forsaking politics altogether, he worked as a mathematician, chemist, and book illustrator. He was arrested during the Stalinist terror in 1934 and was shot in a concentration camp.

Kovaliv, Panteleimon, b 9 August 1898 in Brailiv, Vinnytsia county, Podilia gubernia, d 15 November 1973 in Washington, DC. Linguist; full member of the Shevchenko Scientific Society from 1949. A graduate of the Kiev Institute of People's Education (1930), he was a docent at the Kiev Pedagogical Institute and at Kiev University. After immigrating to Germany in 1944, he became professor at the Ukrainian Free University in 1945 and professor and rector at the Theological Academy of the Ukrainian Autocephalous Orthodox Church in Munich (1946–51). In 1952 he immigrated to the United States. His publications include works in the history of Ukrainian such as Narysy z istorii ukrains'koi movy (Sketches on the History of the Ukrainian Language, 1941), co-authored with M. Hrunsky; studies of the descriptive and historical morphology of Russian and Ukrainian (prefixes, participles, stress); and Leksychnyi fond literaturnoi movy kyivs'koho periodu x–xiv st. (The Lexical Fund of the Literary Language of the Kievan Period, x–xiv Centuries, 2 vols, 1962, 1964). He defended the authenticity of Molytovnyk-sluzhebnyk: Pam'iatka xiv st. (The Prayer Book-Missal: A Memorial of the 14th Century, 1960).

Kovaliv, Stepan (pseud: Stefan Piatka), b 25 December 1848 in Bronytsia, Sambir circle, Galicia, d 26 April 1920 in Boryslav. Populist writer and teacher. A graduate of the Lviv Teachers' Seminary, from 1879 he taught in Boryslav. He first published in 1881. Beginning in 1891, 14 of his story collections appeared during his lifetime. Some – eg, Charodiina skrypka (The Magic Violin, 1910) and V ostannii lavtsi (In the Last Row of Desks, 1911) – were written for children. Many of his stories, particularly those in the collections Hromads'ki promyslovtsi (Community Industrialists, 1899) and Obrazky z halyts'koi Kalifornii (Pictures from Galician California, 1913), depict the lives of the impoverished Galician peasantry and the exploited workers of Boryslav. An edition of his complete works appeared in 1958. I. Franko had an important influence on his writing.

Kovalivsky, Andrii [Kovalivs'kyj, Andrij], b 1 February 1895 in Rozsokhovate near Zolochiv, Kharkiv gubernia, d 29 November 1969 in Kharkiv. Historian and specialist on Oriental sources of Slavic history. He was one of the founders of the All-Ukrainian Learned Association of Oriental Studies. He worked at the Institute of Oriental Studies in Leningrad (1934–9) and at the Saransk Pedagogical Institute in Mordovia (1939–44). In 1947 he returned to the Institute of Oriental Studies in Leningrad and lectured at the university there. In 1951 he received his doctorate from Kharkiv University, and in 1964 he was appointed head of the Chair of Medieval History. Apart from Middle Eastern studies, he was interested in the history of Kievan Rus' and 18th-century Ukraine. He is the author of over 90 works, including Rozvytok etychnykh pohliadiu Hryhoriia Skovorody v zv'iazku z ioho zhyttiam (The Development of H. Skovoroda's Ethical Views in Relation to His Life, 1923), Kniga Akhmeda Ibn-Fadlana o ego puteshestvii na Volgu v 921–922 gg. (Ahmad Ibn-Fadlān's Book on His Travels to the Volga in 921–2, 1956), Antolohiia literatur Skhodu (Anthology of Oriental Literatures, 1961), translations of medieval Arabic accounts and works by Middle Eastern writers, and studies of Ukrainian folk beliefs, A. Krymsky, P. Ritter, and Paul of Aleppo. Kovalivsky is the subject of a biobibliography published in Kharkiv in 1966.

Kovalivsky, Ivan [Kovalivs'kyj], b and d ? *General osaul (1648–59) and diplomat in the administrations of hetmans B. Khmelnytsky and I. Vyhovsky. He was Ukraine's signatory in the treaties concluded with Moldavia (1654), Transylvania (1656), and Sweden (at Korsun, 1657). In 1663 Kovalivsky was the captain of Hlynske company of the Lubni regiment. His subsequent fate is unknown.

Kovalivsky, Petro [Kovalivs'kyj], 1865–1942. Educator. He was a professor at the Kharkiv Institute of People's Education and a research associate of the Ukrainian Scientific Research Institute of Pedagogy. He wrote a number of studies on professional education, regional industry, labor, and the economy of Slobidska Ukraine. Kovalivsky founded the Kharkiv branch of the Prosvita society.

Kovalnytsky, Dmytro [Koval'nyc'kyj], b 1839 in Volhynia, d 1913. Church figure and historian. A graduate of the Volhynian Theological Seminary (1859) and the *Kiev Theological Academy (1868), he taught at the academy from 1869 to 1902 and served as rector (1898–1902). He encouraged the study of the academy's history and in 1901 initiated the publication of documents on the academy. He was ordained as the bishop of Chyhyryn and vicar of Kiev eparchy in 1898, as bishop of Tambov in 1902, as archbishop of Kazan in 1903, and finally, as archbishop of Kherson and Odessa in 1904.

Kovalov, Oleksander [Koval'ov], b 31 December 1915 in Rohachou, Mahiliou gubernia. Realist sculptor. He graduated in 1942 from the Kiev State Art Institute, where he had studied with B. Kratko. In the late 1940s and the 1950s he did portraits, producing busts of L. Revutsky, P. Tchaikovsky, V. Filatov, B. Khmelnytsky, T. Shevchenko, M. Rylsky, and B. Hmyria. Later he sculpted many monuments, including those to M. Lysenko in Kiev (1965), V. Filatov in Odessa (1966), I. Karpenko-Kary at the Khutir Nadiia Museum-Reserve in Kirovohrad oblast (1969), M. Rylsky in Romanivka, Zhytomyr oblast (1970), and A. Pushkin in Kiev (1964) and in New York (1970). D. Yanko has published a monograph on Kovalov and an album of his work (1977).

Kovalsky, Ivan [Koval's'kyj], b 1850 in Sobolivka, Haysyn county, Podilia gubernia, d 14 August 1878 in Odessa. Revolutionary populist. With other students who wanted to devote themselves to improving the lives of the peasants, he went 'among the people.' After serving a year in prison, he organized a populist circle in Odessa that advocated terrorism and worked primarily among the *Stundists and *Molokane sects. In 1877 he established an underground press and coauthored the proclamation 'The Voice of Honest Men.' He was arrested for armed resistance to the police and was hanged.

Kovalsky, Mykola [Koval's'kyj], b 1885 in Volhynia, d 28 December 1944 in Dachau, Germany. Political figure. Before the 1917 Revolution he was a member of the Revolutionary Ukrainian party and the Ukrainian Social Democratic Workers' party. He was elected to the Ukrainian Central Rada in 1917 and directed the UNR government's Department of State Control in 1918–20. An émigré in Warsaw from 1921, he headed the Ukrainian Central Committee there. Arrested by the Germans during the Second World War, he died in a concentration camp. A monograph on him was written by M. Sadovsky (New York-Toronto, 1954).

Kovalsky, Mykola [Koval's'kyj], b 24 October 1899 in Kiev, d 20 September 1976 in Courbon, Seine-et-Marne, France. Civic and political figure; publicist. As a member of the UNR diplomatic corps, he served in the mission in Istanbul and on the delegation to the peace negotiations in Brest-Litovsk. In 1924 he arrived in France with a contingent of UNR Army veterans and became active in the Ukrainian community in Paris. For many years he was secretary of the General Council of the Union of Ukrainian Emigré Organizations in France and of the Society of Former Combatants of the Ukrainian Republican Democratic Army in France, and president of the Circle of Ukrainians in Paris. He contributed articles and verses to Literaturno-naukovyi vistnyk and Tryzub. His publications include an essay on the political situation of Ukraine on the eve of the Second World War (1939) and a collection of verses on diverse themes titled Etiudy: Poezii (Etudes: Poems, 1978).

Kovalsky, Vasyl [Koval's'kyj, Vasyl'], 1826–1911. Jurist, civic leader, publicist. Starting as a judge in Pere-myshl, Kovalsky rose to become a member of the Supreme Court in Vienna. He was the first Ukrainian translator of the official gazette for legislative acts. In the 1850s he was an active publicist whose articles appeared in such papers as Zoria halyts'ka. He also prepared Ukrainian textbooks; for example Rus'ka chytanka dlia nyzshoi gimnazii (A Ruthenian Reader for the Lower Gymnasium, 1852). As deputy to the Galician Diet (1860s–1870s) and the Austrian Parliament (1880s), he defended the rights of the Ukrainian population in Austria-Hungary. He was a founding member of the *People's Home and the *Halytsko-Ruska Matytsia society in Lviv. Towards the end of his life he became a Russophile.

Kovalsky, Viktor [Koval's'kyj], b 28 January 1899 in Odessa. Biochemist and biogeochemist. A graduate of the university in Odessa (1921), he chaired the department of comparative and evolutionary biochemistry at the AN USSR Institute of Biochemistry (1933–44) and the biochemistry department of the Ukrainian Stomatological Institute in Kiev (1935–41). In 1946 he organized and became director of the Odessa Marine Ecology Laboratory. From 1954 he headed the biogeochemical laboratory at the Institute of Geological and Analytical Chemistry of the USSR Academy of Sciences. Much of Kovalsky's work has dealt with the biological importance of trace elements, their ecological recycling, and their use in evolutionary and climatic research.

Kovalyk, Ivan, b 16 November 1907 in Mlyny, Yavoriv county, Galicia. Linguist. Having studied linguistics at Lviv University under J. Janów and W. Taszycki, he became a docent at that university and later at the Drohobych Pedagogical Institute. He has published works on word derivation, phonetics, the language and style of Western Ukrainian writers (eg, the function of dialectisms in V. Stefanyk), 17th-century Ukrainian syntax, and the application of phonology to the history of Ukrainian.

Kovalyk, Serhii, b 25 October 1846 in the Poltava region, d 26 April 1926 in Minsk. Populist revolutionary. A graduate of Kiev University (1869), he advocated the idea of 'going to the people' and in 1872 spread revolutionary propaganda among the peasants of Mhlyn county in Chernihiv gubernia. Then he organized a number of anarchist circles in Kiev, Kharkiv, Moscow, and villages of the Volga region. He was arrested in 1874 and sentenced to 10 years of hard labor. Returning from exile in 1898, he did not resume political activity. His memoirs, 'Dvizhenie semidesiatykh godov po Bol'shomu protsesu' (The Movement of the Seventies according to the Great Trial), appeared in Byloe in 1928.

Kovanko-Kovankovsky, Petro [Kovan'ko-Kovankov's'kyj], b 10 July 1876, d ? Economist. A graduate of the Kiev University law school (1899), he taught financial law there from 1909. Receiving a PH D in 1919, he was a professor at the Kuban Polytechnical Institute in Katerynodar (now Krasnodar) in 1921–2. In the 1920s and 1930s he taught at the Kiev Agricultural Institute and was an associate of the VUAN Commission for the Study of Financial Matters; he edited and contributed to no. 5 of the commission's Trudy (1929), which was devoted to Kiev's economy. A wartime refugee, he was a consultant on Soviet finance at Breslau University in 1942–5. After the war he was an associate of the Institute for the Study of the USSR in Munich and a member of the Ukrainian Free Academy of Sciences (from 1948). He wrote several monographs in Russian on such subjects as peasant emancipation and compulsory redemption payments in Russia (1912), the 1861 reform and its financial consequences (1914), the productive forces of Ukraine (1922), the budgets of zemstvos and cities in Russia in 1912–14 (1922), and the finances of the USSR during the Second World War (1951) and after it (1954). He also wrote a commerce textbook (7 edns, 1911–19) and a study of Kiev's economy in the last 100 years, which perished while being typeset in Germany in 1945.

Kovbasiuk, Mykola [Kovbasjuk], b 1817 in Verbizh near Kolomyia (now Verkhni Verbizh, in Ivano-Frankivske oblast), d 1889. Civic leader in Galicia, of peasant background. In the 1860s and 1870s Kovbasiuk was elected to the Galician Diet, and in 1861 to the Austrian Parliament. He was a tireless defender of the Western Ukrainian peasantry in the Austrian Empire, speaking out on economic issues, for village self-government and for the use of Ukrainian as the language of instruction in eastern Galicia and in the Diet.

Kovbel (Kowbell), Semen [Kovbel'], b 25 January 1877 in Borshchiv, Galicia, d 3 January 1966 in Toronto. Ukrainian-Canadian playwright, poet, prosaist, and community figure. Emigrating to Montreal in 1909, Kovbel settled in Winnipeg during the First World War and became one of the leading organizers of the Ukrainian People's Home there. His primary literary interest, and the genre in which he was most successful, was drama. All of his 17 plays were staged, but only 6 were published: Divochi mrii (A Maiden's Daydreams, 1920), Virna sestra – to zoloto (A Faithful Sister Is a Treasure, 1938), Ukrainizatsiia (Ukrainization, 1938), Delegatsiia do raiu (A Delegation to Paradise, 1938), Povisyvsia (He Hanged Himself, 1938), and Parubochi mrii (A Bachelor's Daydreams, 1942). Four of his unpublished plays were adaptations of B. Lepky's historical novels. His lyrical and political poems and short stories appeared in Ukrainian-Canadian newspapers and almanacs.

Kovchek (The Ark). A bilingual (Ukrainian-English) Catholic religious and educational monthly published from 1946 to 1956 in Stamford, Connecticut.

Kovel [Kovel']. II-5. City (1984 pop 61,000) and raion center in Volhynia oblast, situated in Polisia on the Turiiia River. First mentioned in 1310, in 1518 it was granted the rights of Magdeburg law. It became a county town of Volhynia vicegerency in 1795 and of Volhynia gubernia in 1797. In 1919 the Volhynian Division of the UNR Army fought the Polish army there. From 1921 to 1939 Kovel was under Polish rule. The city is an important railway junction. Among its industries are agricultural-machinery, reinforced-concrete, and food- and feed-processing plants. Its architectural monuments – the wooden Annunciation Cathedral (built in 1505) and the railway station (1905, architect O. Verbytsky) – were damaged during the Second World War.

Kovenko, Mykhailo, b and d ? Political figure. An engineer, he was an active participant in the Ukrainian struggle for independence of 1917–20 as a member of the Ukrainian Social Democratic Workers' party and then the Ukrainian Party of Socialists-Independentists. In 1917 he organized a regiment of *Free Cossacks from among Kiev's workers, and in January 1918 he commanded the UNR forces defending Kiev during the Bolshevik uprising and offensive. Under the UNR Directory he headed the Supreme Investigative Commission to Fight Counterrevolution. In the fall of 1919 he edited the newspaper Ukraina in Kamianets-Podilskyi. From 1920 he lived in Rumania.

Koverko, Andrii, b 28 August 1893 in Ostriv, Lviv county, Galicia, d 19 July 1967 in Kishinev, Moldavian SSR. Sculptor. A graduate of the Kolomyia Industrial Design School (1914), he did mostly monumental sculptures in wood. In 1926–7 he carved the altar and iconostasis of the Church of the Holy Spirit at the Greek Catholic Theological Seminary in Lviv and the iconostasis of the village church in Sokal. The T. Shevchenko monument in Vynnyky (1924) and the A. Sheptytsky monument at the Greek Catholic Theological Seminary in Lviv were done by Koverko. In the 1920s and 1930s he carved many bas-relief portraits in wood, including portraits of I. Franko, I. Svientsinsky, M. Vorony, I. Trush, and O. Novakivsky. Until 1939 he took part in the exhibitions organized by the Circle of Promoters of Ukrainian Art and by the Association of Independent Ukrainian Artists in Lviv.

Kovhaniuk, Stepan [Kovhanjuk], b 26 April 1902 in Onopriivka, Uman county, Kiev gubernia, d 26 August 1982 in Odessa. Writer and translator. In the 1920s he worked as a teacher and editor in Kharkiv and Odessa. He is the author of the story collection Manevry (Maneuvers, 1930), many Ukrainian translations of Polish and Russian literature, and the work Praktyka perekladu (The Practice of Translation, 1968).

Kovinka, Oleksander [Kovin'ka], b 14 January 1900 in Ploske, Poltava gubernia, d 25 July 1985 in Poltava. Writer of humorous and satiric, often autobiographical, prose. His first collection of stories, Industrial'na tekhnika (Industrial Technology), appeared in 1929. He did not publish during the Stalinist period. Between 1958 and 1980, 30 collections of his stories were published, including a two-volume edition of his selected works (1980).

Kovner, Savelii, b February 1837 in Vilnius, Lithuania, d 22 September 1896 in Kiev. Physician and historian of medicine. A graduate of Kiev University (1865), from 1868 to 1890 he worked as a physician, mostly in Nizhen. He knew several ancient languages and studied original Oriental, Greek, Roman, and Arabic sources on medicine. He wrote a number of works on the history of medicine, including Istoriia meditsyny (A History of Medicine, 3 vols, 1878–88) and Istoriia srednevekovoï meditsyny (A History of Medieval Medicine, 2 vols, 1893, 1897).

Kovnir, Stepan, b 1695 in Hvizdiv, Kiev county, Kiev gubernia, d 1786 in Kiev. Master builder. For over 60 years he worked under various architects on building projects of the Kievan Cave Monastery – the so-called Kovnir building (1744–5) and the belfries of the Near (1759–63) and Far (1754–61) Caves (designed by I. Hryhorovych-Barsky) – on the belfry of the Kiev Epiphany Brotherhood Monastery (1756–9), on the Klov Palace in Kiev (1752–6, designed by P. Neelov), on the church and belfry in Vasylkiv (1756–9), and on the Trinity Church of the Kytaieva Hermitage near Kiev (1763–7). With their elaborate plaster facades Kovnir's buildings are fine examples of the Ukrainian baroque style.

Stepan Kovnir: belfry at the Far Caves of the Kievan Cave Monastery (1754–61)

Kovpak, Sydir, b 13 May 1887 in Kotelva, Bohodukhiv county, Kharkiv gubernia, d 11 December 1967 in Kiev. Prominent Soviet partisan commander during the Second World War. He commanded a Communist partisan unit fighting Ukrainian nationalist forces during 1918–19 and then served as a Red Army political commissar. From 1926 to 1941 he worked in Party administration in Sumy oblast. In 1941 Kovpak organized a partisan unit in the Putyvl area, Sumy oblast. It quickly grew in size and importance, recruiting mostly Party and government officials and Russian peasants from the region. In 1942 the unit raided west through Polisia and conducted acts of sabotage to disrupt German supply lines. In June 1943 during a raid through Galicia to the Carpathian mountains, the detachment (numbering some 1,600 partisans) was decimated in battles with German units and later harassed by the UPA. Remnants returned to Polisia, where Kovpak reactivated his unit by mobilizing local inhabitants. For his exploits he was promoted to brigadier general and his unit was expanded to division size and named after him. In 1946 Kovpak became defense minister of the Ukrainian SSR, and from 1947 to 1967 he served as deputy chairman of the Presidium of the Supreme Soviet of the Ukrainian SSR and as a member of the CC CPSU. His memoirs, Vid Putyvlia do Karpat (From Putyvl to the Carpathians), were first published in 1946.

P. Sodal

Kovshevych, Roman [Kovševyč], b 22 July 1873 in Jarosław, Galicia, d 3 March 1932 in Lviv. Lawyer, jurist, and educator. A graduate of Lviv University (LL D 1898), he served as a court official and continued to study canon law. During the war he fought in the ranks of the Ukrainian Sich Rifleman, and after the war he served as professor and dean of the law department at Lviv (Underground) Ukrainian University. In 1930 Kovshevych was invited by Metropolitan A. Sheptytsky to teach canon law at the Greek Catholic Theological Academy in Lviv. His publications include 'De primis litibus ex antiquae Poloniae dioecesisibus apud Romanam Rotam iudicatis' and 'De primis litibus Ucrainorum apud Romanam Curiam iudicatis' (in Bohosloviia, 7 [1929]).

Kovtun, Valerii, b 22 October 1944 in Yasynuvata, Staline oblast. Ballet dancer. A graduate of the Kiev Choreography School (1965), he danced with the Kharkiv Theater of Opera and Ballet and in 1968 became a soloist at the Kiev Theater of Opera and Ballet. He has appeared in such roles as Lukash in M. Skorulsky's The Forest Song, Don Juan in V. Hubarenko's The Stone Master, Daphnis and the Youth in M. Ravel's Daphnis et Chloé and Boléro, and Romeo in S. Prokofiev's Romeo and Juliet. He has won recognition at international ballet competitions: first prize at Varna, Bulgaria, in 1970, and the Nijinsky Prize in Paris in 1977.

Kovui [Kovuji] (also: Kouui). Nomadic Turkic tribes living on the southeastern borders of Kievan Rus'. In the ancient chronicles the Kovui are described as part of the *Chorni Klobuky people. It is possible that the tribes belonged to the *Cumans who settled in Rus'. The chronicles first mention the Kovui in the year 1151 in connection with their support of the Kievan prince Viacheslav Volodymyrovych's struggle with the Olhovych dynasty. Further mention is made of the Kovui for the years 1162, 1170, and 1185. The epic **Slovo o polku Ihorevi* refers to their participation in the campaign of Olstyn Oleksych and the Siverian princes against the Cumans in 1185.

Pavlo Kovzhun: cover for I. Franko's Iz dnev zhurby

Kovzhun, Pavlo [Kovžun], b 3 October 1896 in Kostushky, Ovruch county, Volhynia gubernia, d 15 May 1939 in Lviv. Noted graphic artist, painter, and art scholar. His graphic works began to appear in Kiev journals while he was still a student at the Kiev Art School. By 1914 his work began to attract wide attention. Sent to the front in 1915, at the outbreak of the 1917 Revolution he joined the Ukrainian movement in the armed forces and edited Ukrainian military newspapers, such as Ukraïna, Holos chasu, and Volia. During the UNR period he helped to set up the Grunt publishing house, served as secretary of Universal'nyi zhurnal, and belonged to the *Muzahet artistic and literary alliance in Kiev. Finding refuge in Poland with the remnants of the UNR Army, in 1922 Kovzhun settled in Lviv, where he became a leading figure in the artistic community. With V. Sichynsky, P. Kholodny, S. Tymoshenko, and M. Holubets, he founded the Circle of Promoters of Ukrainian Art (HDUM), and in 1931 helped organize the Association of Independent Ukrainian Artists (ANUM), whose journal he edited (1932–6). His graphic work was displayed at exhibitions in Lviv, Warsaw, Prague, Brussels, Berlin, Rome, and Naples, and had a major impact on book graphics in Western Ukraine. Kovzhun ranks with Yu. *Narbut as the leading Ukrainian graphic artist of the 20th century. He was thoroughly modern and yet closely bound to Ukrainian artistic traditions. His early work was influenced by symbolism, futurism, and to some extent by Narbut, but after 1924 he developed his own style, which was at first expressionistic and then constructivist. Kovzhun was also a noted muralist: with M. Osinchuk he painted a number of churches in Ozirna, Sokal, Zashkiv, Dolyna, Mykleshiv, Kalush, and Stoianiv in a modernized neo-Byzantine style. Kovzhun was a tireless organizer of exhibitions, and an editor and writer. He wrote several monographs about contemporary artists, such as M. Hlushchenko, O. Hryshchenko, and L. Gets, and numerous articles on art. He edited a collection of bookplates, Ekslibris: Zbirnyk Asotsiatsii nezalezhnykh ukrains'kykh mysttsiv (Bookplates: A Collection of the Association of Independent Ukrainian Artists, 1932), in which his own work appeared.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Fediuk, M. Hrafika P. Kovzhuna (Lviv 1924)
 Sichyns'kyi, V. 'Knyzhna hrafika Pavla Kovzhuna,' Bibliohrafichni visti, 2 (1927)
 Holubets', M. Pavlo Kovzhun (Lviv 1939)
 Masjutin, W. 'Pavlo Kowzun,' Gebrauchsgraphik, 9 (1939)
 Hordyns'kyi, S. Pavlo Kovzhun (Lviv 1944)

S. Hordynsky

Kowalchuk, John [Koval'čuk], b 30 August 1921 in Goodeve, Saskatchewan. Farmer and politician. Educated at the University of Saskatchewan, Kowalchuk served as reeve of Stanley Municipality in 1965–6. He was elected to the Saskatchewan legislature in 1967 as a New Democratic Party member from the constituency of Melville. Re-elected in 1971, 1975, and 1978, he served as minister of tourism and renewable resources in 1974–5.

Koza (Goat). A traditional mimetic folk play that was acted out during the Christmas cycle by young men, who visited all the houses in a village. The Goat – a youth wearing an inverted sheepskin coat and a mask resembling a goat's head – entered a house, bowed to the head of the household, and performed a ritual dance to bring about an abundant harvest. The other youths sang an accompanying ditty: 'De Koza khodyt', tam zhyto rodyt', de Koza tup-tup, tam zhyta sim kup' (Where the Goat goes, there wheat grows; where the Goat stamps its feet, there are seven sheaves of wheat). A dramatization of a goat being pursued by hunters and wolves, killed, and gutted followed. At the singers' call 'Bud', Kozo, zhyva!'

(Come alive, Goat!) the Goat rose from the dead and returned to its 'field,' which then came to life (as acted out by the chorus). The game ended with the Goat delivering a wish: 'Shchob ts'omu hospodariu i korovky buly nevrochlyvii i molochlyvii, i oves – samosii, i psheynytsia – sochevytsia' (May this farmer's cattle be unbedeviled and full of milk, and may his oats sow themselves and his wheat be of the best sort). In the Hutsul region the Goat was 'led around' by children, who 'sowed' grain kernels throughout the house; the Goat's ears were made of grain spikes. Occasionally, the Goat was accompanied by others disguised as the Old Man, the Gypsy, Malanka (the New Year's Eve maiden), the Bear, and other characters. The original purpose of Koza was the same as that of carols: to invoke a successful year for the peasant household. With time, belief in its magical function disappeared, and the game became simply a form of entertainment in the repertoires of Christmas parties.

M. Hnatiukivsky

Kozacha Lopan [Kožača Lopan']. III-17. Town smt (1979 pop 8,800) on the Lopan River in Derkachi raion, Kharkiv oblast. It was founded in the 17th century. An important battle took place here at the end of 1918, in which UNR forces were defeated, enabling the Red Army to take over the Kharkiv region.

Hryhorii Kozachenko

Kozachenko, Hryhorii [Kožačenko, Hryhorij], b 2 January 1901 in Trushky, Vasylykiv county, Kiev gubernia, d 1 June 1970 in Kharkiv. Character actor of L. *Kurbas's school. On completing his training at the drama studio of the Berezil theater (1924), he acted with *Berezil and its successor, the Kharkiv Ukrainian Drama Theater. His repertoire included such roles as Omelko in M. Kropyvnytsky's Dai sertsiu voliu, zavede v nevoliu (Give the Heart Freedom and It Will Lead You into Slavery), Knur in P. Myrny's Lymeriwna (The Saddler's Daughter), Kottenko in M. Starytsky's Talan (Destiny), Sylvester the monk in I. Kocherha's Jaroslav Mudryi (Jaroslav the Wise), and Kobza the boatswain in O. Korniiuk's Zahybel' eskadry (The Destruction of a Squadron).

Kozachenko, Vasyl [Kožačenko, Vasyli'], b 25 March 1913 in Novoarkhanhelske, Kherson gubernia. Stalinist writer and Party bureaucrat. In the 1960s and 1970s he was the Party's watchdog in literature and launched the campaigns against the literary critics I. Dziuba, Ye. Sverstiuk, and I. Svitlychny; O. Honchar's novel Sobor (The Cathedral); and such writers as V. Drozd, V. Maniak, R. Andriashyk, I. Chendei, O. Berdnyk, and I. Bilyk. In 1973–8 he was the first secretary of the Writer's Union of Ukraine. His first novella, Pegas (Pegasus), appeared in 1938. Since that time he has published over 30 books of ideological prose, publicism, and literary criticism. A four-volume edition of his selected works was published in 1979–80.

Averkii Kozachkivsky: Christ Taken down from the Cross (1726)

Kozachkivsky, Averkii [Kozachkivs'kyj, Averkij], b and d ? Noted Kiev engraver of the early 18th century. From 1721 to 1737 he did over 40 engravings – copper engravings, etchings, and mezzotint – most for the Kievan Cave Monastery Printing House. The better-known ones are The Crucifixion (mezzotint), The Interment of Jesus Christ, King David, two views of the Kievan Cave Monastery, the illustrations to the psalter with explanations of 1728, illustrations to the New Testament with a psalter of 1732, and the frontispiece to the Apostol of 1722.

Kozachkivsky, Domian [Kozachkivs'kyj, Domjan], b 13 November 1896 in Lysycha, Poltava county, Poltava gubernia, d 17 March 1967 in Lviv. Comic and character actor and stage director. Making his debut on the stage in 1914 with L. Leonidov's and P. Kahanets's Ukrainian troupe, he became stage director at the Poltava Ukrainian Drama Society (1915–17). After the Revolution he worked in the Franko Ukrainian Drama Theater in Kharkiv, the Kiev Ukrainian Drama Theater, the Kharkiv Theater of the Revolution (1934–9), the Sumy Ukrainian Music and Drama Theater (artistic director, 1939–44), the Lviv Theater of Musical Comedy (1945–50), and the Lviv Ukrainian Drama Theater (1957–67). His repertoire included such roles as Holokhvosty in M. Starytsky's Za dvoma zaitsiamy (After Two Hares), Podkolesin in N. Gogol's Zhenit'ba (Marriage), Bulava in I. Mykytenko's Solo na fleiti (Flute Solo), and Dmytro in his Marusia Shurai, Peterson in Ya. Halan's Pid zolotym orlom (Under the Golden Eagle), and the title role in J. Molière's Tartuffe.

Kozachkovsky, Andrii [Kozachkovs'kyj, Andrij], b 16 August 1812 in Pereiaslav (now Pereiaslav-Khmelnyskyi, Kiev oblast), d 20 August 1889 in Pereiaslav. Physician and friend of T. Shevchenko. Kozachkovsky completed his studies in St Petersburg in 1835. From 1842 he was a county physician in Kursk, and from January 1844 a doctor and lecturer in medicine at the Pereiaslav seminary. Shevchenko visited Kozachkovsky in Pereiaslav in August 1845, and from October 1845 lived in his home intermittently until the beginning of January 1846. There he wrote the poems 'Naimychka' (The Servant-Girl), 'Zapovit' (Testament), and 'Kavkaz' (The Caucasus), and began writing 'Ieretyk' (The Heretic). Kozachkovsky corresponded with Shevchenko while the poet was in exile and gave him financial help. He published valuable memoirs about Shevchenko in Kievskii telegraf (1875; reprinted in T.G. Shevchenko v vospominanniakh sovremennikov [T.H. Shevchenko in the Reminiscences of His Contemporaries, 1962]). Kozachkovsky's home in Pereiaslav-Khmelnyskyi is now a historical museum.

Kozachok (Little Cossack). A folk dance for male-female pairs, which emerged among the Cossacks in the 16th century; hence its name. In the 17th and 18th centuries it was performed throughout Ukraine and also in the noble courts of Poland, Hungary, Russia, France, and other countries. The dance has a rapid to very rapid tempo and is at times accompanied by a contrasting slow, lyrical, musical introduction. The basic moves are bihunok, dorizhka, vykhyliasnyk, virovochka, prystup, prypadania, and (for males only) prysiadka. Their dynamic interplay in various formations produces a sophisticated and complex choreographic image. The main weight falls on the women's parts, and competitions between groups of dancers and individuals frequently occur in the dance. The accompanying music is rhythmic and is played at 2/4 time. Kozachok melodies were used in Polish operas and ballets of the 18th century and by M. Arkas, L. Revutsky, R. Simovych, A. Kolomyiets, S. Liudkevych, V. Kyreiko, and other Ukrainian composers.

Kozachynsky, Mykhail (Manuil) [Kozachyns'kyj, Myxajil], b 1699 in Yampil, Podilia, d 27 August 1755 in Slutsk, Belorussia. Pedagogue and writer. After graduating from the Kievan Mohyla Academy in 1733, he was a teacher and prefect in Karlovac, Croatia. In 1737 he entered the Vydubychi Monastery in Kiev, and from 1739 to 1746 he was a prefect and lecturer at the Kievan Mohyla Academy. From 1748 he was the archimandrite of

1

2

3

4

5

6

7

8

ART 1) O. Hryshchenko: Fishes (oil, 1939; private collection). 2) V. Khmeliuk: Flowers (oil; private collection). 3) F. Krychevsky: The Family (tempera, 1925–7; Kiev Museum of Ukrainian Art). 4) F. Humeniuk: County Fair (watercolor; private collection). 5) P. Kholodny, Jr: Girl with Scarf (tempera; courtesy of G. Saj). 6) E. Kozak: Hutsul Brothers (acrylic). 7) N. Husar: Deepest Sympathy (acrylic, 1986). 8) A. Kolomayets: Bandura Player (oil; courtesy of G. and M. Honcharenko).

This page intentionally left blank

the Slutsk Monastery. He wrote panegyric poetry, two plays – about the fall of the Serbian Kingdom (1733; pub, 1798) and Marcus Aurelius Antoninus (1745) – and a disputation on Aristotelean philosophy (1745).

Edvard Kozak

Kozak, Edvard (pseud: ЕКО, Mamai, Hryts Zozulia, Maik Chichka, Avenir Lushniak, Kosy), b 26 January 1902 in Hirne, Stryi county, Galicia. Caricaturist, illustrator, and painter; feuilletonist, satirist, and editor. He studied at the Vienna Art School (1917) and O. *Novakivsky's art school in Lviv (1926), illustrated and edited the satirical periodicals Zyz (1926–33) and Komar (1933–9) in Lviv, and illustrated the children's magazines Svit dytyny, Dzvinochok (1931–9), and Iuni druzi (1933–4) and the books published by I. *Tyktor. At the same time, he painted and participated in the exhibitions of the Association of Independent Ukrainian Artists (1933–6) in Lviv. Emigrating to Germany at the end of the Second World War, he founded the humor magazine **Lys Mykyta* (1948) and headed the Ukrainian Association of Artists (USOM). In 1949 he settled in the United States, where he worked in animated television films, receiving an award for his work from the National Educational Association in 1957. He resumed publishing Lys Mykyta in 1951, and exhibited his paintings in Detroit, Chicago, Buffalo, Toronto, Edmonton, and Hunter (New York). For a time he illustrated the children's magazine Veselka.

Kozak is best known for his satirical drawings and writings, which amount to a running commentary on political and social developments in the Ukrainian community for over half a century. His caricatures of J. Stalin, which were reprinted in the German, French, Italian, English, Dutch, Polish, and Yugoslavian press, are recognized classics in the field. Many of his paintings deal with folk motifs and display a light-hearted humor and expressive colors; eg, The Market, Sich, Old Inn, and Village. He has published two albums of drawings with witty captions: Selo (The Village, 1949) and ЕКО (1949). As a satirical writer, he has created the incisive peasant philosopher Hryts Zozulia, under whose name he has published two collections of humorous sketches: Hryts' Zozulia (1973) and Na khlops'kyi rozum Hrytsia Zozuli (According to Hryts Zozulia's Common Sense, 1982). He has written numerous feuilletons and verses under different pen names. Some of the verses are printed in the collection Virshi ironichni, satyrychni i komichni (Ironic, Satiric, and Comic Verses, 1959).

S. Hordynsky

Yurii Kozak: St George (oil)

Kozak, George (Yurii), b 14 December 1933 in Stryi, Galicia. Painter and sculptor; son of E. *Kozak. Having studied at the Center for Creative Studies in Detroit, he works as an industrial sculptor for General Motors Corp. and as a freelance painter in oil and acrylic. He is also a master of stained glass and mosaics. His paintings often deal with religious themes, and have been awarded first prize at several exhibitions of religious art. His monumental painting of Ukraine's baptism is in the collection of the Ukrainian Canadian Art Foundation in Toronto.

Kozak, Ivan, b 8 August 1891 in Hichva, Lisko county, Galicia, d 27 December 1978 in New York. Civic and military figure; by profession a lawyer. After studying law at Lviv, Prague, and Cracow universities he practiced law in Uhniv, Galicia. During the First World War he served in the Austrian infantry and, having been wounded, was reassigned to the gendarmerie. In 1918–20 he served in the Ukrainian Galician Army (UHA) with the rank of captain, organizing and then commanding its gendarmerie. Joining the UNR Army in 1920, he served as staff commander of its Kherson Division. With A. Kravs's group he retreated to Czechoslovakia, where he was interned and was appointed commander of the Josefsov internment camp (1923–6). Leaving Galicia after the Second World War, he immigrated in 1949 to the United States, where he helped found the United Ukrainian War Veterans in America and served as its vice-president. He chaired the committee that erected the T. Shevchenko monument in Washington, DC. Kozak wrote some articles on military subjects and recollections.

Yarema Kozak: Forest Fantasy (acrylic)

Kozak, Jerome (Yarema), b 17 April 1941 in Cracow, Poland. Expressionist painter; son of E. *Kozak. A graduate of Wayne State University in Detroit (MA 1966, MFA 1971), he specializes in oils and acrylics. His work, which has been exhibited at over 30 group and one-man shows, is characterized by vibrant colors.

Kozak, Serhii, b 14 March 1921 in Kryvyn near Slavuta, Volhynia gubernia. Baritone singer and composer. Upon graduating from the Moscow Conservatory in 1950, he joined the Kiev Theater of Opera and Ballet as a soloist. His repertoire consists of over 60 roles, including Ostap in M. Lysenko's Taras Bulba, the title roles in K. Dankevych's Bohdan Khmelnytsky and P. Tchaikovsky's Eugene Onegin, Martyn in H. Maiboroda's Mylana and Horbenko in his Arsenal, and Telramund in R. Wagner's Lohengrin. He has composed numerous songs and choral works, and has written books on M. Hryshko and H. Verovka.

Kozak, Stepan, b 11 July 1937 in Verbytsia, Tomaszów county, Kholm region. Literary historian. He studied at Kiev University (1957–62, 1964–7) and received a candidate of sciences degree there. He then worked as a research associate of the Institute of Slavic Studies of the Polish Academy of Sciences. In 1970–5 he was the scholarly secretary of the journal Slavia Orientalis. For over a decade he has taught Ukrainian literature at Warsaw University. In 1982 he was appointed head of the Chair of Comparative Slavic Literature at Warsaw University. He is the author of over 100 articles and reviews on 19th- and 20th-century Ukrainian literature and a monograph based on his doctoral dissertation, U źródeł romantyzmu i nowożytnej myśli społecznej na Ukrainie (At the Sources of Romanticism and Modern Social Thought in Ukraine, 1978). He has also coedited Polish books on the history of Ukrainian-Polish literary relations (1974) and the Napoleonic epoch and the Slavs (1982) and edited books of O. Dovzhenko's (1976) and Lesia Ukrainka's (1982) selected works in Polish translation. An active member of the Ukrainian Social and Cultural Society in Poland, he has contributed over 50 articles to its newspaper Nashe slovo.

Kozak, Yevhen, b 21 December 1857 in Sloboda-Banyliv, Vashkivtsi county, Bukovyna, d 5 September 1933 in Chernivtsi. Slavacist. He studied theology and philology at Chernivtsi and Vienna (with V. Jagić) universities before receiving his PhD from Chernivtsi in 1891 for his dissertation on the 'Chernivtsi Collection of 1359.' He was a professor of Old Church Slavonic language and literature in the theological faculty of Chernivtsi University (1899–1919). His publications include Die Inschriften aus der Bukovina ... (1903), a study of old manuscripts found in the Putna monastery, and works on the history of the Orthodox church in Bukovyna. Kozak argued that Ukrainians were autochthonous in Bukovyna, and in church affairs opposed the Rumanianization of Bukovynian Orthodox eparchies in the interwar period.

Kozak, Yevhen, b 22 April 1907 in Lviv. Conductor, composer, and educator. As a student of the Polish Music Society Conservatory and the Lysenko Higher Institute of Music in Lviv, he organized a popular male quartet, for which he arranged and composed tunes. In 1939 he was appointed choir conductor and musical director of Lviv Radio. After the war he taught at the Lviv Music School (1951–5), the Lviv Pedagogical Institute (1956–9), and the Lviv Conservatory. He has composed many choral works, such as Under Ukraine's Sky, and arranged numerous Ukrainian folk songs, some of which belong to the cycle A Garland of Lemko Songs. He has written scores for such plays as I. Franko's Uchytel' (The Teacher).

Kozak-Mamai

Kozak-Mamai (the Cossack Mamai). The most popular figure in Ukrainian folk painting of the 17th–20th centuries. Paintings of Kozak-Mamai were done in various media (mostly in oil and tempera) on wood, canvas, paper, walls of peasant houses, dishes, and ceramic tiles. He is portrayed as a serene and likable Cossack smoking a pipe and playing a bandura while squatting in an Oriental manner. His horse stands saddled alongside tied to his spear, and his weapons hang on a nearby tree. Often, along the bottom or the sides of the painting, there is a versified account of Cossack life and feats; usually it is taken from the monolog of the Cossack character in the **vertep* play. Most paintings were done by wandering icon painters or by students (usually of the Kiev Theological Academy) and sold at markets. They were then copied by various peasant artists, who would add details from local life to their versions. Kozak-Mamai came to represent the generalized, popular image of the Ukrainian Cossacks, particularly after the destruction of the Zaporozhian Sich and the Russian conquest of most of Ukraine. He also became a theme in literature, drama, and fine art (eg, in the works of M. Kulish, I. Repin, Yu. Narbut, and M. Butovych). There are Kozak-Mamai paintings in many Ukrainian museums; the largest collections are in the Kiev Museum of Ukrainian Art, the Kiev Museum of Ukrainian Decorative Folk Art, the Dnipropetrovske Art Museum (the D. Yavornytsky collection), and the private museum of I. Honchar in Kiev. A book about Kozak-Mamai in Ukrainian folk art, by P. Biletsky, was published in Lviv in 1960.

M. Hnatiukivsky

Kozakovsky, Yurii [Kozakovs'kyj, Jurij], b 16 February 1902 in Kharkiv, d 3 September 1980 in Chernivtsi. Actor specializing in heroic and character roles. He worked in the Kiev Ukrainian Drama Theater (1923–31), the Kharkiv Theater of the Revolution (1933–40), and the Chernivtsi Oblast Ukrainian Music and Drama Theater (artistic director in 1959–65). His repertoire included such roles as Andronati in an adaptation of O. Kobylianska's V nedilii rano zillia kopala (On Sunday Morn She Gathered Herbs), Hurman in I. Franko's Ukradene shchastia (Stolen Happiness), Iago in W. Shakespeare's Othello, and the title role in V. Hugo's Angelo, tyran de Padoue.

Kozatski Mohyly Museum and Preserve. A historic site and museum on Zhuravlykha Island on the river Styr near the village of Pliasheva, Rivne oblast, established in 1966. Located on the grounds of the preserve is the Church of the Holy Protectress, designed by V. Maksimov, with frescoes by I. Izhakevych. The church was built in 1912–14 with money donated by the local population. It is dedicated to the memory of the more than 10,000 Cossacks who died in the Battle of *Berestechko (1651) and located on a mass grave of Cossacks (from which the entire preserve takes its name). Also located on the site are the Kozatski Mohyly Pliasheva Ethnographic Museum, which houses numerous artifacts from the Cossack period, and the wooden Church of St Michael (1650), which was moved from the village of Ostriv. B. Khmelnytsky is said to have prayed in this church before going to battle against the Poles. Throughout the centuries, the local villagers staged annual commemorations of the Cossack struggle against social and national oppression at the mass graves on the site, and now the entire complex is a major tourist attraction.

Kozelets [Kozelec']. III-12. Town smt (1983 pop 8,400) and raion center in Chernihiv oblast. First mentioned in 1098, it was a fortified town in Kievan Rus'. In 1656 it was granted the rights of Magdeburg law. It was a company town in the Pereiaslav (1648–67) and Kiev (1667–1782) regiments, and from 1708 served as the administrative center of the latter. It then was a county town in Kiev vicegerency (1782–97) and Little Russia (1797–1802) and Chernihiv (1802–1917) gubernias. It has a flax-processing plant, food and feed industry, and a veterinary tekhnikum. Several of the town's architectural monuments have been preserved: the baroque Cathedral of the Nativity of the Mother of God (designed by V. Rastrelli and built by A. Kvasov and I. Hryhorovych-Barsky in 1752–63) with a finely engraved bronze iconostasis, the town hall (designed and built by A. Kvasov in 1756–60), and the Darahan building.

Kozelsky, Yakiv [Kozel's'kyj, Jakiv], b ca 1729 in Keleberda, Kaniv county, Kiev gubernia, d after 1795 in Krutyi Bereh, Lubni county, Poltava gubernia. Enlightenment thinker. Having studied at the Kievan Mohyla Academy (1744–50) and the Academic University of the St Petersburg Academy of Sciences (1751–7), he taught at the St Petersburg artillery and engineering schools and then served as a secretary of the Senate (1767–70). From 1770 to 1778 he sat on the Little Russian Collegium in Hlukhiv. Kozelsky wrote handbooks on mathematics, mechanics, military science, and economics. Influenced by J. Rousseau's ideas of the social contract and natural law, he criticized the existing system of serfdom. In his major work Filosoficheskie predlozheniia (Philosophical Propositions, 1768) he rejected religious dogma and stressed the practical, moral function of philosophy.

Kozeratsky, Vasyl [Kozerac'kyj, Vasyli'], b 13 January 1906 in Hruzke, Balta county, Podilia gubernia, d 29 December 1982 in Kiev. Singer (dramatic tenor). Graduating from the Odessa Music and Drama Institute in 1931, he appeared in musical-comedy theaters in Odessa, Kiev, and Dnipropetrovske. In 1951 he joined the Kiev Theater of Opera and Ballet as a soloist, and in 1963 he turned to teaching. From 1965 he taught at the Kiev Conservatory. His repertoire included such parts as Andrii in M. Lysenko's Taras Bulba, Bohun in K. Dankevych's Bohdan Khmelnytsky, Vasyl in H. Maiboroda's My-lana, and Herman in P. Tchaikovsky's The Queen of Spades.

Kozhevnykov, Serhii [Kozhevnykov, Serhij], b 23 September 1906 in Katerynoslav (now Dnipropetrovske). Specialist in mechanics; corresponding member of the AN URSR since 1951. After graduating from the Moscow Industrial Pedagogical Institute, he worked at various institutes in Moscow, Dnipropetrovske, and Kiev. In 1970 he became chairman of a department at the AN URSR Institute of Mechanics. His publications deal with the mechanization and automatization of mining operations and the dynamics of machines.

Kozhukhar, Volodymyr [Kozuxar], b 16 March 1941 in Vinnytsia. Conductor and educator. Upon graduating from the Kiev Conservatory in 1963, he was appointed conductor of the Symphony Orchestra of the Ukrainian SSR, and in 1973 conductor of the Kiev Theater of Opera and Ballet as well. Since 1977 he has served as chief conductor of the Moscow Music Theater. His repertoire includes F. Haydn, W.A. Mozart, L. Beethoven, C. Debussy, G. Gershwin, P. Tchaikovsky, S. Prokofiev, and D. Shostakovich. He has recorded systematically the works of such Ukrainian composers as L. Revutsky, B. Liatoshynsky, H. Maiboroda, A. Shtoharenko, L. Kolodub, V. Hubarenko, and M. Skoryk. He taught opera and orchestra conducting at the Kiev Conservatory (1965–77) and then held the chair of orchestra conducting at the Gnesin Music and Pedagogy Institute in Moscow.

Kozhukhivka [Kozuxivka]. III-11. A village in Vasylykiv raion southwest of Kiev. Battles took place there between the Sich Riflemen and the Russian Volunteer Army (November 1918) and the Red Army (February 1919), and between the Ukrainian Galician Army and the Red Army (August 1919).

Kozhukhov [Kožuxov]. Soviet concentration camp near Moscow. In spring 1920 approximately 250 officers and soldiers of the Ukrainian Galician Army were interned there, among them Gen O. Mykytka and Gen H. Tsirits. At the beginning of July 1920, 217 officers were deported, probably to Arkhangelsk. None were ever heard from again.

Koziak, Brother Methodius, [Kozjak], b 7 May 1904 in Leeshore, Alberta, d 4 April 1981 in Yorkton, Saskatchewan. Educator. Educated at St Joseph's College in Yorkton, Koziak joined the Order of Christian Brothers in 1923 and served as principal of St Joseph's College for 35 years. While chairman of the Ukrainian Curriculum Committee, he helped to make Ukrainian an accredited language option in most provincial high schools. A founder of the *Ukrainian Catholic Brotherhood, Koziak was coeditor of **Svitlo* (1950–65). In 1973 he was appointed to the Order of Canada.

Koziak, Julian (Gregory) [Kozjak], b 16 September 1940 in Edmonton. Lawyer and politician. A graduate of the University of Alberta, Koziak was elected in 1971 to represent Edmonton-Strathcona in the Alberta legislature as a Progressive Conservative. He has served as minister of education (1975–9), minister of consumer and corporate affairs (1979–82), and minister of municipal affairs (1982–6). Under his tenureship as minister of education, the Ukrainian bilingual program became a permanent feature of the Alberta school system. Koziak is active in many Ukrainian Catholic organizations. He was a candidate for the leadership of the Alberta Progressive Conservative party in 1985.

Koziatyn [Kozjatyn]. IV-9. City (1970 pop 26,600) and raion center in Vinnytsia oblast. An important railroad junction, it is known to have existed during the *Haidamaka uprising of 1734. In late 1918 Ukrainian insurgent forces clashed with the German army there; in February 1919 the Sich Riflemen Corps battled the Red Army; and in the summer of 1919 the Ukrainian Galician Army fought the Bolsheviks there during its advance on Kiev. Today the city's main industries are food processing and railroad-transport servicing.

Koziurenko, Oleksander [Kozjurenko], b 22 February 1892 in Hnyliakove, Odessa county, Kherson gubernia, d 28 May 1959 in Kiev. Graphic artist and caricaturist. A graduate of the Odessa Art School (1915), he established himself in Kiev, designing propaganda posters and drawing satirical sketches and caricatures for newspapers and magazines such as Komunist, Bil'shovyk, Chervonyi perets, and Vsesvit. During the Second World War he worked in his profession at the front. From 1943 to 1959 he was on the staff of the satirical magazine Perets'.

Kozlaniuk, Petro [Kozlanjuk], b 12 August 1904 in Pereriv, Kolomyia county, Galicia, d 19 March 1965 in Lviv. Galician Sovietophile writer. He began publishing political feuilletons and stories about the Galician working class in 1926 in the periodicals Hromads'kyi holos and

Sel'-Rob. A member of the editorial board of the journal Vikna (1927–32), he cofounded the literary organization *Horno in 1929 and was an editor of the weekly Syla (1930–2). During the 1939–41 Soviet occupation of Galicia, he wrote for the newspaper Vil'na Ukraina. During the Second World War he was a Soviet radio commentator, and after the war he headed the Lviv branch of the Writer's Union of Ukraine (1944–52, 1954–65). He wrote many works, mostly of a propagandistic and socialist-realist nature, set in interwar Galicia. Over 30 collections of his stories and feuilletons appeared during his lifetime. His largest work is the trilogy Iurko Kruk (1946–56). Collected editions of his works appeared in 1960 (3 vols) and 1974–5 (4 vols). Books about him have been written by Yu. Baida (1959) and V. Kachkan (1980).

Kozlov, Petr, b 15 October 1863 in Dukhovshchina, Smolensk gubernia, d 26 September 1935 in Petergof, Leningrad oblast. Naturalist, geographer, and explorer; from 1928 full member of the AN URSR. Having participated in several expeditions, he led expeditions to the Altai, Gobi, and Tibet (1899–1901), and to Mongolia and Szechuan (1907–9). After the Revolution he worked at the Askaniia-Nova Nature Reserve and in 1923–6 led the first Soviet expedition to Central Mongolia. Kozlov helped to establish the geography of lakes, rivers, and mountains of Central Asia and Mongolia, and assembled a rich collection of mammals, birds, and fish of the region. He made important finds of Tertiary fossils in the northern Gobi Desert.

Valeriia Kozlovska

Kozlovska, Valeriia [Kozlovs'ka, Valerija], b 20 June 1889 in Kiev, d 6 May 1956 in Utica, New York. Archeologist. After graduating from Kiev University in 1915, she studied under V. *Khvoika and assisted him in his archeological work. In 1914 she became director of the archeology department of the Kiev Museum of Antiquities and Art (now the Kiev Historical Museum). She was a member of the All-Ukrainian Archeological Committee (VUAK) and a senior research associate of the AN URSR Institute of Archeology. She participated in over 40 excavations of Trypillian and medieval sites and edited Khronika arkeolohii ta mystetstva (3 issues, 1930–1). She wrote over 40 articles based on her investigations and on archeology in general; a bibliography can be found in Rozvytok radians'koï arkeolohii na Ukraini (1917–1966) (The Development of Soviet Archeology in Ukraine [1917–1966], 1966). After the Second World War she lived in Aschaffenburg and Munich and took part in émigré scholarly life. She immigrated to the United States in 1950.

Ivan Kozlovsky

Vsevolod Kozlovsky

Kozlovsky, Ivan [Kozlovs'kyj], b 24 March 1900 in Marianivka, Vasylkiv county, Kiev gubernia. Opera and concert singer (lyrical tenor). A graduate of the Lysenko Music and Drama Institute in Kiev (1919), he performed as a soloist in the Poltava Touring Music and Drama Theater, the Kharkiv (1924) and Sverdlovsk (1925) opera theaters, and the Bolshoi Theater in Moscow (1926–54). His major roles were Lensky in P. Tchaikovsky's Eugene Onegin, the Fool in M. Mussorgsky's Boris Godunov, Levko in N. Rimsky-Korsakov's A May Night and Berendei in his Snow Maiden, and the title roles in R. Wagner's Lohengrin and J. Massenet's Werther. His Ukrainian repertoire included Levko in M. Lysenko's The Drowned Girl and Petro in his Natalka from Poltava, Andrii in M. Arkas's Kateryna, and Andrii in S. Hulak-Artemovskyy's Zaporozhian Cossack beyond the Danube. He began giving concerts in 1919, including in them arias from Ukrainian operas and songs by Ukrainian, Russian, and other composers, such as L. Beethoven, F. Schubert, R. Schumann, and F. Liszt. His recordings have earned him an outstanding reputation in the United States.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Polianovskii, H. Ivan S. Kozlovskii (Moscow-Leningrad 1945)
Kuznetsova, A. Stranitsy zhizni i tvorchestva I.S. Kozlovskogo (Moscow 1964)

Kozlovsky, Oleksii [Kozlovs'kyj, Oleksij], b 17 March 1892 in Isakivtsi, Kamianets-Podilskyyi county, Podilia gubernia. Civic and political figure. Completing his law studies at Kiev University, he served in the Russian army. In 1918 he joined the Karmaliuk Haidamaka Battalion of the UNR Army. When the Directory came to power, he worked at the Defense Ministry in Kiev. Emigrating in 1920 to Czechoslovakia, he served from 1922 to 1951 as lecturer and secretary of the Ukrainian Husbandry Academy and the Ukrainian Technical and Husbandry Institute. At the same time he belonged to the external delegation of the Ukrainian Social Democratic Workers' party and edited and published its central organ Sotsial-Demokrat in Poděbrady, Czechoslovakia. In 1951 he immigrated to the United States.

Kozlovsky, Vsevolod [Kozlovs'kyj], b 18 April 1877 in eastern Podilia, d ? Librarian and civic figure. In 1906 he was secretary of Hromads'ka dumka, the first Ukrainian daily newspaper in Kiev. Having emigrated to Galicia, he served as secretary of the Union for the Liberation of Ukraine (1914–17) and of the UNR diplomatic legation in Berlin (1918). Upon returning to Ukraine in 1920, he worked in the National Library of Ukraine. In the 1930s he moved to Alma-Ata, Kazakh SSR.

Kozlovsky-Trofymovych, Isaia [Kozlovs'kyj-Trofymovych, Isaja], b ?, d 15 March 1651 in Kiev. Renowned Orthodox theologian and pedagogue of Galician origin. He studied at the Vilnius Brotherhood School, then at the Jesuit College in Lublin and the Zamostia Academy. From 1631 he lived in Kiev, where he was a professor and rector at the Kievan Mohyla College (later the Kievan Mohyla Academy). Kozlovsky-Trofymovych was a close collaborator of Metropolitan P. *Mohyla. In 1633 he was sent as an envoy to gain Patriarch Cyril Lucaris's confirmation of Mohyla's election as metropolitan. He was an active participant in the church councils in Kiev (1640) and Iași (1642), and coauthor with Mohyla of Pravoslavne Ispovidannia Viry (Orthodox Confession of Faith, published in 1696), for which he was awarded the title 'Doctor of Theology' by the Kiev church council in September 1640. Pravoslavne Ispovidannia Viry was approved in 1643 by the four Eastern patriarchs and became a cornerstone of the entire Orthodox church. An abridged version was published in Polish (1645) and in Ukrainian as Sobranie korotkoi nauky o artykulakh viry pravoslavnokafolicheskoi ... (A Collection of Short Lessons on the Articles of the Universal Orthodox Faith ..., 1645). Kozlovsky-Trofymovych also assisted Mohyla in compiling the **Trebnyk* (Euchologion) of 1646. From 1638 until his death he was hegumen of the Kiev St Nicholas's Monastery.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Kharlampovich, K. Zapadnorusskie pravoslavnye shkoly xvi i nachala xvii veka (Kazan 1898)
Vozniak, M. Istoriia ukrains'koi literatury, 2 (Lviv 1921)
A. Zhukovskyy

Kozlovych, Ioan [Kozlovych], b ?, d 17 March 1757. Orthodox churchman and bishop. He was a professor of poetics and rhetoric at the Kievan Mohyla Academy before moving to Moscow, where he was professor of philosophy and prefect (from 1742) and then rector (1748–53) at the Slavonic-Greek-Latin Academy. He was also archimandrite of the Donskoi Monastery of the Mother of God and the Zaikonospasskii Monastery in Moscow. In 1753 he was appointed bishop of Pereiaslav and Boryspil. As bishop, he improved education in his eparchy and built hospices for the poor.

Kozłowski, Leon, b 1892 in Rembieszyce, Jędrzejów county, Poland, d 11 May 1944 in Berlin. Polish archeologist and politician. He held the Chair of Archeology at Lviv University (1922–39), and served as a senator (1935–9) and a member (1929–32), minister (1930–2), and chairman (1934–5) of the Polish Sejm. He excavated Neolithic and Trypilian sites in Galicia (Buchach, Koshylivtsi, and Nezvysko) and wrote several important books on Polish archeology, including Zarys przedziejów Polski południowo-wschodniej (An Outline of the Prehistory of Southeastern Poland, 1939).

Kozoris, Mykhailo, b 1882 in Kalush, Galicia, d 1937. Writer. A graduate of Lviv University, whose short stories, fables, and children's plays began to appear in 1907 in the Bukovynian and Galician press. After the First World War he settled in Soviet Ukraine and joined the Zakhidnia Ukraina writers' union in 1925. He authored two collections of short stories, Viche (The Public Meeting, 1928) and Po kam'ianii stezhtsi (Along the Rocky Path, 1931), and three novels, Selo vstaie (The Village Is Rising, 1929), Chornohora hovoryt' (Chornohora Speaks, 1931), and Holuba krov (Azure Blood, 1932). He also wrote a literary study, Sotsial'ni momenty v tvorchosti V. Stefanyka (Social Elements in the Works of V. Stefanyk, 1932). Kozoris was arrested in 1933, and his subsequent fate is unknown.

Kozova. iv-6. Town smt (1979 pop 7,700) and raion center in Ternopil oblast, situated on the Koropets River. It was first mentioned in 1440. Sugar, bricks, furniture, and wood and dairy products are made there.

Borys Kozubsky

Kozubsky, Borys [Kozubs'kyj], b 19 February 1886 in Vyshnivets, Kremianets county, Volhynia gubernia, d ? Civic and political figure. He studied law at Kiev University, but was forced to return to Volhynia in 1907 because of his membership in the Revolutionary Ukrainian party and the Ukrainian Social Democratic Workers' party, to whose weekly, Slovo, he contributed articles. In 1909 he was permitted to continue his studies at Kharkiv University, and he graduated in 1912. He then practiced law and worked as a local official in Kremianets. In 1917 he was a delegate to the Central Rada. When Polish rule was established in Volhynia he was arrested but released soon afterwards. He returned to Kremianets to continue his law practice and work in the Ukrainian co-operative movement. He was twice elected as a delegate to the Polish Sejm (1922 and 1927) and he became a leading member of the Ukrainian National Democratic Alliance.

Kozyk, Mykhailo, b 2 October 1879 in Semenivka, Novozybkiv county, Chernihiv gubernia, d 2 January 1947 in Lviv. Realist painter. A graduate of the Kiev Art School (1909), where he studied under H. *Diadchenko, and of the Moscow School of Painting, Sculpture, and Architecture (1913), Kozyk taught at the Kiev Art School (1915–25), the Kiev State Art Institute (1925–32), and the Kharkiv Art Institute (1932–41). He was an active member of the *Association of Artists of Red Ukraine. His works include portraits of M. Biliashivsky, V. Krychevsky, I. Steshenko, M. Hrinchenko, and V. Drukivsky with children; landscapes of orchards, Kiev parks, and industrial areas; and children's book and textbook illustrations.

Kozyrky fortified settlement. An archeological site near Kozyrky, Ochakiv raion, Mykolaiv oblast, situated on the right shore of the Boh River estuary not far from the former Greek colony of *Olbia. The settlement dates back to the 1st–3rd centuries AD. Excavations of the site in 1954–67 uncovered the remains of stone dwellings, farm buildings, and workshops with numerous weaving and milling implements. The walls of some ceremonial buildings were decorated with frescoes and plaster cornices. Under the floors pots or shallow pits with the skeletal remains of children were found. A Sarmatian burial ground from the 2nd century AD with wooden coffins containing skeletons and various artifacts was discovered nearby. The inhabitants depended on land cultivation and animal herding for their livelihood.

Kozytsky, Hryhorii [Kozyc'kyj, Hryhorij], b ca 1725 in the Hetmanate, d 6 January 1776 in St Petersburg. Writer and civic figure. He studied at the Kievan Mohyla Academy and at Leipzig University before becoming a professor of philosophy and oral literature at the Academic University of the St Petersburg Academy of Sciences (1758). In ca 1765 he was appointed secretary to Empress Catherine II. He participated in the drafting of her 'Instruction' to the Legislative Commission of 1767–9 and in the preparation of the Latin text of the commission's resolutions. In 1768 Catherine appointed him as her representative to the Society for the Translation of Foreign Books into Russian. He oversaw the work of the society and prepared several translations himself, including Ovid's Metamorphoses (1772) and F. Aepinus's Beschreibung d. Weltgebäudes (1770). He also edited the first Russian weekly, Vsiakaia vsiachina (1769), and translated several works by M. Lomonosov into Latin.

Pylyp Kozytsky

Kozytsky, Pylyp [Kozyc'kyj], b 23 October 1893 in Letychivka, Lypovets county, Kiev gubernia, d 27 April 1960 in Kiev. Composer and educator. A graduate of the Kiev Theological Academy (1917) and the Kiev Conservatory (1920), where he studied under B. Yavorsky and R. Glière, he taught at the Lysenko Music and Drama Institute in Kiev (1918–24), the Kharkiv Music and Drama Institute (1925–35), and the Kiev Conservatory. He was a founding member of the *Leontovych Music Society, whose magazines Muzyka (1923–7) and Muzyka masam (1928–31) he edited, and president of the Union of Composers of Ukraine (1952–6). His works include the operas Unknown Soldiers (1934) and For the Fatherland (1941), the orchestral suite Kozak Holota (1925), the poem Partisan's Daughter (1938), string quartets, preludes for piano, choral works, church music, arrangements of folk songs, and film and drama scores (to Berezhil's Sava Chalyi and Le Roi s'amuse). Kozytsky's work is based on Ukrainian folk songs and is tied to the traditions of Ukrainian classical music. His themes are mostly social and patriotic. In addition to composing, he wrote many articles and published studies on the work of such composers as M. Leontovych, K. Stetsenko, B. Liatoshytsky, and B. Smetana.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Hordiichuk, M. P. O. Kozyts'kyi (Kiev 1959)
 Honcharenko, M. P. Kozyts'kyi (Kiev 1985)

Kozytsky, Serhii [Kozyc'kyj, Serhij], b 7 October 1883 in Volodymyr-Volynskiy, Volhynia gubernia, d 1941. Political and civic leader. He studied at the Moscow Pedagogical Institute and at the Kamianets-Podilskiy Ukrainian State University. In 1918–19 he served as the UNR commissar of education in Kamianets-Podilskiy county. In 1922–7 he was a deputy to the Polish Sejm and president of the Ukrainian Club (1926). Joining *Sel-Rob in 1927, he sat in the Polish Senate as a deputy of Sel-Rob's right wing (1928–30). In the Sejm he was a member of the Educational Commission. He was also the president of the Prosvita society branch in Ostrih.

Krai. The term for an administrative-territorial unit, from the Slavic word for a locale, country, or province. In the Russian Empire it was used to designate large border regions made up of several gubernias or provinces (oblasts) and was synonymous with a general-gubernia (eg, the Southwestern krai, consisting of Kiev, Podilia, and Volhynia gubernias). Since 1924 the term has been used in the RSFSR for six regions made up of autonomous oblasts and okrugs for national minorities. *Krasnodar and *Stavropol kraisi lie within Ukrainian ethnic territory, and Altai krai in *Siberia and Khabarovsk and Primore kraisi in the Soviet *Far East have sizable Ukrainian populations.

Kraikivsky, Yuliiian [Krajkiv'skyj, Julijan], b 12 August 1892 in Rizdviany, Rohatyn county, Galicia, d 14 September 1975 in Edmonton. Painter specializing in battle scenes. A graduate of the Vienna Academy of Arts (1920), in the interwar period he taught art in gymnasiums in Stanyslaviv and Rohatyn and worked as an illustrator for the Chervona Kalyna publishing co-operative. He left Ukraine in 1944 and settled in Edmonton in 1948. Some of his better-known works are Bohdan Khmelnytsky's Campaign, The Cavalry Attack, Satan's Raid, Arkan, and Hahilky from his Hutsul cycle, and a portrait of V. Stefanyk. He took part in 19 exhibitions. A posthumous exhibition, consisting of 51 works, was held in his memory in 1976 in Edmonton.

Krainiev, Danylo [Krajnjev], b 13 December 1872 in Bosarevo, Orel gubernia, d 2 June 1949 in Odessa. Realist painter and educator. A graduate of the Odessa Drawing School (1890) and the St Petersburg Academy of Arts (1901), he worked most of his life in Odessa, painting and lecturing at the Odessa Art School (later Institute). He painted portraits, including a self-portrait; genre paintings such as Punishment by the Rod at Zaporizhia (1935), Cadres (1925), and Friends at T. Shevchenko's Sickbed (1939); still lifes; and landscapes.

Krainsky, Mykola [Krajins'kyj], b 1869 in Kiev, d 18 July 1951 in Kharkiv. Psychiatrist and psychologist. A graduate of Kharkiv University (1893), from 1894 he worked at P. Kovalevsky's psychiatric clinic in Kharkiv. He taught psychiatry at Kiev (1918–19), Zagreb (1921–8), and Belgrade (1928–41) universities. He returned to Ukraine in 1946 and directed the biophysiological laboratory at the Ukrainian Institute of Psychoneurology. He wrote works on syphilis of the brain, hallucination, the theory of nervous and mental processes, and epilepsy; the books Energetik der mechanischen Erscheinungen (1924) and Matematicheskie osnovy estestvoznaniia (The Mathematical Foundations of Natural Science, 1927); and an introductory textbook on teaching forensic experimental psychology (1930), written in Serbian.

Krainychenko, Volodymyr [Krajnychenko], b 6 August 1925 in Verkhnie, Pervomaiske okruha, d 11 May 1964 in Kharkiv. Stage director. Upon graduating from the Kharkiv Theater Institute, where he studied under M. Krushelnytsky, he worked as a stage director with the Kharkiv Ukrainian Drama Theater (1952–64). He directed such plays as P. Myrny's Lymeryna (The Saddler's Daughter, 1952), T. Shevchenko's Nazar Stodolia, his own stage adaptations of P. Myrny's Poviiia (The Strumpet) and M. Stelmakh's Krov liuds'ka – ne vodytsia (Human Blood Is Not Water), M. Pechenizhsky's Den' narodzhennia (Birthday, 1960), and M. Zarudny's Maryna (1964).

Krainyk, Mykola [Krajnyk], b 20 April 1935 in Galicia. Ukrainian dissident; by profession a teacher. He was arrested on 29 September 1979 and accused of organizing the Ukrainian National Front, publishing a samvydav anthology, Prozrinnia (The Recovery of Sight), and circulating the underground journal Ukrains'kyi visnyk. He was sentenced to seven years' imprisonment and three years' internal exile for 'anti-Soviet agitation and propaganda' and 'participation in anti-Soviet organizations.'

Kraiovyi Soiuz Reviziinyi. See Audit Union of Ukrainian Co-operatives.

Krakaliia, Kost [Krajaliia, Kost'], b 1884. Bukovynian political leader and journalist. Until 1922 he was a leading member of the Ukrainian section of the Social Democratic Party of Bukovyna. Then, abandoning the interests of the Ukrainian population of Bukovyna, he joined the Rumanian National Farmer's party and headed its Ukrainian section (1922–30). During this period he edited the Ukrainian-language weekly Khliborob (1923) and Khliborob's'ka pravda (1924–38), in which he attacked the Ukrainian nationalist movement and supported the government's anti-Ukrainian policies. In 1920–2 and 1928–31 Krakaliia was a deputy to the Rumanian Parliament. Breaking with the National Farmer's party in 1930, he collaborated with various other Rumanian political parties. Besides being involved in political life, he translated many Ukrainian works into German and prepared the language handbook Ukrainisch (Ruthenisch): Methode Toussaint-Langenscheidt Sprachführer (1915).

Krakov'ski visti

Krakov'ski visti (Cracow News). A daily newspaper published from 1940 to 1944 in Cracow (semiweekly from 7 January to 1 May 1940 and then triweekly to 30 October 1940), and from 10 October 1944 to 4 April 1945 in Vienna. The unofficial organ of the *Ukrainian Central Committee, it was published by the Ukrainske Vydavnytstvo publishing house. Its chief editors were B. Levytsky (briefly) and M. Khomiak (assisted by L. Lepky), and its staff included journalists such as I. Kedryn, I. Durbak, M. Kozak, and P. Sahaidachny. Altogether 1,400 issues came out, and the circulation ranged from 7,200 to 22,500. The paper was published for the Ukrainian population in the Nazi-ruled *Generalgouvernement, but it was read also by Ukrainians in Germany and Czechoslovakia. Krakov'ski visti was the most influential Ukrainian daily published during the Second World War and, in spite of severe German censorship, it was an important source of information about developments at the time on all Ukrainian territories. Concurrently, a popular weekly aimed at Ukrainian farmers was published under the same title as the daily from 1 November 1940 to the end of 1944 (200 issues in all). Its circulation ranged from 6,000 to 27,000. Its chief editor was Yu. Tarnovych. A somewhat revised version of the weekly, titled Kholm'ska zemlia, was published for the Kholm region.

S. Yaniv

Král, Jiří, b 31 October 1893 in Prague. Czech geographer and anthropologist; full member of the Shevchenko Scientific Society. A graduate of Prague University (1917), in the 1920s he lectured at Prague University, then at Bratislava University (1929–38), and after the Second World War again at Prague University. Specializing in the geography and anthropology of Transcarpathia, he wrote Podkarpatská Rus (1924) and Nejnovější mapy antropologické Slovenska a Podkarpatské Rusi (1933).

Kralytsky, Anatol [Kralyc'kyj, Anatol'], b 13 February 1835 in Čabiny, Humenne circle, Slovakia, d 30 January 1894 in Mukachiv, Transcarpathia. Writer and historian. In 1858 he entered the Basilian order, later serving as the hegumen of a monastery in Mukachiv. He organized the educational and publishing Society of St Basil the Great. A number of old documents in the history of Transcarpathia as well as a history of Ukrainian monasteries of the region were published by Kralytsky. He collected ethnographic materials for M. Drahomanov and contributed historical and biographical articles to the Galician and Transcarpathian press. His fiction consists of short stories and novels, of which the best known is Kniaz' Laborets' (Prince Laborets, 1863).

Kramar, Yevhen, b 18 February 1933 in Psary (now Pryozerne), Rohatyn county, Galicia. Lawyer, historian, and publicist. He completed his law studies at Lviv University (1956), then practiced in Moldavia and Odessa and Volhynia oblasts. His popular articles on Ukrainian history – on topics as diverse as the Slovo o polku Ihorevi, the etymology of the word kozak ('Cossack'), and I. Franko – have appeared in Soviet Ukrainian journals as well as in Nashe slovo in Warsaw and Ukrainian periodicals in Yugoslavia. He has also written studies of the Gagauzy, Karaites, and Gypsies in Ukraine, and on the history of Ukrainian-Bulgarian relations. A selection of his essays was published in the West as Doslidzhennia z istorii Ukraïny (Studies in Ukrainian History, 1984).

Kramarenko, Andrii, b 16 October 1897 in Vilshany, Kharkiv county, Kharkiv gubernia, d 1 April 1976 in Odessa. Character actor. A graduate of the drama studio of the Chief Political-Educational Committee in Kharkiv (1921), Kramarenko first worked with I. Yukhymenko and then at the Kharkiv Chervonozavodskyi Ukrainian Drama Theater (1927–33) and the Odessa Ukrainian Drama Theater of the October Revolution (1934–60). He appeared in a wide range of plays: from populist-realist to socialist-realist plays, to world classics. For example, he played Cherevyk in M. Starytsky's Sorochyns'kyi iarmarok (The Sorochyntsi Fair), Yarchuk in I. Mykytenko's Solo na fleiti (Flute Solo), and Benedick in W. Shakespeare's Much Ado about Nothing. Kramarenko also directed plays.

Kramarenko, Leonid, b 15 December 1881 in Balta, Podilia gubernia, d 14 May 1960 in Kharkiv. Specialist in agricultural machine building; corresponding member of the AN URSR from 1939. A graduate of Kiev University, he taught at the Kiev Polytechnical Institute (1915–29) and then at the Kharkiv Institute of Mechanics and Machine Building. In 1945 he joined the Kharkiv Scientific Research Institute of Animal Husbandry of the Forest-Steppe and Polisia. His publications deal with the theory and design of various agricultural machines and processes.

Lev Kramarenko: Factory Town in the Donbas (oil, 1937)

Kramarenko, Lev, b 13 January 1888 in Uman, Kiev gubernia, d 5 March 1942 in Samarkand, Uzbek SSR.

Monumentalist painter and pedagogue. A graduate of the St Petersburg (1908) and Paris (1911) academies of art, he was a lecturer of the Kiev (1923–30) and Kharkiv (1931–2) art institutes. From 1927 he belonged to the Union of Contemporary Artists of Ukraine. He took part in decorating the clubhouse and cafeteria of the Children's Village in Kiev (1924), the Academy of Sciences conference hall in Kiev (1930), the Serp i Molot club in Moscow (1934), and the Kiev Russian Drama Theater (1936–7). His easel paintings include frescoes such as Working Woman (1927), still lifes such as Still Life with Samovar (1929), and landscapes of the Donets Basin, the Crimea, and Central Asia. L. Lohvynska and O. Malashenko wrote a monograph about Kramarenko in 1975.

Kramatorske or Kramatorsk [Kramators'ke], v-18, DB II-3. City (1985 pop 192,000) in Donetske oblast, situated on the Kazennyi Torets River, a tributary of the Dinets. It is one of the largest centers of the heavy-machine-building industry in Ukraine and an important railway junction linking Lozova, Popasna, Rostov-na-Donu, Artemivske, and Krasnyi Lyman. Kramatorske arose in the second half of the 19th century, when a station of the Kursk–Azov railway was established on the city's present site and the town grew up around it. Over time, several settlements established in the late 18th century were incorporated into the new town. The city grew as the entire *Donets Basin was developed. In 1896 a German firm opened a factory to produce machinery for the mining and railway industries (now the Old Kramatorske Machine-Building Plant). By 1914 the city had 4,000 inhabitants. Its population grew quickly with the industrialization of the entire region, reaching 12,000 in 1926, 93,000 in 1939, and 115,000 in 1959. The large New Kramatorske Machine-Building Plant was opened in 1934. Today the city's industries produce equipment for the metallurgical, coal, mining, and heavy-machine-tool-building industries and building materials (cement, slate, and slagwood). The coke-chemicals, casting and forging, food, and light industries are also developed. Kramatorske has a scientific-research and technological-planning institute of machine building, an industrial institute, two tekhnikums, and a museum of revolutionary and labor glory.

Kramatorske Industrial Institute (Kramatorskyi industrialnyi instytut). A technical school of higher education under the jurisdiction of the Ministry of Higher and Specialized Secondary Education of the Ukrainian SSR. Formed in 1953 as a branch of the Donetske Polytechnical Institute, it was transformed into an independent evening school in 1960, and into a complete institute, with day, evening, and correspondence sections, in 1963. It has departments of mechanical engineering, metallurgy, and automatization, among others, and graduate and preparatory programs. The institute's enrollment is approximately 5,000, and over 12,000 engineers have graduated from it since its establishment.

Kramskoi, Ivan [Kramskoj] (Kramsky), b 8 June 1837 in Ostrohozke, Voronezh gubernia, Russia, d 5 April 1887 in St Petersburg. Russian realist painter of Ukrainian origin. A graduate (1863) and faculty member (1869–87) of the St Petersburg Academy of Arts, he was one of the founders and ideologists of the *Peredvizhnik. In the 1850s he visited Kharkiv, and in 1871 he worked in Khotin village in the Sumy region. He made frequent trips to the Crimea. His works include canvases on religious themes such as Christ in the Desert (1872) and Inconsolable Grief (1884); a collection of portraits, including portraits of T. Shevchenko (1871), P. Martynovych (1876), O. Lytovchenko (1878), and a self-portrait (1867); and a series of genre paintings, such as Forester (1874), Peasant with Bridle (1883), and Rural Smithy (1885). His Nymphs (1871) and Moonlit Night (1880) were based on his memories of Ukraine and the impact of N. Gogol's writings on him.

Ivan Kramskoi: Portrait of T. Shevchenko (oil, 1871)

Krasheninnikov, Serhii [Krašeninnikov, Serhij], b 25 October 1895 in Slutsk, Belorussia, d 27 August 1987 in Philadelphia. Zoologist; full member of the Shevchenko Scientific Society and of the Ukrainian Academy of Arts and Sciences in the United States. A graduate of Kiev (1924) and Moscow (1937) universities and the Ukrainian Free University in Munich (PH D 1949), Krasheninnikov taught zoology at Kiev University (1936–7), the Bila Tserkva Agricultural Institute (1934–41), and the Ukrainian Technical and Husbandry Institute in Regensburg (1945–9). After immigrating to the United States in 1949, he worked as a researcher at the University of Pennsylvania (1955–62) and as a professor at the University of Miami (1962–3). He published over 40 scientific papers, mostly dealing with parasitic Ciliata (Protozoa). He also edited the album Kyiv Shevchenkovykh chasiv (Kiev during Shevchenko's Times, 1984).

Krasivsky, Zinovii [Krasivs'kyj, Zinovij], b 12 November 1929 in Vytvytsia, Dolyna county, Galicia. Poet; Ukrainian dissident and human-rights activist. Deported with his whole family to Kazakhstan in 1947, he escaped and took part in the resistance movement in Ukraine. He was sentenced in 1949 to five years' imprisonment and perpetual exile. Released in 1953, he joined his family in Karaganda, where he was crippled in a mining accident. In 1959 he returned to Ukraine. After receiving a degree in philology at Lviv University (1962), he became active in the Ukrainian National Front and helped publish its underground journal Volia i bat'kivshchyna. For this he was sentenced in 1967 to five years' imprisonment, seven years' hard labor, and five years' exile. For writing a verse collection Nevil'nychi plachi (Slave Lamentations), the poem 'Triumf satany' (Satan's Triumph), and protest letters, and participating in hunger strikes, he was transferred in 1972 to a psychiatric hospital in Smolensk and in 1976 to a similar institution in Lviv. After being released he joined the *Ukrainian Helsinki Group in 1979. In March 1980 he was rearrested and forced to complete his earlier sentence. He was released in 1985.

Zynovii Krasivsky

Kraskovsky, Ivan [Kraskovs'kyj], b 1882 in the northern Podlachia region, d ? Political figure of Ukrainian-Belorussian background. He studied at Warsaw University. During the First World War he was a representative of the All-Russian Union of Cities in Galicia. A member of the Ukrainian Party of Socialist Revolutionaries, in 1917 he was a gubernial commissar of the Russian Provisional Government in the Ternopil region. In January 1918 he became a deputy minister under the UNR prime minister, V. Vynnychenko. During the Hetman government he was a member of the Council of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, then the representative of the UNR in Georgia and Kuban. In 1920 he moved to Belorussia and became a lecturer at the State University in Minsk. He was arrested in the 1930s and his fate is unknown.

Krasna or Polonyna Krasna. A mountain ridge in the *Polonynian Beskyd between the Tereblia and Teresa rivers. In its southwestern part it joins the Menchul (Menchiv) mountain group. This broad, uniform ridge reaches an elevation of 1,719 m (Mt Strymba) and is covered with meadows. Its steep slopes are forested with beech and (in the northeast) evergreens.

Krasna River. A left-bank tributary of the Donets River, flowing for 130 km through the Central Upland and the Donets Lowland and draining a basin of 2,710 sq km.

Krasne. IV-5. Town smt (1979 pop 5,700) in Buzke raion, Lviv oblast. It was first mentioned in 1476. During the Ukrainian-Polish War of 1918–19 the town served as an air base of the Ukrainian Galician Army (УГА); there the УНА *Chortkiv offensive was broken by the Poles on 28 June 1919. Since the 1870s Krasne has been a railroad junction; it has a sugar refinery and a mixed-feed plant.

Krasni Okny. VI-10. Town smt (1979 pop 5,300) and raion center in Odessa oblast. It was founded in the late 18th century and was called Okny until 1919. The town has a local food and mixed-feed industry.

Krasnoarmiiske [Krasnoarmijs'ke]. V-18, DB III-2. City (1984 pop 65,000) and raion center under oblast jurisdiction in Donetsk oblast. Established as a railroad construction settlement in the early 1880s, it was called Hryshyne until 1934 and Postysheve in 1934–8. By the turn of the century it was an important railroad junction and coal-mining center in the Donbas. From a population of 4,500 in 1913 it grew to 11,400 in 1926, 16,500 in 1933, over 30,000 in 1939, 48,000 in 1959, and 55,000 in 1970. It has six coal mines, railway-servicing firms, the plants Elektrodivyhun and Metalist, a dairy, clothing factory, and several food-processing plants. Among its educational institutions are a branch of the Donetsk Polytechnical Institute and a pedagogical school. From 1904 to 1908 the composer M. Leontovych worked there and conducted the first railwaymen's choir in Ukraine.

Krasnodar. VIII-19. City (1985 pop 609,000) and capital of *Krasnodar krai, located on the Kuban River. It was founded in 1794 as Katerynodar and assumed its present name in 1920. The city was settled by former Zaporozhian Cossacks and was the main center of the *Black Sea Cossacks and then the *Kuban Cossack Host (from 1860). At the end of the 19th century it became an important trade and transport center, through which much of the agricultural produce of *Kuban passed. There was also some local industry, mainly food processing, located there. In 1897 the population was 66,000. The capital of the *Kuban People's Republic in 1918–20, it was an important center of Ukrainian life in the early 20th century. Under Soviet rule the machine-building (lathes, compressors, electronic-testing equipment), chemicals, petroleum-processing, food-processing, and textile industries have been developed. Krasnodar is also home to Kuban University (from 1920 to 1970 the Kuban Pedagogical Institute), three other institutions of higher education, and historical-regional and art museums.

Krasnodar krai. An autonomous region of the RSFSR in northwestern Caucasia, established in September 1937. It has an area of 83,600 sq km and a population (1979) of 4,814,000, 52 percent of which is urban. The region is divided into 41 raions and has 28 cities and 28 towns smt. It includes within its borders the *Adygei Autonomous oblast. The capital city is *Krasnodar (1985 pop 609,000). Krasnodar krai extends northward from the Caucasus Mountains across the steppes of Subcaucasia east of the Black and Azov seas as far as Tahanrih Bay. It is separated from Crimea by the Kerch Strait. It borders with Georgia in the south, the Karachai-Cherkess Autonomous oblast in the southeast, Stavropol krai in the east, and Rostov oblast in the north.

It was established as a separate administrative unit on the basis of the Kuban-Black Sea oblast of the RSFSR, which had been abolished in 1924 and reorganized several times in the 1920s. Its borders were approximately the same as those of the independent *Kuban People's Republic (est January 1918) and the Kuban-Black Sea Soviet Republic (est July 1918). (For the history of Krasnodar krai to 1937 and for a description of its physical geography, see *Kuban.)

Population. The inhabitants of Krasnodar krai today are mostly Russians or Russified Ukrainians, but they include Adygeians, Cherkassians, and some Armenians, Belorussians, Greeks, Tatars, and others. The distribution of the population is uneven. The most densely populated areas are the northern part of the Kuban Lowland and the Black Sea coast. The least populated areas are in the higher parts of the Caucasus Mountains. In addition to Krasnodar, other cities with a population of over 100,000 (1983) are Sochi (304,000), Novorossiiske (171,000), Armavir (167,000), and Maikop (135,000). The cities are generally concentrated on the southern edge of the Kuban Lowland and on the Black Sea coast. In 1926 Ukrainians constituted 47 percent of the entire population of the Kuban-Black Sea oblast. However, many of them were forced to flee to Asia or Transcaucasia during the forced *collectivization of agriculture in the 1930s. Many others died during the resulting famine. Those who remained were denied national rights (Ukrainian-language schools, newspapers, institutions, etc were closed) and exposed to continuous Russification. Thus, assimilation and the continual immigration of Russians and people of other nationalities have caused the proportion of Ukrainians in Krasnodar krai to decline steadily. In 1979 approx 3.9 percent of the population was Ukrainian.

Economy. Krasnodar krai is primarily an agricultural region. Approximately 62 percent of its entire area is farmland and 52.3 percent is cultivated. There are two distinct agricultural regions: the Kuban Lowland in the north, where the fertile chernozem steppe supports extensive grain production, and the Black Sea coast with its Mediterranean climate, where fruits are cultivated. The grains produced are winter wheat, winter barley, and corn. Along the lower Kuban River, much swamp-land has been reclaimed for rice growing. Sunflowers are the most important industrial crop of Krasnodar krai; others include sugar beets and tobacco. Vegetables are grown in the regions along the Kuban River. In the Caucasus foothills, fruit (particularly apples, cherries, pears, and apricots) and vines are cultivated. Tea and citrus fruit are grown along the Black Sea coast.

Large numbers of cattle, pigs, and poultry are raised, particularly in the Kuban Lowland. The alpine meadows in the Caucasus Mountains are used for grazing. Fish farming is practiced, and some fur-bearing animals (eg, mink) are kept.

The major industry is food processing. Wine making, including high-quality wines and cognacs (Abrau-Diurso), meat processing (Krasnodar, Armavir, etc), the fishing industry (Yeiske, Temriuk, Novorossiiske), oil pressing (Krasnodar, Kropotkin), and sugar, margarine, tobacco, and tea processing are all developed. Petroleum and natural gas are exploited near Maikop, on the Taman Peninsula, and in the north, and refined in Tuapse, Krasnodar, and Afypyski. Salt, mercury, and other minerals are mined. Manufactured in Krasnodar krai are machine tools (Krasnodar, Maikop), tractor and automobile parts (Krasnodar, Armavir, Novorossiiske), transport machines (Tykhoritske, Novorossiiske), machines for the oil industry (Krasnodar, Armavir), printing machines (Yeiske), and other products. The chemical industry, concrete production (the Novorossiiske region), wood-working and furniture manufacturing (Krasnodar, Maikop, Armavir), as well as wool, cotton, leather, and other branches of light industry (Krasnodar) are developed. Energy for the industry of Krasnodar krai comes from a network of thermoelectric stations using natural gas (Krasnodar), coal (Armavir), and oil (Novorossiiske), as well as a number of hydroelectric stations (Beleoechensk, Krasnopol, and others).

Transportation. The main railway lines in the krai are Rostov-na-Donu-Armavir-Adler-Sukhumi and Volgograd-Krasnodar-Novorossiiske. A new electric railway line from Krasnodar to Tuapse is being completed. Auto transport is more important on the Black Sea coast. The main highways are Krasnodar-Sochi-Adler and Anapa-Novorossiiske-Tuapse. Boats travel the Kuban River and the coastal waters. The main seaports are Novorossiiske (for the export of grain and concrete), Tuapse (oil products), Sochi, and Anapa on the Black Sea, and Yeiske and Temriuk on the Sea of Azov.

Resorts and tourism. Krasnodar krai is one of the most important resort and tourist regions in the USSR. It has 92 sanatoriums and 120 rest homes on the sea coast and in the Caucasus Mountains, often with mineral springs and mud baths. The most important resort region is the Black Sea coast between Tuapse and Adler, centered in Sochi. On the Azov coast, the largest resort center is Yeiske, with its sulfur-hydrogen mineral springs and mud baths. In the Caucasus Mountains the best-known resort is Hariachyi Kliuch. The *Caucasus Nature Reserve is located in the southwest corner of Krasnodar krai.

M. Stech

Krasnodon. v-20, DB III-7. City (1986 pop 51,000) and raion center under oblast jurisdiction in Voroshylovhrad oblast. It was founded in 1914 as a mining settlement and was called Sorokyne until 1938. The city is a coal-mining center. It also has an automotive-parts plant and a building-materials plant. A war museum highlights the activities of the Soviet underground during the Second World War, in particular the Moloda Gvardiia group.

Krasnogvardiiske [Krasnogvardijs'ke]. VIII-15. Town smt (1979 pop 9,100) and raion center in Crimea oblast. It has been known since the mid-19th century and until 1945 was called Kurman-Kemelchi. The food industry is the mainstay of its economy.

Krasnohorivka. v-18, DB III-3. City (1970 pop 19,600) in Marinka raion, Donetsk oblast, situated on the Lozova River 25 km northwest of Donetsk. Krasnohorivka was founded in the 1870s. Today it has a plant that manufactures refractory materials and an automobile-repair plant.

Krasnohrad. IV-16. City (1972 pop 19,500) and raion center in Kharkiv oblast. In 1731 the Bielovska Fortress, which became the seat of the *Ukrainian Line of frontier fortifications, was erected at its site. In 1784 the fortress became the town of Kostiantynohrad. In the 18th and 19th century it produced textiles, especially silk. The town kept this name until 1922; from 1802 to 1917 it was a county town in Poltava gubernia. Today Krasnohrad is a railroad junction. It has a food industry, building-materials industry, and a mechanized-agriculture tekhnikum.

Krasnoilske or Krasnoilsk [Krasnojil's'ke]. v-6. Town smt (1979 pop 7,200) in Storozhynets raion, Chernivtsi oblast, situated on the Sireteli River. First mentioned in a document from 1431, the town has wood-processing and household-products factories.

Krasnokutske or Krasnokutsk [Krasnokuc'ke]. III-16. Town smt (1986 pop 7,700) and raion center in Kharkiv oblast, situated on the Merla River. One of the oldest towns in Slobidska Ukraine, Krasnokutske was founded as Krasnyi Kut in 1651 by Cossacks from the Korsun region. A company town in Okhtyrka regiment until 1765 and then a county town in Kharkiv gubernia at the end of the century, it assumed its present name in 1780. In 1897 it had 6,860 inhabitants, most of whom were engaged in agriculture. Today it has a creamery, building-materials plant, and a furniture factory.

Krasnokutskyi kurhan. A Scythian kurhan, also known as Tovsta Mohyla, from the 4th to the early 3rd centuries BC situated near Loshkarivka, Nykopol raion, Dnipropetrovske oblast. I. Zabelin's excavation of the kurhan in 1860 uncovered the pillaged grave of a Scythian chieftain, the skeletons of four horses, horse armor with silver ornaments, and parts of two wooden carts.

Krasnopavlivka. IV-17. Town smt (1979 pop 8,600) in Lozova raion, Kharkiv oblast. The town was founded in 1874-5 as a railway station on the Kursk-Azov railroad. Food-processing factories and machine-repair shops are located there. The Krasnopavlivka Reservoir on the Dnieper-Donbas Canal is located nearby.

Krasnoperekopske or Krasnoperekopsk [Krasnoperekops'ke]. VIII-14. City (1974 pop 16,000) and raion center in northern Crimea oblast. The city is located on the southern Perekop Isthmus. It was founded in 1932 with the establishment there of a bromide factory that used raw materials from Syvash Lake. The city also has a soda plant, several food-processing plants (a juice and wine plant, a cannery, and a dairy), and a reinforced-concrete plant.

Krasnopilia [Krasnopilja]. III-16. Town smt (1979 pop 9,200) and raion center in Sumy oblast. It was established ca 1640 as a fortress, and after the abolition of the Slobidska Ukrainian regiments in 1765 it became a sloboda (self-governing settlement). Today the town has several food-processing plants and a furniture factory.

Krasnopushcha [Krasnopusča]. Village in Berezhany raion, Ternopil oblast. A Basilian monastery was built there in 1664 and functioned until 1945. During the years 1771-2 and 1809-14 it had a noviciate. The monastery had a famous iconostasis decorated by the Lviv painter Vasyl; it perished in a fire in 1899 except for the royal door and some small medallions. A scaled-down version of the iconostasis was constructed in the 1890s at St Onuphrius's Monastery in Lviv.

Krasnoselsky, Oleksander [Krasnosel's'kyj], b 7 July 1877 in Moscow, d 19 March 1944 in Dnipropetrovske. Architect. A graduate of the Riga Polytechnical Institute (1906), from 1912 he worked in Dnipropetrovske, where he designed a children's residence (1914-15), a residential building with a pharmacy (1915-16), the Anatomy Building of the Medical Institute (1916), the Second Workers' Polyclinic (1924-7), the Illich Palace of Culture (1926-32), the university complex (in collaboration with V. Samodryga, 1936), and a theater (1941). His buildings vary in style: some are classicist and some are modernist.

Krasnov, Andrei, b 8 November 1862 in St Petersburg, d 1 January 1915 in Tbilisi. Russian botanist and geographer. A graduate of St Petersburg University (1885), Krasnov was a professor at Kharkiv University (1889-1911). He organized expeditions to carry out research on the soils and flora of southeastern Ukraine (the Katerynoslav, Kryvyi Rih, and Donetske regions) and the Caucasus. He also led many scientific expeditions to Central Asia, the Far East, and the Indian subcontinent. Krasnov's works were devoted to the problems of natural zones and the origin of soils, forests, and the steppe. He also wrote several textbooks. In 1912 he established the Batumi Botanical Garden in Georgia for the purpose of acclimatizing tropical plants (eg, tea) in the Russian Empire.

Krasnoznamianka Irrigation System. An irrigation system constructed in 1953-75 that uses water from the Dnieper River to irrigate the southern coast of Kherson oblast on the Black Sea. The North Crimean Canal takes water from the *Kakhivka Reservoir to feed a network of interfarm supply and field canals (total length 166 km) and 18 water stations. The total irrigated area under cultivation is 62,500 ha.

Krasny, Pinkhas, b 1881 in the Kiev region, d 1939 in Kiev. Jewish civic and political leader. He was a member of the executive of the Jewish People's party, an organizer of Jewish schools in Ukraine, and in 1919 the minister for Jewish affairs in the cabinets of B. Martos and I. Mazepa under the *Directory of the UNR. Together with other members of the UNR government, he issued numerous proclamations against pogroms carried out by some military units and civilians. He was shot in a Soviet prison in Kiev in 1939.

Ruins of Krasny Brod Monastery

Krasný Brod. Village (1970 pop 1,000) near Medzilaborce in the Prešov region of Czechoslovakia. In the 16th century a Basilian monastery was built there. In the 17th and 18th centuries the monastery ran a well-known school offering also instruction in philosophy. Later it became a place of pilgrimage. In 1915 the monastery and its church were devastated. From 1958 to 1964 the Museum of Ukrainian Culture, which later was transferred to *Svydnyk, was located in the village.

Krasnyi Luch [Krasnyj Luč]. v-19, DB III-5. City (1984 pop 110,000) under oblast jurisdiction in Voroshylovhrad oblast, situated in the central Donbas. It arose as a miners' settlement in the late 1880s and was called Kryndachivka until 1920. Krasnyi Luch is an important coal-industry center. It has five anthracite mines, three enrichment plants, an automobile-repair plant, a machine-building plant, a building-systems plant, a building-supplies plant, two reinforced-concrete plants, a metalworking plant, a furniture factory, a clothing factory, and several food-processing plants. Among its institutions are a power-engineering tekhnikum, a mining tekhnikum, and nine vocational-technical schools.

Krasnyi Lyman [Krasnyj Lyman]. v-18, DB II-3. City (1971 pop 31,000) and raion center in Donetske oblast. It was founded as a frontier sloboda (self-governing settlement) in 1667 and until 1938 was called Lyman. Today it is a large railroad-distribution center through which raw materials and products pass on their way out of the Donbas. It has a food industry, a building-materials industry, a railway-servicing industry, a medical school, and a technical school.

Krasnystaw (Ukrainian: Krasnostav). III-4. City (1977 pop 14,000) in the Kholm region on the Vepr (Wieprz) River, now in Chełm voievodship, Poland. One of the oldest cities of the Kholm region, it was an important center (known as Shchekariv) in the Principality of Galicia-Volhynia. It is mentioned in the Galician-Volhynian Chronicle of the 13th century. At the end of the 14th century it came under Polish rule, and in 1394 the city was granted the rights of Magdeburg law. The city prospered in the 15th and 16th centuries, when it was a major stop on the trade route between Right-Bank Ukraine and the Baltic port of Gdańsk (Danzig), but it entered a long period of decline in the 17th century. A Uniate Gothic-style church was built there in the 1540s, but neither the Uniates nor the sizable Ukrainian Orthodox population could withstand the Polonizing pressures. In 1940 there were only about 5,000 Polonized Ukrainians living in the Krasnystaw district, and they were deported to the Ukrainian SSR in 1945-6.

Krasovsky, Andrii [Krasovs'kyj, Andrij], b 1822 in Kiev, d 1868. Lieutenant colonel in the Russian army and political activist. Sometime in 1842 or 1843 Krasovsky became friends with T. *Shevchenko, whose poetry and radical ideas were to influence him greatly. In 1861 Krasovsky moved to Kiev, where he met many prominent Ukrainian intellectuals, among them O. Markovych, Marko Vovchok, and other friends of Shevchenko. Krasovsky helped organize an underground circle and a clandestine printing press and began to distribute materials and the banned poetry of Shevchenko among the peasants of Korsun and Bohuslav. Later he joined the political terrorist organization *Zemlia i Volia. In June 1862 he was arrested for writing and distributing an appeal to the soldiers of Zhytomyr regiment, dissuading them from participating in the suppression of a peasant uprising in Bohuslav. His death sentence was commuted to 12 years' hard labor, which he partially served in Nerchynsk, Chita region. He died while trying to escape.

Krasovsky, Ivan [Krasovs'kyj], b 22 October 1927 in Doshno, Sianik county, Galicia. Ethnographer, historian, specialist in Lemko history and culture. A graduate of Lviv University (1957), since 1969 he has been senior research associate of the Lviv Museum of Folk Architecture and Folkways. Most of his scholarly articles have appeared in Nashe slovo, published in Warsaw.

Krasovsky, Mykola [Krasovs'kyj], b 1876 in Kostukovychy, Mahiliou gubernia, d 1953 in Kharkiv. Pharmacologist and educator. Krasovsky graduated from Kharkiv University in 1899 and became a docent there in 1909 and a professor in 1917. From 1913 to 1922 he was the president of the Kharkiv Pharmaceutical Society. In 1921 he helped organize the Kharkiv Pharmaceutical Institute, where he served as professor and assistant director for many years. He is the author of some 40 scientific works and a pharmacology textbook.

Krasovsky, Oleksander [Krasovs'kyj], 1891-1921. Political activist. He was a member of the Kiev Gubernial Executive Committee in 1917, and in 1919 an assistant inspector of the UNR Army. In October 1919 he was sent by the UNR Directory to Moscow to negotiate an alliance against the Whites led by Gen A. Denikin. He was killed while participating in the partisan struggle against the Bolsheviks.

Petro Krasovsky: Belfry of the Armenian Church in Lviv (1571)

Krasovsky, Petro [Krasovs'kyj], b and d ? Noted architect of the second half of the 16th century. He worked mostly in Lviv, where he built the belfry of the Armenian Cathedral in 1570 and the belfry (not preserved) of the Dormition Cathedral. Art historians attribute the so-called Black Building (1577) on Rynok Square and the Chapel of the Three Saints (1578) to Krasovsky. His buildings display an original synthesis of local architectural traditions with the Italian Renaissance style.

Krasusky, Konstantin [Krasuskij], b 14 September 1867 in Zaraisk county, Moscow gubernia, d 7 April 1937. Russian organic chemist; corresponding member of the AN URSR from 1926 and of the USSR Academy of Sciences from 1933. He studied at St Petersburg and Heidelberg (1892–3) universities, then taught at St Petersburg (1894–1902) and Warsaw (1902–7) before moving to Kiev. There he was a professor of organic chemistry at the Kiev Polytechnic (1907–12) and Kiev University (1912–16). He then served as professor at Kharkiv University (1916–29) before moving to Azerbaidzhan. Krasusky published over 40 papers, mainly on alpha-oxy-compounds and amino alcohols and their isomerization reactions.

Krasyliv. IV-7. City (1971 pop 13,500) and raion center in Khmelnytskyi oblast, situated on the Sluch River. First mentioned in a document from 1444, for most of the 16th and early 17th centuries it was owned by the Ostrozky family and was a small trading and crafts center. Acquired by the Russian Empire in the Second Polish Partition (1793), from 1797 it was a volost center in Starokostiantyniv county, Volhynia gubernia. Now the city has a sugar refinery, machine-construction plant, and food-processing factories.

Fotii Krasysky: Guest from the Zaporizhia (oil, 1910)

Krasysky, Fotii [Krasyc'kyj, Fotij], b 24 August 1873 in Zelena Dibrova, Zvenyhorodka county, Kiev gubernia, d 2 June 1944 in Kiev. Painter, graphic artist, and pedagogue. Having studied with M. Pymonenko at the Kiev Drawing School (1888–92), with K. Kostandi at the Odessa Drawing School (1892–4), and with I. Repin at the St Petersburg Academy of Arts (1894–1901), he settled and worked in Kiev. From 1927 to 1937 he taught at the Kiev State Art Institute. A realist painter with an inclination towards impressionism, Krasysky produced a series of genre and landscape paintings with painstaking attention to ethnographic detail, including Beside the Well (1901), Guest from Zaporizhia (1901, variant 1916), Old Man, Beehives, At Dinner, Road to Kozatske Village (1899), and Kyrylivka Village (1901). His numerous portraits include M. Starytsky, M. Sadovsky, Lesia Ukrainka, M. Hrushevsky, I. Franko, T. Shevchenko, and a series devoted to Soviet writers (1933–4). He designed the stage sets for M. Lysenko's opera Christmas Night, performed in Kiev in 1903. His caricatures appeared in the satirical magazine Shershen' (1906) and in the handbook Rysuvannia i maliuvannia (Drawing and Painting, 1929).

Kraszewski, Józef, b 28 July 1812 in Warsaw, d 19 March 1887 in Geneva. Polish novelist, poet, dramatist, literary critic, historian, and journalist. A prolific writer, he is best known for his historical novels written in the Romantic spirit. He lived almost 20 years in rural Volhynia and acquired a deep sympathy for the Ukrainian peasantry and an intimate knowledge of its folkways. He wrote a cycle of novelettes dealing with the life of Ukrainian peasants, including such works as Historia Sawki (The Story of Savka, 1842), Ułana (1843), Ostap Bodnarczuk (1847), Jaryna (1850), Chata za wsią (The House beyond the Village, 1853–4), Jermota (1857), and Historia kołka w płocie (The Story about a Stake in the Fence, 1860). His observations about Ukraine were collected in Wspomnienia z Polesia, Wołynia i Litwy (Recollections from Polesia, Volhynia, and Lithuania, 1840). M. Starytsky's play Tsyhanka Aza (Aza the Gypsy) was based on Kraszewski's Chata za wsią. A number of Ukrainian writers, including T. Shevchenko and I. Franko, valued highly Kraszewski's literary works.

Krat, Mykhailo, b 6 August 1892 in Hadiache, Poltava gubernia, d 8 August 1979 in Detroit. Prominent Ukrainian army officer. After years of distinguished service in the Russian army, he joined the UNR Army in 1917, where he attained the rank of colonel. In 1917–18 he held various staff appointments and in 1919 commanded the Eighth Black Sea Regiment. In the First Winter Campaign, Krat was first chief of staff of the Third Iron Rifle Division and then of the Zaporozhian Division. After the war he was released from Polish internment and lived in Poland. In 1944–5, Krat served as a staff officer of the First Division of the Ukrainian National Army. Upon surrendering to the British, the division was interned and Krat was appointed commander of the POW camps near Bellaria and Rimini, Italy. During this time he was promoted to brigadier general by the UNR government-in-exile. After being released by the British, he immigrated to the United States.

Pavlo Krato

Krat, Pavlo (Crath, Paul), b 10 October 1882 in Krasna Luka, Hadiache county, Poltava gubernia, d 25 December 1952 in Toronto. Socialist and Protestant leader, writer, poet, journalist, and translator. Active in the Revolutionary Ukrainian party in Poltava gubernia in the years 1901–4, Krat helped to form the Ukrainian Social Democratic Union (Spilka) in 1905. He fled to Galicia during the 1905 Revolution and in 1906 enrolled at Lviv University, where he was arrested while agitating for a Ukrainian university.

In 1907 Krat escaped to Canada. There he became active in the Federation of Ukrainian Social Democrats in Canada (later the Ukrainian Social Democratic party) in Winnipeg and Toronto and edited the periodicals Chervonyi prapor (1907–8), Robochyi narod (1914–16), Robitnyche slovo, and Kadylo (1913–18). In 1914 he founded the Society for an Independent Ukraine, and in the years 1915–16 he translated for the Office of the Press Censor for Western Canada. Ordained as a Presbyterian minister in 1917, Krat became pastor of the Ukrainian Evangelical church in Toronto in 1918. From 1923 to 1938, as a missionary, he helped to organize the Ukrainian Evangelical Reformed church in Western Ukraine. He is the author of Robitnychi pisni (Workers' Songs, 1911), Vizyta 'Chervonoi druzhyny' (Visit of the 'Red Detachment,' 1912), Poslidnie khozhdeniie Boha po Zemli (God's Last Wanderings on Earth, 1915), Ukrains'ka starodavnist' (Ukrainian Antiquity, 1958), and other stories, satires, poems, translations, and articles.

Kratkaia letopis' Malyia Rossii (A Short Chronicle of Little Russia). A book published in 1777 by V. *Ruban in St Petersburg. The body of the book is a Cossack *chronicle covering the period from 1506 to 1734 that circulated widely in the mid-18th century in the Hetmanate. It was based on H. *Hrabianka's chronicle and perhaps a number of chronicles of the 16th–18th centuries. Known as Kratkoe opisanie Malorossii (A Short Description of Little Russia), it focused on the period from the Khmelnytsky uprising to the early 18th century and was later published as a supplement to the *Samovydets Chronicle. The anonymous compiler, who also wrote the section covering the years 1709–34 himself, was inspired by the idea of Ukrainian Cossack autonomism. A second section, by O. Bezborodko, provides an overview of events in Ukraine from 1735 to 1770 and summarizes the method of government in the Hetmanate. This includes a list of hetmans, senior Cossack officers, and tsarist generals and administrators in Ukraine, and is intended to raise the prestige of the Cossack starshyna in the Russian Empire. The final component of the book is Zemleopisania Malyia Rossii, which contains a description of the geography, administrative districts, population, and cities of Left-Bank Ukraine.

Kratko, Bernard, b 17 January 1884 in Warsaw, d 1 August 1960 in Kiev. Impressionist sculptor. Having studied art with K. Dunikowski at the Warsaw School of Fine Arts (1901–6), he worked as a sculptor in Warsaw and from 1916 in Petrograd. Settling in Ukraine, he became lecturer at the Kharkiv (1920–5) and Kiev (1925–35) art institutes. At the same time (1921–4) he was on the faculty of the Ukrainian State Academy of Arts in Kiev. He did many large busts for monuments: of T. Shevchenko in Kiev (1920, destroyed) and Kharkiv (1921), of H. Skovoroda in Skovorodyntsi (1923), of M. Zankovetska (1928), of M. Boichuk (1934), and of F. Krychevsky (1935). His works also include decorative bas-reliefs on the monument to the executed Decembrists in Kiev (1925) and on the portal of the Peasant Sanatorium in Odessa (1928). In 1937 Kratko was exiled to Central Asia, but he returned after the war, settled in Staline (now Donetsk), and resumed sculpting. The composition Miners (1946) and the monuments to Ya. Sverdlov in Yenakiieve (1951) and to Lenin in Cheliuskynets are examples of his later work.

Kratokhvyliia-Vidymska, Yuzefa [Kratokhvyliia-Vidyms'ka, Juzefa] (Polish: Kratochwila-Widymska, Józefa), b 18 May 1878 in Lviv, d 19 December 1965 in Lviv. Painter and graphic artist. Until 1918 she studied at the Higher Art School in Vienna, and then (1921–3) at the State School of Decorative Arts and Artistic Handicrafts in Lviv (painting under K. Sichulski and graphic arts under L. Tyrowicz). In 1934 she became a member of the Association of Lviv Graphic Artists. Her paintings are devoted to landscapes, portraits, and still lifes, and include such works as Still Life with a Violin (1931) and views of Paris, Dalmatia, and Salzburg. In her graphic work she used various techniques, and her favorite themes were the city of Lviv and the Hutsuls. The series Lviv Alleys, Old Lviv, and Old Lviv Stalls (1934–6) consist of etchings, drypoints, aquatints, and monoprints. Her monoprint series Hutsul Motifs (1930s) includes such masterpieces as Old Hutsul with Pipe, The Road to Church, Musicians from Vorokhta, Hutsul Girls, Bridesmaids, Church in Vorokhta, and The Lirnyk. She also did the monoprint series Winter in Lviv and Old Drohobych. Her works were exhibited often, not only in Lviv but also in Warsaw, Cracow, Stanyslaviv, Vienna, Kiev, and Kharkiv. H. Ostrovsky published a monograph on her in 1967.

Kravchenko, Ivan [Kravčenko], b 20 July 1899 in Dovhalivske, Bila Tserkva county, Kiev gubernia, d 18 February 1953. Party historian. A graduate of the Kiev Institute of People's Education (1924), he was a research associate of the Kiev Oblast State Archives (1928–37) and the AN URSR Central Scientific Library (1938–40). In 1935–6 he also headed the vUAN Historical-Archeological Institute that was established in 1934 to fight 'Ukrainian bourgeois historiography.' In 1944 he was sent to help 'Sovietize' Chernivtsi University, serving as a lecturer and then professor of Soviet history, dean of the history faculty, and finally the prorector of the university. Kravchenko wrote works on the economic history of 18th- and 19th-century Ukraine and on the history of the 1831 Polish uprising in Ukraine.

Mykhailo Kravchenko

Kravchenko, Mykhailo [Kravčenko, Myxajlo], b 1858 in Velyki Sorochyntsi, Poltava gubernia, d 21 April 1917 in Velyki Sorochyntsi. A famous folk *kobzar. Blind from the age of 15, he learned his craft from the kobzars S. Yashno and F. Hrytsenko-Kholodny. He performed at the 12th Russian Archeological Congress in Kharkiv and the All-Russian Cottage-Industry Exhibition in St Petersburg in 1902 and gave several concerts in Moscow, Kiev, Katerynoslav, and Poltava. Two of his own *dumas deal with the 1905 peasant uprising in Sorochyntsi. Lesia Ukrainka, V. Korolenko, O. Slastion, P. Martynovych, and particularly F. Kolessa recorded the dumas he sang. He taught the famous kobzar P. *Huz.

Uliana Kravchenko

Kravchenko, Uliana [Kravčenko, Uljana] (pen name of Yuliia Schneider), b 18 April 1860 in Mykolaiv, Zhydachiv county, Galicia, d 31 March 1947 in Peremyshl. Writer and village school teacher. Her first work – the story 'Kalytka' (The Purse) – was published in 1881 in the journal Zoria. As a writer she was strongly influenced by I. *Franko. She was active in the Ukrainian women's movement in Galicia, and much of her poetry deals with the theme of women's liberation. Her separate poetry collections are Prima vera (1885, 1925), Na novyi shliakh (Onto a New Road, 1891, 1928), V zhytti ie shchos' (There Is Something in Life, 1929), Dlia nei – vse! (For Her -- Everything! 1931), and Vybrani poezii (Selected Poems, 1941). Her poetry for children was published as the collections Prolisky (Anemones, 1921), V dorohu (On Our Way, 1921), Lebedyna pishnia (The Swan Song, 1924), and Shelesty nam barvinochku (Rustle for Us, Little Periwinkle, 1932). She also published the story Holos sertsia (Voice of the Heart, 1923), the collection of lyrical sketches Moi tsvity (My Flowers, 1933), and two volumes of memoiristic stories: Zamist' avtobiohrafii (Instead of An Autobiography, 1934) and Spohady uchytel'ky (Memoirs of a Teacher, 1935). Her autobiographic novella Khryzantemy (Chrysanthemums, 1961) was published posthumously in Chicago, as were two selected Soviet editions of her works (1956, 1958). A complete edition of her works appeared in Toronto in 1975.

D.H. Struk

Kravchenko, Vasyl [Kravčenko, Vasyl'], b 8 May 1862 in Berdianske, Tavriia gubernia, d 20 March 1945 in Rostovna-Donu, Russia. Ethnographer and writer. He was one of the founders of the Society of Researchers of Volhynia and the director of its ethnographic section. By the end of the 19th century he had amassed a considerable collection of ethnographic materials, part of which was published by B. Hrinchenko in his Etnograficheskie materialy sobrannyye v Chernigovskoi i sosednikh s nei guberniiakh (Ethnographic Materials Collected in Chernihiv and Neighboring Gubernias, 3 vols, 1895–9). Kravchenko directed the ethnographic department of the Volhynian Scientific Research Museum in Zhytomyr from 1920 to 1932, taught various courses there in 1922–4, and founded an ethnographic club (40 members) which published 13 issues of the handwritten journal Etnohraf. In 1932 Soviet authorities had him fired from his job and transferred to Dnipropetrovske. His house and private archives and library were confiscated. Later he was exiled to Russia. His primary works are Etnografichni materialy zibrani Kravchenkom Vasyl'om (Ethnographic Materials Collected by Vasyl Kravchenko, 1911–20) and the story collection Budenne zhyttia (Everyday Life, 1902).

Kravchenko, Viktor [Kravčenko], b 1905 in Katerynoslav, d 26 February 1966 in New York. Soviet defector. He served as director of several metallurgical enterprises in Ukraine and the Ural region. In 1943 he was sent to the United States as a member of the Soviet Purchasing Commission. In the following year he renounced his Soviet citizenship and wrote an autobiography, I Chose Freedom (1946), in which he exposed the terror and crimes committed by the Soviet regime. In 1949 Kravchenko filed a libel suit against the Communist magazine Les Lettres Françaises, which had called his book a fraud. He described the trial in his second book, I Chose Justice (1950). Living in continuous hiding and always fearful of Soviet vengeance, he committed suicide.

Kravchenko, Yevhen [Kravčenko, Jevhen], b 25 December 1907 in Volodymyrivka, Kherson gubernia, d 28 June 1975 in Kiev. Writer; literary and theater reviewer. He published over 12 plays (from 1939), over 10 collections of stories and humorous sketches (from 1954), and the novella Na svitanni (At Daybreak, 1967). Collections of his plays were published in 1957, 1959, 1961, 1962, and 1978.

Mykhailo Kravchuk

Antin Kravs

Kravchuk, Mykhailo [Kravčuk, Myxajlo], b 12 October 1892 in Chovnytsia, Lutske county, Volhynia, d 9 March 1942? Mathematician; full member of the AN URSR from 1929 and of the Shevchenko Scientific Society from 1925. A graduate of Kiev University (1914), he taught mathematics in various higher schools in Kiev before receiving his PH D from Kiev University in 1924 and joining the faculty there in 1925. In 1917 he compiled the first Ukrainian mathematics dictionary. He headed the VUAN Commission of Mathematical Statistics (1923–33), then directed the Section of Mathematical Statistics of the AN URSR Institute of Mathematics (1934–8). Kravchuk is regarded as one of the most influential Ukrainian mathematicians. He published more than 80 papers that made original contributions in such diverse fields as advanced algebra, mathematical analysis, differential and integral equations, analytic functions and functions of real variables, probability theory, mathematical statistics, problems of moments, and approximation methods. Kravchuk also wrote or coauthored several monographs, including Algebraichni studii nad analitychnymy funktsiamy (Algebraic Studies on Analytical Functions, 1929) and Zastosuvannia sposobu momentiv do rosiv'iazuvannia liniinykh ta intehral'nykh problem (The Application of the Method of Moments to the Solving of Linear and Differential Equations, 1932), and the textbook Vyshcha matematyka (Advanced Mathematics, 1934, with P. Kasianenko, S. Kulyk, V. Mozhar, and O. Smohorzhevsky). Kravchuk was arrested in 1938 and sent to a labor camp, where he presumably died. His name was 'rehabilitated' in the 1960s and he was the subject of two biographical novels by M. Soroka: Poet nimoho chysla (Poet of the Silent Number, 1967) and Mykhailo Kravchuk (1985).

V. Petryshyn

Kravets, Mykola [Kraveč'], b 24 November 1928 in Babice, Biłgoraj county, Poland. Historian. After graduating from the Lviv Pedagogical Institute in 1949, he worked as a teacher and principal in Volhynia. In 1955 he was appointed research associate of the AN URSR Institute of Social Sciences in Lviv. In 1968 he became head of the Chair of Ukrainian History at Lviv University. His works deal with the social history and historiography of Western Ukraine. They include Narysy robotnychoho rukhu v Zakhidnii Ukraïni v 1921–1939 rr. (Essays on the Workers' Movement in Western Ukraine in 1921–39, 1959), Selianstvo Skhidnoi Halychyny i pivnichnoi Bukovyny u druhii polovyni XIX st. (The Peasantry of Eastern Galicia and Northern Bukovyna in the Second Half of the 19th Century, 1964), and Ivan Franko – istoryk Ukraïny (Ivan Franko – A Historian of Ukraine, 1971).

Kravs, Antin, b 23 November 1871 in Berhomet, Bukovyna, d 13 November 1945 in Vienna. General of the Ukrainian Galician Army (UHA). A graduate of the cadet school in Vienna (1891), he served in the Austrian army, attaining by 1918 the rank of lieutenant colonel and command of the 55th Berezhany Infantry Regiment. With the collapse of the Austrian Empire, he volunteered in November 1918 to serve in the UHA and was appointed commander of the Khyriv Group, which later became the Sambir Brigade. In the spring of 1919 he was given command of the Third Corps, and in June 1919 was promoted to brigadier general. As commander of the Kiev Army Group, he captured Kiev on 30 August 1919. In 1920 Kravs commanded a unit of the Kherson Division of the UNR Army composed of UHA soldiers who had avoided capture by the Poles. Unwilling to fight alongside the Polish army, this unit left the UNR Army in August 1920 and made its way to Czechoslovakia, where it was interned until 1924. Kravs wrote a volume of memoirs: Za ukrains'ku spravu (For the Ukrainian Cause, 1937).

Bohdan Kravtsiv

Bohdan Krawchenko

Kravtsiv, Bohdan [Kravčiv], b 5 May 1904 in Lopianka, Dolyna county, Galicia, d 21 November 1975 in Rutherford, New Jersey. Poet, journalist, and community and political figure; full member of the Shevchenko Scientific Society. A member of the Ukrainian Military Organization and a student activist, he headed the Union of Ukrainian Nationalist Youth (1928–9). In the 1930s he edited several nationalist periodicals in Galicia – Visti, Holos natsii, and Holos – as well as the literary journals Dazhboh and Obrii. From 1940 to 1945 he edited the daily Holos in Berlin and other publications for Ukrainians working in Germany. In 1949 he immigrated to the United States, where he worked on the editorial boards of the newspapers Ameryka and Svoboda (from 1955). He served several times as the editor of the Plast journal Molode zhyttia and was a member of the editorial boards of the journal Suchasnist' and Entsyklopediia ukraïnoznavstva (Encyclopedia of Ukraine).

Kravtsiv's poetry was published in periodicals (beginning in 1922) and in the collections Doroĥa (The Road, 1929), Promeni (Rays, 1930), Sonety i strofy (Sonnets and Strophes, 1933), Ostannia osin' (The Last Autumn, 1940), Pid chuzhymy zoriamy (Under Foreign Stars, 1941), Korabli (Ships, 1948), Zymozelen' (Wintergreen, 1951), Dzveny-slava (1962), and Hlosarii (Glossary, 1974). From the 1930s on, his poetic style evolved towards a classicist form. He translated into Ukrainian 'The Song of Songs' (1934) and R.M. Rilke's poems, under the title Rechi i obrazy (Things and Images, 1947). He edited several key anthologies of poetry: Obirvani struny (Broken Strings, 1955), Poety chumats'koho shliakhu (Poets of the Milky Way, 1962), and Shistdesiat' poetiv shistdesiatykh rokiv (Sixty Poets of the Sixties, 1966). He also authored studies of contemporary Ukrainian literature, such as Na bahriianomu koni revoliutsii (On the Crimson Horse of the Revolution, 1960), as well as bibliographic guides and articles on old maps of Ukraine and old Ukrainian mythology. His collected works appeared posthumously in two volumes, Zibrani tvory (1978, 1980).

D.H. Struk

Krawchenko, Bohdan [Kravčenko], b 29 December 1946 in Gunsburg, Germany. Political economist. Educated at Bishop's University, the University of Toronto, Glasgow University, and Oxford University, Krawchenko was active in the multicultural and Ukrainian student movements of the late 1960s and early 1970s. In 1969–70 he was president of the *Ukrainian Canadian Students' Union (SUSK). Krawchenko joined the staff of the *Canadian Institute of Ukrainian Studies in 1976 and became director in 1986. A specialist on contemporary Ukraine and the USSR, he is the author of Social Change and National Consciousness in Twentieth-Century Ukraine (1985).

Peter Krawchuk

Krawchuk, Peter [Kračuk, Petro] (pseud.: Peter Arsen, Marko Terlytsia), b 6 July 1911 in Stoianiv, Radekhiv county, Galicia. Community leader, journalist, and author. He was active in Sel-Rob and the Communist Youth Association of Western Ukraine before immigrating to Canada in 1930. In Winnipeg he joined the Ukrainian Labour-Farmer Temple Association (ULFTA), the Workers' Benevolent Association, and the Communist Party of Canada. A member of the Young Communist League, Krawchuk was active before the Second World War in the ULFTA's youth section and in the Association to Aid the Liberation Movement in Western Ukraine. He worked on the editorial board of Ukrains'ke zhyttia (1946–65) and then Zhyttia i slovo. He opposed, on grounds of 'bourgeois nationalism' and collaboration with the enemy, the admission of Ukrainian refugees to Canada after the war. In the 1960s he criticized Soviet travel restrictions, Russification in Ukraine, and the Soviet invasion of Czechoslovakia, but did not comment on the Ukrainian dissident movement. Since 1979 he has been president of the pro-Communist Association of United Ukrainian Canadians. Krawchuk has written or edited some 15 books on the history and literature of Ukrainians in Canada.

Krawciw, Nicholas [Kravciv, Mykola], b 28 November 1935 in Lviv, Galicia. United States army general officer; son of B. *Kravtsiv. A graduate of the US Military Academy at West Point (1959), he served with distinction in Vietnam (1962–3 and 1968–9). He was appointed military observer in the Middle East: first for the Israel-Syria Mixed Armistice Commission and then for the United Nations Truce Supervision Organization (1972–4). Having served as assistant to the deputy secretary of defense (1982–3) and assistant division commander with US forces in West Germany (1984–5), he was promoted to major general and appointed executive to the Supreme Commander of NATO in Europe.

Nicholas Krawciw

Krechetnikov, Mikhail [Krečėtnikov, Mixail], b 1729, d 20 May 1793. Russian general and statesman. He fought in the Russo-Turkish wars and commanded the army that suppressed the *Koliivshchyna rebellion in 1768. In 1790 he replaced P. Rumiantsev as the governor-general of Little Russia (Left-Bank Ukraine). He commanded one of the armies that invaded Poland following the creation of the Torhovytsia Confederacy in 1792, and in 1793 he was named the governor-general of the Right-Bank Ukrainian territories acquired by Russia in the Second Polish Partition. He died soon afterwards.

Krein, Marko [Krejń], b 3 April 1907 in Kiev. Mathematician; corresponding member of the AN USSR since 1939. A graduate of the Odessa Institute of People's Education (1929), from 1934 to 1944 he taught at various technological institutes in Odessa and was associated with the Mathematics Research Institute at Kharkiv University. He then worked at the AN USSR Institute of Mathematics in Kiev (1944–51) and at the Odessa Civil Engineering Institute (1954–74). Since the early 1930s, Krein's fundamental contributions to functional analysis have made him one of the world's leading specialists in this area. He has done pioneering work on problems of moments and, in particular, the theory of Hermitian operators and its applications to the spectral theory of differential operators and scattering theory. Krein has also made some fundamental contributions to Sturm-Liouville problems, extrapolation theory, stability theory, and the solvability of boundary-value problems. Because of these contributions he is regarded as the founder of the functional analysis school in Ukraine, the first such school in the USSR.

Kreitsarova Biblioteka (The Kreutzer Library). A children's book series published from 1902 to 1908 by the Chernivtsi branch of the Ruska Shkola pedagogical association. Its editors were I. Karbulytsky, I. Syniuk, I. Iliuk, and D. Pihuliak.

Krekhiv Apostol. An important monument of literary Middle Ukrainian when it was most like the vernacular. It consists of the Acts and Epistles, translated in 1563–72 mostly from the Polish Bible of 1563, and a commentary. The 663-page manuscript was discovered in the Krekhiv Monastery in Galicia, and has been described by V. Lev, I. Ohienko, and J. Janow.

Krekhiv Monastery (Krekhivskyi Sviato-Mykolaiivskyi manastyr). Famous monastery in the village of Krekhiv in the Zhovkva region (now in Nesteriv raion, Lviv oblast). The monastery's patron saint was St Nicholas. It was founded at the beginning of the 17th century by the monk Yoil, and the large complex of churches and other structures was built in 1619–58. A stone wall surrounding the monastery was completed in 1669. In 1628 the monastery was granted the right of **stauropogion*, or autonomy, and at the beginning the 18th century it joined the Church Union of **Berestia*.

Krekhiv Monastery; engraving by D. Sinkevych (1699)

The Krekhiv Monastery is a typical Ukrainian wooden monastery-fortress. Its early patrons included the hetmans B. Khmelnytsky, P. Doroshenko, and I. Mazepa. The Church of the Assumption and its bell tower, dating from 1658, which were moved to the village of Krekhiv in 1775, are excellent examples of wooden church architecture of the period. There is a valuable iconostasis by the artist Vasyl from Lviv and a famous woodcut of the monastery by D. Sinkevych (1699). The monastery had a large library, which housed the famous **Krekhiv Apostol* and **Krekhiv Paleia*. From 1902 it was the novitiate for the Basilian order in Galicia. Its two famous icons, one of the Virgin Mary and one of St Nicholas, attracted many pilgrims. Under Soviet rule the monastery was closed; its towers and walls were dismantled and many of its artistic treasures were destroyed.

Krekhiv Paleia. A monument of 15th-century Ukrainian apocryphal literature. It was discovered in the Krekhiv Monastery by I. Franko, who published a description of it and some excerpts in his Pam'iatky ukrains'ko-rus'koi movy i literatury (Monuments of the Ukrainian-Ruthenian Language and Literature, 1906).

Krekhovetsky, Ivan [Krexovec'kyj], b and d? Galician nobleman and Cossack officer. Krekhovetsky conducted several diplomatic missions for B. Khmelnytsky: to Poland (1650), Transylvania (1655), and Sweden (1656). He was later colonel of Korsun regiment (1658), then general judge under Hetman P. Teteria (1665). He was captured by I. Briukhovetsky's forces in Korsun in 1665 and exiled to Moscow.

Kremar, Roman (pseud of Mykhailo Solodukha), b 5 February 1885 in Verbytsi, Rava Ruska county, Galicia, d 13 January 1953 in Edmonton. Journalist. A lawyer educated at the University of Lviv and a socialist sympathizer, Kremar emigrated to Edmonton in 1909. As secretary of the **Federation of Ukrainian Social Democrats in Canada* in 1910, he quarreled with the editors of Robochyi narod in Winnipeg and precipitated a schism in 1911 by publishing his own paper, Nova hromada, and organizing a rival **Federation of Ukrainian Socialists in Canada* (FUS). Within a year both the paper and the FUS collapsed and Kremar left the socialist camp. Between January 1913 and October 1918 he edited the newspaper Novyny, and in 1918–19 the Ukrainian Catholic Kanadiis'kyi rusyn. Later he edited Kanadiis'kyi ukrainets'.

Kremenchuk [Kremenčuk]. IV-14. City (1986 pop 227,000), raion center, and river port in Poltava oblast, situated on both banks of the Dnieper River; until 1796 the settlement on the Right Bank was the separate town of Kriukiv. Kremenchuk was founded in 1571. A Polish castle was built there in 1596. In the Hetman state the town was a Cossack company center in Chyhyryn regiment (1648–61, 1663–7), the capital of a separate Kremenchuk regiment (1661–3), and a company center in Myrhorod regiment (1667–1765). Under Russian rule it was the capital of New Russia gubernia in 1765–83 and the administrative center of Katerynoslav vicegerency in 1784–9; thereafter it was a county center from 1802 to 1920 in Poltava gubernia.

In the second half of the 19th century, Kremenchuk became an important trade and manufacturing center. Consequently its population grew from 24,000 in 1860 to 63,000 in 1897 and 88,400 in 1910. In 1913 it had 95 enterprises, which employed almost half (6,000) of the industrial workers in Poltava gubernia. Under Soviet rule the city was a gubernia capital in 1920–2, an okruha capital in 1922–30, and a raion center in Kharkiv oblast in 1932–7. In 1937 it became part of Poltava oblast. After the 1917 Revolution its economy declined, and in 1926 its population was only 58,800 (40.6 percent Ukrainian, 49.2 percent Jewish, and 8.4 percent Russian). Its economy revived during the period of industrialization in the 1930s, and by 1939 its population had grown to 89,700. During the Second World War the city was devastated, and much of its Jewish population perished in the Nazi Holocaust. After the war the city was extensively reconstructed, and its population increased to 93,000 in 1959 and 166,000 in 1970.

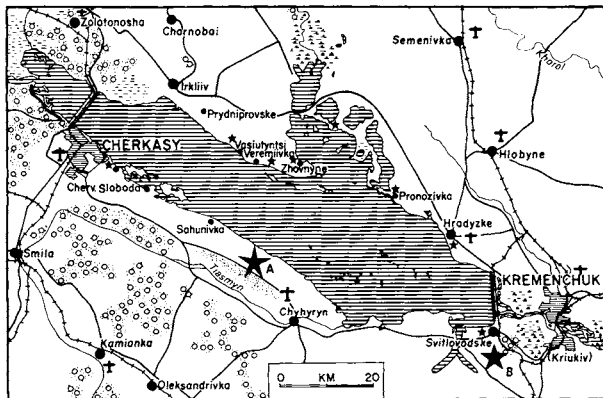

Today Kremenchuk is an important center of heavy industry, with six truck plants, the **Kriukiv Freight-Car Plant*, a mineral-enrichment complex, a petroleum refinery, and plants producing petrochemicals, steel, road-building machines, wheels, silicates, and reinforced-concrete sleepers. Food products, clothing, furniture, leather goods, and footwear are also manufactured there. Institutions in the city include an all-Union planning and technology institute of freight-car construction, a branch of the Kharkiv Polytechnical Institute, a regional-history museum, the A. Makarenko Pedagogical-Memorial Museum, and a civil-aviation pilots' school. Most of its architectural monuments were destroyed during the Second World War.

Kremenchuk Hydroelectric Station (Kremenčutska HES). One of the largest stations of the **Dnieper Cascade* of Hydroelectric Stations. It was built in 1954–60 near Kremenchuk and has a general output capacity of 625,000 kW, producing annually an average of 1.5 billion kWh. The station's 12 generating plants, one-chamber shipping lock, concrete dam, and several earthen levees occupy a 12.6-km-long pressure front. The station is the first in the USSR to operate without an engine room; its generators are built beneath special metal hoods, and all operations are automated. The Kremenchuk Reservoir was created with the completion of the station's dam.

Kremenchuk Iron-ore Region. A major iron-ore deposit located in Poltava oblast. The geological continuation of the *Kryvyi Rih Iron-ore Basin onto the Left Bank of the Dnieper River, the Kremenchuk Basin is a narrow strip 45 km long and 1–3.5 km wide. In 1968 its reserves were estimated at 2 billion t (6.1 percent of Ukraine's total iron-ore reserves). Three of the basin's four known deposits contain ferruginous quartzites with an average iron content of 35 percent. These deposits reach a depth of 300 m. The fourth deposit contains rich martite and hematite-martite ores with an average iron content of 58.2 percent. This deposit reaches a depth of 2,000 m or more. First discovered in 1928, the deposits were initially exploited in the 1950s. The huge Komsomolsk pit, which yielded its first ore in 1970 and now approaches 200 meters, produced 34 million t of crude ore in 1984. The crude ore was converted into 14 million t of concentrate at the Dnieper Mineral-Enrichment Complex, accounting for 11.4 percent of total Ukrainian production.

Kremenchuk Petroleum Refinery (Kremenchutskyi naftopererobnyi zavod). One of the largest petroleum refineries in Ukraine, located near Kremenchuk, Poltava oblast. Construction of the plant began in 1961, and it is still being enlarged. The principal products are gasoline, diesel fuel, fuel oil, gas, and a number of petrochemicals.

KREMENCHUK RESERVOIR

- A. Site of future atomic power station
- B. Hydroelectric station

Kremenchuk Reservoir. The largest water reservoir located on the Dnieper River, covering an area of 2,250 sq km on the territories of Poltava, Cherkasy, and Kirovohrad oblasts. The reservoir was formed as a result of the construction of the *Kremenchuk Hydroelectric Station in 1959. It is 149 km long and up to 28 km wide (with an average width of 13.2 km), and averages 6 m in depth. Its water volume is 13.5 billion cu m. The reservoir is used for irrigation, flood control, fishing, and transport. Its principal ports are Cherkasy and Svitlovodske.

Kremianets: Bona Mountain with ruins of a castle

Kremianets or Kremenets [Krem'janec' or Kremenec']. III-6. City (1972 pop 20,300) and raion center in Ternopil oblast. It is located on the site of Ostra Hora, one of the oldest known settlements in Ukraine, which dates from the Paleolithic period. Unearthed Greek and Roman coins indicate that inhabitants in the area had trade relations with the Dnieper region in ancient times. Kremianets was first mentioned in the Hypatian Chronicle under the year 1226. It was one of the strongholds of the Principality of Galicia-Volhynia and withstood several sieges, by Hungarians, Poles, Mongols, and Tatars, before being destroyed in 1261. In 1366 it came under Lithuanian rule. In 1438 it was granted the rights of Magdeburg law. The town flourished in the 15th and 16th centuries. During the years 1536–66 it belonged to the Polish queen Bona, who strengthened its castle and expanded the town. Under Polish rule from 1569, Kremianets was a county town in Volhynia voivodeship and played an important role in Poland's wars against the Tatars and Turks. The Orthodox Epiphany Monastery – with a brotherhood school, printing press, and hospital – was founded there in 1633 (in the years 1725–1839 it was a Uniate monastery run by the Basilian monks). In 1648, during the Cossack-Polish War, it was captured by the Cossacks. From the second half of the 17th century the town declined.

In 1793 Kremianets came under Russian rule; from 1797 to 1917 it was a county town in Volhynia gubernia. With the establishment of the *Kremianets Lyceum, the town became an important cultural center in the first half of the 19th century and was known as the 'Volhynian Athens.' In 1895 it had 13,300 inhabitants, 5,300 of whom were Jews. In 1919 UNR and Bolshevik forces battled each other for its control. From 1920 to 1939 the town belonged to Poland. Kremianets was an important Orthodox center: it was an eparchial see and located there were a theological seminary, a brotherhood (revived in 1880), and a religious press, which published the periodicals *Dukhovnyi siiiach and *Pravoslavna Volyn' and liturgical books. It was also an educational center for western Volhynia; a Ukrainian gymnasium and Polish secondary schools were located there.

Today Kremianets has several food-processing and textile plants. Among its institutions are a forestry tekhnikum, a pedagogical school, a medical school, a vocational-technical school, and a regional museum. The city is rich in architectural monuments: ruins of a castle (13th–17th centuries); the Epiphany Monastery (built in the baroque style in 1633); St Nicholas's Cathedral (1636); a Jesuit building complex (built in 1731–43), including a lyceum, college, and church; and a number of religious and residential buildings of the 16th to 18th centuries.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Elhart, B. Kremianets'. Istoryko-kraieznavchyi narys (Lviv 1969)
V. Kubijovyč

Kremianets Grammar. A grammar compiled in 1638 by an anonymous author under the probable sponsorship of the brotherhood school at the Kremianets Epiphany Monastery and published as Hrammatiky yly pysmennytsa iazyka slovenskaho. It is a radically abridged version of M. Smotrytsky's grammar with some modifications, particularly in the theory of verse. Only six copies of the book have been preserved. The text was reprinted with comments by O. Horbach in 1977.

Kremianets Lyceum. A Polish higher school in Kremianets, formed in 1819 out of the local gymnasium, which had been established in 1805 by T. Czacki to serve as a university for the young nobles of the Kiev region, Podolia, and Volhynia. The reorganization of the school into a lyceum did not entail any significant change in its program. It offered a general education consisting of four one-year grades (languages, mathematics, geography, calligraphy) and three upper two-year grades (languages, theology, history, algebra, geometry, trigonometry, botany, physics, chemistry, mineralogy, civil architecture, and technology). Besides Polish, which was the language of instruction, Russian, Latin, and German were taught (English and Greek were optional). The lyceum had a large library and several natural science collections. Members of its faculty, such as A. Andrzejowski and W. Besser, did some important research on the fauna and flora in Right-Bank Ukraine. Most of the students were Poles: in 1821 only 34 of the 600 enrolled students were Ukrainian. Because many of the lyceum students took part in the Polish uprising of 1830–1, the authorities closed the school and in 1832 transferred its library, collections, and faculty to Kiev, where they became the foundation on which Kiev University was established. In the 1920s another lyceum was established in Kremianets by the Polish authorities. It was a secondary-school complex consisting of a teachers' seminary, gymnasium, and vocational schools.

Kremianets Mountains. Chain of low mountains in the northern part of the Podolian Upland in Ternopil oblast. The Kremianets Mountains extend approx 20 km between the valleys of the Ikva and Viliia rivers. They rise to 300–400 m above sea level (the highest peak reaches 408 m), or 150–200 m in relative height. The mountains are highly eroded, built mostly of chalk, clay, sand, and limestone. They include low mountain chains, outliers, and flat plateaus separated by river valleys, ravines, and gullies. In the north, they descend in a steep incline to the plains of Little Polisia. They are located in the northern region of the forest-steppe and are covered partly with oak, elm, and pine forests and partly with steppe vegetation. Agriculture is well developed in the area. The mountains are especially famous for their picturesque landscapes.

Kremianetsky, Havryil [Kremjanec'kyj, Havryjil] (secular name: Hryhorii), b ca 1715 in Nosivka, Kiev regiment, d 9 August 1783 in Kiev. Orthodox church figure and metropolitan. After studying at the Kievan Mohyla Academy, Kharkiv College, and the Moscow Greek-Slavonic-Latin Academy, he was a professor and rector of the Aleksandro-Neviskii Seminary in St Petersburg (1743–8) and then archimandrite of the Novospaskii Monastery in Moscow (1748–9). A member of the Holy Synod from 1748, Kremianetsky was bishop of Kolomna (1749–55) and Kazan (1755–62) and archbishop of St Petersburg (1762–70) before being appointed metropolitan of Kiev, a post he held until his death. He wilfully implemented the government's and Holy Synod's Russification policy and tried to destroy the individuality of the Ukrainian church and its traditions. He is the author of Pouchenie o obriadakh khrystianskikh ... ili Slovo k narodu kafolicheskomu (A Sermon on Christian Rites ... or A Word to the Catholic People, 1779).

Kreminna. IV-19, DB 1-4. City (1972 pop 25,000) and raion center in Voroshylovhrad oblast, situated on the Krasna River. A group of Don Cossacks settled there in 1680, followed by peasants from Right-Bank Ukraine. In 1688 a company of Iziium regiment was established there. Coal was discovered nearby in the late 19th century and many of the town's inhabitants began to work in the mines. The city is still a coal-mining center. Furniture, household-products, and building-materials plants are located there, and natural gas is extracted nearby. Kreminna is also a center of the logging and woodworking industries.

Kremnov, Oleh [Kremn'ov], b 13 March 1919 in Kriukiv (now part of Kremenchuk), Poltava gubernia. Specialist in theoretical and industrial thermodynamics; since 1976 a full member of the AN URSR. A graduate of the Kiev Polytechnical Institute, from 1949 he has worked at the AN URSR Institute of Technical Thermophysics. His main publications deal with the intensification of heat and mass transfer, the use of geothermal and solar energy, and heat management in mines.

Krendovsky, Yevhraf [Krendovs'kyj, Jevhraf], b 1810 in Kremenchuk, Poltava gubernia, d after 1853 in Kremenchuk. Painter of Venetsianov's school. A student of A. Stupin at the Arzamas Art School and of A. Venetsianov, he attended drawing classes at the St Petersburg Academy of Art (1830–5) and attained the title of independent artist (1839). He settled in Manuilivka, Poltava gubernia, and taught painting. Most of his works were done in Ukraine. They include Pipe Players (1835), Gathering for the Hunt (1836), Square of a Provincial Town, A Ukrainian Woman, and Girl Friends. He spent the last years of his life in Kremenchuk, where he ran his own art school.

Krestianskii Pozemelnyi Bank. See Peasant Land Bank.

Krett, James [Kret, Jakiv], b 1883 in Pechenizhyn, Komyia county, Galicia, d 23 May 1965 in Winnipeg. Editor and lexicographer. Krett studied at Manitoba College and was briefly associated with the *Independent Greek Church. In 1911 he edited Khata, an illustrated journal of literature, politics, and contemporary affairs. The following year he published the first pocket-sized Ukrainian-English dictionary in Canada. He later assisted C.H. Andrusyshen in compiling the Ukrainian-English Dictionary (1955).

Ivan Krevetsky

Krevetsky, Ivan [Krevec'kyj], b 14 October 1883 in Ivanivtsi, Zhydachiv county, Galicia, d 27 June 1940 in Rozdil, Zhydachiv county. Historian and bibliographer; full member of the Shevchenko Scientific Society (NTSh) from 1907. After studying with M. Hrushevsky at Lviv University, he directed the NTSh library in Lviv (1905–14, 1921–37) and edited its historical monthly Stara Ukraina (1924–5). He also edited the journal Nasha shkola in Lviv (1909–12) and Respublyka, the press organ of the Western Ukrainian National Republic in Stanyslaviv (1919). Krevetsky published some 40 articles on Galician history, mainly in the journal Zapysky NTSh. Many of these dealt with the Revolution of 1848–9 in Galicia, especially with the organization of Ukrainian military units, the attempts to divide Galicia between the Poles and Ukrainians, and the election of 1848. He also wrote the monograph Agrarni straiky i boikoty u skhidnii Halychyni v 1848–1849 rr.: Do istorii borot'by za suspil'no-ekonomichne vyzvolenie ukrains'kykh mas u skhidnii Halychyni (Agrarian Strikes and Boycotts in Eastern Galicia in 1848–9: Toward the History of the Struggle for the Socioeconomic Liberation of the Ukrainian Masses in Eastern Galicia, 1906) and several articles on the history of the Ukrainian press in Galicia and on Ukrainian historiography. Krevetsky also contributed entries on the press to Ukrains'ka zahal'na entsyklopediia (Ukrainian General Encyclopedia, 1930–5).

A. Zhukovsky

Krevo, Union of (Ukrainian: Krevska uniiia). A treaty between the Kingdom of Poland and the Grand Duchy of Lithuania, signed 14 August 1385 (in Krevo, now in the Belorussian SSR). It created a dynastic link of the two states through a marriage between the Polish queen Jadwiga and the Lithuanian prince Jagiełło. It also united the two countries in their struggle against the invading *Teutonic knights. With the Union of Krevo, Ukrainian and Belorussian lands under the rule of Lithuania were incorporated into the Kingdom of Poland. Ukrainian and Belorussian nobles opposed the union, but to no avail.

Krezub, Antin. See Dumin, Osyp.

Krilyk, Osyp. See Vasylykiv, Osyp.

Kripatstvo. See Serfdom.

Kripenskyi [Kripens'kyj]. v-20, DB III-6. Town smt (1979 pop 9,700) under the jurisdiction of the Anratsyt city soviet in Voroshylovhrad oblast. It was founded in the early 20th century. Now three coal mines are located there.

Kriukiv. See Kremenchuk.

Kriukiv Freight-Car Plant (Kriukivskyi vahonobudivnyi zavod). A manufacturing plant located in Kremenchuk, Poltava oblast. It was founded in 1896 in Kriukiv, now a suburb of Kremenchuk. Until 1926 the plant only repaired railway cars on the Kharkiv-Mykolaiv railroad. Since that time it has also manufactured cars. Now the plant produces primarily 4-axle universal and 8-axle grain and cement cars.

Borys Kriukov: Self-Portrait (oil, 1963)

Kriukov, Borys [Krjukov], b 19 January 1895 in Orgeev, Bessarabia gubernia, d 6 March 1967 in Buenos Aires. Painter. A student of F. *Krychevsky at the Kiev Art School (1913–17), he taught painting and drawing at that school. Concentrating on graphic art, in the interwar period he illustrated over 500 books and was recognized as one of the leading graphic artists in Ukraine. From 1923 he also designed sets for the Kiev Theater of Opera and Ballet. In 1943 he immigrated to Lviv, then to Cracow, and in 1944 to Austria, where he painted under the pseudonym Ivan Usatenko. In 1948 he settled in Buenos Aires and returned to book graphics. As the chief illustrator of the large Argentinian printing house Ateneo, he illustrated such world classics as Arabian Nights (1950), Dante's Divine Comedy (1952), and M. de Cervantes's Don Quixote (1952–4), and the selected works of E. A. Poe, A. France, and E. Zola. His work for Don Quixote won first prize in 1964 at an international art competition in Madrid. His caricatures appeared in the Ukrainian humor magazine Mitla and in a separate collection Smikholina (Laughter, 1966). Kriukov also executed a number of icons and mosaics in local Ukrainian churches. His canvases, depicting romantic heroes from many lands, including Ukrainian Cossacks, were done by various techniques, mostly in oil. Kriukov's works can be found in Argentina, the United States, and many European countries, where his exhibitions were held. A monograph about him in Ukrainian, Spanish, and English was published by his wife, O. Hurska, in 1970.

S. Hordynsky

Krivichians (Ukrainian: Kryvychi). An Eastern Slavic tribe (or union of tribes) of the 6th–9th centuries AD, mentioned in the chronicles of Kievan Rus'. They lived along the upper reaches of the Dnieper, western Dvina, and Volga rivers, and in the southern basin of Chudskoe (Peipus) Lake in the Baltic region. The Krivichians migrated there either from the south in the 6th century or possibly from the west in the 8th century. Their principal cities were Smolensk, Polatsk, Izborsk, Toropetsk, Kryvychi, and, possibly, Pskov. They apparently engaged in trade with Byzantium. Their primary occupations were farming and cattle breeding and some crafts. At the end of the 9th century the Krivichian territories were incorporated into Kievan Rus'. Their lands were transformed into the Smolensk and Polatsk principalities; the northwestern portion of their territory was absorbed by Novgorod principality. They took part in the campaigns of *Oleh and *Ihor against Constantinople. The Krivichians (together with the *Drehovichians) are the ancestors of the Belorussians and Russians.

Križanić, Juraj, b ca 1618 in Obrh, Croatia, d 12 September 1683 in Vienna. Croatian political thinker, writer, linguist, and Catholic missionary. He studied in Graz, Bologna, and Rome. While in Rome he met Ukrainians who were studying at the Collegium Graecum and developed an interest in Old Church Slavonic, Kievan Rus', and Ukrainian folklore. Križanić was a pan-Slav who hoped to create a federated Slavic state led by a reformed Muscovy; he even devised a 'Slavic Esperanto' called Križanica, which he used to write most of his works. In 1659, on his way to Moscow, he spent a few months traveling in Ukraine writing two accounts that contain valuable information on the everyday lives of Ukrainians and arguments that Ukrainians, like all Slavs, should strengthen their ties with Muscovy. In Moscow he served at the court of Tsar Aleksei, but he was eventually arrested and exiled to Siberia, although he was allowed to continue writing. In his writings he argued that Muscovy should accept a Church Union with Rome. He also criticized the *Normanist theory of Kievan Rus' history.

Križevci eparchy. Greek Catholic eparchy in Yugoslavia that takes its name from its see, located in southern Croatia. It was founded in 1777 by Pope Pius VI on the urging of Maria Theresa out of the Marče-Svidnik vicariate of the Roman Catholic diocese of Zagreb. This diocese had been established in the 17th century out of a separate Uniate eparchy founded in 1611, when Bishop Simeon Vratania accepted the Church Union along with his faithful, Orthodox émigrés from Bosnia and Montenegro. Prominent Ukrainians active in the eparchy in the 18th century included M. Terletsky, who later became the bishop of Kholm; H. Buló, the eparchy's vicar in the 1730s; and Bishop H. Palkovych (1751–9) (the last two were from Transcarpathia).

In addition to the Greek Catholics of Croatia, the eparchy had jurisdiction over the Ukrainians in the *Bačka region, which included parishes in Ruski Krstur and Kočura, and Slovenia (from the late 19th century). In 1920 Ukrainians in Bosnia and Greek Catholic Macedonians (in Macedonia) and Rumanians (in the Banat) were also placed under its jurisdiction. While all the eparchy's bishops in the 19th century were Croatians, since then a number of Ukrainians have held this post: Yu. Drohobetsky (1891–1920), who was born in the Prešov region; and D. *Niaradi (1920–40), Archbishop H. *Bukatko (1950–81), and Y. Segedi (1981–3), all from Ruski Krstur. Since 1983 the bishop has been S. Miklovsh.

Today, all 50,000 Greek Catholics in Yugoslavia are under Križevci eparchy, including 35,000 Ukrainians, 10,000 Croatians, 4,000 Macedonians, and a few hundred Rumanians. There are 50 parishes, of which 30 are Ukrainian, 13 are Croatian, 8 are Macedonian, and 1 is Rumanian. The eparchy operates a theological seminary in Zagreb. Located in Kula are a Basilian men's monastery, 11 Ukrainian women's monasteries (6 of the Basilian order and 5 under the Sister Servants of Mary Immaculate), and 5 other women's monasteries. Since 1969 the annual Khrystians'kyi kalendar has been published in Ukrainian and in the local Ruthenian dialect.

M. Busko, R. Miz

Krman, Daniel (aka Kerman), b 28 August 1663 in Mšeno, Trenčín district, Slovakia, d 23 September 1740 in Bratislava. Slovak scholar, writer, and civic figure. As the representative of the Evangelical church on a diplomatic mission to King Charles XII of Sweden, who was then at war with Peter I of Russia, he visited Ukraine in 1708–9 and left a detailed account of the visit in his diary Itinerarium (1709–11). He devotes considerable space to Hetman I. *Mazepa, whom he saw frequently, his negotiations with Charles, and the Battle of Poltava. He describes the Cossack army, the culture and way of life of the Ukrainian population, and the natural environment. The 256-page manuscript, which has been published a number of times in Latin and in Slovak translation, is preserved at the State Archive in Prešov. Krman was arrested for anti-Habsburg activity, sentenced to death, and executed.

Kroitor, Roman [Krojtor], b 12 December 1926 in Yorkton, Saskatchewan. Leading Canadian filmmaker of Ukrainian descent. Upon graduating from the University of Manitoba (MA 1949) he joined the National Film Board of Canada. One of his first films, Paul Tomkowicz (1954), which deals with the life of a Canadian railway worker, is recognized as a milestone in the development of the documentary film. Another of his early films, City of Gold, a chronicle of the Yukon gold rush, was acclaimed for its innovative camera work. In 1960 he co-produced Universe, a pioneer film on space exploration, which won numerous awards and had a strong influence on S. Kubrick's title sequence to 2001: A Space Odyssey. In the early 1960s, with W. Koenig, he produced and directed Candid Eye, the world's first cinema vérité television series. Kroitor's Labyrinth (1967), a multi-image film created for Expo 67 in Montreal, was an enormous success and eventually led to the formation of Imax Systems Corporation, of which he is senior vice-president and director. At Imax he produced Tiger Child for Expo 70 in Osaka and co-produced Man Belongs to the Earth for the 1974 World's Fair at Spokane and Hail Columbia (1982), employing in all of them the revolutionary giant screen IMAX system, which he had helped design. A restless innovator, he produced and directed the first OMNIMAX 3-D movie, We Are Born of Stars, for Expo 85 and A Freedom to Move for Expo 86. His latest film, of which he is executive producer, is Heart Land (1987).

Krokhmaliuk, Yurii. See Tys, Yurii.

Krokos, Volodymyr, b 26 June 1889 in Odessa, d 28 November 1936 in Odessa. Geologist. A graduate of Odessa University (1912), he worked at the Odessa Agricultural Institute and Odessa University before becoming an associate of the VUAN Geological Institute (1926–36), later the AN URSR Institute of Geological Sciences. He also served on the faculty of Kiev University. Krokos was a specialist in mammal paleontology and the geology of the Quaternary period. His publications include numerous papers; the monographs Materialy do kharakterystryky chetvertynnykh pokladiv Skhidnoi ta Pivdennoi Ukrainy (Materials toward a Characterization of the Quaternary Deposits of Eastern and Southern Ukraine, 1927), and Kurs paleozoologii (A Course in Paleozoology, 2 vols, 1931, 1936); and the popular survey Zemlia (ii pokhodzhennia i naidavnisha istoriia) (The Earth [Its Origins and Earliest History], 1936).

Krokovsky, Yoasaf [Krokovs'kyj, Joasaf], b ?, d 1 July 1718 in Tver. Orthodox theologian and metropolitan of Kiev. He studied in the Kievan Mohyla College until 1673 and in Rome. He was prefect (1683–5), lecturer in theology (1689–93), and rector (1693–7) of the college, which under his leadership was transformed into the *Kievan Mohyla Academy in 1694. He was also hegumen of the Kiev St Nicholas's Monastery (1689–93) and the Kiev Epiphany Brotherhood Monastery (1693–7), and from 1697 archimandrite of the Kievan Cave Monastery. In 1707, with the support of Hetman I. Mazepa, he was elected metropolitan of Kiev. In 1708, on the orders of Tsar Peter I, he was abducted because he 'was known to be a supporter of Mazepa' and taken to Hlukhiv, where he was forced to take part in the pronouncement of anathema on Mazepa. In 1718 Peter I suspected him of opposition and summoned him to St Petersburg; however, he died under mysterious circumstances in Tver en route. Krovovsky wrote a rhetoric textbook for use at the Kievan College (1683), the philosophical work Disputationes logicae per consonam dispositionem Organi Aristotelici (1686), Tractus theologiae speculative et theologiae controversae (1693–7), and several shorter works.

Metropolitan Yoasaf Krovovsky (portrait from the 18th century)

Krolevets [Krolevec']. II-14. Town (1970 pop 18,300) and raion center in Sumy oblast. Established in 1601, it was mentioned in 1638 in Hetman Ya. Ostrianyn's decree as a county town. In 1644, under Polish rule, it was granted the rights of Magdeburg law and was fortified. Under the Hetman state it was a company center in the Nizhen regiment (1650–1781). Under Russian rule it was a county town in Chernihiv gubernia (beginning in 1802). In the 18th and 19th centuries it was an important commercial center as the site of a large annual fair. Since the 16th century Krolevets and its vicinity have been known for their decorative weaving of embroidered cloths (rushnyky), shirts, kerchiefs, and spreads. In the Soviet period this cottage industry was replaced by a weaving artel and, in the 1960s, by a factory. A trade school trains future artisans. The city's industries also produce metal parts, moldings, bricks, hemp products, and foodstuffs.

Krone (crown; Ukrainian: korona). The basic monetary unit of the Austro-Hungarian Empire from 1892, when it replaced the gulden (1 gulden for 2 krone). A krone was divided into 100 haller. In 1913 the krone was equal to 0.20 US dollars. After the establishment of the UNR in 1918, the Central Rada and the Central Powers fixed the exchange rate between the Austrian gold krone and the Ukrainian gold **karbovanets* at the 1913 foreign-exchange level of the tsarist ruble: ie, 1 krone (valued at 0.3018 gram of gold) for 0.4 karbovanets. After the collapse of the Austro-Hungarian Empire, Austria and Hungary each issued separate krone until 1924, when the schilling became the basic monetary unit in Austria and the pengő in Hungary. In Czechoslovak-ruled Transcarpathia (1918–38), the basic monetary unit from 1919 was the Czechoslovak koruna. It was based on the Swiss franc and the American dollar until 1929 when it was placed on the gold standard (1 koruna equal to 0.04458 gram of gold).

Krontovsky, Oleksii [Krontovs'kyj, Oleksij], b 24 March 1855 in Penza, Russia, d 15 August 1933 in Kiev. Physician and pathologist. He graduated from Kiev University (1911) and was a professor of bacteriology there from 1921. From 1924 he was also associated with the Kiev institutes of Bacteriology and Roentgenology. Krontovsky wrote a number of works in the fields of oncology, the pathology of heredity, endocrinology, and regeneration. He studied the influence of x-rays and bacterial toxicosis on the growth of tissues, and was one of the first to work on methods of cultivating tissues outside of living organisms.

Kropyviansky, Mykola [Kropyv'jans'kyj], b 28 December 1889 in Volodkova Divytsia, Nizhen county, Chernihiv gubernia, d 21 October 1948 in Nizhen. Soviet military commander and state security officer. A colonel major of the tsarist army, he was a communist organizer on the southwestern front in 1917. After the October Revolution he served as commander of the Twelfth Army Corps, chief of staff of the Second Ukrainian Soviet Army, commander of the First Ukrainian Soviet Division, commander of the 60th Rifle Division and then the 47th Rifle Division, and chief of staff of the Twelfth Army. In 1921–8 Kropyviansky commanded special counter-insurgency troops in Ukraine. Subsequently he served as a senior inspector of border troops and as a senior official in the USSR Ministry of Internal Affairs.

Marko Kropyvnytsky

Kropyvnytsky, Marko [Kropyvnyts'kyj], b 22 May 1840 in Bezhbairaky (now Kropyvnytske), Yelysavet county, Kherson gubernia, d 21 April 1910 en route from Mykolaiv to Kharkiv, buried in Kharkiv. Renowned actor, stage director, playwright, and composer; a founder and director of the first professional Ukrainian theater in Russian-ruled Ukraine. Working as a petty official of the county court or the municipal government in Bobrynets and Yelysavet, for 10 years he was active as an actor and play director in amateur drama groups with I. Tobilevych (see I. *Karpenko-Kary). In 1871 he moved to Odessa and joined the professional theater of Russian popular drama owned by the brothers I. and D. Morkov and M. Chernyshov, where he played mostly the roles of Ukrainian characters. For the next decade he worked in Ukrainian and Russian provincial troupes, appearing mostly in Odessa, Kharkiv, Kherson, Yelysavet, and Katerynoslav, and occasionally in Galicia (1875), the Crimea, and St Petersburg (1874). In 1882 Kropyvnytsky organized his own troupe in Yelysavet. As the first Ukrainian professional troupe, it marks the beginning of a new period in the history of the Ukrainian theater. Drawing on the talent of such actors as M. Zankovetska, M. Sadovsky, L. Manko, O. Viryna, and A. Maksymovych, the troupe toured Ukraine and some Russian cities (Rostov-na-Donu) with a populist-realist repertoire, and was acclaimed highly by both Ukrainian and Russian critics. In 1883 M. *Starytsky assumed control over the troupe, but Kropyvnytsky stayed on as a stage director. For over 20 years he continued to work as an actor and play director in various Ukrainian troupes, some of which he himself had organized and managed (1885–8 and 1894–1900). Retiring in early 1903 to his estate Zatyshok in the Kharkiv region, he continued writing plays, worked on his memoirs, and occasionally acted with touring companies.

Kropyvnytsky performed diverse character roles, ranging from the dramatic to the comedic genre, in which he excelled. His repertoire included such roles as Stetsko in Svatannia na Honcharivtsi (Matchmaking at Honcharivka), Makohonenko in Natalka Poltavka (Natalka from Poltava), Karas in Zaporozhian Cossack beyond the Danube, Bychok in Hlytai, abo zh pavuk (The Profiteer, or the Spider), the title roles in Taras Bul'ba and Othello, and Talbot in Maria Stuart. Creating his own school of acting, Kropyvnytsky perpetuated the traditions of K. *Solenyk and M. *Shchepkin and promoted the trend to realism on the stage. Several generations of populist-realist actors of the prerevolutionary period, including the stars of the Ukrainian stage, were trained by him.

Kropyvnytsky's work as a dramatist, which began in 1863, was determined to a large extent by the immediate demands of the stage. Accepting the principles of the romantic-populist theater, Kropyvnytsky subordinated his depiction of reality to the standards of romantic theater. His best plays are Dvi sim'i (Two Families, 1888) and Zaidyholova (The Dreamer, 1889). The comedic opera Poshyls' u durni (They Made Fools of Themselves, 1882) is a witty composition in the style of Molière. Kropyvnytsky successfully adapted for the stage O. Storozhenko's story 'Vusy' (Whiskers, 1885), depicting the life of Ukrainian landowners in the 1840s. The comedy Chmyr (The Dirty Fellow, 1890) presents a gallery of village characters. His most popular plays with social significance were Hlytai, abo zh pavuk (1882) and Po revizii (After the Inspection, 1882). His first play, Dai sertsiu voliu, zavede v nevoliu (Give the Heart Freedom and It Will Lead You into Slavery, 1863), is interesting for its vivid portrayal of folk customs. Besides the plays already mentioned, Olesia (1891), Doky sontse ziide, rosa ochi vyjst' (By the Time the Sun Rises, the Dew Will Devour the Eyes, 1882), Vii (an adaptation of N. Gogol's story, 1894), Eneida (Aeneid, an adaptation of I. Kotliarevsky's poem, 1898), and Nevol'nyk (The Captive, 1872) and Tytarivna (The Sexton's Daughter, 1891), both adaptations of T. Shevchenko's poems, are still performed. Kropyvnytsky wrote over 40 original plays and stage adaptations, which are recognized as classics of 19th-century Ukrainian drama.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Kropyvnyts'kyi, M. Povnyi zbirnyk tvoriv, 3 vols (Kharkiv 1895–1903)
 Sadovs'kyi, M. Moi teatral'ni zhadky (Kiev-Kharkiv 1919)
 Slabchenko, T. Z lystuvannia M. Kropyvnyts'koho (Kiev 1927)
 Kropyvnyts'kyi, M. Tvory, 7 vols (Kharkiv-Kiev 1929–31)
 Kyryliuk, Ie. Marko Lukych Kropyvnyts'kyi: Aktor i dramaturh (Kiev 1943)

Kropyvnyts'kyi, M. P'iesy (Kiev 1950)
 Marko Lukych Kropyvnyts'kyi: Zbirnyk statei, spohadiu i materialiv
 (Kiev 1955)
 Mar'ianenko, I. Stsena, aktory, roli (Kiev 1964)
 Iosypenko, M. Marko Lukych Kropyvnyts'kyi (Kiev 1969)
 Kyrychok, P. Marko Kropyvnyts'kyi: Narys zhyttia i tvorchosti
 (Kiev 1985)

V. Revutsky

Krosno or Korosno. IV-2. City (1983 pop 42,900) and voivodeship capital in southeastern Poland. Krosno was a town in Peremyshl principality near the Polish border. It received the rights of Magdeburg law, probably in the mid-14th century. From the 15th to 17th century it was a famous trade center with strong commercial ties to Hungary. The Krosno region was Polonized long ago, except for its southern part (several Ukrainian [Lemko] islands), which in 1939 had 8,700 Ukrainian inhabitants among a total population of 9,400 and remained Ukrainian ethnic territory until 1945.

Krotevych, Kostiantyn [Krotevyč, Kostjantyn], b 1872 in the Poltava region, d ? Orthodox church leader and lawyer. He attended the Kharkiv Theological Seminary, studied law at Kharkiv University, and then served as a prosecutor in the Poltava district court until 1917. In 1918 he was ordained a priest of the Ukrainian Autocephalous Orthodox church (UAOC). In March 1922 he was consecrated bishop, serving in Poltava (until 1924) and then Vinnytsia (1924–30) eparchies. In 1924 he made a missionary visit to the Ukrainian faithful in Kazakhstan. He was arrested in 1930 and exiled; his subsequent fate is unknown. Krotevych was one of the chief ideologists of the UAOC and a noted sermonizer. In the journal Tserkva i zhyttia he published the essays 'Do pytannia pro relihiiu Khrysta' (On the Religion of Christ, 1927) and 'Do ideolohii UAPT's' (On the Ideology of the UAOC, 1928).

Krotevych, Yevhen [Krotevyč, Jevhen], b 23 January 1884 in Zhuravka, Cherkasy county, Kiev gubernia, d 29 May 1968 in Kiev. Writer. He was first published in 1906. His works consist of plays, such as Santymental'nyi chort (The Sentimental Devil, 1923), Syn sovy (The Owl's Son, 1924), and Sekretar prem'ier ministra (The Prime Minister's Secretary, 1924); novels, such as Zvil'nennia zhinky (Woman's Liberation, 1930), Syny zemli (Sons of the Soil, 1948), and Ponad Slavutychem-Dniptom (Along the Slavutyche-Dnieper, 2 vols, 1955, 1963); short stories, which were collected in Noveli (Novellas, 1957) and Vybrane (Selections, 1959); and recollections about Ukrainian writers and contemporaries, Kyivs'ki zustrichi (Kievian Encounters, 1965). He was imprisoned in the 1930s, but was rehabilitated later.

Krotiuk, Serhii [Krotjuk, Serhij], b 24 September 1903 in Rivne, Volhynia gubernia, d 14 June 1980 in Denver. Economist and civic leader. He served as a co-operative inspector in the Kholm region (1940–1), ran his own construction firm in Volhynia (1941–3), and then oversaw a department of the Union of Co-operatives in Peremyshl (1943–4). As an émigré in Munich and from 1949 in the United States, he was an active OUN member. He wrote Sil's'kohospodars'ka tekhnichna syrovyna na ukraïns'kykh zemliakh na tli rozvytku sil's'koho hospodarstva Ukraïny (Agricultural Technical Raw Materials on Ukrainian Terriories in Relation to the Development of Agriculture in Ukraine, 1982).

Kruglov, Venir, b 18 September 1936 in Perm, RSFSR. Ballet dancer. A graduate of the Perm Choreography School (1956), he danced with the Sverdlovsk Theater of Opera and Ballet before joining the Kiev Theater of Opera and Ballet in 1963. He has appeared in such roles as Stepan in K. Dankevych's The Lily, Lukash in M. Skorulsky's The Forest Song, Molfar in V. Kyreiko's Shadows of Forgotten Ancestors, Spartacus in A. Khachaturian's Spartacus, and Albert in A. Adam's Giselle.

Hryhorii Kruk

Hryhorii Kruk: Maiden
 (bronze, 1972)

Kruk, Hryhorii, b 30 October 1911 in Bratyshev, Tovmach county, Galicia. Sculptor. A graduate of the Lviv School of Decorative Art (1934), the Cracow Academy of Arts (1937), and the Berlin Academy of Arts (1940), where he studied under A. Focke and A. Breker, he settled in Munich at the end of the war and devoted himself to sculpture. By 1960 he had produced up to 200 sculptures and had established a Europe-wide reputation. His works were displayed at one-man shows: in Munich (1952, 1963, 1969), Paris (S. Badinier Gallery, 1954), London (1954), Edinburgh (1954), Bonn (1955), Rome (1957), New York and Philadelphia (1961), Vienna (1962), Toronto (1964, 1981), and Geneva (1971). Kruk is a thoroughly modern artist, who attempts to go beyond the traditional norms in search of the immediate, instinctive impression evoked by an expressive, suitably deformed form. He remains true to his peasant origins: his strong bond with the earth is expressed through the massiveness, heaviness, and brutal vitality of his figures. He has sculpted many portraits, including those of Pope Paul VI and Cardinal Y. Slipy, and figures of peasants, monks, Cossacks, bandura players, rabbis, working women, and dancers. His favorite subject is woman. Kruk's sculptures have been presented in two albums: S. Hordynsky's Kruk, Pavlos', Mukhyn (1947) and Gregor Kruk (1969, with an introduction by I. Bauer). His drawings, which have been published in a special album (1980), are distinguished also by immediacy and spontaneity.

S. Hordynsky

Krukenychi Group. Formed in December 1918 as an operational unit of the Ukrainian Galician Army (UGA), it was given the task of defending the western approaches to Sambir and Drohobych against the Polish army. Its headquarters were located in Krukenychi village, Mostyska county, Galicia. At its peak the group consisted of four infantry kurins with four companies each, a cavalry troop, and three artillery batteries. Its commanders were Lt M. Stakhiv, Capt Kravchuk, Col Shepel, and Lt Col Fedorovych. In June 1919 it was forced to retreat into Czechoslovakia. Later, soldiers from the Krukenychi Group were assigned to the Stryi Brigade of the УНА.

Krupetsky, Atanasii [Krupec'kyj, Atanasij] (secular name: Oleksander), ca 1570–1652. Uniate bishop. He worked first in the chancellery of King Sigismund III Vasa. In 1610, after joining the Basilian order, he was consecrated the Uniate bishop of Peremyshl. Throughout his entire tenure he was opposed by Orthodox clergy and nobles who fought to maintain control over the eparchy. In 1612 he attempted unsuccessfully to bring the Prešov region into the Church Union and was even briefly named Uniate bishop of Mukachiv.

Borys Krupnytsky

Solomiia Krushelnytska

Krupnytsky, Borys [Krupnyc'kyj], b 24 July 1894 in Medvedivka, Chyhyryn county, Kiev gubernia, d 5 June 1956 in Himmelpforten, Germany. Historian; full member of the Shevchenko Scientific Society and of the Ukrainian Academy of Arts and Sciences. He studied at Kiev University before the 1917 Revolution, then immigrated to Germany, where he continued his studies at Berlin University (PH D 1929). Krupnytsky was a research associate and professor (from 1932) at the Ukrainian Scientific Institute in Berlin and from 1941 at the Ukrainian Free University. A specialist in 17th- and 18th-century Ukrainian history, he wrote over 150 works. The most noteworthy of these were Het'man Pylyp Orlyk (1672–1742) (1938), Hetman Mazepa und seine Zeit (1687–1709) (1942), and Het'man Danylo Apostol i ioho doba (Hetman Danylo Apostol and His Era, 1948). He also wrote several works based on Swedish and other Western European sources, and a number of historiographical surveys: Johann Christian von Engel und die Geschichte der Ukraine (1931, based on his PH D dissertation), Ukrains'ka istorychna nauka pid Sovietamy (1920–1950) (Ukrainian Historical Scholarship under the Soviets [1920–1950], 1957, which contains a bibliography of his works), Istoriografichni problemy istorii Ukraïny (Historiographic Problems in the History of Ukraine, 1959), and Osnovni problemy istorii Ukraïny (Fundamental Problems in the History of Ukraine, 1955). His most noted work in German was a survey of Ukrainian history: Geschichte der Ukraine von den Anfängen bis zum Jahre 1917 (1943; 2nd edn, 1963).

O. Ohloblyn

Krushelnytska, Lidiia [Krušel'nyc'ka, Lidija] (née Karatnytska), b 1 May 1915 in Kutu, Kosiv county, Galicia. Actress and play director. A graduate of the Lviv Conservatory (1939), she appeared in several operas in Stanyslaviv and Lviv, and after the war performed as a soloist with the Muza performing arts group in Austria. Immigrating to the United States in 1949, she joined the Theater-Studio of Y. Hirniak and O. Dobrovolska and appeared in many of its productions. In 1966 she became director of the Studio of the Oral Arts in New York, where she has been working with young actors as an educator and play director. She has directed children's plays such as the adaptation of H.C. Andersen's tale 'The Flying Ship' and of the folk tale 'Lisovyi Tsar Okh' (The Forest King Okh); dramatizations of poems by Lesia Ukrainka, T. Shevchenko, I. Franko, and L. Kostenko; and now rarely performed plays such as S. Cherkasenko's Kazka staroho mlyna (Tale of the Old Mill), V. Vynnychenko's Chorna pantera i bilyi vedmid' (Black Panther and White Bear), and E. Scribe's Le verre d'eau.

Krushelnytska, Mariia [Krušel'nyc'ka, Marija], b 31 December 1934 in Kharkiv. Pianist. A graduate of the Moscow Conservatory and a student of G. Neigauz, she has lectured at the Lviv Conservatory since 1963. In 1962 she won the All-Ukrainian M. Lysenko contest. The Ukrainian composers L. Revutsky, S. Liudkevych, V. Kosenko, A. Shtoharenko, and M. Kolesa have a special place in her repertoire.

Krushelnytska, Solomiia [Krušel'nyc'ka, Solomija], b 23 September 1872 in Biliavyntsi, Buchach county, Galicia, d 16 November 1952 in Lviv. World-famous singer (dramatic soprano). Upon graduating from the Lviv Conservatory (1893), where she studied under W. Wysocki, she made her debut with the Lviv Opera as Leonora in G. Donizetti's La favorita and went to Milan to study under F. Crespi (1893–6). From 1896 she performed with most of the great opera companies of Europe and South America: Odessa (1896–7), Warsaw (1898–1902), St Petersburg (1901–2), Paris (1902), Naples (1902, 1904), Rome (1904–5), Milan (La Scala, 1898, 1904, 1907, 1909, 1915), and Buenos Aires (1906, 1908, 1910–13). Her performance as Aida (1903) was a triumph, and her rendition of the title role in G. Puccini's Madame Butterfly in 1904 contributed to its admission to the world repertoire. Because of her and A. Toscanini, R. Strauss's Salome was a great success at La Scala (1906). In 1915 she sang the title role in the world premiere of I. Pizzetti's Fedra at La Scala. Her operatic repertoire numbered close to 60 roles, including the title roles in R. Strauss's Salome and Elektra, Brünnhilde in R. Wagner's Die Walküre and Isolde in his Tristan und Isolde, and the title roles in A. Ponchielli's La Gioconda and S. Moniuszko's Halka. Many of the performances in which she starred were conducted by A. Toscanini. Krushelnytska combined a colorful voice of great range (three octaves) with a fiery temperament and enormous acting ability. In the mid-1920s she turned from opera to concert recitals. Her concert repertoire included works by C. Monteverdi, C. Gluck, W. Mozart, M. Musorgsky, M. Lysenko, D. Sichynsky, and S. Liudkevych. She enjoyed performing Ukrainian folk songs to her own piano accompaniment. Returning to Lviv in 1939, she taught solo singing at the Lviv Conservatory (1944–52).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Holovashchenko, M. (ed). Solomiia Krushel'nyts'ka. Spohady, materialy, lystuvannia, 2 vols (Kiev 1978–9)

Vrublevs'ka, V. Solomiia Krushel'nyts'ka (Kiev 1979)

W. Wytwycky

Antin Krushelnytsky

Marian Krushelnytsky

Krushelnytsky, Antin [Krušel'nyc'kyj], b 4 August 1878 in Łańcut, Poland, d 13 November 1941. Writer, educator, journalist; political and civic figure. As a student he was associated closely with the monthly **Moloda Ukraïna* and helped I. Franko in editing Literaturno-naukovyi vistnyk. Later, he worked as a secondary-school teacher and principal, and played a prominent role in the Ukrainian Radical party. In 1919 he served as minister of education in B. Martos's cabinet under the **Directory* of the UNR. After the war he worked as an editor at the Chaika publishing house in Vienna, which specialized in Ukrainian textbooks and translations of world classics. Returning to Galicia in 1925, he could not obtain a teaching position. From 1929 to 1933 he edited the pro-Soviet journals Novi shliakhy and Krytyka. Persecuted and repeatedly arrested by Polish authorities, he immigrated with his family to the Ukrainian SSR in 1934. Soon, all of them were arrested: Antin and his wife, Mariia, were sent to concentration camps, while their sons Ivan and Taras were executed. Krushelnytsky died in prison and was posthumously 'rehabilitated' after Stalin's death.

As a prose writer Krushelnytsky was influenced by Western European modernism. His rich literary legacy includes collections of short stories such as Proletari (Proletarians, 1899) and Svitla i tini (Lights and Shadows, 1900); dramas such as Semchyshynny (The Semchyshyns, 1900), Cholovik chesti (Man of Honor, 1904), Artystka (Actress, 1901); the comedy Orly (Eagles, 1906); novels such as Rubaiut' lis (They Are Cutting the Forest, 1914), Homin Halyts'koi zemli (Echo of the Galician Land, 1918–19), lak promovyt' zemlia (When the Land Will Speak, 1920), lak pryhorne zemlia (When the Land Will Embrace, 1920), and Budennyi khlib (Daily Bread, 1920); literary surveys and criticism; school readers such as Vybir z ukrains'koho na- rodnoho pys'menstva (Selections from Ukrainian Folk Literature, 2 vols, 1918, 1922); and translations.

A. Zhukovsky

Krushelnytsky, Ivan [Krušel'nyc'kyj], b 12 November 1905 in Rohatyn, Galicia, d 17 December 1934 in Kharkiv. Poet, graphic artist, and art critic; son of A. **Krushelnytsky*. After graduating from the University of Vienna (1927), he taught at the Ridna Shkola seminary in Stryi. From 1929 he helped his father publish the Sovietophile journal Novi shliakhy. He published several collections of modernist poetry, including Vesniiana pisnia (Spring Song, 1924), Iunyi spokii (Youthful Serenity, 1929), and Buri i vikna (Storms and Windows, 1930), and the dramatic poems Spir za Madonnu Sil'viiu (The Dispute over Madonna Silvia, 1930) and Na skeliakh (On the Cliffs, 1931). His graphic works were published in a separate collection. Immigrating to Soviet Ukraine in 1934 with his family, he worked briefly at the VUAN Institute of the History of Material Culture. He was shot by the Soviets in 1934 and was posthumously 'rehabilitated' after Stalin's death. A selection of his poetry was published in Kiev in 1964.

Krushelnytsky, Marian [Krušel'nyc'kyj, Mar'jan], b 18 April 1897 in Pyliava, Buchach county, Galicia, d 5 April 1963 in Kiev. Actor and play director of L. Kurbas's school; educator. Making his stage debut in 1915 in the Ternopilski Teatralni Vechory theater, he subsequently acted in the Ukrainian Theater in Ternopil (1918, 1920–1), the New Lviv Theater (1919), the Franko Ukrainian Drama Theater in Vinnytsia (1920), and the Ukrainska Besida theater in Lviv (1922–4). Then he was one of the leading actors of the **Berezil* theater, and after L. Kurbas's arrest and the dissolution of Berezil, Krushelnytsky was appointed in 1934 artistic director and chief play director of the Kharkiv Ukrainian Drama Theater. He modified the theater's profile, particularly its repertoire, according to the demands of socialist realism: preference was given to O. Korniiichuk's and L. Dmyterko's plays and Russian classics. Joining the Kiev Ukrainian Drama Theater in 1952, he eventually became its chief stage director (1954–63). After the war, he also taught acting at the Kharkiv (1946–52) and Kiev (1952–63) theater institutes.

As an actor Krushelnytsky distinguished himself under L. **Kurbas's* direction in the Berezil theater. He played a wide range of roles, including Honoré d'Apremont in P. Mérimé's La Jacquerie, Barbulesque in F. Crommelynck's Tripes d'or, and Maloshtan in I. Mykytenko's Dykatura (Dictatorship). He was particularly impressive in M. Kulish's plays: as Malakhii in Narodnyi Malakhii (The People's Malakhii), Uncle Taras in Myna Mazailo, and Padura in Maklena Grasa. In the post-Berezil period his better roles were comedic ones such as Kuksa in M. Kropyvnytsky's Poshylys' u durni (They Made Fools of Themselves) and Ivan Nepokryty in his Dai sertsiu voliu zavede v nevoliu (Give the Heart Freedom and It Will Lead You into Slavery), the title role in I. Karpenko-Kary's Martyn Borulia, Kindrat Halushka in O. Korniiichuk's V stepakh Ukraïny (In Ukraine's Steppes), and cantor Havrylo in Bohdan Khmel'nyts'kyi. Krushelnytsky won acclaim for his original interpretation of Tevie in Tevie-molochnyk (Tevie, the Milkman, based on the story by Sholem Aleichem) and of Lear in W. Shakespeare's King Lear.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Han, Ia. Mar'ian Mykhailovych Krushel'nyts'kyi (Kiev 1960)
 Taniuk, L. Mar'ian Krushel'nitskii (Moscow 1974)
 Hirniak, I. Spomyny (New York 1982)

V. Revutsky

Kruty, Battle of. A battle near Kruty on 29 January 1918. As a Bolshevik force of about 4,000 men commanded by M. Muravev advanced toward Kiev, a small contingent of 500 men was hastily organized and sent to the front. It consisted mainly of a company of the Student Kurin of Sich Riflemen, a company of the Khmelnytsky Cadet School, and a Haidamaka detachment. Commanded by Capt A. Honcharenko, this force attempted to block the Bolshevik advance on the capital at Kruty, a railroad station 130 km northeast of Kiev. In a bitter battle about half of the Ukrainian soldiers were killed, but their resistance delayed Muravev's capture of Kiev and enabled the Ukrainian government to conclude the Peace Treaty of Brest-Litovsk. The battle is commemorated as a symbol of patriotic self-sacrifice and is immortalized in numerous literary and publicistic works.

Krutykova, Nina, b 27 January 1913 in Łódź, Poland. Literary scholar; corresponding member of the AN URSR since 1957. After completing graduate studies at Kiev University, she taught at Kiev University (from 1938) and was an associate of the AN URSR Institute of Literature (from 1941). She has written, in the spirit of official Soviet scholarship, numerous studies on Ukrainian and Russian literature, including monographs on the works of I. Nechui-Levytsky (1961), on Marko Vovchok (1965), on N. Gogol and Ukrainian literature (1949, 1957, 1984), on A. Chekhov's works and their importance for the development of Ukrainian literature (1954), on V. Korolenko and Ukrainian literature (1955), on L. Tolstoy and Ukrainian literature (1958), on the literary relations of the Ukrainian and Russian peoples (1954), and on Russian realism and the establishment of Ukrainian realist prose (1963).

Krvavych, Dmytro [Krvavyč], b 28 September 1926 in Kniazhpil, Dobromyl county, Galicia. Sculptor. After graduating from the Lviv Institute of Applied and Decorative Arts (1953), he chaired the Department of Russian Art at the Lviv Painting Gallery and taught at the Lviv Children's Art School. In 1958 he published a monograph on his teacher, I. Seveva. His sculptures include portraits of M. Lysenko (1954), I. Vyshensky (1964), and S. Tudor (1972); monuments to I. Franko (1964), to M. Shashkevych (1960) in Pidlyisia, as well as some dedicated to the armed forces of the USSR (1970) in Lviv; and majolica figures such as Kozak-Mamai (1959), Carpathian Legend (1959), Ksenia (1962), A Memory (1962), and The Sun Is Low (1963). M. Batih published a monograph on Krvavych in 1968 in Kiev.

Krychevsky, Fedir [Kryčevs'kyj], b 22 May 1879 in Lebedyn, Kharkiv gubernia, d 30 July 1947 in Irpin, Kiev oblast. Painter and pedagogue; brother of V. *Krychevsky, Sr. A graduate of the Moscow School of Painting, Sculpture, and Architecture (1901) and the St Petersburg

Fedir Krychevsky

Academy of Arts (1910), he traveled in Western Europe for a year and then settled in Kiev, where he served as professor and director at the Kiev Art School (1914–18). In 1917 he was one of the founders of the Ukrainian State Academy of Arts, at which he taught genre and historical painting and portraiture, and of which he served as director (1920–2) and rector (1918, 1920–2). When the academy was abolished, he was appointed professor at the Kiev (1922–32, 1934–41) and the Kharkiv state art institutes. Fleeing west in 1943, he fell ill and was overtaken by advancing Soviet troops. After prolonged interrogation and torture he was released in a hopelessly weakened condition, and stripped of all his titles and honors. Twelve years after his death Krychevsky was 'rehabilitated': in 1959 the first posthumous retrospective exhibition of his works was held in Kiev, and albums and monographs about his work began to be published.

Krychevsky was a prolific artist: he produced close to a thousand works (compositions, portraits, landscapes, sketches, and studies). He preferred large canvases and enjoyed grappling with the stylistic problems they presented. At one time he came close to the Neo-Byzantinism of M. *Boichuk's school but, eventually, he turned to a more realist style based on patches of vivid color. His more important works are Three Ages (1913), Life: Triptych (1925–7), which was highly praised at the 1928 Venice Biennial, Matchmakers (1928), Merry Milkmaids (1937), Dovbush (1932), Conquerors of Wrangel (1934), a cycle of temperas based on T. Shevchenko's poem Kateryna (1937–40), and a series of portraits (of his mother, wife, son, L. Starytska, H. Pavlutsky, and several self-portraits). For 30 years Krychevsky was one of the leading figures in Ukrainian art. He organized the first strictly Ukrainian art exhibitions in 1911 and 1913, and his work was exhibited, beginning in 1897, at over 34 individual and group shows in and outside Ukraine. He was also a successful teacher, whose students included M. Dmytrenko, L. Morozova, T. Yablonska, S. Hryhoriev, and Yu. Melikhov.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Vystavka tvoriv zasluženoho diiacha mystetstv URSR Fedora Hryhorovycha Krychevs'koho (1879–1947)*. Kataloh (Kiev 1960)
 Musiienko, P. Fedir Hryhorovych Krychevs'kyi (Kiev 1966)
 Chlenova, L. Fedor Krichevskii (Moscow 1969)
 Pianida, B. (ed). Fedir Krychevs'kyi. Spohady, statti, dokumenty (Kiev 1972)
 Chlenova, L. Fedir Krychevs'kyi. Al'bom (Kiev 1980)

S. Hordynsky

Mykhailo Krychevsky

Krychevsky, Mykhailo [Kryčevs'kyj, Myxajlo], b ? , d 24 July 1649 in Loev, Belorussia. Nobleman from the Berestia region and Cossack officer. He was the colonel of the Chyhyryn registered Cossacks from 1643. In 1647 he convinced S. Koniecpolski to release B. Khmelnytsky from prison by guaranteeing his conduct. He then helped Khmelnytsky to escape to Zaporizhia, and the next year he joined the rebellion led by him. He became the colonel of Kiev regiment and in 1649 he led a 30,000-man Cossack army to repel a Polish-Lithuanian invasion of Ukraine. He was killed at the Battle of Loev, where his army was defeated. Krychevsky is the subject of a biography by V. Lypynsky in Z dziejów Ukrainy (From the History of Ukraine, 1912).

Krychevsky, Mykola [Kryčevs'kyj], b 24 November 1898 in Kharkiv, d 11 September 1961 in Paris. Impressionist painter; son of V. Krychevsky, Sr. After studying art with his father, and with Y. Bokshai in Uzhhorod, he graduated from the School of Industrial Design in Prague. In 1929 he moved to Paris. Krychevsky is best known for his watercolors: his scenes of Paris and Venice earned him international acclaim. His work was exhibited at the Salon des Indépendents in Paris, and in various cities of Western Europe and North America. Krychevsky also designed stage sets for the Prosvita Theater (1921–3) and O. Zaharov's company (1921–5) in Uzhhorod, and the Théâtre des Arts (1939) and the Théâtre Hébertot (1942) in Paris.

Krychevsky, Vasyl [Kryčevs'kyj, Vasyl'], b 12 January 1873 in Vorozhba, Lebedyn county, Kharkiv gubernia, d 15 November 1952 in Caracas. Outstanding art scholar, architect, painter, graphic artist, set designer, and a master of applied and decorative art; brother of F. *Krychevsky. He received little formal education. Interested deeply in Ukrainian folklore and art history, he audited M. Sumtsov's, D. Bahalii's, and Ye. Riedin's classes at Kharkiv University. Working as an independent architect and artist, he achieved a national reputation by the time of the outbreak of the First World War. During the revolutionary period he was a founder and the first president of the Ukrainian State Academy of Arts. In the 1920s he taught at the Kiev Institute of Plastic Arts and the Kiev Architectural Institute. In 1927 he taught for a year at the Odessa Art Institute, and then served in the architectural department of the Kiev State Art Institute until 1941. Moving to Lviv in 1943, he was appointed rector of a new Ukrainian art school, the Higher Art

Vasyl Krychevsky: cover design

Studio. After the war he lived briefly in Paris before immigrating in 1947 to South America.

Krychevsky first achieved public recognition in 1903 by winning the architectural competition to build the Poltava Zemstvo Building (now the Poltava Regional Museum). His design of the building inaugurated a new style based on the traditions of Ukrainian folk architecture, and set a new trend among young architects in Ukraine. He continued to work in this style, using it for a number of public and private buildings and monuments, such as the People's Home in Lokhvytsia (1904); the residences of D. Myloradovych (1905), I. Shchitkivsky (1907), and M. Hrushevsky (1908–9); the Shevchenko Memorial Museum in Kaniv (1931–4); and monuments to M. Myloradovych (1908), M. Kotsiubynsky (1928), D. Zabolotny (1932), and M. Hrushevsky (1935). This distinctive Ukrainian style marked his interior designs for private homes and exhibition halls.

As a painter Krychevsky was deeply influenced by French impressionism. The pure and harmonious colors of his south-Ukrainian landscapes (done in oils and watercolors) convey a lyrical atmosphere. His paintings were first exhibited in Kharkiv in 1897. He participated in the annual exhibitions of the Society of Russian Watercolorists in St Petersburg (1899–1902) and, later, in the exhibitions of the Kiev painters (1910–13). Altogether he did about 300 paintings. Krychevsky is one of the main founders of modern Ukrainian book design. In his work he used traditional folk ornamentation and motifs in old Ukrainian books, and revived the old techniques of wood engraving, etching, and lithography. He designed over 80 bookcovers, some bookplates, and a number of entire books, including the deluxe edition of Ukrains'ka pisnia (Ukrainian Song, 1935). At M. Hrushevsky's request he designed the state emblems and seals of the UNR and a number of bank notes. From 1907 through to 1910, Krychevsky designed sets and costumes for some 15 plays and operas produced by the Sadovsky Theater in Kiev, including M. Starytsky's Bohdan Khmel'nyts'kyi, I. Karpenko-Kary's Sava Chalyi, B. Smetana's The Bartered Bride, and S. Moniuszko's Halka. Then in 1917–18 he worked with the Ukrainian National Theater. Noted for their realism and attention to detail, his sets occasionally assumed an abstract or grotesque character to match the atmosphere of the drama. In the Soviet period he served as a consultant or artistic director for 12 films shot in Ukraine, including Taras Shevchenko (1926), Taras Triasylo (1927), Zvenyhora (1928), and Sorochyns'kyi iarmarok (The Sorochyntsi Fair, 1939), the first Ukrainian color film.

Vasyl Krychevsky: cover designs and bookplates

Krychevsky was an enthusiastic collector and student of Ukrainian folk art. Agreeing fully with J. Ruskin's and W. Morris's views on the relation of art to everyday life, he played an important role in promoting handicrafts among the people. He served as instructor in B. Khanenko's kilim-weaving and cloth-printing workshop in Olenivka (1912–15) and as director of a ceramics school in Myrhorod (1918–19). He created his own designs for kilims, printed fabrics, embroideries, ceramic products, and furniture. Over 1,100 samples of his work were displayed at a retrospective exhibition in Kiev in 1940.

Krychevsky's articles on art and reviews appeared in the leading journals in Ukraine. His more important contributions to art criticism and history are 'Pro rozuminnia ukrains'koho stylu' (On Understanding the Ukrainian Style, Siaivo, no. 3 [1914]), 'Budynok, de zhyv T.H. Shevchenko u Kyivi' (The Building Where T. Shevchenko Lived in Kiev, Ukraina, 1925, nos 1–2), and 'Arkhitektura doby' (The Architecture of the Age, Chervonyi shliakh, 1928, no. 3).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Pavlovs'kyi, V. Vasyl' Hryhorovych Krychevs'kyi. Zhyttia i tvorchist' (New York 1974)

S. Hordynsky, V. Pavlovsky

Krychevsky, Vasyl [Kryčevs'kyj, Vasył'], b 18 March 1901 in Kharkiv, d 16 June 1978 in Mountain View, California. Painter; son of Vasyl Krychevsky, Sr. A graduate of the Ukrainian State Academy of Arts in Kiev, where in 1917–23 he studied under V. and F. Krychevsky, he became a lecturer at the Kiev Industrial Design School and film editor at the Kiev Film Factory and Ukrainfilm. His first exhibition was in 1937. Leaving Ukraine in 1943, he settled in the United States in 1949. He painted portraits and landscapes, illustrated books and posters, designed stage and film sets, and made artistic porcelain.

Krylati (The Winged Ones). An illustrated monthly published since 1963 in New York, and since 1973 in Brussels, for members of the *Ukrainian Youth Association (SUM).

Krylos. IV-5. Village (1971 pop 1,700) in Halych raion, Ivano-Frankivske oblast, located on Krylos Mountain near the Lukva River (a tributary of the Dniester River), 5 km from the center of present-day Halych. Krylos was originally at the center of the complex of villages that formed the princely capital of *Halych.

Krylos Gospel. See Halych Gospel (1144).

Krylov, Mykola, b 29 November 1879 in St Petersburg, d 11 May 1955 in Moscow. Mathematician, specialist in mechanics; full member of the AN URSR from 1922, of the Shevchenko Scientific Society, and of the USSR Academy of Sciences from 1929. A graduate of the St Petersburg Mining Institute and of St Petersburg University (PH D 1917), he was a professor at Crimea University (1917–22), then head of the Chair of Mathematical Physics at the Institute of Technical Mathematics (later the Institute of Construction Mechanics, now the AN URSR Institute of Structural Mechanics) in Kiev. Krylov published some 180 papers and 4 monographs. He made significant contributions to the theory of interpolation and mechanical quadrature, variational methods, approximation solvability of differential equations of mathematical physics, and convergence and error estimates of the Ritz and of his own methods. From 1932 his work with N. Bogoliubov provided the foundation for non-linear mechanics, and the two established the Kiev school of non-linear mechanics. Krylov's basic works deal with the theory of mechanics and of dynamic systems.

Krylov, Vladimir, b 16 April 1841 in Pokrovskoe-Ramena, Yaroslavl gubernia, Russia, d 6 February 1906 in Kharkiv. Physician and medical scientist. A graduate of the St Petersburg Medical-Surgical Academy (1868), he was the vice-president of the Kharkiv Medical Society and the first professor of pathological anatomy at Kharkiv University (1872–1902). He founded the Kharkiv Bacteriological Station and several prosectoriums in Kharkiv and was the first in the Russian Empire to introduce practical assignments in pathological histology. His works deal with infections of the brain membrane, heart disease, typhoid, the effects of syphilis on the lungs, trichinosis, and anthropometry.

Krylovsky, Amvrosii [Krylovs'kyj, Amvrosij], b 1853 in Galicia, d 1930 in Kiev. Historian and librarian. He served as director of the Library of the Kiev Theological Academy and then as head of a section of the National Library of Ukraine, which absorbed the former library. He collaborated with the Temporary Commission for the Analysis of Ancient Documents and published his studies on 16th- and 17th-century church and civic organizations in Ukraine, including the Lviv Dormition Brotherhood, in its Arkhiv Iugo-Zapadnoi Rossii. During the period of Ukraine's independence he was a full member of the Archeographic Commission of the Ukrainian Academy of Sciences.

Krym (Crimea). An irregular literary and artistic almanac of the Crimean branch of the Writers' Union of Ukraine published from 1948 to 1962 in Symferopil. Altogether 31 volumes came out. They consist of works by Crimean Ukrainian and Russian writers such as M. Biriukov, I. Nekhoda, P. Pavlenko, and E. Popovkin, translations of Soviet writers of other nationalities, regional materials, and articles in literary history and criticism.

Krymchaks. Turkic-speaking Jews in the Crimea who are believed to be descendants of the *Khazars. They professed Orthodox, Talmudic Judaism and had their own form of ritual and their own dialect, written mostly in the Hebrew script. Their major centers were Bilohirske (Karasu-Bazar) and Symferopil. In 1926 they numbered 6,400. Many were killed by the Nazis during the Second World War, and others emigrated or assimilated, or fled to other parts of the USSR. In 1974, estimates placed their number at 2,500 in the USSR, most of them in the Crimea.

Oleksii Krymov

Ahatanhel Krymsky

Krymov, Oleksii (Aleksei), b 30 July 1872 in Moscow, d 11 December 1954 in Kiev. Surgeon; full member of the USSR Academy of Medical Sciences from 1945. A graduate of Moscow University (1898), he taught there (1906–12) and was a professor at Kiev University (1912–21) and the Kiev Medical Institute (from 1921). In 1936 he became the president of the Ukrainian Society of Surgeons. He wrote 135 works in the field of surgery, including Ognestrel'naiia anevrizma (Bullet-Wound Aneurysms, 1948), Spetsial'na khirurgiia (Special Surgery, 1948), and Briushnye gryzhi (Stomach Ruptures, 1950), and one of the first surgery textbooks in Ukrainian. He developed new methods for the treatment of ruptures and aneurysms.

Kryms'ka pravda (Crimean Truth). Official newspaper of the Crimean Oblast Committee of the CPU and of the Crimean Oblast Soviet of People's Deputies. It is published six times weekly in Symferopil. Its first issue appeared on 6 February 1918 under the name Tavrisheskaia pravda (Tavriia Truth). In 1919 its name was changed to Krymskii kommunist (Crimean Communist), and on 17 November 1920 it became Krasnyi Krym (Red Crimea). During the war years (1941–5), it was published in the form of a leaflet in different cities as the Soviet forces retreated: in Sevastopol, Kerch, Krasnodar, and Sochi. Returning to Symferopil on 15 April 1944, it was renamed Kryms'ka pravda on 18 January 1952. Since 16 December 1959 the daily has been published in Ukrainian.

Krymsky, Ahatanhel [Kryms'kyj], b 15 January 1871 in Volodymyr-Volynskyi, d reportedly 25 January 1942 in Kustanai, Kazakhstan. Eminent Ukrainian Orientalist, belletrist, linguist, literary scholar, folklorist, and translator; full member of the VUAN and AN URSS from 1918 and the Shevchenko Scientific Society from 1903. A graduate of Galagan College in Kiev (1889), the Lazarev Institute of Oriental Languages in Moscow (1891), and Moscow University (1896), he conducted research in Syria and Lebanon (1896–8) and then taught at the Lazarev Institute, from 1900 as professor of Arabic literature and from 1902 also as professor of Oriental history. He was an active member of Moscow's Ukrainian Hromada. His political views were greatly influenced by M. Drahomanov, I. Franko, and P. Tuchapsky. In July 1918 Krymsky moved to Kiev. There he helped to found the VUAN and its library and served as the first VUAN permanent secretary and de facto director until the Soviet government brought about his defeat in the VUAN elections of 1929. He edited 20 of the 25 volumes of Zapysky Istorychno-filolohichnoho viddilu VUAN (1920–9) and was a professor at Kiev University as well as the vice-president of the Ukrainian Scientific Society in Kiev (from 1918). Krymsky survived the Stalinist terror of the 1930s although for nearly 10 years he was removed from scholarly and pedagogical activity. Apparently rehabilitated in 1939, he was, however, arrested by the NKVD in July 1941, and disappeared.

As an Orientalist (an expert in up to 34 languages) Krymsky contributed several hundred entries to the prerevolutionary Brockhaus and Efron and Granat Russian encyclopedias and wrote many other works on Arabic, Turkish, Turkic, Crimean Tatar, and Iranian history and literature. He wrote, in Russian, pioneering textbook histories of Islam (3 parts, 1904–12); of Turkey and its literature (2 vols, 1910, 1916); of the Arabs and their literature (3 parts, 1911–13); of Persia, its literature, and Dervish theosophy (3 vols, 1901–6, 1909–14); and a study of the Semitic languages and peoples (3 parts, 1903–12). In Ukrainian he also wrote histories of Turkey and its literature (2 vols, 1924, 1927) and of Persia and its literature (1923); monographs on Ḥāfiẓ and his songs (1924) and on the Turkic peoples, their languages, and literatures (1930); edited a collection of articles on the Crimean Tatars (1930); and wrote, with O. Boholiubsky, a study of Arab higher education and the Arabian Academy of Sciences (1928). During the last years of his life he wrote a six-volume history of the Khazars; it was never published.

Krymsky's research on the history of the Ukrainian language was sparked by his desire to refute A. Sobolevsky's claim that the language of ancient Kiev was Russian, not Ukrainian. After painstaking, though insufficiently critical and one-sided, investigations of Old Ukrainian texts, he wrote three polemical studies – Filologiiia i pogodinskaia gipoteza (Philology and Pogodin's Hypothesis, 1904), Deiaki nepevni kryterii dlia diialektolohichnoi klasyfikatsii staro-rus'kykh rukopysiv (Some Questionable Criteria for the Dialectological Classification of Old Rus' Manuscripts, 1906), and Drevne-Kievskii govor (The Ancient Kievian Dialect, 1907) – and the historical Ukrainskaia grammatika dlia uchenikov vysshikh klassov gimnazii i seminarii Pridneprov'ia (Ukrainian Grammar for Students of Higher Grades in the Dnieper Region's Gymnasiums and Seminaries, 2 parts, 1907–8). His views on the language of Kievan Rus' are summarized in 'Ukrains'ka mova, zvidkilia vona vzialasia i iak rozvyvalasia' (The Ukrainian Language: Whence It Came and How It Developed) in his and A. Shakhmatov's Narysy z istorii ukrains'koi movy ta khrestomatiiia z pam'iatnykiv pys'mens'koi staro-ukrains'kshchyny XI–XVIII vv. (An Outline of the History of the Ukrainian Language and a Chrestomathy of Texts of Literary Old-Ukrainian Writing of the 11th–18th Centuries, 1924). Together with K. Mykhalchuk, Krymsky published a program for collecting the distinctive features of Ukrainian dialects (1910). As the director of the *Institute of the Ukrainian Scientific Language (1921–9), he was actively involved in the work of standardizing the vocabulary and orthography of literary Ukrainian. In this activity he vehemently rejected the Galician orthographic tradition. He was the editor in chief of vols 1–2 (4 issues) of the VUAN Russian-Ukrainian dictionary (1924–33) and of the Russian-Ukrainian dictionary of legal language (1926).

As a belletrist Krymsky is known for his three books of lyrical poetry on Oriental themes entitled Pal'move hillia: Ekzotychni poezii (Palm Branches: Exotic Poems, 1901, 1908, 1922), the novella Andrii Lahovs'kyi (1905, 1972), the collection Povistky i eskizy z ukrains'koho zhyttia (Narratives and Sketches from Ukrainian Life, 1895), and the collection Beiruts'ki opovidannia (Beirut Stories, 1906).

Krymsky translated many Arabic and Persian literary works into Ukrainian, including The Rubāiyāt of Omar Khayyam, A Thousand and One Nights, and Ḥāfiẓ's songs. He also translated the poetry of H. Heine, Byron, Sappho, F. Rückert, and other European writers. He published articles and reviews on Ukrainian writers and their works (eg, I. Vyshensky, O. Kobylinska, I. Franko) and on Ukrainian theater in Lviv and Kiev periodicals (Zhytie i slovo, Zoria, Pravda, Dzvin, Literaturno-naukovyi vistnyk, Kievskaia starina, and others). He published, with M. Levchenko, two volumes of materials on S. Rudansky (1926–9).

As an ethnographer, Krymsky was an advocate of migration theory. He translated into Ukrainian and annotated W.A. Clouston's Popular Tales and Fictions ... (1896). A great deal of ethnographic material is found in his Orientalist works. He also wrote articles about such Ukrainian ethnographers as M. Drahomanov, M. Lysenko, and V. Miller. Twenty-seven of his ethnographic articles were republished as Rozvidky, statti ta zamitky (Studies, Articles, and Comments, 1928). Of particular importance is his Zvenyhorodshchyna z pohliadu etnografichnoho ta diialektolohichnoho (The Zvenyhorod Region from an Ethnographic and Dialectological Perspective, 1928). The second volume of this work, like many of his other manuscripts, was never published.

Krymsky donated his valuable 30,000-volume library to the VUAN; it is now part of the Central Scientific Library of the AN URSR. His personal archive – consisting of thousands of manuscripts and the papers of M. Bilozersky, P. Zhytetsky, S. Rudansky, A. Dymynsky, and others – is preserved at this library and at the Institute of Fine Arts, Folklore, and Ethnography. His works appeared in a five-volume edition in Kiev (1972–3).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Babyshkin, O. Ahatanhel Kryms'kyi: Literaturnyi portret (Kiev 1967)

Hurnyts'kyi, K. Kryms'kyi iak istoryk (Kiev 1971)

Skokan, K.; Derkach, N.; Isaieva, N.; Martynenko, H. (comps). A. lu. Kryms'kyi: Bibliografichniy pokazchychy (1889–1971) (Kiev 1972)

Bilodid, I. (ed). A. lu. Kryms'kyi – ukrainist i orientalist (Kiev 1974)

M. Hnatiukivsky, R. Senkus, G.Y. Shevelov

Krynica. See Krynysia.

Krynysia [Krynycja] (Polish: Krynica). iv-1. Town (1977 pop 11,700) in the western Lemko region. From the 19th century it had a large spa that in the interwar years attracted 60,000 visitors annually to its six therapeutic mineral springs. At one time Krynysia was inhabited exclusively by Ukrainians; in 1860 they constituted 92 percent of its 1,100 inhabitants. With time its population became mixed, and in 1939 there were 2,900 Ukrainians, 4,300 Poles, and 1,600 Jews in the town. From 1940 to 1944 it was an important Ukrainian center; a Ukrainian teachers' college and various Ukrainian cultural and economic institutions were located there. After the war the Polish authorities forcibly resettled the Ukrainian population in western and northern Poland.

Krynysia (Well). Publishing company operating in Kiev in 1912–14 and 1917–20. By 1914 it had published a series of inexpensive books, such as M. Drahomanov's Chudats'ki dumky pro ukrains'ku natsional'nu spravu (Eccentric Thoughts on the Ukrainian National Cause) and Shevchenko, ukrainofily i sotsializm (Shevchenko, the Ukrainophiles, and Socialism), and a complete edition of T. Shevchenko's Kobzar. The publishing house was closed down at the beginning of the First World War. It was revived in 1917 and in the next three years it issued numerous books on various subjects. Its publications included works by I. Karpenko-Kary, M. Kotsiubynsky, O. Oles, H. Chuprynka, and S. Vasylchenko, textbooks, children's books, and the Muzychna biblioteka (Music Library) series edited by O. Koshyts. During the period of Ukrainian independence Krynysia acquired its own printing press and bookstore. The company was abolished by the Bolsheviks in 1920.

Krynyska, Lidiia [Krynyc'ka, Lidija], b 5 July 1898 in Tomaszów, Lublin gubernia (now Poland), d 23 August 1966 in Kharkiv. Character actress. Upon graduating from the Lysenko Music and Drama Institute in Kiev (1923), she joined the *Berezil theater. After working briefly with the Odessa Ukrainian Drama Theater (1929–31), she acted for many years with the Kharkiv Ukrainian Drama Theater. Her repertoire included the Strumpet in V. Yaroshenko's Shpana (Riffraff), the noble's daughter in I. Tobilevych's Sava Chalyi, Inghierda in I. Kocherha's Iaroslav Mudryi (Yaroslav the Wise), and the title role in V. Hugo's Marie Tudor. She also acted in films.

Krynytsky, Ivan [Krynyc'kyj], b 13 July 1797 in Zvenyhorodka, Kiev gubernia, d 12 October 1838 in the Caucasus Mountains. Zoologist and mineralogist. Krynytsky studied at Vilnius University, then worked there as a professor of agriculture (1823–5). In 1825 he became a professor of mineralogy and zoology at Kharkiv University, the first Ukrainian-born professional zoologist. Krynytsky completed several research trips to southern Ukraine, the Caucasus, and the shore of the Caspian Sea and wrote over 30 scientific studies describing over 70 species of insects, birds, and amphibians. During one of his research trips, Krynytsky fell ill and died.

Krynytsky, Onufrii [Krynyc'kyj, Onufrij], b 12 June 1791 in Kryva, Jasło circle, Galicia, d 8 April 1867 in Zhovtantsi, Zhovkva county, Galicia. Theologian. He studied at the Greek Catholic Theological Seminary in Lviv, and, after being ordained, at Vienna University (D TH 1815). Krynytsky taught Church history and Eastern languages at Lviv University from 1819 to 1861, serving as rector several times. He also taught these subjects at the Greek Catholic seminary. During the Revolution of 1848–9 he sided with the Poles in their conflicts with the Ukrainians and lost the confidence of the Greek Catholic hierarchy.

Ivan Krypiakevych

Krypiakevych, Ivan [Kryp'jakevyč], b 25 June 1886 in Lviv, d 21 April 1967 in Lviv. Noted historian; full member of the Shevchenko Scientific Society (NTSh) from 1911 and of the AN URSR from 1958. He received his doctorate from Lviv University in 1911 and from 1911 to 1939 taught history in Polish gymnasiums in Zhovkva, Rohatyn, and Lviv, and at the Academic Gymnasium of Lviv. He also taught Ukrainian history at the Kamianets-Podilskyi Ukrainian State University (1919), the Lviv (Underground) Ukrainian University (1921–4), and the Greek Catholic Theological Academy (1934–9). From 1913 to 1914 he edited Illustrovana Ukraïna, a popular semi-monthly. For many years he served as director of the historical-philosophical section of NTSh, and in 1934 he became the editor of its periodical, Zapysky Naukovoho tovarystva im. Shevchenka (ZNTSh). In 1939 he was appointed professor at Lviv University, and in 1940 he became the director of the Lviv Branch of the AN URSR Institute of History. From 1946 to 1951 he was politically persecuted by the Soviet regime, but in 1953 he became the director of the AN URSR Institute of Social Sciences in Lviv.

Krypiakevych began his career as a historian under the tutelage of M. *Hrushevsky. At first he devoted himself to the socioeconomic and cultural history of Lviv and Galicia in the 16th and 17th centuries. His main publications in this period were 'Materialy do istorii torhivli L'vova' (Materials on the History of Trade in Lviv, ZNTSh, vol 65 [1905]) and 'L'vivs'ka Rus' v pershii polovyni xvi v.' (Lviv Rus' in the First Half of the 16th Century, ZNTSh, vols 77–9 [1907]). Soon, however, his attention focused on the history of the Cossacks and the Hetman state, and his major works are devoted to this subject. Among them are 'Kozachchyna i Batoriievi vol'nosti' (The Cossacks and Bathory's Privileges, Zherela do istorii Ukraïny-Rusy, vol 8, 1908), 'Kozachchyna v politychnykh kombinatsiakh 1620–1630 rr.' (The Cossacks in the Political Combinations of the 1620s–1630s, ZNTSh, vols 117–18 [1914]), 'Studii nad derzhavoiu Bohdana Khmel'nyts'koho' (Studies of Bohdan Khmelnytsky's State, ZNTSh, vols 138–40, 144–5, 147, 151 [1925–31]), and the large monograph Bohdan Khmel'nyts'kyi (1954), which was written in conformity with official Soviet historiography. His monograph Halyts'ko-Volyns'ke kniazivstvo (The Principality of Galicia-Volhynia, 1984) appeared posthumously.

Krypiakevych is the author of over 500 works on historiography, archeography, sphragistics, the study of primary sources, numismatics, historical geography, and cultural history. They include Ukraïns'ka istoriografii (Ukrainian Historiography, 1923), Istoriia Ukraïns'koi kul'tury (The History of Ukrainian Culture, 1937), and Dzherela z istorii Halychyny periodu feodalizmu (do 1772 r.) (Sources for the History of Galicia in the Feudal Period [to 1772], 1962). He was a brilliant popularizer and wrote many popular surveys and accounts of Ukraine's history. The best known among them are Velyka istoriia Ukraïny (The Great History of Ukraine, 1935) and Istoriia Ukraïns'koho viis'ka (A History of Ukrainian Armed Forces, 1936), written in collaboration with other historians, and Istoriia Ukraïny (The History of Ukraine, 1949, under the pseudonym Ivan Kholmsky). Under the pseudonym Ivan Petrenko he wrote stories with historical themes for children and youth; they appeared in Dzvoinok (which he edited in 1911–14) and as separate booklets. A bibliography of his writings by O. Kizlyk was published in 1966 in Lviv.

O. Ohloblyn

Krys, Hryhorii, b 24 December 1940 in Kiev. World and Olympic fencing champion. A graduate of the Kiev Institute of Physical Culture (1972), he won the gold medal at the 1964 Olympic Games and two silver medals at the 1968 Olympic Games. He was a member of the world champion USSR fencing team (1967–71) and individual champion of Ukraine and the USSR several times between 1964 and 1972. He now works as a coach.

Krysa, Herasym, b and d ? *Kish otaman of the *Zaporozhian Sich in 1703. Krysa was Hetman I. *Mazepa's candidate and a spokesman for the Cossack faction favoring rapprochement with the Russian tsar. He replaced K. *Hordiienko, who represented those Cossacks hostile to Mazepa and the tsar. However, the Hordiienko faction won out, and in December 1703 Hordiienko was again elected Kish otaman.

Krysa, Oleh, b 1 June 1942 in Male Uchanie in the Kholm region. Violinist and teacher. A graduate of the Moscow Conservatory (1965), where he studied under D. Oistrakh, Krysa has won several international awards: second prize at the Wieniawski competition (Poznań 1962), first prize at the Paganini competition (Genoa 1963), and first prize at the International Institute of Music competition (Montreal 1969). He has given concerts in most European countries and in Japan, and in 1971 he toured Canada and the United States. His repertoire includes works by A. Vivaldi, J. Bach, L. Beethoven, N. Paganini, J. Brahms, P. Tchaikovsky, E. Lalo, C. Debussy, M. Ravel, S. Prokofiev, J. Sibelius, and D. Shostakovich, as well as the Ukrainian composers A. Shtoharenko, V. Hubarenko, and M. Skoryk. After teaching at the Kiev Conservatory (1968–73), he moved to Moscow, where he has been teaching at the Gnesin Music and Pedagogic Institute and the Moscow Conservatory.

Kryshstofovych, Afrykan [Kryštofovyč], b 8 November 1885 in Kryshtopivka, Pavlohrad county, Katerynoslav gubernia, d 8 November 1953 in Leningrad. Paleobotanist; from 1945 full member of the AN USSR and from 1953 corresponding member of the USSR Academy of Sciences. A graduate of New Russia (Odessa) University (1908), he chaired the Department of Paleobotany at the AN USSR Institute of Botany from 1945 to 1948. Kryshstofovych studied plant fossils of the USSR and Asia from the Cenozoic, Mesozoic, and Paleozoic eras. He delineated the floral zones and climates of past eras and established that the Ukrainian forests of the Miocene epoch consisted mostly of deciduous plants.

Kryster, Arnold, b 30 October 1886, d ? Lawyer and historian of law. Kryster was a professor at the Kiev Institute of the National Economy and president of the vUAN commissions of Customary Law in Ukraine and Soviet Law. He was also the vice-president of the Society of Ukrainian Lawyers. Kryster published several works in the field of customary law, most of them appearing in journals of the vUAN, some of which he also edited. Kryster was arrested by the Soviet authorities in 1937 and sent to Siberia. His subsequent fate is unknown.

Krystynopil. See Chervonohrad.

Krytyka. See Literaturna krytyka.

Kryva Spit. VI-19. A sandy spit located on the northern coast of Tahanrih Bay of the Sea of Azov, in Donetsk oblast. The spit is approximately 10 km long. Its width varies considerably; at its narrowest point it is approx 100 m wide. The town smt Siedove is located on the spit.

Kryvche [Kryvče]. V-7. Village (1973 pop 2,400) in Borshchiv raion, Ternopil oblast, located on the Tsyhanka River. Kryvche is the site of ruins dating from the princely era (11th–13th centuries) and of a castle from the 17th century that was destroyed by the forces of the Turkish sultan Mahomet IV.

Kryvchenia, Oleksa [Kryvčenja], b 12 August 1910 in Odessa, d 10 March 1974 in Moscow. Singer (bass). A graduate of the Odessa Conservatory (1938), he performed for 10 years with opera companies in Voroshylovhrad, Dnipropetrovske, and Novosibirsk. In 1949 he was appointed soloist with the Bolshoi Theater in Moscow. His repertoire included such roles as Karas in S. Hulak-Artemovsky's Zaporozhian Cossack beyond the Danube, the title role in M. Lysenko's Taras Bulba, Cherevik in M. Mussorgsky's Sorochyntsi Fair, and Don Basilio in G. Rossini's Il barbiere di Siviglia. Kryvchenia also performed abroad: in France, Germany, Poland, Rumania, and Japan.

Kryvchenko, Heorhii (Yurii) [Kryvčenko, Heorhij], b 15 April 1883 in Kybyntsi, Myrhorod county, Poltava gubernia, d 11 April 1960 in Kiev. Economist, geographer, and statistician. Kryvchenko studied at the St Petersburg Polytechnical and then graduated from the University of Munich (1910). After working for government statistical offices in Saratov and Penza, he was an associate of the vUAN Institute of Demography (1919–20) and a professor at the Kiev Institute of the National Economy (1922–31). Repressed during the Stalinist terror of the 1930s, he was a professor at Kiev University (1943–52) before returning to the Institute of the National Economy (1956–60). Kryvchenko published a number of monographs and statistical surveys of Ukraine and other countries, primarily concerning the development of agriculture. His most notable works include Zbirnyk statystychnykh vidomosteï po narodnomu hospodarstvu Ukrainy (Collection of Statistical Data on the National Economy of Ukraine, 1919), Vneshniaia torgovlia Ukrainy v nastoiashchee vremia i do voïny (The Foreign Trade of Ukraine at the Present Time and before the War, 1923), Stanovyshche sil's'koho hospodarstva stepovoï Ukrainy (Agricultural Conditions in the Steppe Region of Ukraine, 1927), and Slovník ekonomichnoï terminolohii (Dictionary of Economic Terminology, 1931; with V. Ihnatovych).

B. Krawchenko

Kryve Ozero. VI-11. Town smt (1979 pop 12,000) and raion center in Mykolaiv oblast, situated on the Kodyma River in the Dnieper Lowland. It was founded in the 1850s. Today food processing is its main industry.

Kryvetsky, Mykhailo [Kryvec'kyj, Myxajlo], b ?, d 27 August 1929 in Clamart, France. Economist. Before the 1917 Revolution Kryvetsky worked in the Russian Ministry of Finance. A member of the Ukrainian Party of Socialists-Independentists, Kryvetsky was deputy minister of finance and head of the State Bank under the Central Rada and then finance minister in the government of S. Ostapenko (1919). His signature appears on the 1917 Central Rada issue of Ukrainian *currency. He emigrated after the fall of the Directory and lived in Vienna and later in France.

Kryvohlaz, Mykhailo, b 18 May 1929 in Kiev. Physicist; corresponding member of the AN USSR since 1978.

A graduate of Kiev University (1950), since 1951 he has worked at the AN USSR Laboratory (later Institute) of Metal Physics, becoming the head of a department in 1964. He was also a professor at Kiev University (1963–70). He has written a number of works in solid-state theory and developed a full kinematic theory of the refraction of x-rays and neutrons by imperfect crystals, and devised methods for the refractometric analysis of crystals and alloys.

Kryvonis, Maksym, b ? , d November 1648 near Zamostia (Zamość). Prominent Cossack military leader of the *Cossack-Polish War. Little is known about Kryvonis's early years. According to various sources he was either a peasant from Vilshane near Cherkasy or from near Zhytomyr, or a townsman from Ostrih or Mohyliv-Podilskyi. As a Zaporozhian Cossack, he took part in Cossack campaigns against the Crimean Tatars and Turkey. Kryvonis was one of the first to join B. Khmelnytsky's uprising and quickly became a close associate of the hetman's. He gained distinction as a cavalry commander in the Battle of *Korsun (May 1648). Following Khmelnytsky's orders, in summer 1648 Kryvonis organized mass peasant uprisings in Bratslav and Kiev regions and even in Left-Bank Ukraine, and engaged in a series of bloody battles with the Polish nobility's forces led by J. Wiśniowiecki. He later took part in the fighting on the Right Bank, according to some sources as the colonel of Cherkasy regiment. He distinguished himself in the Battle of *Pyliavtsi, and was wounded near Starokonstantyniv. Later he took part in the Galician campaign, gaining great fame when Cossacks under his command stormed the Vysoky Zamok castle in Lviv (5 October 1648). He died of the plague during the siege of Zamostia. Kryvonis was immortalized in folk songs and legends, some of which claim he was of Scottish descent. Many sources refer to him as Perebyinis. Kryvonis is the hero of V.M. Kulakovsky's historical novel Maksym Kryvonis (1983).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Polukhin, L. Maksym Kryvonis – heroi vyzvol'noi viiny ukrains'koho narodu, 1648–1654 (Kiev 1952)
 Lola, A. Maksym Kryvonis (Kiev 1957)
 Vynar, L. 'Pytannia pokhodzhennia polkovnyka M. Kryvonosa,' Ukrains'kyi istoryk, 1971, nos 3–4

A. Zhukovsky

Kryvorivnia [Kryvorivnja]. v-5. Carpathian village (1971 pop 1,200) in Verkhovyna (Zhabie) raion, Ivano-Frankivske oblast, situated in the Hutsul region. Kryvorivnia was first mentioned in 1717. At the turn of the 19th century it was a favorite summer resort for I. Franko and other Ukrainian scholars and writers, such as V. Hnatiuk, M. Hrushevsky, M. Kotsiubynsky, Lesia Ukrainka, O. Kobylanska, L. Martovych, V. Stefanyk, and H. Khotkevych. In 1953 a literary-memorial museum dedicated to Franko was opened there. In the early 1970s the village's name was changed to Kryvopillia.

Kryvvy (Krevey), Yefrem [Kryvyj, Jefrem], b 12 December 1928 in Ivaí, Paraná, Brazil. Ukrainian Catholic bishop. He studied at the Gregorian University in Rome (1948–52) and was ordained a priest of the Basilian order in 1951. In 1972 Pope Paul VI consecrated him as auxiliary bishop of St John eparchy in Curitiba, and in 1978 he became the full bishop of the eparchy. Kryvvy has successfully organized pastoral care for the Ukrainian population in Brazil.

KRYVVI RIH

1. Boundaries of Greater Kryvyi Rih
2. Canals
3. Railways and roads
- 4–5. Villages and semirural settlements

Workers' boroughs

- A. Suvorove
- B. Kalynine
- C. Zaliznychne

Kryvyi Rih [Kryvyj Rih]. vi-14. City (1986 pop 691,000) and raion center in Dnipropetrovske oblast, situated at the confluence of the Inhulets and Saksahan rivers. The eighth-largest city in Ukraine, it is divided into six city raions. It arose in the 17th century as a concentration of Zaporozhian Cossack winter homesteads. It came under Russian rule in 1774 and from 1803 was part of Kherson gubernia. From 1829 to 1860 it was a *military settlement. The beginnings of its industrial growth coincided with the exploitation of the *Kryvyi Rih Iron-ore Basin from 1881 and the construction of a railroad linking the basin with the Donbas. Consequently its population increased from 3,650 in 1859 to 15,000 in 1897 and 18,000 in 1910. Under Soviet rule the city was an okruha center in 1923–

32. It underwent intensive industrialization in the 1930s, and its population multiplied from 19,000 in 1923 to 31,300 in 1926 (69 percent Ukrainian, 18 percent Jewish, 10 percent Russian), 197,600 in 1939, and 212,900 in 1941. During the Second World War the city's industries were evacuated to the east and its mines were dynamited before it was occupied by German troops (August 1941–February 1944).

After the Second World War, Kryvyi Rih was extensively rebuilt and developed, and its population grew to 408,000 in 1959 and 581,000 in 1970. A major center of mining and ferrous metallurgy in the USSR, it has 24 mines, 4 mineral-enrichment complexes, a mining-equipment plant, a coke-chemical plant, and numerous factories producing machinery, metal products, and building materials. Wool, footwear, clothing, food, and wood products are also manufactured there. Located in the city are 7 scientific-research and planning-and-design institutes, including a mining and a pedagogical institute, a branch of the Kiev Institute of the National Economy, and an evening faculty of the Dnipropetrovske Metallurgical Institute; 17 specialized secondary schools; 18 vocational-technical schools; a Russian music-and-drama and a puppet theater; a regional-history museum; and a circus. In 1959, 73 percent of its population was Ukrainian, 21 percent Russian, and 3 percent Jewish.

Kryvyi Rih Iron-ore Basin. The most important Ukrainian iron-ore-producing region and the largest single source of iron in the Soviet Union. A narrow strip about 100 km long and 2–7 km wide, extending through western Dnipropetrovske oblast from the town of Zhovti Vody in the north to Inhulets in the south, the basin covers an area of approximately 300 sq km. The city of Kryvyi Rih is the major industrial center in the region.

The Kryvyi Rih Basin contains mostly Precambrian sedimentary-metamorphic rocks and is divided into three suites. The middle suite, with a thickness of up to 2,000 m, is the main ore-bearing formation. It consists of seven to eight seams of ferruginous quartzites (represented by hematites, magnetites, and mixed hematite-magnetite varieties) and schists. The average iron content is 30–40 percent in the ferruginous quartzites and 25–30 percent in the magnetite varieties (which compose 20 percent of the total quartzite reserves). Rich iron-ore bodies are dispersed throughout the ore-bearing formation. The ore is formed in columnar, lenticular, and pocket-like bodies that descend to a depth of over 1,000 m. In several places the bodies merge into large sloping ore beds. The rich ores are divided into magnetite, martite, and hematite-martite ores. The last two varieties have an average iron content of 63.7 percent and make up more than half of all reserves.

The Kryvyi Rih Basin has been excavated for iron since the time of the Scythians, but detailed prospecting and commercial exploitation began only in the second half of the 19th century. In 1881 O. *Pol founded a joint-stock company with French capital to develop mining in the basin. In its first year the company mined 37,400 t of iron ore. Production rose rapidly when a railway was constructed in 1884 connecting Kryvyi Rih with the coal-producing region of the Donets Basin. By 1913 the Kryvyi Rih Basin provided 6.4 million t, or 74.5 percent of all the iron ore produced in the Russian Empire. Fifty-one mines had been sunk and 23,600 miners worked in the region, making the area one of the largest industrial centers in Ukraine.

During the Revolution of 1917 and the subsequent struggle for Ukrainian independence, many of the mines and machines were destroyed and production fell drastically. The prewar level of production was not reached again until 1931. However, efficiency was greatly disrupted by the forced rate of industrialization, and more workers (77,339 in 1932) were needed to reach the same level of output.

In 1940, production reached 18.9 million t, or 63 percent of the Soviet total. After the Second World War the mines were increasingly mechanized and the problems of beneficiating ferruginous quartzites were overcome. The basin produced 80 million t, or 52 percent of Soviet production, in 1965 and 58 percent of total Soviet output in 1972. Since then, however, its proportion of Soviet production has declined as the rich deposits in Kryvyi Rih have been exhausted and new sources have been developed. In 1984 the basin accounted for 46 percent of all Soviet production, although total output increased to 103 million t.

Annual production now consists of 38 million t of deep-mined ore excavated from 23 mines extending down to 1,200 m. Another 65 million t are mined from 11 open pits. The rich iron-ore bodies are becoming depleted and reserves (1.5 billion t in 1968) are expected to last only another 25–35 years. The lower-grade quartzite ores that are mined in open pits are becoming increasingly important and are beneficiated in five large complexes, including the Southern and New Kryvyi Rih mineral-enrichment complexes. A sixth concentrator is being built jointly by the Comecon countries. This reflects the importance of Ukrainian iron ore for the east-European countries, which import one-quarter of Ukraine's production. The new concentrator will reprocess inferior-grade quartzites that are now discarded as tailings and will have an annual capacity of 14 million t. Total industrial reserves in the basin are estimated at 16 billion t (1979) and are expected to last several hundred years.

The Kryvyi Rih Basin, producing 85 percent of total Ukrainian output, supplies iron ore to several metallurgical plants in the *Dnieper Industrial Region and the *Donets Basin. The extractive industry employs 62.5 percent of the work force in the city of Kryvyi Rih and 93 percent in the towns of Zhovti Vody and Inhulets.

B. Somchynsky

Kryvyi Rih Metallurgical Plant (Kryvorizkyi metalurhiynyi zavod im. V.I. Lenina or Kryvorizhstal). A metallurgical plant located in Kryvyi Rih that mainly processes the rich local resources of the *Kryvyi Rih Iron-ore Basin. Construction of the plant began in 1931, and the first blast furnace was put into operation in 1934. Before the Second World War, the complex consisted of three blast furnaces, a Bessemer department with two converters, two coke-chemical batteries, and fuel and mechanical divisions. At the outbreak of war, most of the plant's machinery was evacuated to the Ural region. The remaining facilities were completely destroyed during the war. After the war, the plant was reconstructed and significantly expanded, especially during the 1959–65 period when new facilities were constructed every year. At the same time, new technological processes and computerization were introduced. Now, the enterprise consists of an agglomerating plant, 9 blast furnaces, an open-hearth furnace, 2 oxygen converters, 3 continuous blooming mills, and 10 rolling mills. The basic output of the enterprise is pig iron, steel, and rolled metal (strips, wound wire, angle iron, and fitting, round, and sheet steel). The Kryvyi Rih Metallurgical Plant is the largest producer of pig iron and the second largest producer of steel and rolled metal in the USSR.

I. Koropeckyj

Kryvyi Torets River [Kryvyj Torec']. A right-bank tributary of the Kazennyi Torets River, flowing for 88 km through the Donetsk Ridge and draining a basin of 1,590 sq km. The waters of this gently sloping river are used for irrigation and to supply the population and industry.

Oleksandra Kryvytska

Kryvytska, Oleksandra [Kryvyc'ka], b 16 January 1899 in Chyhyryn, Kiev gubernia, d 24 February 1981 in Lviv. Stage actress. Making her debut in 1916 with S. Pronsky's troupe, in 1918 she joined the Sadovsky Theater in Kiev. From 1921 she worked with various provincial troupes in Galicia. In 1928 she joined the new Tobilevykh Ukrainian People's Theater in Stanyslaviv, which she left for the Zahrava Young Ukrainian Theater in 1933. Then she worked with the Kotliarevsky Theater, which arose in 1938 from the merger of the Tobilevykh and Zahrava theaters, the Lesia Ukrainka Theater (1939-41), and the Lviv Opera Theater (1941-4), all of which were directed by V. Blavatsky. From 1945 to 1973 she worked with the Zankovetska Ukrainian Drama Theater. Kryvytska played lead roles in Ukrainian, European, and Soviet plays, including Beatrice in Yu. Kosach's Obloha (The Siege), Predslava in I. Franko's Son kniazia Sviatoslava (Prince Sviatoslav's Dream), Lady Milford in F. Schiller's Kabale und Liebe, and Lida in O. Kornichuk's Platon Krechet.

Kryzhanivsky, Stepan [Kryzhaniv's'kyj], b 8 January 1911 in Novyi Buh, Kherson gubernia. Poet and literary scholar. Since 1940 he has been associated with the AN USSR Institute of Literature. Between 1930 and 1981 he published 20 poetry collections. A large edition of his selected poetry appeared in 1957. He has also written short books about V. Stefanyk (1946), A. Malysko (1951), A. Teslenko (1949), M. Bazhan (1954), and M. Rylsky (1955), literary articles, introductions to editions of works by various Soviet Ukrainian writers, and chapters in multiauthor, multivolume histories of Ukrainian literature. His theoretical-critical works on socialist realism include Osnovni rysy radians'koi literatury (The Fundamental Traits of Soviet Literature, 1954), Problemy typovosty v khudozhnii literaturi (The Problems of Types in Creative Literature, 1961), Vykhovannia pravdy i krasoty (Rol' radians'koi literatury u formuvanni novoi liudyny) (Upbringing on Truth and Beauty [The Role of Soviet Literature in the Formation of the New Person], 1962), Robitnycha tema v radians'kii literaturi (The Theme of Labor in Soviet Literature, 1979), and Khudozhni vidkryttia i literaturnyi protses (Artistic Discoveries and the Literary Process, 1979).

Kryzhanovsky, Navkratii [Kryzhanov's'kyj, Navkratii], b 22 May 1876 in Verkhobuzh, Zolochiv county, Galicia, d 10 April 1940 in Stamford, Connecticut. Missionary priest. He entered the Basilian monastic order in 1896 and was ordained in 1903, a few months before coming to Canada. Until 1910 he ministered to Ukrainian Catholics in Winnipeg and its environs, and he then established a mission in Mundare, Alberta. In 1923 he built a monastery there and directed the Basilian Mission in Canada. In 1932 Kryzhanovsky became the first protohegumen of the new American-Canadian Province of the Basilian order.

Kryzhopil [Kryzhopil']. v-9. Town smt (1979 pop 8,500) and raion center in Vinnytsia oblast. The town was established in 1866. During the struggle for Ukrainian independence it was the site of battles between the Ukrainian Galician Army and the Red Army, the UNR Army and A. Denikin's Volunteer Army, and the UNR Army and the Red Army. Now several small food-processing plants are located there.

Kryzhytsky, Kostiantyn [Kryzyc'kyj, Kostjantyn], b 29 May 1858 in Kiev, d 17 April 1911 in St Petersburg. Landscapist; from 1900 full member of the St Petersburg Academy of Arts. After attending the Kiev Drawing School, he completed his studies under M. Klodt at the St Petersburg Academy of Arts (1877-85). His canvases, done in a realist style, include Oaks (1911), Mowers in Ukraine (1884), Before the Storm (1885), A Farmstead in Ukraine, Village, Bank of the Dnieper, A Summer Day in the Steppe, A Market, and Grain Harvesting.

Kuba, Ludvik, b 16 April 1863 in Poděbrady, Czechoslovakia, d 30 November 1956 in Prague. Czech painter, ethnographer, and musicologist. After graduating from a teacher's college (1883), he worked as a rural teacher. Inspired by the idea of Slavic unity, he devoted his life to collecting and publishing the folk songs of all the Slavic nations. From 1884 to 1929 he published the monumental, 15-volume Slovanstvo ve svých zpěvech (Slavdom in Its Songs), in which each song is given in its original and in Czech translation, and is accompanied with a vocal and piano score. Many of the songs were written down by Kuba himself on his frequent expeditions. Volume 6 (1885-8; repr, 1922, 1944) is devoted to the eastern Slavs and contains over a hundred Ukrainian folk songs. During his travels (in Ukraine 1886, 1887) Kuba also collected ethnographic materials and painted. On the basis of his observations he published many articles on the folkways and folklore of the various Slavic nations, including the Ukrainians. As an artist he produced over 2,200 paintings, sketches, and drawings, some of which were published in Czech journals or in his monographs. In 1963 a collection of Kuba's works dealing with Ukrainian songs and folklore, titled Liudvik Kuba pro Ukraïnu (Ludvik Kuba on Ukraine), was compiled by M. Molnar.

Kubala, Ludwik, b 9 September 1838 in Kamienica, Cracow county, d 30 September 1918 in Lviv. Prominent Polish historian and political figure. Kubala studied at the universities of Cracow and Vienna. He was a participant in the Polish uprising of 1863–4. From 1875 to 1906 he taught in a gymnasium in Lviv. Kubala was a member of the Polish Academy of Sciences from 1884 and a full member of the Shevchenko Scientific Society. He specialized in the history of Poland and in Ukrainian-Polish relations during the time of the *Cossack-Polish War of 1648–57; he was particularly interested in military history and the personalities of such major figures as Hetman B. *Khmelnitsky. His publications include Szkice historyczne (Historical Sketches, 6 vols, 1881–1922), Jerzy Ossoliński (2 vols, 1883), Wojna moskiewska r. 1654–55 (The Muscovite War, 1654–5, 1910), Wojna szwedzka r. 1655–56 (The Swedish War, 1655–6, 1913), Wojna brandenburska i najazd Rakoczege w r. 1656–57 (The Brandenburg War and the Invasion of Rákóczi in 1656–7, 1917), and Wojna duńska i pokój oliwski 1657–60 (The Danish War and the Peace of Oliwa, 1657–60, 1922).

Kuban [Kuban']. A historical-geographical region in northwestern *Caucasia. Kuban is the southernmost Ukrainian ethnographic territory, separated from the rest of Ukraine by the Sea of Azov and the Russian *Don region. It encompasses the western part of the steppes of *Subcaucasia and the main massif of the Caucasus Mountains, their foothills, and their western slopes. Historically, in the west, Kuban was bordered by the Black and Azov seas and the Kerch Strait; in the north, by the Don region at the Yeia River; in the east, by the *Stavropol and *Terek regions; and in the south, by Georgia and the main Caucasian Mountain range from Mount Elbrus to the Black Sea near Sochi. Kuban covers an area of about 100,000 sq km and has a population (1985) of approx 5.8 million.

Until the end of the 18th century, ties between Kuban and the rest of Ukraine were weak because of the great distances separating the two. In the course of Russia's struggle to control Caucasia and extend its influence into Asia Minor, Kuban, because of its location on the route to Baku, the Caspian Sea, and the warmwater ports of the Black Sea (Novorossiiske), gained in significance. Kuban has great geopolitical importance for Ukraine. It strengthens its position on the Black Sea, cutting Russia off from it entirely, and provides a direct link to Transcaucasia.

Kuban emerged as a political and administrative unit in 1860 after the unification of the territories of the *Black Sea Cossacks with the eastern regions of Kuban to create Kuban oblast. The new territory was mostly inhabited by the *Kuban Cossack Host. In the 1860s the territory on the left bank of the Kuban River (the Transkuban) was joined to Kuban oblast. In 1896, the Black Sea coast was separated from the oblast to form the Black Sea gubernia. Most of the territory of Kuban was claimed after the First World War by the *Kuban People's Republic, but in 1920 the region was incorporated by the Bolsheviks into the RSFSR as Kuban-Black Sea oblast. Reorganized several times in the 1920s, the territory of Kuban corresponds largely to the present-day *Krasnodar krai (formed in 1937) and the *Karachai-Cherkess Autonomous oblast on the upper reaches of the Kuban River, which was historically inhabited by Cherkessian (Circassian) tribes.

Geography. Kuban consists of several distinct geographic regions. The *Kuban Lowland (up to 120 m in elevation) in the north is a poorly differentiated plain of fertile, chernozem-covered arable steppe. Its uniformity is only interrupted by occasional minor depressions. The southern region, on the left bank of the Kuban River, is called Transkuban (Zakubannia). It is more elevated and forested and broken by tributaries of the Kuban. A somewhat different relief is found on the *Taman Peninsula, a part of the Kuban Lowland that separates the Azov from the Black Sea. It is covered by floodplains, and mud volcanoes are encountered. The Azov coast is characterized by widespread salt marshes and lagoons, and the Black Sea coast is distinguished by its clayey and sandy soils and Mediterranean climate and flora. In the east, the Kuban Lowland rises slightly to join the *Stavropol Upland.

In the south, the Black Sea range of the Caucasus Mountains rises from the Kuban Lowland. Its elevation averages 300 m. The Vovchi Vorota and Hoitkh passes permit travel between the interior and the Black Sea coast. The Abkhaz and Central Caucasian ranges on the east are only partially situated on Kuban territory, and even less so on Ukrainian ethnographic territory. Asymmetrical spurs with steep southern and gentle northern slopes extend to the northeast. Two of these run parallel to the Black Sea range, and three run towards the east. The lower slopes of the mountains are covered by deciduous forests and the peaks are covered by coniferous forests and occasional alpine meadows. January temperatures average  $-5^{\circ}\text{C}$  in northern and central Kuban and  $5^{\circ}\text{C}$  on the Black Sea coast, while July temperatures average  $22-24^{\circ}\text{C}$ . In the mountains, temperatures average  $-7$  to  $-8^{\circ}\text{C}$  in January and  $12-13^{\circ}\text{C}$  in July. Rainfall averages 400–600 mm in the lowlands and much higher in the mountains. The largest rivers are the \*Kuban and its tributaries the Laba, Urup, and Bila, and the Protoka. Deposits of oil, natural gas, and rock salt are found there.

History

To the end of the 18th century. Kuban has been inhabited without interruption since the Paleolithic era. The region is rich in artifacts from the Neolithic and Bronze ages, especially the 'Great Kuban graves,' which contain the remains and riches of deceased chieftains. In the first half of the first millennium BC Kuban was one of the first centers of bronze making; from there the craft spread to Ukraine up to the Dnieper River. The first inhabitants were probably the Indo-European Cimmerians. In the 7th century BC they were pushed out by the Scythians. From that time, the region was populated by several interrelated peoples: the Scythians, the Sindians, who were centered south of the Kuban River and on the Taman Peninsula, and various Maeotian tribes on the shores of the Azov Sea. They farmed and fished and conducted extensive trade with Byzantium. The Scythian culture flourished throughout Kuban, and many grave sites and artifacts have been excavated. A number of Greek city-states, centered chiefly on the Taman Peninsula, were established in the 6th–5th centuries BC. The most important of these were *Phanagoria, Hermonassa, and Cēpi. These colonies, as well as the territories of the Sindians and Maeotians, were subsequently incorporated into the *Bosporan Kingdom and the entire coastal region was largely Hellenized. After the 2nd century AD, the nomadic Sarmatians and Alans pushed the Scythian tribes out of the steppes. The invasion of the Huns in the 4th century AD destroyed the Bosporan Kingdom. The local inhabitants integrated with the Huns and other later invaders. In the west, the Maeotians and Sindians eventually became the Cherkessians (also known as the Circassians, they are the modern Adygeians and Kabardians), and in the central Caucasus, the Ossetes emerged from the Alans. In the 5th century some Goths came to Taman from Crimea. In the 7th century, the entire Kuban region was incorporated into the Khazar kaganate. During this period, the Greek colonies on the Taman Peninsula and the Caucasian Black Sea coast remained as links to Byzantine culture and Christianity.

In the 9th century, colonies were established by the proto-Ukrainian Siverianians, who moved along the Donets River to the lower Don, and from there to the shores of the Sea of Azov, Taman, and up the Kuban River. After Prince Sviatoslav's defeat of the Khazars, Ossetians (known in Rus' sources as the Yasy), and Cherkessians (known as the Kasohy), the *Tmutorokan principality of Kievan Rus' was established in Taman. It was under the control of the Chernihiv princes, and the Cherkessians were its vassals. In the 12th century, the Cumans cut Kuban off from the rest of Ukraine and ended Rus' control over Tmutorokan. However, Rus' settlements on the shores of the Sea of Azov were still mentioned in 13th-century chronicles as vassals of the Cumans.

In the first half of the 13th century, Kuban was conquered by the Mongols. Many local inhabitants sought refuge in the mountains (see *Caucasian Mountain peoples). When Mongol influence declined, several Italian (mainly Genoese) colonies were established on the Black Sea, most notably Mapa (present-day Anapa), Bata (Novorosiiske), Matruga (Tmutorokan), and Kopa (near the mouth of the Kuban River). They were important centers of trade and culture. After the disintegration of the Golden Horde in the 15th century, the Nogay Tatars settled on the Kuban steppes and allied themselves with the *Crimean Khanate. In the 1470s–1480s the Genoese colonies were captured by the Turks. The Crimean Khanate, which became a Turkish vassal, gained control over northern Kuban through the Nogay Tatars, and the Taman towns of Temriuk, Taman, and Anapa came under direct Turkish control. Only in the mountains were the Cherkessians able to remain independent. However, even they came under Turkish cultural influence and adopted Islam. Muscovite influence, which began to penetrate the Caucasus in the mid-16th century, became very pronounced in the 18th century. The Russians hoped to gain control over all of Caucasia. Throughout this period, the Kuban steppes were the scene of fierce conflict between the Cherkessians and the Nogay Tatars. Zaporozhian Cossacks began to dock on the eastern shore of the Sea of Azov and establish fishing ports in Taman.

During the Russo-Turkish War of 1768–74, the Nogay Tatars were pushed out of northern Kuban and the area was nearly depopulated. In 1774, the Turks relinquished control over the Crimean Khanate, and thus over northern Kuban, under the terms of the Treaty of *Küçük-Kaynarca, and in 1783 northern Kuban was incorporated into the Russian Empire. The Kuban and Laba rivers served as the new border between Russia and the still autonomous Cherkessian tribes.

From 1792 to 1917. In order to secure control over the new territory, Empress Catherine II gave the remaining Zaporozhian Cossacks, who had been reorganized as the *Black Sea Cossacks, the lands between the Kuban and Yeia rivers. There they were granted extensive autonomy. Totalling some 30,000 sq km, these lands constituted about one-third of the territory of the future Kuban Cossack Host. The colonization began in 1792, and by 1795, 20,000 Cossacks and some Russians lived in the territory. The Zaporozhian Cossack administrative system and social order were reconstituted, and 40 *kurins (companies) were established and named for the original kurins of Zaporizhia. The Cossacks were given the responsibility of defending the new border, the so-called Black Sea Line (Chornomorska liniia) that followed the Kuban River from the Black Sea to Ust-Labynsk, a distance of some 320 km. In 1794 the town of Katerynodar (now *Krasnodar) was founded as the Cossack headquarters.

Because of the difficult climate, diseases such as malaria, and the never-ending conflicts with the Cherkessians, the Cossacks suffered many casualties. Their numbers were bolstered by the arrival of Cossacks and escaping serfs from Left-Bank and Slobidska Ukraine. From 1809 to 1811, around 41,000 new immigrants arrived in northern Kuban, followed by about 48,000 in 1821–5 and 16,000 in 1848–50. In total, 100,000 settlers arrived, almost all of them Ukrainians. These, too, suffered a high mortality rate, however, and in 1861 the population of the region stood at only 189,000, including 5,000 non-Cossacks (upon arriving in Kuban most serfs joined the Cossacks). The population density was low, barely 6 persons per sq km. Because most able-bodied males served in the military, the main industries were animal husbandry, extensive agriculture, and fishing.

Beginning in 1794 colonization of northeastern Kuban (the area between Stavropol and Ust-Labynsk) began. The first settlers were mostly from the Katerynoslav and Voronezh regions and included many Ukrainians and Don Cossacks. They were soon organized into the Kuban Cossack regiment, and bolstered by the arrival in 1802 of the 3,000-man *Katerynoslav Cossack Army. In the early 19th century, the population of this region reached 25,000. In 1832, all the varied Cossack units and colonies there were united with the Terek Cossack Host to the east to form the Caucasian Cossack *Frontier Army (liniitsi). Several new units composed mostly of Russian and Ukrainian peasants and Cossacks from Left-Bank Ukraine were settled in the region in 1831–4. They defended the so-called Old Line, running from Stavropol northwest and joining the eastern frontier of the Black Sea Cossack territory. In 1840 the frontier was moved south to run from the Kuban River south along the Laba and Bila (the so-called New Line). The 'New Frontier' was settled by a variety of Kuban, Caucasian, and Terek Cossacks. None of these units enjoyed the same autonomy that the Black Sea Cossacks did, and they were all directly or indirectly under regular Russian army control.

A major reorganization of the territory occurred in 1860

when the *Kuban Cossack Host was created out of the Black Sea Cossacks and the six western regiments in the 'New Frontier.' The Terek Cossack Host was created in the eastern half of northern Caucasia. Both of these hosts were part of the Caucasus vicegerency. In the 1860s, the Russian Empire began acquiring the Transkuban territories south of the Kuban River. The Adrianopol Treaty of 1829 with Turkey had already granted Russia the entire Black Sea coast from Anapa to Gagra and recognized Russian dominance over the entire Caucasus. Colonization began soon afterwards, and in 1862-4 the Ukrainian *Azov Cossack Host was forcibly settled there. Russian pressure on the Cherkessian tribes, who by this time were concentrated in the mountains, intensified, and fierce fighting raged on the borders. In 1864 Cherkessian resistance was finally broken, and most of the Cherkessians either emigrated voluntarily or were forcibly removed to Turkey; by 1865 only 74,000 remained in Kuban. Transkuban was then settled by Black Sea Cossacks, Cossacks of the Frontier Army, and peasants from Ukraine and the Azov region – between 1861 and 1865 a total of 16,000 families. In 1865 the population of the entire Kuban was 557,000, of which 90.1 percent were Cossacks or Caucasian mountain peoples. The population began to grow significantly after 1868, when non-Cossacks were first permitted to acquire land. Over the next 15 years, about 250,000 settlers arrived in Kuban, primarily Ukrainian peasants fleeing overcrowded conditions at home. Upon arrival, some of the peasants became Cossacks, but this was not officially allowed after 1870. From then on, the Cossack estate became closed, and the Cossack proportion of the population dropped gradually. By 1897 the total population reached 1,919,000, and by 1914, 3,051,000 (excluding Black Sea gubernia).

On the eve of the 1917 Revolution, Cossacks composed 49 percent of Kuban's population and the mountain peoples 7 percent. The rest of the population was referred to as horodovyky, from the Russian inogorodnye (outlanders). The Cossacks lived in *stanytsias (garrisons) ranging in size from 5,000 to 20,000 or more. These stanytsias were self-administered, and the Cossacks owned 79 percent of the land (for a more detailed account of the agrarian and military organization of the Kuban army, see *Kuban Cossack Host). The horodovyky were either korinni or nekorinni. The former (9 percent of the population) lived in separate villages and owned their own land (9 percent of that available), and enjoyed some autonomy. The nekorinni peasants rented land from landlords or Cossacks, or simply worked as laborers. They lived in the stanytsias or rented homesteads and had no rights of self-government. Great differences in political status between the Cossacks and non-Cossacks were accompanied by considerable socioeconomic differences.

From the beginning of the colonization of Kuban by Black Sea Cossacks, the tsarist government systematically restricted Cossack autonomy and the traditional Zaporozhian way of life and worked to Russify the Cossacks. As early as 1794, the convocation of Cossack councils was prohibited, as was the election of senior officers and the judiciary. Russian generals were appointed as otamans; only the last otaman before the 1917 Revolution, the Russified M. Babych, was a Ukrainian. The state confiscated about 1 million ha of Cossack land for distribution among Russian functionaries and officers or loyal Cossacks. In 1896, when a section of the Black Sea coast was detached from Kuban and transformed into a separate Black Sea gubernia, the stanytsias there were simply closed.

The merger of the Ukrainian Black Sea Cossacks with the mixed Frontier Army served the cause of Russification. The government also hoped to alienate the Cossack officers from the rank and file by granting them large estates, although none of them displayed any desire to engage in agriculture, creating a kind of Cossack aristocracy. On the whole, the officers displayed great loyalty to the tsar and the Russian government. In order to further shelter Kuban Cossacks from Ukrainian influence, they were often sent to borderlands of the empire, particularly Turkestan, Poland, and Transcaucasia. Conversely, Russian Cossacks were stationed in Ukraine. The government did not establish any military academies for Kuban Cossacks, as it did for other Cossack hosts, and local aspirants had to go for training to Stavropol, Orenburg, Tiflis (now Tbilisi), or elsewhere. In the first years following the settlement of Kuban, the Cossacks elected their own priests and sent them to seminaries in Teodosiia. This practice was soon prohibited by the government, however, which gave the right to designate and ordain priests for the region to the bishops of Rostov and Stavropol. A separate eparchy was never created for Kuban, no seminary was established, and its priests were mainly Russians. Kuban also lacked formal institutions such as a supreme court or a true capital city. Since there were only four teachers' colleges, most teachers came from Russian gubernias, and although Kuban was a leading agricultural producer, it lacked even a secondary school in agriculture. It also lacked any institution of higher learning.

The official policy of colonial exploitation was particularly evident in tsarist taxation practices. In 1913, 34.3 million rubles were collected for the state treasury in the region, but total expenditures came to only 15.4 million rubles. Thus, about 19 million rubles were drained from Kuban in that one year alone.

An important factor contributing to the underdevelopment of Kuban was the lack of *zemstvos like those that were established in Left-Bank Ukraine. The fact that Cossack autonomy was limited to the stanytsias meant that local administrations (both civilian and Cossack) had to deal with problems that would have been better dealt with by a united zemstvo system. Agriculture, medical and veterinary care, education, and public works could not be adequately developed, and there were no institutions in Kuban in which both non-Cossacks and Cossacks could co-operate.

Despite all these obstacles, the years immediately preceding the First World War saw a marked increase in the political and social initiative of the population, and particularly the Cossacks. Cossack stanytsias set up their own elementary schools, which were often better than their counterparts elsewhere in the empire. Credit and agricultural co-operatives were established, and Kuban became a leader in agricultural production in the empire. During the Revolution of 1905, there were signs of Cossack opposition to the central government, and in 1906 Otaman Mikhailov convened a Kuban Military Council (after 110 years of inactivity) for the settling of land rights, for which he was dismissed. Kuban sent progressive delegates to all four state dumas, among them the Ukrainian K. Bardizh.

The Ukrainian national movement in Kuban was rather weak. Most of the intelligentsia, particularly government functionaries, priests, and teachers, were from Russia proper or drawn from the local Russified population. Although the Cossacks and many peasants retained Ukrainian traditions and the language, they did not participate in organized Ukrainian life and very few developed a modern Ukrainian national consciousness. There was, however, a conscious Ukrainian element among some of the intelligentsia. A number of Kuban writers, influenced by T. Shevchenko and P. Kulish, wrote in Ukrainian; these included Ya. *Kukhareno, a friend of Shevchenko's and the otaman of the Black Sea Cossacks, and V. Mova (Lymansky). Students from Kuban who studied in Kharkiv, Kiev, or St Petersburg often joined Ukrainian groups. Many Ukrainian writers went to Kuban, including M. Vorony, A. Kashchenko, V. Samiilenko, and V. Potapenko. The development of the Ukrainian movement was also influenced by the various Ukrainian theatrical troupes that toured Kuban. Some political relations between Kuban and Ukraine were established after the creation of the Revolutionary Ukrainian party (RUP). In Katerynodar, the local RUP group, known as the Chornomorska Hromada, was headed by S. Erastiv. Many RUP leaders – including I. Rotar, S. Petliura, P. Poniatenko, B. Martos, A. Kucheriavenko, P. Suliatytsky, I. Ivasiuk, M. Bilynsky, and Yu. Kollard – fled to Kuban to escape tsarist repression. In Katerynodar, a large Ukrainian library was established by Yu. Tyshchenko with funds provided by the Shevchenko Scientific Society. Shevchenko commemorations were held and amateur Ukrainian theater ensembles were organized. The repertoire of the Kuban Army Chorus (conducted by the composer H. Kontsevych), which comprised the best singers of Kuban, was almost exclusively Ukrainian.

From 1917 to 1920. After the February Revolution of 1917, four tendencies manifested themselves in Kuban political life: (1) a pro-Russian movement, with adherents mainly among the Russian and Russified non-Cossack intelligentsia, saw Kuban as a strictly Russian territory and opposed any distinct recognition for the Cossacks; (2) the strongest movement, supported by the majority of the Cossack intelligentsia, hoped simply to preserve the Kuban Cossack Host and expel the horodovyky from the region; (3) an autonomist trend favored ties to a federated Russian republic but with considerable political autonomy for the Cossacks; and (4) a pro-Ukrainian faction aimed to join Kuban to Ukraine in a federation without ties to Russia. The latter two movements, which had the fewest supporters, were also those with a largely Ukrainian Cossack or horodovyk constituency. They believed in granting the two groups equal rights. These different visions of Kuban's future reflected serious differences in class and national consciousness and the deep-rooted antagonisms between the Cossacks, who jealously guarded their special status and privileges, and the horodovyky, who hoped to be placed on an equal footing with the Cossacks and especially hoped for a major redistribution of land that would benefit the land-hungry peasants.

In May 1917, a congress in Katerynodar elected a Provincial Council and Executive Committee, which, along with a commissioner (K. Bardizh) of the Russian Provisional Government, carried out the duties of a territorial government. At this same conference, the delegates also endorsed the creation of a separate Cossack Military Council and Military Government. Later, the Cossacks joined the Southeastern Union of the three larger Cossack hosts: the Don, Kuban, and Terek. Because of differences with the Provincial Executive Committee, which insisted on recognizing central Russian authority, the Kuban Cossacks left the Provincial Council in June 1917, thus initiating a period during which two centers of political power coexisted.

In September 1917, the Military Council, sitting in its second session, added delegates from the mountain peoples and the urban and nekorinni non-Cossack populations and proclaimed itself a Territorial Council. A constitution was passed, and the creation of the Kuban Krai Republic, which would join a future Russian federated republic, was proclaimed. A Legislative Council was to act as a parliament and elect the Territorial Government and the otaman as the commander in chief of the army and head of state. The first otaman was A. Filimonov (a Russophile and descendant of a Frontier Army Cossack), and the first prime minister was L. *Bych (a Ukrainian). The first constitution did not guarantee full rights to the nekorinni horodovyky, and this widened the rift between them and the Cossacks.

The Kuban Territorial Government did not recognize the Bolshevik seizure of power in Petrograd in November 1917 and assumed full legal power. At its December session, the Territorial Council proclaimed that 'the highest institutions of government of the Kuban territory are the Kuban Territorial and Legislative Councils, elected on the basis of a universal, equal, direct, and secret vote.' This declaration finally recognized the equality of the horodovyky and the Cossacks. On 28 January 1918, the Legislative Council, consisting of 46 representatives from the Cossacks, 46 from the horodovyky, and 8 from the mountain peoples, organized a new Territorial Government, headed by L. Bych, consisting of 5 Cossacks, 5 horodovyky, and 1 representative from the mountain peoples. These developments were partly motivated by a fear of the imminent Bolshevik invasion and the prospect that many Cossacks and horodovyky would join the Bolsheviks. On 16 February, the Legislative Council unanimously proclaimed the independent Kuban People's Republic. Under the pressure of the overwhelming Bolshevik forces, the Legislative Council, the military otaman, the government, and the army of some 3,000 volunteers were forced to retreat from Katerynodar. On 17 March, they entered into an anti-Bolshevik alliance with Gen L. Kornilov, the commander of the Russian Volunteer Army. After the death of Kornilov near Katerynodar on 31 March, he was succeeded by A. *Denikin, who also assumed command of the Kuban army.

Before its departure from Katerynodar, the Legislative Council had voted for federation with Ukraine. On 15 May 1918, a delegation headed by M. Riabovol was sent to Kiev, but it did not reach an accord with Hetman P. Skoropadsky. After its return, the Territorial Council (consisting of 10 members at the time) decided on 23 June not to federate with Ukraine but to join Denikin's White forces.

After the 2 August 1918 occupation of Katerynodar and the expulsion of the Bolsheviks from the Kuban in October, Denikin attempted to impose a dictatorship in the region. This was supported in part by the Entente

KUBAN

- 1. Geographic boundary
- 2. Railways
- 3. Highways
- 4. Airports
- 5. Seaports
- 6. Cities with a population over 500,000
- 7. Cities with a population over 100,000
- 8. Cities with a population of 50,000–100,000
- 9. Other cities and towns
- 10. Limit of compact Ukrainian ethnic territory in 1926
- 11. Borders of oblasts, krais, and autonomous SSR powers, who favored a single and undivided Russia, and who supported only the Volunteer Army, providing supplies such as medication, clothing, and ammunition. Yet the Kuban Territorial Council adopted the second Kuban constitution (28 October–8 November 1919) that declared Kuban an independent, democratic, parliamentary republic. The constitution also restated Kuban's willingness to join a future federated Russian republic.

In this period, two political factions emerged among the Cossacks. The Black Sea Ukrainian Cossacks opposed Denikin and wished to establish an independent Kuban within an alliance of Cossack states consisting of Kuban, Ukraine, and the Caucasus. The Russophile faction, consisting primarily of Frontier Army Cossacks and headed by Otaman A. Filimonov and Premier P. Sushkov (elected in December 1918), proposed a union of the Don, Kuban, and Terek Cossack territories that would serve as a base for the renewal of a single and undivided

Russia. This faction organized the Congress of the Don, Kuban, and Terek (ДКТ) in Rostov-na-Donu (13 June 1919). The Kuban delegation to this congress was headed by M. Riabovol. He was murdered by Denikin supporters after he gave a speech proposing an alliance of all anti-Bolshevik forces in which he expressed reservations about the Volunteer Army. After his assassination, the ДКТ Congress became the 'South Russian' conference. In addition to the Cossacks, the conference accepted delegates from the Volunteer Army and took on a Russophile character. It called for the establishment of a single Russian state formation that would include the Cossack territories, Ukraine, and the Caucasus. These plans were opposed by the Kuban delegates who supported the Legislative Council and the new pro-Ukrainian government of P. Kurhansky (who had replaced P. Sushkov). Denikin decided to organize a coup d'état in Kuban. As a pretext, he chose the projected mutual friendship agreement reached at the Paris Peace Talks in July 1919 between the Kuban delegation headed by L. Bych and the Republic of the Mountain Peoples of the Northern Caucasus, which was occupied by the Volunteer Army. He arrested the Kuban delegation and ordered that Gen P. Wrangel, Otaman A. Filimonov, and V. Naumenko, an ex-minister of the Kuban Republic, carry out the coup. On 6 November 1919, V. Pokrovsky surrounded the Territorial Council with an armed detachment and forced them to make the changes to the constitution that Denikin demanded. A member of the Kuban delegation to Paris, Rev O. Kulabukhiv, was publicly hanged. This prompted the resignation of Filimonov and the government of P. Kurhansky. M. Uspensky was appointed as the new military otaman, while the government was once again headed by P. Sushkov.

As a result of this coup, the Kuban Cossack forces stopped fighting the Bolsheviks. The Volunteer Army alone was not capable of maintaining the fronts against the Bolshevik forces, mainly because it also had to contend with the partisan movement in Ukraine. This resulted in the total demoralization of the Volunteer Army, which began disintegrating; its remnants, along with thousands of refugees, ended up in Crimea and Kuban in February 1920. Meanwhile, M. Uspensky had died in December 1919 and the Kuban Territorial Council reconvened on 1 January 1920. It removed the pro-Denikin government, reinstated the constitution, and appointed M. Bukretov military otaman. On 4 January, V. Ivanys, a Ukrainian separatist and former minister of trade and commerce in Kurhansky's cabinet, was asked to form a new government.

The first task of the new government was to sever its ties with Denikin's forces and to continue the struggle against Russia together with Ukraine and the Caucasian republics. However, the Bolshevik front was moving southward too quickly to carry out this plan. On 4 March 1920, Katerynodar was evacuated and the otaman, the government, and the Legislative Council were forced to retreat to the Black Sea coast. Because of a lack of ammunition and food, when Georgia refused to intern the Kuban forces, about 15,000 troops of the army were transferred to Crimea, where they ended up joining Gen Wrangel, who had assumed command of the Volunteer Army. On 19 May, the Legislative Council issued its final proclamation in Adler, stating that 'the Military Otaman and the government must preserve the Kuban institutions of statehood and continue the fight for the liberation of Kuban to the end.' After the resignation of Gen Bukretov on 27 May, the duties of the military otaman were assumed by V. Ivanys.

In order to save the remnants of the Kuban army in Crimea, on 22 July 1920 in Sevastopol Ivanys was forced to sign a treaty with Wrangel and agree to recognize his military command. Soon after, a Kuban delegation in Warsaw also signed an agreement with the government of the UNR (9 August). In November 1920, the armies of the UNR and Kuban went into exile.

It should be noted that the Ukrainian movement in Kuban did not grow as quickly as it did in central Ukraine during the revolutionary period. Ukrainian activists did not actively co-operate with the Ukrainian horodovyky, who were often under the influence of Bolshevik agitators. No proclamations of independence from Russia were issued, nor was a clear desire to establish closer ties to Ukraine articulated. The Third Universal of the Ukrainian Central Rada, issued on 20 November 1917, did not even mention Ukrainian claims to Kuban. Contact between Kuban and Ukrainian authorities in central Ukraine was weak and sporadic. The trip of the Central Rada representative M. Halahan to Kuban in December 1917, the meetings of Kuban delegations in Kiev with Hetman P. Skoropadsky, and the contacts between the Kuban and Ukrainian delegations at the Paris Peace Conference were the main opportunities for discussion. After M. Halahan, F. Borzhynsky represented the UNR in Kuban, V. Tkachov was the emissary of the Hetman government, and I. Krasovsky, the Ukrainian ambassador to Georgia, represented the Directory.

The Ukrainianization of Kuban in 1917–20 was incomplete. It was limited to the Ukrainianization of a small number of primary schools mainly through the efforts of the Kuban Ukrainian Association for Education, which prepared course outlines in Katerynodar and the publication of a Ukrainian reader, and initiated the opening of two Ukrainian secondary schools (with 151 students) and the Ukrainianization of a teachers' college in stanytsia Poltava. The Ukrainianization of education was retarded by the dearth of teachers who had an adequate command of Ukrainian. Approximately 40 Prosvita societies were active in the various stanytsias. The Ukrainian press also did not develop in Kuban: Chornomorets' (6 issues) and Kubans'ka zoria (10 issues) appeared sporadically.

Kuban under the Bolsheviks. During the first Bolshevik occupation of Kuban, from March to July 1918, the Bolsheviks controlled the area through local Communist cells. This was the period of War Communism and the settling of scores with the Cossacks, often of a personal nature. The Bolsheviks established the Kuban–Black Sea Soviet Republic (which lasted from 30 May to 6 July 1918). It consisted of lands on the Black Sea coast and parts of the Stavropol and Terek regions. It was subsequently incorporated into the North Caucasian Soviet Republic, which was abolished in November 1918.

After the second Soviet occupation in May 1920, Kuban was annexed to the RSFSR as the Kuban–Black Sea oblast. The mountain people were first granted considerable autonomy, then in 1922 their own Adygei and Karachai-Cherkess autonomous oblasts. In 1924, the Kuban–Black Sea oblast was abolished and divided into separate okruhas (regions): Armavir, Kuban, Maikop, Black Sea, and parts of the Don and Terek regions. These okruhas were abolished in 1929 and the entire area was incorporated into the North Caucasian krai.

In the 1920s, Kuban benefited from the policy of *indigenization, and schools and public life were *Ukrainized. By 1930-1, most schools in Ukrainian districts offered instruction in Ukrainian. A Ukrainian section was established at the Kuban Pedagogical Institute and many teachers arrived from central Ukraine. Most areas with a Ukrainian population had their own newspapers: in 1931 there were 20 raion and collective-farm newspapers. Yet armed resistance to Bolshevik rule continued throughout the 1920s. Large Cossack uprisings occurred in 1922-3 and 1928, and small Cossack bands hid in the mountains and conducted periodic raids. Repressions began in earnest in 1929. Former officers of the Kuban army and remaining members of the Territorial Council were deported, the Cossacks lost their special status, and the stanytsias were stripped of their political autonomy and subordinated to raion committees. The Cheka and local revolutionary committees also increased their activity.

In 1929 the *collectivization of agriculture began, bringing great suffering and hardship. Thousands of 'kulaks' were deported, as well as entire stanytsias of Cossacks (as many as 200,000 people in total). Although some people managed to escape to Asia, Transcaucasia, or the north, hundreds of thousands of people died from the resulting famine. They were replaced in part by Russian immigrants, who began flooding into the area. In 1934, the teaching of Ukrainian was abolished (over 700 Ukrainian primary schools were Russified), and all Ukrainian-language newspapers were closed down. Ukrainian activists were repressed, particularly the faculty and students of the Katerynodar Pedagogical Institute. Since then, the Ukrainian population of Kuban has not been granted any national or cultural rights and has been exposed to constant official Russification.

The Kuban emigration. After the victory of the Bolsheviks, about 17,000 Kuban troops with Gen Wrangel's army were transported by the Western allies to the island of Lemnos in the Aegean Sea. There, under pressure from Wrangel and the pro-Russian members of the Kuban Territorial Council, some Cossack delegates chose V. Naumenko as the new military otaman. This act was not recognized by the Kuban separatists.

Many Kuban and other Cossacks found themselves in Yugoslavia and Bulgaria. There they maintained their military organizations and were employed in public works. From there some moved to France, some to Czechoslovakia (mainly members of the intelligentsia and students), and some returned to Kuban. Most Kuban Cossacks lived in communities modeled on their native stanytsias, led by elected otamans.

The Kuban emigration (which included few horodovyky) had no distinct political parties. However, political groupings or currents did manifest themselves. There were the Kuban independentists, the Russophiles, and the Cossack independentists. They all adhered to a Cossack ideology, but its form varied in each current.

The Kuban independentists favored full Kuban statehood and independence from Russia, but with federative ties to the various Caucasian states, the Don, Terek, and Ukraine. They aimed to unite all three nationalities that populated Kuban: the Ukrainians, Russians, and the mountain peoples. Most supporters of this orientation ended up in Czechoslovakia: V. Ivanys, B. Balabas, K. Bezkrvny, I. Ivasiuk, S. Manzhula, H. and M. Omelchenko, K. Ploky, P. Suliatytsky, and F. Shcherbyna. They maintained ties to both the Kuban and UNR governments in exile and published periodicals in Prague, such as Kubans'kyi krai (1929-33, 12 issues), Nash krai (1927-8, 2 issues), and Kubans'ki dumky (1928, 3 issues), and brochures on issues of general interest to the Cossack community. The Kuban Hromada relief organization for all Kuban émigrés in Czechoslovakia was set up in 1921. It was headed by P. Makarenko and maintained close ties with the Ukrainian Civic Committee in Prague. Over 100 Kuban natives studied in the Ukrainian higher educational institutions in Czechoslovakia and formed their own student organizations. There were 10 professors and lecturers of Kuban origin. The Hromada published the collection Kuban' (1927). The Ukrainian Institute of Sociology in Prague published an economic study of Kuban by I. Ivasiuk (1925) and P. Suliatytsky's Narysy z istorii revoliutsii na Kubani (Surveys of the History of the Revolution in Kuban, 1926).

A small number of Kuban émigrés, led by I. Bily, believed that the Cossacks constituted a distinct people and hoped to establish an independent 'Cossackia,' uniting all the Cossack territories. The largest and most active element in the Kuban emigration was the pro-Russian faction that sought autonomy for Kuban within a Russian state. This group worked closely with the Russian émigré community. Their center was Belgrade, and their leaders were mostly officers of the Kuban armies such as V. Naumenko, A. Filimonov, and D. Skobtsov.

Population. Before the acquisition of Transkuban by Russia, Kuban was sparsely populated by Nogay Tatars. After their departure and the arrival of Cossack settlers, the population of the region began to rise dramatically, reaching 390,000 by the early 1860s (6 persons per sq km). Higher population densities were found in the regions inhabited by the Cherkessians. After their emigration in 1864, the population of Kuban decreased and did not begin to increase until the mass peasant immigration began in 1868; as late as 1897, 52,000 immigrants arrived in the region. In that year, Kuban's total population stood at 1,976,000 (including Black Sea gubernia). There were few large cities (the largest, Katerynodar [now *Krasnodar], had a population of approx 66,000), and most of the population lived in stanytsias of 10,000 or less. Some cities on the Black Sea coast (Sochi, Novorosiiske, Armavir) were important as trade centers and forts. According to the 1897 census, 49.1 percent of the population considered their native language to be Ukrainian, and 41.8 percent considered it to be Russian (not including Black Sea gubernia). Over one-third of the inhabitants were born outside Kuban. Of these, 24.2 percent were born in the ethnically mixed Voronezh and Kursk gubernias and 40.1 percent were born in the Ukrainian gubernias of Kharkiv, Poltava, Katerynoslav, and Chernihiv; the number of immigrants from Kiev and Kherson was also significant. By 1926, the total population of Kuban was 3,557,000 (including Black Sea gubernia). Of these, 47.1 percent (1,674,000) were Ukrainians, 41 percent (1,460,000) Russians, 4.9 percent (172,000) various mountain peoples, 2.2 percent (79,000) Armenians, 1.1 percent (38,000) Germans, and 0.9 percent (35,000) Greeks. Analysis of the history of Kuban's settlement led some researchers (eg, F. Shcherbyna and

O. Rusov) to argue that ethnic Ukrainians actually constituted 60–62 percent of the population and Russians only 28–30 percent, but that many Ukrainians had become Russified. A sharp decline in the proportion of Ukrainians in Kuban began in the 1930s. The end of Ukrainization unleashed strong pressures for Russification. The forced collectivization of agriculture saw as many as 200,000 people deported from Kuban and the resulting famine claimed tens of thousands more lives. They were replaced by peasants and former Red Army soldiers from Russia. Many Russian Party and government functionaries and specialists also flooded the cities of Kuban. By 1979, only 3.6 percent of the region's inhabitants considered themselves to be Ukrainian.

Economy. The main activity of the Nogay Tatars who lived in Kuban before it was acquired by Russia was nomadic herding. The Cossacks introduced an extensive system of agriculture using the three-field rotation method. The main crops were wheat, rye, millet, and barley. In the mid-19th century, only 12 percent of the total land, and one-fifth of the arable land, was under plow. Because of the Cossacks' military obligations, a shortage of labor was common and hindered the development of agriculture and industry. The region was often plagued by grain shortages and had to import it from the Stavropol and Don regions. Animal husbandry continued to be more important to the region's economy. The Black Sea Cossacks brought from Ukraine *great horned cattle, which were good as draft animals and for beef. Horse raising and sheep herding (at first local Cherkessian breeds were raised, later merino sheep were introduced) were widely practiced. In the mid-19th century there were 25 horses, 104 head of cattle, and 264 sheep per 100 inhabitants in the region. Also important to the Cossacks was fishing and the salt trade. Agriculture was more intensive among the Cherkessians of Transkuban. Their main crop was millet and they maintained a very productive system of orchards.

After the Russian acquisition of Transkuban in 1864 and the emigration of the Cherkessians, agriculture in the region went into a temporary decline. Most of the tilled soil, and particularly the famous Cherkessian orchards, lay fallow. Agricultural production did not start increasing until the 1870s, with the large influx of peasants, the building of the Rostov-Vladikavkaz (1875) and Tykhoritske-Katerynodar-Novorosiiske (1887–8) railway lines, and the growth in demand for grain in Western Europe. The area under plow increased by 2.4 times between 1875 and 1894, and by the First World War 40 percent of the region's land was tilled. Cash crops such as winter wheat (36.3 percent of sown land), spring wheat (22.8 percent), and barley (26.6 percent) increased in importance; less popular were oats (6.6 percent), corn (2.6 percent), and millet (1.2 percent). The average annual harvest (1911–15) produced 3.5 million t of grain, of which 42 percent was exported from Kuban (47 percent of the hard wheat and 53 percent of the barley). Of this, 75 percent was exported beyond the borders of the Russian Empire. After Southern Ukraine, Kuban was the most important territory for the production of grain for export from the empire. Because of the favorable natural conditions, grain yields in Kuban were unparalleled in the Russian Empire (10 centners per ha in Kuban compared to 9.7 in central Ukraine). The use of machines was widespread. Sunflowers (by 1917 they covered 340,000 ha of land, or 8 percent of all tilled land), tobacco (which used valuable yellow Turkish strains), melons, and grapes were also grown.

In 1916–17 there were 999,000 horses, 1,523,000 cattle, 2,164,000 sheep and goats, and 967,000 pigs in Kuban, but little meat or livestock was exported. Seventy-five percent of the population was engaged in agriculture and only 10 percent in industry, mainly the food industry (milling and oil pressing). Cement was produced in Novorosiiske, and petroleum was discovered southwest of Maikop in 1909; production increased from 150,000 t of crude oil in 1911 to 1 million t in 1930. The larger industrial centers were Katerynodar, Armavir, and Novorosiiske. There were also a number of health sanatoriums established on the Black Sea coast. Kuban primarily exported agricultural produce such as grain, flour, oils, poppyseed, and tobacco, and some cement and petroleum. Imports included manufactured goods, metals, sugar, and fish. Exports went mostly outside the Russian Empire, but imports came from within it.

The economy of Kuban followed the same pattern of changes after the 1917 Revolution that occurred in central Ukraine. The sharp decline in production and hardships of 1919–22 were followed by a major economic reconstruction under the New Economic Policy. Agricultural devastation accompanied the collectivization drive of the early 1930s, and the authorities gave priority to the development of heavy industry, which still remained limited. Grains, especially barley, declined in importance, while corn, rice, and tobacco increased. (For current conditions in Kuban, see *Krasnodar krai.)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Lichkov, L. 'Ocherki iz proshlago i nastoiashchago chernomorskogo poberezh'ia Kavkaza,' KS, 1905, nos 6–8, 10–12
 Shcherbina, F. Estestvenno-istoricheskiia usloviia i smena narodnostei na Kubani (Katerynodar 1906)
 Makedonov, L. V gorakh Kubanskogo kraia: Byt i khoziaistvo zhitel'ei nagornoj polosy Kubanskoi oblasti (Voronezh 1908)
 Kapel'horods'kyi, P. Ukraintsi na Kubani (Kiev 1909)
 Shcherbina, F. Istoriia Kubanskogo Kazach'ego Voiska, 2 vols (Katerynodar 1910, 1913)
Spravochnaia kniga: Kuban' i Chernomorskoe poberezh'e (Katerynodar 1914)
 Hnatiuk, V. Kuban'shchyna i kubans'ki ukraintsi (Lviv 1920)
 Ivasiuk, I. Kuban' (Prague 1925)
 Suliatyts'kyi, P. Narysy z istorii revoliutsii na Kubani (Prague 1926)
 Bych, L. Kuban' u kryvomu dzerkali (Prague 1927)
Kuban': Zbirnyk stattiv pro Kuban' i kubantsiv (Prague 1927)
 Suliatyts'kyi, P. Kubań (Warsaw 1930)
 Sanders [Nikuradse], A. Kaukasien, Nordkaukasien, Aserbeidshien, Armenien, Georgien: Geschichtlicher Umriss (Munich 1944)
 Volyniak, P. Kuban' – zemlia ukrains'ka, kozacha (Buenos Aires 1948)
 Kotel'nikov, V. Don, Kuban', Terek (Moscow 1950)
 Bolotenko, O. Kozatstvo i Ukraina (Toronto 1951)
 Golobutskii, V. Chernomorskoe kazachestvo (Kiev 1956)
 Maslov, E. V stepakh i predgor'iaKh Kavkaza (Moscow 1956)
 Fadeev A. Ocherki ekonomicheskogo razvitiia stepnogo Predkavkaz'ia v doreformennyi period (Moscow 1957)
Kuban' rodnaia (Krasnodar 1957)
 Temnikova, N. Klimat Severnogo Kavkaza i prilozhashchikh stepei (Moscow 1959)
 Skobtsov, D. Tri goda revoliutsii i grazhdanskoi voiny na Kubani (Paris 1961)
 Gvozdet'skii, M. Kavkaz (Moscow 1963)

Varavva, I. Pesni kazakov Kubani (Krasnodar 1966)
 Chistov, K. (ed). Kubanske stanitsy: Etnicheskie i kul'turno-bytovy protsessy na Kubani (Moscow 1967)
Kuban' za piat' desiat sovetskikh let (Krasnodar 1967)
 Ivanys, V. Borot'ba Kubani za nezalezhnist' (Munich 1968)
 V. Ivanys, V. Kubijovyč, M. Miller

Officer of the Kuban Cossack Host

Kuban Cossack Host. The only formation of Ukrainian Cossacks that existed until the final days of tsarist rule, and one of the 12 Cossack armies in the Russian Empire. The Kuban Cossack Host was created in 1860 out of the *Black Sea Cossacks, the remnants of the Zaporozhian Cossacks, and the six western units of the *Frontier Army. Numbering 400,000 people in 1860, by 1912 the total number had grown to 1,392,000 (including both Cossacks and their families). While the Black Sea Cossacks had originally enjoyed considerable autonomy and were permitted to retain Zaporozhian traditions and practices, these rights were increasingly restricted in the early 19th century. The organization of the Kuban host was modeled after that of Russian Cossack hosts, and regular Russian army institutions and discipline were slowly introduced. Election of senior officers was not allowed, and the host was usually headed by a Russian general appointed by the government. He took the title of acting otaman and also exercised civilian authority in the Kuban provincial government. Autonomy was limited to the *stanytsia (garrison) level, where officers, including the local otaman, his staff, and judges, were elected.

Military training for the Cossacks was very demanding. It included three years of basic training in the stanytsias, four years of active service in the various regiments, four years in the reserve units with annual summer exercises, four years in secondary reserve units with one major exercise during that period, and five years in the general reserve corps, when the Cossacks could be mobilized in an emergency. The Cossacks provided their own uniforms, swords, and horses. Compared to other Cossack armies, the Kuban host mobilized many units. In 1860 it mustered 22 cavalry regiments, 3 cavalry squadrons, 13 scout (plastun) battalions, and 5 artillery batteries. Later, Kuban Cossacks were often posted in Warsaw and elsewhere in the empire to suppress revolts and serve as special guard units. In 1914 the host comprised 37 cavalry regiments, 22 plastun battalions, 6 artillery batteries, and 47 various other units, for a total of about 90,000 men in active service.

At first, landownership was determined according to the traditions of the Zaporozhian Cossacks. The host was granted 7.4 million ha of land out of the 9.4 million ha in the entire province. The host then divided this land among the stanytsias. Every Cossack over 16 years of age was guaranteed his own plot of land, and a tenth of the land remained in reserve for later distribution. Periodically the land was redistributed, based on need. Land was especially plentiful after Russia acquired the area to the south of the Kuban River (Transkuban), expelling the native Cherkessians (Circassians) and establishing new stanytsias in the 1860s and 1870s. The tsarist government granted hereditary holdings of 28–55 ha to faithful officers. The obligations of military service forced many Cossacks to neglect their farms, however, and the constant redistribution retarded the development of modern agricultural practices. Yet, many officers prospered, often renting their land to peasants to work. The main crops grown were winter wheat, rice, barley, oats, and flax. Cattle raising served mainly local needs, and large-scale horse breeding began only in the late 19th century. Many Cossacks fished in the Black Sea and inland waters. The Kuban host also had its own treasury and collected taxes to pay for provincial administration, education, health care, and public works. In 1912, it had a capital base of 16.3 million rubles.

During the First World War the Kuban Cossacks fought on various fronts. After the 1917 Revolution, most eventually joined the Volunteer Army under Gen A. *Denikin, but their support waned as disenchantment grew with Denikin's plans to restore a 'single, undivided' tsarist Russia and with his mistreatment of the Kuban population. The host was finally dissolved by the Bolsheviks in 1920, and many Cossacks emigrated to Western Europe. (See also *Kuban.)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Felitsyn, E. (ed). Kubanskoe Kazach'e Voisko, 1696–1888 g: Sbornik kratkikh svedenii o voiske (Voronezh 1888)
 Dmytrenko, I. Sbornik istoricheskikh materialov po istorii Kubanskogo Kazach'ego Voiska, 4 vols (St Petersburg 1896–8)
 Shcherbina, F. Istoriia Kubanskogo Kazach'ego Voiska, 2 vols (Katerynodar 1910, 1913)

Kuban Legislative Council (Kubanska Zakonodavcha Rada). Legislative organ of the *Kuban People's Republic in 1917–20. The Kuban Legislative Council (KLC) was to be re-elected at three-year intervals. Its mandate was determined by the *Kuban Territorial Council (KTC). Its jurisdiction included the review and approval of the regional budget; the election of the state comptroller; the approval of state loans; the drawing up of annual lists of people eligible for military service; the ratification of treaties; and the review of and debate on the performance of the KTC, which was responsible to the KLC and which could receive a vote of non-confidence from the KLC. There were approximately 80 members of the KLC; they also participated in KTC assemblies, in an advisory capacity. The KLC met annually on 15 November. An extraordinary session could be called on the initiative of the military otaman, or at the request of not less than one-third of the KLC itself. In 1918 the KLC was elected for a one-year term only, from members of the KTC, but later its authority was extended.

Kuban Lowland. An extensive plain located in the western part of Subcaucasia within the borders of Rostov oblast and Krasnodar krai in the РСФСР. It extends to the Azov Sea in the west, to the Stavropol Upland in the east, to the Kuma-Manych Upland in the north, and to the foothills of the Caucasus Mountains in the south, and occupies three-quarters of the territory of *Kuban.

The Kuban Lowland is a tectonic depression built of chalk and tertiary strata that cover the layered Hercynian foundation. The upper layers are composed of sedimentary deposits (mainly sand and clay) accumulated by the rivers flowing from the Caucasus Mountains. In the south these upper layers are built of fluvioglacial strata. On the surface, the lowland is covered with a 20–50-m layer of loess. In its central part, the plain has an average elevation of 100–150 m. The land gradually decreases in height toward the coast of the Azov Sea in the west and rises gently (to a maximum of 300 m) toward the foothills of the Caucasus Mountains south of the Kuban River. It is an almost perfectly flat plain with some shallow, swampy depressions. On the coast of the Azov Sea, limans have formed. In this region there are also numerous lakes (the largest is the saline Khanske Lake), floodplains, and marshlands, located mainly in the vast delta of the Kuban River. In the east and south the plain is dissected by rivers into a number of flat plateaus. There are chains of low anticlinal hills (up to 162 m in height) on the *Taman Peninsula, which is connected to the Kuban Lowland by the Kuban Delta.

The Kuban Lowland has a continental climate, similar to the climate of the Ukrainian steppe, but warmer and more humid (the yearly average temperature is 10–12°C). It results in relatively cold winters and long and hot summers. Most precipitation occurs from May to July. The summers are conducive to the cultivation of some subtropical crops (eg, rice) as well as to fruit growing and viticulture. The lowland's only large river is the *Kuban River. There are no major rivers in the northern part of the plain, and the existing ones often dry out in the summer.

The Kuban Lowland has mainly carbonated chernozem soils. Other types of soils encountered in the plain are peat-meadow soils in the delta of the Kuban River and dark-chestnut saline soils in the Taman Peninsula. The Kuban Lowland is a region of highly developed agriculture. Its main cultures are grains, melons, and fruits. In the northwestern part of the plain there are rich deposits of natural gas. The fauna of the Kuban Lowland is similar to that of the Ukrainian steppe. The most common animals encountered in the region are gophers, field mice, and polecats.

V. Kubijovyč, M. Stech

Kuban People's Republic. The name of the state formed on 16 February 1918 that existed in several forms until the Bolshevik consolidation of power in *Kuban in May 1920. It was established as a sovereign state on the territory of the former Kuban oblast of the Russian Empire by a proclamation of the *Kuban Legislative Council. On 4 December 1918, a new constitution, adopted in an extraordinary session of the *Kuban Territorial Council, changed the name of the republic to Kuban Krai. The constitution also contained a declaration stating that the krai would be independent until order was restored in Russia and it could join a future Russian Federated Republic. The Territorial Council was the state's constituent assembly and the Legislative Council was the legislative organ. The chief executive officer was the military otaman, who was elected for a four-year term by the Territorial Council but was responsible to the Legislative Council. He was the commander in chief of the armed forces and the head of government.

Kuban River. River in Krasnodar and Stavropol krais. It is the longest river in northern Caucasia (approx 870 km) and drains approx 57,900 sq km. It originates with the Ullukam and Uchkulan rivers, which arise from glaciers on Mt Elbrus in the Caucasus Mountains, and flows to the Sea of Azov. Its upper part (to Nevinnomyssk) runs northwest and is a typical mountain river flowing quickly through narrow gorges with many rapids. Near Nevinnomyssk a dam (built in 1948) leads some water into the Nevinnomyssk Canal. Farther down its course, the river encounters the Stavropol Upland and turns west. From there it meanders slowly through the Subcaucasian steppe. It contains many small islands and sandbanks and runs through marshy floodplains. The Protoka River branches off on the right bank approx 116 km from the Kuban's mouth. At its mouth, the river forms a large marshy delta. All its main tributaries – Teberda, Malyi Zelenchuk, Velykyi Zelenchuk, Urup, Laba, Bila, and Pshysh – are left tributaries. The Kuban reaches its highest water level in the summer, when it is fed by melting snow and glaciers in the Caucasus Mountains. The river is regulated by the Tshchyske, Shapsuhske, and Krasnodarske reservoirs and much of its water is diverted for irrigation. It is navigable from the mouth to Ust-Labynsk and is ice-free 340–350 days a year. The Kuban is rich in fish, especially carp, perch, and pike, and its large delta serves as a nesting place for many species of birds. The main cities on the river are Cherkessk, Nevinnomyssk, Armavir, Kropotkin, Ust-Labynsk, and Krasnodar.

Kuban Territorial Council (Kubanska Kraiova Rada). Constituent assembly of the *Kuban People's Republic. The Kuban Territorial Council (KTC) consisted of approximately 600 representatives, and was elected by male citizens only. The great majority of elected representatives were of peasant or rank-and-file Cossack origin (60 percent); the remainder were Cossack or horodovyk (outlander) intellectuals (15 percent) and officers (25 percent). The KTC was formed in the spring of 1917. It convened to choose a military otaman (president of the Kuban Republic, elected for four years), to review and approve new legislation, and to resolve problems brought forward for its consideration by the military otaman or the *Kuban Legislative Council (KLC) (at the request of two-thirds of its members) or at its own behest. The KTC was convened by the military otaman or the KLC. Its authority did not extend to deciding matters proposed by itself. The КТС could not meet with less than two-thirds of its members present. There were three sessions of the КТС: in 1918, 1919, and 1920.

Volodymyr Kubijovyč

Kubijovyč, Volodymyr, b 23 September 1900 in Nowy Sącz, Poland, d 2 November 1985 in Paris. Geographer, demographer, and encyclopedist. From 1928 to 1939 he lectured at Cracow University; in 1940 he was appointed professor at the Ukrainian Free University in Prague. In 1931 he was elected full member (in 1981 he became an honorary member) of the Shevchenko Scientific Society and headed its geographic commission. He was the society's general secretary from 1947 to 1963, and from 1952 president of its European branch. During the Second World War he headed the *Ukrainian Central Committee (ucc) in Cracow and in 1943 took part in organizing the *Division Galizien. In his role as head of the ucc, Kubijovyč revealed his exceptional ability as an organizer and statesman. After the war he emigrated to Germany and then France. He published over 80 works on the anthropogeography and demography of Ukraine, particularly of the Carpathian region. They include Życie pasterskie w Beskidach Wschodnich (Pastoral Life in the Eastern Beskyds, 1926), Rozšíření kultur a obyvatelstva v Severních Karpatech (The Spread of Cultures and Society in the Northern Carpathians, 1932), Pastoritul in Maramureş (Pastoral Life in the Maramureş Region, 1935), Pastushstvo Bukovyny (Pastoral Life in Bukovyna, 1935), Pastýřský život v Podkarpatské Rusi (Pastoral Life in Subcarpathian Ruthenia, 2 vols, 1935–7), Terytorii i liudnist' ukrains'kykh zemel' (The Territory and Population of the Ukrainian Lands, 1935), and Etnichni hrupy Pivdenno-zakhidn'oi Ukraïny (Halychyny) na 1.01.1939: Natsional'na statystyka i etno- hrafichna karta (Ethnic Groups of Southwestern Ukraine [Galicia] on 1 January 1939: Nationality Statistics and an Ethnographic Map, 1983).

Together with other specialists Kubijovyč prepared and edited Atlas Ukraïny i sumezhnykh kraïv (An Atlas of Ukraine and Adjacent Countries, 1937) and Heohrafiia Ukraïny i sumezhnykh zemel' (A Geography of Ukraine and Adjacent Lands, 1938 and 1943), securing his reputation as one of the founders of Ukrainian geography. He contributed numerous demographic and statistical surveys to Ukrainian, Polish, and Czech serials, and with the help of M. Kulytsky, and later A. Zhukovsky, produced several maps of Ukraine and its regions. From their inception he was the chief editor of Entsyklopediia ukrainoznavstva (Encyclopedia of Ukraine, 1949–), Ukraine: A Concise Encyclopaedia (2 vols, 1963, 1971), and Encyclopedia of Ukraine (1984–), to which he contributed numerous entries. His contribution in this regard cannot be overestimated. His conceptualization of the Entsyklopediia ukrainoznavstva provided a sorely needed structure to Ukrainian scholarship in the West. Overcoming great obstacles, Kubijovyč organized the scattered intellectual resources in time to ensure that the rich knowledge of Ukraine carried out by the various scholars forced to emigrate during the Second World War be passed on to future generations. His memoirs include Ukrainci v Heneral'ni Hubernii 1939–1941 (Ukrainians in the Generalgouvernement 1939–41, 1975), Meni 70 (I Am 70, 1970), and Meni 85 (I Am 85, 1985, with a selected bibliography).

D.H. Struk, A. Zhukovsky

Kuch, Peter [Kuc', Petro], b 1917 in Winnipeg, d 14 June 1980 in Winnipeg. Painter, political cartoonist, and illustrator. A veteran of the Royal Canadian Air Force, in 1945 he joined the Winnipeg Free Press and in 1952 became its political cartoonist. He painted landscapes and portraits. His cartoons of J. Diefenbaker were published as a separate collection, Five Years of Following John (1962). Besides two Ukrainian-language children's books he illustrated The Flying Ship (1975), a selection of Ukrainian folk tales in English translation.

Kuchabsky, Vasyl [Kučabs'kyj, Vasyl'], b 1895 in Volytsia, Lviv county, Galicia, d ? Historian, publicist, and military figure; from 1935 full member of the Shevchenko Scientific Society. An officer of the Ukrainian Sich Riflemen and the Sich Riflemen (commander of the 2nd Infantry), he was a member of the Riflemen Council. After the war he emigrated and lived in Berlin, then in Kiev, working as a librarian. Besides articles on Ukrainian history and politics for German journals, Kuchabsky wrote a number of monographs about the Sich Riflemen and Ukraine's wars for independence, including 'Ukrains'ki Sichovi Stril'tsi i Sichovi Stril'tsi' (The Ukrainian Sich Riflemen and the Sich Riflemen, Kalendar Chervonoï Kalyny, 1924), Bol'shevyzm i suchasne zavdannia ukrains'koho zakhodu (Bolshevism and the Current Task of the Ukrainian West, 1925), Ukraïna i Pol'shcha: Otverta vidpovid' pol's'komu konservatystovi (Ukraine and Poland: A Frank Answer to a Polish Conservative, 1933), and Die West-Ukraine im Kampfe mit Polen und dem Bolschewismus in den Jahren 1918–23 (1934). He disappeared without a trace in 1945.

Kucher, Roman [Kučer], b 12 March 1925 in Lviv. Physical chemist; full member of the AN URSR since 1972. He graduated from Lviv University (1947) and stayed there as a researcher, eventually becoming professor of physical and colloid chemistry (1964–5). Since 1966 he has been director of the radicals department at the Donetsk branch of the AN URSR Institute of Physical Chemistry (now the separate Institute of Physical-Organic Chemistry and Coal Chemistry). He has published over 70 papers dealing with kinetics and the mechanism of hydrocarbon oxidation in liquid phase, and has made several important discoveries in the area of emulsions.

Kucher, Vasył [Kučer, Vasył'], b 20 July 1911 in Viitivtsi, Volhynia gubernia, d 18 April 1967 in Kiev. Socialist-realist writer. In 1930–4 he studied at Kharkiv University and belonged to the writers' group Traktor. Between 1932 and 1940 he published eight story collections about collectivization and industrialization and the historical novella Karmaliuk (1940). After the Second World War he published several short biographies of Soviet working-class heroes, over 10 other story collections, and several long novels about 'positive heroes': Chornomortsi (Black Sea Sailors, 2 vols, 1948, 1952) and Holod (Famine, 1961), about Soviet sailors and citizens defending Sevastopol and Odessa from the Germans; Ustym Karmaliuk (1954), about the 19th-century folk hero; Proshchai, more (Farewell, Sea, 1957) and Trudna liubov (A Difficult Love, 1960), which are set on collective farms; Namysto (The Necklace, 1964) and Orly vodu p'iuť (The Eagles Drink Water, 1966), about life in the postwar years; and My ne spymo na troiandakh (We Do Not Sleep on Roses, 1967), about the Bolshevik leader Artem. His collected works in five volumes appeared in 1970–1.

Kucherenko, Illia [Kučerenko, Illja], b 1923 in Nova Orzhytsia near Yahotyń, Kiev region. Linguist. Kucherenko is a professor of Kiev University and editor of the interuniversity annual Ukrains'ke movoznavstvo (1973–). He has devoted special attention to the problem of grammatical meaning in relation to the classification of grammatical categories and parts of speech in modern standard Ukrainian. The most systematic presentation of his morphological theory appears in the two-part Teoretychni pytannia hramatyky ukrains'koï movy (Theoretical Questions of the Grammar of the Ukrainian Language, 1961, 1964). He has also written articles on morphology and syntax.

Kucherenko, Pavlo [Kučerenko], b 27 October 1882 in Rostov-na-Donu, d 28 May 1936 in Kiev. Pathologist. A graduate of the St Petersburg Military Medical Academy (1908), in 1910 he began working at Kiev University under the supervision of V. Vysokovych. From 1921 he was the professor of pathological anatomy at the Kiev Medical Institute and later he became a professor at the Kiev Institute for the Upgrading of Physicians. In 1927 he was one of the organizers of the VUAN Chair of Pathological Anatomy. He wrote 70 works dealing with changes in kidney functions in diabetics, pathological glycogenesis, endemic goiter, lymphogranulomatosis, oncology, and physical chemistry, and a pathological-anatomy textbook (1936).

Kucherenko-Kuchuhura, Ivan [Kučerenko-Kučuhura], b 7 July 1878 in Murafa, Bohodukhiv county,

Ivan Kucherenko-Kuchuhura

Kharkiv gubernia, d 1943 in a prison camp. Kobzar. Blinded in childhood, he learned to sing and play the bandura from the kobzar P. Hashchenko. With a repertoire of over 500 songs and dumas, he was invited by H. *Khotkevych to teach bandura at the Lysenko Music and Drama School in Kiev (1908–10). As his reputation grew, he staged concerts in Kharkiv, Kiev, Odessa, Katerynoslav, Poltava, Rostov-na-Donu, Minsk, St Petersburg, Moscow, and Warsaw. Many songs in his repertoire were of his own composition. Some of the dumas he sang were written down by F. Kolessa. In 1939 Kucherenko-Kuchuhura was arrested and sent to a distant labor camp.

Kucherepa, John [Kučerepa, Ivan], b 27 May 1919 in Toronto. Community and political leader. A graduate of the University of Toronto (1945), he practiced medicine in Toronto and was active in the Ukrainian community, serving as president of the Ukrainian Business and Professional Men's Association of Toronto (1948) and of the Ukrainian Catholic Council of Eastern Canada (1956–8). From 1952 to 1957 he served as alderman. In 1957 and 1958 he was elected from the Progressive Conservative party to the House of Commons.

Kuchero, Panteleimon [Kučerov, Pantelejmon], b 9 August 1902 in Kazanska stanitsa, Donets okrug, Don Cossack province, d 25 June 1973 in Kiev. Specialist in mining mechanics; from 1939 corresponding member of the AN URSR. He studied and then taught at the Donetsk Mining Institute. From 1939 to 1940 and again from 1945 to 1958 he served as director of the AN URSR Institute of Mining. From 1958 he worked at the academy's Institute of History. His main publications deal with the theory of coal extraction, the automation of mining machines, and the history of mining in Ukraine. He supervised the design of coal-mining machinery.

Kuchmanskij Route (Kuchmanskij shliakh). An invasion and trade route along the watershed separating the Boh and Dniester rivers. From the 16th to the mid-18th century the Tatars followed this route, which was one of the branches of the *Black Route, during their raids into Podilia and Galicia. In the 19th century the *chumaks used it to get to Odessa. The route passed through large tracts of forest.

Kuchmij, Halya [Kučmij, Halja], b 2 May 1951 in Keighly, England. Filmmaker. Coming to Canada with her parents in 1952, she was educated at Toronto and York universities. In 1978–9 she studied at the Center for Advanced Film Studies of the American Film Institute in Los Angeles. Her first film, Streetcar (1977), won First Prize (Drama) at the Canadian National Exhibition in 1977. The Strongest Man in the World (1980) won the Best Producer award at the Yorkton International Film Festival in 1980 and the Genie Award for the Best Canadian Theatrical Short in 1981. She has also produced Laughter in My Soul (1983) about Ya. Maidanek, a Ukrainian Canadian artist and humorist, and a number of prize-winning features for CBC-TV's news magazine 'The Journal.'

Kuchuk-Yatsenko, Serhii [Kučuk-Jacenko, Serhij], b 2 August 1930 in Zhytomyr. Specialist in electric welding; since 1978 corresponding member of the AN URSR. A graduate of the Kiev Polytechnical Institute, since 1958 he has worked at the academy's Institute of Electric Welding. He has developed new techniques of resistance welding.

Kuchurhan Estuary [Kučurhans'kyj lyman]. VII-10. Flooded mouth of the Kuchurhan River located on the border of Odessa oblast and the Moldavian SSR, where the Kuchurhan flows into the Rukav Turunchuk, a branch of the Dniester River. The estuary is approx 15 km long, up to 3 km wide, and up to 5 m deep. Burial sites dating back to the 9th–12th centuries have been excavated on its banks.

Küçük Kaynarca, Peace Treaty of. Treaty marking the end of the Russo-Turkish War of 1768–74. It was signed by the two former adversaries in the village of Küçük Kaynarca in southeast Bulgaria on 21 July 1774. By the terms of the treaty Turkey relinquished control of the northern coast of the Black Sea and left Russia in possession of the lower reaches of the Dnieper and Boh rivers, including Oziv and the fortresses of Kerch, Yenikale, and Kinburn. Russia obtained the right to maintain a fleet on the Black Sea and rights of protection over the Christian population of European countries under Turkish rule. The Crimean Khanate was acknowledged to be independent of Turkey in all except religious matters.

Kuczer, Michael [Kučer, Myxajlo], b 23 October 1910 in Winnipeg, d 2 September 1975 in Toronto. Painter and violinist. Having studied for three years under L. Fitzgerald at the Winnipeg School of Art, in 1929 he won a scholarship to the Royal College of Music in London, where he continued to study painting at the St John's Wood School of Art. In 1949 he returned to Canada and settled in Toronto. Teaching music to support himself, Kuczer experimented with various painting styles and media. His works include abstract compositions such as Softly Flowing (1951) and Mischief (1959), a number of portraits, usually in a post-impressionist style, and landscapes such as Summer Day in the Woods (1952).

Kudryk, Borys, b 1897 in Rohatyn, Galicia, d 1950 in a prison camp in Siberia. Composer, musicologist, and educator. His music studies, begun under Ye. Mandychivsky at the University of Vienna, were completed only after the First World War under A. Chybiński at Lviv University (PH D). From 1926 to 1939 he taught the history and theory of music at the Lysenko Higher Institute of Music, and the history of church music at the Greek Catholic Theological Academy (1933–9) in Lviv. In 1941–4 he wrote stage scores for the Lviv Opera Theater and songs for the Veselyi Lviv Theater. Emigrating to Vienna at the end of 1944, he was arrested there by Soviet authorities and sent to a concentration camp. Besides reviews and articles on music, he wrote Ukrains'ka narodnia pisnia i vsesvitnia muzyka (The Ukrainian Folk Song and World Music, 1927) and 'Ohliad istorii ukrains'koi tserkovnoi muzyky' (A Survey of Ukrainian Church Music, Pratsi Hreko-katolyts'koi bohoslavs'koi akademii u L'vovi, 39 [1937]). Stylistically, Kudryk's music is close to classical Viennese music. His works include piano music (three sonatas, a rondo, and variations), violin pieces (sonatinas, three sonatas), a string quartet, a piano trio, vocal solos, choral music, the cantata Election of a Hetman, church music, and arrangements of folk songs.

Borys Kudryk

W. Wytwycky

Vasyl Kudryk

Kudryk, Vasyl, b 13 October 1880 in Tsebriv, Ternopil county, Galicia, d 7 October 1963 in Winnipeg. Educator, author, journalist, and priest. Kudryk immigrated to Canada in 1903 and settled near Tolstoi, Manitoba. He taught in several Ukrainian rural school districts. His short stories and articles appeared in the Ukrainian press, while his poetry came out in a separate collection: Vesna (Spring, 1911). As editor of Ukrains'kyi holos from 1910 to 1921, he played a prominent role in founding the Ukrainian Greek Orthodox church. In 1923 he was ordained, and he then served as a priest in Alberta and Saskatchewan. From 1941 to 1954 he edited **Visnyk*, the official semimonthly of the Ukrainian Greek Orthodox church. His publications include a number of polemical works, such as Chuzha ruka (The Foreign Hand, 1935) and Malovidome z istorii uniiats'koi tserkvy (Little-Known Facts from the History of the Uniate Church, 4 vols, 1952–6).

Kudryn, Arsenii, 1887–? Organizer of Ukrainian opera. Kudryn served as director of the Ukrainian Capital Opera in Kharkiv (1925–7) and of the Kiev Ukrainian Opera (1927–37). An active supporter of Ukrainization in the 1920s, he promoted the development of Ukrainian opera. He was arrested in 1937 during the Great Terror and disappeared.

Kudrytsky, Mykhailo [Kudryc'kyj, Myxajlo], b 23 February 1856 in Ohiiivka, Skvyra county, Kiev gubernia, d 27 December 1933 in Zhytomyr. Meteorologist; an organizer of the first meteorological network in Ukraine. A graduate of Kiev University, from 1882 to 1901 he trained meteorological observers and set up an agrometeorological network in Polisia. In the early 1920s he worked at the Institute of People's Education in Zhytomyr and served as director of a branch of the Agricultural Scientific Committee of Ukraine.

Kudrytsky, Mykola [Kudryc'kyj], 1884–? Political figure. A member of the Ukrainian Social Democratic Workers' party, in 1917–18 he was a representative to the Central Rada. In the 1920s he worked as a research associate of the All-Ukrainian Academy of Sciences and lectured at the Kiev Medical Institute. Tried and sentenced in 1930 for belonging to the *Union for the Liberation of Ukraine, he disappeared in prison without trace.

Kudrytsky, Yevhen [Kudryc'kyj, Jevhen], b 19 February 1894 in Korostyshiv, Radomyshl county, Kiev gubernia, d 15 January 1976 in Zhytomyr. Linguist. Although he graduated from Kiev University in 1917 as a specialist in Ancient Greek and Latin, he taught Ukrainian and its history at pedagogical institutes in Zaporizhia, Poltava, and Zhytomyr (1930–). His publications deal with 18th-century literary Ukrainian, particularly the works of H. Skovoroda (including his Latin works). He also translated from Latin and commented on the text of I. Uzhevych's Grammar of 1643 (1970).

Kuialnyk Estuary [Kujal'nyc'kyj lyman]. VII-11. A salty estuary on the northwest coast of the Black Sea near Odessa. Separated from the Black Sea by a sandy spit up to 3 km wide, the liman is 28 km long, up to 3 km wide, and up to 3 m deep. The Velykyi Kuialnyk River flows into the liman. Several health resorts have been established on its banks to take advantage of the liman's warm water temperature (28–30°C) and high salt content (averaging 74.3 parts per thousand). Salt was mined there between 1860 and 1931.

Kuibysheve [Kujbyševe]. VI-17. Town smt (1979 pop 7,900), and raion center in Zaporizhia oblast. It was founded circa 1782 as Kamianka. By the mid-19th century the name had changed to Belmanka; later it became Tsarekostiantynivka (until 1926) and Pershotravneve (until 1935). It has a granite quarry and plants that produce electrical appliances, building materials, and crushed stone.

Kuilovsky-Sas, Yulijan [Kujilovs'kyj-Sas, Julijan], b 1 May 1826 in Koniushky, Peremyshl circle, Galicia, d 4 May 1900 in Lviv. Ukrainian Greek Catholic metropolitan. As a young student, he was arrested for participating in the Revolution of 1848–9 and fled to Paris, where he studied theology. He was ordained in 1854. In 1857 he obtained an amnesty from the Austrian government and returned to Galicia. He served as a priest in Pere-myshl eparchy, then as rector of the Peremyshl Theological Seminary and pastor at the cathedral. He was then appointed archpresbyter of Stanyslaviv eparchy (1887–90), assistant bishop of Peremyshl eparchy, and bishop of Stanyslaviv (from 1891). Kuilovsky-Sas was a conservative bishop who did not support the attempts at major reform of the church. In 1899 Pope Leo XIII appointed him Galician metropolitan, but he died soon afterwards.

Arkhpu Kuindzhi: Evening in Ukraine (oil, 1878)

Kuindzhi, Arkhpy [Kujindzi, Arxyp], b January 1842 in Mariupil, Katerynoslav gubernia, d 24 July 1910 in St Petersburg. Landscape painter of Greek origin; from 1893 full member of the St Petersburg Academy of Arts. Having studied with I. Aivazovsky and at the St Petersburg Academy of Arts (1868–72), he joined the *Peredvizhniki. From 1894 to 1897 he directed the landscape workshop at the academy, but was dismissed for supporting a student strike. Many of his works depict Ukrainian landscapes: Chumak Route (1875), Ukrainian Night (1876), Evening in Ukraine (1878), The Steppe (1875), Birch Grove (1879), Moonlit Night on the Dnieper (1880), and The Dnieper in the Morning (1881). His paintings are noted for the lively play of sunlight and moonlight. In 1909 a group of artists in St Petersburg formed the Kuindzhi Society, which existed until 1930.

Kuk, Vasyl (pseud: Yurii Lemish, Vasyl Koval), b 1913 in Krasne, Zolochiv county, Galicia. Political and military leader. A law student at the Catholic University of Lublin, he joined the OUN and in 1937, when the Polish police began to hunt for him, he went underground. In 1941 he was promoted to the OUN Leadership. In 1942–3 Kuk headed the OUN-organized anti-Nazi underground in the Dnipropetrovske region, which encompassed the southern part of the Reichskommissariat Ukraine. After the war he was a member of the OUN Leadership in Ukraine. When R. *Shukhevych was killed in 1950, Kuk (as Yurii Lemish) assumed his positions as leader of the OUN in Ukraine and (as Col Vasyl Koval) commander in chief of the UPA. According to Soviet sources, he was arrested by the secret police in the mid-1950s and repudiated his anti-Soviet activities.

Kukhar, Roman [Kuxar] (pseud: R. Volodymyr), b 21 February 1920 in Lviv. Emigré writer and singer. He studied at Lviv University (1939–41) and the Vienna Conservatory (1943–5). As a postwar refugee, he studied at the University of Colorado, the Pratt Institute, and the Ukrainian Free University (PH D 1962). Since 1962 he has taught at Fort Hays State University in Kansas. He is the author of articles on Ukrainian literature and of 12 volumes of poetry, prose, plays, and essays, including the poetry collection Palki sertsia (Passionate Hearts, 1964), the essay collection Prostir i volia (Space and Freedom, 1972), the drama collection Suchasnyi vertep (A Contemporary Vertep, 1973), and the novel Natsiia na svitanku (Dawning of a Nation, 2 vols, 1973–4). In 1943–56 he performed in Ukrainian operettas and as a concert soloist.

Kukhar, Valerii [Kuxar, Valerij], b 26 January 1942 in Kiev. Organic chemist; since 1985 full member of the AN USSR. After graduating from the Dnipropetrovske Institute of Chemical Technology in 1963, he joined the AN USSR Institute of Organic Chemistry and in 1975 was appointed chairman of a department at the institute. In 1978 he became a member of the academy's presidium and academic secretary of the Division of Chemistry and Chemical Technology. His most important research deals with polyhalo-organic and phospho-organic compounds.

Kukharenko, Ivan [Kuxarenko], 1880–? Engineer and agronomist. He was a professor of the Kiev Polytechnical Institute and the Kiev Agricultural Institute, and head of the VUAN Chair of Agricultural Technology. From 1927 he was associated with the All-Union Scientific Research Institute of the Sugar Industry in Kiev and editor of its journal Nauchnye zapiski po sakharnoi promyshlennosti. He wrote several works on sugar-beet cultivation and processing, including the monograph Materialy k poznaniu roli kolloidov v sakharom proizvodstve (Materials for Understanding the Role of Colloids in the Sugar Industry, 1931). Kukharenko was arrested in the late 1930s and his further fate is unknown.

Kukharenko, Lidiia [Kuxarenko, Lidija], b 21 January 1906 in St Petersburg, d 10 March 1971 in Kiev. Economist and Party activist. A graduate of the Leningrad Institute of People's Education (1930), from 1931 she taught at Kiev University, becoming director of its Chair of Political Economy in 1953. She was a member of the CC CPSU (1949–66) and head of the Znannia Society of the Ukrainian SSR. Her propagandistic 'studies' include Lenins'ko-stalins'kyi plan elektryfikatsii SRSR (The Leninist-Stalinist Plan for the Electrification of the USSR, 1951) and Peretvorennia Ukraïny z ahrarynoi v mohutniu industrial'no-kolhosopnu respubliku (The Transformation of Ukraine from an Agrarian into a Strong Industrial, Collective-Farm Republic, 1959).

Kukharenko, Yakiv [Kuxarenko, Jakiv], b 1799 or 1800 in Yeiske in Kuban, d 8 October 1862. Writer, ethnographer, and major-general. He attended the Katerynodar Military Gymnasium and became a career army officer in 1823. In 1851 he became the acting otaman of the Black Sea Cossack Army. In 1842 he met T. Shevchenko and they became lifelong friends; Shevchenko dedicated his poem 'Moskaleva krynytsia' (The Soldier's Well, 1857) to him. Kukharenko's ethnographic play 'Chornomors'kyi pobut na Kubani' (Black Sea Cossack Life in Kuban, 1836) was published in Osnova in 1861 and adapted in 1877 by M. Starytsky as the opera Chornomortsy (The Black Sea Cossacks), with music by M. Lysenko. Osnova also published his ethnographic studies about Kuban Cossack volunteer guards (1862) and shepherds on the Black Sea littoral (1861), and the folk tale 'Voronyi kin' (The Black Horse, 1861). He died as a prisoner of the Caucasian Abkhazians and was buried in Katerynodar. Posthumous collections of his works were published in Kiev in 1880 and in Prague in 1928.

Yakiv Kukharenko

Kukhtenko, Oleksander [Kuxtenko], b 11 March 1914 in Horodnia, Chernihiv gubernia. Specialist in automation and technical cybernetics; since 1972 full member of the AN USSR. He graduated from and then taught at the Donetsk Industrial Institute (1937–41). After the war he worked at the AN USSR Institute of Mining. In 1955 he was put in charge of a department at the Kiev Institute of Civil Aviation Engineers. Since 1963 he has been chairman of a department at the Institute of Cybernetics. His main publications deal with automatic control systems and their application to aircraft motion, problems of invariance in automation, and the dynamics of machines.

Kukolnyk, Vasyl [Kukol'nyk, Vasyl'], b 1765 in Transcarpathia, d 1821 in Nizhen. Jurist, natural scientist, economist. After completing his studies in Hungary Kukolnyk taught physics, natural history, and agriculture at Zamostia Academy. In 1803–4 he edited Dziennik Ekonomiczny. He published several books on Russian civil law and Roman law. In 1816 he took up the Chair of Roman Law at the St Petersburg Pedagogical Institute. In 1820 he became director of the new Nizhen Lyceum.

Kukuruza, Pavlo, b 4 March 1896 in Nova Ushchytisia, Podilia gubernia, d 14 February 1978 in Minneapolis. Publisher, editor, and pedagogue. He immigrated to Warsaw in 1920, and later to Slovakia. In Uzhhorod he organized the Pchilka Publishing House, which published some 80 monographs as well as the youth journal Pchilka (1922–32), the monthly Pidkarpatske pcholiarstvo (1923–6), and a series of children's books. He also edited almanacs of the Prosvita society and various textbooks. He was imprisoned in Hungary (1939) and Germany (1941–2). In 1945–9 he organized the publishing activities of the Ukrainian Technical and Husbandry Institute in Munich. He immigrated to the United States in 1949.

Golden vase from the Kul Oba barrow

Kul Oba. A Scythian kurhan from the 4th century BC 6 km from the city of Kerch in the Crimea. P. Dubruv and I. Stempkovsky's excavation of the kurhan in 1830 uncovered a pyramid-shaped stone vault containing the skeletons of a Hellenized Scythian chieftain, his wife or courtesan, and his servant, and a rich hoard of several hundred gold trinkets, two gold diadems with gold tablets depicting Scythians, weapons with gold ornamentation, two gold collars and bracelets, medallions depicting Athena's head, earrings, gold, silver, and bronze ware, and hundreds of bronze arrowheads and spearheads. The most valuable artifact discovered there was a gold and silver bowl ornamented with scenes of Scythian life. Much of the jewelry is held at the Hermitage Museum in Leningrad.

Kulabukhiv, Oleksa [Kulabuxiv], b ca 1880 in Novopokrovska stanytsia, Kuban, d 7 November 1919 in Katerynodar (now Krasnodar). Priest and political figure in Kuban. He graduated from the Stavropol Theological Seminary. After the Revolution of 1917 he was a member of the *Kuban Legislative Council and minister of internal affairs in the government of L. Bych. Kulabukhiv was a supporter of the Kuban independence movement and spoke out against the Bolsheviks and the Whites under Gen A. Denikin. In 1919 he was a member of the Kuban Territorial Council delegation to the Paris Peace Conference, where he signed a draft peace treaty between the Kuban Krai Republic and the Republic of the Mountain Peoples of the Northern Caucasus. After his return he was arrested by Denikin's Volunteer Army, tried by a military court, and hanged 'for the betrayal of Russia and the Cossacks.' Kulabukhiv's brutal execution created great resentment towards Denikin in Kuban. As a result, many Kuban Cossacks abandoned Denikin's anti-Bolshevik front, thus contributing to the collapse of Denikin's army and the Bolshevik victory in Kuban.

Kulachkovsky, Yaroslav [Kulačkovs'kyj, Jaroslav], 1863–1909. Economist, lawyer, and community activist in Galicia. He was founder and director of the *Dnister insurance company (1892–1909) and of the Dnister co-operative bank. In 1898 he helped found the Provincial Credit Union (see *Tsentrobank) and later the *Audit Union of Ukrainian Co-operatives, the main organizational center of the Ukrainian co-operative movement.

Kulak (Ukrainian: kurkul, hlytai). A Russian term, now part of the English lexicon, for a peasant who owns a prosperous farm and a substantial allotment of land, which he works with the help of hired labor. The *Stolypin agrarian reforms of 1906, which permitted well-to-do peasants to withdraw from the village commune (**obshchina*) and to purchase up to five allotted parcels of land, strengthened the position of such peasants. They were able to lease land, to hire seasonal and permanent farm laborers, and to buy farm machinery; their method of production began to resemble capitalist farming.

In the Soviet period the term 'kulak' became an ambiguous Party construct but with a fundamentally negative connotation. At times it was applied to all well-to-do peasants; at other times it was used to tar all peasants who opposed Soviet rule. According to Soviet sources, in 1917 there were 518,400 kulak households – ie, owning over 6 desiatins in the steppe region and over 10 desiatins elsewhere – in Ukraine; they constituted 12.2 percent of all peasant households. During the Ukrainian-Russian War (1918–19) the kulaks' farms were completely destroyed. The Bolsheviks confiscated all their 'surplus' grain, land, and in many cases, even means of production (livestock and machines). During the period of *War Communism, Soviet decrees prohibited the exploitation of other people's labor and abolished the leasing of land, and the term 'dekulakization' was introduced to designate the official confiscation of land and property. In Ukraine the First Congress of *Committees of Poor Peasants passed a resolution on 18 October 1920 'to eliminate kulak farms as landowners' farms,' to confiscate the kulaks' properties, and to drive the kulaks out of the villages. In practice the campaign resulted only in land redistribution and in the confiscation of the properties of only those farmers who had put up armed resistance to Soviet rule. Soviet leaders regarded the prosperous peasant strata as their chief internal enemy. Any rural revolt, including those led by N. *Makhno and N. *Hryhoriv, was attributed to 'kulaks.' Armed Bolshevik surplus-procurement detachments confiscated massive amounts of grain, which naturally aroused the hostility of not only those peasants who were directly affected but the rural population at large.

During the period of the *New Economic Policy, restrictions on land leasing and labor hiring were gradually lifted. In 1922, 6-year leases, and later 12-year leases, were permitted. Laborers could be hired as seasonal farm help or as permanent farmhands. In 1925 the Third Congress of Soviets permitted the hiring of 12–14-year-olds. However, the equal distribution of land among the peasantry had undermined the economic basis of hired labor, and the dominant figure in the village at that time became the middle peasant, ie, a peasant who farmed the land he owned by himself. In 1926, 10 percent of the peasants in Ukraine owned less than 1 desiatin of sown or unsown land, compared to 32 percent in 1917; 70 percent owned 2–8 sown desiatins, compared to 39 percent in 1917; and only 8 percent owned over 8 desiatins, compared to 16 percent in 1917. According to the Soviet census of 1926, 738,000 farming families, 120,000 of them in Ukraine, used hired labor, and there were 883,000 farm laborers in the USSR, 122,000 of them in Ukraine. Most of the hired laborers were shepherds, blacksmiths, agronomists, and children's nurses. The principal employers were not rich but poor peasants: single women who needed male workers, juvenile and aged heads of households, and farmers who did not own a horse and depended on their neighbor's draft animals to plow their fields. The formerly rich peasants, having had their surplus land confiscated but still having large families to support, were forced to sell their labor to make ends meet.

Compared to the total population occupied in farming, the number of hired hands was trivial. In Ukraine, excluding shepherds and youngsters, there were 66,000, or 0.3 percent of all those engaged in farming. The sample agricultural census of 1927 showed that outside help played practically no role in agricultural production and amounted to only 1.5 percent of all labor expended per household. Even among the most prosperous peasant households – those with over 1,600 rubles' worth of the basic means of production – half did not use hired help at all; among the other half, in the USSR hired labor accounted for only 7 percent, and in Ukraine for only 5 percent, of their work force. After deducting expenses, hired labor provided only 1–2 percent of a 'kulak' family's net income.

Although Soviet policies had deprived them of their economic status, the 'kulaks' continued to be regarded as class enemies by the authorities and were not allowed to vote in elections to the rural soviets, to hold governing positions in co-operatives, or to receive bank loans or tax reductions. Their children were not allowed to join the Red Army or be admitted to post-secondary schools. Local security police agents (see *GRU) and their secret informers were ordered to keep expropriated 'kulaks' under close secret surveillance. Soviet propaganda continuously heaped abuse on the 'kulaks,' blaming them for every economic difficulty and accusing them of criminal designs. Yet, there were no objective criteria for identifying who was a 'kulak.' A Party commission estimated on the basis of the sample agricultural census of 1927 that 3.9 percent of peasant households were 'kulak' because they employed hired labor and owned a relatively large share of the means of production. This estimate was applied in making all subsequent Party decisions; eg, in 1929 higher taxes were levied on 3 percent of peasant households, and 4 percent of the peasantry were deprived of the right to vote in elections to the rural soviets.

The peasants who were classified as 'kulaks' were not rich in the usual sense of the word. The value of their property, including their house and other buildings, was about 1,000 rubles, their average annual income was 1,200 rubles (190 rubles per family member), and they lacked farm machines and draft animals. Individual incomes among the rural proletariat were only half that of the 'kulaks,' but poor peasants and village leaders of poor-peasant backgrounds paid lower taxes, did not bear any production costs, and hence could afford to buy more manufactured goods. Urban residents could afford to spend several times more than the 'kulaks'; they consumed more meat, butter, and fruit, bought more consumer goods, and received better medical care. In comparison to a Soviet urban functionary, a 'kulak' was practically a pauper.

On 21 May 1929 the USSR government defined a kulak farm as one that (1) had a minimum annual income of 300 rubles per person and 1,500 per family and (2) used hired labor, or owned a motorized farm machine (mill, churn, fruit dryer), or rented out its farm inventory or buildings, or engaged in trade, or had income not derived from work (as was the case with clergy). A personal income of 300 rubles was not high at the time; it was about the same as that of an average industrial worker. Yet, few peasant families made even that much, and the government soon had to set aside its definition, allowing local authorities to set their own criteria in defining who was a 'kulak.'

In 1928 and 1929 the government introduced special measures against the 'kulaks.' Their agricultural taxes were increased from 100 to 267 rubles per household. Their state grain-delivery quotas were also raised, and the family head became subject to criminal prosecution for non-fulfillment. Thus, thousands of individuals had their property confiscated. According to a report given at the 11th CP(B)U Congress, in 22 of Ukraine's 41 okrugas, 33,000 people had been prosecuted and lost their farms in 1929. An even larger number of peasants were fined, and rural officials were empowered to impose fines equaling five times the amount of the unfulfilled quotas. Consequently, many peasants abandoned their farms and fled to the cities to work in construction or moved to other regions of the USSR. The number of 'kulaks' thus fell rapidly. By spring 1929 a sample census gave the figure as 71,500 (1.4 percent of all households compared to 3.8 percent in 1927) in Ukraine.

At the beginning of the *collectivization drive in 1929 the party decided to 'liquidate the kulak as a class,' and a special commission headed by V. Molotov was established to determine what to do with the 'kulaks.' According to Party and government decrees issued in January and February 1930, in regions targeted for 'total collectivization' the law allowing land leasing and hired labor was abolished and the confiscation of the 'kulaks'' property and their deportation was allowed. Molotov's commission divided the 'kulaks' into three categories: those who were to be arrested and imprisoned in *concentration camps or shot; those who were to be deported to Siberia; and those whose property, including their homes, was to be confiscated and who were to be resettled in other regions in their oblast. In Ukraine alone the first and second groups encompassed 40,000–50,000 households, while the third group included about 200,000 individuals.

The decisions of the Molotov commission were implemented almost immediately, beginning in February 1930, and were zealously pursued by special armed dekulakization brigades made up of Party activists, Kom-somol members, urban residents, and employees of the

Dekulakization in Ukraine as of 10 March 1930

Region	Total no. of raions	Raions affected	Families affected	% of all households	Value of confiscated property (in rubles)	Value of property per family (in rubles)
Polisia	60	4	987	2.1	1,125,000	1,140
Right Bank	182	96	14,419	1.4	7,768,478	539
Left Bank	151	72	12,934	2.4	7,423,172	574
Steppe	199	133	33,557	3.6	23,984,284	715
Total for Ukraine	592	305	61,897	2.4	40,300,934	742

OGPU and the Party apparat. Peasants were informed that their property no longer belonged to them and were forbidden to slaughter or sell livestock and to leave their villages without permission. All confiscated property was transferred to the newly formed collective farms. To prevent kulaks from divesting themselves of their property before it could be confiscated, Stalin ordered collectivization to be speeded up. Dekulakization became a powerful inducement for all peasants to join collective farms, for they thus avoided being branded enemies of the state and sharing the tragic fates of those who had already become victims.

Rural Party activists needed little encouragement to participate in sanctioned robbery of their neighbors. In the first two months of the dekulakization campaign, 3–4 percent of the peasants in the grain-growing regions of Ukraine were expropriated. By 10 March 1930, in the 305 raions of Ukraine 58,520 horses and oxen and 586,400 ha of land were confiscated from 61,897 dekulakized households. Figures in the accompanying table show that, except in Polisia, where the number of those dekulakized was small, a 'kulak's' property was worth less than the Soviet average of 770 rubles. In other words, at the time they were robbed the 'kulaks' were not rich but poor peasants. A 'twenty-five thousander,' one of the 25,000 industrial workers who were Party members and usually led dekulakization brigades, could buy two or three 'kulak' farms with his annual salary. At the same time that targeted peasants were being openly robbed, other well-to-do peasants were subjected to increasingly heavy taxes. Thus, in 1931 a 'kulak' whose annual income was 1,000 rubles paid 840 rubles in taxes, while urban workers and functionaries with salaries of 1,200 rubles paid only 22 rubles, thus giving them a net income 7.4 times greater than that of their rural counterparts. This injustice was made even graver by the fact that the purchasing power of the ruble in the rural private sector amounted to only 16 percent of that in the urban state sector; in other words, a peasant's ruble bought only one-sixth the goods a worker's did.

By 1 July 1930, 93,000 peasant households had been dekulakized in Soviet Ukraine; the value of their confiscated property amounted to nearly 50.2 million rubles. A comparison with the figures for 10 March 1930 shows that increasingly poorer peasants were dekulakized. By the end of 1930 dekulakized households numbered 160,000–200,000 in Ukraine. An additional 50,000 farms were confiscated for non-payment of taxes. Hundreds of thousands of peasant families 'dekulakized' themselves: they abandoned their farms and fled to the cities. Dekulakization continued in 1931, mostly in the form of confiscation of property of those who owed taxes. A total of 200,000 households in Ukraine were taxed individually, and 110,000 of them disappeared in the course of the year. Thus, in 1930–1 the total number of those dekulakized in Ukraine amounted to 300,000 families, or almost 1,500,000 people.

By 10 March 1930, 11,374 peasant families – one-third of all those dekulakized – had been arrested and deported from the 11 regions targeted for rapid collectivization in Ukraine. During the entire collectivization period the number of families deported from Ukraine was 60,000–100,000 (300,000–400,000 people). Many of those inhumanely deported ended up in prisons or concentration camps; others died in transit or during the first months or years of exile. A secret instruction issued by J. Stalin and V. Molotov on 8 May 1933 ordered an end to the mass deportation of peasants and set a final limit of 2,000 for Ukraine.

In the 1930s the term 'kulak' thus ceased to have any economic significance and was used only as a political label. A new term, 'subkulak' (podkulachnik), was applied to anyone, including collective farmers and poor peasants, who sympathized with the plight of the persecuted and disagreed with the actions of the authorities. At the same time, incompetent or dishonest collective-farm managers, bookkeepers, and clerks were labeled kulaks and accused of treacherous designs. Later, the term was applied to the helpless poor who lived on charity and thus unintentionally exposed the state of economic conditions in the countryside.

The peasant deportees were resettled in the wilderness of sub-Arctic Russia, the northern Urals, western Siberia, and Kazakhstan. There they lived in special colonies run by the OGPU. Most were organized into collective farms called statuteless artels, which did not have an elected leader. Others were forced to work in dangerous mines. Treated as subhumans, many of them died from starvation, cold, or disease. In spring 1930 the rate of collectivization was reviewed, and special commissions 'rehabilitated' about 10 percent of the deportees and permitted them to return home. With time, the situation of the deportees was normalized. The 1936 Constitution granted them the right to vote. In 1938 their collective farms became normal artels, and after the Second World War they were allowed to return home.

It should be noted that the position of the ordinary collective farmer who had not been deported was not much different from that of the 'kulak' who was. In 1932–3 the confiscation of surplus grain was extended to all peasants and not just 'kulaks.' Gradually the special measures used to repress the latter were applied to all economically independent peasants who did not join the collective farms; later all peasants were saddled with excessive taxes and compulsory deliveries of meat, milk, and agricultural produce. In the mid-1930s all rural residents in the USSR were deprived of internal passports and thus of the possibility of leaving their places of residence.

Dekulakization was an essential element in the collectivization drive. It ensured the Stalinist regime's victory in the countryside and its complete control over the peasantry. It also undermined agricultural productivity and significantly depressed the living standard. The peasantry lost interest in and the incentive to work. Dekulakization had tragic consequences for the Ukrainian nation and economy (see *Famine and *Genocide).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Jasny, N. The Socialized Agriculture of the USSR: Plans and Performance (Stanford 1949)
- Slyn'ko, I. Sotsialistychna perebudova i tekhnichna rekonstruktsiia sil's'koho hospodarstva Ukraïny (1927–1932 rr.) (Kiev 1961)
- Danilov, V. (ed). Ocherki istorii kollektivizatsii sel'skogo khoziaïstva v soiuznykh respublikakh (Moscow 1963)
- Problemy agrarnoi istorii sovetskogo obshchestva* (Moscow 1971)
- Ivnietskii, N. Klassovaia bor'ba i likvidatsiia kulachestva kak klassa, 1929–1932 (Moscow 1972)
- Danilov, V. Sovetskaia dokolkhoznaia derevnia, 2 vols (Moscow 1977, 1979)
- Conquest, R. The Harvest of Sorrow: Soviet Collectivization and the Terror-Famine (New York and Edmonton 1986)
- S. Maksudov

Kulakovsky, Yulian [Kulakovskij, Juljan], b 25 July 1855 in Panevežys (now in the Lithuanian SSR), d 21 February 1919 in Kiev. Russian historian, classical philologist, and archeologist. Kulakovsky finished his studies at Moscow University in 1876. In 1881 he became a lecturer at Kiev University and in 1888, a professor. He specialized in the ancient history and geography of the northern Black Sea coast area and in the history of Byzantium and ancient Rome. He conducted archeological digs on old monuments in southern Ukraine covering the period from the Greek settlements to the late Middle Ages. Among his principal works are Alany po svedeniiam klassicheskikh i vizantiiskikh istochnikov (The Alans According to Information in Classical and Byzantine Sources, 1899), Proshloe Tavridy (The Past of Taurida, 1906), and Istoriia Vizantii (The History of Byzantium, 3 vols, 1910–15).

Kulas, Julian [Kuljas, Julijan], b 5 June 1934 in Boratyn, Jarosław county, Galicia. Community leader. Coming to the United States with his parents in 1950, he graduated from De Paul University Law School in Chicago (1959). He is active in the Ukrainian community in Chicago: he served as president of the local branch of the Ukrainian Congress Committee (1975–7) and of the Ukrainian-American Democratic Party Organization (since 1974). He is a member of the United States Holocaust Memorial Council (since 1978) and of the Chicago Commission on Human Relations (since 1979). As V. Polovchak's attorney (1980–6), he successfully defended the Ukrainian teenager from deportation to the USSR. In 1986 he was a member of the United States delegation to the Helsinki Accords Review Conference in Vienna.

Kulbakin, Stepan [Kul'bakin], b 9 August 1873 in Tbilisi, Georgia, d 22 December 1941 in Belgrade. Russian Slavist. A graduate of New Russia (Odessa) University (1897), Kulbakin was a professor at Kharkiv (1905–19), Skopje, and Belgrade (1924–) universities. A Neogrammarian, he wrote valuable textbooks of Old Church Slavonic and of various Slavic languages, including Ukrainskii iazyk: Kratkii ocherk istoricheskoi fonetiki i morfologii (The Ukrainian Language: A Short Outline of Historical Phonetics and Morphology, 1919). His publications also include studies of Old Church Slavonic, Polish dialects, and Slavic accentuation.

Kulchynsky, Ihnatii [Kul'čyns'kyj, Ihnatij], b 1694 in Volhynia, d 1741 in Hrodna, Belorussia. Uniate Church activist and historian. Kulchynsky graduated from the Urban College in Rome and was ordained in 1720. He served as a secretary to the protoarchimandrite of the Basilian order in Byten, Volhynia, and then as procurator of the order and rector of the ss Sergius and Bacchus Church in Rome (1729–36). In 1737 he was appointed archimandrite of the Basilian order in Hrodna. Kulchynsky published the first history of the Ukrainian Catholic church, Specimen Ecclesiae Ruthenicae (1733). The next year he wrote Appendix ad Specimen Ecclesiae Ruthenicae (1734), an expanded version of the first book that included archival documentation. In Hrodna, he wrote his best works, including hagiographies of the saints of the Basilian order, Monologium Bazyliańskie ... (Basilian Monologium ..., published posthumously in 1771).

Kulchytska, Olena [Kul'čyc'ka], b 15 September 1877 in Berezhan, Galicia, d 8 March 1967 in Lviv. Painter, graphic artist, master of applied arts, and pedagogue. Completing her art studies at the studio of R. Bratkowski and S. Batowski-Kaczor in Lviv (1901–3), and the Vienna School of Industrial Design (1903–8), she taught secondary school in Peremyshl (1910–38). In 1939 she joined the ethnographic department of the Museum of the Shevchenko Scientific Society in Lviv. After the war she taught book graphics at the Lviv Polygraphic Institute (1945–51) and in 1950 she was elected corresponding member of the Academy of Architecture of the Ukrainian SSR. Most of her artistic work consists of oils, watercolors, and illustrations, particularly of children's books. As a graphic artist she used various techniques, such as woodcut, linocut, copper engraving, and etching. Her chief oil paintings are Children in a Meadow (1908), Harvest (1913), Children with Candles (1913), portraits of her sister Olha (1912), a self-portrait (1917), and the series Christ's Passion, Spring, and Landscapes. Besides such well-known individual watercolors as Apple Trees in Bloom (1928), Mountain Meadows (1925), and Mikhova Village (1930–1), she did several watercolor series, including Folk Costumes of the Western Regions of the Ukrainian SSR (1959) and Folk Architecture of the Western Regions of Ukraine. Her mastery of the woodcut and linocut techniques is evident in such print series as Ukrainian Writers (1920), Folk Architecture (1931), The Hutsul Region (1935), Legend of the Mountains and Forests (1936), and Dovbush (1940). Her etchings, such as Beyond the Sea (1915), Under a Foreign Sky (1915), The Moloch of War (1915), The Black Clouds of War (1915), and Vengeance (1917), are a powerful condemnation of the exploitation of Ukrainian peasants and of war. She has illustrated numerous books: Ukrain'ska narodna mitolohiia (Ukrainian Folk Mythology, 1922), I. Franko's poems Lys Mykyta (Fox Mykyta, 1951, 1962) and Moisei (Moses, 1939), Slovo o polku Ihorevi (The Tale of Ihor's Campaign), and various works by M. Kotsiubynsky, V. Stefanyk, and Yu. Fedkovych. Her contribution to children's literature consists of illustrations to the book series Nashym naimenshym (For Our Smallest Ones, 1915–28) and to the books and magazine published by Svit Dytyny. In the field of applied arts, collaborating with her sister Olha, she designed 80 kilims. Her skillful blending of modernist Viennese trends with Ukrainian folk art made her art extremely popular. From 1908 Kulchytska took part in numerous exhibitions in Lviv, Cracow, Warsaw, Poznań, Kiev (1911, 1913), Poltava, Vienna, Berlin, Kharkiv, and Prague. In 1950 she donated her own collection consisting of over 3,000 of her works (paintings, prints, and kilims) to the Lviv Museum of Ukrainian Art. The Kulchytska Memorial Museum was opened in Lviv in 1971.

Olena Kulchytska: Self-Portrait (1917)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Holubets', M. Olena Kul'chyts'ka (Lviv 1933)
 Seniv, I. Tvorchist' Oleny L'vovny Kul'chyts'koi (Kiev 1961)
 Batih, M.; Hurhula, I. Olena Kul'chyts'ka. Kataloh vystavky 1968 (Lviv 1969)
 V'iunyk, A. Olena Kul'chyts'ka. Al'bom (Kiev 1969)

S. Hordynsky

Kulchytsky, Inokentii [Kul'čyc'kyj, Inokentij] (secular name: Ivan), b 1680?, d 6 December 1731. Orthodox church figure, bishop, and saint. Of noble descent from Volhynia, he studied at the Kievan Mohyla Academy until 1706 and in 1708 became a monk in the Kievan Cave Monastery. He lectured at the Moscow Greek-

Slavonic-Latin Academy (ca 1711–18), serving for some time also as the academy's prefect. Kulchytsky was consecrated bishop of Pereiaslav in 1721 and assigned to missionary work in Peking. When he was barred entry to China, in 1727 he became the bishop of Irkutsk eparchy. There he did missionary work among the local population and expanded the local school system. Kulchytsky's remains were found in 1764, and his relics became so famous that in 1805 Kulchytsky was canonized.

Kulchytsky, Oleksander (Les) [Kul'čyc'kyj], b 26 November 1859 in Kolomyia, d 21 November 1938 in Lviv. Economist and community leader in the Kolomyia region. He studied law at Chernivtsi University and worked in local government in Kolomyia. There he was the organizer and first director of the Pokutia Credit Union, and a founder of the local Prosvita society branch and People's Home. He also helped found the weekly Postup (1903) and headed the Kolomyia branch of the National Democratic party. In Lviv Kulchytsky was a founding member of the newspaper **Dilo* and the first director (1910–30) of the Land Mortgage Bank, a general credit joint-stock company. He was also a member of the governing board of the Provincial Audit Union (1920) and a leading member of the control commission of Tsentrobank.

Oleksander Kulchytsky

Yurii Frants Kulchytsky

Kulchytsky, Oleksander [Kul'čyc'kyj] (Kultschytzkyj), b 8 February 1895 in Skalat, Galicia, d 30 April 1980 in Sarcelles, France. Psychologist and educator; full member of the Shevchenko Scientific Society from 1947 and vice-president of its European branch (1952–80). After graduating in psychology from Lviv University (PH D 1930), he taught secondary school in Krosno, Zolochiv, Kolomyia, and Lviv. Appointed professor at the State Pedagogical Lyceum in Lviv for his contributions to educational psychology, a year later he fled the Soviet-occupation regime and worked in Munich, where in 1945 he became a professor of psychology at the Ukrainian Free University (uvu). Settling in Sarcelles in 1951, he chaired the Ukrainian Students' Aid Commission (1952–80), belonged to the Free International Academy of Sciences and Letters, founded and headed the Ukrainian-Polish Society in Paris, conducted research on Ukrainian emigrants in France for the National Center for Scientific Research, and served as rector (1962–3) and dean of the philosophical faculty (1972–4) of the uvu. His publications include numerous monographs, such as Narys struktornoï psykholohii (Outline of Structural Psychology, 1949), Osnovy psykholohii i filosofichnykh dystsyplin (Foundations of Psychology and Philosophical Disciplines, 1953), Die marxistisch-sowjetische Konzeption des Menschen im Lichte der westlichen Psychologie (1956), Das operative Schema der somatopsychischen Erfassung des ukrainischen Ethnotypus (1966), Vvedennia u filosofichnu antropolohiiu (Introduction to Philosophical Anthropology, 1973), and posthumously, Ukrains'kyi personalizm – filosof's'ka i etnopsykholohichna synteza (The Ukrainian Personality – Philosophical and Ethnopsychological Synthesis, 1985).

B. Krawchenko

Kulchytsky, Yevhen [Kul'čyc'kyj, Jevhen] (Gut Kulchytsky), b 12 April 1903 in Lviv, d 23 March 1982 in Detroit. Forester, youth organizer, and journalist. A graduate of the Prague Polytechnical Institute (1929), he was an organizer of the Ukrainian scouting movement for many years. In 1924 he was elected to the Supreme Plast Command in Lviv, and organized the Rovers' Club. In Prague he helped found the Union of Ukrainian Emigrant Scouts and served as its president (1931–4). A member of the Ukrainian Military Organization (UVO) and then of the OUN, he was in charge of organizational matters for the Chief Command of the Carpathian Sich in Khust (1938–9) and commander of the OUN in Czechoslovakia (1940). He spent much of the war in a Hungarian concentration camp. Emigrating in 1950 to the United States, he organized and headed the Ukrainian youth association *Plast there. Kulchytsky translated R. Baden-Powell's Scouting for Boys into Ukrainian and wrote many technical and educational handbooks for Plast. His articles on current Ukrainian issues appeared in newspapers such as Stoboda, Novyi shliakh, and Ukrains'ke slovo. As a member of the *Organization for the Rebirth of Ukraine, he continued to be active in Ukrainian political life.

Kulchytsky, Yurii [Kul'čyc'kyj, Jurij], b 15 December 1912 in Pidbyzh, Drohobych county, Galicia. Graphic artist and ceramicist. While studying at the Cracow Academy of Fine Art (1933–8), he belonged to the *Zarevo art group and took part in its exhibitions. Immigrating to Austria (1945) and then Paris (1948), in 1960 he settled in Mougins near Cannes and set up a modern ceramics atelier with I. *Vynnykiv. Until the mid-1950s Kulchytsky did mostly woodcuts, including prints such as Three Cossacks, The Pursuit, Kozak-Mamai, and Fist Fight, and illustrations to K. Malytska's Harfa Leili (The Harp of Leila, 1953). By linocut he produced prints such as The Collectivization. He has also done some woodcut bookplates. In ceramics he has introduced new modern forms based on elements of Ukrainian folk ceramics, an art particularly rich in linear rhythm, which can be described as musical. His fantastic depictions of birds, animals, and human beings are almost surrealistic, but preserve that esthetic quality characteristic of folk art.

Kulchytsky, Yurii Frants [Kul'čyc'kyj, Jurij Franc], b ca 1640 in Kulchytsi, in the Sambir region, Galicia, d 20 February 1694 in Vienna. Traveler and merchant; hero of the defense of Vienna during the Austrian-Turkish War of 1683–99. Kulchytsky came from the ranks of the petty nobility. According to some sources, he joined the Zaporozhian Cossacks and was captured and imprisoned by the Turks. He had an excellent knowledge of the Turkish language and customs, and in the 1760s he worked as a translator for the Eastern Trading Company in Belgrade and Vienna. He later became a merchant himself. In July 1683 the Turks had advanced through Central Europe as far as Vienna, to which they laid siege. Defended by a small garrison of 10,000 men, the Viennese were soon in desperate straits: famine and disease ravaged the city and panic was beginning to spread. Disguised as a Turk, on 13 August 1683 Kulchytsky stole through the enemy lines to the Austrian army. He told the Austrians of the city's critical situation, gave them information necessary for a co-ordinated plan of action against the Turks, and returned to Vienna with the news that the Polish king Jan III Sobieski and an army of Ukrainian Cossacks were coming to rescue the city. Their hope renewed, the Viennese continued to resist the Turks, and on 12 September the combined Christian armies defeated the Turks and raised the siege. According to tradition, the grateful Viennese, or even Jan Sobieski himself, gave Kulchytsky coffee captured from the Turks, with which he opened the first coffee house in Vienna. In 1885 the sculptor I. Pendl created a monument to Kulchytsky on a street named after him. A fictionalized biography of Kulchytsky was written by I. Fylypchak (1933; 2nd edn, 1983).

Kuleshov, Mykola [Kulešov], b 17 December 1890 in Novyi Margelan, Fergana oblast, Turkestan general gubernia, d 19 January 1968 in Kharkiv. Plant breeder; from 1951 full member of the AN URSR. A graduate of the Kiev Polytechnical Institute (1913), he became director of the Central Seed Testing Station of the Ukrainian SSR (1920–6) and assistant director of the All-Union Institute of Plant Breeding (1926–34). He headed plant-breeding departments at agricultural institutes in Irkutsk (1934–8), Omsk (1938–45), and Kharkiv (1945–68). From 1947 to 1960 he was head of the ecology laboratory of the Ukrainian Research Institute of Plant Breeding, Selection, and Genetics. Kuleshov developed methods for improving and testing grain seed, particularly spring and winter wheat seed.

Kulets, Ivan [Kulec'], b 24 June 1880 in Kholoiv (now Vuzlove), Zolochiv county, Galicia, d 11 March 1952 in Prague. Artist and pedagogue. A graduate of the Cracow Painting Academy (1909), he moved to Bohemia in 1914. In 1924 he began to teach at the Ukrainian Studio of Plastic Arts in Prague, which became his private art school following elimination of government subsidies (1932). In 1939 he renamed it the Ukrainian Painting Academy, and in 1946 the school was nationalized. Kulets trained hundreds of painters, some of whom later received international recognition. At first his painting was influenced by the Secession movements, but by the beginning of the 1920s his style reflected experimental innovations in technique and media. His notable paintings include Antichrist, Revolution, Christ, and Lovers. Twenty of his paintings are located at the Prague National Gallery, and 164 works are at the Museum of Ukrainian Culture in Svydnyk, where his first posthumous exhibition was held in 1980.

Kuliabka [Kuljabka]. Name of a prominent Cossack family in the Lubni region. Sylvester *Kuliabka (1701– 61) was a noted theologian. His brother Ivan (ca 1705–73) was colonel in Lubni regiment (1757–71). Ivan's son Pavlo was quartermaster of the regiment (1775–82) and several other members of the family served as captains of Lubni company or as regimental officers.

Kuliabka, Sylvester [Kuljabka, Syl'vester] (secular name: Semen), b 1701 (1704 according to some sources) in Lubni, d 17 April 1761 in St Petersburg. Churchman and theologian. The son of a Cossack officer and grandson of Hetman D. Apostol, he graduated from the Kievian Mohyla Academy in 1726. He was a professor (from 1727), prefect (1737–40), and rector (1740–5) of the academy before being appointed bishop of Kostroma (1745–50). As bishop he founded the first theological seminary in the eparchy. In 1750 he was appointed archbishop of St Petersburg and a member of the Holy Synod. An erudite scholar and sermonizer, he was known as aureus benedicendus magister. Thirteen of his popular sermons were published.

Kulik, Stephen [Kulyk, Stepan], b 6 January 1899 in Popivka, Konotop county, Chernihiv gubernia. Mathematician; full member of the Shevchenko Scientific Society. Kulik was a research associate of the AN USSR Institute of Mathematics (1932–7, 1941–2) and a docent at Kiev University (1930–43). As a postwar refugee in Germany and then in Great Britain, he worked as a researcher in industry. Immigrating to the United States in 1951, Kulik has taught at Claremont Men's College in California (1951–3), the University of South Carolina in Columbia (1953–8), and Long Beach State College in California (1959–64). He has written works in Ukrainian, Russian, and English dealing with the theory of probability, statistics, numerical methods for calculating roots of algebraic and transcendental equations, and polynomials.

Mykola Kulish

Kulish, Mykola [Kuliš], b 18 December 1892 in Chapyntsi, Tavriia gubernia, d 1937? Renowned playwright. Kulish began writing satirical poetry and plays as a gymnasium student in Oleshky. In 1924 he joined the proletarian writers' group *Hart, and in Kharkiv he met its other members; one of them, M. *Khvylovy, thereafter had a great impact on his writing and views. In 1925 he was elected a member of the presidium of the writers' group *Vaplite; from November 1926 to its forced dissolution in January 1928 he was its president. In 1926 he founded and headed the Ukrainian Society of Dramatists and Composers. In 1927–8 he was also a member of the editorial board of the prominent cultural journal Chervonyi shliakh. In late 1929 he became a member of the presidium of the new writers' organization *Prolitfront. After its forced dissolution in January 1931, he was not allowed to join the only regime-sanctioned writers' organization, the All-Ukrainian Association of Proletarian Writers. Prevented from publishing, he made his living as a film scenarist. In June 1934 his plays were condemned as nationalist and harmful and he was purged from the CP(B) as a 'counterrevolutionary.' In December 1934 he was arrested by the NKVD, tried as a member of an 'All-Ukrainian Borotbist Terrorist Center,' and sentenced to 10 years in an isolation cell in a concentration camp on the Solovets Islands. He was last heard from in 1937.

Kulish wrote 13 plays, of which 6 were published during his lifetime: 97 (1925), Khulii Khuryyna (1926), Myna Mazailo (1929), Narodnii Malakhii (The People's Malakhii, in Literaturnyi iarmarok, no. 9 [1929]), Komuna v stepakh (Commune in the Steppes, 1931), and Povorot Marka (Marko's Return, 1934). The first five as well as two others – Patetychna sonata (Sonata Pathétique, 1930) and Maklena Grassa (1932) – were staged and received critical acclaim. Most of them were staged by the *Berezil theater in Kharkiv under the direction of L. *Kurbas. Forbidden to be staged in Ukraine by the censors, Patetychna sonata was translated into Russian and staged at the Moscow Kamernyi Theater by A. Tairov and at the Leningrad Bolshoi Drama Theater by K. Tvertsov simultaneously from December 1931 to March 1932.

Kulish became famous after the stage success in 1924 of his first play, 97, a portrayal of peasant life after the Revolution. It was, however, in his 'national' trilogy – Narodnii Malakhii, Myna Mazailo, and Patetychna sonata, written while Kulish was a close associate of Kurbas – that his exceptional talent and originality as a dramatist became evident. In Narodnii Malakhii Kulish satirized the contradictions between Ukrainian national aspirations and Soviet reality. In Myna Mazailo he satirized the political and social impact of the policy of *Ukrainization. In Patetychna sonata he depicted, using elements of both modern experimental theater and traditional Ukrainian puppet theater (**vertep*), the chaos and political conflicts of the revolutionary period in Ukraine. The content of the trilogy was subject to a great deal of Stalinist invective, and it was for writing those plays and his close association with Khvylovy that Kulish became a victim of the terror.

Kulish was posthumously 'rehabilitated' in 1956, and editions of his selected plays – including the previously unpublished Patetychna sonata, Otak zahynuv Huska (That's How Huska Died), and Maklena Grassa – appeared in Kiev (1960, 1969) and in Russian in Moscow (1964, 1980).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Kulish, M. Tvory, ed H. Kostyuk (New York 1955)
 Kuziakina, N. Dramaturh Mykola Kulish: Literaturno-krytychnyi narys (Kiev 1962)
 – P'iesy Mykoly Kulisha: Literaturna i stsenichna istoriia (Kiev 1970)
 Revutsky, V. 'Mykola Kulish in the Modern Ukrainian Theatre,' SEER, 49, no. 116 (July 1971)

V. Revutsky, R. Senkus

Kulish, Oleksandra. See Barvinok, Hanna.

Panteleimon Kulish

Kulish, Panteleimon [Kuliš, Pantelejmon], b 8 August 1819 in Voronizh, Chernihiv gubernia, d 14 February 1897 in Motronivka, Chernihiv gubernia. Prominent writer, historian, ethnographer, and translator. He was born into an impoverished Cossack-gentry family. After completing only five years at the Novhorod-Siverskyi gymnasium he enrolled at Kiev University in 1837 but was not allowed to finish his studies because he was not a noble. He obtained a teaching position in Lutske in 1840. There he wrote his first historical novel in Russian, Mikhail Charnyshenko, ili Malorossiiia vosem' desiat let nazad (Mykhailo Charnyshenko, or Little Russia Eighty Years Ago, 2 vols, 1843). M. *Maksymovych promoted Kulish's literary efforts and published several of his early stories. His first longer work written in Ukrainian was the epic poem 'Ukraina' (Ukraine, 1843). In 1843–5 Kulish taught in Kiev and studied Ukrainian history and ethnography. There he befriended T. Shevchenko, M. Kostomarov, and V. Bilozersky; their circle later became the nucleus of the secret *Cyril and Methodius Brotherhood. Another new friend, the Polish writer M. Grabowski, also had a great influence on him.

In 1845 P. Pletnev, the rector of St Petersburg University, invited Kulish to teach at the university. In St Petersburg Kulish finished in Ukrainian his major historical novel, Chorna rada, khronika 1663 roku (The Black Council, a Chronicle of the Year 1663), of which excerpts were published in Russian translation in Muscovite journals in 1845–6. To prepare him for a professorial career, the Imperial Academy of Sciences granted him a scholarship to do research abroad. In 1847 he married O. Bilozerska (the future writer Hanna *Barvinok) and set out with her for Prague. En route he was arrested by the tsarist police in Warsaw for belonging to the Cyril and Methodius Brotherhood, which had been uncovered at the time. After two months in prison he was exiled for three years to Tula. Because his main offence had been writing a 'Tale of the Ukrainian People,' Kulish was forbidden to write. He maintained his innocence, but his interrogation and closed trial and subsequent loss of freedom were for him a deep trauma.

In 1850 he was allowed to return to St Petersburg. While working as an editor there, he tried, unsuccessfully, to establish himself as a Russian littérateur, publishing in the journal Sovremennik the autobiographical novella 'Istoriia Uliany Terent'evny' (The History of Uliana Terentevna, 1852), the historical novel 'Aleksi Odnorog' (1852–3), and the novella 'Iakov Iakovlevich.' He worked on a long biography of N. Gogol, finishing it in 1856 while visiting S. Aksakov.

Soon his Ukrainian interests took the upper hand. After living for a while on a khutir in Ukraine and in Kiev, Kulish returned to St Petersburg. There he established a Ukrainian printing press and, after being allowed to publish under his own name, issued two splendid volumes of **Zapiski o Iuzhnoi Rusi* (Notes on Southern Rus', 1856–7), a rich collection of Ukrainian folklore, ethnography, and literature in which he introduced a new orthography (**Kulishivka*). In 1857 he finally published Chorna rada in its entirety, in both Ukrainian and Russian. In the epilogue to the Russian edition he pleaded for the first time for the political unity of Ukraine and Russia while stressing their cultural separateness. He also published a primer (Hramatka, 1857) for use in Sunday schools, a volume of Marko Vovchok's folk tales (1858), and the Ukrainian almanac **Khata* (Home, 1860). 'Maior' (Major), his Russian novella about his life in Ukraine, appeared in Russkii vestnik in 1859. In 1860–2 he was actively involved in **Osnova*, the Ukrainian journal published in St Petersburg. In 1862 he published a separate collection of his own poems, Dosvitky (Glimmers of Dawn).

In 1864 Kulish accepted a high Russian official post in Warsaw. From there he developed further the contacts he had made earlier with Galician intellectuals and contributed to several Lviv periodicals. When he was asked to end these contacts he refused and resigned in 1867. After traveling abroad he returned to St Petersburg. For a while he edited a Russian government publication. Most of his time he devoted to the study of Ukrainian history, particularly of the Cossack period. His earlier romantic view of the Cossacks gave way to a new and very critical appraisal of them, which had already been evident in Chorna rada. He published several long articles on the Cossacks entitled 'Mal'ovana haidamachchyna' (The Painted Haidamaka Era, 1876) and a major study in three volumes, Istoriia vossoedineniia Rusi (The History of the Reunification of Rus', 1874–7). In the latter he expressed admiration for Peter I and Catherine II and made some uncomplimentary remarks about T. Shevchenko, thereby alienating most of the Ukrainian reading public. At about the same time, Kulish began translating the *Bible, a work that, with the help of I. Puliui and I. Nechui-Levytsky, was finally completed only after his death. His translation of the Psalter was published in Galicia in 1871.

After the 1876 *Ems Ukase forbade Ukrainian publications in the Russian Empire, Kulish strengthened his ties with Galicia. In 1881 he went to Lviv, and in 1882 his collection of poems and essays, Khutorna poeziia (Khutir Poetry), his Ukrainian translations of Shakespeare's Othello, Troilus and Cressida, and Comedy of Errors, and an appeal for Ukrainian-Polish understanding, Krashanka rusynam i poliakam na Velykden' 1882 roku (A Painted Egg for the Ruthenians and the Poles at Easter 1882), were published there. In 1883 he published his long poem 'Mahomet i Khadyza' (Muhammad and Khadijah), showing his deep interest in Islam. He seriously considered renouncing his Russian citizenship and remaining in Austria-Hungary, but government policies there changed his mind. Disheartened but not dejected, Kulish returned to Russian-ruled Ukraine, settled on his khutir Motronivka, and remained there with his wife until his death. Cut off from most Ukrainian activists, he conducted a wide correspondence and worked on translations of the Bible and the works of Shakespeare, Goethe, and Byron. He wrote two more collections of poetry, Dzvin (The Bell, 1893) and Pozychena kobza (The Borrowed Kobza, 1897), which were published in Geneva. A major historical study, 'Otpadenie Malorossii ot Pol'shi' (The Separation of Little Russia from Poland, 1888–9), was also completed on his khutir.

Both during his life and after his death Kulish was a controversial figure. His emphasis on the development of a separate, indigenous Ukrainian high culture while advocating political union with Russia found little sympathy among Ukrainian populists. After 1850, during his intense writing and publishing activity, he remained aloof from organized Ukrainian community life. His attempts at influencing Ukrainian cultural activities in Austrian-ruled Galicia were often misunderstood. Kulish's uncompromising attitude and his egocentrism were often stumbling blocks in his relations with others. Yet even his opponents granted him his achievements. During the modernist period of Ukrainian literature interest in Kulish was revived by M. Sribliansky and M. Yevshan. Dubove lystia (Oak Leaves), an almanac in his memory, appeared in Kiev in 1903, and editions of his works were published in Kiev (5 vols) and Lviv (6 vols) in 1908–10. In Soviet Ukraine some of his works were republished, new research about him (by V. Petrov, O. Doroshkevych, M. Mohyliansky, Ye. Kyrlyuk, M. Zerov, M. Vozniak, and others) appeared, and the publication of a complete edition of his works was begun (2 vols, 1930, 1934) in Kiev but not completed. During the 'Literary Discussion of 1925, M. Khvylovy defended Kulish as a 'truly European intellectual.' From 1933 on, however, Kulish's works were virtually proscribed in the USSR until a volume of his selected writings appeared in Kiev in 1969, followed by a small volume of his poetry in 1970. Soviet literary critics have wrongly accused Kulish of 'bourgeois nationalism.' In the West, interest in Kulish has existed mainly among academics. An abridged English translation of his Chorna rada was published in Littleton, Colorado, in 1973, and a Ukrainian volume of his selected letters appeared in New York in 1984.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- 'Zhyzn' Kulisha,' Pravda (Lviv), 1868, nos 2–4, 7, 24–8
 Shenrok, V. P. A. Kulish (Biograficheskii ocherk) (Kiev 1901)
 Doroshenko, D. Panteleimon Kulish (Berlin [1923])
 Hrushevskiy, M. 'Sotsial'no-tradytsiini pidosnovy Kulishevoi tvorchosty,' Ukraina, 1927, nos 1–2
 Iefremov, S.; Doroshkevych, O. (eds). Panteleimon Kulish (Kiev 1927)
 Kyrlyuk, Ie. Bibliografiia prats' P.O. Kulisha ta pysan' pro n'oho (Kiev 1929)
 Petrov, V. Panteleimon Kulish u p'iatdesiati roky (Kiev 1929)
 Luckyj, G. Panteleimon Kulish: A Sketch of His Life and Times (Boulder, Colo 1983)

G.S.N. Luckyj

Kulish, Yaroslava. See Kerch, Oksana.

Kulishivka [Kulišivka]. A Ukrainian alphabet and orthography used for the first time by P. *Kulish in his Zapiski o Iuzhnoi Rusi (Notes on Southern Rus', 1856) and adopted in the 1860s by Populist publications in Galicia. Kulishivka retained b at the end of words and often after labials (pbjut' – they drink) and after r; replaced the old

h as well as o in closed syllables with i; introduced ε after soft consonants – davnie (old), but est' (is) and svoe (one's own) – while rendering the e in such cases as ε – εhe (yes), poeta (poet); introduced ē – ēho (his), slēzy (tears); eliminated the letter ы, replacing the old ы and i by и – vyučyv (learned); and used the Latin g – grunt (land). This became the foundation of a systematized way of writing contemporary Ukrainian orthography (see **Zhelekhivka*), which is sometimes also called Kulishivka. From the 1880s Kulish modified his orthography extensively in the phonetic direction – occja to replace otcja ('father' gen sg), ticci to replace titci ('aunt' dat sg), š čereva instead of z čereva ('from the belly'), ž žonoju instead of z žonoju ('with the wife'), bež žalju instead of bez žalju ('without pity') – but this reform was not widely adopted.

Kulka, Marshall, b 1 March 1911 in Warspite, Alberta. Organic chemist. A graduate of the University of Alberta (1936) and McGill University (PH D 1942), Kulka was a research scientist with the Dominion Rubber Company (1943–63) and the Uniroyal Research Labs (1963–76). He discovered agricultural chemicals to combat fungal pathogens and has written over 80 scientific papers.

Kulsky, Leonid [Kul's'kyj], b 10 April 1903 in Nowo-Radomsk, Piotrków gubernia. Chemist; since 1969 full member of the AN USSR. After graduating from the Kiev Institute of People's Education (1925) and Leningrad University (1928), he worked at various institutes in Kiev. From 1937 to 1965 he headed the laboratory of hydrochemistry and hydrotechnology at the AN USSR Institute of General and Inorganic Chemistry. Then for three years he oversaw the academy's hydrochemistry and hydrotechnology sector. Until 1973 he served as deputy director of the Institute of Colloidal Chemistry and Hydrochemistry, and then as chairman of a department at the institute. His numerous publications include monographs and textbooks. He has done pioneering work in the chemistry and technology of water purification. His methods of water treatment have been applied widely in the USSR to improve the quality of potable and industrial water.

Kul'tfront (Cultural Front). A popular educational magazine published from 1931 to 1935 in Kharkiv by the Council of Trade Unions of Ukraine. Its name, language, and periodicity changed many times. The purpose of the magazine was to propagate 'Ukrainian Soviet Socialist culture among the workers of Ukraine.' Its predecessors were the irregular Russian-language magazine Put' k kommunizmu (1921–4), the Russian monthly Rabochii klub (1925–6), the Russian semimonthly Kul'trabotnik (1927), and the Ukrainian-language semimonthly Kul'trobitnyk (1928–30). At first Kul'tfront was a trimonthly; in 1934 it became a monthly. It was replaced by the magazine Sotsialistychna kul'tura (1936–41), issues 1–9 of which were published under the name Kolbud.

Kul'tura (Culture). A literary and political monthly of a Marxist profile published from 1926 to 1931 in Lviv. It was preceded by Nova kul'tura (1923–6). From 1928 Kul'tura defended Shumskyism and Khvylovism (see O. *Shumsky and M. *Khvylovy) and criticized Stalinist nationality policy in Ukraine. Its editor in chief was S. Rudyk and the coeditors were V. Bobynsky, O. Vasylykiv, M. Irchan, N. Lazarkevych, V. Levynsky, M. Tarnovsky, and M. Vozniak.

Kultura. Polish monthly journal of politics, arts, and literature published in Paris since 1947 by the Instytut Literacki under the editorship of J. Giedroyc. The journal deals primarily with issues concerning Eastern Europe. It devotes considerable attention to Ukrainian issues, especially in articles by R. Wraga, and publishes translations of Ukrainian literature by J. Łobodowski, S. Baranczak, and others. In its 'Ukrainian Chronicle,' Kultura surveys significant developments in Ukrainian life in Ukraine and the West. Matters concerning the Ukrainian Catholic church are dealt with by D. Morawski in the section 'Correspondence from Rome.' Among the Ukrainians who have contributed articles to Kultura are B. Levvytsky, B. Osadchuk, B. Struminsky, W. Wytwycky, I. Ševčenko, I. Koshelivets, and G.Y. Shevelov. The Instytut Literacki also publishes a monograph series under the title Kultura Library. This series has included several books in Ukrainian or on Ukrainian topics, such as Yu. Lavrinenko's Rozstriliane Vidrodzhennia (The Rebirth That Was Executed, 1959) and Ukraina, 1956–1968 (Ukraine, 1956–1968, 1969), a collection of documents edited by I. Koshelivets.

Kultura i Osvita (Culture and Education). The publishing house of the Ukrainian Cultural and Educational Centre in Winnipeg. Since 1944 it has published over 50 book titles, some music collections, and plays.

Kul'tura i pobut. See Visti VUTsVK.

Kul'tura i zhyttia (Culture and Life). A newspaper published in Kiev since 1965 by the Ministry of Culture of the Ukrainian SSR and the Republican Committee of the Trade Union of Cultural Workers. It publishes news about artistic developments in Ukraine and abroad. It reports on the latest achievements in fine art, folk art, music, theater, and film, and on the activities of amateur groups, museums, clubs, and libraries. It was preceded by a number of newspapers published by various institutions in Kharkiv: Literatura, nauka, i mystetstvo (1923–4), Kul'tura i pobut (1924–8), and Literatura i mystetstvo (1929–30), all weekly supplements to Visti VUTsVK, the weekly Radians'ke mystetstvo (1941–3 in Voroshylovhrad, Ufa, Moscow, and Kharkiv; 1945–54 in Kiev), and the semiweekly Radians'ka kul'tura (1955–64).

Kulturna Spilka Ukrainskykh Trudiashchykh. See Cultural Association of Ukrainian Workers.

Kulyk, Ihor, b 19 November 1935 in Kharkiv. Solid-state physicist; corresponding member of the AN URSR since 1970. A graduate of Kharkiv University (1959), since 1960 he has been a research associate at the AN URSR Physical-Technical Institute of Low Temperatures. He has achieved significant research results in the fields of superconductivity and surface physics.

Kulyk, Ivan, b 26 January 1897 in Shpola, Kiev gubernia, d 14 October 1941? Soviet Ukrainian writer and political figure; the husband of L. *Piontek. In 1914 he joined the Bolshevik party and emigrated to Pennsylvania, where he was active in the Russian and Ukrainian socialist movements. He returned to Ukraine in June 1917 and became a member of the first Soviet government in Ukraine in Kharkiv in 1918. In 1919, as a member of the Collegium of the People's Commissariat of Foreign Affairs, he was engaged in underground work in Western Ukraine. In 1920 he was a member of the *Galician Revolutionary Committee. A member of the proletarian writers' group *Hart from 1923, in 1924–7 he was a Soviet consul in Montreal. In 1927 he became a founding member of the All-Ukrainian Association of Proletarian Writers and edited its journal Hart. From 1932 he headed the organizing committee of the Writers' Union of Ukraine; in 1934 he became the head of the new union but was removed in 1935. In 1936–7 he directed the Radio Committee of Ukraine, and in 1937 he was elected to the CC CP(B)U and the All-Ukrainian Central Executive Committee. Despite his loyal service to the Party and denunciation of numerous 'nationalist' writers, however, he too was arrested by the NKVD and disappeared during the Yezhov terror of 1937.

Ivan Kulyk

Kulyk began publishing poetry and political articles in the Ukrainian socialist periodicals Robitnyk (Cleveland) and Robochyi narod (Winnipeg) under the pseudonym R. Rolinato before the 1917 Revolution. Between 1920 and 1935 he published in Ukraine eight collections of poetry, several long poems (including a collection of six of them in 1930), and several collections of short stories, most notably Zapysky konsula (Notes of a Consul, 2 vols, 1934). His political articles appeared in the Soviet press and in the Winnipeg paper Ukrains'ki robitnychi visti. He also wrote several articles about the history of the CP(B)U and the revolutionary period in Ukraine and translated a large anthology of 33 American poets into Ukrainian (1928). He was posthumously 'rehabilitated' after Stalin's death, and books of his selected works (1958, 1962, 1967) and a volume of memoirs about him (1971) were published in Kiev.

I. Koshelivets, R. Senkus

Kulyk, Vasyl, b 1830 in Kovalivka, Poltava gubernia, d 1870 in Kovalivka. Poet. Inspired by populist ideas, he spent several years wandering through Southern Ukraine studying the life and the lore of the common people. After settling in Poltava, he began writing poems about contemporary peasant life, Romantic ballads, fables, and sketches, selections of which were subsequently published in Osnova. A collection of his poetry, Pysannia Vasylia Kulyka (The Writings of Vasyl Kulyk, 1894), appeared posthumously in Lviv.

Kulyk, Yakiv (Kulik, Jakub), b 1 April 1783 in Lviv, d 28 February 1863 in Prague. Mathematician. He graduated from the law and philosophy faculties at Lviv University (1814), then taught at a gymnasium before completing his PH D in 1822. He was a professor of mathematics at Charles University in Prague from 1826, and a member of the Royal Czech Scientific Society and its head from 1835. He wrote a number of mathematics and mechanics texts and edited numerous tables; his table of divisors of integers consists of 4,212 pages. After the destruction of the Lviv University library by fire in 1848, he donated 1,000 books to it. His most important works are Lehrbuch der höheren Mechanik (1846) and Der tausend-jährige Kalender.

Kulykivka. II-12. Town smt (1983 pop 5,300) and raion center in Chernihiv oblast. It was founded as a Cossack village in Nizhen regiment in the mid-17th century.

Kulynych, Yaroslav [Kulynych, Jaroslav], b 21 March 1926 near Ternopil, Galicia. Film director and producer. After 1945 he worked in the UFA film studio in Munich before immigrating to Australia, where he studied at the University of Adelaide. Since 1961 he has lived in the United States. Kulynych produced and directed several documentary films dealing with Ukrainian life in the West, including two films about the Ukrainian community in Australia, the opening of the monument to T. Shevchenko in Washington, the Plast Ukrainian Youth Association, the Ukrainian Youth Association, and the World Congress of Free Ukrainians. He has also made several films on the life of Cardinal Y. Slipyn and on the Ukrainian Catholic church.

Kulytsky, Mykola [Kulyc'kyj], b 1903 in Hlyniany, Peremyshliany county, Galicia, d 26 May 1970 in Chicago. Cartographer and geographer. He studied at Cracow University and in the 1930s and 1940s helped V. *Kubijovych prepare various maps and his atlas of Ukraine. During the Second World War he directed the cartography and statistics office of the Ukrainian Central Committee in Cracow and Lviv. A postwar refugee, he received a PH D from the Ukrainian Free University and was a full member of the Shevchenko Scientific Society. He emigrated to Chicago in the early 1950s.

Kulzhenko, Vasyl [Kul'zenko, Vasyl'], b 11 February 1865 in Kiev, d 7 September 1934 in Kiev. Publisher and printer. He studied at the Leipzig Polygraphic Academy before taking over control of his father's printing company in Kiev. In 1903 he established and began lecturing at the Kiev Graphic Arts and Printing School and from 1908 to 1914 he published the journal Iskusstvo i pechatnoe delo (later renamed **Iskusstvo v Iuzhnoi Rossii*). From 1924 to 1928 he lectured at the Kiev Art Institute. Kulzhenko's firm printed the currency, official documents, and postage stamps issued by the UNR and Hetman government between 1917 and 1919.

Kulzhynsky, Ivan [Kul'zhyns'kyj], b 26 April 1803 in Hlukhiv, Chernihiv gubernia, d 4 April 1884 in Nizhen. Literary scholar, ethnographer, and educator. A graduate of the Chernihiv seminary (1823), he taught at Chernihiv (1823–5), Nizhen (1825–9), and Kharkiv gymnasiums (1829–32), lectured at Kharkiv University on folk oral literature, directed the Lutske (1832–9) and Nemyriv (1839–41) gymnasiums, was an inspector of the Nizhen Lyceum (1841–3), and directed schools in Transcaucasia (1843–7). His Russian historical, literary, and ethnographic articles, poetry, short stories, plays, and novellas appeared from 1825 in various periodicals, including Ukrainskii vestnik and Ukrainskii zhurnal in Kharkiv. Published separately were his history of the world (3 vols, 1859), a history of Poland (1864), narratives on Russian history (1863), and several other works. His works dealing with Ukraine include the novella 'Tereshko,' the drama 'Kochubei' (1841), the novel Fediusha Motovil'skii (1833), and the polemical works O zarozhdaiushcheisia tak nazyvaemoi malorossiiskoi literature (On Nascent So-Called Little Russian Literature, 1863) and Novyi vzgliad na khokhlomanstvo (A New Look at Khokhol-Mania, 1864). His study of Ukrainian folk customs, rituals, songs, poems, and anecdotes, Malorossiiskaia derevnia (The Little Russian Village, 1827), influenced the early works of the writers N. Gogol and Ye. Hrebinka, who were his pupils at the Nizhen Gymnasium. A Russified obscurantist and supporter of tsarist centralism, Kulzhynsky was condescendingly critical of T. Shevchenko, Marko Vovchok, P. Kulish, and others who wrote in Ukrainian, which he viewed as a quaint but spoiled dialect of Russian.

Kumanchenko, Polina [Kumanchenko], b 21 October 1910 in Muzykivka, Kherson county, Kherson gubernia. Actress specializing in lyrical roles. Graduating from the studio of the Mykolaiv Russian Drama Theater in 1928, she worked with the Mykolaiv Ukrainian Workers' and Peasants' Touring Theater (1929–31), the Kharkiv Theater of Working Youth (1932–7), the Kharkiv Ukrainian Drama Theater (1937–61), and the Kiev Ukrainian Drama Theater. Her repertoire includes roles such as Yelyzaveta in I. Kocherha's Iaroslav Mudryi (Yaroslav the Wise), Kharytyna in I. Tobilevych's Naimychka (The Servant Girl), Sylvette in E. Rostand's Les romanesques, and Inés in P. Calderón's No hay burlas con el amor. She has also appeared in films. Yu. Martych wrote a monograph about her career in 1964.

Kumans. See Cumans.

Kumeiky, Battle of 1637. Battle between Ukrainian peasant and Cossack forces and the army of the Polish nobility, which ended the Pavliuk rebellion. In the spring of 1637 P. *Pavliuk led an insurrection of the Ukrainian peasantry in Right-Bank Ukraine against the Polish lords. The uprising spread to a substantial portion of Left-Bank Ukraine. On 16 December 1637 near Kumeiky (now in Cherkasy oblast) Polish forces led by Hetman M. Potocki engaged the Ukrainians. On 20 December the Polish army surrounded the insurgents at Borovytsia. Unable to capture the town, Potocki proposed negotiations, to which the Cossack starshyna agreed. During the talks, Pavliuk and the other leaders of the rebellion were taken prisoner, sent to Warsaw, and executed. Despite the defeat at Kumeiky, another rebellion arose in the spring of 1638 (see Ya. *Ostriany).

Kuna. Monetary unit in Kievan Rus'. The word kuna is derived from the word for a marten pelt. Pelts were used as money before the introduction of metallic currency. When foreign silver coins (Arabic dirhams and Roman denarii) came into Rus', they were referred to as kuny. The value of kuny differed in various regions and changed over time. In the 9th–11th centuries, 25 kuny were equal to one **hryvnia*, while in the 12th–13th centuries 50 kuny equaled a hryvnia. The term kuny in the general sense of money was used in Rus' throughout the 10th–14th centuries; it was only later that the word was replaced by the denigi and serebro.

Kundiiev, Yurii [Kundijev, Jurij], b 2 October 1927 in Troiany, Kirovohrad okruha. Public-health physician; since 1979 full member of the AN URSR. Upon graduating from the Kiev Medical Institute (1951), he joined the staff of the Kiev Scientific Research Institute of Labor Hygiene and Occupational Illnesses of Ukraine's Ministry of Public Health. By 1955 he was promoted to a laboratory head and by 1964 to director of the institute. Most of his research deals with pesticide toxicology and the safety of farm workers.

Kundriucha River [Kundruča]. River in Voroshylvohrad and Rostov oblasts in the RSFSR. A right-bank tributary of the Donets, it is 244 km long and has a basin area of 2,320 sq km. The Kundriucha originates in the Donets Ridge and is fed primarily by melting snow.

Kunduk Estuary. See Sasyk Estuary.

Kunduk River. See Kohylnyk River.

Kundzich, Oleksii [Kundzič, Oleksij], b 22 April 1904 in Pavlivka, Podilia gubernia, d 20 June 1964 in Kiev. Writer, literary critic, and translator. In the 1920s he belonged to the literary organizations **Molodniak* and the All-Ukrainian Association of Proletarian Writers. His first story collection, Chervonoii dorohoiu (Along the Red Road, 1926), was followed by 16 others, including the large collections Noveli (Novellas, 1929) and Chervonoii dorohoiu (1929, 1931). He also wrote the novels Okupant (The Occupier, 1930), De facto (1930), and Rodychi (Relatives, 1936) and translated works by M. Lermontov, L. Tolstoy, and N. Leskov into Ukrainian. Books of his selected prose (1932, 1938, 1951) and selected literary criticism and articles about translation (1956, 1966, 1973) have been published.

Kuntsevych, Vsevolod [Kuncevyč], b 15 March 1929 in Kiev. Specialist in automatic control systems. A graduate of the Kiev Polytechnical Institute, since 1966 he has chaired the Department of Digital Control Systems at the AN URSR Institute of Cybernetics. His main publications deal with the analysis and synthesis of non-linear control systems, including digital control systems.

Kuntsevych, Yosafat [Kuncevyč, Josafat] (secular name: Ivan), b ca 1580 in Volodymyr-Volynskiy, Volhynia, d 12 November 1623 in Vitsebsk, Belorussia. Uniate archbishop and polemicist; Catholic saint. Kuntsevych entered the Holy Trinity Basilian Monastery in Vilnius in 1604. Ordained in 1609, he became the archimandrite of the monastery in 1614. He was consecrated bishop of Polatsk in 1617 and elevated to archbishop in 1618. Kuntsevych raised the educational and moral standards of the Uniate clergy in his eparchy, implementing rigorous new rules for their conduct, and together with Y. Rutsky, initiated a major reform of the Basilian order. He was one of the most active propagators of Catholicism and the Church Union among the Orthodox population. Supported by the Polish king and the Vatican, Kuntsevych took over many Orthodox churches and transformed them into Uniate ones. The re-establishment of the Orthodox hierarchy in 1620 and the appointment of a new Orthodox bishop for Polatsk resulted in intensified religious conflict in the region. The forced implementation of Catholicism had antagonized the Orthodox archbishop M. Smotrytsky and many lay people, especially the burghers, and Kuntsevych was killed by enraged Orthodox followers on 12 November 1623. He was beatified by the Vatican on 16 May 1642. His canonization by Pope Pius IX took place on 29 June 1867 and he became the first eastern-rite saint in the Catholic church. Saint Josaphat's remains were moved from Biala Podlaska to St Barbara's Church in Vienna in 1917, and since 1946 they have been on display at St Peter's Basilica in Rome. Kuntsevych wrote many polemical articles in Ukrainian and Polish; they, and many of his sermons, have been reprinted several times in various biographies and collections.

Saint Yosafat Kuntsevych

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Susza, I. Cursus vitae et certamen martyrii B. Josaphat Kuncevicii (Rome 1665, Paris 1865)
 Guépin, A. Un apôtre de l'Union des Eglises au XVII siècle: Saint Josaphat et l'Eglise Gréco-slave en Pologne et en Russie, 2 vols (Paris 1897–8)
 Slipyi, I. (ed). Sviatyi sviashchenomuchenyk Iosafat Kuntsevych: Materialy i rozvidky (Lviv 1925)
 Gerych, Iu. Ohliad bohoslous'ko-literaturnoi diialnosti sv. Iosafata Kuntsevycha (Toronto 1960)
 Solovii, M.; Velykyi, A. Sviatyi Iosafat Kuntsevych: Ioho zhyttia i doba (Toronto 1967)

Kunysky, Dionysii [Kunyc'kyj, Dionysij] (secular name: Kyrylo), b 1781, d 16 April 1836. Orthodox church figure. He was rector of a Kiev seminary and then professor and rector (1827–8) at the Kiev Theological Academy. From 1828 to 1835 he was the bishop of Chyhyryn and vicar of Kiev metropolity.

Kunysky, Leontii [Kunyc'kyj, Leontij], b 20 June 1876 in Orikhovets, Skalat county, Galicia, d 25 September 1961 in Mostysky, Lviv oblast. Ukrainian Catholic priest, and church and political figure. He studied in Lviv, Vienna, Rome, and Innsbruck (D TH 1904). Ordained in 1901, he ministered to the Galician immigrants in North America until 1914. After his return to Lviv (1917), in an unusual act, the government of the Western Ukrainian National Republic appointed him canon of Lviv eparchy (1918). He was also pastor of Saint George's Cathedral in Lviv and taught theology at the Lviv Theological Academy. In the 1920s he was a prominent member of the *Ukrainian Labor party and published its journals Nova rada (1919–20) and Nash prapor (1923–4). A founding member of the *Ukrainian National Democratic Alliance and a member of its Central Committee, he represented that party as a deputy to the Polish Sejm (1928–30). In 1937–9 he headed an aid committee for Ukrainian political prisoners. He was arrested by the NKVD and sent to the GULAG until 1956.

Kunytsky, Stepan [Kunyc'kyj], b and d ? Hetman of the *registered Cossacks in 1683. Kunytsky was a noble in the Cossack starshyna during the rule of Hetman P. Doroshenko (1672). He was appointed hetman of Right-Bank Ukraine by the Polish king Jan III Sobieski, with the object of reorganizing the Cossack forces for Sobieski's struggle against the Turks. Kunytsky had some success in attracting settlers to Right-Bank Ukraine and reviving such Cossack cities as Bohuslav, Moshny, and Korsun, which were ruined by the internecine struggle of hetmans Doroshenko and Yu. Khmelnytsky. At the end of 1683 Sobieski attacked the Turks near Vienna. To create a diversion, Kunytsky led a Cossack campaign against Turkish-held Moldavia. However, the Turks defeated Kunytsky, and he fled to Ukraine. The Cossacks rebelled against Kunytsky and killed him in Mohyliv.

Kupala, Yanka (pen name of Ivan Lutsevich), b 7 July 1882 in Viazynka, Vileika county, Belorussia, d 28 June 1942 in Moscow. Noted Belorussian poet; full member of the Academy of Sciences of the Belorussian SSR and of the AN URSR from 1929. His prerevolutionary poetry focused on the social and national oppression of the Belorussians. The influence of T. Shevchenko on his poetry is evident in the poem 'Bandaroŭna' (The Cooper's Daughter, 1913). After the 1917 Revolution, particularly in the 1930s, he wrote in the socialist-realist style. He also translated the Rus' epic Slovo o polku Ihorevi (The Tale of Ihor's Campaign) and over a dozen of Shevchenko's long poems into Belorussian. He was arrested in 1930 and unsuccessfully attempted suicide; he tried again and succeeded. Books of his selected poetry were translated into Ukrainian and published in 1937, 1947, 1953, and 1967.

Kupalo festival (also Kupailo, Ivan Kupalo). A Slavic celebration of ancient pagan origin marking the end of the summer solstice and the beginning of the harvest (midsummer). In the western Ukrainian Lemko and Prešov regions it was called Sobotka. In Christian times, the church tried to suppress the tradition, substituting it with the feast day of the Nativity of St John the Baptist (24 June), but it remained firmly part of folk ritual as the festival of Ivan (John, from St John) Kupalo.

Kupalo was believed to be the god of love and of the harvest and the personification of the earth's fertility. According to popular belief, 'Kupalo eve' ('Ivan's eve') was the only time of the year when the earth revealed its secrets and made ferns bloom to mark places where its treasures were buried, and the only time when trees spoke and even moved and when witches gathered. It was also the only time of the year when free love received popular sanction. On the eve unmarried young men and women gathered outside the village in the forest or near a stream or pond. There they built 'Kupalo fires' – a relic of the pagan custom of bringing sacrifice – around which they performed ritual dances (see **Khorovod*) and sang ritual, often erotic, songs. They leaped over the fires, bathed in the water (an act of purification), and played physical games with obviously sexual connotations. The fires were also used to burn herbs gathered in the previous year and various items of no further use, particularly those that had been blessed with holy water and could therefore not be discarded by normal means. The fires were never extinguished, but were always allowed to smolder out. On the eve female participants wore scented herbs and flowers to attract the males and adorned their hair with garlands of freshly cut flowers. Later they divined their fates according to what happened to the garlands which they had sent floating on the water.

An integral part of the festivities was a supper of eggs, **varenyky*, and liquor. An anthropomorphic effigy of Kupalo or a decorated sapling representing him was burned, drowned, buried, or torn apart and scattered in the fields as a symbol of the impending decline in the earth's fertility. In some regions Kupalo was represented by a wheel laced with dry grasses or straw, which was set on fire and rolled down a hill as a symbol of the declining life-giving powers of the sun after the solstice. The representation of Kupalo was frequently identified with Kostrub, the pagan god of winter, or with Marena, the goddess of spring.

Magical properties were ascribed to the plants and herbs gathered on Kupalo eve. It was believed that such herbs could protect one from the evil forces of nature and even cure illnesses in humans and animals. Local priests seemingly sanctioned this belief by blessing the herbs in church on the day of the Nativity of St John the Baptist. On the morning of that day girls washed themselves with the dew that had fallen on Kupalo eve, which they collected in a bowl left outside overnight, and ran barefoot through the bedewed fields in the belief that doing so would improve their opportunity to get married. The sick would roll naked in the dewy meadows in the belief that this action would help them get well, and farmers would run their cattle through such meadows in the belief that this routine would prevent disease.

Written references to the festival date from the 11th century. Its origins are much earlier, however. On a 4th-century calendar pot found in the middle-Dnieper region once inhabited by the Slavic Polianians, for example, the time of the festival was already marked by two crosses. The term 'Kupalo' was itself first mentioned in the Hypatian Chronicle under the year 1262. In medieval and early-modern church documents – eg, 'The Sermon of St John Chrysostom' and the 'Epistle of Hegumen Pamphil' of Pskov Monastery (1515) – there are fairly detailed descriptions of the lascivious festivities. Despite the efforts of the church and secular rulers – eg, Hetman I. Skoropadsky issued a decree in 1719 categorically forbidding it, and many similar decrees were later issued – the tradition proved too old and too well rooted to disappear. By the late 19th century most of the pagan beliefs connected with the Kupalo rituals had vanished, but the festival was still widely celebrated to mark the beginning of the harvest (see *Harvest rituals). As a theme it has figured in the writings of N. Gogol, M. Starytsky, Lesia Ukrainka, O. Kobylanska, and M. Kotsiubynsky, in the music of M. Lysenko and A. Vakhnianyn, in the paintings of O. Kulchytska, and in an early film by D. Sakhnenko.

In postwar Soviet Ukraine, efforts have been made to revive a Sovietized, politicized version of Kupalo rituals. In 1958 the Supreme Soviet of the Ukrainian SSR designated the last Sunday in June the 'Day of Soviet Youth' and recommended that it become a youth holiday throughout the USSR. Attempts at incorporating traditional rituals into the celebration of this day have not been widely accepted, however, because of the contrived nature of the Soviet Kupalo festival.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Potebnia, A. O kupal'skikh ogniakh i srodnykh s nimi predstavleniakh (Moscow 1867; Kharkiv 1914)
 Ukraïna, L. 'Kupala na Volyni,' Zhytie i slovo, 1 (Lviv 1894)
 Dei, O. (ed). Ihry ta pisni (Kiev 1963)
 Shmaida, M. Sobitky (Prešov 1963)
 Dei, O. (ed). Kupal's'ki pisni (Kiev 1970)
Sviata ta obriady Radians'koi Ukraïny (Kiev 1971)

M. Hnatiukivsky

Kupchanko, Hryhorii [Kupčanko, Hryhorij], b 1849 in Berehomet, Bukovyna, d 10 May 1902. Ethnographer, publicist, and Russophile community leader in Bukovyna. He began collecting Ukrainian folklore in the 1870s and published it in the Bukovynian press, mostly in Bukovynskaia zoria. In the 1880s and 1890s he edited the Russophile journals Russkaia pravda, Prosveshchenie, and Venochok in Vienna. His major ethnographic works, about Bukovynian folk songs and the history and geography of Bukovyna, appeared in volume 2 of Zapiski of the Southwestern Branch of the Imperial Russian Geographic Society in 1875 and the book Nasha rodina (Our Homeland, 1896).

Roman Kupchynsky

Kupchynsky, Roman [Kupčyns'kyj] (pseud: Halaktion Chipka), b 24 September 1894 in Rozhadiv, Zboriv county, Galicia, d 10 June 1976 in New York. Writer, journalist, and feuilletonist. A former officer in the Ukrainian Sich Riflemen and the Ukrainian Galician Army, he cofounded in 1922, the neosymbolist group Mytusa, consisting mostly of poets who were army veterans. In Lviv, he worked for the newspaper Dilo as a feuilletonist (1924–39) and for such journals as Chervona Kalyna, and headed (1933–9) the Society of Writers and Journalists. He emigrated to the United States in 1949 and contributed to various periodicals, particularly the newspaper Svoboda. He is the author of two dramatic narrative poems, Velykyi den' (The Great Day, 1921) and Skoropad (Fast-fall, 1965). His prose consists of the trilogy Zametil' (The Snowstorm, 1928–33) and two collections of stories: U zvorakh Beskydu (In the Valleys of the Beskyds, 1933) and My-slyvs'ki opovidannia (Hunting Stories, 1964). He is most noted for the 80-odd songs he has composed; and some of them, like 'Bozhe Velykyi, Tvorche vsesvitu' (O Great God, Creator of the Universe), have attained wide popularity. A collection of his songs, My idemo v bii (We Go into Battle), was published posthumously in 1977. A collection of his poems and prose, Nevyspivani pisni (Unsung Songs), appeared in 1983.

D.H. Struk

Kupianka or Kupiansk [Kup'janka or Kup'jans'k]. iv-18. City (1977 pop 58,000) and raion center under Kharkiv oblast jurisdiction, situated on the Oskil River. It was founded in 1655 as a sloboda (self-governing settlement) and was a company town in the Kharkiv and Izium regiments of Slobidska Ukraine (1685–1765). It became a county town in Voronezh vicegerency in 1780, in Slobidska Ukraine gubernia (1797), and in Kharkiv gubernia (1835). Since the late 19th century Kupianka has been an important railway junction: five lines intersect there and at the adjacent town of Kupianka-Vuzlova. The city has an agricultural-machinery factory and food-processing industry. There is a historical-regional museum and an automobile-transportation tekhnikum.

Kupianka Vuzlova [Kup'janka Vuzlova]. iv-18. Town smt (1980 pop 13,000) in Kharkiv oblast, situated on the Oskil River. Founded in 1895, the town is now an important railroad junction. Railway depots and a building-materials plant are located there.

Kupynos, Voitykh. See Kapynos, Voitykh.

Kurakh, Ivan [Kurax], b 1909 in Galicia, d 15 January 1968 in Zurich. Impressionist painter. Having studied art in Warsaw, Rome, and Milan, in 1939 he became an assistant and later a lecturer at the Brera Academy in Milan. During the war he fought with the Italian Legion on the Soviet front, and his experience had a determining impact on his artistic work. Restricting himself to gray and brown tones and using only the simplest technical devices, he created a mood of profound sorrow. From 1956 he had a studio in New York and Zurich, and exhibited his work in over a hundred shows in the United States and Europe.

Kurakhivka [Kuraxivka]. v-18, DB III-2. Town smt (1980 pop 6,300) in Donetske oblast, situated on the Vovcha River in the western Donbas and administered by the city soviet of Selydove. Founded as a mining settlement in 1924, it has two coal mines and a coal-enrichment plant.

Kurakhove [Kuraxove]. vi-18, DB IV-2. City (1970 pop 15,600) in Marinka raion, Donetske oblast. It arose as a workers' settlement during the construction of the Kurakhivka Regional Electric Station and Reservoir on the Vovcha River, which began in 1936. Construction was completed in 1952, and the city was incorporated in 1956. Boilers, reinforced-concrete panels, and food products are made there.

Kuraszkiewicz, Władysław, b 22 February 1905 in Włodawa, Poland. Polish linguist and philologist. A graduate of Lviv University and the Jagellonian University in Cracow (1934), he was a professor at Poznań University from 1950 to 1975. The author of several important studies on the history of Polish and East-Slavic languages, his contributions to Ukrainian linguistics include the monograph Gramoty halicko-wołyńskie XIV–XV wieku: Studium językowe (Galician-Volhynian Charters of the 14th and 15th Centuries: A Linguistic Study, 1934) and numerous studies of Podlachian, Kholm, and Carpathian dialects. Based on his own field research, these latter studies combine precise and detailed observations with polemics against V. Hantsov's, O. Kurylo's, and later G. Shevelov's conceptions of the aboriginal distinctions between northern and southern Proto-Ukrainian dialects. They have been summarized in his books Zarys dialektologii wschodnio-słowiańskiej (Outline of East-Slavic Dialectology, 1954) and Ruthenica (1985).

Les Kurbas

Kurbas, Les (Oleksander), b 25 February 1887 in Sambir, Galicia, d 15 October 1942? An outstanding organizer and director of Ukrainian avant-garde theater, actor, and pedagogue; the son of the Galician actor S. *Yanovych (stage name: Kurbas). In 1907–8 he studied philosophy at the University of Vienna and drama with the famous Viennese actor J. Kainz. Graduating from Lviv University in 1910, he worked as an actor in the troupes of the *Hutsul Theater (1911–12) and Ruska (*Ukrainska) Besida theater (1912–14), founded and directed the *Ternopil Teatralni Vechory theater (1915–16), and worked at the *Sadovsky Theater in Kiev (1916–17).

After the February Revolution of 1917 Kurbas reorganized an actors' studio he had founded in 1916 into the *Molodyi Teatr theater (1917–19) in Kiev and became the secretary of the journal **Teatral'ni visti*. With the Molodyi Teatr productions, which included the first production in Ukrainian of a classical Greek play, Sophocles' Oedipus Rex, Kurbas revolutionized Ukrainian theater, elevating it in style, esthetics, and repertoire from the provincial to the level of modern Western European theater. He placed much emphasis on his actors' intellectual and technical training, using in the latter the systems of gestures developed by F. Delsarte and E. Jaques-Dalcroze, and on architectural design, using the talents of A. *Petrytsky and M. *Boichuk. In 1919 Molodyi Teatr was forced by the Bolshevik authorities to merge with the *State Drama Theater, and Kurbas became the co-director, with O. Zaharov, of the new Shevchenko Theater. There he dramatized, to great acclaim, T. Shevchenko's epic Haidamaky (The Haidamakas); this monumental production, with music by R. Glière, became the standard by which all Ukrainian theatrical productions were measured in the 1920s. In 1920 Kurbas formed the *Kyidramte theater, which toured Bila Tserkva, Uman, and Kharkiv. He then gave up acting to concentrate solely on teaching and directing. In 1922, having become convinced that theater was a powerful political instrument, he founded the *Berezil artistic association in Kiev.

It was at the Berezil theater in both Kiev (1922–6) and Kharkiv (1926–33) that Kurbas's creative genius became most evident. There he perfected his rigorous system for the intellectual and technical training of actors, encouraging them to think independently. One of the basic principles of his system was that the stage image, although it is created by the actor's emotions, nerves, voice, gestures, and temperament, must be objectivized and remain separate from the actor's frame of mind and personal experiences. The image created is successful only when it can be presented in a consistent, concrete form. With its over 300 actors and staff members, 6 actors' studios, directors' lab, design studio, theater museum, and 10 committees, the Berezil association became the focal point of theater in Ukraine. In 1933, Kurbas, his ideas, and his dynamic, innovative, and often controversial productions were condemned as nationalist, rationalist, formalist, and counterrevolutionary. In October he was dismissed as the director of Berezil, and all of his productions were banned from the Soviet Ukrainian repertoire. He moved to Moscow, where he was arrested in December and imprisoned on the Solovets Islands. He was last heard from in 1937.

Kurbas left his mark in the history of Ukrainian theater as an innovative organizer and teacher, and daring experimental director. At Molodyi Teatr he introduced a modern European repertoire and style of acting. At Berezil he broke down the old forms of Ukrainian theater and, after a long period of searching and enthusiastic experimentation with German Expressionist theater and the theories of Constructivism, succeeded, in his productions of M. *Kulish's plays, in creating a unique, Ukrainian Expressionist theater. With his production of G. Kaiser's Gas in 1922, Kurbas broke completely with traditional Ukrainian realistic, ethnographic theater to present spectacles that forced the audience to think instead of simply watching passively. This intellectualism was combined with a brilliant synthesis of rhythm, movement, and avant-garde theatrical and visual devices, including montage. He managed to concentrate around himself the best actors, directors, set designers (eg, V. Meller), and playwrights (eg, M. Kulish) in Ukraine. At the Berezil studios and the Kiev (1922–6) and Kharkiv (1926–33) music and drama institutes, he trained an entire generation of Ukrainian actors and directors, including D. Antonovych, B. Balaban, Ye. Bondarenko, A. Buchma, his wife V. Chystiakova, S. Fedortseva, O. Dobrovolska, L. Dubovych, L. Hakkebush, Y. Hirniak, D. Kozachkovsky, L. Krynytska, M. Krushelnytsky, I. Ma-rianyenko, D. Miliutenko, F. Radchuk, P. Samiilenko, V. Serdiuk, V. Skliarenko, N. Tytarenko, B. Tiahno, N. Uzhvii, and V. Vasylo. His theoretical and polemical articles about theater appeared in journals such as Teatral'ni visti, Nove mystetstvo, Muzahet, Hlobus, Vaplite, Radians'kyi teatr, and Berezil's Barykady teatru (1923–4), which he edited. He was posthumously 'rehabilitated' after Stalin's death.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Hirniak, Y. 'Birth and Death of the Modern Ukrainian Theater,' in Soviet Theaters 1917–1941: A Collection of Articles, ed M. Bradshaw (New York 1954)
 Vasylo, V. (ed). Les' Kurbas: Spohady suchasnykiv (Kiev 1969)
 Smolych, Iu. Pro teatr (Kiev 1977)
 Hirniak, I. Spomyny (New York 1982)
 Boboshko, Iu. Rezhyser Les' Kurbas (Kiev 1987)

V. Haievsky

Kurdiumov, Georgii [Kurdjumov, Georgij], b 14 February 1902 in Rylysk, Kursk gubernia. Metal physicist; full member of the AN URSS since 1939 and the USSR Academy of Sciences since 1953. A graduate of the Leningrad Polytechnical Institute (1926), from 1932 to 1944 he taught at Dnipropetrovske University and worked in the Dnipropetrovske Physico-Technical Institute. When this institute was expanded into the Scientific-Research Institute of Metal and Materials Science he became its director (1945–78). Kurdiumov also founded and directed (1945–51) the AN URSS Laboratory of Metal Physics in Kiev (later the Institute of Metal Physics), which under his leadership became one of the leading metal physics research centers in the USSR, and was director of the Institute of Solid State Physics of the USSR Academy of Sciences (1962–73). His scientific accomplishments include the determination of the structure and properties of martensite, the hard constituent of quenched steel. His work has played an important role in the development of Soviet metallurgy.

Anatol Kurdydyk

William Kurelek: Self-Portrait (watercolor, 1957)

Kurdydyk, Anatol, b 24 July 1905 in Pidhaitsi, Galicia. Journalist and writer. Kurdydyk completed his law studies at Lviv University in 1928. He coedited the Peremysyl newspaper Ukrains'kyi holos (1928–9), then worked as a writer with Nedilia (1929–34) and Dilo (1934–9) in Lviv. During the Second World War he was a correspondent for Krakovs'ki visti in Vienna. Settling in Canada after the war, he founded and edited Vil'ne slovo (1956–9) in Toronto and then edited Novyi shliakh (1959–62) and Postup (1962–70) in Winnipeg. He was the organizer and head of the literary group '12' in Lviv and debuted as a writer in 1924. His collection of legends, lasni vohni (Bright Fires), appeared in Lviv in 1929; it was followed by a collection of stories, Taina odnogo znaiomoho (The Secret of an Acquaintance, 1935); the novelette Try koroli i dama (Three Kings and a Queen, 1943); and several volumes of publicistic prose. Together with L. Lisevych he wrote the operetta Zalizna ostroha (The Iron Stirrup, 1934) and the comedy Oi, ta Prosvita (Oh, That Prosvita, 1938). He edited the biobibliographic anthology Knyha myststiv (A Book of Artists, 1954) as well as T. Kobzei's memoirs (2 vols, 1972, 1974). His poems, articles, novellas, and stories were published in various newspapers in the interwar period.

D.H. Struk

Kurdydyk, Yaroslav (pseud: Yaroslav Petrovych, Slavko, Maksym Bul'ka), b 6 March 1907 in Pidhaitsi, Galicia. Journalist and writer; brother of A. *Kurdydyk. Having studied journalism at the Free Polish University in Warsaw (1929–31) and law at the University of Vienna (1932–3), he belonged to the literary group '12' in Lviv and specialized in writing poetry and prose miniatures. He contributed literary pieces to the Lviv dailies Chas (1933–4) and Novyi chas (1934–9), and humorous sketches to Zyz. Emigrating to the United States after the war, he contributed articles on military and political affairs to Svoboda and Vyzvol'nyi shliakh, and coedited the veterans' monthly Peremoha. He wrote two collections of prose miniatures, Dva kulemety (Two Machine Guns, 1954) and Etiudy, Miniatury (Etudes, Miniatures, 1955), and a collection of war poetry, Sertse i zbroia (Heart and Arms, 1976).

Kurelek, William [Kurylyk, Vasyli'], b 3 March 1927 in Whitford, Alberta, d 3 November 1977 in Toronto. Painter. Son of a Ukrainian immigrant farmer, he was raised in rural Manitoba, attended high school and university in Winnipeg, and then studied art at the Ontario College of Art and the Instituto Allende in Mexico. During his stay in England (1952–9), he was hospitalized for chronic depression and found solace in the Roman Catholic faith. After visiting the Holy Land (1959, 1964), he depicted the Passion of Christ in a series of 160 paintings, which he considered to be his most important work. His most popular works, however, were paintings of life on the prairies. He created a series of intricate works depicting various ethnic groups of Canada, among them Ukrainians, Poles, Irish, Jews, and Eskimos. His personal and artistic development is outlined in his candid autobiography Someone with Me (1973; rev edn, 1980). At least 17 volumes of his plates and illustrations have been published, including the award winning A Prairie Boy's Winter (1973), Lumberjack (1974), The Passion of Christ (1975), and Fox Mykyta (1978). Kurelek has been the subject of several films and a biography by P. Morley (1986). His realistic and symbolic works convey through vivid colors and simple lines an intense, personal vision. Leading art critics called him the Breughel of the North. His works are on display in 15 museums and galleries in North America, including the Museum of Modern Art in New York, the National Gallery of Canada in Ottawa, the Art Gallery of Ontario in Toronto, and the Kurelek Art Gallery in Niagara Falls, Ontario.

William Kurelek: Manitoba Party (National Gallery of Canada)

S. Hordynsky

Kurensky, Maksym [Kurens'kyj], b 8 April 1895 in Atiusha, Krolevets county, Chernihiv gubernia, d 4 September 1940. Noted mathematician. He graduated from Kiev University in 1918, then worked at various institutions at the VUAN (1920–32) and as a professor at Kiev University (1926–32). He also directed seminars in differential equations with Yu. Pfeiffer. In 1933–7 he taught in Leningrad before becoming professor of mathematical analysis at the Karelo-Finnish Pedagogical Institute (1938). Kurensky's principal works include two volumes on differential equations and research papers on partial differential equations and mathematical physics. Many of his publications appeared in the journal Zapysky Fizychno-matematychnoho viddilu VUAN (1926–31) and in Western European mathematics journals.

Kurhan or kurgan. A term from the Turkic word for mound or stronghold, used in Eastern Europe for a tumulus or barrow, that is, an earthen or stone mound built over a grave. Kurhans first appeared in the steppes north of the Caspian and Black seas and in Subcaucasia and Transcaucasia during the upper Neolithic and the Eneolithic ages (3rd century BC). They vary in height from 3 to over 20 m, and in diameter from 3 to over 100 m. The oldest kurhans in present-day Ukraine date from the early period of the Pit-Grave culture. The most famous ones are the so-called Scythian royal kurhans. Sometimes the mound was encircled by a cromlech and topped by a *stone baba, an anthropomorphic statue. The dead were interred or cremated and deposited together with their worldly goods and valuables in timber graves, vaults, catacombs, or pits. Kurhans were then thrown up over them. They usually occur in groups, indicating that clans and tribes had designated burial grounds. Until the 18th century the Cossacks also buried their dead beneath them. At one time, kurhans were used as military lookouts.

Kurin [Kurin']. A type of barracks at the Zaporozhian Sich as well as a military and administrative unit consisting of several companies. There were 38 kurins at the Zaporozhian Sich, each commanded by an elected otaman, who had both administrative and military functions. In the Ukrainian armies of the 20th century a kurin was a battalion-size unit consisting usually of two or more companies.

Petro Kurinny

Kurinny, Petro [Kurinyj], b 1 May 1894 in Uman, Kiev gubernia, d 25 November 1972 in Munich. Historian, archeologist, ethnographer, and art scholar. He served as academic secretary of the All-Ukrainian Archeological Committee (VUAK), director of the All-Ukrainian Museum Quarter at the Kievan Cave Monastery, and senior research associate of the Institute of Archeology of the Academy of Sciences of the Ukrainian SSR. He excavated sites of the Trypilia and Bilohrudivka cultures, and of the medieval period in Kiev. He was a cofounder of museums in Uman and Berdychiv, and of the All-Ukrainian Museum Quarter in Kiev. In 1943 he emigrated to Germany, where he served as professor at the Ukrainian Free University, president of the Ukrainian Academy of Arts and Sciences in Germany, and editor of Ukraïns'kyi zbirnyk of the Institute for the Study of the USSR in Munich. He was a full member of the Shevchenko Scientific Society. He is the author of articles based on his archeological research and Narysy z istorii Ukraïns'koï arkheolohii (Studies on the History of Ukrainian Archeology, 1947).

Khrystyna Kuritsa-Tsimmernann: Flower Ornament (Gobelin)

Kuritsa-Tsimmernann, Khrystyna [Kurica-Cimmernann, Xrystyna] (Kurica-Zimmernann, Chrystyna), b 1937 in Nastasiv, Ternopil region, Galicia. Painter and tapestry designer. Emigrating to Austria with her parents in 1943, she graduated from the Vienna Academy of Applied Art (1963) and continued to study sculpture and ceramics with H. Leinfellner (1963–7) and tapestry weaving with Rader-Souleik (1974). Her paintings, including works such as My Road, The Sun is Rising, Recollection of Ukraine, Tree of My Life, and Recollection of Calabria, are marked by a striking use of color and semiabstract forms. In her tapestries she skillfully uses geometric elements, which are typical of Ukrainian kilims, to achieve novel and startling effects. Her work has been displayed at numerous shows in Austria, including a one-woman show at the Ukrainian Free University in 1980.

Kurkul. See Kulak.

Viktor Kurmanovych

Kurmanovych, Viktor [Kurmanovyč], b 26 November 1876 in Vilshanytsia, Zolochiv county, Galicia, d 18 October 1945 in Odessa. General of the Ukrainian Galician Army (УГА). A graduate of the Austrian Military Academy in Vienna (1912), he served in the intelligence division of the Austrian General Staff. In 1914 he was captured by the Russians and imprisoned for spying. Exchanged for a Russian officer in 1915, he commanded Austrian troops on the Bukovynian and Italian fronts until 1918. After the collapse of the Austrian Empire, Kurmanovych enlisted in the УГА. He was appointed commander of the Zhovkva Group and then the Southern Group at the front. Subsequently he was assigned to the Supreme Command of the УГА, promoted to colonel, and appointed chief of staff (13 February–7 June 1919). For a few months he served also as state secretary for military affairs. After the УГА retreated to the territory of the UNR, Kurmanovych was promoted to brigadier general and appointed (11 August) general quartermaster on the Staff of the Supreme Otaman, which directed the operations of the unified Ukrainian armies. Because of disagreements over strategy and illness, he left the army and in September 1919 immigrated to Austria. He lived in Vienna until April 1945, when he was arrested by Soviet authorities and deported to Odessa. He died there in a prison hospital.

P. Sodol

Kurochka-Armashovsky, Ivan [Kuročka-Armashevs'kyj], b 15 June 1896 near Chernihiv, d 9 August 1971 in Toronto. Stage designer and painter. A graduate of the Kiev Art Institute, he designed sets for the Kiev Theater of Opera and Ballet (1927–41, 20 productions) and the Subcarpathian Theater in Drohobych (1943–4).

In 1948 he emigrated to Canada. His sets contributed to the success of productions such as M. Lysenko's Taras Bulba and Christmas Night (1929), V. Kostenko's Karmeliuk, M. Verykivsky's Pan Kanoos'kyi, V. Yorysh's adaptations of Zaporozhian Cossack beyond the Danube and Natalka from Poltava, G. Puccini's Turandot, R. Wagner's Lohengrin, and S. Prokofiev's The Tale of the Buffoon. In Canada he painted churches.

Kuroedov, Vladimir, b 1906 in Nizhnii Novgorod gubernia. Soviet political figure. A teacher by profession, Kuroedov advanced through the Communist Party ideological apparatus to become secretary of the Gorky oblast Party committee and then a science editor of the daily Sovetskaia Rossiia. Appointed chairman of the Council on the Affairs of the Russian Orthodox Church (CAROC) in 1960, he played a leading part in Khrushchev's anti-religious campaign that by 1964 led to the closing in Ukraine of some 3,500 Orthodox churches as well as the liquidation of some 29 monasteries (including the Kievan Cave Monastery and two [Kiev and Lutske] out of three theological seminaries). From 1966 to 1984 he headed the *Council on Religious Affairs, which oversees the implementation of religious policy for all denominations in the Soviet Union. Kuroedov wrote several propaganda brochures on church-state relations in the USSR.

Kuropas, Myron [Kuropas'], b 15 November 1932 in Chicago. Political and community leader, educator, historian, and journalist; son of S. *Kuropas. A graduate of the University of Chicago (PH D 1973), he was president of the Ukrainian National Youth Federation (MUN) (1960–2) and editor of its periodicals Scope (1959–60) and The Trident (1960–2). An active member of the Republican party in the United States, he served as regional director of the Action Program (1971–5), special assistant for ethnic affairs to President G. Ford (1976–7), and legislative assistant to Sen R. Dole (1977). Since 1978 he has been supreme vice-president of the Ukrainian National Association. He has written several books on the history of Ukrainians in North America, such as The Ukrainians in America (1972) and To Preserve a Heritage: The Story of the Ukrainian Immigration in the United States (1984). He contributes frequently to the Ukrainian press, particularly to The Ukrainian Weekly.

Kuropas, Stepan [Kuropas'], b 1 October 1900 in Pere-myshl, Galicia. Community leader and journalist. A graduate of the Agricultural Engineering Institute in Czechoslovakia (1924), he served as an officer in the Austrian army (1918), the Ukrainian Galician Army (1918–20), and the Polish army (1924–5). Immigrating to the United States, in 1930 he became an activist in Ukrainian organizations, such as the Ukrainian Professional Association of the United States, the Organization for the Rebirth of Ukraine, and the Ukrainian Congress Committee of America. He was also vice-president and auditor of the Ukrainian National Association (1938–69). Kuropas contributed a regular column to Svoboda (1938–70) and edited Samostiina Ukraina.

Kurovets, Ivan [Kurovec'], b 17 January 1863 in Batiatyche, Kaminka-Strumylova county, Galicia, d 13 May 1931. Physician; civic and political activist. A graduate of the Medical Academy in Vienna (1887), Kurovets worked as a physician in Kalush, where he helped establish the Peasant's Bank and People's Home, and was a delegate to the Galician Sejm (1908–14). In 1918–19 he served as secretary of health in the government of the Western Ukrainian National Republic. After that he was the director of the Narodna Lichnytsia society in Lviv (1923–31). As a leading member of the Ukrainian Labor party, he was an influential figure in the establishment of the Ukrainian National Democratic Alliance (UNDO). He was elected a delegate from UNDO to the Polish Sejm in 1928, but resigned shortly afterwards. Kurovets was also a member of the Shevchenko Scientific Society and the Ukrainian Physicians Society, and chairman of the advisory council of the Dilo publishing house (1921–31). He published many scholarly and popular articles and pamphlets on medical and other topics.

Kurpita, Teodor (pseud: Teok), b 1913 in Galicia, d 1974 in Chicago. Poet, writer, editor. He edited the literary-artistic journal Ridne slovo and the satirical magazine Iz hak-Komar. His poetry was published in a number of collections, including: Na dospivakh vesnianykh (At Spring Songfests, 1934), Not e pess: liryka (Not a Pass: Lyrics, 1946), and Blakytzni troiandy (Blue Roses, 1966). He also published a collection of short stories, Otets' z zolotym sertsem (A Father with a Heart of Gold, 1937), and a collection of satirical sketches, Karykatury z literatury (Caricatures from Literature, 1947).

Kursk. П-17. City (1985 pop 420,000) and oblast capital in the Russian SFSR. It was first mentioned in the chronicles in 1032 as a fortified town in Chernihiv principality and a defense outpost against the Cumans. Later the capital of an appanage principality, it was razed in 1240 by the Mongols. Rebuilt in 1582 as a fortified town on Muscovy's frontier with the Crimean Khanate, from 1708 to 1727 it belonged to Kiev gubernia. From 1780 to 1797 it was a vicegerency capital, and from 1797 to 1917, a gubernia capital. Today Kursk is an important transport, industrial, and cultural center. Of its 98,800 inhabitants in 1926, 2,400 were Ukrainian.

Kursk Magnetic Anomaly. The largest magnetic anomaly and iron-ore basin in the USSR. Covering an area of 80,000 sq km, most of it lies within Kursk, Belgorod, and Orel oblasts, but its southern part extends into Ukrainian ethnic territory within the borders of the RSFSR (the upper Oskil River region south of Belgorod) and into Kharkiv oblast (Vovchanske raion). The magnetic anomaly is caused by iron-ore deposits lying close to the surface; they consist mostly of Precambrian ferruginous quartzites whose basic ores are magnetite and hematite. The anomaly's ore reserves in 1980 were estimated to be 44.8 billion t, of which 29.4 billion t were high grade. Mining began there in 1952. Further exploitation of the resources of the anomaly will continue to have a great impact on the growth of heavy industry in the Donbas and the USSR as a whole.

Kursk region (Kurshchyna). A mixed Russian-Ukrainian region northeast of *Slobidska Ukraine. In the 16th century it became part of Muscovy. In the 19th and early 20th centuries it constituted Kursk gubernia, which bordered on Chernihiv, Poltava, and Kharkiv gubernias. In 1934, with somewhat changed borders, it made up Kursk oblast in the RSFSR, with an area of 50,800 sq km. The region's southern part (11,100 sq km) lies on Ukrainian ethnic territory and was inhabited by 554,700 Ukrainians (19.1 percent of the oblast's population) in 1926. In 1954 almost all of this southern part, of which about half of the population was Ukrainian, was incorporated into newly created *Belgorod oblast. Since that time Kursk oblast has had an area of 29,800 sq km, of which only 1,200 sq km lies on Ukrainian ethnic territory. In 1979 Kursk oblast had a population of 1,395,400; only 19,500 identified themselves as Ukrainians, of which only 9,300 stated that Ukrainian was their native language.

Kurtiak, Ivan [Kurtjak], b 1888 in Khust, Transcarpathia, d 2 January 1933 in Sevliush (now Vynohradiv), Transcarpathia. Pro-Hungarian Transcarpathian community and political figure. A school teacher before the First World War, in November 1918 he was appointed school inspector for Khust by the Hungarian authorities. After Transcarpathia was incorporated into Czechoslovakia, he refused to pledge allegiance to the new government and entered politics full time. He cofounded and headed the Subcarpathian Agricultural Union (1920–3) and its successor the Autonomous Agricultural Union (1924–33), serving as a deputy from that party to the Prague parliament from 1924 to his death. He demanded autonomy for Transcarpathia (Subcarpathian Ruthenia) from the central government in Prague.

Kurukove Treaty. An agreement between the Polish government (represented by Hetman S. Koniecpolski) and the Cossacks (led by M. Doroshenko), concluded during the successful Zhmailo uprising of the Cossacks against the Poles. The treaty was signed 5 November 1625 beside Lake Kurukove, near present-day Kremenchuk. The terms of the treaty were as follows: all the insurgents were granted amnesty; the list of *registered Cossacks was increased to 6,000 men; those registered were to receive from the Polish crown an annual salary for service; and they retained the right to elect their leader. The Cossacks were forbidden to enter into relations with other countries or to undertake military campaigns against the Turks.

Kurylas, Osyp, b 7 August 1870 in Shchyrets, Lviv county, Galicia, d 25 June 1951 in Lviv. Painter and graphic artist. A graduate of the Lviv Industrial Design School (1890) and the Cracow Academy of Fine Art (1900), he specialized in genre painting and portraiture. He did portraits of T. Shevchenko (1918), Metropolitan A. Sheptytsky, Prince Volodymyr the Great, Prof Yavorsky, his wife (1918), and V. Shukhevych, and a self-portrait. Many of his paintings depict the Hutsuls in their everyday life: A Hutsul Pair (1937), Blahodatka Village, View of Cherniotsi, Wooden Church in Zhyraoka, Hutsuls Reading a Newspaper (1945), Woodsmen (1947), and The Homeless. He also illustrated children's books, such as Pryhody Iurchyka kucheriovoho (The Adventures of Curly-Haired Yurchyk), Kazka didusia Tarasa (Grandfather Taras's Story), and Hav na vakatsiakh (Hav on Vacation); the children's magazine Svit dytyny; a number of Ukrainian readers and primers; and V. Stefanyk's novellas Klenovi lystky (Maple Leaves) and Novyna (News). His postcards on historical themes and drawings depicting the period of the wars for Ukraine's independence were very popular. Kurylas was one of the pioneers of the new movement in Ukrainian religious painting. His icons of the Mother of God and Christ are distinctively Ukrainian. He designed many iconostases in Galicia. A. Viunyk (1963) and S. Kostiuik (1970) have written monographs on Kurylas.

Osyp Kurylas: Hutsul Types (oil, 1945)

S. Hordynsky

Kurylenko, Onysym, b 16 March 1904 in Borivka, Mykolaiv county, Podilia gubernia, d 25 September 1982. Physical chemist; corresponding member of the AN URSR from 1969. After graduating from the Kiev Polytechnical Institute in 1930, he lectured at the Kiev Technological Institute of the Food Industry. After the war he worked at the AN URSR Institute of General and Inorganic Chemistry until 1951 when he returned to the Kiev Technological Institute of the Food Industry to chair a department. In 1962 he was appointed deputy director of the Institute of General and Inorganic Chemistry and in 1968 director of the Institute of Colloidal Chemistry and Hydrochemistry. He did research on the stability of dispersed systems, the electrochemistry of polyelectrolytes, the hydration of macromolecular compounds, the chemistry of surface phenomena, and the interaction between water and hydrophilic substances.

Kurylo, Olena, b 6 October 1890 in Slonim, Belorussia, d reportedly in 1937. Linguist. Kurylo studied with Ye. *Tymchenko at Warsaw University. After the 1917 Revolution she became a senior associate of the vUAN in Kiev, a member of its Ethnographic, Regional Studies, and Dialectological commissions, and a consultant to its Institute of the Ukrainian Scientific Language. She played an important role in the normalization of literary Ukrainian and Ukrainian scientific terminology (particularly of chemistry and botany), which she approached from a puristic and ethnographic position. Her contributions to the standardization of Ukrainian literary language include a widely used elementary Ukrainian grammar (1918; 11th edn, 1926) and Uvahy do suchasnoi ukrains'koï literaturnoi movy (Remarks on the Contemporary Ukrainian Literary Language, 1920; 3rd edn, 1925).

From her systematic study of the phonetics of northern and southwestern Ukrainian dialects, particularly of their accentuation, which expanded on V. *Hantsov's research, Kurylo concluded that Ukrainian arose from the merging of two originally distinct dialectal groups. In several articles and the monograph Sproba poiasnyty protses zminy e, o v novykh zakrytykh skladakh u pivdennii hrupi ukrains'kykh diialektiv (An Attempt at Explaining the Process of Change of e, o in New Closed Syllables of the Southern Group of Ukrainian Dialects, 1928), she showed that the alternation of o, e with i developed independently in these groups through diphthongization in the north and assimilation in the south. Kurylo gave new explanations for the transition of o into a in such words as bahatyj ('rich') and of the transition in Western Ukraine of a into e preceded by a soft consonant (eg, žal' to žiel', 'grief'). She also wrote works on the history of Russian (she contributed a new theory of the rise of dissimilatory akan'e), on Moldavian dialects, and on phonetics in general, as well as the first program for collecting Ukrainian folk gestures, facial expressions, children's exclamations and language, jargon, and nicknames (1923). Her approach gradually evolved from a purely phonetic one characteristic of the Neogrammarians into a structuralist-phonological one.

During the purge of the vUAN in the early 1930s, Kurylo sought refuge in Moscow, where she taught until her arrest in 1937. Her subsequent fate is unknown. A detailed analysis of her contributions is found in Yu. Sherekh's (G.Y. Shevelov's) Vsevolod Hantsov. Olena Kurylo (1954).

G.Y. Shevelov

Yevhen Kurylo

Kurylo, Yevhen, b 18 October 1912 in Chortkiv, Galicia. Stage and screen actor specializing in heroic roles. He began his acting career in 1928 with the Tobilevych Ukrainian People's Theater in Stanyslaviv. Then he worked under V. Blavatsky's direction in the Zahrava Young Ukrainian Theater (1935–8), the Kotliarevsky Theater (1938–9), the Lesia Ukrainka Drama Theater (1939–41), and the Lviv Opera Theater (1941–4). Upon emigrating to Germany, he joined the Ukrainian Actors' Ensemble led by V. *Blavatsky. In 1949 he settled in the United States. His stage repertoire included Sokhron in M. Starytsky's Marusia Bohuslavoka, Prince Ihor in H. Luzhnytsky's Slovo o polku Ihorevi (The Tale of Ihor's Campaign), Mazepa in B. Lepky's Baturyn, Mokii in M. Kulish's Myna Mazailo, Bernardo del Aqua in Yu. Kosach's Obloha (Siege), Count Riccardo in Goldoni's I rusteghi, and Don Alvaro di Castiglia in his La vedova scaltra. Kurylo appeared in the films Dovbush and Viter zi skhodu (Wind from the East).

Kurylyk, Vasyl. See Kurelek, William.

Kuryshko, Kateryna [Kuryško] (née Nahirna), b 12 April 1949 in Vepryk, Hadiache raion, Poltava oblast. Athlete. A graduate of the Kiev Institute of Physical Culture (1973), she was a gold medalist in two-man canoeing at the 1972 Olympics and World and European champion in four-man canoeing in 1971. Kuryshko was also the Ukrainian and USSR champion in various canoeing categories several times. She now works with the Committee of Sports and Physical Culture of the Ukrainian Council of Ministers.

Kusenko, Olha, b 11 November 1919 in Kaniv, Kiev gubernia. Stage actress. A graduate of the Kiev Institute of Theater Arts (1941), she worked in theaters at the front during the war and in 1944 joined the Kiev Ukrainian Drama Theater. She is a versatile actress, who has proved herself in such varied roles as Melanka in I. Kocherha's Svichchynne vesillia (Svichka's Wedding) and Mariia Krzhyshevych in his Prorok (Prophet), Varka in Yu. Yanovsky's Duma pro Brytanku (Duma about Brytanka), Varia in A. Chekhov's Vishněvyi sad (Cherry Orchard), Beatrice in W. Shakespeare's Much Ado about Nothing, and Regan in his King Lear. Since 1973 Kusenko has served as president of the presidium of the Ukrainian Theatrical Society.

Kushch, Viktor [Kušč], 1878–1942. Senior officer in the UNR Army. Having served as a general staff officer in the Russian army, in 1919–20 he was an operations officer on the staff of the UNR Army. In the fall of 1920 he was promoted to brigadier general. After the war he edited the military journal **Tabor* and wrote articles on military subjects. In 1927 he served briefly as chief of staff of the UNR Ministry of Military Affairs, which was established secretly in Warsaw.

Kushchak, Andrii [Kuščak, Andrij], b 12 December 1901 in Leshchakiv, Sokal county, Galicia, d 17 November 1986 in New York. Metropolitan of the *Ukrainian Orthodox Church of America. He immigrated to Canada in 1928, and then to the United States in 1932. That year he was ordained a priest. On 28 January 1967 he was consecrated bishop by Archbishop Palladius and confirmed by the Patriarch of Constantinople, succeeding B. Shpylka as head of the church. In 1983 Patriarch Demetrius of Constantinople elevated him to metropolitan.

Kushnir, Ivan [Kušnir], b 17 June 1877 in Lviv, d 1 January 1940 in Lviv. Political activist. He was a leading member of the Ukrainian Social Democratic party in Galicia. From 1905 he worked in the trade union movement in Lviv. He was arrested by the Soviet authorities during the first occupation of Galicia and died in prison.

Kushnir, Makar [Kušnir] (pseud: Bohush, Yakymenko, B. Dniprovy), b 10 August 1890 in Cherkasy, Kiev gubernia, d 16 September 1951 in Pomerolle, Belgium. Political figure and journalist. He studied at St Petersburg University. At the beginning of the 1917 Revolution he moved to Kiev, where he was a delegate from the Ukrainian Party of Socialists-Federalists to the *Central Rada and the Mala Rada. He also contributed to the journal Nova Rada and the daily Trybuna. At the end of 1918 he was a member of the UNR delegation to the Paris

Makar Kushnir

Peace Conference. From 1920 he lived in Vienna and then Geneva, where he wrote for the Ukrainian (Volia) and foreign press, and contributed to such nationalistic publications as Rozbudova Natsii. Kushnir was also a founding member of the OUN, the organization's chief judge, and a close adviser to Ye. *Konovalets. After the Second World War he settled in Belgium.

Kushnir, Mykhailo [Kušnir, Myxajlo], b 23 August 1897 in Stanyslaviv, Galicia. Painter and art critic; a publicist and community leader. Having served as a captain in the Ukrainian Galician Army (1918–19), he studied art at the Vienna Academy of Arts (1919–20) and philosophy at Lviv and Heidelberg (PH D 1950) universities. A member of the Ukrainian Military Organization (UVO) and then of the OUN, he organized Prosvita branches and theater groups in the Stanyslaviv region and Lviv. In 1941–5 he headed the department of culture of the *Ukrainian Central Committee and belonged to the Military Board of the Division Galizien. Immigrating to the United States in 1951, he was active in the Ukrainian Youth Association (SUM) and the Organization for the Defense of Four Freedoms, and was president of the Association for the Advancement of Ukrainian Culture (1965–70). His publications include four albums of woodcuts (1927, 1931, 1935, 1956); monographs on art theory, such as Der Sinn im Gegenstand (1929), Das Problem der Stilenwicklung in der modernen Kunst (1950), and Velych mystetstva i vidrodzhennia kul'tury (The Greatness of Art and the Revival of Culture, 1968); and numerous articles on philosophical, artistic, educational, and political questions in the Ukrainian press. He is a proponent of Christian nationalism.

Kushnir, Vasyl (Basil) [Kušnir, Vasył'], b 17 September 1893 in Vikno, Skalat county, Galicia, d 25 September 1979 in Winnipeg. Community leader and priest. After serving in the Austrian army during the First World War, Kushnir studied at the Catholic Theological Seminary in Lviv and at the University of Innsbruck (DD 1929). Ordained a priest in 1927, he taught at the Catholic Theological Seminary in Stanyslaviv (1930–4). In Canada he was parish priest of ss Vladimir and Olga Ukrainian Catholic Cathedral in Winnipeg (1934–79) and chancellor (1947–57) and vicar general (1957–79) of Winnipeg eparchy. He helped form the Ukrainian Canadian Committee (UCC). Representing the Ukrainian Catholic Brotherhood of Canada, Kushnir was president of the UCC for 26 years (1940–52, 1957–71). In 1944 he worked with the Ukrainian Canadian Relief Fund, which assisted the Ukrainians in displaced persons camps in Germany to resettle in Canada. A founding member of the Pan-American Ukrainian Conference in 1946, he was its chairman (1947–67) and the first president of the *World Congress of Free Ukrainians (1967–78). In 1972 Kushnir was appointed to the Order of Canada.

Vasyl Kushnir

Volodymyr Kushnir

Kushnir, Volodymyr [Kušnir] (Kuschnir, Vladimir), b 1881 in Galicia, d 25 October 1933 in Prague. Publicist and journalist. In the early 20th century he moved to Vienna, where he worked on Ruthenische Revue, co-founded and edited Ukrainische Rundschau (1906–10), and founded and headed the Ukrainian Press Bureau there (1907). All of these organs worked to inform the West about the Ukrainian question. In 1912 he was the editor of the Lviv newspaper Dilo, then he edited Bukovyna and Narodnyi Holos (1913–14) in Chernivtsi. During the First World War, he returned to Vienna, where he edited Ukrainische Korrespondenz (1917–18), published by the General Ukrainian Council, and then worked for the journals Volia (1919) and Na Perelomi (1920) in Vienna and Die Ukraine in Berlin. He was the first head of the *Union of Ukrainian Journalists and Writers Abroad. From 1923 he lived in Prague, where he taught at the Ukrainian Higher Pedagogical Institute. Kushnir contributed articles to numerous Ukrainian and Western publications and wrote several political essays and studies, including Der Neopanslawismus (1908). He also compiled and edited a collection of documents on the Polish *Pacification of Galicia, published in English as Polish Atrocities in the West Ukraine (1931).

Kushtanovytsia culture. An archeological culture named after a burial mound site of the 6th–3rd centuries BC widespread in Transcarpathia. It is situated near Kushtanovytsia, Mukachiv raion, Transcarpathia oblast. The site was excavated in 1898 by T. Lehotsky and in 1929–31 by J. Jankovich and J. Böhm, who uncovered the remains of cremations in urns and in shallow pits, hand-molded pottery, tools, iron weapons, bronze, glass, and bone ornaments, a gold disc, and other artifacts. The people buried there were Thracian farmers and herders who were influenced by the Scythians. Similar burial grounds in Transcarpathia were excavated later on. The pottery discovered there is similar to pottery found in Scythian kurhans in western Podilia.

Kushuhum [Kušuhum]. VI-16. Town smt (1980 pop 9,300) in Zaporizhia raion, Zaporizhia oblast, situated 10 km south of Zaporizhia. It was established in 1770 and until 1927 was called Velyka Katerynivka. It has a lime plant.

Kut burial site. A burial ground of 32 kurhans excavated in 1951–2 near the former village of Kut, Apostolove raion, Dnipropetrovske oblast (now inundated by the Kakhivka Reservoir). Over 200 graves belonging to the Pit-Grave, Catacomb, and Timber-Grave cultures of the Bronze Age and to the Scythian period (4th–3rd centuries BC) were uncovered. The burials contained stone and flint axes, tools, knives and arrowheads, clay pottery, and various ornaments.

Kutia [kutja]. Ritual dish made with wheat or barley grain and ground poppy seeds that is eaten with a honey sauce on Christmas Eve (bahata kutia) and Epiphany Eve (holodna kutia). It is one of the oldest of the 12 traditional dishes and is served to begin or end the Christmas and Epiphany dinners. The exact recipe and its use in ritual differed in the various regions of Ukraine. Kutia was usually used to foretell a plentiful harvest and family happiness (see *Christmas). On Christmas Eve children often took servings of kutia to their godparents, and after dinner a portion was left on the table for the souls of the deceased.

Kutkin, Volodymyr, b 12 November 1926 in Zhytomyr. Graphic artist. A graduate of the Kiev State Art Institute (1959), he works mainly in printmaking, book graphics, and monumental decorative art. His chief works are the linocut series On Motifs from T. Shevchenko's Works (1959–65), illustrations and ornamental designs for T. Shevchenko's Kobzar (with others, 1963), illustrations to O. Honchar's novel Tronka (1966), the linocut series My Land (1966–7), the mosaic panel The Great Kobzar (1969–71) in Tashkent, and illustrations to H. Kosynka's short stories (1970). He has also done bookplates. Kutkin has participated in many exhibitions in the USSR and abroad: in San Francisco (1963), Leipzig (silver medal, 1965), and at Expo 67 in Montreal. In 1968 I. Buhaienko wrote a monograph on Kutkin.

Kuts, Valentyn [Kuc] (pseud of Parfenii Smola), b 17 December 1883 in Dudchany, Kherson gubernia, d 15 September 1948 in Curitiba, Brazil. Community leader and organizer of co-operatives. For his participation in the Ukrainian revolutionary movement Kuts was forced to change his name and in 1911 emigrate to the state of Paraná in Brazil. There he taught in many Ukrainian settlements and organized co-operatives for the marketing of agricultural produce. In 1931 he worked for the journal Ukrains'kyi khliborob, editing its Portuguese-language supplement, A Vida Ucraina (22 issues in all). Kuts was the author of the poem Rus'kyi Moisei (The Ruthenian Moses, 1925) and a Ukrainian textbook on learning Portuguese.

Kuts, Volodymyr [Kuc], b 7 February 1927 in Oleksyne, Sumy okruha, d 16 August 1975 in Moscow. Noted track-and-field athlete. Kuts moved to Leningrad at an early age while serving in the military. Afterwards, he settled in Moscow and was denied permission to return to Ukraine. He is among the few athletes in the world who established new records in both the 5,000- and 10,000-meter runs. At the 1956 Olympic Games he won the gold medal in both events. He set the world record for the 5,000-meter run 4 times and between 1954 and 1957 he surpassed his own USSR records 12 times. In 1961 he graduated from the Leningrad Institute of Athletics and became a coach. Although he lived outside Ukraine, Kuts always emphasized his Ukrainian nationality during international meets. He died under mysterious circumstances. Kuts is the author of the book Povest' o bege (A Story about Running, 1964).

Volodymyr Kuts

Zenon Kuzelia

Kutsenko, Pavlo [Kucenko], b 14 November 1908 in Kamianka, Chyhyryn county, Kiev gubernia, d 30 June 1983 in Kiev. Graphic artist. In 1937 he graduated from the Kiev State Art Institute where he had studied under S. Naliepinska-Boichuk and F. Krychevsky. His works consist mainly of lyric landscapes and experiments with various etching techniques. His prints include The Beginning of the Spring (aquatint, 1937), the series Donbas (drypoint, 1944), Autumn on the Dnieper (cardboard cut, 1963), Kiev Slopes (etching, 1970), and Old Apple Trees (1974). A catalog of his work was published in Kiev in 1971.

Kutsenko, Volodymyr [Kucenko], b 18 February 1921 in Blahodatne, Pavlohrad county, Katerynoslav gubernia. Soviet philosopher; since 1985 full member of the AN USSR. A graduate of Kiev University (1948) and the Academy of Social Sciences of the CC CPSU (1953), he taught at and chaired a department of the Higher Party School of the CC CPU (1953–70). Then he served as a department chairman and academic secretary (1975) of the AN USSR Institute of Philosophy. As the chief editor of Filosofs'ka dumka (1972–8), he was largely responsible for the decline in the journal's intellectual quality. Kutsenko specializes in the methodology of the social sciences. He is the author of Sotsial'naia zadacha kak kategoriia istoricheskogo materializma (The Social Task as a Category of Historical Materialism, 1972), the coauthor of Sotsial'noe poznanie i sotsial'noe upravlenie (Social Knowledge and Social Control, 1979), and the editor of several collections of papers on methodological problems.

Kutsenko, Yakiv [Kucenko, Jakiv], b 20 November 1915 in Kiev. Weight lifter. He studied at the Kiev Institute of Physical Culture in the 1930s. He was twice European champion (1947 and 1950) and the silver medalist at the 1946 and 1950 World championships. Kutsenko set 10 world and 58 USSR records and was Ukrainian champion 12 times and USSR champion 14 times in his career. He also wrote the books Zoloti kilohramy (Golden Kilograms, 1968) and U velykomu tryborstvi (In the Great Weight-Lifting Competition, 1968).

Kuty. v-6. Town smt (1980 pop 4,400) in Kosiv raion, Ivano-Frankivske oblast. It was first mentioned in 1448. In the early 18th century O. Dovbush and his *opryshoks were active in the vicinity. From 1772 to 1918 the town was under Austrian rule, and in the interwar period, under Poland. Owing to its mild climate Kuty is a popular resort town. A colony of Armenians from Moldavia was founded there in the early 18th century.

Kuzelia (Kuzela), Zenon [Kuzelja], b 23 June 1882 in Poruchyn, Berezhany county, Galicia, d 24 May 1952 in Paris. Ethnographer, lexicographer, bibliographer, journalist, and community figure; full member of the Shevchenko Scientific Society (NTSh) from 1909. In 1898 he founded and headed the Moloda Ukraina secret society at the Berezhany Polish gymnasium. He studied at Lviv (1900–1) and Vienna (1901–6) universities. At the latter he was V. Jagić's personal secretary, the librarian of the Slavic Seminar, and an official Slavic translator from 1903. He headed the Sich Ukrainian student society in Vienna in 1902–4 and coedited its jubilee almanac in 1908. He also did volunteer work at the Ethnographic and Anthropological Department of the Imperial Court Museum (1904–6) and the Museum of Austrian Ethnography (1904–7). In 1904–6 he took part in three NTSh ethnographic-anthropological expeditions to the Carpathian Mountains led by F. Vovk and I. Franko.

After obtaining a doctorate in philology and history, Kuzelia worked as a Slavic librarian at the University of Vienna (1906–9) and contributed to Ukrainische Rundschau and Zeitschrift für österreichische Bibliographie in Vienna and Dilo in Lviv. From 1909 to 1914 he was the chairman of the Slavic Department at Chernivtsi University, lectured on the Ukrainian language there (1913–14), headed the Chernivtsi branch of the Ruska Besida society, and edited the weekly Ukraina (1913–14) and the Ukrainian supplement to Czernowitzer Allgemeine Zeitung.

From the outbreak of the First World War to his death, Kuzelia lived outside Ukraine. In 1914–16 he worked at the Institute of East European History in Vienna. In 1916–20 he directed educational work among the Ukrainians in the Russian army who were held in the POW camp in *Salzwedel, Germany, and edited the papers Vil'ne slovo (1918) and Shliakh (1919–20) there. From 1920 he lived in Berlin, where he edited the papers Ukrains'ke slovo (1921–3), Osteuropäische Korrespondenz (1926–30), and Ukrainische Kulturberichte (1933–40) and books of the publishing houses Ukrainske Slovo and Ukrainska Nakladnia. He headed the Ukrainska Hromada community organization (1924–33) and the Union of Foreign Journalists (1930–6), was a correspondent of the Lviv daily Dilo and a member of the Ukrainian Scientific Institute in Berlin (1926–45), and lectured at Berlin University. As a postwar refugee in Fürth, Bavaria, he edited the newspaper Chas and the NTSh journal S'ohochasne i mynule, headed the Ukrainian Students' Aid Commission (KoDUS), and was the coeditor, with V. Kubijovyč, of the Entsyklopediia ukraïnoznavstva (Encyclopedia of Ukraine) and served as president of NTSh (from 1949). In 1951 he moved to France to work at the new NTSh center in Sarcelles near Paris.

Up to the First World War Kuzelia published over 200 reviews and surveys of West European scholarly books in Zapysky NTSh. As an ethnographer he was, with I. Franko and V. Hnatiuk, an adherent of the comparative school and later of the Finnish school (the historical-geographic approach). He published, in NTSh serials, valuable studies on the motif of wandering in Slavic folklore, on Ukrainian burial, courting, wedding, and birth customs and rituals, on folk medicine and folk theater, on the belief in vampires, and on Ukrainian emigration. He also compiled, with M. Chaikovsky, the first two Ukrainian dictionaries of foreign words (1910, 1919) and, with J. Rudnykyj, a Ukrainian-German dictionary (1943); published articles in Austrian, German, Polish, and Czech scholarly periodicals, in the German scholarly yearbook Minerva (1926–35), and in the collections Ukraine und die kirchliche Union (1930) and Die Westukraine, which he edited; and wrote several chapters for the encyclopedic Handbuch der Ukraine (1941) and The Ukraine and Its People (1949) edited by I. Mirchuk. His survey articles on Ukrainian ethnography can be found in vol 1 of Ukraine: A Concise Encyclopaedia (1963). Articles about his life and contributions and a select bibliography of his writings were published in a festschrift edited by V. Yaniv as vol 169 of Zapysky NTSh (1962).

M. Hnatiukivsky

Mykhailo Kuzemsky

Alex Kuziak

Kuzemsky, Mykhailo [Kuzems'kyj, Myxajlo], b 1809, d 1879 in Galicia. Religious and community leader, canon of Lviv eparchy. Kuzemsky was the most active member of the *Supreme Ruthenian Council and later the main organizer of its branches in the provinces. He was a founder and the first head of the *Halytsko-Ruska Matytsia educational-publishing society. For 15 years he was a leader and trustee of Ukrainian popular education in eastern Galicia, defending the use of the Ukrainian language in schools and the right to Ukrainian political and administrative independence in Galicia. From 1868 to 1871 he was the last Greek Catholic archbishop of *Kholm eparchy.

Kuziak, Alex Gordon [Kuzjak], b 15 October 1908 in Canora, Saskatchewan. Businessman and politician. Kuziak was elected to the Saskatchewan legislature (1948–64) as the Co-operative Commonwealth Federation (CCF) member in the constituency of Canora. As minister of telephones and minister in charge of the Government Finance Office (1952), he was the first MLA of Ukrainian origin to hold cabinet office in Saskatchewan. He was also minister in charge of the Northern Crown Corporation and Natural Resources (1956–62) and of Mineral Resources (1962–4), until his defeat in 1964.

Kuziakina, Natalia [Kuzjakina, Natalja], b 5 September 1928 in Kiev. Specialist on the history of Soviet Ukrainian theater. After completing graduate studies in Ukrainian literature at Kiev University (1951), she taught Ukrainian literature at the Izmail Pedagogical Institute and Odessa University. In 1962 she became a senior scholarly associate in the theater department of the AN URSR Institute of Fine Arts, Folklore, and Ethnography. Her articles and reviews were first published in 1950. She has written monographs about the playwright M. Kulish (1962) and his plays (1970), the playwright I. Kocherha (1968), and Ukrainian dramaturgy in the years 1917–60 (2 vols, 1958, 1963).

Vasyl Kuziv

Kuziv, Vasyl, b 3 February 1887 in Denysiv, Ternopil county, Galicia, d 24 July 1958 in Crenford, New Jersey. Protestant church figure. He graduated from the theological seminary in Bloomfield, New Jersey, in 1910, and for the next 30 years served intermittently as the pastor of the Ukrainian Presbyterian Church in Newark and as a professor at the seminary in Bloomfield. He also traveled extensively, organizing Protestant parishes throughout North America. In 1922 he was a cofounder of the Ukrainian Evangelical Alliance of North America, an organization he headed for several years. In 1935 he moved to Kolomyia, where he was consecrated a bishop and chosen head of the Ukrainian Evangelical Reformed church in Western Ukraine. After the war Kuziv worked among the displaced persons in Germany as a representative of the World Council of Churches. He wrote numerous articles on religious themes and is the subject of a biography by L. Bykovsky (1966).

Kuzma, Liubomyr [Kuz'ma, Ljubomyr], b 24 May 1913 in Galicia. Neorealist painter. Having studied with W. Lam, he enrolled in 1938 in the Warsaw Academy of Fine Arts. Since 1949 he has resided in the United States and participated in the exhibitions of the Ukrainian Artists' Association there, and in exhibitions organized by American museums. Kuzma directs an art school for young people in New York. Most of his work – still lifes, landscapes, and portraits – is done in tempera.

Kuzma, Oleksa [Kuz'ma], b 1875 in Galicia, d 1941 in Lviv. Journalist. He was a longtime contributor and member of the editorial board of the newspaper Dilo (1902–38) and the editor of Svoboda (1922–38), the official organ of the Ukrainian National Democratic Alliance (from 1925). A captain of the Ukrainian Galician Army (UHA) during the struggle for Ukrainian independence, he wrote the monograph Lystopadovi dni 1918 r. (The Days of November 1918, 1931; repr, 1960), an account of the Ukrainian seizure of power in Lviv, and numerous articles and essays on the history of the UHA in Dilo and elsewhere. He also published a collection of essays, Nacherky Oleksy Kuz'my (Sketches by Oleksa Kuzma, 1902), and several translations of foreign works for the Dilo book series of world literature.

Kuzmenko, Andrii [Kuz'menko, Andrii], b 1903 in Kharkiv gubernia. Biochemist. He studied at the Kharkiv Agricultural Institute with V. Liubymenko, then worked at the Kharkiv Institute of Applied Botany (1928–31) and edited the journal Visnyk prykladnoi botaniky. He headed the Department of Physiology at the Kiev Institute of the Tobacco Industry (1931–4) before becoming a professor of physiology at the Kiev Agricultural Institute. Kuzmenko's research, which focused on the exchange of fluids in plants, is summarized in over 60 papers.

Kuzmenko, Petro [Kuz'menko], b 1831 in Ponornytzia, Novhorod Siverskyi county, Chernihiv gubernia, d 1874 at Potitkivskyi khutir, Chernihiv gubernia. Writer and ethnographer. A teacher by vocation, he composed poems in the Romantic style and wrote a novel about peasant life, Ne tak zhdalosia, da tak sklalosia (It Did Not Turn Out as Expected, 1861). His literary works and his ethnographic studies appeared in the almanac Khata, the journal Osnova, and the newspaper Chernigovskii listok.

Kuzmovych, Olha [Kuz'movyč, Ol'ha] (née Sheparovych), b 24 November 1917 in Lviv. Journalist and community leader. A graduate of the Higher School of Journalism in Warsaw (1939), she was coeditor of the youth magazine Doroha (1942–4). Immigrating to the United States in 1947, she edited the Plast magazines Molode Zhyttia (1952–3), Iunak (1968–9), and Plastovyi shliakh (1980–4), and the 'Plastova vatra' section in Svoboda (1964–8). She was also active in *Plast as president of its national executive (1960–3) and president of the Supreme Plast Council (1970–4). A coeditor of the daily Svoboda, she has served since 1976 as president of the Association of Ukrainian Journalists in America. She is a member of the Presidium of the Ukrainian American Coordinating Council. Her publications include numerous essays and short stories.

Kuzmovych, Volodymyr [Kuz'movyč], b 30 November 1886 in Bolekhiv, Dolyna county, Galicia, d December 1943? in Utvin, Komi Republic. Political activist, pedagogue, and journalist. He studied mathematics and physics at the University of Vienna before becoming a teacher at a women's seminary and gymnasium. During the First World War, he was arrested by the Russian authorities and deported to Tashkent. After his return to Lviv he lectured at the Lviv (Underground) Ukrainian University (1922–3), then became a school inspector for the Ridna Shkola society. He was the longtime secretary of the Ukrainian Catholic Union and editor of its organ Meta (1931–9). He was also a member of the Central Committee of the Ukrainian National Democratic Alliance (UNDO), its general secretary in 1938–9, and an UNDO delegate to the Polish Sejm (1935–8). In 1939 he was arrested during the Soviet occupation of Western Ukraine and exiled to Siberia, where he died in a concentration camp.

Volodymyr Kuzmovych

Kuzmych, Volodymyr [Kuz'myč], b 27 June 1904 in Bakhmach, Chernihiv gubernia, d 4 October 1943? Writer. In the 1920s he was a member of the writers' group *Molodniak. He began publishing in 1925 and wrote the novella Italiika z Madzhento (The Italian Woman from Magento, 1927) and 13 story collections, including Nahan (The Revolver, 1927), Khao-Zhen' (1928), and Korabli (Ships, 1931). In his 'industrialization' novels Kryla (Wings, 1930) and Turbiny (Turbines, 1932) he provided, despite their ideological overtones, insights into the development of the aviation industry in Ukraine and the construction of the Dnieper Hydroelectric Dam and revealed his mastery in writing prose. He also wrote prose for children; eg, the novella Okean (The Ocean, 1939).

Kuzmyn, Mykola [Kuz'myn], b 25 May 1881 in Ozirna, Zboriv county, Galicia, d 27 May 1955 in Cleveland. Civic and political leader. In the interwar period Kuzmyn was active in the co-operative movement in the Zboriv region, and president of the Prosvita and Ridna Shkola societies in Ozirna. A member of the Central Committee of the Ukrainian National Democratic Alliance, between 1928 and 1930 he was a delegate from that party to the Polish Senate. He was vice-president of the *Silskyi Hospodar society in Lviv from 1936. In 1939 he was arrested by the Polish authorities and imprisoned in the Bereza Kartuzka concentration camp. After he was released, Kuzmyn fled to the West and eventually immigrated to the United States.

Kuzmyn, Yevhen [Kuz'myn, Jevhen], b 22 October 1871 in Lucerne, Switzerland, d 9 July 1942 in Kazalinsk, Kzyl-Orda oblast, Kazakh SSR. Art scholar and critic. A graduate of the Kiev Drawing School (1893), he was professor of art history at the Lysenko Music and Drama School in Kiev (1914–25). He wrote studies of Ukrainian art, including studies of Ukrainian kilims, pottery, and Kiev icons, and monographs on painters such as M. Vrubel, T. Shevchenko (1900–11), Yu. Narbut (1927), and O. Murashko. Arrested in 1933, he died in prison.

Kuznetsov, Anatolii [Kuznecov, Anatolij] (pseud: A. Anatolii), b 18 August 1929 in Kiev, d 13 June 1979 in London, England. Russian writer of Jewish origin. He grew up in Kiev and graduated from the Gorky Institute of Literature in Moscow. In 1969 he was granted asylum in London while visiting there. He was the author of two story collections and three novels, the most famous of which was Babii Iar (1967; uncensored English trans: Babi Yar, 1970), a documentary novel about the mass murders committed by the Nazis at the *Babyn Yar ravine in Kiev.

Kuznetsov, Mykola [Kuznecov], b 14 December 1850 in Stepanivka, Melitopol county, Tavriia gubernia, d 2 March 1929 in Sarajevo, Yugoslavia. Painter. Upon graduating from the St Petersburg Academy of Arts (1879), where he had studied under P. Chistiakov, he traveled in France and Italy. He lectured briefly at the St Petersburg Academy of Arts (1895–7) and then lived in Odessa, where he participated in the exhibitions of the Society of South Russian Artists and the *Peredvizhnik group. His works consist of genre paintings, such as On a Holiday (1881), Hired Labor (1882), and After Dinner (1888), and portraits, including those of P. Tchaikovsky and I. Mechnikov. In 1920 he immigrated to Yugoslavia. L. Chlenova published a monograph on Kuznetsov in 1962.

Hryhorii Kuznevych: marble portrait on a gravestone (1903)

Kuznevych, Hryhorii [Kuznevych, Hryhorij], b 30 September 1871 in Stare Brusno, Liubachiv county, Galicia, d 9 January 1948 in Hanachivka, Peremysliany raion, Lviv oblast. Sculptor. After studying at the Lviv School of Industrial Design and J. Markowski's studio, he spent two years (1899–1901) at the Rome Institute of Fine Arts and carved the statues The First Farmer (1900) and The Potter (1901) there. Returning to Lviv he did the monuments to S. Szczepanowski (1905) and B. Głowacki (1906) at Lychakiv Cemetery in Lviv. His early works include Fortuna (1892) for a savings bank and a decorative composition for the Arts Palace in Lviv (1894), both in collaboration with J. Markowski. During his stay in the United States (1907–12) he produced a bust of T. Shevchenko (1908, another in 1914) and designed a monument to Shevchenko for Kiev (1910). Upon his return he carved a number of works in honor of the great poet, including a medallion with an image of Shevchenko, and a bust of M. Lysenko (1914) for the Lysenko Music Society in Lviv.

Kuzyk, Dmytro, b 20 December 1906 in Pechenizhyn, Kolomyia county, Galicia, d 13 March 1982 in Trenton, New Jersey. Journalist and community activist; by profession an engineer. He graduated from the Lviv Polytechnic in 1931. He was a member of the Ukrainian National Democratic Alliance (UNDO) and helped edit its journal Svoboda. In 1938 he left UNDO and joined the Front of National Unity. He emigrated to Germany in 1945, where he coedited Na Chuzhyni (1946–8). In 1948 he immigrated to the United States. He was the cofounder of the Association of Ukrainian Americans and the editor and publisher of its journal Nash Holos from 1972 until his death.

Kuzyk, Stepan, b 7 January 1888 in Galicia, d 1947 in Berchtesgaden, Germany. Lawyer and civic leader. Kuzyk was a director of the Dilo publishing house and a deputy to the Polish Sejm from the Ukrainian National Democratic Alliance (1928–35). During the Second World War he was the director of Tsentrobank in Lviv. For many years he was director of the Audit Union of Ukrainian Co-operatives and an executive member of the Prosvita society.

Kuzyk, Sydir, b 5 January 1885, d 11 May 1925 in Lviv. Agronomist and co-operative activist. He studied agronomy at Cracow University. After graduating (1909) he worked for the Prosvita society as the director of its economic section and then head of the commission that oversaw the society's holdings. He also served as a director of the Provincial Audit Union and the Silskyi Hospodar society. After the First World War he was a founder and director of the Vidbudova commercial trade association. Kuzyk contributed numerous articles on the co-operative movement and other issues (under the pseud Khliborob) to the journals Ekonomist and Samopomich and the newspaper Dilo.

Kvachevsky, Oleksander [Kvačevs'kyj], ?–1890. Legal scholar and lawyer. He took part in drafting the 1864 Russian statutes of judicial institutions, and then worked as a procurator and attorney in the reformed court system. From 1873 he practiced law in Kiev and Poltava. He wrote on Russian procedural and criminal law, law reforms, the new jury courts (prisiazhnye sudi), the Lithuanian statute, and the local laws of Chernihiv and Poltava gubernias.

Kvasnytsia, Ivan [Kvasnytsja], b 1893 in Galicia. Journalist and political leader. Kvasnytsia was a prominent member of the Ukrainian Social Democratic party and the secretary of its Central Committee. He was a coeditor of the party's organ Vpered (1919–21), and a contributor to several socialist newspapers, including Svit and Professional'nyi visnyk. Between 1927 and 1935 he was the editor of the journal Ukrains'kyi emigrant. In December 1939 he was arrested by the Soviets. Released in 1955, Kvasnytsia settled in Lviv.

Kvasnytsky, Oleksii [Kvasnyts'kyj, Oleksij], b 25 February 1900 in Lysa Hora, Yelysavethrad county, Kherson gubernia. Physiologist; from 1951 full member of the AN USSR. After graduating from the Kamianets-Podilskiy Agricultural Institute in 1925, he taught for five years at the Vinnytsia Agricultural Tekhnikum. From 1931 he worked at the Poltava Scientific Research Institute of Hog Raising, where in 1937 he became head of the physiology laboratory. From 1936 to 1972 he also chaired a department at the Poltava Agricultural Institute. His research dealt mostly with the physiology of digestion, reproduction, and lactation in farm animals. In 1945 he proposed a method of intervarietal transplantation of zygotes in swine, sheep, and rabbits.

Kvasov, Andrei, b and d ? Russian architect of the 18th century. He came to Ukraine in 1748 and designed the Rozumovsky palaces and park grounds in Kozelets (1744), Hlukhiv (1751–7), and Baturyn (1760s). He also designed the gardens in Adamivka (1748–50s) and, together with I. *Hryhorovych-Barsky, the regimental chancellery (1756) and the Church of the Nativity of the Mother of God in Kozelets (1752–64). He built four stone monuments in Nizhen during the 1760s and the municipal council building in the 1770s. He also designed the chancellery, Trinity Cathedral, palace and grounds of P. Rumiantsev, and several other official buildings in Hlukhiv, most of which have not survived. Kvasov's style combined baroque and classical elements.

Kvetsko, Dmytro [Kvec'ko], b 1935 in Stanyslaviv (now Ivano-Frankivske), Galicia. Human-rights activist. He studied history at Lviv University and worked as a history teacher. In 1967 he was tried for belonging to the *Ukrainian National Front and sentenced to 15 years' imprisonment and 5 years' exile. In 1970 he participated in a mass hunger strike of political prisoners, and in 1977 he made a declaration to the Presidium of the Supreme Soviet of the USSR renouncing his Soviet citizenship.

Kviring, Emmanuil, b 13 September 1888 in Frezental, Samara gubernia, d 26 November 1937. Soviet party and state official of German origin. Before the 1917 Revolution he was the secretary of the Russian Bolshevik faction in the 4th Russian State Duma. As secretary of the Bolsheviks' Katerynoslav ('right') faction in 1918, he advocated the separation of the Katerynoslav region from Ukraine and its unification with the *Donets-Kryvyi Rih Republic. Kviring opposed the establishment of a separate Communist party in Ukraine and, as first secretary of the CP(B)U in 1923–5, he was reluctant to pursue the policy of *Ukrainization and even condemned it. From 1925 he held important USSR government posts. Arrested during the *Yezhov terror, he disappeared without trace. He was posthumously rehabilitated in 1956.

Kvitka. Name of a prominent Cossack family in Slobidka Ukraine. Semen was the captain of Kharkiv regiment (1672), then a regimental judge. His son Hryhorii (ca 1670–1734) was also a colonel of Kharkiv regiment (1713). Ivan (d 1751), Hryhorii's son, was a colonel of Izium regiment in 1743 and the grandfather of H. *Kvitka-Osnovianenko.

Klyment Kvitka

Hryhorii Kvitka-Osnovianenko

Kvitka, Klyment, b 4 February 1880 in Khmeliv, Poltava gubernia, d 19 September 1953 in Moscow. Noted ethnomusicologist and founder of the sociological approach in the study of Ukrainian music. After studying law at Kiev University (1897–1902), he worked as a lawyer until 1917 in Tbilisi, Kiev, and elsewhere in Ukraine, and published a two-volume study on electoral rights (St Petersburg 1906). At the same time he avidly pursued his lifelong metier of transcribing and publishing folk songs and music he collected throughout Ukraine. In 1907 he married the writer Lesia *Ukrainka. He transcribed and edited a two-volume collection of 229 folk melodies sung by his wife (Kiev 1917–18). In September 1917 he became a member of the Music Division of the Arts Administration of the UNR Secretariat of Education. In 1918 he became a professor at the Lysenko Music and Drama Institute in Kiev.

Under Soviet rule, he became the deputy head of the Ethnographic Section of the VUAN Ukrainian Scientific Society in 1920. He founded the VUAN Cabinet of Musical Ethnography in 1922 and directed it until 1933. In 1922 he also published an important collection of 743 Ukrainian folk melodies, 685 of which he himself collected and transcribed. Over 40 of his ethnomusicological works appeared in Kiev during the years 1923–30: a pioneering program for studying the activities and way of life of professional folk bards and musicians in Ukraine (1924) and seminal articles in serials such as Pervisne hromadianstvo ta ioho perezhytky na Ukraini, Muzyka, Etnohrafichniy visnyk, Ukraina, Zapysky Etnohrafichnoho tovarystva, Pobut, and Zapysky Istorychno filolohichnoho viddilu VUAN. In 1930 he published a long article about M. Lysenko's folkloric legacy in Zbirnyk Muzeiu diiachiv nauky ta mystetstva Ukrainy. He also annotated the 1923–4 seven-volume edition of Lesia Ukrainka's works.

In 1933, during the Stalinist terror, Kvitka was forced to move to Moscow and then was exiled to Karaganda and Alma-Ata in Kazakhstan. In 1936 he was allowed to return to Moscow, where he became an associate of the Music Institute at the conservatory, organized and directed there, from 1937, the Cabinet for the Study of the Musical Creativity of the Peoples of the USSR, and became, in 1940, a member of the Chair of Musical Folklore. After 1930 he published only two brief articles. After his death, his articles about I. Franko as a performer of folk songs and about Lesia Ukrainka's musical-folklore legacy appeared in collections in Kiev in 1956.

Kvitka left behind an archive of almost 6,000 folk songs and 74 scholarly works, totaling 3,364 manuscript pages; they are preserved at the archives of the Cabinet of Folk Music, the Conservatory, the Central Museum of Musical Culture of the USSR (which he founded) in Moscow, and at the AN USSR Institute of Fine Art, Folklore, and Ethnography in Kiev. After Stalin's death, several articles about him were published in Ukraine, particularly in the magazine Narodna tvorchist' ta etnografia, but it was not until the 1960s that one of his ethnomusicological works was published again.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Kvitka, K. Izbrannye trudy v dvukh tomakh, ed V. Goshovskii, 2 vols (Moscow 1971, 1973)
 Ivanyts'kyi, A. 'Klyment Vasylovych Kvitka (Do 100-richchia z dnia narodzhennia),' Ukrains'ke muzykoznavstvo, 15 (1980)
 Kvitka, K. Vybrani pratsi (Kiev 1985)

M. Hnatiukivsky

Kvitka-Osnovianenko, Hryhorii [Kvitka-Osnov'janenko, Hryhorij], b 29 November 1778 in Osnova, now a suburb of Kharkiv, d 20 August 1843 in Kharkiv. Writer; cultural and civic figure. At the age of 23 he entered the Kuriazh Monastery, but after serving as a novice for 10 months he returned to secular life. His religiosity remained a constant throughout his life and is evident in his writings. On his initiative the Kharkiv Theater was established in 1812, and he served as its first director. That year he also helped found and headed the Society of Benevolence, which provided aid to indigent children. He was a benefactor of an institute for girls and served as a county marshal of the nobility (1816–28), president of the Kharkiv chamber of the criminal court (1840–3), and curator of the first public book collection in Kharkiv.

Kvitka began writing rather late in his life, first in Russian and then in Ukrainian. His Malorossiskie anekdoty (Little Russian Anecdotes) was written in 1820–2 and published in 1822. Being a member of the provincial nobility, which accepted the existing social and political order as unchangeable, Kvitka never raised in his writings the issue of social or national injustice. At first he wrote in the tradition of literary travesty represented by I. Kotliarevsky, which viewed writing in Ukrainian merely as a pleasant pastime. His first Ukrainian short story, and the first story in modern Ukrainian literature – 'Sal-dats'kyi patret: Latyns'ka pobrekhen'ka po nashomu rozkazana' (A Soldier's Portrait: A Latin Tall Tale Told in Our Tongue, 1833) – is written à la Kotliarevsky. To some extent his other humorous novelettes – Parkhymove snidannia (Parkhym's Breakfast, 1841), Pidbrekhach (The Second Matchmaker, 1843), and Kupovanyi rozum (Purchased Intelligence, 1842) – belong to the same genre.

Much more important was his collection Malorossiskie povesti (Little Russian Novelettes, 2 vols, 1834, 1837), which included 'Marusia,' 'Serdeshna Oksana' (Poor Oksana), 'Shchyna liubov' (True Love), 'Bozhi dity' (God's Children), 'Perekotypole' (The Tumbleweed), and other stories. In them he moved beyond anecdote and travesty and showed that the Ukrainian language can also be used for serious subjects. These tales had a great influence on the subsequent development of Ukrainian literature and won their author the honorary title of the 'father of Ukrainian prose.' Having plots without any social conflict, and characters who are paragons of chastity and piety, Kvitka's serious tales are typical examples of Ukrainian sentimentalism, based on both the literary and the oral tradition. Kvitka's predilection for ethnographic detail left a mark on Ukrainian prose of the 19th and even 20th century. His simple style is attributable to the generally accepted belief that to write in Ukrainian one had to view the subject through the eyes of simple folk.

Kvitka's enduring popularity as a playwright rests on the comedies Svatannia na Honcharivsi (Matchmaking at Honcharivka, 1836), Shel'menko, volostnoi pysar (Shelmenko, the District Scribe, 1831), and Shel'menko-denshchuk (Shelmenko the Orderly, 1837). He also wrote several comedies in Russian, including Priezhhii iz stolitsy, ili sumatokha v uezdnom gorode (The Newcomer from the Capital, or the Hubbub in the County Town, 1840), which some critics consider the precursor of N. Gogol's Revizor (The Inspector-General). His most popular work in Russian was the novel Pan Khaliavskii (Master Khaliavsky, 1839).

Kvitka's works have appeared in numerous editions. They belong to the Classicist period and are quite free of Romanticism, which was then coming into vogue. His major contribution was to extend the use of the Ukrainian language to 'serious' prose and to promote an interest in ethnography among his literary successors. He also wrote several historical studies of Slobidska Ukraine; most of them were published in the journal Sovremennik.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Chalyi, D. H. F. Kvitka-Osnov'ianenko (Tvorchist') (Kiev 1962)
 Honchar, O. Hryhorii Kvitka-Osnov'ianenko: Zhyttia i tvorchist' (Kiev 1969)
 Sulyma-Blokhyn, O. Kvitka i Kulish: Osnovopolozhnyky ukrains'koï noveli (Munich 1969)
 Honchar, O. Hryhorii Kvitka-Osnov'ianenko: Seminarii, 2nd rev edn (Kiev 1978)
 Luts'kyi, Iu. Dramaturhiia H. F. Kvitky-Osnov'ianenka i teatr (Kiev 1978)
 Zubkov, S. Hryhorii Kvitka-Osnov'ianenko: Zhyttia i tvorchist' (Kiev 1978)

I. Koshelivets

Kvitko, Leib, b 15 October 1890 in Holoskiv, Podilia gubernia, d 12 September 1952. Yiddish poet and novelist. Together with the poets D. Hofstein and P. Markish he made up the so-called Kiev lyric triad of Yiddish poets. His poem 'Royter Shturm' (The Red Storm, 1918) was the first Yiddish work about the October Revolution. From 1920 to 1925 Kvitko lived and published in Germany. From 1926 to 1936 he lived in Kharkiv, working as a journal editor, and wrote mostly children's stories and poems. Four collections of his work were translated into Ukrainian and published in 1930-2 and 1958. He was arrested in Moscow in 1949 during one of Stalin's purges and executed with 30 other Yiddish writers. He was posthumously 'rehabilitated' in 1954.

Kvitkovska, Mariia [Kvitkovs'ka, Marija], b 19 February 1915 in Chernivtsi. Community activist and pedagogue; wife of D. *Kvitkovsky. She studied at the University of Chernivtsi before emigrating to Germany in 1941 and to the United States in 1949. She continued her studies at the University of Detroit and was a professor of sociology there from 1962 to 1980. She was the head of the *Ukrainian Gold Cross of America in 1958-82 and since 1982 has been the head of the *World Federation of Ukrainian Women's Organizations.

Denys Kvitkovsky

Mykola Kybalchych

Kvitkovsky, Denys [Kvitkovs'kyj] (pseud: D. Kyrylchuk), b 22 May 1909 in Sherivtsi Dolishni, Bukovyna, d 15 March 1979 in Detroit. Lawyer, editor, and political activist. He became a leading member of the Ukrainian nationalist movement in Bukovyna while still a student at Chernivtsi University. He was the editor of the nationalist weekly **Samostiinist** (1934-7) and a coeditor of the monthly **Samostiina dumka** (1931-7) in Chernivtsi. Imprisoned for his activities by the Rumanian authorities, he emigrated to Germany in 1940 and joined the executive of the Ukrainian National Alliance in Berlin. In 1949 he immigrated to the United States and started a law practice in Detroit. He was a contributor to Ukrains'ke slovo in Paris and the editor of Samostiina Ukraïna in Chicago (1976-9). He was a leading member of the OUN (Melnyk faction) and head of the Leadership of Ukrainian Nationalists in 1977-9. He wrote a number of political essays, including Natsiia, derzhava, i provid u 'Natsiokratiï' Mykoly Stsibors'koho (Nation, State, and Leadership in Mykola Stsiborsky's 'Nationocracy,' 1943) and Represii v Ukraïni v svitli mizhnarodnoi konventsii pro zlochyn genotsydu (Repressions in Ukraine from the Perspective of the International Convention on Genocide, 1968). He was the coeditor of Bukovyna: Ii mynule i suchasne (Bukovyna: Its Past and Present, 1956).

A. Zhukovsky

Kybalchych, Mykola [Kybal'čyč], b 31 October 1853 in Korop, Chernihiv gubernia, d 15 April 1881 in St

Petersburg. Inventor and revolutionary. While studying in St Petersburg at the Institute of Railroad Engineers and then at the Medical-Surgical Academy, he became active in the revolutionary movement and was imprisoned in 1875 in Kiev's Lukianivka Prison. A year after his release in 1878, he organized an explosives laboratory for **Narodnaia Volia*. A bomb built by him was used in the assassination of Alexander II in 1881. He was arrested, tried, and executed at the Peter and Paul Fortress in St Petersburg. While awaiting execution he wrote a letter to the Academy of Sciences outlining his design of a rocket-propelled aircraft capable of rising beyond earth's atmosphere. This is the first recorded proposal of its kind. Kybalchych developed the idea of jet propulsion, theoretically and experimentally, before his imprisonment, but did not work out the details. Though simple, his ideas are basic to space technology. A crater on the far side of the moon has been named after him.

Kybalchych-Kozlovskia, Nadiia [Kybal'čyč-Kozlovsk'ka], b 8 May 1878 in Yasnohorod, Volhynia gubernia, d 19 September 1914 in Poltava gubernia. Writer; the daughter of M. **Nomys*. She began publishing poems and stories in 1899 in Literaturno-naukovyi vistyknik. During 1905-13 she lived in Italy and Austria with her husband and corresponded with Lesia Ukrainka. A collection of her poems (1913) and two collections of her stories (1914) were published in Kiev.

Kyi [Kyj]. Semi-legendary prince of the Polianians who, according to the Rus' Primary Chronicle, together with his brothers Shchek and Khoryv and his sister Lybed, founded the city of Kiev, which was named after him. The chronicle rejects another account that referred to him as a ferryman on the Dnieper River and relates that he had been received by the Byzantine emperor and later tried to establish the town of Kyievetz on the Danube before returning to Kiev, where he died. On the basis of the legend told in the Primary Chronicle, archeological digs conducted in Kiev in 1908 uncovered traces of settlements and fortifications. Some historians believe that Kyi lived in the early 6th century and did in fact maintain contact with the Byzantine emperor and attempt to extend his rule to the Danube.

Kyiak, Hryhorii [Kyjak, Hryhorij], b 2 January 1910 in Vynnyky, Lviv county, Galicia. Agronomist; corresponding member of the AN URSR since 1951. He finished his studies at the Lviv Polytechnical Institute in 1934 and since 1944 has directed the Chair of Crop and Meadow Culture at Lviv University. He received his doctorate in agronomy in 1956 and headed a department of the AN URSR Institute of Agrobiology (1951-60). Kyiak's scholarly works deal with crop cultivation, selective breeding, and meadow cultures. He has successfully bred several hybrids, including Halytska winter wheat, Dublinka 4 spring wheat, Lviv winter rye, and the Korychnevi feed beans. He is the author of two textbooks: Roslynnnytstvo (Crop Cultivation, 1964) and Lukivnytstvo (Meadow Culture, 1976).

Kyianytsia, Petro [Kyjanycja], b ? d 1933. Member of the Ukrainian Communist party and later of the CP(B)U. Kyianytsia worked with the historical sections of the All-Ukrainian Academy of Sciences and the All-Ukrainian Association of Marxist-Leninist Scientific Research Institutes. He specialized in modern history. In July 1933 he was arrested and shot for belonging to the fictitious Bloc of Ukrainian Nationalist Parties.

Kyidramte or Kiev Drama Theater. An experimental theater company formed by L. *Kurbas in May 1920 from among the members of the Shevchenko First Theater of the Ukrainian Soviet Republic, who left the latter as a result of artistic differences with the director, O. *Zaharov. Kyidramte's 36 members included Kurbas, D. Antonovych, H. Babiiivna, L. Boloban, Ya. Bortnyk, V. Vasylyko, L. Hakkebush, P. Dolyna, P. Haivoronsky, H. Ihnatovych, V. Kaly, F. Lopatynsky, R. Neshchadymenko, A. Smereka, V. Chyshiakova, S. Levchenko, K. Hrai, O. Lypkivsky, and L. Predslavych. The company organized an acting studio and courses in directing. For a year and a half it toured the Bila Tserkva and Uman areas, performing for Red Army units and public audiences; from April to July 1921 it performed in Kharkiv as the 'Ukrainian State Exemplary Theater' under the egis of the People's Commissariat of Education. Kyidramte's repertoire included plays originally performed by Kurbas's *Molodyi Teatr theater in 1917-18: Vertep and Ukrainian versions of F. Grillparzer's Weh dem, der lügt, Sophocles' Oedipus Rex, and M. Halbe's Jugend; the first Ukrainian production of Shakespeare's Macbeth, with Kurbas in his last stage role; C. Goldoni's Mirandolina; Haidamaky (The Haidamakas), based on T. Shevchenko's poem; Novyi redaktor (The New Editor), based on a story by Mark Twain; plays by N. Gogol, M. Kropyvnytsky, and one-act études by O. Oles and S. Vasylychenko. In July 1921 the company fell apart because of a famine in Kharkiv. Most of its actors joined Kurbas's new *Berezil theater in March 1922.

V. Revutsky

Kyiv. See Kiev.

Kyiv (Kiev). A bimonthly journal of literature, scholarship, art, criticism, and community life published in Philadelphia from 1950 to 1964. Edited and published by B. *Romanenchuk, its contributors included M. Andrusiak, S. Hordynsky, O. Dombrovsky, V. Doroshenko, R. Klymkevych, P. Kovaliv, M. Kushnir, H. Luzhnytsky, M. Ostroverkha, O. Tarnavsky, V. Chaplenko, and I. Shankovsky. It was an important forum for contemporary Ukrainian prose and poetry and translations of world literature. It was especially known for its literary criticism and reviews. Several valuable memoirs were published in it, including those of V. Blavatsky and H. Nychka.

Kyiv (Kiev). A journal of arts, literature, and politics published in Kiev in 1978-82 by the Radianskyi Pysmennyk press. The editor in chief was Yu. Bedzyk, and the editorial board consisted of P. Zahrebelny, Yu. Zbanatsky, B. Oliinyk, and P. Osadchuk. It contained original works by Ukrainian writers, art reproductions, literary criticism, publicistic works, and news of the Kiev literary scene. It served as a forum for works on or about the city of Kiev, publishing articles such as P. Biletsky's review of paintings and etchings of Kiev and H. Ivakin's article on the libraries of ancient Kiev. The journal published poetry by I. Drach, V. Kolomiets, M. Nahnybida, B. Oliinyk, P. Perebyinis, M. Upenyk, V. Shvets, and P.

Voronko; prose by Ye. Hutsalo, I. Senchenko, and V. Zemliak; and literary criticism and humor. In 1983, a monthly journal with a similar profile began publication under the same title.

Kyiv (Kiev). A monthly journal of literature, the arts, politics, and community affairs. It is the official organ of the Writers' Union of Ukraine and of the Kiev Writers' Organization. Published since 1983 in Kiev by the Radianskyi Pysmennyk publishing house, it is a forum for the latest works by Kievan writers, including poetry, prose, publicistic works, criticism, art history, essays, and memoirs. It has a children's and a humor section. The editor in chief was initially V. Drozd, but he was replaced by P. Perebyinis in March 1986. The editorial board has included some of the most influential and popular writers and critics in Ukraine today, such as M. Vinhranovsky, D. Holovko, Ye. Hutsalo, M. Zhulynsky, P. Zahrebelny, D. Mishchenko, Yu. Mushketyk, Yu. Shcherbak, D. Pavlychko, and Yu. Serdiuk. Most of these people are also regular contributors to the journal. An important feature in the journal is its translations into modern Ukrainian of several historical sources, including the *Kiev Chronicle and the Cossack chronicle of S. *Velychko (by Valerii Shevchuk).

Kyivs'ka pravda (Kiev Truth). The official organ of the Kiev oblast CPU and the oblast and city soviets in Kiev. It has been published every weekday since 28 October 1943. Earlier organs of the Kiev oblast or city Party organization included Golos sotsial-demokrata and Proletarskaia mysl' (1917), Kievskii kommunist (1918-19), Kommunist (1919-21), and Proletars'ka pravda (1921-41), which was published in Russian until 1925.

Kylymnyk, Oleh, b 26 July 1913 in Yampil, Kiev gubernia. Soviet literary scholar. A graduate of the Odessa Pedagogical Institute, he completed graduate work at the AN URSS Institute of Literature in 1948 and worked there as a learned secretary and senior scholarly associate. From 1949 to 1960 he also directed the Chair of Literature at the CC CPU Higher Party School and then directed the Chair of Editing Theory and Practice at the Ukrainian Printing Institute before becoming the director of the Chair of Literature at the Kiev Institute of Culture. He has written many articles about Soviet Ukrainian literature, books about A. Holovko, O. Honchar, H. Epik, O. Kopylenko, and Yu. Yanovsky, and a monograph about Soviet Ukrainian literature, Romantyka pravdy (The Romanticism of Truth, 1964). Seven collections of his literary criticism have also been published.

Kylymnyk, Stepan, b 5 January 1890 in Yakushyntsi, Vinnytsia county, Podilia gubernia, d 9 May 1963 in Toronto. Ethnographer and publicist. Kylymnyk studied history and ethnography at the Vinnytsia Pedagogical Institute and at Kharkiv University. In the interwar period he worked for the Commissariat of Education of the Ukrainian SSR. He moved to Galicia in 1943 and in 1949 emigrated to Canada. He is the author of Ukrains'kyi rik u narodnykh zvychaiakh v istorychnomu osvittenni (Folk Customs of the Ukrainian Calendar Year in Historical Perspective, 5 vols, 1955-62) and numerous popular articles on history and ethnography in such journals as Novi dni and Porohy.

Kymbarovsky, Mykhailo [Kymbarovs'kyj, Myxajlo], b 15 December 1897 in Katerynoslav (now Dnipropetrovsk), d 5 November 1966 in Dnipropetrovsk. Physician. A graduate of the Dnipropetrovsk Medical Institute (1923), Kymbarovsky was a professor of surgery at the Ivanovo (1935–44) and Dnipropetrovsk (1944–66) medical institutes. He wrote a number of works dealing with the surgical treatment of groin ruptures, stomach resection, and the use of Filatov pedicles for the surgical treatment of cleft palate.

Yurii Kyporenko-Domansky

Vitalii Kyreiko

Kyporenko-Domansky, Yurii [Kyporenko-Domans'kyj, Jurij], b 24 March 1888 in Kharkiv, d 6 August 1955 in Kiev. Opera singer (dramatic tenor). He made his debut with O. Sukhodolsky's troupe in 1907, then worked with the companies of P. Saksahansky and D. Haidamaka. After singing with Russian companies in Moscow (1913–17) and Saratov (1918–21), he returned to Ukraine, where he performed with the Odessa and Kharkiv operas before becoming a permanent soloist at the Kiev Theater of Opera and Ballet in 1939. His main roles included José in Bizet's Carmen; the title roles in R. Wagner's Lohengrin, Tristan und Isolde, and Tannhäuser, and G. Verdi's Othello; and Andrii in Taras Bulba and Taras in Christmas Night, both by M. Lysenko.

Kypriian, Myron [Kyprijan], b 27 July 1930 in Lviv. Stage designer. A graduate of the Lviv Institute of Applied and Decorative Art (1954), where he studied with V. Manastyrsky, Kypriian first worked in the Lviv Puppet Theater, and in 1957 was appointed chief set designer of the Lviv Ukrainian Drama Theater. He designed the sets for classics of Ukrainian drama such as an adaptation of T. Shevchenko's Haidamaky (Haidamakas, 1964), I. Tobilevych's Khaziain (The Master, 1970), and I. Franko's Ukradene shchastia (Stolen Happiness, 1976); for Soviet plays such as M. Zarudny's Veselka (The Rainbow, 1958), I. Kocherha's Im'ia (Name, 1959), O. Levada's Favst i smert' (Faust and Death, 1960), and M. Kulish's Maklena Grassa (1966); and for European plays such as E. Remarque's Die letzte Station (1958), H. Lovinescu's Citadela sfărîmată (The Crumbling Citadel, 1961), W. Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet (1964, at the Lviv Young Spectator's Theater), King Lear (1969), and Richard III (1974), A. Fredro's Damy i huzary (Ladies and Hussars, 1976), and an adaptation of G. Boccaccio's Decameron (1982).

Kyrchiv, Bohdan [Kyrčiv], b 12 June 1856 in Korchyn, Stryi county, Galicia, d 19 October 1900 in Dovhe, Stryi county. Writer. In the 1880s and 1890s his poetry and stories appeared in Zoria and other Galician periodicals. He also translated Russian and German plays that were staged in Galicia. Some of his poems were put to music by O. Nyzhankivsky and V. Matiuk.

Kyrchiv, Roman [Kyrčiv], b 14 April 1930 in Korchyn, Sokal county, Galicia. Ethnographer and literary scholar. He is chairman of the Ethnography Department of the Lviv branch of the AN URSS Institute of Fine Arts, Folklore, and Ethnography. A specialist in the history of the theater in Western Ukraine and on the work of P. Saksahansky, I. Rubchak, and Y. Stadnyk, Kurchiv has written such works as Komedii Ivana Franka (The Comedies of Ivan Franko, 1961), Ukraïnika v pol's'kykh al'manakhakh doby romantyzmu (Ucrainica in Polish Almanacs of the Romantic Period, 1965), Ukraïns'kyi fol'klor u pol's'kii literaturi (Ukrainian Folklore in Polish Literature, 1971), and Etnohrafichne doslidzhennia Boikivshchyny (Ethnographic Research on the Boiko Region, 1978).

Kyrdan, Borys, b 25 September 1922 in Hanno-Leontovycheve, Kherson gubernia. Folklorist; literary scholar. A graduate of Moscow University (1951), in 1953 he joined the Institute of World Literature of the USSR Academy of Sciences in Moscow. At present, he chairs the Department of Russian Literature at Moscow Pedagogical Institute. Noted for his thorough use of archival materials, his chief works are Ukraïnskie narodnye dumy xv–nach. xvii v. (Ukrainian Folk Dumas of the 15th–Early 17th Centuries, 1962), Ukraïnskii narodnyi epos (The Ukrainian Folk Epos, 1965), and Sobirатели narodnoi poezii: Iz istorii ukrainskoi fol'kloristiki xix v. (Collectors of Folk Poetry: From the History of Ukrainian Folklore Studies, 19th Century, 1974). He also coauthored Narodni spivtsi-muzykanty na Ukraïni (Folk Bards-Musicians in Ukraine, 1980) and compiled the collection Ukraïnskie narodnye dumy (Ukrainian Folk Dumas, 1972).

Kyreiko, Vitalii [Kyrejko, Vitalij], b 23 December 1926 in Shyroke, Dnipropetrovsk oblast. Composer and pedagogue. Upon graduating in 1949 from the Kiev Conservatory, where he studied with L. Revutsky, he became a lecturer there. He has written the operas Forest Song, an adaptation of the play by Lesia Ukrainka (1957), On Sunday Morning She Gathered Herbs, an adaptation of the novelette by O. Kobylianska (1966), and Marko in Hell (1966); the ballets Shadows of Forgotten Ancestors, an adaptation of the novelette by M. Kotsiubynsky (1960), The Witch (1967), and The Orgy (1977), based on the play by Lesia Ukrainka; a choral cantata for male voice in memory of M. Kropyvnytsky (libretto by M. Rylsky, 1965); concertos for cello and orchestra (1961) and for violin and orchestra (1967); and piano variations on the themes of L. Revutsky (1952). He has also written a number of symphonies, overtures, string quartets, and piano, choir, and solo voice compositions to the words of T. Shevchenko, I. Franko, Lesia Ukrainka, and others, and several arrangements of folk songs and music.

Kyrnarsky, Marko [Kyrnars'kyj], b 23 May 1893 in Pohar, Briansk county, Orel gubernia, Russia, d 1941 in Leningrad. Graphic artist. A student of Yu. *Narbut, in 1920–3 he worked in Kiev as a book designer. He designed the covers for T. Shevchenko's Kobzar (1921) and Persha v'iazochka bublykiiv (The First String of Rolls, 1921), a frontispiece for the journal Grono (1920), and the cover for the journal Shliakhy mystetstva (1922). Moving to Leningrad in 1923, he continued to work for Ukrainian publishers, designing such books as the works of T. Shevchenko, I. Tobilevych (6 vols, 1929–31), and M. Kotsiubynsky (1929). He also designed Russian books such as E. Gollerbakh's Syluety Narbuta (Narbut's Silhouettes, 1926) and A. Blok's Neizdannnye Stikhotvorennia, 1897–1919 (Unpublished Poems, 1897–1919, 1926). In 1928 E. Gollerbakh published a monograph on Kyrnarsky's graphic art.

Kyrnasivka. Town smt (1979 pop 6,000) in Tulchyn raion, Vinnytsia oblast. It was first mentioned in the early 18th century as the town of Krasnopilia. It has two sugar refineries and plants producing reinforced-concrete structures and asphalt.

Kyrychenko, Fedir [Kyryčenko], b 1 March 1904 in Vladyslavka, Kaniv county, Kiev gubernia. Agricultural biologist; full member of the All-Union Academy of Agricultural Sciences since 1956. A graduate of the Maslivka Institute of Selection and Seeding (1928), he was an associate of the Odessa Institute of Selection and Seeding from 1944, serving as its director in 1954–69. Kyrychenko's research has focused on the seeding of grain crops. He developed a number of methods for hybridization with free fertilization and for selecting crops according to the strength of their root systems. Under his direction, the Odessa institute developed several new varieties of high-yield and cold- and drought-resistant winter wheat. Kyrychenko also developed new varieties of hard winter wheat for the steppes; his Odessa Jubilee yields 35–40 centners of grain per ha.

Kyrychenko, Illia [Kyryčenko, Illja], b 19 July 1889 in Riabukhy, Konotip county, Chernihiv gubernia, d 13 July 1955 in Kiev. Lexicographer; corresponding member of the AN USSR from 1951. A graduate of the Nizhen Institute (1914), from 1918 he worked as a teacher in Lubni and Kiev. In 1931 he joined the AN USSR Institute of Linguistics, becoming the director of its dictionary department in 1946. From 1936 he was also a professor of classical philology at Kiev University. Kyrychenko wrote or compiled over 40 lexicographic works and edited many others. He was the author of the institute's Ukrainian dictionary of medical terminology (1936); co-compiler of its Russian-Ukrainian dictionary (1948); the chief editor of its Ukrainian-Russian dictionary (6 vols, 1953–63; vols 2–6 published posthumously) and Ukrainian-Russian dictionary of personal names (1954); coauthor of the official Soviet Ukrainian orthography of 1946; and author of several editions of a Soviet Ukrainian orthographic dictionary from 1946, the fullest being the 1955 edition. He also founded and edited the first five issues of the AN USSR serial Leksykohrafichnyi biuleten' (1951–5).

Kyrychenko, Oleksii [Kyryčenko, Oleksij], b 25 February 1908 in Chornobaivka khutir, near Kherson, d 29 December 1975 in Moscow. Soviet party and state official. He worked in the cc CP(B)U apparatus from 1938 and as a political officer in the armed forces during the Second World War. He was second secretary of the cc CPU (1949–53). After J. Stalin's death he was the first Ukrainian head of the cc CPU (1953–7), member of the cc CPU Presidium (1952–7), and candidate member (1953–5) and full member (1955–60) of the cc CPSU Presidium. N. Khrushchev's protégé and a very influential member of the CPSU secretariat, he was demoted in 1960.

Kyrychenko, Stepan [Kyryčenko], b 9 April 1911 in Chopovychi, Radomyshl county, Kiev gubernia. Monumentalist painter and mosaicist. A graduate of the Kiev State Art Institute (1949), where he studied with F. Krychevsky, S. Naliepinska-Boichuk, and M. Rokytsky, he prefers to do mosaics and often collaborates with N. Klein. He took part in painting the main pavilion and the Ukrainian pavilion at the Exhibition of Economic Achievements of the USSR in Moscow in 1955. With N. Klein he made mosaics such as The Harvest (1957), Our Duma, Our Song (1960), A Hutsul Melody (1963), Shevchenko (a triptych by N. Klein and S. and R. Kyrychenko, 1964), and Ukraine (1969). An album of Kyrychenko and Klein's works was published in 1970.

Kyrylenko, Ivan, b 2 December 1902 in Viazivok, Katerynoslav gubernia, d 20 October 1939? Socialist-realist writer. In the 1920s he belonged to the writers' groups *Pluh and the All-Ukrainian Association of Proletarian Writers. He began publishing in 1923 and wrote several story collections; the novellas Kursy (Courses, 1927), Kucheriavi dni (Luxuriant Days, 1928), Natysk (Pressure, 1930), Pereshykhtovka (The Shift Change, 1932), and Avanposty (Outposts, 1933); and the novel Vesna (Spring, 1936). A member of the presidium of the Writers' Union of Ukraine, he was arrested and disappeared during the Yezhov terror. A book of his selected works was published in 1960 in Kiev.

Yevhen Kyryliuk

Kyryliuk, Yevhen [Kyryljuk, Jevhen], b 18 March 1902 in Warsaw. Slavist and literary critic; professor at Kiev University from 1944 and corresponding member of the AN USSR from 1957. A graduate of the Kiev Institute of People's Education (1926), he became an associate of the AN USSR Institute of Literature; from 1944 he headed its Department of Shevchenko Studies. A prominent specialist in 19th-century Ukrainian literature, he has written books on P. Kulish (1929) (and compiled a bibliography of his works [1929]), P. Myrny (1930, 1939), T. Shevchenko (1951), I. Franko (1956, 1966), Lesia Ukrainka (1966), V. Karadžić and Ukrainian literature (1978), and I. Kotliarevsky (1969, 1982). He has also written the studies Ukrains'ki pys'mennyky – revoliutsiini demokratsy i literatury zakhidnykh i pivdennykh slov'ians'kykh narodiv u XIX stolitti (Ukrainian Writers – Revolutionary Democrats and the Literatures of the West and South Slavic Peoples in the 19th Century, 1963) and Ukrains'kyi romantyzm u ty-polohichnomu zistavlenni z literaturamy zakhidno- i pivden-noslov'ians'kykh narodiv (Ukrainian Romanticism in Typological Comparison with the Literatures of the Western and Southern Slavic Peoples, 1973). A study of Ukrainian literature (1945) he wrote with S. Maslov was harshly criticized as 'nationalist' and banned. He was also the editor in chief of the complete edition of Shevchenko's works (6 vols, 1963–4) and the Shevchenko dictionary (2 vols, 1976–7). Collections of his literary articles were published in 1969, 1972, and 1977.

I. Koshelivets

Kyrylivka. See Shevchenkove.

Kyrylivska settlement. A late paleolithic archeological site discovered on Kyrylivska (now Frunze) Street in Kiev. It was excavated by V. Khvoika and Ya. Armashevsky in 1893–1903. They found two archeological strata. The lower stratum, from the early Magdalenian period, contained traces of fires, flint implements, piles of mammoth bones, some of them with ornamental carvings, and other animal bones. The upper stratum, from the late Magdalenian period, yielded implements, the bones of bears, lions, wolves, and gluttons, and petrified coal. The bones were used to build shelters.

Kyrylo Kozhumiaka [Kožum'jaka]. A mythical dragon slayer in Ukrainian folk legends dating from the time of Kievan Rus'. Numerous tales about him were written down in the 19th and 20th centuries. As a symbol of the might of the Ukrainian people, he was endowed with tremendous physical strength, which enabled him to kill in a duel the dragon (ie, Asiatic hordes) that had conquered Kiev, thus freeing the Kievan lands from rendering tribute (in the form of human sacrifice) and a princess from certain death. Variations of the legend have connected the locale of Kozhumiaky in Kiev and the ancient Zmiiovi Valy ('Dragon's Ramparts') south of Kiev with the legend. The figure of Kyrylo Kozhumiaka was re-created in the works of O. Oles, P. Tychyna, I. Kocherha, and other writers.

Kyselivka (also known as Zamkova Hora and Florivska Hora). A hill rising above the Podil district of Kiev on the right bank of the Dnieper River. Excavations at the end of the 19th century uncovered traces of a settlement from the period of the *Trypilian culture (3rd millennium BC), one from the early Iron Age (5th–4th centuries BC), and another from the early Slavic period of the Zarybntsi culture. Scholars believe that the founder of Kiev, *Kyj, had a residence there. Archeologists discovered that in the period of Kievan Rus' a princely palace stood on the hill and that the vicinity was inhabited by merchants and artisans who manufactured bone, clay, copper, bronze, and iron articles. In the 1470s a large wooden castle was built there for the Lithuanian palatine (hence the name Zamkova Hora [Castle Hill]), and the Podil became the administrative center of Kiev. In the mid-17th century the hill came to be known as Kyselivka after the Polish palatine A. *Kysil. The castle was destroyed by rebellious Cossacks in 1651. From 1816 a cemetery existed there. In the mid-19th century the hill was acquired by the St Florus Women's Monastery (hence the name Florivska Hora [Florus's Hill]).

Kyselov (Kiselev), Leonid [Kysel'ov] (Kisel'ov), b 1946 in Kiev, d October 1968 in Kiev. Poet. The son of a Russian writer, he began writing in Russian in 1959 and published his first poems in the journal Novyi mir in 1963. His Shevchenko-like negative portrayal of Peter I and the Russian tsars in general in his poem 'Tsari' (The Tsars, 1963) elicited indignant hostility from Russian chauvinist circles. His critically acclaimed Russian and Ukrainian verse was published in two bilingual collections: Stikhi – Virshi (Poems, 1970) and Poslednaia pesnia – Ostannia pisnia (The Last Song, 1979). His Ukrainian poems show the influence of T. Shevchenko and the early P. Tychyna. Kyselov's switch from writing in Russian to writing in Ukrainian in the last years before his death from leukemia was an exception to recent trends.

Kyselov, Oleksander [Kysel'ov], b 29 March 1903 in Satanivka, Podilia gubernia, d 24 February 1967 in Kiev. Literary critic. After completing graduate studies at Kiev University (1936), he worked as a senior scholar at the AN URSR Institute of Literature. His first essay was published in 1926. He wrote books on P. Hrabovsky (1940, 1948, 1951, and 1959) and coauthored a book about I. Franko (1956) with O. Biletsky and I. Bass.

Kyselov, Yosyp [Kysel'ov, Josyp], b 15 March 1905 in Shyraiivka, near Briansk, Russia, d 3 June 1980 in Kiev. Writer and literary critic. His first collection of poetry was published in Russian in 1928. After the Second World War, his writing consisted mainly of literary and dramatic criticism, which was published in several collections, including Konflikty i kharaktery (Conflicts and Characters, 1953), Teatral'ni portrety (Theatrical Portraits, 1955), Epichna poeziiia (Epic Poetry, 1958), Dramaturhy Ukraïny (Ukraine's Playwrights, 1967), Razom z zhyttiam (Together with Life, 1972), and Maistry teatral'noi literatury (Masters of Theatrical Literature, 1976).

Kyshka or Kishka, Lev [Kyška] (secular name: Luka), b 1663 (1668 according to other sources) in Kovel, Volhynia, d 1728 in Volodymyr-Volynskyi, Volhynia. Uniate metropolitan of Kiev. After his ordination he studied at the Collegium Propaganda Fide in Rome (1687–91). He was protoarchimandrite of the Basilian order in 1703–13 and consecrated bishop of Volodymyr and Berestia in 1711. As bishop he proved to be an able administrator and organizer of religious education; among other schools he founded a theological seminary in Volodymyr-Volynskyi. In 1714 he was elected metropolitan of Kiev. His most important act as metropolitan was the organization of the *Synod of Zamostia in 1720, which ratified several reforms in the organization and creed of the Uniate church. His works include O Sakramentakh (About the Holy Sacraments, 1697), a Polish translation of the sermons of Metropolitan I. Potii (1714), and a book about the Zamostia Synod, published in Rome in Latin (1724). His correspondence with the Vatican was published by A. Velyky (Welykyj) in 1959.

Kyshynivsky, Solomon [Kyšynivs'kyj], b 1862 in Odessa, d 1942 in Odessa. Painter. He studied at the Odessa School of Painting (1879–83) and at art academies in Munich, Paris, and Rome. His early genre paintings were influenced by the *Peredvizhniki – eg, The Request (1889), A Morning in the Cold (1897), The Quarrel (1904), and The Card Game (1906) – but later his work became more impressionistic. He joined the Association of Revolutionary Art of Ukraine in 1925 and the Union of Contemporary Artists of Ukraine in 1934 and participated in their exhibitions. In 1927–9 he painted a series of three works about the Revolution of 1905: The Revolt on the Battleship Potemkin, The Final Minutes of Matiushenko, and Lieutenant Shmidt Bids His Son Farewell.

Adam Kysil

Kysil, Adam [Kysil'], b 1600, d 3 May 1653. Ukrainian statesman and diplomat in the Polish Commonwealth. Kysil was born into a prominent Orthodox noble family in Volhynia. He was educated at the Zamostia Academy, where he befriended the famous Polish statesman T. Zamoyski, who later helped him in his political and diplomatic career. From 1617 he served in the military, gaining prominence for his successes in the Polish wars with the Ottoman Empire, Muscovy, and Sweden. He also gained a reputation at the court as an effective negotiator. He was sent as the envoy of King Zygmunt III to the Kiev Church Synod of 1629, which had been convened to reconcile the Orthodox and Uniate churches. In local dietines and in the Diet, he defended the interests and rights of the Orthodox church, although he was always able to maintain close contacts with Uniate and Roman Catholic leaders, despite the atmosphere of distrust that existed at the time. In 1637 he was sent to negotiate an end to the Cossack rebellion led by P. Pavliuk, but Poland later reneged on the agreements and ruthlessly repressed the Cossacks. From 1649, he was one of the central figures in the negotiations to end the uprising led by B. Khmelnytsky. He helped conclude the agreements reached in Pereiaslav (February 1649), Zboriv (August 1649), and Bila Tserkva (September 1651), and tried to find a compromise between the Poles and the Cossacks. Following the signing of the Treaty of *Bila Tserkva, he was appointed voivode of Kiev to supervise the implementation of the terms of the agreement. During his career, Kysil received many honors and was appointed to a variety of administrative posts: castellan of Chernihiv (1639), senator (1641), castellan of Kiev and Bratslav voivodeships (1646), and Kievan voivode. He was able to use his positions to amass a great fortune and became one of the richest men in Ukraine with large estates in Volhynia, Kiev, and Chernihiv voivodeships. He was buried in his family's church in Nyzkynychi, Volhynia. A supporter of the political and social system of the Polish Commonwealth, Kysil strove unsuccessfully to find a compromise between the Orthodox and the Uniates, and between the Polish government and the Zaporozhian Host.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Sysyn, F. Between Poland and Ukraine: The Dilemma of Adam Kysil, 1600–1653 (Cambridge, Mass 1985)

A. Zhukovsky

Kysil, Oleksander [Kysil'] (pen name of O. Kyselov), b 27 March 1889 in Krasylivka, Chernihiv gubernia, d 28 November 1942? Theater critic and pedagogue. He developed an interest in Ukrainian culture under the influence of M. *Kotsiubynsky. He studied at St Petersburg University (1907–12) and was involved in St Petersburg in the *Philanthropic Society for Publishing Generally Useful and Inexpensive Books. He lectured on the history of Ukrainian theater at Kiev University (1918) and the Kiev Music and Drama Institute (from 1922), directed the Theater Section of the vUAN Institute of the Ukrainian Language, and was a senior associate of the vUAN Museum of Theater. He is the author of the popular studies Ukrains'kyi vertep (The Ukrainian Vertep Theater, 1918) and Shliakhy rozvytku ukrains'koho teatru (The Paths of Development of Ukrainian Theater, 1920); the monographs Ukrains'kyi teatr (Ukrainian Theater, 1925) and Karpo Solenyk (1928); and articles on the history of theater and reviews in Soviet Ukrainian periodicals. He was arrested during the Stalinist terror in 1937 and his further fate is unknown. A collection of his selected works, many of them abridged, was published in Kiev in 1968.

Olena Kysilevska; portrait by M. Dmytrenko

Kysilevska, Olena [Kysilevs'ka] (née Simenovykh; pseud: O. Halychanka, Kalyna, Neznana), b 24 March 1869 in Monastyrska, Buchach county, Galicia, d 29 March 1956 in Ottawa. Editor, community activist, and writer. She became active in the Ukrainian women's movement as a gymnasium student in Stanyslaviv when she joined the Society of Ruthenian Women organized by N. *Kobrynska in 1884. She began publishing short stories and articles on education and women's rights in almanacs and journals in 1910, and from 1912 she edited a women's page in the newspaper Dilo. During the First World War she was a member of the Red Cross relief committee for prisoners and the wounded in Vienna. After the war she became a member of the executive of the Union of Ukrainian Women in Lviv. In 1925–39 she published and edited the semimonthly Zhinocha dolia in Kolomyia. She traveled extensively throughout Western Europe and North America (1924), participating in the international women's movement and organizing Ukrainian women's organizations. Several of these trips were described in the travelogues Lysty z-nad Chornoho moria (Letters from the Black Sea Coast, 1939) and Po ridnomu kraiu (Around My Native Land, 1951). She was an active member of the Ukrainian National Democratic Alliance and was elected to two terms in the Polish Senate (1928–35). From 1935 she headed the women's section of the *Sil'skyi Hospodar society in Lviv. After fleeing Ukraine during the Second World War, she lived as a displaced person in Western Europe until she immigrated to Canada in 1948 and joined her son V. *Kaye-Kysilewsky. That same year she was elected the first president of the *World Federation of Ukrainian Women's Organizations, a position she held until her death. Her personal archive is now located in the Public Archives of Canada and its holdings are described in a research report, The Olena Kysilevska Collection (1985), published by the Canadian Institute of Ukrainian Studies.

B. Balan

Kysilevsky, Kost [Kysilevs'kyj, Kost'], b 23 February 1890 in Roshniv, Tovmach county, Galicia, d 20 September 1974 in Irvington, New Jersey. Linguist and pedagogue; full member of the Shevchenko Scientific Society from 1932 and of the Ukrainian Academy of Arts and Sciences from 1948. A graduate of the Universities of Leipzig and Vienna (PH D 1912), Kysilevsky taught in several gymnasiums and teachers' seminaries in Galicia in the interwar period. He immigrated to Germany in 1944, where he was appointed professor of the Ukrainian Free University in 1945. In 1949 he moved to the United States. His publications include a number of textbooks of Ukrainian, didactic works, and a Ukrainian-Polish-Ukrainian dictionary (compiled with Ye. Hrytsak, 1930–1). His study of the language of the *Hankenstein Codex appeared in Zapysky Naukovoho tovarystva im. Shevchenka, vol 161, and his description of the dialects of the Dniester and Prut basins appeared in vol 162. He also proposed a revision of the classification of Ukrainian dialects.

Kysilevsky, Volodymyr. See Kaye-Kysilewsky, Vladimir.

Kytasty, Hryhorii [Kytastyj, Hryhorij], b 17 January 1907 in Kobeliaky, Poltava gubernia, d 6 April 1984 in San Diego, California. Banduryst, composer, and conductor. He studied at the Poltava Musical Tekhnikum (1927–30) and the Lysenko Music and Drama School in Kiev (1930–5, under M. Hrinchenko, L. Revutsky, and V. Kosenko). He was a member of the State Banduryst Kapelle of the Ukrainian SSR from its inception in 1935, serving as concertmaster and assistant artistic director (from 1937). In 1941 Kytasty was conscripted into the Red Army and captured by the Germans. He soon managed to escape and return to Kiev, where he founded and became the first director of the Shevchenko Ukrainian Banduryst Kapelle, which reunited many of the original members of the State Banduryst Kapelle. This group was for a time interned in a Nazi concentration camp, but was subsequently allowed to tour Ukrainian *Ostarbeiter camps in Western Europe. A displaced person after the war, he performed as a soloist and with the kapelle throughout Western Europe, touring Ukrainian displaced persons camps and organizing bandura classes. He immigrated to the United States in 1949 and settled in Detroit with the entire ensemble, which was renamed the *Ukrainian Bandurist Chorus. He served as the conductor and director of the chorus to 1954, in 1958–9, and from 1967 to his death. Kytasty wrote countless original works and arrangements of folk songs for choir and bandura accompaniment, solo bandura, choir and piano, and bandura orchestra. He also composed several dumasy and put the works of various Ukrainian poets to music, including T. Shevchenko, I. Bahriany, O. Oles, B. Oleksandriv, and V. Symonenko. Many of his compositions have entered the repertoire of almost every bandura ensemble in the West, especially the haunting instrumental piece Sound of the Steppe. Kytasty was a tireless propagator of the bandura art. He taught numerous courses and seminars on the bandura and influenced an entire generation of bandurysts in North America.

Hryhorii Kytasty

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Samchuk, U. Zhyvi struny. Bandura i bandurysty (Detroit 1976)
Hurs'kyi, Ia. (ed). Zbirnyk na poshanu Hryhorii Kytastoho u 70-richchia z dnia narodzhennia (New York 1980)

W. Wytwycky

Kyveliuk, Ivan [Kyveljuk], b 1866 in Galicia, d 1 March 1922 in Lviv. Civic and political leader. From 1908 to 1918 Kyveliuk was a deputy to the Galician Sejm. He was also a leading member of the *Prosvita society in Lviv and its president from 1910 to 1922. Under his presidency, the society reached the peak of its development. Its educational programs were expanded and the society began working with the Lviv Sil'skyi Hospodar society in improving agriculture. In the early 1920s Kyveliuk was imprisoned by the Polish authorities and he died shortly after his release.

Kyzia, Luka [Kuzja], b 21 February 1912 in Zhykhove, Novhorod-Siverskyi county, Chernihiv gubernia, d 29 December 1974 in Kiev. Party functionary and Soviet diplomat. During the Second World War he was the political commissar of a partisan detachment in Volhynia and the secretary of the underground Rivne oblast committee of the СР(Б)У. He was the head of the Ukrainian Society for Cultural Relations with Foreign Countries (1951–6), deputy minister of higher and specialized secondary education (1956–9, 1964–7), and permanent representative of the Ukrainian SSR at the United Nations (1961–4). He was also associated with the AN URSR Institute of History. There he wrote several propagandistic works on the partisan movement during the Second World War and the anti-émigré Pravdy ne zat'maryty: Proty burzhuažnoï fal'syfikatsii istorii partyzans'koho rukhu (One Cannot Obscure the Truth: Against Bourgeois Falsification of the History of the Partisan Movement, 1965).

Kyzym (Kizim), Leonid, b 5 August 1941 in Krasnyi Lyman, Donetske oblast. Soviet cosmonaut and air force colonel. A graduate of the Chernihiv Higher Military Aviation School (1963), he received cosmonaut training at the Gagarin Air Force Academy from 1975. He commanded the three-man crew of the Soyuz T-3 spacecraft during its orbit of the Earth and docking with the Salyut-6 space station. He was also a member of the three-man crew of Soyuz T-10 that spent a record 237 days in space. During their time in space they spent more than 19 hours performing five extravehicular space walks to maintain and repair the space station Salyut-7. In 1986 Kyzym and V. Solovev – the crew of Soyuz T-15 – spent 125 days in orbit. They docked with the newest space station, Mir, and then flew Soyuz T-15 to Salyut-7, boarding it in the first station-to-station transfer ever accomplished. On 28 and 31 May the two men staged spacewalks, during which they deployed a 15-m metal lattice tower to demonstrate space construction techniques.